With a rumble, the staged charges began doing their work. First to go was the center of the house, along with the foundational supports within the central areas of the structure. As the house started to collapse in on itself, shaped charges began going off, directing the falling pieces into the vacated central area. Finally, less than thirty seconds after it started, the perimeter rings of shaped charges began going off, each ring pushing the debris into a tight pile in the center while breaking it up into smaller and smaller pieces.

When all was said and done, the former duplex now occupied a space the size of a lawn shed. As promised, the final explosion was a pyrotechnic blast which resulted in a plume of purple smoke rising from the center of the pile. As the former residents ripped off their hearing protection, each bearing the first smile to grace their face since moving in, Julio realized that this horror was finally over.

"Hey everyone, you can keep the 'ears' if you want, if not just lay them on the ground and we'll pick them up." Gage announced.

Julio smiled himself as he felt Jesse cuddle up to his free side. "Is this our new son?" Jesse asked, obviously already aware of what had been discussed.

Julio nodded. "Terry, this is your new Pop, Jesse."

"Hi Pop," Terry said timidly.

Julio looked around, and heard fire trucks in the distance. "Logan, fifteen plus staff to the Unit hospital, and we need a fast cleanup before the firemen arrive."

"Okay, bro; Daileass is on it. See you in a few seconds," Logan replied.

* * * * *

Los Angeles, California

Thursday, November 4, 2004 1:47 AM PST

Rafiki, Mike's gorilla, returned from where the policemen had been lying on the East LA street. When the gorilla was close enough, Derrick softly asked, "Where'd you send the cops, Raf?"

"Terra-Main Space Station for prosecution," the gorilla replied. "I figure that they're either extremely stupid or involved in the cover-up."

A muffled gun shot was heard. Mike grumbled, "Damned cops blew our surprise to hell."

Derrick scowled, "That confirms at least those two knew what was going on here. I'll bet others in the city government knew stuff too."

Mike sighed, "If Prez finds that out, LA will be short a couple of public servants."

Derrick nodded, "Definitely. Get that Irish temper up and we've got big problems." He paused then teased, "Now that I think about it, your temper boils over kind of quick too."

Mike giggled, "But I can recall what I've said and done. Prez just goes nuclear."

Derrick's comm-badge chirped. "Strike team Charlie One, location secure."

Derrick replied, "We heard a gunshot, Zack. Is everyone okay?"

Zack answered, "Yeah, we're fine. One of the 'care-givers' fired a thirty-eight revolver. Thankfully, we've got the best armor available. One team member is sore from the kick in the gut. The asshole that fired the thirty-eight is unconscious at the moment."

Following their security to the property, Derrick said, "We're comin'."

Zack softly said, "Prepare yourselves, guys. It's revolting in here."

"Are the kids safe?" Mike worried.

"Yeah," Zack sighed. "The adults are restrained and gagged so we won't have to hear their shit."

Derrick scowled, "I thought you said the man was unconscious?"

Zack answered, "He is, but the woman's a foul-mouthed wench. Gagging two is almost as easy as one."

Across their sub-vocals, Prez announced, "Attention Core Rimmers and Rimmer Strike Teams. It's way worse here than we could've imagined. There are twenty kids at our location. We need to prioritize what we've got and where we need what type of medical response. I want reports made to Alden, ASAP. We need the location, number of kids and their general condition. Alden, prioritize the incoming data and report back to me. This is turning to shit, dudes!"

Mike groaned, "Saints help us, John and Prez are both very unhappy."

Manuel, Mike's teenaged personal security, whose nickname was Manny, said, "While you two are safe inside, I'd like to have the gorillas check something out."

Mike wondered, "What's up, dude?"

Manny replied, "I keep seeing someone down the block peek around the corner."

Derrick looked up at his Silverback, Talib, and ordered, "Better go check it out."

Nodding agreement, Mike said, "We're safe so don't hurt any one. Bring whomever you find back to us."

Derrick and Mike went into the house. The lights flickered then stayed on. Zack, the strike team leader, waited at the end of the hall. Derrick wondered, "Where's the kids?"

Zack gestured to the room beyond the hallway saying, "In here. There are twenty. The two adults are in their bedroom."

Mike scowled, "What stinks?"

Zack approached Derrick and Mike then whispered, "The kids were locked in their rooms upstairs. If someone needed to go to the bathroom, tough luck. We're cleaning up the kids and I've already called in as a medical emergency."

Mike and Derrick couldn't believe what they had heard. They followed Zack into the kitchen. The kids were naked and pathetically boney, sitting down along the counters and walls, with members of the strike team carefully sponge bathing them with towels. With nothing more to do at the moment, Derrick and Mike grabbed towels and helped get the kids cleaned up. They gently assured the kids that they were safe now and would soon be cared for by the best doctors in the Federation. The kids were literally scared shitless though, and one little girl lost control of her bodily functions while she was being cleaned. Although no one said a word about it and only moved her aside to cleanup the additional mess, she screamed as if her life were being threatened. The fact was, the girl was so emaciated that any touch probably did cause her pain. None of the other orphans moved or spoke to alleviate the girl's fear and pain.

Doctors and medics arrived. Upon seeing the children for themselves, they called for immediate backup. Derrick, Mike and the strike team members stepped aside to allow the medics access to the kids. Standing beyond the kitchen in the hall were two VSO officers. Derrick ordered Zack to "show our Vulcan friends to the dirt-bags responsible."

Shaken to his core, Mike tearfully added, "Get everything from them; we're prosecuting everyone responsible." The Vulcans nodded then Zack showed them to the adult's bedroom. Mike began wandering around to inspect the house. He noticed filthy walls; minimal, useless furnishings; not even a television in the living room. Fuming, revolted and saddened, Mike turned to find Derrick.

Outside with many of the strike team members, Derrick saw his husband and called, "Here, Mike."

Mike didn't even notice the gorillas or the other teenage boys that were found. Shaking violently, Mike buried himself in Derrick's embrace. Derrick softly assured, "It's gonna be okay, Lick. The kids will be fixed up by the docs. The two assholes responsible are dust already, they just don't know it yet."

Mike nodded and sobbed, "They don't even deserve an explanation. I don't want to say a word to either of them."

"I know," Derrick whispered. "It's kewl by me. Let's do it that way."

Forcing a small relieved smile, Mike looked up. It was then that Mike smelled cigarette smoke. Looking around, Mike discovered his and Derrick's security surrounding a group of five older teenagers, some of which were smoking. Wiping his eyes and pulling himself together, Mike asked, "Who are these dudes?"

Manny replied, "The ones that were loitering around watching us are a local street gang."

Derrick said, "These are some of the Latin Kings. They want out, Mike."

Mike's Silverback laid his hands on two of the boys saying, "This is Alfonso and this is Hector. They'll act as spokesmen."

The boy identified as Hector stepped forward. "Me and my friends, we'd like to help. We knew what was happenin' here, but no one would listen. We'll help you if you'll help us?"

Derrick wondered, "What kind of help can you provide?"

Alfonso laughed, "Distractions!"

Hector grinned, "The cops in this city are fucked up. They like car chases, but can't run to save their fat asses. We'll keep them occupied if you'll help some of our brothers and sisters."

Mike asked, "How old are you dudes?"

Hector replied, "Nineteen. Too old and too set in my ways for Clan, but I got brothers and sisters that need to escape home and this city."

Alfonso said, "Seventeen. I ain't ever been arrested, but I got brothers and sisters that need out too. We got no future here."

Derrick smiled, "I'm sure we can accommodate you. Start waking your brothers and sisters."

Grateful for a little cheer in an otherwise dismal night, Mike nodded, "Anyone that wants Clan help will get it." The Latin Kings began pulling out cell phones to call their loved ones. Mike turned to Zack asking, "Can you dudes provide transport for our new friends. Your job is done here."

Derrick reminded, "No weapons of any sort are allowed on base. With these guys covering your back, you won't need 'em anyway."

Having already noticed the weapons many in the strike team and personal security were carrying, Hector laughed, "Fifty cal's, M-16's and phaser rifles tend to deter!"

Derrick smiled then carefully said, "We appreciate your offer to help us very much, but we honestly don't need it. Clan Short doesn't require down payments and we sure don't want to be responsible for any of you getting arrested because you helped us. All you need to do is get the kids, okay?" The Latin Kings reluctantly agreed. That wasn't street rules they played by. Derrick called Alden and ordered a Clan Short communicator. He handed it to Hector saying, "You're now Clan intelligence on detached duty. Any kid you find that needs our help, just use this to let us know."

Alfonso pointed and said, "Vulcan dudes waitin' on you." Hearing themselves referred to as 'dudes' both VSO officers raised their eyebrows.

Mike turned and signaled for the Vulcans to wait just one minute, then faced Zack, saying, "Alden will know where we are. When everyone's gathered, bring them to us."

Zack nodded, "You got it, Mike."

Mike and Derrick went back inside the house to receive reports from the VSO. In the meantime, the members of strike team Charlie one split into five groups of two and began transporting away with members of the Latin Kings.

Upon hearing a grand total of thirteen violations against the Safe Haven Act, Derrick dismissed the VSO. Mike and Derrick set their phasers to maximum and wide beam so they could walk in the room and dispatch the two adults as quickly as possible. This one bedroom had the TV and all the good furnishings. The rest of the house was impoverished by comparison. Of course, the two adults were disintegrated, but so was the bed and about six feet of the wall behind the adults. Peering through the large hole in the wall, Derrick grinned, "Oops! Got a tree too."

Mike shrugged, "Oh fucking well! If we could do it without draining our phasers, I'd happily flatten this place."

Derrick led Mike out of the house. Once with their security, Mike called, "Alden, LA site two, please."

Alden replied, "I've received reports from both sites, Mike. It's your call, but LA site three is worse than two."

Mike checked with Derrick. They decided to deal with the worst case first and were transported to site three in Los Angeles. While the Compton neighborhood was different, the situation inside was similar to the first site. At least the kids weren't locked in their rooms at night and were allowed to use the bathroom, but the twenty kids were every bit as emaciated, hurting and sickly as the others. There wasn't much time to speak to any of the kids, but they did tell the few remaining orphans that they would soon be feeling better and in Hawaii, living under much better conditions.

The total violations listed by VSO numbered twelve. As they had at the prior location, Derrick and Mike terminated the two adults. Beginning to lose patience and self-control, Derrick and Mike took pot-shots at furniture and walls as they left the dwelling. At the lowest setting, a phaser blast could move a stove or refrigerator. At the next higher setting, a short phaser blast at a plaster board wall would knock a hole through it. Making any attempt at salvaging the residence pointless, Derrick tried the next higher setting on the staircase, destroying most of the wooden steps. Outside watching and hearing Mike's and Derrick's remarks, two gorillas shook their heads while the two teenage security guards began sniggering.

Finally, Derrick and Mike visited site two in Los Angeles. Sixteen kids had already been taken to Blank Children's hospital in Des Moines, Iowa. VSO reports listed nine Safe Have Act violations. After checking with members of Strike Team Charlie two, Mike and Derrick decided life imprisonment was appropriate. By the time they exited the premises, strike team Charlie one had arrived with thirty-six Latin Kings kids between age seven and fifteen. They were spoken to and became more excited about the opportunities possible at Ewa Beach.

Derrick called Prez intending to report all that had been done, but the conversation revolved mostly around the Latin King kids. Alden transported all of them back to Ewa Beach to wrap up the night.

* * * * *

San Francisco, California

Thursday, November 4, 2004 1:47 AM PST

Even in their black Clan Short robes, Keith and Prez were chilled. It was forty-six degrees Fahrenheit in San Francisco and John's recent call left them both with shivers running down their spines. Each of the command teams had phasers and a tricorder with them. They were in an area of the city known as The Dogpatch. Sounds from a nearby freeway could be heard and it could be seen only a few hundred feet away. In a small park, Prez and Keith were with their security teams amongst a few trees, across 20th Street from the building that was being raided by Kekoa and his team. They were watching the house and waiting for word it was safe to enter.

Two other strike teams were in San Francisco. The first was west of the 101 Freeway, between 24th and 25th Streets. The other was in South San Francisco.

Holding Prez close so he could whisper as softly as possible, Keith shared, "John sounded real bad, baby."

Prez nodded and whispered, "I can only assume he's feeling stuff from the orphanage he's at."

"The AI's said they weren't spending enough on food or utilities adequate for twelve kids. For the first time, I can honestly say I'm really scared. I'm scared for John mostly, but partially over the orphaned kids."

"It's this place. What a hell-hole. A couple of houses near this small park, but warehouses and industrial complexes within sight. This is no place for an orphanage and kids."

"That's a violation against Article 10 of the Safe Haven Act, as far as I'm concerned."

Prez said, "Note that for this location, Alden."

Alden responded, "Noted."

Monitoring his tricorder, Keith said, "The air quality here is putrid. We're only a few blocks from the bay and what looks like industrial docks and shipyards. The wind is blowin' from that direction too."

Alden replied, "Got it, Keith."

Concerned for John, Keith softly told Prez; "I gotta check, Thy'la" Prez nodded and Keith tapped his sub-vocal. He silently mouthed, "Alden, patch me to John."

Alden replied "Patch complete, Keith."

Keith whispered, "You okay, bro?" A few seconds later, Keith nodded then said, "Be careful." Keith then told Prez, "He was holding hands with Stephen. Everything he might've felt was amplified. Since they let each other go, John's better." He then smirked, "We should've thought of that and warned them."

Prez grinned, "Like any warning might've made a difference."

Prez's comm-badge chirped. Kekoa coughed, "Team Able One to Director O'Brian."

"Prez, here. Your status, Kekoa?"

"Location secure, Sir. The care-givers are subdued. The children..." Kekoa paused. Prez, Keith, and their security heard the unmistakable sound of vomiting then spitting. "The children are gathered and safe."

Quickly walking across the street, Prez asked, "Are you okay, Kekoa?"

"Yeah, I'm fine. Not all of us are though." Kekoa paused then said, "It's gross in here, Prez. Brace yourself." Without thinking, Prez and Keith ran to the property, across the small lawn and through the already open door. The odor hit them first and they stopped just beyond the door. The smell was worse inside than it was outside. Several flashlight beams could be seen further ahead. Prez and Keith reached into their robe pockets for their flashlights and turned them on. To the right of the entrance was a large, almost barren room. To the left was a short wall then another room with a large table, however there were no chairs. Every wall the boys saw looked like it was gray, but as their eyes adjusted, it was obvious they had once been white; they simply hadn't been painted in many years and were in disrepair. What little furniture was in the room on the right appeared well beneath serviceable. They could only assume it was a living room. There wasn't sufficient seating for six, never mind twelve. At the end of the hall, Kekoa called, "Over here, Prez. We'll have the power back on in a minute. We have two adults, one male and one female, and twenty kids..."

"Twenty?" Prez incredulously repeated.

Kekoa nodded, "Yes, Sir. There are four bedrooms upstairs. The room the adults were in was spacious, well furnished and maintained and had three locks on the door. The kids were in the three smaller bedrooms; six in one, seven in the other two rooms. There were no beds or mattresses in any of those three rooms. Just disgusting old, threadbare sheets shared by every kid in the room. Not even a pillow was there for them. They were behind double locked doors too. They couldn't even use the bathroom; there were plastic buckets for them to piss and shit in." Before allowing the leaders to pass beyond the doorway, Kekoa moved closer to them and whispered, "These kids are emaciated. Some are ill, some have open sores and wounds that appear gangrenous..."

Having heard enough, Keith tapped his comm-badge. "Logan, it's Keith; contact Starfleet Medical, code white, pediatric emergency, set Medical teams at condition orange. Respond to all orphanage locations immediately. Also, get teams at each site for Vulcan mind-meld interrogations."

Logan replied, "I'll coordinate with Starfleet, Charleston Clan Hospital, the UNIT Rapid Response Medical Wing and other major hospitals around the U.K. and U.S. which have large, excellent pediatric facilities. I'll have Lieutenant Vorik contact Commander Jason Evans for VSO Operatives to be dispatched."

At virtually the same instant that Keith began speaking, Prez tapped his sub-vocal and ordered, "Alden, connect me to all command teams. Attention Core Rimmers and Rimmer Strike Teams. It's way worse here than we could've imagined. There are twenty kids at our location. We need to prioritize what we've got and where we need what type of medical response. I want reports made to Alden ASAP. We need the location, number of kids and their general condition. Alden, prioritize the incoming data and report back to me. This is turning to shit, dudes!"

Alden replied, "Understood. Reports are coming in, Prez."

The lights came on. In a second or two, their eyes adjusted. The room beyond the doorway Kekoa was standing in was a kitchen. Prez and Keith barreled past Kekoa. To the right were a group of mostly naked kids. At first glance, Prez thought of the late night commercials asking for aid for starving children in drought stricken corners of the globe. The few kids that were standing had distended bellies, as if they hadn't ever eaten a decent meal in their lives. At their feet were the younger and most frightened kids. Keith and Prez were momentarily struck dumb at the pitiful sight. They turned away and saw the two adults, their arms and legs restrained, laying prone, face down on the floor in their pajamas.

Choking back his tears, Prez moved closer to the kids. There were five kids standing, four boys and one girl. Only the girl had tattered boys briefs on. The tallest boy had kids under each arm and others gathered around on the floor, holding onto his legs. They all were very dirty, as if they hadn't bathed in at least a month. Some of the kids on the floor looked up at Prez rather oddly. Prez had seen shock and surprise in other kids faces before, however this expression was different; they almost seemed catatonic; conscious yet not understanding what was happening around them, as if they were in a different, unknown place. Locking eyes with the tallest boy, he softly said, "My name is Prez. What's your name?"

"Greg," the boy meekly answered.

"Do you understand we're here to help?" The boy nodded. Prez asked, "How old are you, Greg?"

"Fifteen."

What was most amazing to Prez was that this fifteen year old boy was about the same height as his twelve-year-old brother, Drew. Prez could see each of Greg's ribs, his collar bone and virtually no muscle anywhere on his body. Even what was hanging between his legs seemed more appropriate for a prepubescent. Pubic hair made it obvious he had passed that phase of maturity. Prez said, "You've been trying to protect these kids, haven't you?" Again the boy only nodded. Prez forced a weak smile saying, "It shows, Greg. They're all clustered up to you." Glancing at each of the kids, Prez promised, "From now on, you're all Clan brothers and sisters. We'll get you all any help you need."

Outside the kitchen doorway, someone else threw up. While Prez was fighting back his own need to puke, he continued to try and get to know the kids. Behind Prez, Keith ordered members of the strike team to lift the man and woman. Keith began listing out violations of the Safe Haven Act to the two adults. He finally growled, "I swear to you both, you'll never see the sunrise again. As soon as I get all of what I need from you inconsiderate, inhuman shits, I will take extreme pleasure in turning you to dust myself."

The man protested, "You can't do..."

Keith was beyond outraged. Before the man could finish, Keith punched him in the face, breaking his nose and loosening teeth. Keith screamed, "Yes we can! There is no excuse you can possibly make!" However, the man seemed ready to speak again. Biting his lower lip with both his fists clenched and prepared to land multiple blows, Keith softly warned, "Don't! I swear, I'll kill you with my bare hands."

A UNIT Medical team entered the room. Among the medics was Doctor Janet Hayes. She laid a hand on Prez, then gently said, "We'll take over, Preston. I promise you, you will see these kids again and in better shape than they are now."

Prez nodded then introduced her to the kids. Also entering the kitchen were a Vulcan man and Vulcan woman. Both were dressed in black jumpsuits. They went to where Keith was standing before the two adults. Doing his best to control his temper, Keith told the VSO officers, "Suck them deaf and blind, for all I care. Who is responsible for this? Are they alone or is it in their management? We're prosecuting everybody responsible. If the garbage man knew and didn't say anything, I want his ass on a hook."

The Vulcan VSO officers nodded then went directly to the two adults and began mind-melds.

The UNIT doctors were beaming out with children and additional doctors beamed in to replace them. Having completed their mid-melds with the adult 'care-givers', the Vulcan VSO officers led Prez and Keith outside to report their findings. They wanted a chance to discuss things away from the children and the chaos of the home. Thoroughly disgusted, the strike team members holding the adults upright let them go and nudged them just enough to cause them to both fall face first onto the floor again. One went so far as to sarcastically grin, "Oops! Sowwy!"

The twenty children that had been scraping an existence in this home had managed to keep each other alive. They had shared every morsel of food and taken over household chores for each other when one was too sick or injured to do the task themselves. They did not want to be separated and were being transported to medical facilities at Camp Bam Bam.

While still outside, Prez and Keith received reports from Alden. "The two locations in Anaheim and one of the San Diego locals have twelve kids each. With sixteen kids each are the two other San Francisco locations, one of the Los Angeles locations, the one in Santa Barbara, and one of the Sacramento locations. The other Sacramento orphanage has eighteen kids as does one of the San Jose sites. In addition to your location, two orphanages in Los Angeles had twenty kids each." Alden paused and sadly stated, "The other San Diego site has twenty-four kids, as does John's site in San Jose. Reported from Fresno were twenty-four found plus one D.O.A. We were expecting one-hundred-ninety-six kids. The actual count, not including the one deceased, is two-hundred-eighty-four."

With tears welling up in his eyes, Keith groaned, "John, Stephen, Kaleo and Tory." The sadness Keith felt over his youngest brother, brother-in-law and two close friends that had been orphans themselves turned to rage. His comm-badge chirped. As soon as he tapped it, Kaleo bitterly ranted. Prez was beside himself. If only he had had a clue that it was this bad then he, Keith, Mike and Derrick would've been assigned to the worst locations. Those corporate morons and every person associated with this situation would pay. Prez didn't care if the entire State's government was involved, they would go down in flames with ZCC.

Without saying a word to anyone, Prez slowly walked into the house. Feeling the knots in his husband's gut and throat, Keith followed. The two adults were face down on the floor. All the children and doctors were gone. Prez ordered, "Stand them up and step away." Once the strike team members had followed his order, Prez glared at the two adults and ranted, "You have both been found guilty of fifteen violations of the Safe Haven Act. We have extracted from your memories the names of all your corporate superiors, and anyone else you knew by name, that allowed this repugnant travesty against humanity to continue. You are hereby summarily sentenced to death." While the man and woman loudly protested, pleading for clemency, Prez and Keith pulled their phasers out and set them to medium beam at maximum power. The two VSO officers remained at the back door watching. From the hallway doorway into the kitchen area, Kekoa also watched. Prez and Keith took three steps back. Tired of hearing their pleas, Prez bellowed, "I don't give a flying fuck about mercy for people like you! Neither of you look like you're starving. You did this for personal gain; for money and extravagant personal items. Worse, you have no remorse. Pray to whatever God you believe in and beg him for forgiveness. You aren't getting any from me!" Together, Prez and Keith raised their arms, took aim and fired.

It seemed that the phaser blasts extended outward from the center of the torsos to their extremities. Finally, the two adults were dust on the floor and there was abrupt silence in the room. Now that sentencing was complete, Keith and Prez tried to take deep breaths, but all that accomplished was opening their throats. Keith hurried to the kitchen sink and vomited. Having nowhere else to go, Prez threw up onto the piles of ash that were, only seconds earlier, two extremely warped human beings.

The two VSO officers led Prez and Keith out the front door to the sidewalk. Prez thanked the VSO officers then asked them to prepare their reports regarding this location. Keith asked Alden to transport them and their security teams to the next San Francisco location. Doctors had transported the sixteen kids from the site to pediatric hospitals in Des Moines, Iowa. On-site VSO reports to Prez and Keith found the 'care-givers' guilty of ten violations of the Safe Haven Act. They were arrested and transported to Terra-Main Space Station for prosecution and would likely be sent to off-planet penal facilities.

Finishing at the second of three San Francisco orphanages, Keith and Prez began receiving calls from the other five Core Rimmer teams. Drew called Keith and Keith sent them home. John couldn't even call his oldest brother; Stephen made the call. Prez and Keith wished they could somehow undo any damage done to the youngest of the team. Troy called Prez. Kaleo called Keith.

Prez contacted Logan to ask for assistance rounding up what would likely be hundreds of individuals directly and indirectly responsible for the travesties uncovered. Keith checked with Lieutenant Vorik to make certain that Vulcan healers would be available. He sure didn't want any of them going through what Harry and Jonas had experienced. As expected, Vorik was fully prepared. Not only would there be trained Vulcan healers, Riti and Vicky Evans would also be at Ewa Beach. Prez learned that all Clan Division leaders were made aware of the extent of the California Orphanage raids.

Numbed from the atrocities, Prez and Keith went to the last of the San Francisco locations. Immediately upon arrival, Prez's comm-badge chirped. "Yeah," Prez abruptly answered.

Derrick's voice asked, "Hey, how're ya doin', bro?"

Prez grunted, "Alright, I guess."

Derrick offered, "We're finishing up in Los Angeles. What do you need from us, bro?"

"Booze and drugs," Keith smirked.

Mike teased, "We're in a place where we can get them."

An unrecognizable voice wondered, "Wha'choo you want? Smoke? Blow?"

Keith sighed, "I was kidding."

Prez asked, "Who was that speaking?"

Derrick replied, "We picked up some helpers along the way." An unintelligible chorus of voices laughed and joked across the comm-link. Derrick chuckled, "Prez, say hello to the Latin Kings."

Prez carefully repeated, "Hello Latin Kings."

At least a dozen voices answered, "Capasa!"

Cracking the first smile in about an hour, Prez replied, "We've had better nights, dudes."

Derrick said, "They covered our asses and provided intelligence tonight, Prez. We've got about thirty newbies wanting to join the Clan, bro."

Prez nodded, "Any one that needs or wants our help is very welcome. We're almost done here. Is everyone ready to go home?"

Mike said, "We'll meet you there, bro."

* * * * *

San Jose, California

Thursday, November 4, 2004 1:47 AM PST

It was just as cold in San Jose as in San Francisco, but John was sweating and feeling horrible. Two orphanages in San Jose were being raided; one in the East Foothills and one in Cupertino, where John and Stephen were. Sitting on the sidewalk, across from the orphanage being raided, with his head between his knees, John could barely get a word out of his mouth without his entire body hurting. Stephen finally got up and began operating the tricorder to check John's health. As soon as Stephen let go and stepped away, John felt better and huffed in relief.

Stephen softly asked, "Are you feeling better, hon?"

John nodded, "I hate to ask you this, baby, but this time, I need you to not touch or hold me. The amplification effect ain't so good."

Reluctantly nodding, Stephen glanced down at the tricorder and watched his husband's body temperature drop from almost one-hundred-two degrees down to just above normal, landing at ninety-nine-point-two degrees Fahrenheit in only fifteen-seconds.

In his ear, John heard Keith. "You okay, bro?"

"Fine now," John softly responded. "It was the amplification effect, partly. I'm better now."

Stephen said, "How does your throat feel, hon? You sound way better."

Mildly stunned, John realized his sore throat did feel much better. Warmly smiling up at his husband, John softly assured, "Much better, baby." Telepathically hearing Stephen's thoughts, John replied, 'I love you too.' This began a game they started playing aboard the Enterprise, before everything got crazy.

Stephen thought, "I love you more."

John sent, 'I love you infinitely.'

Stephen giggled and realized he was getting a stiffie.

John only hummed like he had just eaten a large piece of moist chocolate cake and washed it down with an ice cold glass of milk.

Interrupting the game, all the team members heard Prez in their sub-vocals. "Attention Core Rimmers and Rimmer Strike Teams; it's way worse here than we could've imagined. There are twenty kids at our location. We need to prioritize what we've got and where we need what type of medical response. I want reports made to Alden ASAP. We need the location, number of kids and their general condition. Alden, prioritize the incoming data and report back to me. This is turning to shit dude!"

John's comm-badge chirped. "Strike Team Beta One reporting."

"Go ahead, Yan," John replied.

Sounding out of breath, Yan huffed, "Location secure, John."

Standing up, John said, "We're headin' in."

Yan sobbed, "Don't, John."

John frowned, "I know, dude. I'm as protected as I can be. There's nothing else I can do except see it for myself."

"There's no point, bro," Yan weakly offered. "These... they won't be going to Ewa Beach. We'll be lucky if we can save their lives; never mind make them people again. We've made this a priority medical emergency."

John and Stephen slowly walked to the house. Lucky blocked the path to the stairway so neither boy could pass to witness what was upstairs. Even on the lower level, the rancid odors seemed to permeate walls and flooring.

Greeting the medical team, John and Stephen went upstairs with a large group of men and women. John received brief telepathic impressions from a few of the children then blocked any further telepathic contact. Most of the children were beyond any form of rational thought. They were unable to speak and barely had strength to move of their own accord.

Medical personnel found many open sores, wounds and broken bones. Gangrene existed in some form or another, in various levels of seriousness, on every child. Limbs would have to amputated, but the kids were so weak, the doctors worried if their young patients would be able to handle anesthesia. If they could manage to be sedated, the next question was whether they would survive the surgeries intended to save their lives.

Those children that did survive would need years of round-the-clock care to be brought back to some semblance of humanity. Noticing Stephen's nauseated expression, John got his husband out of the house as quickly as he could, which meant holding him, levitating and gliding downstairs. Once outside, John tapped his sub-vocal and reported all that he had witnessed to Alden. Additional medical teams transported on-site and scrambled to the children. Two VSO officers stepped outside. Before they could speak, John sent, 'Report to only me, telepathically.'

Each officer, one at a time, touched John's temple. In the last year, three children had died in this orphanage. To the adult caregivers, they weren't even worthy of sorrow or decent burials. The corpses had been dumped in the desert. When each child died, they accepted another, as if they were mere plastic poker chips and easily replaced. John pleasantly told Stephen to remain outside. He went inside and everything not nailed down on the first floor of the home began flying around in a torrent, into and through walls.

Wide-eyed, Yan muttered, "Oh shit!" He then loudly ordered, "Everybody out now!" The members of strike team Beta one ran out of the house through the nearest doorways. They pushed Stephen out to the street seconds before a seven foot sofa crashed through the living room picture window and wedged itself in a tree. Hearing the commotion downstairs, medical teams and feral kids upstairs completed transporting out, to Terra-Main Space Station.

Without speaking a word or telepathically telling the two fiends what he was about to do, John pushed all the hurt and suffering that he, Stephen and the feral kids experienced into the unsuspecting adults. They felt the hunger, the pain of untreated broken bones, of wounds allowed to become infected and gangrenous. At first, the adults cried out in pain, but then collapsed to the floor and curled into fetal positions. The kitchen where the adults lay and John stood was a tornado of flying glasses, plates, pots, pans and assorted utensils. At no point did John allow anything flying around from his temper tantrum touch the adults or himself. So enraged was John that minutes passed before he noticed the destruction he was causing. Believing that it was time to let the two adults witness what was happening, John pointed his powers at the kitchen counter and sink. John didn't expect it, but the counter shuddered, creaked and levitated. The pipes broke and sprayed water all over the room, reviving the two semi-conscious adults. Finally, John growled, "You ain't even human to me. I have more respect for a slug than I do for you two." He pulled out his phaser, set it to maximum power and medium beam then fired on the man. Shaking his head sadly, John desperately cried, "You're a woman, capable of giving birth and the deepest love known. But did you ever show it once in your miserable life?" John fired again, turning the woman to ash before she could open her mouth to answer.

Having taken two lives, John broke down crying harder than he could remember. In an emotional rage, he fired the phaser across the back wall of the structure. As John walked through the house, every wall was systematically sliced by a continuous phaser beam. Outside, Stephen struggled to break free of Bond, his gorilla, to find his husband. They heard John's loud wails and, seconds later, watched him step outside. John turned and sliced the front exterior wall in half with his phaser. When John had stopped firing and turned to walk towards the street, Bond let go of Stephen. Running at top speed, Stephen flew into John's open arms. John sent to Stephen, 'I made them suffer then killed them, baby. I am evil.'

"No," Stephen sobbed, "you're my world, John. You only did what had to be done. And you did it alone, rather than having me see it. I love you more for that." Stephen hugged John with all his strength and John returned the hug as forcefully. Standing in the street, about five meters from John and Stephen, the strike team and security personal heard loud popping, snapping and creaking wood. While John and Stephen were still hugging and crying, the top three-quarters of the house began to slowly rise into the air. As power cables snapped, arks of bright blue electric light sizzled in the dark night. Yan reacted immediately, sending one of his team to cut the electricity to the house. Yan found and turned the natural gas line off before John caused an explosion that would destroy the entire neighborhood. Lucky hurried to John and Stephen, swept them up and brought them to the street. By the time Lucky put them down, there was at least twenty feet between the bottom half of the first floor and the hovering top part of the house. John kissed Stephen then Stephen returned the kiss. When they separated, the top part of the house crashed down, leaving a pile of rubble that barely looked anything like it was once a house. It reminded John of images he had seen in school, of homes devastated by an earthquake.

Lights in nearby houses began turning on. Yan smirked, "Let's get outta here!" He then called, "Daileass, strike team Beta one, ready for transport back to the Rapid Response base." A moment later, the ten person team was gone.

John sighed, "One more place to visit."

Stephen moaned, "I hope its not as bad as this was."

Nodding agreement, John tapped his sub-vocal and had his team transported to the East Foothills location. John sighed then tapped his comm-badge saying, "Beta command team on-site, Tony."

Tony, the strike team Beta two leader reported, "We're clear, John. The kids have been transported away by medical. VSO are still here."

Beginning the walk towards the house, John begged, "Please don't tell me the kids were like little animals, barely alive?"

Tony sighed, "Emaciated, filthy, hurt in lots of ways. Incoming reports have been organized by the AI's. Of the sixteen orphanages, three were listed as level four, the most severe. The Cupertino place you were at was a level four, bro."

John's head sagged and he groaned. He asked, "And this place?"

"Level three, twenty kids in a real bad way," Tony replied.

Shaking his head, John turned to Stephen. "You don't have to come in, baby. I'd really prefer it if you stayed outside."

"John," Stephen whined, "I love you. Please, let me..."

"I need and love you too," John interrupted. "The best place you can be is by my side, afterward, picking up the pieces of me." Stopped on the porch, John pointed at the door saying, "What I do in there isn't me; it's everybody I know, love and respect; it's their pure anger mixed with my own. I don't want to show you that part of me."

Imitating their bonding ceremony, Stephen reached for John's temple and let his love flow. John nodded and smiled. Stepping into the house with Stephen and smelling the foul odors, John yelled, "Strike team Beta two, evacuate the premises." Tony approached and John said, "Get everybody safe. I feel a hissy fit brewin'."

Tony glanced uncertainly at Stephen and John. Stephen nodded and offered, "The last place is flattened, Tony. Rats don't even want it anymore."

Waving his team out of the house, Tony forced a slight smile then firmly grasped John's and Stephen's shoulders, mutely offering what support he could. Two teenage Vulcan boys approached and Tony stepped outside.

The summary report from the teen VSO to John and Stephen included: overcrowding, insufficient living area for the quantity of children in one room, failure to have available any space where the children could have privacy; unsanitary conditions, infestations of living areas by lifeforms accepted by the local general populace as a health or sanitation nuisance; signs of beating, physical restraints; threats of beating, strangulation or physical restraint, behavior which is indicative of such abuse, cowering, withdrawal, hiding behind people, or other behaviors known to be present in victims of abuse; failure to provide adequate food and sustenance. The list seemed to go on and on forever. Each of the abuses listed were repeated twenty times, on each of the children present. Making matters worse, the adults had no remorse. They had withheld common comforts and necessities for their own financial gain. As pleasantly as he could, John praised and thanked the two boys for their efforts.

Stephen meekly offered, "Humans are normally not like this. My mom worked her butt off for everything she could possibly provide me."

The two Vulcans nodded, but said nothing. After they walked away, John smirked, "They don't feel it, baby. What they feel, all the anger, sorrow and even happiness, they hold inside."

"I really wish we could do that," Stephen complained.

Nodding understandingly, John leaned closer to his husband and whispered, "What I'm about to do isn't usually allowed. All I know is, we won't be the same after this. I'm releasing as much as I can now so I won't be veg later, okay?"

When Stephen nodded, John led him through the house to a dining room where two restrained adults were leaning on the table. Seeing two pre-teen boys beyond the room, the two adults immediately began complaining. With a swipe of his hand, John pushed the table into a wall, causing the two adults to fall flat on their asses. John evilly grinned, "Aww, did you fall down?" They started bitching again and John held up the index finger on his right hand. Both adult mouths clamped shut. Unable to speak, the two watched helplessly as John made chairs and other furnishings in the room swirl around them in a tempest. Rolling his eyes, Stephen clung close to John. Wide-eyed, through the churning debris flying about in the room, the two adults saw John and Stephen rise a foot off the floor. John turned Stephen away from the havoc and glared down, his eyes blazing azure blue, at the two cretins.

"You want to feel control?" John hollered. "You want to know terror? You've wanted more than you've deserved for years! You withheld food from kids! You left them dirty, naked and feeling worthless! You did it for money too, you pitiful shits! I hold your lives in my hand and they ain't worth diddly to me! What you are seeing now is the next generation of mankind." The two adults held only contemptuous thoughts for John and his show of power. They only wished to have the chance to do to John and Stephen what they had done to other children. With a nod of John's head, the adults jolted upwards, cracking their heads on the ceiling then dropped to the floor. John growled, "I could squash you like bugs with a thought. I could send you to a prison moon to suffer. You still have no clue how wrong you were, do you?" Shaking his head sadly, John stopped his mini-storm and pulled the phaser from Stephen's robe. He verified the settings then fired twice, instantaneously disintegrating the two adults.

Shaking like a leaf in Stephen's arms, John didn't know what to do or think of next. Was there another orphanage, somewhere else to go? Did he need to execute any one else? How could he possibly recover from what he had seen, heard and done? Who could understand what he had done? For the first time in years, John wanted nothing more than to crawl into his mother's lap and cry. He wondered if that were even possible; would his mother understand murder? Was there anywhere on the planet safe where he could simply relax? Last weekend, lust caused eighty to suffer in Hawaii. In California, greed was the only reason John could come up with for the tragedies he'd witnessed.

Softly shushing his husband, Stephen whispered words of encouragement, love and pride. Receiving no replies from John, Stephen shuddered, but acted accordingly. He called, "Alden, dismiss strike team Beta two and get me Keith." Stephen told Keith that John had executed four adults in under an hour. "I'm taking him home now," Stephen bluntly stated.

Hearing Stephen's voice quake, Keith replied, "We're arranging for healers, Stephen. Go to the Command Center, lock up your phasers and hang out for healing. Trust me, we'll all be feeling better soon, okay?"

Stephen wanted to say something more to Keith, but at the same time, his husband, his rock was a quivering mass. What had happened Tuesday during their time on the Enterprise was very different than what John had to do this night and Stephen understood that. Stephen had Alden transport them back to the Ewa Beach Command Center, as Keith had instructed.

* * * * *

San Diego, California

Thursday, November 4, 2004 1:47 AM PST

At Imperial Beach, a suburban area south of the San Diego Bay, Kaleo and Tory watched their strike team enter the orphanage. From the outside, it didn't seem to be more than a three or four bedroom, two story home. Compared to the ROH orphanage they were in only five days earlier, it was smaller, but seemed nicer.

Smiling widely, Kaleo brushed Tory's hair with his fingers and proudly said, "It's so awesome that you're here with me."

Taking a step closer and wrapping his arms around his husband, Tory nodded, "You know I'd have been pacing around, waiting for you to come back home."

Kaleo tilted his head asking, "You worry about me?"

Tory nodded and smiled, "Since Friday, every time you're away from me."

"That ain't gonna happen too often anymore," Kaleo assured. There was a long pause in their conversation then Kaleo wondered, "What do you think about this place?"

Tory shrugged, "It don't seem too bad. The neighborhood is real crowded though. It's near the beach too, I can smell the salt air. Compared to the place we were in, this seems okay. At least they've got the beach nearby."

Kaleo mumbled, "Maybe John's place was worse and that's why he told Prez to let the strike teams attack early." Many quiet minutes passed, waiting for word from the strike team commander.

Noticing the confused look on Kaleo's face, Tory asked, "What's wrong."

"I hate to think of twelve kids in a four bedroom house," Kaleo sighed.

Tory reminded, "Four per room ain't as bad as we had it."

Kaleo grunted then admitted, "I guess it's just being so near an orphanage again that's giving me the willies."

Tory admitted, "I feel it too."

Kaleo's comm-badge chirped. "Strike team Echo One, location secure." In the background, sobs could be heard and someone yelled, "This one's in shock! She's not bleeding! I can't tell what's wrong!"

Dale, the strike team commander, shouted, "Elevate her legs! Daileass, get us blankets!"

Beginning to panic, Kaleo and Tory raced across the street and towards the house. They pulled out their flashlights and went inside the house. Prez's voice came over their sub-vocals. "Attention Core Rimmers and Rimmer Strike Teams. It's way worse here than we could've imagined. There are twenty kids at our location. We need to prioritize what we've got and where we need what type of medical response. I want reports made to Alden ASAP We need the location, number of kids and their general condition. Alden, prioritize the incoming data and report back to me. This is turning to shit, dudes!"

One of the strike team members came running down the stairs with his helmet off. He barreled past Kaleo and Tory then puked on the porch. Kaleo went back outside and held the sickened boy by the waist so he wouldn't fall over into his own vomit. From inside the house and upstairs, Kaleo and Tory heard Dale's report. "Location Echo one. Twenty-four children, all emaciated, one female confirmed in shock. Medical priority or we'll lose her."

Tory raced up the stairs hollering, "What can I do?"

Shaking his head, Dale softly said, "Pray."

"What?" Tory screamed.

Wiping tears from his eyes, Dale said, "They don't understand us, Tory. We told them we were here to help, but they can't understand or even speak any longer." Dale gagged then softly sobbed, "One of them was eating a pile of shit in one room. The lights are on but nobody's home, bro. They're all feral."

"No," Tory gasped. Overwhelmed, Tory repeatedly screamed, "No!" over and over again.

Hearing his husband's desperate cries, Kaleo left the sickened boy on the porch then practically flew up the stairs. Tory flung himself at Kaleo and broke down. Glaring at Dale, Kaleo loudly demanded, "Report!"

Dale again explained the pathetic state of the children. Before Dale completed his report to Kaleo, medical personnel arrived and raced up the stairs. Dale led the first team to the room where the little girl was in shock. Of their own accord, additional medics split off into other rooms. Chaos erupted around Kaleo and Tory. Six medics became eight, then ten, then Kaleo lost track of how many were there and which room they were in. The lights flickered then remained on. Medics were loudly ordering hypo-sprays and assistance. Kaleo saw a boy lying on a nearby bedroom floor glaring up at him. He must have been around sixteen, judging by the hair around his jaw and mouth, but that boy had the blackest, most hideous, piercing eyes. Not understanding the difference between helping and hurting, guttural wails of children seemed to come from every direction. The sound of Starfleet transporter beams were the only other sounds that could be heard. Medics beamed out with a patient and others transported in. Trapped in a corner while hell broke loose around them, Kaleo and Tory couldn't fully grasp the fact that there was an orphanage worse than the one they had been at. At the first opportunity, Kaleo helped Tory down the stairs and outside. Kaleo made an additional report to Alden then called Keith. All Keith and Prez heard was nonsensical rants between Kaleo's sobs. Suddenly, two black-robed VSO officers were standing before Kaleo and Tory.

Kaleo abruptly cut off Keith then asked the VSO officers, "You have what you need to complete your reports?"

One nodded and the other replied, "Aye, Sir."

"I only need to know one thing," Kaleo said. Getting nothing more than nods from both Vulcans, Kaleo asked, "Is anything besides the death penalty appropriate?"

The same Vulcan that vocally responded before flatly answered, "No."

"You are relieved to complete your reports," Kaleo said. The two VSO officers stepped away and, a moment later, were transported from the location.

Tory's beautiful dirty blond mop was a stringy damp mess, but Kaleo still finger combed it away from his husband's face. Kaleo softly asked, "You ready to do it?"

Nodding affirmation, Tory offered, "I'm fucking pissed."

Kaleo sighed, "Me too. Just don't hit them with your hands."

With a deliberate stride, Kaleo and Tory went back in the home. They learned from Dale where the adult 'care-givers' were. Kaleo patted Dale on the back, offered him his thanks then relieved the strike team. Kaleo and Tory surveyed the house to insure everybody had gone then returned to the downstairs bedroom where two adults were restrained. The first thing Tory saw in the room was a beautiful porcelain sculpture of three breaching dolphins. He picked it up and found that it only weighed four or five pounds. Without a word, Tory hurled it with all his strength at the man's face. The hollow porcelain shattered and the man's face split open from several deep lacerations. The woman screamed seconds before Kaleo broke a Tiffany lamp over her head. Ranting and raving from their own abuses and those committed at that orphanage, Kaleo and Tory destroyed the bedroom, slamming the two adults with every hard item they could find. When they ran out of hard things to hit them with, they climbed up onto the bed, grabbed the pillows and hit them some more until the pillows gave up their down feathers. Eventually, there was nothing left to break and scarcely a safe spot on the floor where Kaleo and Tory could stand. The two adults were bleeding profusely and barely conscious when Kaleo and Tory took their phasers out and fired from atop the bed's mattress. But the two adults didn't disintegrate as expected. Kaleo inspected his phaser then made a crooked smirk at Tory before saying, "I guess the right setting might help."

Tory nodded, "Juan would have a shit-fit and have us re-trained for that."

Pointing at the two adults, Kaleo wondered, "Should we wait for them to regain consciousness?"

Tory shrugged, "If you want. I don't really give a damn."

Humming uncertainly, Kaleo suggested, "We could fuck them?"

"No way!" Tory hollered. "I ain't stickin' my thing in those skanky asses! My dick is only for you now."

"Excellent point," Kaleo cheered. Evilily smirking, Kaleo pocketed his phaser, opened his robe then tore open the Velcro on his boardies. Taking hold of his dick and waving it to and fro, he urinated on the two unconscious adults. Wrinkling his nose, Tory helplessly snickered and wished that he needed to pee. Finished relieving himself, Kaleo stuffed his goods back in his shorts. He and Tory then checked their phaser settings and imitated Prez, counting down from five before turning the two demented individuals to dust. Exasperated, Kaleo huffed, "Fuck! How're we gonna get out of here? There's glass and splintered wood all over."

Not certain what to do, Tory reset his phaser to a slightly lower setting and the widest beam then fired at the carpeted floor. Seeing that Tory was creating a clear path, Kaleo followed his husband's lead and also fired, creating a safe walkway from the bed to the door. They jumped off the bed and walked out of the room. Outside the house and approaching their security team, Tory said, "Let's see what's happening at Eastlake Woods."

Having heard the yelling and the crashing sounds of glass, Kaleo's gorilla, Rasul nodded then teased, "You're really not supposed to do that."

"Oh?" Kaleo innocently smiled, "Sorry, I didn't have a Sehlat or a vampire available." Tory and the two teenage security members cracked up. Kaleo giggled, "Alden, San Diego site two please."

Instantaneously, Kaleo and Tory arrived with their security team in an apparently upscale neighborhood. Kaleo was about to ask Alden if he had transported them to the correct place when two armed strike team members stepped out of the house.

Kaleo asked, "What's the scoop, guys."

Fred answered, "Twelve kids have been transported out to Des Moines, Kaleo. You'll have them at Ewa Beach in the morning."

"Excellent," Tory chirped.

Kaleo complained, "I wish we could've met them."

Bayani, Tory's teenage security guard, softly giggled, "Spend less time redecorating."

Tory grinned, "Now that room almost matches the upstairs bedrooms."

Glancing around at six smiling faces, Fred offered, "VSO are inside waiting."

Kaleo nodded, "You guys are relieved."

Shaking his head, Fred reminded, "Wyatt's in command," then led the way inside the house.

Waiting patiently in the living room, two VSO officers stood as soon as they saw Tory and Kaleo enter. Eight violations of the Safe Haven Act were listed. Since they hadn't seen the kids for themselves, Kaleo and Tory had to ask Wyatt, Fred and the other strike team members their opinions before deciding sentences. They strolled around the house and saw acceptable accommodations, but the closets and dressers had few clothes. The kids had gone to local public schools in a nice community looking like they didn't belong. Having been in the same situation themselves, Kaleo and Tory decided to make the adults suffer as the kids had suffered. They sentenced the care-givers to life imprisonment.

Uncertain if they were finished, Kaleo tapped his comm-badge and checked with Keith. "We're done in San Diego, bro."

Keith wearily said, "Kewl. How're you and Tory feeling?"

Kaleo checked with Tory. When Tory nodded, Kaleo answered, "Not too bad, considering."

Keith said, "We've got one more orphanage to visit."

"Thanks, dudes," Prez cheerfully relayed. "You two are off duty. We'll meet you in the Command Center for debriefing and healing." Keith and Kaleo ended their brief conversation.

Kaleo commented, "I'm gonna go into culture shock at home."

Tilting his head and glaring at his partner, Tory wondered, "Why?"

"The difference in the adults," Kaleo answered. "Not once have I heard any of them swear. Have you?"

Tory thought for a long few moments then realized, "You're right." Tory said, "They must though. All the Rimmers cuss and swear a little so their parents must too."

"Dude!" Kaleo shouted, "They might not be doing it for us, for our sake."

Tory groaned, "Do I feel like shit now? I hardly ever speak to any of them, never mind spending time with them."

Kaleo nodded, "Let's start changing that tomorrow, with all the adults; chefs, housekeepers and landscapers too." Smiling at the two gorillas and two teenage boys waiting by the street, Kaleo said, "This is the first time I've been off base and needed security. You guys have been awesome."

Rapidly nodding agreement, Tory said, "I've seen you looking around, high and low, as if someone might appear to try and harm us."

Kaleo added, "That's what we've seen. I can only wonder what else you've been doing that we haven't seen." Two boys, Bayani and Mark, and two gorillas, Zareb and Rasul, grinned and attempted to appear innocent. The sight of two 'innocent' gorillas set Kaleo and Tory off, laughing hysterically. A few moments later, Kaleo called, "Alden, let's call it a night."

* * * * *

Fresno, California

Thursday, November 4, 2004 1:47 AM PST

Immediately upon hearing Prez's order to go, strike team members hustled to cut the power, the phone lines and disintegrate the door locks with their phaser rifles. They stealthily entered the dwelling, insuring rooms were clear as they moved forward in the dark. On the ground level, the four adult care givers awoke while they were being restrained with zip cords. In pairs, other strike team members moved up the stairs. Through their helmets and face masks, they began to detect putrid odors of urine, feces and rotting flesh. Via their armored helmet communications devices and sub-vocals, messages were passed. Four of the six second-level doorways were secured with metal plates and deadbolt locks above and below the locked doorknobs. The two unlocked rooms were checked first and found to be bathrooms. Unbelievably, the bathroom toilets, sinks and tubs were clean. While locks were being disintegrated, the ten-man team congregated in the hall. At floor level, they discovered small, fourteen inch long by six inch high steel passageways on the doors. One of the strike team members muttered, "Oh my God, they fed them through these."

"Like prison solitary confinement," another strike team member realized.

In rapid succession, the bedroom doors were opened. Huddled naked in fetal positions on the floor, they found children lying in their own urine, feces and blood. "I've got six," a strike team member announced.

From another room, another boy said, "Six here."

In the third room, another groaned, "Seven, one dead."

"Six in this room," another said from the last room.

While the strike team tried to awaken and check the kids, they all heard Prez say, "Attention Core Rimmers and Rimmer Strike Teams. It's way worse here than we could've imagined. There are twenty kids at our location. We need to prioritize what we've got and where we need what type of medical response. I want reports made to Alden ASAP We need the location, number of kids and their general condition. Alden, prioritize the incoming data and report back to me. This is turning to shit dude!"

From the third bedroom, while a moaning boy crawled at his feet, glaring up at him with desperate eyes, the strike team leader reported, "Daileass, we've got twenty-four at Fresno and one dead." Feeling his stomach turning, he muttered, "Partially cannibalized," then tore his helmet off and raced across the hall to a bathroom to vomit. Three others joined him, leaning over the sinks and bathtub. When they recovered and turned faucets to rinse away the mess, they found the water had been turned off. At the toilet, the team leader flushed, however no water ran there either. Tapping his sub-vocal, he completed his report. "Daileass, medical priority. Get medics here now. When this is over, I want Vulcan healers assigned to each member of my team. Otherwise, we'll never be able to eat or sleep again."

Daileass replied, "Medics are on their way. Jason Evans and VSO have been notified."

He sighed then told one of the team members to get the water turned on and tapped another on the shoulder to get the electric power restored. Stepping out of the bathroom, he heard other members of his team in the other bathroom vomiting. With all his military and first aid training, the fifteen year old wasn't sure what to do next. There was no first aid sufficient for the kids. He wanted to go downstairs to the adults and exact vengeance, but that wasn't his job. The first four medics materialized in the hall, looking to him for guidance. He asked, "How many are assigned?"

Holding a hand up to his nose, one of the four men answered, "Twelve."

The strike team leader ordered, "Double it. These kids aren't standing or walking out of here."

With nothing left to do except coordinate the medics and care for his team, he gathered them all and led the way back downstairs. "Two at a time upstairs, in five minute shifts until the medics and kids are gone," he ordered. "Whatever help the docs and nurses need, give them. The rest will secure the premises." All the feral kids and medics were transported to Terra-Main Space Station. VSO interrogations of the four adult care-givers were complete. The strike team and VSO waited for a Core Rimmer command team.

Doug and Travis found the four adult 'care-givers' guilty of nineteen violations of the Safe Haven Act. The only parts of the Act not infringed upon were the sexual conduct sections. The kids were treated worse than animals. Most horrific, the one corpse discovered had been partially eaten. The adult 'care-givers' were executed by Doug under VSO regulations. The remains were scattered around California, Nevada and Arizona deserts. Due to the extra time it took for the executions and subsequent dispersion of remains, Doug, Travis and their strike team were the last to return to the ROH.

* * * * *

Ewa Beach, Oahu

Wednesday, November 3, 2004 11:01 PM HTZ

Reports from the away teams began coming in to the command center. Logan, Nathan and Lieutenant Vorik organized the data by the number of orphans found at each location. Those with Zorro's described twelve children were considered Level One. Orphanages with sixteen kids were categorized as Level Two; those with eighteen or twenty children were Level Three. The worst cases were those reported with twenty-four children and listed as Level Four.

The next fifteen minutes were spent coordinating medical response units and VSO Operatives. When that task was near complete and Vorik was handling what remained, Logon concentrated on incoming reports of the 'care-givers' from the VSO Logan told Nathan; "We can't leave this task half-assed. I know Prez wanted minimal casualties..."

"But that was when we thought we had twelve kids at each of sixteen orphanages," Nathan finished. He smiled, "I'm checking with Prez now. He's hearing the reports from the VSO at his location. Give him a minute." Logan took that minute to put his shorts back on over his extremely stretched out Terminator briefs. With the seconds remaining, he bitched about Jack ruining his favorite underpants before the operation began. Nathan told Logan, "Keith just said that he wants everyone involved prosecuted to the full extent of the law. His exact words were, 'if the garbage man knew and didn't say anything, I want his ass on a hook'. So let it be written..."

"So let it be done," Logan evilly grinned. He then contacted Colin. "Get your Dutchmen to Zorro Communications Corp's headquarters. Lock down the data center. If anyone gets in your way, turn them into a carpet."

"You take all the fun out of it; I'll have to leave them in one piece if they've got to be carpet." Colin commented.

Foster City, California

Thursday, November 4, 2004 2:24 AM PST

Colin and the Dutchmen raided Zorro Communications Corporation Headquarters. Transporting directly into the lobby, the two security men were immediately stunned. With special emphasis on acquisition of records from the data center, including freezing all databases, mail servers and preventing updates or deletion of information, teams of four spread out around the building to gather all the night shift employees. Faced with teams of armed boys, almost no one thought it wise to test the abilities of Clan Short representatives. All except one of the employees were first telepathically interrogated then sent home. The one employee that remained had been stunned for not stopping what she was doing when told to do so. She was trying to key in a sequence that would have performed an emergency data wipe of the e-mail servers. As it turned out, the woman was only performing her job. Telepathic scans proved she knew nothing of the orphanages, so she was transported to the UNIT Rapid Response Base Medical facility to be revived, treated and debriefed before being transported to her home.

For about another hour, the Dutchmen remained on-site to insure no one got in the building or tampered with the electronic evidence being gathered by Alden, Daileass, Draco, George and Kerry. All electronic transmissions to or from ZCC were halted or denied so all available bandwidth fed data directly to the Clan Short AI's. Data that did not match the publicized reports ZCC made, and internal memorandums regarding the social services spin-off, were flagged.

* * * * *

Postmortem

Thursday, November 4, 2004

3:00 AM – 06:00 PST / 12:00 AM – 03:00 HTZ

Incoming data from ZCC headquarters implicated all twelve members of the social services leadership, as well as twelve of the thirteen members of the board of directors of Zorro Communications Corporation. Also implicated in the horrors were the State's Fire Marshall, and the Director of the Department of Health, and the Director of Public Safety, who was responsible for building inspections. The three men had taken jurisdiction from the local departments, but had never once reviewed any of the properties. The Mayor of San Diego, where level 4 and level 3 orphanages were discovered was also on the hot seat. The Chief of Police of San Jose and of Sacramento were identified as complicit as were six of the nine city council members of Fresno.

As additional names popped onto the screen, Logan and Nathan quietly considered who they should send to apprehend the individuals responsible. Hitting upon an evil idea, Nathan grinned, "There's one extremely adept group I can think of. I'll be back in less than five minutes, Logan."

"Kewl," Logan smiled.

Telepathically connected to Daileass, Nathan disappeared from the Command Center, reappearing in a Utah conference room. Mid-shower, wearing a shiny silver shower cap, holding a loofah sponge in one little paw and a bar of soap in the other, High Priest Dave appeared with his head thrown back singing; "We will; we will SHINE you! Yeah! We Will; We will SHINE you!"

Dave's eyes popped open and he looked around trying to find the water that was supposed to be falling on him, when he spotted Nathan standing there. "Oh hello, Nathan." The tone of High Priest Dave's voice was totally natural, as if nothing were amiss. "To what do I owe the honor of basking in your shiny glow."

'This is exactly why I needed to do this. Vorik would have needed to go see a mind healer after this conversation,' Nathan thought to himself as he fought back the urge to run. Hearing Daileass' loud laughter in his mind, Nathan smiled, "Glimmering High Priest of all that is shiny and lustrous, so many children are beseeching you and your flocks' aid in exacting justice on their tormentors." Nathan got interrupted by High Priest Dave, waving the Loofah sponge around, wielding it almost like a sword.

Forgetting all about his shower, Dave became all business.

Using his loofah sponge as a pointer, he prompted Nathan, "Ah! You have recognized our shiny greatness. How have the dull lovers harmed those whose true shine has yet to emerge? Tell me of the mission."

Nathan began briefing Dave on the California Orphanage operation and telling him of the Shiny Hating individuals identified as responsible for the abused, malnourished and feral children found. The change in Dave's mood was almost enough to make Nathan worry. Of course, the fact that as Dave was ranting about those 'damned dull lovers', he was waving the loofah sponge around and scattering water all over the conference room, which made it so the intimidation factor was significantly decreased. Nathan said, "Your task is to locate and exact vengeance upon the Shiny Haters. Have all of the Dull Loving bastards disappear, to Runi's dungeon. You and your flock will of course get to keep all shinys found on their person and their property."

His eyes glazing over, Dave shook his loofah and repeated, "All the shinys?"

"All the Shinys," Nathan emphatically stated, and then reminded, "Daileass has the list of names and will help you locate the Shiny Haters. Take the Scoobies with you."

"Daileass!" High Priest Dave barked, "Sound the Shiny Alert! Every member of my flock will be leaving the base to capture these Shiny Forsaken Heathens! The hour of their retribution is at hand! They may have been dull lovers in life, but the Transcendent radiance of Runi and his Shiny vampires shall show them that there is some luster in everyone... even if it is only in their blood! We shall take their Shinys and make them our own, for they do not..."

Dave's rant was cut short as he disappeared. Nathan sighed deeply. "Thanks bro... he was really getting on a roll there."

"Tell me about it," Daileass laughed. "He still hasn't realized I transported him yet."

Nathan chuckled, "Take me back to the Ewa Beach Command Center, bro."

First to arrive back at the Ewa Beach Command center were Julio, Jesse, Doug and Travis from the Des Moines Division. Next in the room were Drew and Corey, quickly followed by Sean and Troy, and then Kaleo and Tory. Arriving with Stephen, and unwilling to speak to anyone about anything, was John. Being a big brother, Drew tried his best to get some description of what had happened from his little brother, but all he got from John was a firm telepathic, 'No, don't, bro.' Mike and Derrick arrived in the CIC dining room with thirty-six Latin King kids. A few chefs were called to feed the newbies. While the kids were waiting on quick meals, Derrick and Mike alerted their dads to come and assist getting the new arrivals situated in dorm rooms. Carl and Rob pulled Jim and Bill from their homes to expedite the process. By the time Derrick and Mike walked into the Command Center, Keith and Prez were already there.

Lieutenant Vorik suggested that all the command teams discuss the missions in the conference room. Once alone, any remaining strength withered and all pretenses vanished. All emotions were plainly drawn on the faces of twelve boys and young men. Beginning with San Francisco, Prez and Keith reported two executions and four sentenced to imprisonment. Fifty-two kids were rescued; thirty-two would hopefully be seen at Ewa Beach within a few days. The other twenty were at the level three home and might not be seen for at least a week.

Mike and Derrick reported that two LA Police officers had been shot and arrested for interfering with the first orphanage raid. Fifty-six kids were rescued from Los Angeles. Only sixteen would be seen within a few days. The remaining forty would not be seen at Ewa Beach for about a week. Four adults in LA were executed and two were sentenced to life imprisonment. An additional thirty-six impoverished street gang members had been rescued and were already on base. The four fathers were getting them fed and then settled in dorm rooms.

At Fresno, Doug and Travis reported that twenty-four were rescued, however any hopes of seeing them in the future were slim to none. One child was already dead upon their arrival. Four adults were executed in Fresno.

Julio and Jesse said that two adults in Santa Barbara had been terminated. Sixteen kids were rescued and most would be in Ewa Beach within a few days. One was going to Des Moines, to be adopted by Julio and Jesse.

Kaleo and Tory reported that two adults were executed and two imprisoned in San Diego. A total of thirty-six were rescued from San Diego, but only twelve would ever be seen at Ewa Beach. Those twelve would likely be there the next day.

Corey and Drew added good news. They reported a total of twenty-four rescued that would be at Ewa Beach in the morning. Four adults had been sentenced to life in prison.

Sean and Troy had rescued thirty-four kids from Sacramento and all would be at Ewa Beach in a few days. Two adult lives were terminated and two were imprisoned.

Finally, Stephen spoke for himself and John. "In San Jose, forty-two were rescued. We'll never see twenty-four of them. The other eighteen will be here within a week, they hope." Breaking down, Stephen wearily sobbed, "John... four adults... executed."

Keith quietly lost it and wiped his eyes. Since he was two years old and Drew was born, Keith was the eldest big brother. It was his job to watch over Drew and John. In addition to all the other traumas experienced, Keith felt that he had failed to protect his youngest brother. With an emotional connection to Keith, Prez also began shedding tears. For what the other team members had gone through, Prez wished that he had ordered the immediate extermination of all the care-givers. Telling himself that he didn't how bad things were didn't help at all.

Eerily quiet through all this, John began shaking and so did the conference table and the lights in the ceiling. Vorik rapidly stood and went to stand behind John. Carefully placing his fingers around John's head, the Vulcan Lieutenant murmured, "My mind to your mind, my thoughts to your thoughts," beginning a mind-meld and preventing the likely destruction of the conference room. About two minutes later, Vorik released John. He said, "I have not completed training for full healing of Terrans. In the CIC dining room, sixteen certified healers await your arrival. You will all go there now. I strongly recommend that once the healing is completed, you all go to bed."

Drew asked, "Even me and Corey?"

Corey nodded agreement, "We didn't have to do nothin' compared to these other dudes."

"Yes," Lieutenant Vorik firmly insisted. He explained, "All of you have performed your duties admirably under most stressful circumstances. There is no need to be concerned or frightened. You will not be judged in any manner. Take seats in the dining room. The healers will choose their subjects." Every one stood. Prez and Drew helped John walk to the dining room. Keith and Corey helped Stephen. The remaining six filed out behind them.

The Core Rimmers and Des Moines command team leaders took seats at two tables. Fifteen minutes later, Drew and Corey stood then went to the kitchen for cold drinks. They were soon joined by Doug, Travis, Julio and Jesse. When they returned, Sean was seated on Troy's lap. Soon thereafter, Prez, Keith, Mike, Derrick, Kaleo, Tory and Stephen had all been healed. Terry, the Santa Barbara kid Julio and Jesse returned with also got attention from a Vulcan healer. Minutes later, the final Vulcan stepped away from John. Turning to Stephen, John yawned, "I'm real tired, baby."

Thrilled at hearing John's voice calling him 'baby' for the first time in about an hour, Stephen giggled, "Come on, hon. Let's find a place in the nest." Stephen helped John stand then they began the walk to the Hundsers' basement.

Prez pointed at Drew and Corey, smiling, "I've got a surprise for you two." When they suspiciously wondered what sort of surprise, Prez chuckled, "For doing a great job and not needing to take a life, you're in charge tomorrow." Briefly, Prez wondered where that thought came from. Fully involved in everything that occurred in California and since returning to Ewa Beach, he couldn't be certain if he thought of it himself or if was suggested in the mind-meld.

Drew asked, "All day, for everything?"

Prez nodded, "Unless the shit hits the fan and you need help, you've got the ball."

Corey grinned, "We'd better crash soon then."

Before the others could say a word, Prez stood then asked Doug, Travis, Julio, Jesse, Sean, Troy, Kaleo and Tory to stand. "You dudes rock!" Prez cheered, "I can't begin to imagine how this night might have been without your help. We'd definitely still be out there." Troy and Sean blushed while Kaleo and Tory began giggling from the compliment.

Simultaneously, Derrick and Mike shouted, "What about us?"

Tilting his right hand several times, Keith playfully grunted. Shaking their heads, Corey and Drew began giggling at the incessant teasing the older four inflicted upon each other.

Prez reminded, "They're newer; fresh meat, ya know? Talk about baptism by fire." He then warmly smiled, "To build on the camaraderie we've already established, I'd like us all in the nest tonight, if that's all right?"

Kaleo nodded, "It's fine with us, Prez."

Sean had no issue with the idea, but checked with Troy. Troy nodded then told Prez, "Let me tell my mom where I'll be."

"Kewl," Prez chirped. He then devilishly grinned, "Let's make sure that certain corporate shit-stains don't get away with murder."

Standing and moving beside his husband, Keith asked, "Any one wanna help?" Mike and Derrick agreed, but Doug, Travis, Drew, Corey, Kaleo, Tory, Sean and Troy decided bed was the better choice.

They said goodnight to each other. Prez, Keith, Jesse, Julio, Mike and Derrick had snacks and sodas while Kaleo and Tory followed Sean and Troy to the condo.

* * * * *

Las Vegas, Nevada

Thirty-seven-year-old Melvin Blair sat between two much younger looking, scantily-clad blonde-haired women as his limo made its way down Las Vegas Boulevard. All three adults giggled at a comment that Melvin made as he took a sip of wine from a glass that one of the women handed to him. They had just finished a long night of clubbing at the Stratosphere. And now, he was looking forward to chilling out for a little bit at Planet Hollywood before turning in for the night.

Moments after the limo came to a stop in front of the VIP entrance of the hotel, the door was opened allowing for Melvin and his escorts to step out. Given how late it was, one might expect the streets to be rather empty. However, in the heart of sin city, this was hardly ever the case as even now, there was a large rustle of people lounging and walking around the outside of one of the higher-end casinos that Las Vegas had to offer.

"Sorry," a deep, scruffy voice from a shadowy figure dressed in a long fancy-looking trench coat called out as he bumped into Melvin. The drink that the man was still holding onto nearly ended up all over his shirt.

"Watch it, bud!" Melvin angrily called out, once his mind finally registered what had just happened. When he turned around to face the person that had caused him to spill his drink, however, there was no one to be seen.

Shaking his head a little, the man shook the whole situation out of his head, and walked through the VIP entrance into the lobby of the hotel.

The long check-in counter, which normally would have at least twenty clerks checking guests in and out during the day, now had a lone middle-aged man standing at the closest station. "Yes, Sir? May I be of service?" he asked, as the three adults waddled to the desk.

"Melvin Blair," the man spoke with a slight slur, a clear indication that he had already consumed a good amount of alcohol. "You should have a room reserved for me, under Zorro-Communications."

The man gave a slight nod and began typing on the computer keyboard that was in front of him. After a few moments, the man's expression turned to one of recognition. "Ah yes, Mr. Blair. Your usual presidential suite has been reserved for you. I'll just need your credit card to put on file."

Melvin scowled before he grudgingly reached into his pocket and presented his corporate credit card. "You would think you guys would keep this on file so you didn't have to ask for it ever time I was here."

The clerk gave a single nod as he began to type once again. "I'm sorry, Sir. It's the hotel's policy."

"Yeah, yeah, whatever," Melvin replied as he made no attempt to cover up his annoyance.

After a few more minutes of typing, the Clerk handed back the card. "I'm sorry sir, but there seems to be a problem."

"Huh?" the man replied. "What kind of problem?"

Swinging the monitor around so the man could see it, the clerk pointed to a specific section. "It would appear that the credit card rejected our attempt to place the normal room retainer for your suite."

"Idiots," Melvin replied under his breath. "Look, I'm on the board of directors for Zorro-Communications, I've been here dozens of times before. I have an unrestricted credit limit, so clearly your computers are messing up."

The clerk turned the monitor back around. "I am truly sorry, Sir, but I ran the numbers three times just to make absolutely sure. Perhaps you have another card?"

"Okay look, I don't need this," Melvin grumbled as he snatched the card from the clerk and pulled out a large wad of hundred-dollar bills. He then counted out five bills and placed them on the counter. "That should be enough to cover the retainer." He then counted out five more bills and placed them on the pill. "And there is a little extra to stop giving me a hard time."

The clerk smiled and nodded with understanding. "Very good, Sir. I'm sure this is just a glitch in our system that will be fixed first thing in the morning. I'll arrange to have your belongings taken to your room right away." A few moments later, the clerk handed over a small electronic key card.

Snatching the card, Melvin snorted, "Come on ladies, let's relax for a bit before we go up to the room."

Quickly following the executive, the three walked out of the lobby area and into the main casino area.

Although he planned on relaxing, Melvin also knew that it was late enough in the evening that all of the games he had placed bets on earlier would be over, which meant that he was free to go collect his winnings. As such, with his escorts in tow, he made his way to the sports room and walked up to the betting desk.

Taking out his receipt from when he placed his bets, he handed it to the attendant that was standing behind the counter. "I would like to cash these in. You can give me my winnings in hundred- and five-hundred-dollar chips."

The attendant ran the receipt through the computer. "I'm sorry sir, but none of the bets you placed were winners."

"What do you mean?" Melvin asked as he felt his blood pressure beginning to rise once again. "I know at least three of the races I placed bets on were winners."

The attendant re-ran the piece of paper and shook his head. "I'm sorry sir, but all eight races were busts. I know it's not my place, Sir, but when you make long shot bets at hundred-to-one and two-hundred-to-one odds, you should expect to loose a lot."

"What?" Melvin asked in confusion.

"Don't worry, Sir. Your players club card has been credited with ten-thousand points for the ten-thousand-dollars in bets that were placed. I'm sure you will do better next time," The attendant replied cheerfully as he handed back the receipt.

"Let me see that," Melvin snatched the paper from the younger attendant. "I didn't place any two-hundred-to-one bets, and I sure as hell didn't bet..." The man's voice trailed off as he looked at the sheet in horror. Sure enough, the paper showed that not only had he made the worst possible bets, but in total, he had bet close to ten-thousand-dollars on them; all of which was charged to his personal account on his credit card.

"What kind of crap is this?" Melvin called out. "I would never have made these crappy bets. Especially not at this amount of money. I demand a refund."

"I'm sorry sir, but once you step away from the table after making your original bets, all bets are locked in and final. There is nothing I can do," the attendant replied as calmly as possible.

"I don't give a fuck what you can or can't do," Melvin began to make a scene. "I want my damn money back, or I will have your damn job."

A few moments later, two men in nice looking business suites walked over. Each of them had small casino security emblems on them. "Is there a problem here?" one of them asked as he looked toward Melvin.

Melvin looked at the men for a few moments, as if considering if he felt like taking on the entire security team of the hotel. As he apparently decided against that action, he shook his head. "No problem, I was just leaving."

The two security men nodded, and stood patiently next to the counter as they watched Melvin hastily walk out of the sports room, with his escorts following close behind.

"They just don't understand you," one of the woman stated as she gave Melvin a kiss on the cheek and began to rub her hand down his back.

"They are a bunch of idiots," Melvin shook off the woman's advances. "Honestly, I don't know why I spend so much god damned money here for this kind of treatment."

Deciding that it would be best to cool off by playing a few of the table games, Melvin walked over to the cage, and took ten of the hundred-dollar bills from his large stack of bills to get an equal amount of chips. He then headed over to the roulette table, which he always seemed to have good luck at.

Although he might have had good luck in the past, after ten minutes had gone by, it was clear that he would not have any such luck this evening. Each of the twenty-seven bets he placed lost. At one point he had bet on black six times in a row and the ball landed on red all six times. Out of spite, he bet red six times, and each of those times the ball landed on black. Finally, he bet on both black and red at the same time, and the ball landed on 0, one of only two possible positions that could cause a black/red bet to lose.

With half of his chips gone, Melvin next decided to play a little black-jack. Just like roulette, however, all eight hands he placed were all losses.

"To hell with this crap," Melvin muttered as he took the few chips he had left and walked over to the poker table. At least this was a game that he had a lot more control over.

Even with his card counting skill working at it's full force, the three hands he played of poker all went against him as well.

With all his chips gone, and determined to at least win something, Melvin growled at the card dealer. "Give me another thousand in chips," he demanded as he reached his hand into his jacket to pull out his large wad of money. To his shock and horror, however, he couldn't feel the expected bills. Instead, the only thing he could find in his pocket was a small shiny button which he quickly threw on the floor.

"Where the fuck is my money?" Melvin demanded as he quickly began to search all his other pockets for the missing cash, "Someone fucking robbed me."

Seeing that it was clear they were not going to be getting paid tonight, the two woman which had, up to this point, faithfully stood near or at Melvin's side, slowly began to step away from the man.

"Where do you two think you're going?" the man barked, "I'll make sure you get your damned money."

"You can keep your money, hon," one of them replied before they each disappeared into the crowd.

"Damn it," Melvin cried out as he slammed his hand on the table, causing the other players and the dealer to jump. Seeing more security making their way toward the table, he stood up and grudgingly decided it was time to leave for a bit.

As he walked away from the table, Melvin took out his cell phone and pressed a few numbers. "Henry, bring the car around, I'm heading back out."

By the time Melvin made it back to the VIP entrance and walked outside, his white stretched limo was already pulled up to the entrance waiting for him. Although the door to the back was already open, inviting him in; his driver, Henry, was not standing next to it as he normally would. Right now, however, this was one of the least concerns on his mind.

Sitting down in the limo and closing the door himself, Melvin let out a sigh of relief. He had never felt so humiliated by such low-lives in his life. So now, he needed somewhere to go hang out and relax, of which he knew the perfect spot. "Take me to Fremont Street." In a place like that, he was sure there would be plenty of respectable bars and clubs he could hang out at, and possibly find some better escorts.

Within moments, the limo pulled out of the parking lot and began to travel down the strip. Being as late at night as it was, there was very little traffic still on the street, so they made fairly good time.

As they went, Melvin looked out the window at the brightness that was the Las Vegas strip, and the few people that were still out on the streets. "Damn low-lifes," he said to himself. "The world would be such a better place without them mucking things up all the time."

Sitting back in his seat, he opened the wet bar, and poured himself another glass of wine. After which, he closed his eyes and slowly began to sip. Because of this, he never noticed that the limo made a few turns that it shouldn't have, and that the lights of the strip were quickly getting left far behind them.

About five minutes later, Melvin opened his eyes back up and looked out the window. Seeing no sign of the strip, or the city itself for that matter, he leaned forward and banged his fist on the glass that separated him from his driver. "Where the hell are you going, Henry? I said to take me to Fremont Street."

As Melvin did this, initially he could only see the hat and the suit that his driver normally wore. At about that moment, however, two things happened which immediately caused him to freak out more than he had ever freaked out before. First, the realization that his driver was a lot shorter than he should have been. In fact, it almost looked like his driver was having problems seeing over the steering wheel. Second, the driver turned his head toward Melvin. Instead of seeing the face that he expected, a fur filled face of some type of half-human, half-animal creature shot him back a toothy grin.

"Fuck!" Melvin screamed as he fell back onto his seat. With his heart pounding, he immediately grabbed for the door handle, opening the door and literally throwing himself out of the limo while it was still going.

After he stopped rolling, Melvin managed to stand himself up and began to dust himself off. Looking ahead of him, he could see the lights of the limo driving off in the distance, with his door still open.

"What is going on tonight?" he thought to himself as he continued to brush off the dirt and noticed that his clothes were not only filthy, but cut in several places. He also noticed that his right arm and knee were scraped up pretty bad, but between the adrenalin and alcohol, he didn't feel any of the pain.

Whipping out his cell phone, he decided enough was enough, and it was now time to call his old man to see if he knew what was going on. Typing in the numbers and hitting send, he patiently waited for someone to pick up. Instead, he was greeted with an automated message "We're sorry, but your account has been suspended due to lack of payment. To be connected to our automated payment system, please press one now."

"This isn't happening," Melvin screamed as he threw the cellphone to the ground and watched in satisfaction as it exploded into a dozen pieces. The satisfaction was short lived, however, as he was now faced with figuring out what to do on his own.

Looking around, he could see that he was in what seemed to be a large abandoned lot a good ways away from the city. Probably on the south side of town. There was nothing at all out here except for a few run down buildings, shrubs, a good amount of trash, and a boy in boxers.

Melvin immediately did a double take. With the moon as bright as it was, he could very clearly see a dark haired boy, no older than nine or ten, standing a few feet away from him, wearing nothing other than a pair of blue and white boxer shorts.

"Melvin Blair?" the boy asked softly.

"Who are you? How do you know my name?" the man demanded as he began to stare down the boy.

"You are on the board of directors for Zorro Communications, aren't you?" the boy asked.

"Yeah, what of it?" the man challenged. "Who the hell are you?"

"My name is Brook, but that's not important," Brook replied. "I could be anyone. Any child that does not have a mother or father to care for them. Anyone that needs to live in a place such as the orphanages that your company has setup and manages."

"Oh, you're one of those little shits, are you?" An angry look came across the man's face as he lunged for the boy. Just as he did, the boy seemed to vanish in thin-air, causing Melvin to fall flat on his face, empty handed.

"You spend thousands of dollars that you have embezzled from a company who has been entrusted with the well being of kids," Brook continued from a location behind where the man landed. "And yet, many of those kids are sick or dying from poor living conditions and starvation."

"It's their own damn fault," Melvin growled as he got back to his feet. "Besides, they would die one way or the other. So what's wrong with making a little profit as a result? Isn't that the purpose of every company?"

Brook sighed and slowly shook his head. "How could a man like you be filled with so much anger and rage toward kids?" he asked. "Don't you feel anything at all for what your corporation has done to them?"

A ferrel grin came across the man's face. "Why don't you come here kid, and I'll show you how I feel about little shits like you." The man then lunged for the kid a second time. Just like the first time, however, the kid once again vanished and appeared several feet behind the man.

"In that case, I have a message for you," Brook stated and continued before the man could say anything. "As of tonight, neither you nor anyone else at Zorro Communications will ever be involved in hurting or exploiting any child ever again."

This time Melvin laughed out loud. "Is that right, kid? And who is going to stop us? You?"

Brook shook his head. "No, I don't have any training yet. But my friends will."

"Oh really?" Melvin replied in amusement. "And who are your friends? More little squirts like yourself?"

Instead of replying, the boy vanished once again. This time, however, he did not reappear anywhere else that the man could see.

"Come back, you little shit," the man called out into the night. "We're not done yet!"

"Oh, you're done with him," a higher pitched voice spoke from somewhere to the left of Melvin. "Now you get to deal with us."

"How does it feel to be as helpless as those that you take advantage of?" another high pitched voice from the man's right spoke out.

"A bunch of girls, huh?" Melvin called out, still feeling slightly amused. "Come on out, unless your too scared."

"Your dullness shall never put out the shine of another youngling again," a third high pitched voice called out, just as Melvin could make out a few shadows moving toward him. Slowing turning himself around, he could see at least ten small figures moving toward him in all directions.

"I don't care how many of you little shits there are, I'll take you all on," Melvin cried out, feeling confident that a few little girls would not be able to take him down.

"You got it, buddy," one of the voices called out just as the figures were close enough for Melvin to get a better look at them. In an instant, the man's face turned as white as a ghost as the confident, amused look on his face was replaced with one of sheer terror. Surrounding him were not the seven- or eight-year-old girls that he had expected, but instead very strange looking, short furry creatures, that if he had to guess, almost resembled ferrets.

"This is the part where you're suppose to scream," One of the ferrets grinned as the group of ferrets were less than a foot away from the man.

Less than a mile away, on the outskirts of the city, a small muffled scream could be heard off in the distance, echoing through the desert. With the sounds of the city easily drowning out the sound, no one in Las Vegas would ever hear that voice again.

* * * * *

Monte Carlo, Monaco

Fifty-one-year-old Charles Vogt, Chairman of the Board of Zorro Communications, and his wife, Shelly, woke late Thursday, only minutes after noon, in their suite at the Hotel de l'Hermitage, after a night spent at the Opera de Monte-Carlo and then at Le Grand Casino. Sitting and reaching her hand for the night table, as she did every morning at home and away, Shelly gasped, "Charles, my pearl necklace, it's gone!"

"It probably slipped and fell behind the night stand," Charles yawned.

Looking around the floor, but not finding the necklace, Shelly began to panic and scurried around.

Charles grumbled, "My fucking Rolex is missing." He went to the window and drew open the curtains, affording him a beautiful view of the Mediterranean. Returning to the bed, Charles began searching for his watch. On the opposite side of the bed, Shelly was already on her knees searching for her pearls. It was then that Charles noticed his diamond wedding band, which he never took off, was not on his finger. Scowling, he went to his wife and wordlessly pulled her up off the floor.

Shelly griped, "Charles, my necklace..."

"And your earrings, and your rings, and my watch and my wedding band too," Charles grouched.

Shelly frowned, "We've been robbed?"

Nodding, Charles went to lift the handset on the room phone, only to discover there was no dial-tone. He sourly muttered, "What the fuck?" and repeatedly tapped the buttons to try and get a connection. Distraught, Shelly flopped onto the edge of the bed.

There was a knock at their suite door. Dropping the phone, Charles told his wife, "I'll bet that's security." He opened the door. Shocked to find his eldest son, Samuel, standing there, Charles sighed, "You picked a hell of a time for a visit." Turning and heading back to the phone, Charles bitterly asked, "Why aren't you at Oxford?"

Samuel answered, "I'm between classes anyway." Samuel chose Oxford University simply to get as far away from his parents as was possible. Overhearing a conversation years earlier, he had unintentionally been privy to ZCC policy discussions and fought with his parents over the orphanages.

"Between classes?" Shelly incredulously shrieked. "The flight from London to Monaco is almost three hours! Who the hell..."

Rolling his eyes, Samuel loudly interrupted, "If you'll both just listen for a change, I'll explain everything." He closed the door and took two steps inside the suite and stopped, facing his parents, but staying far enough away to avoid any sudden movements.

"Watch your tongue, boy," Charles admonished.

"No pop, this time you need to watch out," Samuel evilly smirked. "You never spared the rod once in your miserable lives. Angie killed herself to get away from you two..."

Having heard this before, Shelly screamed, "You don't know what you're talking about!"

"I do know," Samuel hollered. "I know so much that I was visited minutes ago, by people who had been to Beverly Hills, and to Pacifica, and to Martha's Vineyard, looking for you. I won't do what Angela did, but I will make amends and have made amends. Look at you two, vacationing on the Med, with the high and mighty, only weeks after your only daughter committed suicide. You think you're above the law. In this case, you bought the law in L.A, lock, stock and barrel. What I reported at seventeen simply wasn't investigated, was it? In case you don't realize it, I feel nothing for either of you.

Therefore, I had no problem pointing them here. You're disgusting."

The word 'disgusting' was the prearranged signal. At that moment, twelve ferret-hybrids transported into the room. Shelly briefly screamed then fainted, falling back onto the bed unconscious.

Shocked at what was happening, Charles dropped onto a chair. He locked eyes with his son and growled, "What have you done?"

Wearing a self-righteous smirk, Samuel shrugged and calmly stated, "I'm allowing justice to be carried out, pop. As of this moment, you're worth nothing; your properties and worldly possessions will be confiscated. In a few weeks, Jimmy and I will evenly split the life insurance money for both of you. I don't want the homes, the jets, the yachts or anything from you. I don't even want to know where these guys are taking you. I only hope the remainder of your lives are as painful as possible, as horrific as it was for those unfortunates in the orphanages you profited from. I'll step back and allow justice to be served." He turned and went to the door.

Ferret-hybrids began to surround the Chairman of the Board of Zorro Communications Corporation. The last thing Samuel heard before closing the door was his father hollering his name and calling him a son of a bitch, as if that made any difference at all to Samuel. He had been called that and far worse by his father.

As instructed, Samuel Vogt waited outside the suite doors. Within a minute, there were no sounds to be heard. He opened the door and peaked inside. All the strange little ferret-hybrids, his mother and father were gone. He closed the door again and waited about a minute and a half before feeling a furry paw slide into his hand.

The creature squeaked, "Alden, return us to Oxford."

Samuel blinked and found himself in his flat. The ferret-hybrid smiled then reached into his waist sack and pulled something out then offered it to Samuel. Seeing his father's wedding band, Samuel shook his head and sighed, "Keep it, I don't want it. To me, it's shine is tarnished."

Stunned at the choice of words, the little spiky-haired ferret-hybrid asked, "You believe in the Great Shiny?"

"I believe in doing what's right," Samuel stated. "My parents never could tell right from wrong. As long as there was profit, they believed it acceptable and proper. I didn't live in one of those orphanages, but was raised without hugs or love from either of them; they hired other people to care for us. They gave us everything we could want, but never gave us the love we needed. I feel more for nannies and chauffeurs than I do about them. My brother and sister matter to me because we've learned how not to act from our parents. At last, I feel like I'm liberated from the past; from knowledge I never wanted and could never do anything about." Samuel smiled, "Thank you."

The ferret-hybrid giggled and waved, calling, "Alden, take me to High Priest Dave." He vanished.

Samuel looked at the photographs of his brother and deceased sister on his dresser, praying that human-kind would somehow learn from past mistakes and improve. At least he and his brother, Jimmy, would know and remember enough to push for those changes in whatever ways they could.

Grabbing his trench coat and laptop computer, Samuel left his flat to return to school. Somehow the chilly, overcast skies of autumn in the United Kingdom didn't seem quite so gloomy anymore. A woman greeted him with a pleasant "Good afternoon". Samuel returned the sentiment, just as cheerfully, and found himself repeatedly doing it. It felt good. He felt good.

* * * * *

Ewa Beach, CIC Dining Room

Prez shared his thoughts during the short break. "We all know what the deal was tonight. A corporation created a social services spin-off for tax benefits. They hired sadists to care for kids. What happened tonight must never be able to happen again. To accomplish that goal, I intend to write an official Clan Short press release. We're pointing fingers and naming names. Vulcan mind-melds carry more weight than testimony under oath. Thirty-four adult men and woman were interrogated. From those reports, we're going to blow one hell of a shit storm all over the greedy louses that caused this mess."

Mike wondered, "What are you expecting for repercussions?"

Keith asked, "What do you mean?"

Mike sighed, "Think about it. The King wanted teen prostitutes off the street. Prez accepted that and we've had our shields up since Monday night. At some point, we've gotta get these kids off base; to the beach, to the zoo, any day trip like that. Otherwise, they're like rats in a very nice cage. We don't want the kids threatened because of stuff we decide to do."

"Our kids will always be safe," Keith assured. "There will always be security around. Let's say the rug rats are going to the zoo. At least four adults and eight security guards will be with them. If I know Adam and our UNIT troops at all, the first kid that gets approached or threatened, someone is going to be in a world of hurt."

"This all goes back to what is right versus what is wrong," Prez said. "History has shown us wars caused because right versus wrong couldn't be decided. And why is that? Because some group is putting their own spin on the issue. American History, for example; all men are created equal, except women, except people of color, except this, except that. The American Civil War was fought because the southern economies perceived a threat. How many thousands died, eighty years after the Revolution because of that; for money? The Great War was started because of the assassination of Archduke Ferdinand. Austria presented Serbia with an ultimatum for what? Fundamentally, it was for territory and ethnic cleansing; holding an entire race responsible for the act of one man. Bang, another war.

"It happens over and over again, compromise that only comes back to haunt us. Enough compromises. Those money-hungry scums are responsible for seventy-two feral kids, about a hundred and fifty emaciated and another seventy-two malnourished. Another set of assholes, right here in Hawaii, sexually abused kids. Dee told Keith earlier today that he was fucked by an adult man. What was done to Reyes, or Jonah, or Dillon, or Geoff? All so someone could get their rocks off? Please, gimme a break. Any adult that makes my boys, or any of these kids here cry, there had better be a damned good reason or there will be hell to pay. That's our job, to be big brothers and protect all of them. Being big brothers, we can't delay. We do what we need to and deal with the side effects. If a single person questions what we did tonight, I'll vaporize that person."

Derrick softly said, "As long as you know that there will be repercussions, Prez."

Prez shrugged, "There were repercussions in Montana. No matter what we do or decide not to do, some will have opinions. They targeted us; The Clan as a whole. And they're paying for it, here in the ROH, in America, in the U.K., anywhere minds that hate are hiding, we're finding them. They have a choice; grow up and learn or pay for their ignorance. It's that simple; love or hate, right or wrong, good or bad; no spins, no political compromise. Power doesn't exist in money or territory or conquest." Thumping his chest with his right hand, Prez reminded, "Power is right here, within each of us. Trying to take power from someone or forcing your power on someone is wrong and futile. We have to stand up for what is right."

Giggling, Mike teased, "Can I suggest having Lieutenant Vorik write the press release, Mister Subtlety?"

Prez cracked up then nodded and assured, "We're all going to have input, but I'm certain the majority of it will be facts and figures; who did what to how many. Anything beyond that is an editorial. I might get around to an editorial, some other time."

Wrapping an arm around his husband, Keith grinned, "Thank goodness you're not an N-Gen, baby. I half expected the table to shake and the lights to blink."

Meanwhile, in the Hundserts' basement, Vicky and Riti Evans had finished putting John and Stephen into a peaceful sleep. Having never met Stephen, Vicky and Riti were impressed with the boy's empathy. Of course John chose Stephen above all others. Vicky and Riti implanted suggestions into each boy's mind to help them fully recover from the California orphanage raids.

Corey and Drew had showered then decided to watch TV in the living room, waiting for the other Core Rimmers to arrive. Only Kaleo had access to the house; they hadn't yet given Tory, Sean or Troy access. When they arrived, Drew programmed the security scanner, so that the latter three could enter on their own. Once that task was completed, all six went down to the basement nest. Troy was introduced to Riti and Vicky as a new Core Rimmer and a member of Platinum Habits. The three couples made themselves comfortable in the nest. Geoff briefly woke and called for his Daddy and Poppa. Satisfied that Drew and Corey were home, Geoff rolled over and fell back to sleep. Riti and Vicky went to work; finishing the job begun by the Vulcan healers; creating deep, peaceful sleeps and implanting suggestions appropriate for each boy to fully recover.

Back in the Command Center, while efforts were made on the press release, Mike and Derrick contacted other Clan Divisions to check on the rescued kids from California. The level one kids were all doing well and could still be expected in the morning, Hawaiian Time. Of the level two and three kids, many were being treated entirely on bio-beds. Others were still in surgery or had come out of their surgeries and were resting comfortably, some with new limbs. Lastly, Terra-Main Space Station was contacted for status updates on the worst cases. Seven of the seventy-two had already succumbed to their injuries and weakened states. How many more might pass was unknown; it was too early to tell. It was suggested that, with help from Starfleet diplomatic contact with Betazed, perhaps some of the feral children could be fully healed someday. Believing strongly that the Betazoids would be the only course of action appropriate, diplomats were contacted and awakened to deal with the emergency. The worst of the children that survived medical treatment would have the best opportunities to recover on Betazed. It was small bright spot to an otherwise dismal situation.

The boys went back to work on their press release. Over the Command Center speakers, Alden relayed, "You guys need to know a few things. First, remember that everything Daileass, Draco and I knew was shared with Cory Short, Jason Evans and other division heads soon after it happened. Next, someone in Los Angeles was trying to hack into our network, to learn what was going on."

"It was sooo cute!" Daileass laughed.

Draco added, "Jace had a good laugh too. It got better when I suggested that we let them believe they had succeeded."

Shaking his head sadly, Prez smirked, "What did you guys do?"

Alden replied, "We gave them about twenty seconds of out of focus video and distorted audio, to whet their appetites."

Dailass said, "We've been monitoring news networks in California and across the United States. They still haven't figured out what it is they've got, obviously."

Draco shared, "Cory and Jace agree, if you want to, video and audio from the actual operations can be attached to your press release."

The Core Rimmers and all the UNIT boys present in the Command Center gasped.

Keith offered, "Video and audio with the story would make a huge impact."

Derrick suggested, "Nobody should be identifiable; not the strike team members, not the adults and certainly not the kids."

Mike agreed, "Emaciated, naked kids do not need to be televised."

Julio grinned, "Ya might not want to show them the house we blew up either."

Keith told Vorik, "Please have Starfleet cleanup our messes. If they could provide replacement houses, we won't get flack for lowering property values." Vorik nodded and went to complete the assigned task.

Nodding his head, Prez approved of the ideas with the restrictions presented. He told the AI's to get to work immediately. Checking the digital world clocks in the Command Center, Prez said, "It's two-twenty-two here and eight-twenty-two on the East Coast of America. If we can get everything together in the next half hour, we'll make the news before the American stock market opens and before the London exchange closes.

* * * * *

Clan Short Of Vulcan Official Press Release

Thursday, November 4, 2004

06:00 PST / 09:00 EST / 14:00 GMT

Ewa Beach, ROH - On Monday evening, Hawaiian Time, Clan Short of Vulcan received an anonymous telephone call reporting that children were in danger at an orphanage in the greater Los Angeles metropolitan area. (The address of this location is being withheld at this time to preserve the anonymity of the caller.) Research into the location revealed that the orphanage in question was fully owned and operated by the social services spin-off company held by Zorro Communications Corp. (ZCC-NYSE).

Through extensive investigation into all ZCC owned orphanages, Clan Short of Vulcan found questionable accounting practices that together insinuated children at all sixteen orphanages were not being adequately cared or provided for. On Wednesday, November 3rd, at 3:14 PM HTZ, Clan Short Pacific Rim Division was notified of the transgressions and prepared for on-site operations to determine the extent of the failures to provide sufficiently for the orphaned children.

Zorro Communications Corp. public records stated that twelve children were provided for at each orphanage. Clan Short Pacific Rim Division operations discovered twelve children at only three of the sixteen orphanages. These three orphanage locations were specifically used by Zorro Communications Corp. as the 'showcase' homes for orphaned children and, as such, shown to investors and charitable contributors. The children at those three orphanages were found to be undernourished or malnourished, poorly clothed and living under unacceptable conditions. They were rescued by Clan Short of Vulcan.

Of the remaining thirteen orphanages, sixteen children were discovered at three, eighteen children at another, twenty children at six and twenty-four children at three. At each of the orphanage locations, conditions went from bad to worse to deplorable and horrific. Two hundred-forty-eight malnourished, emaciated and feral children were found at the latter thirteen orphanages and rescued by Clan Short of Vulcan. The total number of children rescued from the sixteen orphanages was two-hundred-eighty-four.

Interrogations of care-givers at the orphanages were performed by Vulcan mind-melds. As of the time this release was prepared, seven children are deceased, sixty-five are in critical condition and another ninety-eight are in serious condition. One-hundred-fourteen children are in stable but guarded condition. The pediatric hospitals where the children are being cared for is classified. At this time, all care-givers, Zorro Communications Corp. personnel involved, and individual participants in the orphanage conspiracy have been prosecuted to the full extent possible by Vulcan law.

Chapter 9A

Ewa Beach, C.S.P.R.D Main Base

Thursday, November 4, 2004, 07:09 AM

In the Hundser's basement nest, John woke to find Stephen's head lying on his chest. John remembered the faces of the people he had executed. He knew his actions were justified, but couldn't shake the images in his mind. John thought, I've gotta get out of here. Using telekinesis, John gently moved his husband aside. He wondered, now what do I do? Where can I go? Confused and frustrated, John stood and looked around the nest at his husband, son, brothers, sisters, friends and nephews. Certainly, none of them would ever look at him the same again, John strongly felt. He had the ability to cause other minds and bodies to experience pain; he could make furniture fly around as if caught in a tornado; he could lift a house and drop it, turning it into a rubble pile; he had killed four people. Mixed bad emotions bubbled forth from the ten-year-old N-Gen and he wiped tears from his eyes. He hated the sadistic assholes he killed and he hated himself for murdering them. All the people closest to him would certainly have good reason to mistrust him, John believed. Inner turmoil blazed forth bright blue when John dropped his hands from his eyes. Without consciously wanting to, John levitated and floated up the stairs.

Busy in the kitchen preparing coffee for themselves and breakfast for the kids, Jim and Jennifer Hundser listened to the morning news on the radio. Zorro Communications Corporation stock was in a free-fall, dragging other stocks and global markets down with it; the result of orphanage raids in California performed by their boys. Civil unrest was breaking out in London, New York City,

Washington D.C., San Francisco, Los Angeles, Tokyo and, to a lesser extent, in Honolulu. Crowds were gathered in front of American embassies all around the world, demanding explanations why one of their companies abused, mistreated and killed children. While the coffee brewed, Jim Hundser hurried to the living room and turned on the television to learn more about the prior night's events. Once the cinnamon rolls were placed in the oven, Jennifer Hundser carried four boxes of cereal to the dining room table. Putting them down, she went to the living room and stood beside her husband watching the news.

On the TV, the screen was split in thirds. On the bottom was the standard stock ticker. On the left were summaries of the London, New York and Tokyo stock markets. The London exchange closed two hours earlier, down over one-thousand-five-hundred points. There were still three hours left to the New York trading day. ZCC stock was down sixty percent and still declining. The Dow, NASDAQ and S&P 500 were all negatively effected. The largest section of the screen showed the released night-vision camera views from the Clan Short Pacific Rim Division raids. A list of those arrested was shown. Hearing about company executives and civil servants that were missing and assumed executed for their crimes, Jim and Jen returned to the kitchen to gather bowls, plates, glassware and silverware for the kids.

The basement door seemingly opened then closed of its own accord and John floated through the kitchen dinette. The two Hundser adults didn't see or hear anything. Invisible to the adults and John, Peter Lambert sat at the dinette table, slightly out of phase, insuring the adults didn't see or hear John. Jim and Jennifer returned to the living room, but only briefly stood there trying to absorb what had occurred. The commentator said that two hundred and eighty-four children had been rescued. Clan Short Headquarters in Orlando, Florida had reported at noon Eastern Time that fourteen kids had died from their abuses. The oven timer beeped, breaking the two adults away from the television. Returning to the kitchen, they worried about their sons and questioned whether to allow any of their young kids and grand-kids know what was going on.

Peter popped out of the kitchen and outside then followed John. Sitting in the CIC dining room having breakfast were Vicky and Riti Evans. Peter, Vicky and Riti were there in Hawaii to make sure nothing upset the rescued kids or freaked out the Rimmer adults. John floated past the four Rimmer family homes, beyond the indoor rec center and dropped to his knees in the grass on the Southwest perimeter of the compound, on the far side of the basketball courts and soccer field. Shedding bitter tears, John reached down and pulled up fists of grass then took a deep breath and screamed. Nearby birds flapped off for safety. The ground beneath John quaked as ten large trees in front of him uprooted themselves and shot skyward then exploded into splintered wood chips and leaves. Twice more John screamed, uprooting and destroying seven trees and then another four trees before his eyes changed back to light brown. Peter hurried to John. Kneeling in the grass together, John and Peter clung to each other while John sobbed.

The Hundser's phone rang. It was Lanna Seaver, asking if they had seen the news. Worried about Corey and their newly adopted boys, Lanna asked if she and Bill could come over to be there when the kids awoke. Jen agreed, and no sooner did she hang up, the phone rang again. This time it was Rob Gibbons, also asking about the news and wondering about their boys. Jim Hundser overheard that the Gibbons' would be coming over too. For a few moments, Jennifer stood by the phone, daring it to ring again. Fully expecting the Seiberts as well, Jim found a carafe to hold the remainder of the first pot of coffee then started another pot.

Outside, John and Peter were pulling themselves together. Seeing the large area of wood chips and leaves where many trees had previously stood, John hummed thoughtfully then turned to Peter, wondering, "Did you make that happen?"

Breaking into gales of laughter, Peter poked John in the chest, giggling, "You did it! I just made sure you didn't cover the whole base in bits of trees. Vicky and Riti made sure no one awake saw or noticed it." Peter paused and grinned, "You'll have to decide what to have built here. There'll be a major termite infestation if we don't clean this up."

Absorbing that, John smirked and admitted, "I don't even remember coming out here, Peter. I knew I had to get out of the basement, away from my husband, son, brothers and parents, but that's about it."

Peter giggled, "This is Vicky's idea of a controlled tantrum." He then shrugged, "At least you didn't blow the roof off the CIC like Tyler did. You floated out here, John."

Frowning disbelievingly, John gasped, "Please don't say Stephen saw this."

Shaking his head, Peter said, "Nope, you did it without Stephen." Standing up, Peter then popped away, to the Hundser's basement. Seeing that Stephen and everyone was asleep in the nest, Peter popped back to John and assured, "Still sleepin'." He offered John a hand up.

All eight adults gathered in the Hundser's kitchen. Once everyone had coffee, the four men went to the living room. Listening to the radio news in the kitchen, Anna Seibert began preparing batter for pancakes while Lanna Seaver prepared batter for waffles. Jennifer Hundser prepared a larger tray of cinnamon rolls. Laura Gibbons made a third pot of coffee.

The men in the living room could barely believe what they were seeing and hearing. Their sons and Clan Short were responsible for more than a hundred people being either executed or arrested; the world markets were in a tail-spin centered upon the devaluation of Zorro stock; sixteen California cities were without many public servants and almost three hundred children were rescued.

Fed up with commercials and second hand information, Jim Hundser tried to recall the name of the new AI and asked, "Was it Alfred?"

Carl Seibert scowled, "Or Albert?"

Searching his memory, Bill Seaver smirked, "Alex, Alfons, Alister, Alan?"

The Clan AI's were in silent fits of hysterics when Rob Gibbons finally shouted, "Alden!"

From the living room ceiling speakers, Alden giggled, "Yes Sir?"

Rob ordered, "Enough of this watered down bullshit. What were our boys doing last night?"

Carl said, "Let our wives hear this too."

Connecting to the ceiling speakers in the kitchen, Alden summarized the entire fiasco for the adults, beginning with the initial anonymous phone call, the investigation and the raids the boys had performed. With unedited video displayed on the television, Alden outlined what each team had done in California. Several minutes later, when some of the little kids in the basement nest woke, Alden cut off the remainder of the summary, explaining that kids were climbing the stairs. The last thing Alden said was, "All the Core Team members and many of the strike team members have already had Vulcan mind-melds for healing. Your sons will be fine." The television was switched back to the news. The four men went to the kitchen and their wives.

The somber mood was replaced with joy as Carmella, Dewi, Kokaku, Dillon, Geoff, Richie and Aaron Pendergrass emerged from the basement. Loudly cheering, "G'mornin' Momma. G'mornin' Daddy," Carmella went to Jim. The boys waved at the assembled adults and hurried into the bathroom.

Lifting his daughter, Jim smiled, "How's my princess?" then landed a kiss.

Carmella kissed him back, giggling, "Good. I gotta go though, Daddy." Jim nodded and put the girl down. She raced through the dining room, living room and upstairs.

John walked into the kitchen from the sliding door followed by Peter. Seeing the adults, Peter hurried to his Aunts, giving each a hug. More than a little surprised to see a morning gathering of adults, John closed the backdoor. Having never seen him leave, Jim and Jen were equally surprised to see John come in from outside. Trying very hard to act as if everything was normal, John said, "Hey," and went to refrigerator for juice.

Jennifer asked, "When did you go outside? You haven't been out there all night, have you?"

The half gallon bottle of juice almost slipped out of John's hand, but he caught it with his mind and made a show out of carrying it towards the counter. John shook his head and softly answered, "Only a little while, mom."

Jennifer reached for a glass from the cupboard and handed it to her youngest son. Avoiding making eye contact with his mother, John took the glass then began pouring. The glass slipped and fell along with the plastic bottle of juice, but neither hit the floor. Peter had stopped time for everyone in the house except himself and John.

Peter instructed, "You pick up that glass and bottle now, John."

"I can't, Peter," John whined, "they're all gonna look at me funny from now on."

"That's a bunch of bull pockey!" Peter vehemently said. "All these grownups have heard the news already, John. They know what happened from TV, radio and Alden. They're here because this is where their sons, the Core Rimmers are. They're parents who love their kids unconditionally. If you had only looked at them, you would've heard their surface thoughts; love, pride, concern. They don't care about nothin' 'cept you and your brothers. That's why they're here. Nobody's gonna look at you funny. They don't have any idea how those trees got blown up. You're almost done, bro. Now you only have to tell them the little details. You guys made a huge impact." Peter then teleported himself and John into the living room where the TV was still on the news. In a flash, they were at Charleston AI Hospital, where a boy was cleaned up and resting comfortably with a new leg attached. Then they went to Camp Bam Bam, where a girl slept in a bed for the first time in years and was being nourished intravenously. Finally, Peter took John to Terra-Main Space Station. They remained invisible and silent to the diplomats, Mahael and Du'ualloxat Tam, who were discussing the future care of the feral kids on Betazed.

Returning to their previous positions in the Hundasers' kitchen, Peter said, "It hurts to kill, yeah, I get it. Colin and the Dutchmen, Vic and Strike Team Tango from the Des Moines Division, High Priest Dave and the ferrets, killed all except one of the Board of Directors. All but that one of the board was involved. None of those guys on the teams were happy about it either, but how many did that company kill and not care about?" John shrugged. Peter said, "The number you're looking for is sixty-three. Over the last four years they existed, sixty-three kids at those orphanages died before we got to them, John. Add in the seventeen that died overnight now. Those that survived to leave those orphanages at eighteen left without educational and social benefits we all have. They did it to rid the world of unwanted kids. They'll never do it again either; thanks to you, the other Core Rimmers and our brothers and sisters around the world.

"Sometimes bad stuff has to happen so something good can happen. Now all you feel is the hurt. In a little while, the kids Mike and Derrick rescued from LA will wake up. Then there will be the first thirty-six new Rimmers showing up. They don't know it yet, but they need you, bro. I know what you've been doing all week; helping all these kids of different races and nationalities get along together. Just like with Bruce last Friday and Saturday, you do it without giving it any thought at all; for you it's easy and effortless. Instead of arguing and fighting, they talk to each other; each and every one of 'em share their pasts and listen to other kids sharing their pasts. Thanks to you, they're healing. All you have to do is get the last of the tears out with your mom and dad." Peter gave John a tight and very non-random hug.

John nodded and sighed, "Thanks, Peter."

Peter confirmed, "Ready?"

John said, "Set." Peter snapped his fingers, just to signal John.

Three of the four women gasped and jolted to try and catch the falling glass and bottle, but John had them already, in his telekinetic grasp. "That was a close one!" John smirked. Peter laughed so hard that he might've wet himself, if Mikyvis actually peed. John set the glass and bottle on the counter.

His mother placed her hands on John's shoulders. Jen gently asked, "Are you alright?"

John peered up over his shoulder at his mom and admitted, "A little shaky still." In that one brief glance at his mom, John felt her concern.

"Obviously," Jennifer sighed, and then offered, "Let me pour the juice for you."

John stepped aside, saying, "Thanks, mom." The boys came out of the bathroom. Anna and Laura led the boys to the dining room for breakfast. Lanna got the milk from the refrigerator then went to the dining room too. John glanced at all the adults in the room; feeling their concern and impatience, waiting for their sons to wake and prove that they had recovered from the California Orphanage rescues.

Jim approached his son and asked, "It hurts, doesn't it?"

John took a deep breath and nodded. Looking up at his dad, John sent, 'Twenty-four feral kids at the first place I was at. It was horrible. There were twenty at the other place, just as smelly and almost as bad.'

Bending slightly, Jim picked his son up and softly instructed, "Say it aloud, let it out."

Holding on to his dad tightly, John sobbed, "There were twenty-four feral kids at the first place I was at. There were twenty at the other place, just as smelly and almost as bad. It was so different than when somebody is threatening you, like on the Enterprise, Tuesday." John shuddered briefly then continued, "This time, four were tied up. They couldn't have hurt me, but they had hurt so many so slowly, by starving them and treating them worse than bugs. Two of 'em wanted to hurt me and Stephen, like the other kids. They didn't deserve to live another day. I killed them, all four, turned 'em to dust."

John searched the faces of the other adults. All he saw was sadness on their faces. From their minds, John heard only concern for himself and the other Core Rimmers; their sons, still asleep in the basement. Mr. Seaver and Mr. Gibbons felt like they had failed their children by allowing such greed and selfishness to exist. Turning to face his mother and seeing tears streaming down her face, John sighed, "Sorry, mom."

Violently shaking her head, Jennifer cried, "Don't be sorry."

Jim added, "We have the most reason to be sorry. As parents, it's our job to protect our kids."

Wiping her eyes with a tissue, Jennifer wept, "Where heartless people like that come from, I have no idea."

Rob Gibbons softly said, "Generations try to make the world a better place for their kids. No matter how hard we try, something always gets missed; someone gets away with murder. You boys have done what we couldn't, what we didn't even know was going on." Jim put John down. John went to his mother and they tightly held each other, sobbing their eyes out.

As if their little butts were on fire, Cesar and Felipe ran up the basement steps and flew into the kitchen. The twins removed any doubt that they were telepaths by loudly demanding, 'Stop crying and stop worrying!'

Glaring at Bill Seaver, Cesar sent, 'We told you last night it was real!'

Squinting at the other adults in the kitchen, Felipe continued, 'This is what the Clan does!' Anna, Laura and Lanna came out of the dining room and into the kitchen. Quickly, Peter covered his mouth before he laughed out loud at the adults' stunned expressions.

Cesar added, 'They save kids, like us! Get over it already!'

Felipe loudly shared, 'You want them to stop so you won't hurt! Little kids ain't stupid, ya know.'

'Dewi, Kokaku, Aaron, Dillon, Geoffy and Richie are freakin' out!'

'Carmella's upstairs, wonderin' if she should come downstairs.'

'Somebody better start tellin' them the truth, fast!'

'Be glad we know you people are nice.'

Together, they assured, 'We'll fix it so no one hears what happened this morning.'

Jim half sighed and half groaned then turned and started for the stairs. Returning to the dining room, the remaining adults, except Jen Hundser, who was still with John, began explaining the situation and their own reactions to the six worried boys. Finding Carmella sitting on the top step, Jim sat several steps beneath her and explained what had happened and how families work.

Turning in his mother's arms, John wiped his eyes then grinned at the twins. 'Jeez, guys. Got something to say?' Giggling, Cesar and Felipe nodded. More footsteps could be heard on the basement stairs. John asked the twins, 'Who's comin' up from the basement?'

Cesar replied, 'Randall, Alan, Latoya...'

'And Murakami, Shimizu, Don and Lenny,' Felipe finished.

John cheered, "Excellent!" The basement door opened and six boys filed across the hall, through the dinette and into the bathroom. Latoya hurried down the hall and upstairs on her own potty mission, unaware that Carl and Anna were there.

Cesar proudly smiled, 'Jamie, Jacob and Beau was teachin' us.'

Felipe nodded, 'They says maybe we could help some day.'

John grinned, 'That day has come. Do you want to join my Intel team?'

Wide-eyed, the twins nodded and shouted, "Yeah, that'd be awesome!"

John giggled then sent, 'It's our secret for now. I'll tell Prez later then we'll tell your folks, okay?'

"Okay!" the twins chorused.

John suggested, "Let's get some breakfast." The twins hurried to John and gave him a hug. Together, the three boys joined Carmella and the others at the dining room table. The first plate of cinnamon rolls was placed on the table. Soon, ten of twelve cinnamon rolls were being dunked into bowls of cereal and milk.

In the basement, the last of the youngest boys were waking up. Randy Beale woke Jonah. Jonah woke Reyes. The three brothers put clothes on then went upstairs and were surprised to find all the adults there. Pancakes and waffles were prepared for the next crew of hungry kids. Chad Bunting woke Herbert Trumbo. Hearing their new brothers, Sung and Kawazoe woke. Smelling food cooking, they hurried up the steps. Waking in an upstairs bedroom, Bruce, Dee, Gage and Sammy came downstairs. The first group of kids finished their breakfasts then went to watch TV. John flipped channels to allow the kids to watch something more entertaining than news. The second group of kids overflowed to the kitchen dinette table. John invited Peter to join him downstairs, but Peter wanted to stay upstairs with the kids. So John went down to the basement before Stephen woke and discovered him missing.

Peter sat near Bruce and softly offered, "I can help find out what happened to your mommy and daddy."

Remembering some of what he learned of Mikyvis skills on Saturday morning, Bruce excitedly cheered, "Would you, Peter?"

Smiling widely, Peter nodded, stood and compassionately assured, "Be right back." He popped out of the Hundserts' dining room and onto a boat, out-of-phase so he would not be noticed, with four adults, two of which were Bruce's parents. The boat was stopped and drifting, many miles away from the east coast of Oahu, while the adults were chatting. In the distance, Peter could make out the peak of Diamond Head.

As one of the men started the engine, Peter heard the 'pop' of a fuel explosion. He rewound this time frame, and went to a point where he could look at the engine. After referencing Cory's knowledge of internal combustion technology, he quickly realized that this particular model of power-plant was using a version one nitrogen extractor unit, with a hydro extraction unit to provide the oxygen for the nitrous-oxide fuel mix. He slowed time, and watched as the engine was cranked by the man up top. He got his answer quickly, as a seal failed on the oxygen separation unit; the failure spraying liquid oxygen directly on the magneto. The liquid oxygen quick-froze the primary ignition lead, causing it to crack and spark to the nearby engine block.

Peter nodded his head in understanding as he left the boat and watched from the water as the scene played itself out. He then went back to the maintenance facility which took care of the boat between rentals. After an in-depth check, he found that the company actually went over and above the factory recommended preventive maintenance procedures for their equipment; the failure was definitely not due to anything that they had done.

Returning to the Hundser's living room, Peter waved Bruce over. The two boys then went to the kitchen and stood before Rob Gibbons. Peter reported, "I saw what happened to the Downings, Uncle Rob." Turning his attention to Bruce, Peter sighed, "There was an explosion from a small oxygen leak. It got real bad, real fast. None of the four grownups had a chance. I even checked out the boat rental place. Everything they did was right; it was only an accident and no one's fault, Bruce."

Amazed that little Peter knew as much and more than he did, Rob Gibbons nodded and sighed, "Honolulu Police are already investigating the business, but not finding anything incriminating."

Bruce wiped his eyes. Peter hugged Bruce and gently assured, "It was their time. There was nothing anybody could've done." Bruce understood, but it barely made a difference. Releasing Bruce, Peter stepped back. Jim Hundser picked up Bruce a second before Bruce began bitterly crying. Jennifer joined them and softly rubbed her son's back. Carmella was the first to stop eating and go to Bruce. Soon all the kids were gathered around Jim, Jen and Bruce.

Peter spoke to Rob Gibbons so a report could be made to the engine manufacturer that would prevent future failures and loss of life.

Over at the dorms, kids were waking too. Some went to the bathrooms for showers while others wanted food first and would shower afterward. Liki and Hank went for their first early morning jog around the perimeter fence of the base with some of the UNIT boys. The televisions in the CIC dining room were turned on to the local news, which included an abridged version of the California Orphanage raid in the world news segment. As more kids gathered and watched TV while drinking their morning milkshakes, the conversations revolved around what the Core Rimmers had done. Awestruck, they could barely believe what was reported. Teenagers explained the news reports to the younger kids, who didn't fully understand how this rescue operation differed from others the Core Rimmers had performed.

Remaining in the basement nest were the six Core Rimmer couples and Frankie. At first, John lay quietly between his husband and son, reviewing the events of the morning. First and foremost on the list were the reactions of his parents. John expected they would be, at the very least, disappointed. However, they weren't the least bit disappointed in any of their sons. If anything, they were disappointed in themselves. John's parents still loved him and agreed that the lives taken in California were justified.

Next, was discovering how he had floated without Stephen, and how he had uprooted twenty-one trees. A single tree weighed way more than ten or twelve people, John reasoned. He began by trying to levitate himself. It took several minutes for John to gather enough emotions and channel the power to actually begin to float, but once he started, it seemed that it was suddenly easy and he rose all the way to the ceiling. Controlling the emotions so he could lower to the nest again took almost as long as rising had. When he made it down to Stephen's side again, his head tingled, like it had when he first became N-Gen. The second attempt at levitation was much easier and more controlled.

Feeling what was happening with Bruce and Peter upstairs, John reached out to his new brother. Although Bruce was very sad, he was relieved that there were no human failures involved in the accident. John sent to Bruce, 'I know what happened and I feel you, bro. I'm not gonna do anything to change how you feel, unless you ask me to help.' Bruce simply thanked his new brother and continued to cry in Jim's and Jennifer's embrace. John flipped over onto his belly and floated up a third time. Hovering about three-feet above the nest, John floated above his husband and softly called, "Hey, baby. I need to show you something."

Only beginning to become conscious, Stephen smiled and turned onto his side, reaching for where he thought John was. Finding only pillows and a blanket, Stephen opened his eyes. Believing that John's voice was a dream, Stephen grunted.

John giggled, "You're so cute when you first wake up." Stephen slowly rolled only his head. Seeing John floating above him, Stephen gasped and lay flat on his back. John lowered himself onto his husband then stole a kiss before pulling Stephen up with him. John sent, 'I figured it out, Stephen. It's all emotions at once that make it happen; love, hate, fear, joy, sadness, anger; all of 'em at once until they fill me up.'

Frankie shifted in his sleep, wiped his eyes then saw his daddy and poppa floating above the nest. He began giggling hysterically, not realizing that anything was different. John lifted Frankie and telepathically shared knowledge of his newly discovered power.

Waking and seeing his little brother and brother-in-law floating again, Drew groaned, "Can't you find a new way to wake up?"

John began giggling then powered up. Drew, Corey, Prez, Keith, Mike, Derrick, Kaleo, Tory, Sean and Troy levitated quite easily. John also levitated the stacked cases of drinks, the boxes of snacks and the basement refrigerator. With a thought, the remaining basement furniture on the other side of the basement floated up in the air. Releasing Stephen and Frankie to gently float down to the nest, John felt no additional strain and he was holding almost a ton of people, appliances and furniture in the air.

Realizing what was happening, Keith sighed, "This is getting monotonous."

Troy rolled over and reached for Sean. Discovering that he and Sean were hovering several feet above the nest, Troy gasped then shouted, "Is this how you guys always wake up?"

"Look closer," Stephen prompted. All eyes turned to Stephen, down on the floor, and then to John, still horizontal and five feet above the nest.

Prez asked John, "You can do it alone now?"

John nodded, "No sweat." Prez smiled and hummed thoughtfully.

Seeing everything on both sides of the basement steps hovering, Corey gasped, "Omigod!"

Returning everything and everyone to the basement floor, John concentrated on Stephen, about to ask if his husband wanted pancakes or a breakfast shake from the CIC. Stephen was concerned that John didn't need him anymore, now that he could float on his own power. So that Stephen and all in the basement could hear, John said, "Don't think that, baby. I didn't marry you only because we can float. You're the one I want to be with, on the ground and above it. For better or for worse, I love you, Stephen."

The others in the basement giggled, "Aww!" Smiling and standing up, Stephen pushed John into an upright and vertical position. John pulled Stephen up above the floor then they hugged and kissed.

Sean told Troy, "This is why I didn't mind sleeping here. The love in this house covers the entire base."

John said, "All our parents are upstairs. Breakfast is being made. And you'll probably want to see what's going on in the world news too." He then floated up the steps with his husband and son. By this time, Richie, Carmella and all the other fed tots were dressed and heading over to the playground with Peter. Frankie took an empty chair at the table. Anna placed a plate of two waffles in front of the boy. Covering the warm waffles in softened butter and then drowning them in boysenberry syrup, Frankie dug in.

Having heard the news, Stephen's and Troy's mothers arrived at the Hundser's home. Stephen proudly told his mother what John had done the previous night. Kathleen Marr couldn't believe that John accepted the burden of executions rather than allow Stephen to take a single life. She pulled both boys into her embrace and warmly thanked John. Going to Jim and Jen Hundser, Kathleen expressed her sincere gratitude for what John had done. While his mom was busy, Stephen took hold of both of John's hands, and then led him out of the room. Passing by the dining room, John started giggling. The giggles were echoed by Stephen and then by Frankie. Stephen led John upstairs to their bedroom.

The remaining Core Rimmers got dressed then hurried upstairs. Judy Faris hugged the breath out of her son and Sean. All the other parents expressed their concern and pride for their sons. While the eldest eight sat down for breakfast, Drew tapped his sub-vocal and asked Alden to include Corey for a status update. Other than world-wide outrage over the orphanages, all was quiet around the Pacific Rim. California's Governor and Attorney General had a press conference to talk about what had happened in the Golden State, and how they were preparing laws and regulations that would prevent it from happening again. Alden added, "Cory Short and Logan Hayes have approved acquiring Zorro Communications Corporation's stock."

Drew thoughtfully scowled, "What's that mean to us, Alden?"

Alden explained, "At the rate ZCC stock is being sold off, the company would be out of business by tomorrow evening. There are several thousand employees, not to mention contractors, around the world that had nothing to do with the orphanages, who would be devastated if the company were to go out of business. Also, there are millions of ZCC network devices installed around the world that would have no support, rendering all those devices as liabilities. Mr. Takamura and a small group of Clan investors are going to save the company and take over, saving jobs, saving the retirement accounts of countless innocent senior citizens, and ultimately, we come out of this in a much better light; we identified a problem, resolved it and save the company from bankruptcy."

Drew nodded and smiled, "That's excellent news. Thanks, Alden."

Alden giggled, "Any time, Drew. We'll chat later."

Drew said, "Probably so," then went to the adult men gathered in the living room to share the news. Corey went to tell the women in the kitchen. Prez and the eldest Core Rimmers listened and heard the latest status update. Prez and the Core Rimmers agreed to put funds into acquiring additional ZCC stock. Deciding to use a quarter of the Core Rimmer's personal funds, Prez ordered Alden to execute the trades five minutes before the New York Stock Exchange closed, at whatever current market value. Drew and Corey met in the dining room to have breakfast. Drew wondered, "Where's John?"

Still chowing down, his face smeared with boysenberry syrup, Frankie smiled, "Upstairs with poppa." Stephen's implanted 'therapy' was being accomplished privately with John. Considerably more aggressive than typical, Stephen made John repeatedly giggle, shake and shiver. Things they hadn't had the chance to do during their brief honeymoon Tuesday night, Stephen enthusiastically did.

A devilish grin spread across Drew's face. He shifted his eyes mysteriously, causing the others at the table to begin softly chuckling. Leaning forward to help himself to a waffle, Drew was surprised when the platter slid away from him. Drew grumbled when the platter went airborne and floated up toward the ceiling. Soft chuckling around the table turned into loud laughter. Drew sighed, "I can't even think of pulling a practical joke on him anymore."

John sent, 'You can think it, but you'll pay.'

Judy Faris went to the dining room to tell Troy she that was about to begin her work day, but hearing laughter and seeing a platter floating above the chandelier, she came to an abrupt halt.

Taking pity on his brother, Prez chuckled, "Come on, John, let Drew eat. He's acting director for today."

'Really?' John teased, and then levitated the chair Drew sat in and sent to the other Core Rimmers, 'All hail the chief!'

While the others laughed, Drew only covered his eyes and shook his head, softly muttering, "And I was worried about him."

When Drew was lowered back to the floor, Judy kissed Troy and Sean on the cheek then said goodbye to the other adults. Huffing impatiently, Drew hollered at the ceiling, "Waffles, brat!" Drew heard John's laughter in his mind as the platter lowered back down to the table. As rough as the early morning had been for John, the day was shaping up very nicely indeed.

Keith downed the last of his juice, wiped his mouth then told everyone at the table, "We've got about half an hour to get our buns in gear and get to school."

Standing up, Derrick and Mike nodded. Derrick said, "We'll meet you in the center of the lawns."

Mike tapped his sub-vocal and said, "Alden, contact our school security teams. Have them meet us at the circle in back of our houses in about twenty-five minutes." Alden replied affirmatively then Mike and Derrick left the house with their parents, sons, brothers and sisters.

Glancing around the table at the other Core Rimmers, Prez confirmed, "You guys are kewl for a while?"

Kaleo nodded, "We've got it covered, no problem, Prez."

Troy also nodded and asked, "Are we gonna jam later today? For some reason, I feel like that's really important."

Prez and Keith agreed; they would get together in the auditorium right after lunch. At that time, they could greet the Latin King kids and the others from the level one orphanages. Keith pulled Prez by the hand upstairs so they could shower. Kaleo and Tory excused themselves to get cleaned up then made a point of thanking the Hundser for breakfast. Jim got a hug from Kaleo and Jennifer was hugged by Tory. Sean and Troy were the last to leave, telling Drew and Corey that they would also be showering and getting clean clothes. Drew asked that they be prepared for orientations of the newest Rimmers.

During the time Corey and Drew were alone in the dining room, the Hundser and Seaver adults talked to the boys about the prior night. They weren't looking for additional details, enough had been seen and heard already. The only thing the adults cared about was what the boys thought of the experience.

Drew shrugged, "What's there to think of? They didn't like kids and never should have been put in a job to care for kids."

Corey wondered, "I can't understand why they hate kids so much though. That makes no sense at all to me."

Jen said, "I think it's the way they were raised; perhaps the way they were as children themselves."

Jim calmly offered, "From what I've seen of criminals and court cases, there really isn't a rational explanation. Some people were abused and become abusers themselves. Others are so selfish, nothing else matters except what they want; whether it's a man that kills for petty cash at a convenience store or an adult desiring sex with little boys and girls. They don't know they need help and never seek it, so they follow their desires."

Bill smiled proudly at his son and son-in-law. "You boys dealt with everything perfectly. I don't think I could've done as well." Bill Seaver was a tall man that Corey and Drew believed was almost infallible. At six and a half feet tall and almost two hundred and forty pounds, he once played college football. He got his education and degree in Business Administration at U.C.L.A through a football scholarship. His wife, Lanna was also tall compared to the other three mothers. Corey was destined to become a tall, handsome man. That final simple statement from Bill Seaver was empowering for Corey and Drew.

Lanna told her son and son-in law, "I would be much happier if you boys could take a short break from Clan Leadership for a while." The idea was echoed by Jim and Bill.

In that motherly fashion that made it an order, Jen told the boys, "Make it happen, soon."

Drew and Corey sweetly smiled and sang, "Yes, mom." The two women rolled their eyes. Biting their tongues, the two men forced themselves to not laugh.

Showered, dressed and ready for their school concert, Keith and Prez galloped down the stairs. They said goodbye to their parents and Mrs. Marr then hurried outside. Meeting Derrick, Mike and their security teams, Prez called Alden and had them transported to school.

Jim and Jennifer Hundser decided they had delayed going to the FYS building as long as was necessary. They went upstairs to prepare for their day. Kathleen Marr decided to clean up the vestiges of breakfast while she waited for her son and son-in-law.

Although they had showered the prior night before joining the nest, Corey suggested that he and Drew get some shower playtime before kids began showing up. Drew agreed, but his comm-badge chirped as they were climbing the stairs. Corey groaned, knowing his chance for a little bathtub fun had passed. Drew answered the call. "Pacific Rim Division; this is Drew."

A woman's voice said, "This is Doctor Darcy Ester calling from Blank Children's Hospital in Des Moines, Iowa."

Turning around and pulling Corey with him, Drew smiled, "Yes, Doctor. Are the kids ready to come home?"

"Yes, they are," Doctor Ester replied. "Two Starfleet security personnel will join them. They will bring the childrens' medical records."

Heading for the door, Drew replied, "Please inform Starfleet Security to transport the kids to our CIC dining room." Exaggerating a frown, Corey dragged his feet. Drew pulled Corey out of the house, giggling, "I'll have our Doctors meet us there."

"Very well," Doctor Ester said.

Walking toward the pools, Drew said, "Give us about five minutes to gather a welcoming committee."

Doctor Ester replied, "Thank you, Drew. I'll inform Starfleet and the children. Goodbye."

Noticing Corey rubbing the front of his shorts, Drew helplessly laughed, "Thanks, Doc. Bye."

Once the call was finished, Corey whined, "I wanna play! I wanted to play when we woke in the nest. But no-ooo! John had us floating around, wasting time instead of making time! And where is he? With Stephen, playing while we work!"

Drew kissed Corey's hand and promised, "Tonight, I'll turn over to Prez and then we are gone. I'm gonna do unspeakable things with you, dude."

Corey whimpered and begged, "Speak a few?" Drew cracked up laughing. Approaching the pool and calming down, Drew tapped his comm-badge, saying, "Drew to Doc Andrews and Doc Howard."

One after the other, the two doctors replied. Drew informed them of incoming kids and asked if they would come to the CIC dining room. Once the doctors had answered, Corey hollered, "Geoff, Lenny, Renee?"

Drew called for Richie, Bruce, Carmella and Kokaku to come help them greet new kids. While they enthusiastically agreed, Corey scanned the area for Kaleo, Tory, Sean and Troy. Since they were nowhere in sight, Corey made his lower lip tremble, reverting to five years old and preparing for a tantrum.

Lenny noticed and asked, "You sad, Poppa?"

Corey quickly flipped his dramatic frown into a grin. Hugging his boy, Corey assured, "I'm fine, pal."

Shaking his head, Drew giggled, "Poppa's bein' a bad boy." Purposefully avoiding Corey's gaze, Drew called for Reyes, Randy, Jonah and Dillon to join the welcoming committee. Not one to be avoided or ignored, Corey began tickling Drew's ribs and chased him all the way to the CIC. The welcoming committee followed and giggled at the two out of control leaders.

Dressed much more comfortably than he had been for about fifteen years of employment, Jim Hundser stepped out of his house, ready to start his work day at the FYS building. Before he could step off the porch, two squirrels scampered towards him. Jim hadn't seen a squirrel in years, since he and his family arrived in Hawaii. The squirrels stopped before him and began squeaking. Jim nodded and replied in squirrel, "Yes, I'm a lawyer." The squirrels squeaked and clicked then pointed towards the south side of the base. Jim queried, "How many trees?" Outraged, the squirrels repeated the count then complained that they had just barely gotten their friends and families out in time. Walking by on his way to the FYS building, Rob Gibbons saw Jim and overheard the two squirrels bitching about how they came to Hawaii from Orlando, because Timmy Short said they would have no competition and a warm, safe place to live. They hadn't had their new homes for three whole days and now their trees were destroyed. The squirrels wanted to press charges and file lawsuits against the boy responsible.

Listening carefully to squirrels, Rob noted the description of the boy; Caucasian, brown hair with eyes that shone blue, as bright as street lamps. "Uh oh," Rob grunted.

Jim sighed then told the squirrels, "There's a problem, but we could work our way around it, if you'd be willing?" The squirrels wondered, what sort of problem. Jim answered, "A conflict of interest. The boy you've described is a Clan Short leader and my son." The squirrels were now annoyed that justice would not be served, and in their frustration spun around, loudly squeaking and clicking. "Wait, relax!" Jim squeaked and clicked, "We can take care of this in a way that will benefit everybody." Jennifer Hundser stepped out onto the porch in time to hear her husband explaining, in squirrel, "Our son was upset over lives taken the prior night. I can personally guarantee that John won't be blowing up any more trees. For the safety of your family and friends, can I recommend that you build new homes around the perimeter of the base?" Scurrying around in a fit, the squirrels squeaked and clicked, complaining that they might never be safe. "Yes, you will," Jim assured. "We would always keep the trees at the perimeter for privacy. You would always be safe there and on this base. Honestly, we didn't even know you were here and therefore couldn't have prevented it." After another short exchange, the squirrels were satisfied and scampered off towards the trees.

Turning to his wife, Jim smiled, "There, problem solved."

Shaking her head, Jen cackled, "I certainly hope so. Besides your own testicles, there are at least a hundred other boys that are in danger of having their nuts stolen."

Rob cracked up laughing and Jim snickered, "The girls are safe though." Together, they started for the FYS building, wondering what more the day might offer.

* * * * *

Over by the diving well, Peter Lambert motioned for Robin to join him. He led Robin over to where Carl Seibert was reclining on a chaise lounge, working via his cell phone.

Finishing a call and glancing up from his phone, Carl Seibert smiled, "Hi boys. What's going on?"

"We're gonna go over to see what we can do with Kahoo... Kaho... um, that other island," Peter said cheerfully. "You wanna come with?"

Carl chuckled and easily pronounced, "Ka-ho-o-la-we." Behind Carl, his security gorilla, Joseph, who had been deep in conversation with another gorilla, perked up his ears at this.

"That's the one!" Peter cheered. Robin giggled. Peter smiled, "Anyway, me and Quint got the island workin' right yesterday, with water and stuff, and now we're gonna go fix it up with some infrastructure and housing and stuff."

Carl gasped, "That old rock has water on it? Do I even want to know how you managed that? It was financially prohibitive, the last time any study was done on it."

"Simple, if you have a Q on call," Peter giggled. "He converted some of the rock under the old peak into a filtration system that produces good fresh water, under enough pressure to get it up to the top of the peak. We got rivers and streams flowing down from it."

Standing and clipping his phone to his belt, Carl grinned, "This I gotta see for myself."

Robin reminded, "First of all, Uncle Carl needs his security, second of all, please don't start us off at five thousand feet. Let me handle the telekinetics. I've grown accustomed to hearing people speak."

Joseph tapped his comm-badge, calling, "Fernando, we're going off-base."

Fernando wasted no time or energy, transporting from the Rapid Response Base, where he had been getting in some target practice, to poolside in Ewa Beach. He tapped Joseph on the shoulder and wondered, "What's the hold-up?"

"Smart-alec," Joseph replied. Fernando cheekily smiled.

The other gorilla who had been talking with Joseph spoke up. "What are you planning?" he asked.

Carl smiled, "Come along, Leo." Speaking to Peter, while Leo checked with Sean, Carl explained, "I learned when I met Leo yesterday, that he has civil engineering skills. I'd hire him, so his input might be useful."

Once Sean cleared him to leave, Leo asked Peter, "What do you have planned?"

"We need to run water, power, and sewerage lines to handle any development we do over there. I was thinking of putting a main road from the northeast corner, where there's land suitable for an airstrip and harbor, down the length of the island to the beaches at the southwest end."

"You could basically use a gravity feed for the water if it's really coming out at that peak; that's fourteen-hundred feet high, if I remember right," Leo said. "What did you figure for power?" Peter shrugged. Leo suggested, "Put in two microfusion generators, one at each end of the island. That gives you fallback power sources and extras for any emergencies that might crop up."

Carl asked, "The intended purpose of this island is?"

Peter shrugged, "We're not sure. The King gave it to Prez, and Prez gave it to the Clan through Cory Short. I guess we should estimate how big the clan is."

Fernando offered, "All the divisions included, I'd guess about fifteen thousand."

"More than that," Joseph said, "I'd guess more like thirty thousand."

"For the sake of argument, let's go with twenty-five thousand," Carl suggested. When no one argued, Carl rambled, "A windmill farm of about forty windmills for a gigawatt of power, supplemented by an acre solar farm for another ten gigawatts, with the two microfusion generators should be adequate for our current size and a fair amount of growth."

Leo asked, "Why are you considering an airstrip and a harbor, Peter?"

"Umm... it's an island," Robin giggled. "It's cutoff from the world without something for normal people transportation." To both Leo and Robin, Peter nodded and smiled.

Leo grinned, "So the two microfusion generators should be placed such that the important stuff always has power."

Peter agreed, "Yeah, to the north by the airfield and harbor, and to the center of the western side for whatever else, residential and commercial, primarily, I guess."

"Even for our own people, we need emergency services," Carl reminded.

"So for hospitals, fire stations and police all over the island," Joseph softly summarized.

Nodding, Carl asked, "How're we going to ascertain what goes where?"

"We'll go there now, if you're all ready?" Peter offered.

Smiling at the small Mikyvis, Carl Seibert suddenly didn't recognize where he was. Off in the distant eastern horizon, he recognized Mount Haleakala on Maui the same moment Fernando pointed it out. Fernando noticed Carl's apparent confusion and checked, "Are you okay, Carl?"

"I'm fine," Carl sighed. He grinned, "It took me those few seconds to realize where we are. Kaho'olawe didn't look like this the last time I was here."

Peter giggled. "Me 'n' Quint got busy yesterday!" He motioned Carl to turn around, where he saw water gushing out of a spring near the mountaintop and forming a large lake. Then he led the group to the east side of the lake, where a 'bridal veil' waterfall dropped down the almost sheer cliff.

Robin looked over and smiled, "Uncle Carl, has John ever levitated you?"

Nodding, Carl answered, "Briefly, while I was on a poolside lounge chair."

Robin grinned, "Kewl, this will be the same, without the chair. You might feel a little weird, because there won't be nothin' under your feet, but I'll be supporting you. Just don't worry, okay?"

"I'm not afraid of heights," Carl assured, at the same moment his feet left the ground. All six of them were rising off the ground and into the air. Carl nervously muttered, "normally," as they continued levitating. What was weird was his feet weren't dangling; Carl felt like he was still standing on something, yet there was only many meters of air between the soles of his shoes and the mountainside.

"Okay, Leo, Carl, this is where we're gonna need advice," Peter said, sounding as professional as a nine-year-old floating in midair can. "What we thought is to pretty much leave the mountain area natural, with the water source, a wind farm and such located there, but no other development. Up here to the north, though," and they floated off in that direction; "we figured would be the right place to put the airstrip and harbor, and one of the microfusion generators."

Leo nodded and checked with Carl, saying, "It's a close point for boats to make the twelve kilometer jaunt back to Maui."

"And air traffic wouldn't be flying over too many homes or businesses," Carl added. "Good plan, Peter."

"Then we figured a road more or less following the north coastline - 'Broadway'," Peter giggled. "That would run all the length of the island to the beaches on the southwest shore." He turned serious again. "Since the Clan doesn't have any real major plans for it right now, we thought it could be a place where all the Divisions could get together at once. I looked into what Starfleet can do, and we can house everybody at once."

Carl asked, "You mean a main northeast to southwest thoroughfare, like a highway, with parallel smaller avenues and roads?"

"Exactly," Peter said. "And we could run a monorail down the median too!"

Peter and Robin started the floating man-and-gorilla group moving up and westward.

"Okay," Peter said as they hovered over the western part of the island, "what we had figured is to put in quads of dorms up and down the main road along here to the north, and maybe in from there a bit. Down here along these cliffs on the south shore, and one row inland from them, would be the big single family houses. And just north of that the townhouses would fit. In the area west of that we put up the condo buildings, some ten-story ones and some new twenty-story ones. In the curve to the east between the townhouses and the barracks-style quads we could have some commercial and community buildings."

Carl glanced at Leo. Leo explained, "There should be strip malls interspersed along the main roads in residential areas. No one should have to go far to get the basics, like groceries. Also, since we're planning a population of mostly kids, each strip mall should have a video arcade."

"A larger mall, centrally located, would be a good idea," Carl added. "In that mall, we could have a movie theater, with eight or more screens, so folks have entertainment choices. Along the same train of thought, we'll need a large auditorium, so division leaders and Cory Short can meet with the entire Clan at once."

Pointing down and toward the western shore, Leo asked, "Is that a beach area?"

Peter nodded, "Yup, Quint added palm trees."

"We could build another entertainment area there," Leo offered. "With smaller concession stands and the like nearer the beach. As we move inland, we could have restaurants and night clubs for the adults."

Carl nodded agreement, saying, "Emergency services should be near where the people are; fire stations and medical clinics between the residential and commercial zones, and definitely one of each by shoreline resort area."

Leo added, "Don't forget water treatment facilities. Twenty-five thousand toilets flushing means there needs to be at least one sewage treatment center; two would actually be better, one north by the airport and harbor, another south, a fair distance away from the shoreline resort area."

Considering the intended use of the island, Carl thought aloud, "I can easily foresee Preston, Cory or any of the division leaders having meetings at the auditorium, but once that's done, the kids are free to do what they like. Some would head to the beach, some would go to the mall, some would go back to their residences, satisfied with reading or watching television. We'll need a communications tower on the mountaintop to relay television and radio broadcasts."

Joseph told them, "The entire Clan constitutes a small city. Those of us from the Special Forces division would act as police for the island. Perhaps three 'police stations' where there are emergency services might be a good idea."

Carl and Leo smiled and chorused, "Good idea."

Joseph shrugged and grinned, "The UNIT has medics that could easily serve as paramedics or assist in the medical clinics with the hired doctors and nurses. The Clan as a whole already has support staff of every sort."

Carl nodded and laid out a plan, "Centered along the primary highway and monorail system would primarily be residential, close to the shoreline and on both sides of the transportation system." He paused and pointed down, gesturing and explaining, "Along Broadway, we'll centrally locate our larger malls and commercial areas, with emergency service facilities there. A little further inland, nearer to the mountainside, we could have condos, townhomes and single family homes. To the north, the airport, harbor, water treatment and more emergency services. To the southwest, near our resort beaches, place more light commercial areas. Off to the east of the beaches, at least three kilometers away, place a second water treatment facility. On the mountainside, we'll have a wind farm, solar generating facility and the communications tower. The two microfusion generators would be north by the airport and harbor, and the other to the south, between the water treatment center and the beach resort."

"Here, sketch it," Peter said, handing Leo a laptop that hadn't been there before. Leo nearly dropped it. "Hey, let's get these guys down on the beach," Peter told Robin, who giggled and settled them gently onto the beach.

Three beach chairs popped into existence. "Relax," Peter told Carl and the gorillas. "C'mon, Robin!" The two giggling boys popped out, returning a few seconds later.

"Where are the microfusion thingies?" Peter asked. Joseph began to answer, but Peter said "thanks," and vanished again. Robin giggled.

Peter popped back, collected Robin, and they vanished again. When they reappeared, Carl asked, "What the Sam Hill are you boys doing?"

"Puttin' what you said in place," Peter sniggered. "Hey, you got a crew available to put in concrete?"

Nodding, Carl grabbed his cell phone, saying, "I can get a team of fifty put together within the hour," but then realized he had no signal on the island. Carl and Fernando were transported back to Ewa Beach by Alden.

"I knew I forgot something!" Peter grinned. He and Robin vanished again. When they returned, there was a bright red flashing light in the east. "One comm tower, check," Robin giggled.

"I need sand," Peter commented.

"You're standing on a sand beach," Joseph reminded him.

"No, I don't wanna take it from here," Peter answered. His eyes went unfocused, then came back. He flickered in and out of existence a couple of times, then said, "That other universe, where they used this island to test bombs, they'll never miss it."

He tossed Robin a purple hardhat, which predictably made him giggle, then they disappeared again. When they returned, Robin commented, "Those were HUGE!"

Peter nodded. At Joseph's quizzical expression, Peter grinned, "Sewer mains." He then asked Leo, "Think about sewage treatment for a minute, please." Leo looked quizzically at him.

Leo sighed, "For now, since there's no sewage to treat, just place the lagoons and feed them water."

"Okay," Peter cheerfully agreed, vanished and quickly returned. "Done."

The boys vanished again. Looking off to the east, Joseph pointed and said, "Look!" The two gorillas watched as windmills began sprouting along ridges on the mountainside in the distance. After about a minute, a wind-farm had been placed. Only seconds later, another tall tower sprouted up, then Leo and Joseph saw reflected sunlight as sufficient numbers of mirrors were placed around the aforementioned solar collector tower.

When the boys returned, Robin looked a bit tired. "Cookie break," Peter announced, pulling out four enormous cookies from seemingly nowhere, and handing them to Robin and the gorillas, starting to munch on the last one himself. After their cookies, Peter and Robin took a swim.

Leo continued working on the laptop, drawing out his plans for housing and commercial area placement. Joseph kept an eye on the swimming boys. Having only arrived at Ewa Beach the prior afternoon, Leo remarked, "Carl seems like a very nice man."

Joseph smiled, "He is. Since you don't know him very well, let me just say that Derrick had an older brother, many years ago. Carl Junior passed away, which has severely impacted Carl and Anna. Having lost a child, both of Derrick's parents are loving the Clan situation. Derrick now has three little sisters and four younger brothers." Joseph then asked, "How do you like Sean?"

Leo shrugged and grinned, "He's definitely nice. As shy and soft spoken as he is, I was surprised with him last night. Sean went right into Clan brother mode and did most of the talking to the kids rescued from the orphanages we were at."

The two gorillas continued chit-chatting about the Core Rimmers, their families and some of the other rescued kids for many more minutes. Peter and Robin returned to the beach from their swim and put their clothes back on. After being gone for a little more than an hour, Carl and Fernando arrived at the beach, with two-hundred-fifty men, ready to be allocated to perform the necessary work.

"You know, don't you, that it'll take several days for the base layer of road to cure sufficiently to put the surface coat on?" Carl asked.

Peter chuckled. "Mikyvis can handle time better than that!" he said. "Soon's your guys get it rolled and tamped, I'll be right behind them compressing time. By the time they get the main road laid, the end they start at will be ready for the surface coat."

Carl smiled, "I've already organized the personnel," and turned to the large group of men, saying, "Let's break into our groups of twenty-five, as we discussed, gentlemen. We'll get you transported to work sites. Five of us will be transporting to and fro with supplies of concrete and anything else needed to accomplish as much as we can today."

Peter said, "I've got an eight-inch gravel sub-base layer in place for you already." He then led the two-hundred-fifty men, Carl, Robin, Fernando, and the two gorillas up to where the road was to begin at the western, beachfront end.

Carl checked with Peter, "We'll handle standard fifty meter segments?" When it was confirmed, Carl called Alden to transport the first set of heavy machinery and concrete trucks to begin this section. In a matter of minutes twenty-two teams of ten men were working on the roadway. The last thirty men were transported to the airport and harbor area to begin work there. For the next several hours, Carl, Fernando, Robin and the two gorillas transported back and forth between Oahu and Kaho'olawe with additional concrete trucks for the workers.

Peter pointed to the area near the end of the road, where the downward slope to the beach began. "I thought we could put a two-level parking deck there. Have one ramp from the road stay level, to lead onto the top deck, but excavate and run another ramp down to the lower level. That way we get parking without blocking any views or taking up too much land area."

Leo nodded and replied, "An excellent plan." He opened his laptop and pulled up a set of plans for a sizable parking garage.

As each fifty-meter section of highway was completed, Peter applied a bit of "Mikyvis time magic" to it to speed up the time needed for the concrete to cure. Meanwhile he called Starfleet to alert them to prep for the massive order of modular housing elements that would be needed from their fabricators.

Things began to fall into place. Peter popped over to the microfusion generator that had been positioned between what would become the sewage treatment plant and the community center area, and charged himself up from it for some heavy-duty TK work.

True to their word, Starfleet began transporting modular units one half hour after Peter's request. Between elements of "road aging" he lifted things into place in accordance with Leo's plans. Just to the east of the beach area, a boardwalk was put in place, where visitors could get food, bicycles, surf boards, or simply get out of the sun at an arcade or souvenir shop.

Just east of the boardwalk, two "streets", as yet only gravel sub-base, were lined on both sides with sets of ten townhouses, producing forty dwellings close to the beach. The south end of each street emptied onto the boardwalk as it curved around to the south.

The next two streets were set up similarly, but also featured one or two of the large single family homes, south of the townhouses, or rather, this was the case on both sides of one and one side of the other. At the north corner of the final side, though, where it intersected 'Broadway', there was a small supermarket and a few smaller stores, including a pizza shop and a video arcade with snacks, set up to be a teen hangout.

North of 'Broadway' were located dorm quads, resembling the ones at Ewa Beach and the as-yet-unused satellite bases. But unlike them, the central grassy area was here developed. The central quad of every set of three had a dining hall serving all three quads. The western one had basketball or tennis courts or a soccer field there, while the eastern one had a pool with diving well and a playground for the younger kids. A chain link fence blocked the quads off from the cliffs behind, with occasional breaks leading to steps down to the narrow northern beaches.

In the center of 'Broadway', Peter and Robin began work at the shore. The streets were still sub-base, but Peter began naming streets as he worked. "This first one I'll name after Bruce's parents," Peter told Robin. "Welcome to Downing street," he giggled. Nearest to the cliffs, they built a single family home and numbered it 'ten' when it was done, then broke into a fit a laughter. "Wait until Prez learns I built him a house at number ten Downing Street! He'll flip!" At the next lot, Peter built a row of townhomes. At the next three blocks, dormitory quads were built. At the south side of Broadway, Peter set up a strip malls, facing the main roadway. Beyond that to the south and starting to climb in elevation, the first ten-story condominium was built. Peter and Robin staggered the building profiles such that all residents would have nice views, unobstructed by taller buildings. They finished Downing Street with two twenty-story condominiums that were based on the original design Peter's company developed for Ewa Beach. The first six floors were single bedroom efficiency apartments, the next seven floors were two bedroom, two bathroom units, and they were topped with seven floors of five bedroom, four bath penthouses.

When the first street was done, he cured some roadway then began on "O'Brian Street", the same way as they had developed Downing Street. During the course of the day, Peter and Robin developed "Hundser Street", where at the intersection Broadway a small medical clinic, fire station and police station were built. Much the same way, "Gibbons Street," "Seaver Street" and "Seibert Street" were developed. At the southeast corner of Seibert Street, just off Broadway, a large mall was built, named Seibert Plaza, complete with movie theater. When that task was finished, Peter returned to the corner of Broadway and Downing Street, where he built an auditorium similar to that at Ewa Beach. He even named it Downing Gardens and dressed up the exterior with a plethora of fountains and flora. The design of the Gardens was evocative of a Japanese botanical garden, simplistic but functional. The final step was a bronze plaque memorializing Bruce's parents. At the end of the day, Peter intended on bringing Bruce back here to show him the length of Downing Street, culminating the little tour with this spot.

Transporting in with the last load of concrete, for the crew working south from the north of Broadway, Joseph turned in place, drinking in the sight of the work already done. He gasped, "I would've never believed it was possible." As the paving crews approached Seibert Plaza and Downing Gardens, Peter then suggested the names for the streets down by the beach. "From the east, there would be Furst Street, then Short Street, then Richardson Street and lastly Thompson Street. Peter conferred with Carl and Leo. Several teams split off to pave the side streets, while the others went back to the ends of 'Broadway' to put the surface coat on the island's main road.

Near six o'clock that evening, Peter, Carl and Robin gathered and looked over the incredible amount of work accomplished in a single day. To the large group of men that had worked so hard, Carl announced, "Gentlemen, congratulations on completing a phenomenal job. Each of you have earned your days pay and the incentive pay I promised. Funds will be transferred into the bank account numbers you've provided on your employment forms. As similar work is required on any of Clan Short's other properties, I will be calling on you again." The men were then instructed to split off according to island of residence. Carl, Peter, Robin, Joseph, Leo and Fernando split up to have men from each island state their name. Since all the personal data was electronic, AI's listened to stated names as they were spoken and each man was transported as close to their homes as was possible. In about two-and-a-half minutes, all the men were transported to their homes.

Taking a final glance around the now developed, but still unpopulated island, Peter proudly giggled, "If everyone's ready, let's go back to Ewa Beach?"

"Sounds good," Carl agreed, and Peter transported them all back to Ewa Beach, right in front of the CIC building. As the others went inside, Peter looked around. The sun was setting, and the street lights were flickering on. Peter hit himself on the forehead, and concentrated. Over on the now-deserted island, street lights sprung up along Broadway, on Downing Street, and so on, and began glowing softly.

* * * * *

Ewa Beach, C.S.P.R.D. Main Base

10:11 AM HTZ

Barreling into the dining room with their ten person welcoming committee in tow, Drew screeched to a halt before the Starfleet security. They were startled by the sudden, rapid entrance and Drew recognized that immediately. "At ease, Ensign," Drew smiled, and then introduced himself, Corey and the rest of the welcoming committee.

Ensign McGrane began introducing the rescued kids while Drew and Corey greeted each and asked their ages. The tallest was Mike Busse, age fourteen. Then there was David Lydon, age thirteen; Ryan Caswell, age twelve; Matthew Cottingham, age eleven; Rodney Castaneda, age ten; Jeremy Catlin, age eight; Leonard Santana, age six; Mark Fikes, age five; Robyn Ashe, age fourteen; Claire Endsley, age twelve; Lillian Fitts, age nine, and Glenda Keeling, age seven.

Doctors Andrews, Howard and Wiener walked into the dining room during the introductions. Drew softly and sincerely apologized to Doctor Wiener. "I'm sorry, I should've called you too. Guess I always make assumptions."

Patting Drew on the back, Doc Wiener grinned, "It's called a positive attitude, Drew. Keep it that way."

So that the business formalities could be taken care of, Drew loudly asked, "Who's wants a milkshake?"

All twelve newbies politely raised their hands, but the other Rimmers shouted, "ME!" Corey and Reyes began laughing.

Drew giggled, "Reyes, show everyone where to get their shakes, please, bro?"

Reyes nodded and smiled, "Right this way guys," then led the pack to the chow line, explaining all about the shakes and the flavors available. Doc Wiener followed and closely watched the new kids interact with the others in the welcoming committee. Like any new kid might, they warmed up slowly to the Clan Short veterans that were now, after only six days, more outgoing kids.

Drew and Corey stayed with Doctors Andrews and Howard while medical records were accepted and reviewed. Afterward, Drew thanked and dismissed the Starfleet Security team.

John, Stephen and Frankie ran into the dining room, on the ground, for a change. They waved at Corey and Drew then went to the chow line to meet the kids. With little else to do, Drew called Kaleo and Corey called Sean. The echo of the mob shower made it obvious where Kaleo and Tory were. Kaleo assured they would be in the dining room in five or ten minutes. The length of time it took for Sean to answer his comm-badge made it equally obvious to Corey what they were doing. Sean estimated fifteen or twenty minutes before they could be at the dining room. Frustrated, Corey whispered to Drew; "I'm gonna go beat off." Smiling widely, Drew locked eyes with Corey and shook his head.

When the newbies, John and Stephen came out to the dining room, Drew pulled his brother aside. Immediately upon looking at Drew's face, John giggled, "Go, I'll get started with the kids." Drew and Corey transported to their townhome's master bedroom.

Ten minutes later, Drew returned to the dining room with a much more mellow Corey. Kaleo and Tory were there and sitting near the tables with the newbies. These were the kids from the level one San Diego orphanage that Kaleo and Tory didn't get the chance to meet. While telling the new kids more about the base, John teased Corey. 'At least twice a day, every morning and night or it's cranky bitch mode, huh?' With any will to argue greatly diminished, Corey rapidly nodded and giggled. Drew sat down and pulled Corey onto his lap then they joined the orientation discussion.

Lenny sat back, smiled at Corey and rubbed his tummy saying, "I'm so full, Poppa." That sent the conversation off in an entirely new direction.

John told the new kids, "All of the leaders are Starfleet Officers and considered adults. We're all Lieutenants." Stephen picked up the story from there, telling the kids about the marriages and introducing Frankie as his and John's son. The kids were all shocked that other kids were married, considered adults and had adopted other kids.

The kids still hadn't finished their milkshakes and the conversation was still in progress when Drew's comm-badge chirped. Tapping it, he answered, "Pacific Rim Division, this is Drew."

"This is Doctor Janet Hayes, at Camp Bam Bam."

Getting up and stepping away from the chatter, Drew said, "Hey Doc. How're you?"

"Very good, thank you. I have a dozen children with me, anxious to see you, Corey and Hawaii."

"Great!" Drew cheered. "We're in the CIC dining room with the first dozen now."

Janet said, "I'll have Daileass transport them."

"Are you coming too?" Drew wondered.

Janet replied, "There's no need." A moment later, all twelve kids were standing in the dining room, not far from where Drew and Corey were, near the first batch of kids. Each of the kids were holding envelopes containing their medical records and wearing new clothes appropriate for the Hawaiian climate. They were excitedly looking around the CIC, drinking in their new environment.

Rolling his eyes, Drew giggled, "Don't say anything, Daileass!"

Over the dining room ceiling's speakers, Daileass imitated the character Carol Ann, from the movie 'Poltergeist'. "They're here!" Daileass giggled.

Shaking his head, Drew stood and told Janet, "They look great, Doc. A heck of a lot better than they did last night. Thank you." The three doctors went to the kids then began gathering the envelopes and greeting the kids.

Janet said, "The kids will be fine, Drew. The rest of their treatment can easily be handled by your medical team." She paused then wondered, "Where are Preston and Keith?"

"At a school concert this morning," Drew answered. "Prez needed time off. He put me and Corey in charge for the day. John, Stephen, Kaleo and Tory are here too."

Janet hummed then said, "I understand. I'll let you get to work, Director Hundser."

Drew giggled, "Thanks again, Doc. Have a good day."

"You too. Janet out."

At the FYS Building, while Jim and Jennifer Hundser were doing interviews, Anna Seibert, George Lu and Tamara Hekekie were assigned the task of contacting the parents and care-givers of some of the recently rescued children. First on the list were the kids from Sunday night. Gage Lundberg's parents never answered their phone. A message was left for them to contact FYS regarding their son. Aki Hikada's parents were contacted and scheduled to meet with George Lu. Hajime Sato's parents were also contacted and scheduled to meet with Tamara Hekekie. Aki and Hajime were called to the FYS building, where they rehashed the circumstances that brought them to the Clan. Aki wanted to remain with Hajime and recognized that opportunities in the Clan were far better than he could expect otherwise. He hoped for visits with his parents in the future, but only if they could cope with his relationship. Hajime didn't ever want to return home. He knew his parents would not ever accept his gay relationship. Immediately recognizing anger management issues with Hajime's parents, Tamara went to Anna Seibert to request additional security be present for their interview. Anna agreed with Tamara's assessment and called her own security to be available at three that afternoon.

Sean and Troy walked in the dining room and went directly to the kids. Drew and Corey hurried over, quite obviously pleased to see kids they had personally rescued. Again, another group of kids were led through the chow line for their first vitamin fortified milkshakes. Having had to perform executions, Sean and Troy were happy to see all of the kids. The kids were equally happy to finally be at their new home, but because of their care-givers, were careful what they said. While the second batch of kids made their way through the kitchen chow line, Drew tried to relax them by telling them that their orphanage care-givers were sentenced to life imprisonment and would never set foot on the Earth again. Corey prompted each kid to say exactly what they thought of those adults and then made a point of introducing the on-duty chefs. Drew made contrasting statements, describing the good grownups working at the base verses the evil scum at the orphanage.

Soon, they were out in the dining room again, sitting at tables near the other twelve newbies. Drew's comm-badge chirped once more. While Drew and Corey handled the third incoming group. Sean and Troy began telling the second group about the base. Having heard much of it already, kids from the first group began adding their own remarks. Within fifteen minutes, the third group of kids were seated with their milkshakes. Kaleo led the third orientation conversation and encouraged kids from the first and second groups to answer questions for the third group. At eleven-thirty, small packs of Rimmer kids began arriving at the dining room for lunch. A quick tour of the dorms and the base was done with the newbies.

Over at James Campbell High School, Keith, Prez, Mike and Derrick decided to remain at school for a little while longer, during the lunch period. They chatted with Mrs. Diaz and some of their band-mates about that day's concert. This day, instead of playing 'Weird', as was originally planned and done the prior two days, the four boys talked their teacher into allowing them to play a different song. She approved, with the caveat the lyrics were not rude or volatile. Of course, they assured her it would be something along the same lines as 'Weird', but they hadn't actually agreed on the song. They were also hindered by the capability of the school's PA system. Keith only had an upright baby grand and an older synthesizer too, so their choices were limited.

Ever since Troy mentioned the need to perform, Keith and Prez recognized it wasn't a simple desire to practice or perform for their Clan. It was more a requirement they had to meet. Derrick and Mike admitted to having the same perception. It wasn't until they had finished playing 'The In Crowd' that a spur of the moment song was chosen. Keith began playing the piano introduction to Can't Fight This Feeling, causing Derrick, Mike and Prez to break into fits of giggles. Mike easily provided the counterpoint guitar harmony. Derrick added cymbal swells and Prez filled out the bottom then Keith began singing. "I can't fight this feeling any longer. And yet I'm still afraid to let it flow. What started out as friendship, Has grown stronger. I only wish I had the strength to let it show.

"I tell myself that I can't hold out forever. I said there is no reason for my fear. Cause I feel so secure when we're together. You give my life direction, You make everything so clear.

"And even as I wander, I'm keeping you in sight. You're a candle in the window, On a cold, dark winter's night. And I'm getting closer than I ever thought I might.

"And I can't fight this feeling anymore. I've forgotten what I started fighting for. It's time to bring this ship into the shore, And throw away the oars, forever.

"Cause I can't fight this feeling anymore. I've forgotten what I started fighting for. And if I have to crawl upon the floor, Come crashing through your door, Baby, I can't fight this feeling anymore."

Mike played the guitar solo flawlessly, note-for-note, and made an act of it for the students, although he was actually bored.

Keith sang, "My life has been such a whirlwind since I saw you. I've been running around in circles in my mind. And it always seems that I'm following you, girl, Cause you take me to the places, That alone I'd never find.

"And even as I wander, I'm keeping you in sight. You're a candle in the window, On a cold, dark winter's night. And I'm getting closer than I ever thought I might.

"And I can't fight this feeling anymore. I've forgotten what I started fighting for. It's time to bring this ship into the shore, And throw away the oars, forever.

"Cause I can't fight this feeling anymore. I've forgotten what I started fighting for. And if I have to crawl upon the floor, Come crashing through your door, Baby, I can't fight this feeling anymore."

The song was a statement of what the four Core Rimmers felt and wanted to share. What they had experienced the previous night was a whirlwind of memories that were, thankfully, much less painful. At the song's end, clapping, cheering and whistling erupted. The Junior class present in the school's auditorium thought the boys did an excellent job covering the song.

In a grand mood after the show, the four boys were goofing around the school's outdoor lunch area. Near where Mrs. Diaz and many of their band-mates were sitting, they had finished an a Capella rendition of 'Sh-Boom' and were in the middle of singing 'Blue Moon' when suddenly their eight security guards closed ranks around them, with their collapsible graphite-composite batons fully extended, creating a barrier such that none of the four Core Rimmers could be reached. A large group of boys and even some girls began shouting challenges and threats, obviously unhappy about Clan Short and the effects the prior night's activities had upon their families and the world. Caught in the maelstrom, Mrs. Diaz threatened detention. When that got nowhere, the Vice-Principal came over, threatening suspension of the entire group.

Disgusted, Prez spoke up. "It's alright, Mister Dela Cruz. If people knew the facts instead of jumping to conclusions, they wouldn't have any problem with the Clan or what happened last night."

Some of the group wanted explanations of the raids while others began shouting insults. Keith and Derrick answered some valid questions honestly, but with little detail. Fuming, Mike kept control of his tongue only because this was school property.

His patience exhausted, Prez tapped his sub-vocal, silently mouthing, "Alden, set local condition yellow. Lock down the Command Center and transport everyone within twelve feet of me there, right now." Alden followed the order. Everyone, including Mrs. Diaz and Vice-Principal Dela Cruz, suddenly found themselves in the Command Center. Lieutenant Vorik and the six on-duty UNIT boys shot to their feet and drew their weapons.

"Lieutenant Vorik," Prez bellowed, "show our visitors the unedited video and audio from Fresno."

Vorik nodded, "Aye, Sir," then turned and entered commands to complete the ordered task.

Vice-Principal Dela Cruz said, "This is inappropriate behavior, Preston."

Keith challenged, "No Sir, what's inappropriate is ignorant people making stupid statements when they have no idea what they're talking about. They want an explanation. They're about to get it."

Prez smiled at his partner then calmly stated, "This is no longer a school issue. This is a human rights issue now." Prez emphasized, "I am in charge here. I could have each of these kids arrested as fast as we transported here. Instead, I'm going to teach a lesson they can take home with them." Vorik turned to face Prez. Prez nodded, "Play it." Immediately, the large video display behind Prez showed the greenish night-vision video from the Fresno Level 4 raid. Everyone that knew better turned away and didn't watch. The first minute or so was no big deal, just the strike team entering the premises with remarks that each room had been cleared. Then the strike team began climbing the stairs. The two bathrooms were cleared and efforts to open the triple-locked bedroom doors were made. The small, floor level food slots were shown and commented on by the strike team. Images of naked, feral kids soon filled the screen with more remarks from the strike team.

One girl, already revolted, covered her mouth. Prez locked eyes with Jimmy and said, "Show our guests where the lavatories are, bud." Jimmy was followed down the hall by two girls. Within another minute, the partially cannibalized corpse was shown. The remaining girls, Mrs. Diaz and three of the boys had hurried down the hall. Prez said, "That's enough, Lieutenant." A moment later, the screen went blank.

Prez announced, "That's what the four of us had to deal with last night. While you were having a reasonably decent time at home last night, me, my friends and my younger brothers were in California dealing with that... sixteen fucking times! We were expecting one-hundred-ninety-six kids. We found two-hundred-eighty-four, in accommodations that were vile, to say the least. Seventy-two of the kids were exactly like what you just saw. We'll never see those kids on this planet again; fourteen of them have already died. With all Starfleet's advanced technology, we can't un-do the damage to those feral kids. Over a hundred and fifty others require up to a week of recovery time." While Prez was speaking, Mrs. Diaz and the others that had left the room returned.

Intently staring down the group of high school students, Prez complained, "All we wanted to do was spend a few extra minutes at school with our teacher and friends. You just had to cause a problem though."

Mike growled, "The four of us had to execute adults that were supposed to be caring for those kids. Not one of you had a friggin' clue. All you cared about was how it effected your family's bank account. People died last night, you selfish shits! Does any one have any more complaints?" Mike was ready to call his dad in to have the entire group of kids arrested and it clearly showed. However, heads shook and no one said a word.

Prez asked, "Before I send you back to school, are there any questions?"

One older boy said, "On TV, you said that Clan Short is here for the community; any one that needs Clan help."

Prez nodded, "True."

The same boy asked, "Gays too?"

Sadly shaking his head, Prez loudly sighed. Derrick calmly answered, "What does it matter who anyone chooses to love and have sex with? They're not raping, murdering or hurting anyone. It doesn't directly effect you. Gays, lesbians and transgenders are people too. Let it rest, dude. If you want something to bitch about, then bitch about the sadistic assholes that starved and abused those kids in California."

"Or the one's right here, discovered last Friday, who sexually abused and molested kids," Mike growled.

Keith reached for Prez's hand, saying, "We got married Tuesday night."

Prez nodded and proudly smiled, "As Starfleet Officers, we're considered adults. We adopted four great boys, two of which were sexually abused by adults, discovered in last Friday's Clan raids. Richie is five and Dee is ten, but looks more like eight, because of the poor diet he was provided."

Mike took Derrick's hand and confirmed, "We're gay, married and adopted kids too."

Derrick said, "Misses Diaz? Mister Dela Cruz? I can't speak for Mike, Keith or Prez, but after this, I'm in no rush to ever go back to James Campbell High. You can't control this. Our presence there is dangerous for us and for everyone there. I quit."

Mike nodded, "Me too."

Keith nodded at Prez. Prez said, "Us too. God forbid there were a letter bomb attack at school in an attempt to get at us. Cancel tomorrow's concert for the seniors and the Saturday concerts. We won't be there."

Mister Dela Cruz nodded and softly said, "I understand, but I'm very sorry to hear it."

Mike explained, "We put on concerts for our Clan almost every day. If it's a choice between school band or saving one additional life, the life matters more." Keith and Derrick nodded agreement.

Prez said, "If everyone is ready, I'll have you transported back to school. You'll be able to make your next classes."

Mister Dela Cruz asked, "Can you transport us to my office?"

Prez answered, "Sorry, no I can't. I can get you to the main entrance."

Mister Dela Cruz angrily eyed the assembled kids saying, "A week of Principal's detention so we can all discuss this in depth is appropriate."

"And another week's detention with me," Mrs. Diaz added. "I now have to hold auditions to find an entire rhythm section."

The four Core Rimmers said goodbye to Mrs. Diaz and wished things had happened differently.

Mrs. Diaz nodded and smiled, "The band will eventually find musicians like you boys again. It's been a pleasure. I hope we meet again someday." All four boys agreed.

Prez called, "Alden, transport our guests back to James Campbell High, please." A moment later, the Command Center was cleared of all non-Clan persons. Prez said, "Stand down from condition yellow."

Sadly shaking his head, Jimmy smirked, "You scared the piss out of us!" Taking his seat, Jimmy softly grumbled, "Flashing yellow light, locked doors and a room full of people."

Prez shrugged, "I might not be able to change the world, but I can try in my little corner of it."

Keith sighed, "I hope it was worth the effort."

Derrick nodded agreement then added, "At least we won't have to worry about anyone there getting hurt."

Heading for the Command Center door into the dining room, Mike said, "Tengo hambre! Me pregunto qué hay para comer?" (I'm hungry! I wonder what's for lunch?) Stepping into the dining room, Mike shouted, "Oye, los Latin Kings! Lo siento, te perdiste esta mañana. ¿Qué está pasando?" (Hey, Latin Kings! Sorry I missed you this morning. What's happening?)

Several of the Latin Kings kids stood at their tables. Ten-year-old Bennett De Aquila replied, "Tuvimos batidos para el desayuno. Estamos teniendo queso y tocino para el almuerzo." (We had milkshakes for breakfast. We're having bacon cheeseburgers for lunch.)

Fourteen-year-old Dominic Grassus asked, "Cuando estamos recibiendo ropa nueva, Mike?" (When are we getting new clothes, Mike?)

Heading for the chow line, Mike loudly answered, "Más tarde esta tarde. Todo lo que los novatos se trajo a nuestra tienda donde usted puede escoger su propia ropa." (Later this afternoon. All you newbies will be brought to our store where you can pick your own clothes.)

Derrick asked, "Have you met all the Core Rimmers?"

Dominic replied, "Sí, nos encontramos con Drew, Corey, Kaleo, Tory, Juan, Esteban, Sean y Troy. (Yes, we met Drew, Corey, Kaleo, Tory, John, Stephen, Sean and Troy.)

Prez waved, "Bienvenido a Hawaii! ¿Ustedes dormir bien?" (Welcome to Hawaii! Did you guys sleep alright?)

All the Latin Kings kids nodded and many disjointedly replied, "Si."

Dominic added, "Son habitaciones muy agradables y cómodas camas." (They are very nice rooms and comfortable beds.)

Keith said, "After lunch, we'll all meet in the auditorium. We'll get to know each other and play some music for you."

A lot of kids, newbies and old-timers alike began cheering. The four boys went to the chow line. Once they had their lunch trays, they checked on their kids then went and found a table near the other Core Rimmers. Drew swallowed what he had been chewing then told Prez, "Everybody's here. Including the Latin Kings, we've got seventy-two newbies."

John added, "We told them about the nest and Kaleo showed them the dorms. We might have some of the littlest kids in the nest, but almost everyone was looking forward to choosing dorm rooms."

Stephen nodded and explained, "None of 'em seem too scared. As long as they're close together, they'll be happy."

Sean smiled, "They're happy to be out of the orphanages they were at."

Mike asked, "What've the Latin Kings kids been doin' today?"

Kaleo answered, "When we were showing the other kids around, they were all over; some were playing basketball, some were playing volleyball, a bunch were at the pool and diving well."

Derrick wondered, "They're mixing in with the rest of the kids?"

Tory nodded, "Oh, yeah. It wasn't like they were keeping themselves separate. Just the usual stuff; everybody sticking in the same age bracket."

Troy grinned, "One of the youngest, Russ Pass, climbed up the ladder for the five-meter board. When he saw how high up he was, he turned around and climbed back down again." All the Core Rimmers began chuckling and laughing.

Keith suspiciously eyed John and wondered, "You've been staying on the ground?"

John was munching on French Fries so he sent, 'So far, so good.' When he swallowed, he said, "I've already shared languages with the newbies." Turning to Prez, John said, "I need your approval for two new members of my Intel team, bro."

Raising his eyebrows, Prez asked, "Who?" then took a bite out of his cheeseburger.

John grinned, "Cesar and Felipe," and Prez abruptly stopped chewing.

Keith loudly reminded, "They're six!"

John shrugged, "The Terrible Triplets trained them a little bit when we weren't looking."

Keith groaned. Prez turned to Corey and asked, "What would your mom think?"

Corey smiled, "My folks guessed they were telepaths. I think as long as the circumstances are safe, my mom won't become a Valium junkie." All the Core Rimmers began laughing. Tory almost gagged on his hamburger and Kaleo pounded on his husband's back.

Waiting for a decision, Keith turned to Prez. Swallowing his food, Prez shrugged, "Don't ask me. Drew and Corey are in charge."

"Oh-ho no!" Drew laughed, "You're not really dropping this in my lap?"

"Why not?" Prez grinned. "This is exactly the kind of decision I deal with every day."

Rolling his eyes, Drew smirked, "At least give me a clue what to consider."

Kaleo said, "The limits are already in place. Keep them safe. On base stuff at the FYS building would be kewl. Anything on any of our bases, like Monday night with Bill Devine, would be kewl." Still eating, Prez smiled, nodded and gestured to Kaleo.

Checking with the older team members, Drew confirmed, "Limited duty, safe stuff that won't freak out Corey's mom?" Seeing nodding heads around the tables, Drew turned to John saying, "Get 'em trained, bro."

"Sweet!" John chirped.

Having a revelation, Keith hummed then grinned, "When we get some kind of off-base, division day trip planned, who would suspect two little kids could discern between good guys and bad guys?"

Troy smirked, "Stealth telepaths," causing another round of giggles and laughter.

Turning to Drew, John said, "Mom and dad are doing interviews today. I could get them trained this afternoon? You don't need me at the auditorium or in the store, do you?"

Drew said, "That works, bro. Go for it."

John said, "I'm also considering the Betazoid twins, Inoyra and Relud Glith. They're fifteen, but I haven't talked with them about it yet."

Drew hummed thoughtfully then realized, "We just rescued them Tuesday night. Give them another few days to chill out."

Prez smiled, "That was easy, wasn't it?"

Drew rapidly nodded then became very serious and told Prez, "There's one other thing to report. One of the girls got sick this morning. She's pregnant."

Prez asked, "Which girl?"

"One of the street kids picked up Tuesday night. Susana Gault." Drew answered.

Keith wondered, "What's the scoop?"

Drew nodded and frowned, "It's probably from one of her johns. She don't want it. Doc Howard says she wants an abortion."

Everybody was obviously saddened at the news. Prez sighed, "Even though we're capable of handling an infant, she's made her choice?" Drew nodded. Prez huffed, "Whatever and whenever Susana and Doc Howard want to."

Mike excitedly asked, "You're not going to even talk to her about it?"

"No," Prez firmly said. "It's not my choice or ours. Susana knows where she is. I can understand her reasons easy enough." Glancing around the table, Prez asked, "Would you want a reminder of meaningless sex?" Seeing only slowly shaking heads, Prez said, "Then let it be. Have Doc Wiener ready for whatever Susana might need." Drew nodded then he and Corey went to the doctors' table.

Finished eating, Derrick stood and went over to where Reyes and their boys were sitting. Noticing Dillon's burger was only half eaten and most of his French Fries were untouched, Derrick worried, "Aren't ya feeling good, Dillon?"

Stuffed from enormous amounts of food over the prior days, Dillon huffed, "I'm fine, daddy."

Jonah smiled, "We just had milkshakes about two hours ago."

Reyes grinned and added, "We were part of the newbie welcoming committee. We had big breakfasts, milkshakes and lunch in four hours, dad."

Derrick chuckled then asked Reyes, "How're ya feelin'?"

Reyes nodded and smiled, "Awesome!" then he stood, turned around and pulled up his shirt. All the marks and welts from his orphanage abuses had completely vanished. Lowering his shirt, Reyes faced his dad and blushed, "I even can sit comfortably for extended periods without squirming around."

Thankful that Reyes' android recovery systems were functioning beautifully, Derrick cracked up at Reyes expression, but still remembered the sorry state of Reyes butt Friday night. Calming himself, Derrick asked, "Feel like jammin', Reyes?"

Enthusiastically, Reyes answered, "With you guys? Always!" and then hugged his dad.

Derrick kissed his son's forehead then said, "We're gonna play Latin rock, of some sort, probably Santana."

Reyes looked up and grinned, "Head, Hands and Feet?"

"Ooo!" Derrick half moaned and half laughed. "I like that idea." They shared the plan with Mike, Prez, Keith and Troy. During that little conversation, a few other tunes were mentioned, prompting another call to Alden and more changes to the stage setup. Primarily, a set of Roland electronic drums, on risers equivalent to Derrick's, were added for Reyes. An electric guitar, effects unit and amplifier were set up for Keith, should the need arise. Keith's guitar skills were nothing like his piano skills, yet he could manage a strong rhythm guitar part easily. Another set of three electronic keyboards were add to stage right, so Troy or Mike could get to them without racing across the stage.

Corey and Drew finished eating then took their trays of plates, glasses and silverware to the kitchen dishwasher. Returning to the dining room, they helped Geoff and Lenny with their trays. They hadn't realized it, but they were being watched by the Anaheim kids. And the San Diego kids were watching the Anaheim group and the Latin King group. The latter group had followed Mike and Derrick from LA and were still doing it, but to a lesser extent than the two former groups. In a new place with new people, all the newbie kids were looking for examples of how to act. The Ewa Beach base wasn't anything like the homes they had been at.

Sean noticed what was going on, because he had done it himself less than a week earlier. He told Troy, "It's newbie syndrome, round two. Follow the leader of choice."

Troy asked, "Is that what you did the first few days?"

Sean nodded, "We spent most of Saturday at Anahola Bay, pretty much doing whatever we wanted. Prez, Keith, and most of the Core Rimmers were busy with every one of us and at least a hundred Clan guests. When I wasn't surfin' with Kaleo and other teenagers, I did what they did; spent time with our little kids and tried to get to know some of the visitors."

Prez and Keith overheard Sean. Keith asked, "What made the biggest impact, Sean?"

Sean blushed, "I'm not sure I understand."

Prez reminded, "Sunday night, you were among the first to move to the dorm. How did you get to that point?"

Turning redder, Sean smiled, "Well, Kaleo and Tory wanted to move, but wouldn't if they were alone. If I had to say which things mattered most, it was the stuff said Saturday night, before and after the concert, and that we had a little sing-a-long in the dorm common room. You guys just went in and made use of what was in there. That made it home."

Tilting his head, Keith repeated, "Common room?" and then asked, "It's not a rec room to you?"

Sean said, "It's more than a rec room, but not like the indoor rec center, or the rec room here. Now it's more a common place for both halls to gather. Yeah, we watch TV and hang out there, but we talk there too." Seeing Keith and Prez share an uncertain glance, Sean explained, "Monday night, when more kids moved into the dorm, we were watchin' a movie in there. When the movie ended and we were searchin' for something to watch next, some of the new kids wanted to watch American football. So we turned it on. Other guys saw it and joined us in there. I wasn't too interested so I left with Kaleo and Tory. I went to my room and played video games for a while. Later, when the football game was over, I wound up back in there with Horacio, Kaleo and Tory. Horacio was basically in there for several hours. It's a common room, whatever the most want to do is what goes on in there. This morning, Troy and I found Makan Kama in there, at the easel, painting with water colors." Eight-year-old Makan was one of the original eighty-seven. At last, he felt comfortable enough to choose to paint rather than play at the playground or pool.

Absorbing and considering what Sean had said, Prez asked, "So I need to have a chat with the newbies?"

"Oh, hell yeah," Sean smiled, and then stipulated, "Derrick, Mike, Corey and Drew need to say something too. Make it so it's just not the newbies though. Stuff that needs to be directed more towards them can be said another time."

Troy suggested, "Maybe down in the store, where it's only us and them."

Prez and Keith nodded. Keith asked, "Is there something else you guys would like in the common rooms?"

Sean shrugged, "I don't think so, it's a kewl place to just be together as it is. We'll see how it goes, but I don't see a need for video games or anything like we have in the rec room here. When Troy and I were there yesterday morning, some kids were watching a movie in there. The sound was turned way up and they were having fun."

Prez glanced around and saw that most kids were finished eating or were finishing up. Standing, he tapped his sub-vocal and asked Alden to be connected to the PA systems. "Attention all Rimmers," Prez announced, "It's meeting time. If you're not otherwise occupied, please join us in the auditorium. After we chat, it's jam time."

Drew and Corey hurried to the auditorium to get everything powered up. Twenty-four Anaheim kids followed them and waited in the lobby while Corey and Drew flipped circuit breaker switches. Several of the older boys closely watched what Drew and Corey were doing, including Jake and Terry. Jake softly wondered what Drew was doing. Drew answered, "Powering the place up. All the basic stuff is at the top of both panels; lights and stage power outlets. As you move down the panels, there's special stuff like the concession stand equipment, the PA system for the band or the movie screen, film projector and the associated sound systems. We keep the refrigerators on so we always have ice and cold drinks. Other than those few things, almost everything else is turned off when we leave."

Corey noticed Jake's confused expression and smiled, "It's not that hard, dude. If ya want, you guys can come upstairs with us? Once you see what's what, it'll all make sense." Jake and Terry checked with each other then nodded.

Carefully carrying his tray, Richie came towards the table Keith was standing at, asking, "What's wrong, Daddy? Why're we havin' a meeting?"

Keith took Richie's tray. While stacking stuff on his own tray so he could carry everything for his son, Keith explained, "We just need to make all our new kids feel comfortable, Richie. Until now, we've brought home ten or twenty new kids at a time. Today, we added almost as many as we started with last Saturday."

"Oh!" Richie giggled. "They're nice, but so quiet."

Keith grinned, "A few days ago, you were kind of quiet too."

Richie blushed and smiled, "It's home now."

Suddenly, Prez snapped his neck turning to Richie. He softly mumbled, "Out of the mouths of babes."

Richie's face grew stern and he complained, "Poppa, I ain't a baby." Carrying their trays to the dishwasher, Sean and Troy heard Richie and began giggling.

"Definitely not," Prez smiled. "You just gave me a great idea."

Richie's mouth dropped open then he squealed, "I did?" Hurrying after Prez, Richie repeatedly asked what he had said. Prez cracked up and Richie caught the laughter infection, but still wondered what idea he had given his Poppa.

Standing at the dishwasher station was Horacio, busily pushing large plastic racks of plates into the machine. Prez smiled, "Awesome, bro."

Horacio nodded, "I'll be in the auditorium when I'm done here, Prez."

Putting his tray down, Prez explained, "This is mostly for the newbies, so they feel included." He then swept up Richie and planted a kiss on his son's cheek. "Three little words," Prez grinned, and then slowly repeated, "It's home now."

"Well, it is!" Richie giggled.

All the Core Rimmers and all the rescued kids gathered in the auditorium. The only adults in the auditorium were Kathleen Marr and some unfamiliar adult faces of recently hired staff. The Rimmers assumed the new adults were those of off-shift housekeepers, chefs or other new employees. John, Stephen, Cesar, Felipe and Horacio seemed to be the only one's missing. The Core team went up on stage then sat at the edge. Once the chatter dwindled, Prez lifted the microphone then asked, "How is everybody?"

A lot of positive chatter erupted, but Relud Glith loudly asked, "Shouldn't we be asking how you guys are doing?"

Roy Angulo added, "Today's news was pretty intense, Prez."

Prez nodded, "It was intense," and the auditorium became extremely quiet. Prez sighed, "Suffice to say, we found things worse than we expected. The results of those raids are lives saved. Seventy-two of those lives are with us today. Within the next few days, we'll have some more brothers and sisters joining us. By next weekend, we'll have most of the California kids here with us. We're going to make this a home that we can all feel safe at and be proud of. That's what it's all about; home, safety, family, brothers and sisters, everybody helping each other in little ways that add up. Today, Corey and Drew have been in charge, helping me and the rest of the core team unwind. Horacio's in the kitchen helping out too. Has anyone else signed up for some of the miscellaneous odd jobs?"

Lance Elling shouted, "I'll be relieving Horacio at two, Prez."

Cody Padro yelled, "I've got the four to six shift."

Roy added, "I've got the job from six til eight."

Matthew Juckett said, "I'll be mopping the kitchen floors after eight."

Prez cheered, "Guys, that is awesome! And the best part is, you'll get paid for helping each and every one of us out. Remember, there's a bunch of other stuff you guys can do too. Even you little tikes can make extra money by picking up litter around the base. I just want to remind you all that our employees are the best. We don't hire people that hurt kids, so there's no reason to be scared of any of the adults. Do you guys know how we're so sure the adults are kewl?"

Since no one else was saying it, Jonah stood and said, "John's an empath and telepath."

"Amongst other things," Keith softly muttered. Some of the kids in the front row heard though and began giggling.

In his mind, Keith heard his youngest brother, warning, 'That's one you'll get away with and not get dunked.'

Jonah sat back down and Prez said, "That's correct. We have a bunch of telepaths in the Clan and they help us make sure only the very best people are hired. And guess what?"

Many kids around the auditorium wondered, "What?"

Prez said, "If any adult ever hurts you in any way, all you have to do is tell me or any of the Core Rimmers. Just like those adults in California we took care of last night, we'll take care of adults here that hurt our kids." Looking to his left, Prez asked, "Right guys?"

Keith took the microphone and said, "Quickly, in a minute."

Mike took it from Keith and assured, "They'll lose their job here. My dad is Clan Liaison to Honolulu Police."

Derrick took it from Mike and said, "Then they'll be tossed in jail for a very long time."

Drew took the microphone next, saying, "Ask the guys and girls from Anaheim. We sent the adults there to prison."

Corey took the microphone next and said, "They're lucky that's all they got."

Kaleo took the mic and admitted, "Tory and me were at one of the worst places in California. We beat the crap out of those two then sent them packin'."

Tory passed the mic to Sean, who said, "Kaleo, Tory and me are orphans too. We had it bad, but the kids in California actually had it worse."

Troy took the mic and explained, "Sean's my boyfriend now. I wanted to be part of this team because I don't think any kid should ever have to go through bad stuff. We're here to protect all of you and make your lives better."

Drew asked for the mic back and instructed, "Look around at people near you. You never know, that person sitting near you now might be your best friend tomorrow."

Prouder than ever of what the team had contributed, Prez asked for the microphone back. He watched as kids looked around and behind at other kids. He then said, "Your best friend might be one of those that stands out. Kaleo knew Tory stood out and here he is now. I knew Sean stood out and Sean knew that Troy stood out. Now they're up here on stage, ready, willing and very able to help any of you."

"Just because you were an orphan yesterday doesn't mean you're less capable of accomplishing anything you want. You only have to want it and put forth a little effort. That goes for you little tikes too. Cesar and Felipe are two six-year-old orphaned boys. They're with John right now, learning how to be part of John's Intel team. Little does not mean less important, it only means it'll take time for you to get big. If you stand out, one of us will see it."

When Prez finished, Derrick took the microphone and said, "Our Clan started with eighty-seven rescued kids only six days ago. Now we're up over two hundred. Our five bases can handle two thousand easily, without adding any more buildings. Eventually, we're going to need leaders at the dorms, someone you could go to when there's a problem or something special that you need. Those would be the people that would get you to a doctor if your sick. They would be the ones that come to us so that you can get what you need. Right now, we're a close nit family and things are pretty easy. As we grow, we'll need those stand outs so that everyone still has that safe, happy, home feeling."

Derrick handed the microphone back to Prez. "This is our home. Home is a place of safety; a place where you want to be, but not because you have to be there, it's a feeling deep inside. While we were out last night, I couldn't wait to come back here, to my home, where my friends and family are. To all you newbies from Anaheim, Los Angeles and San Diego... welcome home."

The auditorium erupted in applause, cheers and whistles from two hundred and thirty kids. Prez pointed at Richie and mouthed, "Your idea." Richie giggled while Dillon proudly patted his friend on the back. Drew and Corey hopped off the stage then started up the aisle. They gathered Geoff, Lenny, Jake and Terry, and then Alden transported the six of them to the PA room. The remaining Core Rimmers stood. Troy kissed Sean, and then Sean, Kaleo and Tory walked down the steps, off the stage to join the audience.

At the FYS building, John caught his mom at her desk between interviews. "Did you know that Keith, Prez, Mike and Derrick quit the jazz band?" Jen's mouth hung open in surprise for a moment. Before she could say anything, John sent, 'They were confronted at school. It wasn't terrible, but their security had to protect them. Prez got mad and transported all the kids, a teacher and the Vice-Principal here. He showed them how bad things really were last night. Because of that, they decided it would be safer for everybody if they just quit and went to school here on base.'

"I've changed my mind, mom," John said. "It wouldn't be good for me to go to my old school either. Stephen, Frankie and Lindsay will be here so, could you make a call and get my school records?"

Jennifer nodded and asked, "How're you and the core team doing?"

John smiled, "I'm good and so is Stephen. Prez and the rest of the team are about to finish their healing tasks now, in the auditorium." John giggled, "Ideas were implanted for each of us; a way to blow off steam. We're fine, mom. Don't worry so much."

Jen smirked, "I can't help worrying." John hugged his mother and pushed warm, loving emotions to her. Squeezing John tight, she purred, "Remarkable." She had always taken great pleasure giving and getting hugs from her boys, but being the youngest, she thought John's hugs were something special. Now she knew it wasn't her own perception; it was John.

John laughed, "I wish I could take all the credit. It's not just me though, mom. A big part of it is from all the kids in this Clan. Imagine being a teen prostitute and not having to do that anymore; imagine living in a slum, and wondering if you might get shot and die every day, then not having to worry anymore. The kids from Anaheim and San Diego got to go to school, but didn't have any other activities or life at all; just school and then back to the orphanage. The kids here are relieved and happy. Some are making friends, others are showing interest in stuff they were never allowed to do before."

Just before lunch, Rob Gibbons had received six Clan Short Security emblems to have stitched on his police uniform shirts. He had Alden place the first emblem on the shirt he was wearing, and later that day he would get the other emblems stitched onto his other uniform shirts.

Anna Seibert went to the auditorium to find Jerry Burk. Outside the auditorium, in the lobby, Anna had a brief, private conversation with Jerry regarding his circumstances. Learning of the foster mother's attempt to harm the boy with a knife, Anna began planning her intervention in this case. She asked Jerry, "If we could guarantee your safety, would you want to go back there again?"

Running his fingers through his brown hair, Jerry sighed, "Ya know what, Aunt Anna? When I got here, I thought, yeah, maybe, if she was gone and I was safe, I might like to be with my foster dad again. Now though, I've got so many friends here, I'd be sad if I could only visit occasionally. As much as I like my foster dad, I'd rather be here. Could he visit me here once in a while?"

Anna smiled, "If you would like, certainly, we could arrange that for you."

Jerry nodded, "Please, ask if he'd want to visit me. Somehow, I'm not sure if he'll want to or not."

Nodding understandingly, Anna offered, "If he does want to visit, I'll call you to the FYS building." She then instructed, "Go join the Clan now, Jerry. We'll talk again later today."

Platinum Habits gathered center stage and began listing songs they wanted to play. After about two minutes, Derrick went to the edge of the stage and shouted, "Reyes, we need you." Reyes stood, got pats on the back from his brothers then shuffled down the aisle and hurried up to the stage. Waiting for his eldest son, Derrick loudly asked if Reyes knew the intended first song. Running up the stage steps, Reyes said that he hadn't ever heard of it. While gear was being powered up, Derrick began clapping his hands to a tempo and singing what he needed Reyes to play. Keith and Troy began working out the keyboard parts while Mike and Prez figured out their parts. The first tune on the list was a song that the original four had messed around with before, but no matter how hard they tried, it would always be missing important parts. With Reyes and Troy, they could finally play it right. Drew, Corey, their boys and the two newbies, Jake and Terry, arrived at the PA room. Drew pulled the desk mic over and, through the stage monitors, told the band that he and Corey were ready. The band members signaled with thumbs-up gestures that they were ready too. Corey lowered the audience lights and turned up the blue and green stage lights.

In the audience, the original eighty-seven had tried to prepare the newbies for what was about to come. Few of those kids had ever been to or seen a concert of any sort though. Spotlights turned on and Mike began chopping away at heavily distorted guitar chords. Reyes played two explosive timpani beats and the rest of the band joined in for another measure. Another spotlight shone upon Derrick and he sang;

"Home by the sea. Home by the sea. Home by the sea.
Home by the sea.

Creeping up the blind side, shinning up the wall, stealing through the dark of night.

Climbing through a window, stepping to the floor, checking to the left and the right.

Picking up the pieces, putting them away, something doesn't feel quite right!

Help me someone, let me out of here!

Then out of the dark was suddenly heard,
welcome to the Home by the Sea.

Coming out the woodwork, thru the open door, pushing from above and below.

Shadows with no substance, in the shape of men, round and down and sideways they go.

Adrift without direction, eyes that hold despair, then as one they sigh and they moan!

Help us someone, let us out of here!

We're living here so long undisturbed, dreaming of the time we were free.

So many years ago, before the time when we first heard,

welcome to the Home by the Sea.

Sit down. Sit down. Sit down, Sit down. Sit down, as we relive our lives in what we tell you."

All the spotlights went out. Awash in blue and green lights, the band played the middle instrumental break. Around the audience, jaws hung open. The stage presence of the band members seemed to have changed as drastically as the type of song; from love to hate and from contentment to anger. Derrick seemed to be singing of the rescues the prior night, from their own perspectives and those of the rescued kids. Snapping the kids out of their thoughts, suddenly Reyes played those two thundering timpani beats again. Spotlights blazed and Derrick sang;

"Images of sorrow, pictures of delight, things that go to make up a life.

Endless days of summer, longer nights of gloom, waiting for the morning light.

Scenes of unimportance, photos in a frame, things that go to make up a life.

Help us someone, let us out of here!

Cos living here so long undisturbed,
dreaming of the time we were free,
So many years ago, before the time when we first heard,
welcome to the Home by the Sea.

Sit down. Sit down! Sit down, Sit down, Sit down. Sit down,

as we relive our lives in what we tell you,
let us relive our lives in what we tell you.

Sit down, Sit down, Sit down!

cos you won't get away, no with us you will stay for the rest of your days

Sit down! As we relive our lives in what we tell you.

Let us relive our lives in what we tell you."

The spotlights went out and the band played the ending instrumental section bathed in blue and green lights.

Reyes walked off and waited at stage left. Troy moved from keyboards over to the electric guitar. A low pitched rumble filled the auditorium. Within seconds, the original eighty-seven recognized Lunatic Fringe and became excited, sharing stories about the luau concert with the newbies. With Troy's additional electric guitar part, the song sounded even better than it had the prior Friday evening.

Two hundred and thirty kids plus the few adult housekeepers, landscapers and parents that had entered the auditorium clapped furiously at the end of the song.

Putting down his Stratocaster, Troy picked up an acoustic guitar. Then the band played Too Many People, with Troy providing lead vocals. Reyes came back on stage to play tambourine and maracas. Although the song was very much jammed, with only Troy and Prez having previously practiced the song, it came across beautifully, making it obvious that the band was having a good time. Screaming, 'too many hungry people losing weight', Troy seemed possessed, but then he softly sang the bridge. Mike played a solo different from the record, but kept the same attitudes, moving from enraged to gentle and melodic.

Dirty Laundry was next on the bands' off-the-cuff play list. Reyes sat behind the electronic drums. Watching his dad closely, Reyes and Derrick counted off and they started the tune with Keith's syncopated B-3 organ part. Switching between verses, Keith and Derrick handled the lead vocals. The first time through the chorus, the band members prompted the kids to sing, "Kick 'em when they're up, kick 'em when they're down." The second time through the chorus, Derrick and Reyes held the beat while the rest of the band were only singing. The girls were prompted to sing, "kick 'em while they're up," and then the boys were prompted to sing "kick 'em when they're down." At the end of the song, the girls and boys continued singing the parts they were taught until Prez told them "one last time", and then the band ended the song to more applause and screaming. Reyes took a break and stepped off to the side of stage left.

For a brief change of pace, Platinum Habits then played I'd Love To Change The World. Since it was one of the songs mentioned by the kids Saturday morning, before they officially became a Clan, the band thought it appropriate. The original eighty-seven appreciated it. Returning to heavier rock, they pressed forward with Rescue Me, also from Friday night's luau. Within seconds of the start of the song, Kaleo clapped and loudly cheered, "YEAH! RESCUE ME!" Over the music, even Drew and Corey heard Kaleo up in the PA room, so Drew turned up the volume a little bit. Kaleo even got some of the kids around him to stand up, bopping and singing along with the choruses. Seeing Reyes return to the electronic drums, the volume got turned up again before the band played One Thing Leads To Another. Reyes stepped back off stage. Drew inched the volume a little higher for Wildest Dreams, with Prez singing powerful lead vocals. With some knowledge of the orphanage operations, to many of the kids, the song was so much more compelling than it had been, telling a tale of battles forcing changes in attitudes across nations. Again, a lot of kids sang along with the choruses. Applause broke loose for their leader and the performance.

Derrick called Reyes back on stage then they began playing Soul Sacrifice/ Head, Hands and Feet, extending the drums and percussion introduction a few minutes. Mike and Troy tossed tambourines across the stage, catching and shaking them on the beat before tossing them again. Shaking maracas, Prez and Keith got the audience up on their feet, clapping their hands, stomping their feet and keeping tempo. The four of them put down the percussion instruments then went to their primary instruments and joined the tune in progress. Mike's lead guitar part blew everyone away because he was hardly ever watching what he was playing. His eyes opened only when he walked about near the edge of the stage. Then, Derrick and Reyes took over and played another extended percussion solo, causing the Latin Kings kids to dance, scream and shout. In a circular fashion, Keith, Mike, Prez and Troy tossed the maracas and tambourines to each other. By the time the rest of the band rejoined, kids were hoarse. The song lasted an incredible twenty minutes, six minutes longer than the original recording, due to the drum and percussion solos. At the end of the song, Randy, Jonah and Dillon jumped up and hollered "YEAH, REYES!"

Derrick tossed a tambourine to Reyes. The band began playing Urgent with Keith playing keyboards and providing lead vocals. Shaking the tambourine, Reyes moved towards the front of the stage. With Prez and Mike, Reyes helped get the audience revved up. Troy picked up his tenor saxophone and played the solos. Reyes left the stage again. For the next tune, Troy moved to acoustic guitar and handled the lead vocals for Tell Me What You Want, with Keith singing backup vocals. Many of the older ex-prostitutes wondered how the two dudes could sing that high without hurting themselves. One boy suggested that their cock-rings were just a tad too tight and a group of them cracked up laughing. Nearby teen girls heard the remark and the laughing boys. They smirked and sadly shook their heads, returning to their previous argument over which of the six band members was the cutest.

Troy switched from acoustic guitar to electric guitar. For the first time the kids had seen, Keith picked up an electric guitar. Then the band played Revolution, with Mike handling lead vocals. During You've Got Another Thing Coming, all five boys sang lead vocals during all verses and choruses. Then Troy melodically wooed into his microphone moments before the band kicked in for Heaven's On Fire. Troy sang; "I look at you and my blood boils hot, I feel my temperature rise. I want it all, give me what you got, there's hunger in your eyes. I'm getting closer, baby hear me breathe, you know the way to give me what I need, just let me love you and you'll never leave."

Out in the audience, Sean rolled his eyes, grinned evilly and pushed his erection into a more comfortable position. All five boys sang the chorus. "Feel my heat takin' you higher, burn with me, Heaven's on fire, Paint the sky with desire, angel fly, Heaven's on fire." Making Sean's predicament worse, Troy began pointing at him or making hand gestures whenever his hands weren't busy on the guitar. By the end of the song, Sean was sweating and squirming uncomfortably in his seat.

Switching things up and changing instruments again, the band then played Can't Find My Way Home, with Keith singing lead vocals and handling the keyboards part. Wake Me When September Ends was the next tune played, with Mike singing lead vocals. After that song the band gathered around the drums, away from the microphones. Troy shared a few private words with his band-mates that set them off in hysterical laughter. Troy put his guitar down then hurried off stage, still giggling and flushed bright red.

Prez stepped up to a microphone and chuckled, "Troy's got an issue to deal with, but he'll be right back." With a deliberate stride, Troy went out to the audience and pulled Sean out of the auditorium, causing a stir of giggles from the kids as they ran out the lobby doors.

Reyes moved behind the electronic drum kit again. Coming out from behind his drums, Derrick went to forward center stage. The stage lights changed to blues and reds. Beginning the drum part of In The Air Tonight, Reyes was the only band member that had a spot light on him. The moment Derrick began singing, another spotlight was added on Derrick. At the second verse, Corey flipped the switch for fog to begin pumping out onto the stage. Prez and Mike sang backup for Derrick during the first chorus, while Derrick strolled around stage. Drew began adding flangers and digital echos to the vocals. At the start of the third verse, Derrick began moving backward, away from the edge of the stage. By the end of the verse, Derrick was sitting behind his drum kit. He and Reyes played the thunderous segue into the second chorus. Minutes later, the song ended with the same thunderous drum beats. All the kids stood and roared their approval. Sweating from the stage lights, Reyes took another break off to the side of the stage.

The remaining four members of Platinum Habits played a song they had occasionally tried before; Asia's Time Again. Now that Derrick had gongs and a bigger drum kit, they could manage it. The song opened with Keith, Mike and Prez playing cadence and Derrick joined. Prez sang lead vocals. Keith, Derrick and Mike all sang backup vocals. Playing the intricate lead guitar part on his Randy Rhoads Les Paul, Mike actually watched his hands on the guitar neck. In awe, Reyes watched Derrick from backstage.

The next song began with a single distorted guitar chord and synthesizer notes that seemed to revolve around the auditorium. Keith set up his synthesizers to play electronic arpeggios then stepped away from the rack, strutting towards center stage, leaving the electronic wash of sound going. For the song, Drew activated the 5.1 system on the keyboard tracks then ran his finger over the electronic pads that caused the sound to travel around the venue. The final song of the day's jam session was Won't Get Fooled Again. Corey had bright white lights flashing into the audience and lasers intermittently hitting the spinning mirrored ball high above the audience. After about a minute of this guitar feedback and keyboard wash, Mike and Prez strummed another set of thunderous guitar and bass chords. Derrick played in a way Reyes hadn't seen since the seventies, when he saw The Who on television. All four band members performed in ways not seen since the luau, strutting around the stage and having fun engaging their audience.

Tossing his wireless microphone up in the air and catching it, Keith handled lead vocals and Derrick backed him up. Prez had a blast playing the bass guitar part for the song. Having no backup vocals to worry about, Prez and Mike stayed near the edge of the stage, playing directly to the kids. It was an angry song, encouraging a youth revolution, the teens and many of the tweens realized. Suddenly they were back to the spacey middle section with Keith simply hitting notes that took the repeating keyboard arpeggios into different directions, all the while Drew swirled the sound around the auditorium. Ending the song, bass, drums and guitar played the final chord and Keith stopped the keyboards. Corey flipped the off switch on all the stage lights, leaving them in the dark for several seconds. The kids stood up, clapping and cheering. A few seconds later, Corey turned on only the spotlights at center stage. Sweating and much happier, the band gathered center stage and bowed then yelled, "That's rock and roll!" Platinum Habits had played for more than an hour and a half.

While the audience was still clapping, Corey turned up the audience lights. Prez said, "One other thing for you newbies; if you feel like having a family will make you happy, then that's what you need to do. The way the Clan works, kids choose the adults and then the adults accept the kids. It has to be a two way street. Richie, Dee, Frankie, Gage and Sammy, come on down and stand in front of the stage."

As the kids made their way down the aisle, Mike called, "Jonah, Dillon, Randy and Reyes, you guys come down too." Reyes went down the steps to stand with his brothers and friends.

Keith reminded, "Frankie is John's and Stephen's son. Drew and Corey have kids too, Geoff and Lenny. They're up in the PA booth with their dads right now."

Derrick grinned, "The line-up of boys in front of the stage have stolen our hearts. They're our sons and we're really very proud of them."

Prez added, "Ask the old timers, we're in here almost every day. We're done for now though, so all you newbies, please stick around so we can get you clothes and miscellaneous accessories. The rest of you are free to go have a good time. We'll catch up with y'all before dinner time." Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike walked down the stairs to the auditorium floor. The majority of the kids started to shuffle out of their seats.

Tapping his comm-badge, Drew told Keith, "Hey bro, two of the Anaheim dudes are with us. We'll get the place powered down then catch up with you in the store."

Standing before the rescued kids, Prez, Keith, Mike, Derrick, Kaleo and Tory couldn't help smiling. Prez tapped his comm-badge and called, "Troy, I hate to interrupt you, but we're almost ready to take the new kids to the store."

Giggling such that his blush could actually be heard over the comm-badge, Troy replied, "Let us jump in the shower real quick. We'll meet you there in five minutes, Prez. Troy out."

One of the girls raised her hand. Keith smiled, "This is your home, Lillian. You don't need to raise your hand. Just call out one of our names, okay?"

Eight-year-old Lillian Fitts, rescued from San Diego, nodded and meekly wondered, "Why are you guys smiling at us?"

Keith chuckled, "Because we're so glad to see you here."

Mike said, "So all you guys understand, the rescues last night were much more difficult than we expected. All you guys being here makes the effort worthwhile."

Derrick added, "During the next few days, more California kids will be showing up. They need more medical attention first though."

Prez asked, "What do you think of your new home?"

The first to answer was Corbin Sancho, a fifteen-year-old from Los Angeles. "It's kewl. We got pools, basketball courts and so much stuff, I don't think we'll ever get bored around here."

Fourteen-year-old Mike Busse, rescued from San Diego, enthusiastically said, "The dorms are real nice. Two per room, huh?"

Kaleo answered, "Whatever you feel comfortable with. We have some younger kids that chose to have four to a room, two to a bed or sharing bunk beds."

Going over to his newly adopted son, seven-year-old Randy Beale, Mike smiled, "Just because you move into the dorm doesn't mean you'll stay there. We picked up Randy and a few others Sunday night." Derrick and Mike prompted Randy to tell the newbies where he's slept.

Blushing and nodding, Randy giggled, "I slept in the nest that night and Monday. Tuesday night I moved into the dorm. Yesterday, I was adopted and back in the nest, with my bros and dads."

Keith asked, "Did Drew show you our basement?" Heads shook, so Keith said, "We know you guys must feel a little weird being in a new place with so many new people. Any of you that want to can sleep in our basement nest. Our friends in Wales call it a puppy pile, where all you guys can feel comfy for as long as you need."

"It's a great way to get to know people," Tory interjected. "Once you've got friends, everything gets easier."

Prez said, "Our basement is fully furnished. It's not like most basements; it's got paneled walls and carpeting. It's warm and very comfortable. The choice is yours. If you'd like to join the nest tonight, then tell one of us. If you'd rather choose a dorm room and bunk with your friends, that's kewl too."

"We had over a hundred down there Saturday night," Mike said. "We can easily fit all of you."

Thirteen-year-old Calvin Heres' voice cracked mid-question. "Girls and boys together?" The Rimmers nodded and Calvin grunted, "Nuh-uh, no way." Only a few of the older boys and girls softly sniggered.

Derrick chuckled, "That's kewl, bro. The dorms are co-ed, boys downstairs and girls upstairs."

The stage and audience lights began turning off. Prez quickly said, "Let's finish this chat in our store. Everyone stand-up and get ready for transport." Once all the kids were standing, Prez tapped his sub-vocal, saying, "Alden, get a fix on the kids and transport us all to the front of our basement store."

Alden giggled, "As you wish, Prez." As soon as he had finished speaking, everyone was standing in the basement store. Some of the kids looked around uncertainly, but Bonnie and Janice, two of the youngest girls from Anaheim, wobbled unsteadily.

Prez and Keith hurried to them, making sure they were alright before letting go of them.

Just as Bonnie and Janice felt stable again, Drew, Corey, Jake, Terry, Geoff and Lenny transported into the store. Derrick explained,

"This is just like any other department store. Everything is free, so don't be shy. Anyone that needs help choosing sizes, let one of us know. You'll all need at least a week's worth of clothes."

Drew quickly emphasized, "A week's worth is not what those butt-heads at the orphanage gave you guys. There are seven days in a week, so a minimum of seven pair of boxers or underpants and seven pair of socks. A change of clothes for every day is normal."

Corey nodded, "Everybody gets a pair of sandals and a pair of sneakers. Basically, concentrate on everyday clothes. Here in the ROH, that means T-shirts, shorts, boardies, swimwear, light blouses for you girls. Get jeans, sport shirts and jackets or ponchos too, cos the rainy season here can start in late November."

Prez nodded and instructed, "Big guys and gals, help the little tikes. And we'll help whoever needs it, whenever needed."

Richie gushed, "We can help too!" then took a shocked Marvin Perkins by the hand and pulled him to the shopping carts.

Prez cracked up laughing at his boy. Keith smiled, "Everybody follow Richie." The Rimmers' sons split and found small groups in their own age bracket to help. Soon, all seventy-two newbies had shopping carts. Troy and Sean transported into the store while kids were grabbing carts and separating down the girls' side or boys' side of the store. For the next two and half hours, the kids were helped through the store. The Rimmers' adopted kids did a lot of the work with the other boys. Prez, Keith, Mike, Derrick, Kaleo and Tory looked after the boys to make sure correct sizes were chosen. Drew, Corey, Troy, Sean and Reyes looked after the girls for the same purpose. Kids were measured for correct sizes and many went into the dressing rooms to try on their new clothes.

Drew stepped aside briefly, only to chat with Doc Howard. He informed the doctor that some of the girls hadn't been taught the first thing about biology or their bodies. Doc Howard assured him that the girls were now aware, but she could join them if Drew felt it was necessary. Before the girls got to their toiletries department, Drew had Doc Howard transport to the store, saving him from repetitive, infinite embarrassment.

Kaleo and Tory had similar discussions with the boys, informing them that condoms and lube were available for anyone that wanted them. Naturally, many of the older orphanage boys were very embarrassed. Prez, Keith, Kaleo and Tory assured them that there was nothing to be embarrassed or shy about. A detailed and humorous discussion about dicks, masturbation, puberty and sex relaxed many of the teen and tween boys. The Rimmers also reminded them that they would be showering at the dormitory mob showers with other naked boys, and on occasion, even the Core Rimmers and their sons used the mob showers. The boys were told that nudity in the R.O.H was common and everyone could feel comfortable at the pools with or without their boardies on.

* * * * *

While the Core Rimmers and their sons were busy in the store helping the newbies, the CIC kitchen phone rang. Lifting the handset in the kitchen, Charles Plungis answered; "Hello?"

The male voice on the other end of the line said, "Hi Charles. How's your new job with the Clan?"

Recognizing the voice of his old boss, Roy Combs, the assistant manager of the Halekulani Resort, Charles smiled, "It's been very pleasant, Roy. You wouldn't believe how nice it is to work for these people. The best part is the kids actually appreciate every morsel of food prepared. There hasn't been a single complaint from anyone all week. The kids had a leftovers food fight after dinner last night, but even that was understandable, given the histories of some of these kids."

Roy smirked, "I can understand, better than you might imagine."

Charles asked, "Are they still trying to cut corners there?"

"Of course," Roy sighed, and then seriously said, "The reason for my call is actually two-fold, Charles."

"I'll try to help any way I can," Charles responded.

Roy explained, "Last Friday, a boy arrived with his manager. The boy has been here all week, but we haven't seen or heard from the manager since Friday. Of course, we needed to have him sign the credit card approvals for their continued stay with us..."

"But no man, no signature, and the boy has been left there without supervision all this time," Charles finished.

"Exactly," Roy grumbled, "To make matters worse, the boy was orphaned and had been living in Erie, Pennsylvania, with his aunt prior to the trip here. We've been unable to reach the aunt for three days. Today, the number is disconnected."

Concluding where this topic was heading, Charles confirmed, "So we have an abandoned boy with no other living adult relatives to care for him?"

"Yes," Roy answered.

Charles sighed then said, "I'll contact someone from the Pacific Rim Division command team as soon as we hang up. Expect a small group arriving at your location within the half-hour."

"That would be a relief," Roy smiled.

"It's not a problem," Charles grinned, "that's what we're here for." After a brief pause, he asked, "What was the other purpose for your call?"

Since the boy was sitting in the office with him, Roy nervously chuckled, "Get me the hell out of here." Both men began laughing. Roy offered, "You know me, Charles. As assistant manager here, I have the contacts to arrange for any electrical or plumbing maintenance, appliance or furniture acquisition, or anything Clan Short might need."

Charles nodded and grinned, "The hiring process here is more involved than most places. You'll be telepathically scanned, Roy."

"I have nothing to hide and wouldn't anyway," Roy reminded. "I have a wife and two young sons."

"I'm sure you'll pass the test with flying colors," Charles grinned. "I did feel it necessary to tell you about the hiring process though."

"Understood," Roy agreed.

"Okay," Charles began, "I'll contact our Clan leaders to get someone there to pick up the boy this afternoon. What's the boy's name?"

"Ralphie Bonham," Roy answered.

Jotting down the name on a pad of paper, Charles nodded, "The boys will ask for you by name and say it's regarding Ralphie."

"That's fine," Roy said.

Charles asked, "When you get a day off, or can disappear for about three hours, come to Ewa Beach for your interviews and telepathic scan." His voice dripping with sarcasm, Charles evilly smirked, "Let's get you out of the world's most prestigious resort and here, helping kids quickly."

Roy asked, "If tomorrow around noon is agreeable, I'll see you then?"

"That would be fine," Charles smiled. "I'll see you tomorrow."

"Thanks so much," Roy softly cheered.

"Anytime," Charles said. "Expect Clan representatives there within the next half-hour."

Wondering how the boys could get to Honolulu so quickly, but not wanting to delay things or hold Charles on the phone any longer, Roy said, "Thanks again. Goodbye."

"Goodbye," Charles replied, and then hung up the phone. Charles called, "Alden?"

"It took you twenty-eight milliseconds, Charles," Alden giggled. "What took you so long?"

"I had to breathe," Charles chuckled.

"Organic life forms," Alden teased, and then asked, "Which Core Rimmer would you like to speak with?"

"I'll defer to who you see is most available," Charles smiled.

Alden answered, "Mike Gibbons is available. Stand by, please."

In the basement store, Mike's comm-badge chirped. He tapped it and identified himself. Alden giggled, "I have Charles in the kitchen needing a Core Rimmer, Scooby Daddy."

Surprised that Charles would need assistance, Mike smirked, "You're on my list, Alden, right behind your daddy. Go ahead and connect Charles."

"I can't connect him; he ain't got a plug! I can initiate a conversation between you though," Alden giggled.

"Wise ass," Mike softly muttered.

In the kitchen, Alden called, "Charles, Mike is available now. Go ahead."

Charles said to the ceiling, "Mike, I got a call from my old boss. They have a boy there that's been unsupervised for a week. There's no family to care for him."

"Gotchya, Charles," Mike replied. "The thing is, we've got seventy-two newbies here, getting clothes and stuff. Let me see if John Hundser is available and I'll get right back to you."

Charles nodded, "Thanks, Mike. I'll be waiting."

"John or I will be right back with ya in a minute or two," Mike said. He tapped his comm-badge and called, "Mike to John."

Already aware of what was going on, John telepathically sent, 'I'm on it already, bro. This would be a great opportunity for Cesar's and Felipe's training. I'll talk to Charles and go with the twins to get the kid.'

Mike only thought of three little guys going off base and said,

"I'll send the Scooby Gang with you too."

"Lucky's gonna be very disappointed," John giggled.

"Take Lucky too then," Mike chuckled, not wanting to deal with the wrath of a four-hundred-pound security gorilla.

"Sweet!" John chirped.

Simultaneously, Mike called Spike to gather his brother and sisters, while John spoke with Charles to get the name of his boss, the boy they were picking up and the location. Mike made sure to tell Spike to listen to John's instructions, but to insure John, Cesar and Felipe were safe at all times.

Concentrating hard, because he was at the pool, a fair distance from the FYS building, Stephen telepathically asked John, 'Do... You... Need... Me... To... Come... Along, Hon?'

'Whoa!' John laughed, 'You're coming in loud and clear, baby.'

Stephen giggled, 'Sorry.'

John instructed, 'This will be a quick and easy extraction. Stay at the pool with the others, sexy. You're the only Core Rimmer available for the kids not in the store. Is that kewl?'

'Yeah, I was just checking,' Stephen replied, and then warmly added, 'I need you, John.'

'I need you too, baby,' John smiled. 'We'll be gone and back real fast. Meet me in the store later, okay?'

'Kewl,' Stephen giggled. 'Be careful. See ya later.'

Chapter 9B

Halekulani Resort, Waikiki Beach, Oahu

Thursday, November 4, 2004, 02:20 PM HTZ

Within five minutes, John and the twins were at the Halekulani Hotel lobby. Standing in front of John and the twins were the Scoobies, wearing their new shiny patent leather belts and Derbies, complete with pearloid guitar pick adornments, and each with holstered Smith and Wesson nine millimeter semi-automatic nickle-plated pistols. Behind all of them stood Lucky, wearing a black business suit with a white shirt and a blood red tie, dark mirrored sunglasses and holding his MP5-AX rifle. One woman in the lobby screamed then fainted. A nearby gentleman caught the woman before she hit the floor, and then laid her on a nearby sofa. Remarkably, the lobby became as quiet as a Catholic church during a funeral.

Waving his massive arm, Lucky told everyone present, "Go on with your business. There's nothing here to see."

Confidently, John strode up to the lobby counter, that he could barely see over, and then introduced himself and the twins to the quivering young man behind the counter. Unable to dismiss the bizarre thoughts of the frightened receptionist or the hotel patrons that were scurrying out the doors and into the elevators, John giggled, "We're here to see Mister Roy Combs, please?"

The young man made an odd guttural sound and nodded then stumbled and hurried to the door marked 'Assistant Manager'. He knocked and rapidly entered the office. What John, the twins, the Scoobies and Lucky didn't see was the twenty-something year old man lose control of his bladder and drop to his knees on the floor in tears.

In the lobby, a camera flashed several times. Taking photos of this rather unusual event was a staff photographer for Associated Press. Another seated gentlemen reading the Wall Street Journal looked up and saw what all the others had already seen. He casually folded his newspaper, stood and walked to the men's room.

After helping the lobby receptionist to the sofa in his office, Roy Combs stepped out of the room. He couldn't see the Scoobies or the twins beyond the counter, but saw John and Lucky. Blinking fast, Roy introduced himself and then asked, "Are you from Clan Short Pacific Rim Division?"

John nodded and smiled, "Yes Sir. We're here to meet and assist Ralphie Bonham."

Shaking off the shock, Roy realized that the normally busy lobby area was devoid of any resort patrons. He quickly said, "Please come with me to my office." The entourage walked around the counter. Now seeing the four armed and smartly dressed ferret-human hybrids and younger twins, Roy muttered, "Charles had told me things, but I never guessed..."

Passing by the man, John giggled, "There's no reason to kill or hurt Charles, Sir. He sees gorillas every day and wouldn't remember that we would come with security." John then introduced himself, Cesar, Felipe, Spike, Xander, Willow, Faith and Lucky.

Entering the office with the others, Willow excitedly bounced and cheered, "Yous have a very shiny hotel."

"Weez especially like the shiny fountain in the center of the room," Faith smiled.

Spike nodded approval, "Weez can see you have your priorities set and are a true Shiny Lover."

Xander reached into his waist pouch and pulled out a spark plug, and then clipped it to Roy's suit jacket, saying, "A gift for you."

John smiled at Roy and sent, 'Just say, thank you.'

Stunned again from his first ever telepathic communication, Roy slowly nodded and thanked the Scooby Gang.

Since they were still in their Clan Short Telepath training mode, Cesar and Felipe immediately went to the chair before Roy's desk, where Ralphie Bonham was sitting, drinking in the madness he was witnessing and loving every moment.

Ralphie casually chatted with the six-year-old twins. John spoke with Roy Combs. The young man from the lobby that was sitting on the sofa in damp slacks decided it was time to leave, and perhaps find a new job elsewhere. He hurried past Lucky, out of the office and to his car. Only Ralphie seemed to notice his speedy departure and helplessly giggled, "I don't know why he was so scared. None of you guys seem mean." He pointed at Lucky, asking and then learning the gorilla's name from Cesar.

Although John was still speaking with Mister Combs, arranging to pay for the room and food bill Ralphie had accrued, Cesar sent, 'Ralphie arrived here Friday, with his manager, John.'

Felipe added, 'He was 'upposed to do modeling and get pictures taken.'

'It might just be us,' Cesar offered, 'from the orphanages and fosters, but why would he come here, to the ROH, for modeling?'

John telepathically replied, 'It's a bit more than coincidental that the manager disappeared Friday while Joel was taking down the child-sex ring, huh?' John had learned that Roy Combs was hoping to be hired at CSPRD headquarters. He informed the man that he could expedite the telepathic scans at that very moment, if he were willing. Roy agreed and sat in his chair, across from Ralphie, while John performed a deep scan, seeing images and hearing conversations the man had had with his wife or sons. Roy Combs was a kind and decent man, so John smiled, "Hand in your resignation today, Mister Combs. We could use your skills. If you could, please stop by the Ewa Beach base on the way home tonight. Please contact your parents and in-laws too. Your father in-law is a mechanic and your dad is an electrician. We could use both sets of skills."

Shocked at the offer of employment from a ten-year-old boy, Roy asked, "What would my compensation be?" He quickly explained, "I do have a mortgage and a family..."

"I know already, Sir," John grinned. "How 'bout we provide you a place to live, like a three-bedroom townhome, in addition to ten percent more than what you're earning now? When you come by tomorrow for your other interview, ask to see one of the townhouses and condos. That will get all your questions answered."

Pleased and satisfied, Roy thanked John and assured he would keep his lunch time appointment.

John focused on Ralphie and warmly greeted him, doing the usual Rimmer introductory chat while pulling an image of the boy's manager from the boy's mind. He telepathically told the twins that he was making the manager's image and name known to Nathan Hayes, who would pass it on to Daileass, so they could discover if Ralphie's manager was legitimate or another child-porn scumbag that had already been prosecuted.

With more than the necessary business complete, John smiled, "How about we transport back to base from here, Mister Combs?"

"Thank you," Roy Combs chuckled, "our guests will be talking about this afternoon for the remainder of their stays."

"We have that effect," John laughed, recalling all the fun of the prior Saturday at Anahola Bay.

Pointing at a suitcase near the desk, Cesar giggled, "Is that yours, Ralphie?"

"Yup," Ralphie nodded.

Felipe told John, "He's got undies, sneakers, one pair of jeans, ten T-shirts and twelve Speedo's, bro." Hearing the precise contents of his suitcase rattled off, Ralphie's eyebrows rose.

John nodded, "Kewl. We'll transport to the store and get you plenty of new clothes, Ralphie."

Nodding and hopping off the chair, Ralphie grabbed his suitcase, enthusiastically giggling, "I've always wanted to try Starfleet style transportation."

John shared, "This is even faster than Starfleet transport. That takes a couple o' seconds; this will be like a blink and we're someplace else. Ya ready, dude?" Giggling happily, Ralphie rapidly nodded. The Scoobies, the twins, Lucky and Ralphie gathered around John. Tapping his sub-vocal, John said, "Nine and a suitcase to transport directly to our store, Alden."

Alden replied, "Gotcha all locked, Soul Rimmer."

Less than half a second later, all nine were in the CIC basement store. "Freakin' awesome!" Ralphie loudly laughed. The Scooby Gang scampered away to find their Shiny Daddies and report back to them.

John told the twins, "You guys were great, all afternoon. We've got one more interview scheduled. Jerry Burk's foster parents will be here between four and five this afternoon. I'll call you to join me then. I think another half day of training, just to make your mom happy, and I'll turn you loose to do the job without my supervision." Both six-year-olds hugged John. Hugging them back, John suggested, "While I introduce Ralphie to everyone, take off and go play at the pool, bros."

The twins giggled their thanks then tapped their new comm-badges, ordering Alden to transport them out of the store and to the pools.

John dismissed Lucky, wondering, "When you're not watching my back or the grounds, what do you do for fun?"

Lucky chuckled, "You have no idea how much fun we have patrolling the perimeter, Johnny-boy. Imagine me, in a tree about fifteen feet up. An older high school kid or bunch of 'em stops and peers into the fence, then I drop out of the tree, armed and growling."

John howled laughing, "Bowel control literally goes down the tubes?"

Lucky shrugged, "They never stick around long enough for me to smell anything." John and Ralphie cracked up. Lucky grinned, "Not to mention free botany lessons from the gardeners," and then had Alden transport him out of the store, back to his patrol station.

Still giggling, John began walking toward Prez and Keith to introduce Ralphie. Telepathically, John explained to Ralphie that he already knew everything that Cesar and Felipe had learned. Once he was introduced around, Ralphie could tell his story his way to whomever he chose.

Ralphie nodded and smiled, "I have no problem being here at all. After spending about an hour in that manager guy's office, bored silly, this is already way more fun than all my favorite TV shows combined."

Knowing that Ralphie said precisely what he was thinking, John nodded and grinned, "I'll be honest and say I could never do what you do for a living. I'm married to a great boy, have a great son, and couldn't be a Speedo or underwear model, even though us guys spend half of every day naked around the pools. I guess it's one thing to be naked around family and friends, but photos that everyone, everywhere sees is past my limit."

Ralphie checked, "Is it really that kewl here?"

John gushed, "Dude, I love my brothers and friends. I always thought my life was pretty good almost all the time. Since we became Clan on Saturday, it's really been even better. We had a rough time last night with a rescue operation, but even that can't smudge six great days."

Noticing the girls in the store, Ralphie asked, "Everybody here gets naked?"

"Those that are comfortable do, which means most of the dudes. I'd say half the younger girls don't have too much of a problem being naked. The teenage boys cover up if they feel stiffies poppin'. The teenage girls almost always have shorts on, and usually cover up their titties. My best friend Lindsay has had some chats with the girls."

"So your gay?" Ralphie softly queried.

John nodded and giggled, "Yup. Stephen is special in so many ways. If he was a she named Stephanie, I'd probably still have fallen for him."

"Her," Ralphie giggled.

Since gender didn't matter, John remained focused on Ralphie and asked, "Are you gay too?"

"I'm pretty sure, yeah," Ralphie answered without any blush; "just never had a real close friend where I was comfy enough to say it before. I sure wouldn't have told my aunt."

"It's kewl, bro," John assured. "Our families don't have any problem with gays or lesbians, and none of us here do either. You can be whatever ya want here and not worry." A quick glance at Ralphie told John that his newest brother had typical worries about being gay. "Don't worry about sex stuff, bro," John instructed. "What's most important are the feelings two people have for each other. Having someone to hold and talk with is the best part and takes up most of every day anyway. Sex is a fun part of it, but the friendship is like no other."

Stopping well shy of Prez and Keith, John smiled and told Ralphie, "The secret is caring and love, dude. Care for someone and they'll care for you more, just to return the favor. Love someone and they'll love you too. The caring and love keep growing with each pass back and forth. It's amazing and limitless, so you can start caring and loving more people. The more you share the more you'll get and the more you'll give. It's so simple, like a carousel; round and round it goes."

Gesturing ahead, in the boys sportswear department, John smiled, "Here's Prez and Keith." Leading Ralphie to his brothers, John introduced the newest arrival. To all the Core Rimmers, John telepathically added, 'Ralphie's very kawl. Even though he's a model and can act up a storm, he's really enthusiastic and happy to be here.'

Noting the suitcase Ralphie was carrying, Prez shook hands with Ralphie, confirming, "Since John brought you here, I'm guessing you need clothes?"

Shaking hands with Keith, Ralphie answered Prez. "Yeah. Besides what I'm wearing, I've got plenty of Speedos and T-shirts, some briefs, a pair of sneakers, and one pair of jeans." John briefly scowled, obviously feeling something, so he hurried off, only telepathically telling his brothers that a newbie kid nearby needed some assistance.

Prez nodded, "Kawl, Ralphie. We'll return to the front of the store where there's undies. We make sure everyone has at least a week's worth of the basics. If your sneakers and sandals are more than a few months old, you can choose a new pair of those too."

Keith, Prez and Ralphie began the walk to the front of the store. Ralphie said, "Cesar told me you two were this Clan division's leaders."

Keith nodded, "Prez is the leader and I'm second in command."

Ralphie smiled, "If you have something else you need to do, I'm kawl, dudes. Being a model, I can get around this store, no problem."

Keith chuckled. Prez smiled, "That's very kawl, but for right now, we'd like to know more about you. John's told us virtually nothing. You came here to model and your manager went missing last Friday, soon after you arrived. Was your manager your legal guardian?"

Shaking his head, Ralphie answered, "No, but in lots of ways he might as well have been." He sighed then shared, "My parents died. My dad passed about four years ago from a stroke. Then my mom was diagnosed with breast cancer. After the lump was removed, she started the radiation and chemo. It was too much for her and she died. I was sent to live with my aunt and uncle, on my mom's side. Uncle Rob was my mom's brother. He died of a heart attack last year. Aunt Eve started seeing this guy a few months ago. I always got the impression he'd rather I wasn't around. Since she couldn't be contacted, I'll bet she split to be with him."

"That's rough, dude," Keith softly said.

Ralphie shrugged, "Mom and dad were, yeah. I barely pulled myself together and Uncle Rob was gone too."

At the front of the store, Keith pulled a cart out for Ralphie. Taking the cart from Keith, Ralphie slid his suitcase onto the rack underneath, and then rolled it to the underwear. Prez wondered, "So, did your aunt get you into modeling?"

"Nope," Ralphie smiled, "Mom and dad had me modeling before I started school. Toddler clothes for stores or manufacturers. I still do it because it's fun and it's big bucks. Lots o' times, I got to keep the clothes I modeled too. It's like a connection with my folks to me. If I had to keep doing that, it wouldn't bother me at all."

Keith said, "It's kewl that you enjoy it, Ralphie, but how would you feel if you didn't have to do modeling work any more?"

After humming thoughtfully while grabbing a few packages of briefs, Ralphie said, "Ya know, I'm not too sure. One of the bad parts of modeling has been home schooling with tutors. My friends have always been other models, that I rarely got to see or talk to, unless we happened to be on a job together again. That sucked. The connection to mom, dad, and the money and clothes though kind o' made it all worth while."

Prez said, "Here, all the kids are expected to be kids first and foremost. School is scheduled to start Monday morning. We want all you guys and gals to have the best possible opportunities in the future, so school is the second most important thing we expect from you."

"My grades are good," Ralphie said. "I'm twelve, but at a seventh or eighth grade level in everything." Keith gestured to the pajamas. Scrunching his face and shaking his head, Ralphie easily admitted, "Underwear or naked, thanks." He moved on and grabbed some socks, explaining, "Even at home in Erie, PA, I couldn't stand being in PJs," and then quickly went to the footwear, adding, "I'd rather have flannel sheets, a blanket and a comforter. That way there were no Pjs to get all twisted and try to suffocate me."

"All the kids have ID cards and pre-paid credit cards for their allowances," Keith told Ralphie. "We'll probably have them for you and all these other newbies in a few days." He and Prez then suggested various on-base odd jobs Ralphie might be interested in, so he could earn extra money.

Sitting down to try on a pair of Nike sneakers, Ralphie was obviously upset, causing Prez and Keith to ask what was wrong. Concentrating on lacing the sneakers, Ralphie grumbled, "I'll bet my aunt emptied my savings account. That's about twenty-five thousand bucks and seven years of work, shot to hell. The fucking bitch."

Receiving a few words from John caused Prez and Keith to smile. Prez told Ralphie, "Your aunt abandoned you, Ralphie. We'll find her and she'll be arrested for being bitchy above and beyond the call. Maybe we can recover your savings, even though you won't need it here, it's yours and can accrue interest in a bank."

"Sweetness!" Ralphie giggled. "Even if she spent the money and it's gone... thanks, guys, that almost makes my day."

Prez and Keith chorused, "Almost?"

With one sneaker on and the other laced, Ralphie paused, looked up and giggled, "I know about Clan Short. Don't think for a second I'm not happy to be here, cos I really am. Yeah, my life is changing and there's some screwed up stuff I'll deal with, but each and every photo shoot was screwed up someway or another. I've had people tell me that my hair was too long, when they're takin' pictures of underwear and not even showing my face. Suddenly, I've got a shitty, spur of the moment haircut to deal with too. This last week was kind o' fucked up, but I wasn't starving or anything, just a little worried about what was happening. If I had to be abandoned, where better than in Honolulu, where I could swim in a pool, or at the beach, watch TV, do whatever I wanted, whenever I wanted, and best of all, nothing was asked of me." Giggling his ass off, Ralphie put the other sneaker on and tied it. When finished, he loudly laughed, "Poor, poor me, abandoned in the Republic of Hawaii and rescued by Clan Short. No more work and surrounded by other kids like me to make real friends for the first time ever. I'd cry if I could stop laughing!"

The other seventy-two newbie Rimmers in the store heard Ralphie's declarations. Girls and boys and Core Rimmers alike began giggling and laughing.

Julio and Jesse had Daileass transport them to where Keith and Prez were. They arrived in the basement store only a few meters away and went to their Clan brothers. Julio said, "We're about to head home guys."

Jesse softly offered, "Thanks for a great time." Considering the California orphanage operations the Des Moines Division helped with, Prez and Keith smiled at each other. All four boys softly chortled. Jesse giggled, "Seriously, other than a few hours in Cali last night, this has been a great little vacation."

Closest to Jesse, Prez offered his hand to shake and smiled, "It's been awesome meeting and getting to work with you, dudes."

Knocking knuckles with Julio, Keith chuckled, "After this last day, our two divisions have gotten really close. I know John and Robin had a good time, and our boys have become friends with some of your little guys."

Noticing Ralphie smiling at Jesse, like he'd been reacquainted with a long lost friend, Prez introduced the newest Rimmer to Julio and Jesse.

Standing and shaking hands with Jesse, Ralphie gushed, "Are you a model?"

Intensely blushing, Jesse shook his head and meekly replied, "No."

"You could be a great model and make big bucks, if you wanted," Ralphie pleasantly assured. Wide-eyed, Julio watched his partner's face almost turn Klingon purple and cracked up. Knowing that Jesse was very reserved almost all the time, Keith and Prez chuckled. Ralphie giggled and told his new leaders, "Seriously! Picture Jess in a suit and tie, or down to his drawers, or in Speedos. He'd be the next big teen model in days."

It was Julio's turn to blush, as the suggested images ran through his head. "You've got a point," he squeaked as he tried to hide his body's response to the thoughts.

Jesse smiled, "Thank you. I don't know if I'd really be as good as you think, but I think we should maybe get together some time and you can teach me some stuff. I like modeling for Julio, so it won't be wasted."

Quickly, Prez shook hands and said goodbye to Julio. Keith said goodbye to Jesse with a hug, so he could tease his new friend and Clan brother. Keith whispered in Jesse's ear, "Get Julio alone and your butt in Speedos as soon as you get home." Blushing and nodding, Jesse gave Keith a quick peck on the cheek then stepped back.

Waving, Jesse only moved his mouth and Julio called for Daileass to transport them home. They disappeared and Ralphie began walking around in his new Nikes, away from where Keith and Prez were standing and grinning at each other. They both found Ralphie's personality and attitude amazing and refreshing, because he was a different breed of kid from the majority of the others.

Rapidly spinning around to face Prez and Keith, the boy nodded, "Yup. These are kewl," and went back to the chair to take his Nikes off. Since Ralphie didn't need much assistance, Prez excused himself to help some other nearby kids. Keith told Ralphie about the basement nest and the dorms. Ralphie quickly decided to bunk at the dorm.

In Prez's sub-vocal, Alden giggled, "Head Rimmer?"

"What's up, Alden?"

"Several very remarkable things," Alden giggled. "First let me introduce my little brother, Kerry."

A new voice said, "Hello, Prez. I'm the AI at Des Moines."

Pleasantly, Prez said, "It's good to hear your voice, Kerry."

Kerry giggled, "I'm connecting a call from Julio for you, Prez."

Prez chuckled, "He just left and he's calling already?" Scowling, Keith turned to his hubby and tilted his head.

"Yes, Jesse and I wanted to invite you to a threesome." Julio deadpanned. "Look at your PADD, dude."

Prez joked, "Can we make it a foursome? I happen to know things work really well that way." With Keith giggling and returning his attention to Ralphie, Prez called, "Alden, get me my PADD, dude." He held his hand out and a second later Prez's PADD appeared. He began reading the downloaded information from Des Moines. Simultaneously, John was receiving information from Johnny in Des Moines and passing it along to Prez. Reading about a boy named Ronnie McCullough, from Saint Joseph, Michigan, and hearing John's remarks, Prez scrolled forward. Seeing the photo of Ronnie and feeling tingles run up his spine, Prez shouted, "You've got to be shitting me!"

Julio flatly stated, "Dude, I've got a hot boyfriend in purple Speedos hanging on me. Do you really think I'd be taking the time to bug you if this wasn't real?"

Gazing at Ralphie and then back to Keith, Prez thought a moment, then softly told Julio, "We've obviously gotta get these two together. I'll need to chat with Ralphie and let him know, but let's consider when, where and how we're allowing them to meet, so they're not as shocked as we are."

"First we need to get him... and his little brother," Julio stated.

"Colin's assembling a hunting party, anyone there interested in joining?"

Prez explained, "Ya know, I'd really love to go, but with seventy-three newbies here, I should stay. Let me get Nathan, Kaleo and Tory. Alden, notify Nathan to get to Des Moines Command Center ASAP."

Alden confirmed the order. Prez walked away from Keith and Ralphie on a quest to find Kaleo and Tory. Seeing them with Sean and Troy, helping kids check out and load suitcases, Prez waved them over.

Drew saw Kaleo and Tory go to Prez. He and Corey went to the checkout counters and took over helping the newbies.

Pulling Kaleo and Tory close, Prez whispered, "Ya see Keith with the young blond boy?" When they nodded, Prez softly shared, "That's Ralphie Bonham, a boy John just brought here. Julio's on my sub-vocal, and just shared that Ralphie has a twin brother in Michigan, named Ronnie McCullough. I want you two to go to Des Moines and get to know Ronnie. John's tuned in to all of us, so whatever you learn, we'll all know about too."

Kaleo confirmed, "You want us to go right now?"

Prez nodded, "Colin and the Dutchmen are running the show. Nathan will be there with you too. Call your security to cover your cute butts and get going. We'll try to break this news to Ralphie."

Tory nodded and smiled, "I can't wait to see the Dutchmen in action."

Kaleo glanced around, looking for John. Levitating so he could easily be seen, John flashed a thumbs-up gesture, assuring Kaleo and Tory, 'I'll hear and see everything you two do and share it with the team, bros. Concentrate on Ronnie, be safe and I'll take care of the rest.'

Tory called for his and Kaleo's security, asking them to bring two additional hand phasers. Kaleo had Alden transport them all to the Des Moines Division Command Center.

Prez called, "Julio? Kaleo, Tory and Nathan Hayes will be there momentarily. They'll focus on Ronnie while the Dutchmen handle the gritty details. Is that kewl?"

"Sure; but you really shouldn't be thinking about handling Keith like that with the telepaths' links active. You're making Johnny blush!" Julio teased.

Blushing and starting to sweat, Prez stammered nonsensically. John broadcast, 'It was the 'gritty details' that got ya, bro. Your mind's tangents are showing!' Scattered around the store, Core Rimmers began evilly chuckling.

Prez giggled, "Umm... yeah! Julio, do you need anything else from us?"

"Yeah, save some of those cherries for dinner," Julio giggled. "Go take some private time bro, you deserve it."

Prez giggled, "Out and in and out!"

"Poor Keith, only quickies!" Julio giggled as he cut the connection.

Feeling something wicked was going on, Keith sneaked up behind Prez and tickled his ribs. Laughing his ass off, Prez spun around, grabbed Keith before he could get away and kissed him hard.

In a mere ten minutes in the store, Ralphie was catching up with the other seventy-two newbies. Seeing Prez and Keith kissing, Ralphie's eyebrows rose, and without a second's thought, he continued on his shopping excursion to pick up a belt, a few more pairs of jeans, some sport shirts and a canvas wallet.

Finished sharing kisses of various intensity, Keith returned to Ralphie's orientation, explaining, "The dorm mob showers have liquid soap, bro. There's even hypo-allergenic soaps, marked with a capital 'H', for folks that can't deal with regular soaps."

Prez added, "Shampoos, deodorants, toothpaste and toothbrushes are more personal choices. Kaleo's got lube and condoms. When you want them, just let him know."

Nodding, Ralphie wondered, "Who is Kaleo?"

"Our communications officer," Keith replied. "He's out on another rescue mission right now. One of us will introduce you to him as soon as he returns."

"Kewl," Ralphie smiled, and then admitted, "I know what rubbers are, but what's the lube for?"

Having just gone through this, Keith and Prez grinned at each other. Prez said, "Lube has two purposes. The first, for younger pre-pubescent dudes like you, is for masturbation." Ralphie loudly laughed, but again didn't blush. Prez chuckled, "The second purpose is for on the condom, to make insertion much more comfortable, for you and your partner."

At last, Ralphie blushed and giggled, "I'm twelve, guys. I won't be worrying about inserting my dick into more than my fist for a while, I think."

Keith shrugged and chuckled, "Prez and I were twelve when we fell in love. Anything can happen with the right partner."

Rapidly approaching, with Stephen right behind, John laughed at his brothers, "You got Ralphie to blush, you horn-dogs!" He then faced Ralphie, asking, "How old do you think I am?"

Ralphie shrugged, "About my age," and then made the connection and gasped, "You're married?"

Stephen went into a giggling fit. John turned to his husband, planted a whopper of a kiss, and then introduced Stephen to Ralphie. John shared his age and then Stephen's age with Ralphie. While Ralphie gathered board shorts, Prez, Keith, John and Stephen went through the whole state of affairs; that all the Core Rimmers were considered adults, officers in Starfleet and had gotten married Tuesday evening.

Other newbies that had completed their shopping quickly were being transported out via Alden at Mike's and Derrick's commands, so they could hang by the pools or do whatever they liked with other Rimmer kids. A little at a time, the largest mass of kids that had ever been in the basement store at one time thinned out.

John and Stephen took over helping Ralphie. Prez and Keith went to the checkout counters to relieve Drew and Corey, who then checked around and helped other newbies. It seemed everyone on the boy's side of the store was gravitating toward Ralphie. Boys that only hours earlier were shy and quiet were warming up to their new environment. Not doing anything special beyond being friendly and meeting the other new boys, Ralphie joked around about the twists of fate that brought him to Ewa Beach. Clothing selections that had been progressing rather quickly slowed considerably as Ralphie used his modeling knowledge to help other boys select items that matched skin tone, hair and eye colors.

All the Core Rimmers were receiving information from Kaleo, Tory and Nathan via John's mind dumps. It suddenly dawned on Prez that he had never officially made Nathan a Core Rimmer, so he told Alden to log the decision. John shared the information with Nathan. Alden shared the decision with Lieutenant Vorik, so that Nathan would also have security assigned.

John began receiving information about the operation in progress to rescue Ralphie's brother. Colin, the Dutchmen and all ground forces were transported to the State of Michigan, 623 Lake Michigan Street, in the town of St. Joseph. Within a minute, it was determined by telepathic scans that the two nearest homes were also included in the operation. Assigned to one of the homes were Nathan, Kaleo, Tory, Rasul, Mark, Zareb and Bayani. Hearing this, Prez's blood pressure went up and he walked away from where newbie kids might hear his inevitable swearing.

Believing a seven man team to be inadequate, Prez told John to have Nathan hold off a few seconds for reinforcements. Since he and Keith were safe on base, Prez ordered all six of their security to join the operation. Within thirty seconds, two gorillas, Gamba and Naasir, and four human security, Chris, Matthew, Justin and Daniel were on-site.

The four gorillas split in half, two on the front door and two on the rear door, all of which were armed with fifty-caliber machine guns. They were backed up by Chris and Matthew in the front, while Justin and Daniel took positions covering the rear. Hearing the commotion from three helicopter gunships and one heavily armed transport 'copter, an adult man came running out of the rear door with a thirty-eight revolver, directly into Gamba. Before the man could react and raise his weapon, Naasir hit him in the face with the butt of his fifty-cal. The revolting sound of crushing bones was heard. The unconscious, dying man crumbled to the porch.

Wide-eyed, Naasir griped, "Oops!"

Gamba grinned, "Don't ya just hate when that happens?"

Naasir shrugged, "He ran right into you. Are you alright?"

Gamba sniggered, "He almost knocked the wind out of me. The butt of your gun has a few new scrapes from his teeth though, I see."

Inspecting his weapon, Naasir grumbled, "Damn it!" He thought a second then grinned, "I'll have the Scoobies polish it up, good as new."

In the front of the house, Rasul broke down the door and entered an empty living room with Zareb. In the rear, Gamba and Naasir entered the open door into a kitchen area, also cleared of any residents. Every ground level door was opened and cleared. Under the staircase leading up, another door led to a set of stairs heading down. Again, the forces split, four went down and four went up.

Outside, Nathan, Kaleo, Tory, Mark and Bayani heard a woman's abruptly cut short scream. Nathan hurried toward the front door. Reacting on Nathan's telepathic orders, Kaleo, Tory and their enhanced human security followed only as far as the front doorway, so no one could possibly escape. Nathan went inside and hurried up the stairs before him. The other four in the basement came up to the living room, with two small boys on the gorillas' backs. Both boys were clad in tattered sweatpants and sweatshirts that revealed the T-shirts and underpants beneath.

"I got me a gorilla!" one of the little lads cheered. The sentiment was echoed by the other little guy. Kaleo, Tory, Mark and Bayani began laughing.

Upstairs, doors were broke down. Gamba yelled, "Cut her down!"

From the other upstairs rooms, Matthew was heard saying, "We're Clan Short, here to rescue you both."

Naasir grumbled, "Damn it! No pulse. She's gone."

At the Ewa Beach store, Prez was in the men's room having a meltdown and cussing up a blue storm.

Nathan, Chris and Matthew came downstairs with two slightly older boys, clad only in underpants and covered in bruises and welts, making their physical abuses obvious. The gorillas, Gamba and Naasir, followed the others downstairs. Gamba reported, "One adult female, deceased."

Kaleo queried, "Cause of death?"

"Suicide," Gamba replied, "she hung herself from the ceiling lamp fixture."

"Serves her right," one of the older boys groused.

The other nodded and evilly grinned, "Can I piss on her, so she don't burn in hell too fast?"

Tory giggled, "Do you need to leak?"

"I'll force it," the boy cackled, causing everyone to crack up.

Tory checked with Kaleo. Receiving a nod and a brief explanation of "It's therapeutic," Tory led both older boys upstairs to wish their old mum goodbye and good riddance.

Kaleo began chatting with the two boys perched on the gorillas' backs. One was five-year-old Jimmy Carr. The other was six-year-old Scott Deaver. The four boys had been sexually molested and abused by their now ex-foster parents, Earnest and Elaine Yates. The two with Tory upstairs were nine-year-old Jason Mullins and eleven-year-old Billy Whittmore. It was Billy that suggested the trip back upstairs, Scott told Kaleo. Gamba explained that when he found the woman hanging, he held her up so Naasir could cut her down, in the hope of saving her life, so they could acquire more information telepathically. The welcoming conversation was cut short by loud laughter from upstairs.

Now knowing that his friends in Michigan were safe, Prez came out of the men's room, still a little red in the face from his temper tantrum, but obviously relieved. Heading for Keith and reading his PADD, Prez considered taking a brief trip to Maui. If all the mothers could be Valium junkies, then what was wrong with a Clan director seeking out some recreational herb? Heading for Keith, Prez giggled then started singing;

I could wile away the hours

Conferrin' with the flowers

Consultin' with the rain

And my head I'd be scratchin'

While my thoughts were busy hatchin'

If I only had a brain

I'd unravel any riddle
For any individ'le
In trouble or in pain
With the thoughts I'd be thinkin'
I could be another Lincoln
If I only had a brain

Oh, I would tell you why
The ocean's near the shore
I could think of things I never thunk before
And then I'd sit and think some more

I would not be just a nuffin'
My head all full of stuffin'
My heart all full of pain
I would dance and be merry
Life would be a ding-a-derry
If I only had a brain

Keith smiled, "What's wrong, baby?"

"Nothin'," Prez giggled. "Kaleo, Tory, Nathan and all our guys are safe. Gamba got a little rattled and Naasir probably over-reacted a little bit, but everybody's fine. They're wrapping stuff up."

Nodding, Keith shared, "Ralphie's tuned in about his brothers."

Having not seen that on his PADD, Prez's head sagged. He repeated, "Brothers? Not singular brother?"

John sent, 'Sorry Prez. I figured you were worried enough, so I didn't tell you. Ralphie is one of three brothers, including Ronnie in Michigan and Richie in Las Vegas.'

Laughing his ass off, Prez wandered away and started playing Minesweeper on his PADD. Randomly choosing a corner to click on, Prez stepped on a mine and the board blew up. Shaking his head, Prez only laughed louder. A few moments later, newbie kids saw their new leader strolling around four feet up off the floor. Prez was paying attention to his game and didn't notice until kids began giggling and pointing, softly commenting on the levitated leader. Pausing to learn what the hubbub was about and seeing himself up off the floor, Prez loudly laughed, "John!"

John giggled, 'You said you wanted to get high, so-oo...'

Smiling widely, Ralphie glanced around at his new leaders, wondering, "Will Prez be alright?"

"Eventually," Derrick sniggered.

Hugging Ralphie close, Keith playfully explained, "Prez loves math and history. He's doing calculus equations to figure out how one became three, and eighty-seven grew to over two hundred in six days."

"Guess it's not easy bein' a head rimmer," Ralphie softly giggled. The remaining dozen newbie boys around Ralphie cracked up.

His eyes darting mischievously, Mike grinned, "It's been that kind of a day for Prez. Maybe it was the two hundred new buses?"

Derrick sniggered, "Or the kids at school making a ruckus?"

Keith laughed, "Or the two calling birds, three French hens and four calling birds?"

Drew giggled, "Today is our sixth day as Clan. Maybe he wants his six geese a laying and..."

"Five golden rings," all the Core Rimmers loudly sang.

From across the store, Prez bellowed, "I know y'all are goofin' on me. Remember, turnabout is fair play."

Only moments later, Kaleo, Nathan, Ronnie and Tory transported into the basement store, near Keith and Ralphie. Kaleo smiled and loudly introduced the two long lost brothers to each other, and then introduced the other four boys, Jimmy Carr, Scott Deaver, Jason Mullins and Billy Whittmore, also rescued from St. Joseph, Michigan. Tory, Kaleo, Keith and Nathan couldn't help noticing similarities between the brothers; they were the same height, approximately the same weight, had the same long dirty blond hair and dreamy light brown eyes, only Ralphie's hair was parted down the middle while Ronnie's was parted high down the left side.

First to speak, Ralphie asked, "Have you felt like..."

"there was someone missing," Ronnie softly finished. He huffed and smiled, "Even though I had Adam, a half brother that was very much a real brother."

Cautiously stepping forward and opening his arms, Ralphie admitted, "I didn't have a brother or sister. I hope we might someday, somehow..."

"We will get that close and closer," Ronnie softly assured, and stepped into his brother's open arms. Ralphie's arms wrapped high around Ronnie's back. Ronnie's hands wrapped tightly around Ralphie's waist. Each boy rested their head on the brother's shoulder and inhaled deeply.

It could easily be seen that the two brothers were relaxing and enjoying twelve years of missed hugs in this one embrace.

On the opposite side of the store, Corey, Drew, Reyes, Sean and Troy loudly laughed, "PREZ! That's the girl's changing room!"

Barely a second later, amongst a chorus of female yells, Prez walked out of the changing room, blushing and laughing, "Well, Minesweeper sucked so I started playing Ms. Pacman. Where better than there?"

Kaleo and Tory cracked up. They gathered Jimmy, Scott, Jason and Billy then led the way to the front of the store. Softly sniggering, Keith threw his arms up in the air, knowing his beloved had lost his mind somewhere at Anahola Bay Saturday afternoon, but wasn't sure where exactly.

Nathan called, "Daileass!"

Over the loudspeakers, Daileass giggled, "I know, bro. We've gotta get these guys to take a break soon."

"Give me a break, give me a break, break me off a piece of that Kit Kat bar," Prez sang through giggles. Knowing this wasn't an order, but acting like it was anyway, many dozens of Kit Kat bars materialized up by the ceiling and fell around the newbie kids in the store. Some dropped directly onto unsuspecting kids and others were snatched out of the air. Soon kids were munching on the chocolate coated cookie bars.

Still attached to one another, Ralphie giggled, "These guys are lots of fun."

"The one's in Des Moines weren't exactly normal either," Ronnie sniggered.

Ralphie sighed, "I'm looking forward to meeting Adam someday soon."

Leaning back to look into Ralphie's eyes and seeing sincerity there, Ronnie smiled, "We will soon." Ronnie's comm-badge chirped for the first time. He tapped it and uncertainly said, "Hello?"

"Hey Ronnie, it's Garrett," the voice said.

"Hey," Ronnie smiled, "did Adam get to meet his brothers yet?"

"Not yet," Garrett replied. "Adam's a little freaked out here."

Ronnie huffed, "Adam, the butterflies aren't a bad thing, bro. Mine are still flapping like mad."

"Mine too," Ralphie giggled.

"Oh my God, you even sound similar," Adam gushed.

"But I'm cuter," Ralphie and Ronnie said almost simultaneously. Boys in the Des Moines Command Center and in the Ewa Beach basement store loudly laughed while the two brothers suspiciously eyed one another then broke into giggles.

Adam sniggered, "So everything's kewl?"

"Very kewl," Ronnie assured. "So pull yourself together and go meet your brothers. The butterflies will flap for a while. Get used to it and don't let the feeling hold you back."

Adam regained control quickly. "I've got to see them on the screen; one looks like me, and the other two look a little like me, but they're different too. They all seem so close, I don't want to mess that up."

"You won't," Ronnie promised.

Ralphie added, "You can't really. I mean, it's like we kind o' have to be who we are anyway. We sort o' have to love each other cos we're brothers. If we like each other too, it's a bonus. Liking each other a lot is even better." He reached for and took hold of Ronnie's hand, leading his brother toward the front of the store.

Squeezing Ralphie's hand tighter because he liked what was said, Ronnie nodded and smiled, "I already like Ralphie plenty."

"What's not to like?" Ralphie coyly giggled.

Rolling his eyes, Ronnie sniggered, "Your self hatred is really starting to bug me."

"I'll work on it with my brothers," Ralphie giggled.

Locking eyes with Ralphie, Ronnie nervously repeated,

"Brothers?"

Ralphie nodded, "Yup. We're triplets. There's one more we're still waiting to meet."

"Oh my God!" Adam and Ronnie softly gasped across the comm-link.

"So we're all gonna have butterflies the rest of the night and maybe into tomorrow," Ralphie laughed.

Garrett giggled, "We have got to get together soon. Imagine all eight of us actually in the same room."

His eyes flashing mischievously, Ronnie grinned, "It sounds like a great time to me."

Ralphie checked, "You guys do know it's still warm beach weather here, right?"

"Very kewl!" Garrett excitedly gushed. "We could all meet there, maybe tomorrow or Saturday? Then we could come here for a good ol' fashioned Christmas Eve, and then do it again, a couple o' hours later there. If we're lucky, it might even snow."

Turning toward Keith, Ralphie wondered, "What's Christmas like here?"

"Christmas is always Christmas, regardless of the weather," Keith smiled.

Joining up with the crowd around Ralphie and Ronnie, Drew added, "The best part here is, if you get a new skateboard or bike, you'll prob'ly be able to go out and use it Christmas Day."

Corey nodded, "I can only remember one Christmas it rained.

The rest were sunny and warm, about eighty degrees Fahrenheit."

Ronnie asked, "Are you chillin', Adam?"

"Yeah, bro," Adam sighed. "Now I'm feeling really excited, like it is Christmas."

Garrett chuckled, "What better early present could there be than when brothers are reunited?"

Ronnie smiled, "We'll see you guys real soon, okay? If you need to talk, just give me a call."

"Kewl," Garrett and Adam chimed. Everyone nearby said goodbye to Adam and Garrett.

Ralphie released his brother's hand to begin getting him new clothes. The crew helped Ronnie select his clothes from the store. Ronnie had started wearing boxers and wanted to continue wearing them. The two brothers chatted up a storm about just that simple choice, as if it were a major decision, and Ralphie tossed an extra package of boxers into his cart so he could try switching now and then.

Cautiously, Ronnie softly suggested, "You could wear mine too if ya wanted, bro? Ya know, when they're clean, of course."

Stunned that Ronnie would offer his underwear, Ralphie slowly smiled then giggled, "That's what brothers do, huh?"

Ronnie nodded and chuckled, "Just tell me what of yours is off-limits and I won't use it. I'll do the same too, for any favorite stuff I have. Other than that, all our stuff could easily be worn by any of the three of us."

Giggling like crazy, Ralphie hurried to Ronnie and wrapped his arms around him again, giving a very tight squeeze. "I never had brothers to even consider that. Thanks, bro."

Ronnie whispered into Ralphie's ear, "We're gonna spend a lot of time together, tonight, tomorrow and for a long time."

With happy tears pooling in his eyes, Ralphie softly said, "I love you, bro."

"I love you too," Ronnie quickly assured.

"I might need a little help, being a brother for the first time and all," Ralphie shivered.

Ronnie nodded, "Brothers help each other all the time, whenever it's needed."

Stepping back from the hug, Ralphie smiled, "I can't wait to meet our other brother, Richie."

Ronnie queried, "Is that his name?"

Ralphie nodded, "Yup, Richie Telford."

Tossing packages of socks into Ralphie's shopping cart, Ronnie smirked, "Our mother didn't have much of an imagination."

"Maybe she just liked 'R' names?" Ralphie giggled at his own bad pun.

Moving past the pajamas and into the footwear department, Ronnie glanced around from Ralphie to Keith and the other Core Rimmers, wondering, "Do you all know how we got separated?"

Kaleo nodded and frowned, "You were abducted, stolen as infants. Maybe your names were given by that cretin? We don't really know."

Ralphie gasped, "No shit?"

While Kaleo, Tory and the other nearby Core Rimmers nodded, Ronnie checked, "Are you okay, bro?"

Ralphie nodded, "I guess. Both my parents had brown hair, so I guessed long ago that I was adopted."

John said, "We'll get pictures of your feet, to learn where you were born and who your real parents were."

"We were born June twenty-third, 1992," Ralphie said, and Ronnie rapidly nodded.

Over the store's PA system, Derrick called, "Customer service to the checkout counters, we're backin' up big time and need more help here."

Keith chuckled, "Okay, dudes. John, Stephen, Drew and Corey can help these six dudes through the store." Leaving Jimmy, Scott, Jason, Billy, Ralphie and Ronnie, Kaleo, Tory and Keith went to help Mike and Derrick. All the other newbie boys surrounding the twin brothers followed their leaders to get their clothing checked out.

* * * * *

At three that afternoon, the parents of Hajime Sato and Aki Hikada arrived at Ewa Beach. Although they arrived in separate cars, Hajime's parents began their hateful tirade in the parking lot and continued in the reception area, tearing into Aki's parents in Japanese. Rob Gibbons yelled over the combined voices, in Japanese, to restore order. Hajime's parents were warned by Rob that sexuality is not determined anywhere except by the individual genetics. Of course, Hajime's father spouted more irritating and rude words at Rob. Rob's gorilla cursed the man in Japanese, effectively warning him that another word could land him in Starfleet prison for two years. Standing nearby in the hallway, Tamara Hekeia, Anna Seibert's security and George Lu witnessed all that had transpired.

Also speaking in fluent Japanese, Tamara informed the Satos that their interview was canceled due to their hateful, homophobic rhetoric. "I am summarily recommending that Hajime remain in the care of Family Clan Short of Vulcan," Tamara reported. "All parental obligations and responsibilities are nullified. You are not to come within one hundred yards of this facility or Hajime. Failure to comply..." Mister Sato stood and lunged at Tamara, but was blocked by Rob and his gorilla's large arm. Once Mister Sato was forced into a chair again, Rob Gibbons read the man his rights, handcuffed him and then called Starfleet security to place the man under arrest.

While Mrs. Sato wept over her husband and shattered family, George Lu greeted Aki's parents and led them from the reception area to his office. Comparatively, a very peaceful interview was held with the Hikadas. They admitted not knowing of, or understanding Aki's homosexuality. George informed them of Aki's wishes to remain with Hajime and as part of Clan Short Pacific Rim Division. Once they heard Aki's and Hajime's recorded statements, they reluctantly agreed. Since the Hikadas were patient and understanding, they would be granted weekly visitations on base with Aki. Sunday's were set aside, from nine in the morning until five in the evening.

George Lu carefully informed them of the security cameras and microphones scattered around the base. If at any time Aki, Hajime or any child on base was verbally or physically abused, their visitation privileges would be revoked. By the time the interview ended, Mrs.

Sato was no longer on base. George Lu supervised the first meeting between Aki and his parents. Understandably, Aki was upset about the way he and Hajime came out, but he was also relieved that his parents still cared enough about him to visit every week.

A little after four that afternoon, Anna Seibert met with John, Cesar and Felipe to learn what was already known about Jerry Burk's foster parents. The three boys were still in Anna's office when the Krey's, Theodore and Zelma, were led into the room by Rob Gibbons. Introducing herself, Anna stood and greeted Jerry's foster parents. Both seemed quite pleasant. Mr. Krey insisted that he be addressed as Ted and Mrs. Krey asked that her first name also be used.

Returning to her seat, Anna informed the two adults, "John is a trained Clan Short telepath and can confirm all statements made here today. Cesar and Felipe are also telepathic and are being trained by John."

Ted Krey nodded and flatly stated, "That's fine, we have nothing to hide. Jerry already told me about some issues he had been having with my wife. I assume that's why he ran away from home."

Anna nodded, "Yes it is."

John softly called, "Aunt Anna?"

"Yes, John?"

"I know what the problem is," John sighed, and then turned to Zelma, saying, "You're bipolar and don't consistently take your meds like you're supposed to." Seeing the woman blushing, John then told Ted, "Jerry wasn't lying, Mr. Krey, he really does like you a lot, he just doesn't trust Mrs. Krey. She did throw a large carving knife at Jerry, she knows it and is sorry about it and all the other things she did that caused Jerry to not trust her."

Ted closed his eyes and softly muttered, "Zelma, you promised."

"They make me feel... odd," Zelma softly wept.

Opening his eyes, Ted asked Anna, "Is it too late for us?"

"I'm afraid it is, yes," Anna sighed. "Jerry would prefer to remain here with his friends. The trust issue Jerry has is confirmed and appropriate. I've spoken with Jerry and John has confirmed the knife incident. Initially, I thought I'd be having Zelma arrested for child endangerment, but circumstances are medical in this case. Zelma, you must follow your doctor's orders in the future. Ted, Jerry asked if you would like to occasionally visit him here on base."

Ted nodded, "Yes I would, but financially it wouldn't be possible for that to happen more than once a month. I often work weekends, and the flight is expensive."

"Don't worry about the cost," Anna instructed. "The Clan will arrange for your visits." She prompted, "Choose a weekend that would be acceptable for you."

He answered, "How about the first weekend of the month." Ted asked, "Could I see Jerry today, while I'm here?"

Anna nodded, "Yes, I'll arrange for that." She then told Ted Krey about the base's audio and video monitoring capabilities and explained the ramifications of any threatening actions made toward any child on base. To make this meeting easier for everyone involved, Zelma remained in the FYS reception area while Ted went with Anna to speak with Jerry.

Around the Ewa Beach base, kids were having fun, making use of the pool, the diving well, indoor rec center, the CIC rec room and the dorm common rooms. The most unusual thing that happened was when Lupe Jui tried to jump off her swing, resulting in mildly scraped knees and hands. The unofficial Rimmer mom, Lanna Seaver, took Lupe to the FYS building for Doc Howard to clean and bandage the minor wounds.

Before leaving for the day, George prepared a brief e-mail for Jennifer Hundser, stating that perhaps it might be advantageous for FYS to develop group counseling sessions to help parents understand their bisexual, gay or lesbian children. George left for home to help his wife pack. They would be moving on base and into one of the one bedroom condo apartments that weekend. Since their own child had grown and moved out on her own, they had already begun considering adopting, if one of the kids liked them and wanted them as parents.

Also around four in the afternoon, the few remaining newbies, John, Stephen, Drew and Corey transported out of the store to get kids settled in dorm rooms. Kids began forming groups of two, three or four and choosing rooms. Ralphie and Ronnie chose to share a room together. They decided to remain there alone, talking and organizing their room until dinner time. Once they were left alone, Ronnie turned on the television. Ralphie checked the two laptop computers on the desks and powered them up. Still flipping channels, Ronnie softly admitted, "I never had a PC of my own."

Ralphie nodded, "But you know how to use one, right?"

"Yeah, from school," Ronnie answered. He chuckled, "This room is really nice. We've got our own Xbox, a stereo and two full size beds." Landing on a music video channel, Ronnie put the remote down and turned to his brother, nervously stammering, "Do you..."

umm... have you... ever?"

Tilting his head, Ralphie asked, "What's wrong, bro?"

"We're sleeping in this room together," Ronnie reminded.

"Yup," Ralphie smiled. "I never shared a room before. It's gonna be kewl, having brothers to chat with before crashing, I mean."

"Yeah, but..."

Figuring that he had already been caught, Ralphie's smile faded and he muttered, "You're worried about me, being gay?"

Relieved, Ronnie happily gushed, "You're gay too?"

Nodding, Ralphie giggled, "Yup. This place is filled with eye candy too. All our leaders are so cute, and lots of the guys in the store were real nice. Maybe someday I'll find a special one, finally."

Heading for his bed and lifting his suitcase, Ronnie teased, "Have you got anyone in mind?"

"Not yet," Ralphie giggled. He lifted his suitcase and dropped it on his bed to unpack, absently rambling, "Ryan Caswell is real cute, but really shy. Terry Fisk has a good sense of humor, but he's kind o' quiet and shy too. Mike Busse is older and lookin' really fine, but he might be just a dream, because he's obviously older than me." Unzipping his suitcase, Ralphie asked, "Have you got a boyfriend?" Ronnie shrugged and giggled. "Uh oh," Ralphie laughed, "you do, don't you?"

"Maybe," Ronnie blushed. He started pulling clothes from his suitcase and ripping tags off, saying, "My little brother, Adam is tryin' to fix me up with Garrett, ya know, the one who called me earlier?"

He's nice enough, I guess, and definitely cute, but we just met, and then I came here to meet you. You and Richie are my priority now."

"I know what you mean," Ralphie grinned. "There's twelve years of catchin' up to do."

While continuing to unpack and put their things away in dressers and closets, Ralphie and Ronnie spoke of their pasts. They had finished putting their things away then began to get their laptop computers set up. Ralphie took the MacBook as his primary computer while Ronnie was perfectly happy with the Windows computer. Since Ronnie was completely unfamiliar with Macs, he pulled his chair over to Ralphie's desk where he got his first lessons. Ralphie explained the Mac Finder as the equivalent of Windows Explorer then demonstrated various file functions. Macs had lots of kewl school tools too, like an audio recorder, so that class lectures could be played back as a study aid. Of course it had e-mail, calendar and contact list programs too, as well as good office products like a word processor to write reports. They had just moved on to the Safari browser when there was a knock at the door. Both brothers hollered, "Come in."

The door opened. Ralphie and Ronnie turned to watch their third brother, Richie enter the room, and stop just beyond the door, softly saying, "Hey."

Getting up from their chairs, Ralphie and Ronnie hurried to Richie and sandwiched him in a hug. "Look at you," Ralphie giggled.

Ronnie laughed, "All three of us growing up separately, but we all have long hair and wear the same kinds of clothes!"

Surprised at the reception, Richie smirked, "It's warm like this in Las Vegas."

"We were expecting you over an hour ago," Ralphie smiled.

Ronnie asked, "What took you so long?"

Awkwardly shrugging from the center of the sandwich, Richie sighed, "I was kind o' scared, I guess."

Stepping back, Ralphie wondered, "Scared of us?"

Also giving Richie some space, Ronnie smirked, "Are you sure you weren't just anxious?"

Richie shrugged and softly offered, "Nope, don't think so."

Ralphie briefly scanned Richie's expression before saying, "Come on in and have a seat, bro."

Taking hold of the door, Ronnie nodded, "Let's see if we can make you less scared. Ya know, I've had major butterflies flapping in my belly, since before meeting Ralphie."

"They're still flappin', but not so bad any more," Ralphie said, and then gestured for Richie to sit on one of the chairs.

Ronnie closed the door. Following Ralphie and pulling the chair away from the desk, Richie sat down, glancing at the two mirror images of himself, and then looked down at the floor. Remembering the many hours of therapy, Richie knew that these two were his long lost 'imaginary friends'. The truth fought the learned opinions implanted by the shrink to a painful stalemate. Pulling the other chair out and across from Richie's seat, Ronnie wordlessly prompted Ralphie to take a seat. Sitting down, Ralphie somehow knew that Ronnie preferred to stand, but didn't give it another thought. Instead, he focused on Richie, asking, "What's the deal, bro?"

Tears welled up in Richie's eyes. With his head still sagging and not making eye contact with either brother, Richie nonsensically blubbered, "You guys won't like me or want me around. I always knew... had clear images of both of you, all my life. When I got to about six, my mom had me see a therapist, because I insisted I had imaginary friends." Sniffling and wiping his eyes, Richie caught his breath and sobbed, "You're not imaginary, but I've been taught you are, but here I am, hoping you'll at least accept me as I am, even though I doubt you will. I came here to just get it over with."

Ralphie glanced up at Ronnie. Ronnie nodded at Richie, wordlessly gesturing for Ralphie to speak first. Ralphie leaned forward to try and look into Richie's eyes, saying, "We're not imaginary, Richie. I always knew I had brothers too, but was raised alone."

"I had a half brother that kind o' made things a little easier," Ronnie offered. "I still felt like there were others, besides Adam, but didn't really think about it too much, because there was always a real brother there."

Ralphie firmly assured, "We want you here with us, Richie."

Ronnie added, "As brothers, we automatically love each other. Now we have to get to really know each other, so we can be friends as well as brothers, don't you think?"

Still hiding his face and wiping his eyes, Richie shrugged then spilled it all in one long statement. "I'm gay and like being held by other guys; I love feeling strong arms around me, but bein' around girls always left me feeling... I dunno... wrong, with nothin' to say; I enjoy hangin' with other guys, I like checkin' out dicks in the shower and ain't found one yet that wasn't worth lookin' at."

Ronnie giggled, "I couldn't have said it better myself."

Glancing back at Ronnie, Ralphie laughed, "Me too. Long thin ones or short fat ones or any dick at all, really. Being a model, I got to see plenty of naked dudes and never saw a dick I didn't like."

Looking up at his two brothers, but still wiping his eyes, Richie squealed, "Really?"

"Really," Ralphie and Ronnie chorused.

Ralphie explained, "We came in here to get our stuff put away and spend some time alone together, just to start getting to know each other."

Ronnie nodded and blushed, "I play with my dick every night. There ain't nothin' comin' out yet, but I can't get to sleep without that wicked kewl feeling, ya know?"

Giggling his butt off, Ralphie nodded and bounced his eyebrows at Richie. At last, Richie shyly giggled, "I thought you'd hate me."

Ralphie sniggered, "Not because you like dudes and dick."

"Now we can compare notes," Ronnie joked. Ralphie and Richie evilly grinned and rapidly nodded.

Richie smiled and sighed, "Now I know that shrink was way more fucked up than I ever was. I have brothers, two very kewl brothers that are just like me, in appearance and everything, they're even gay like me. All I need to do is get past the lies the shrink dumped in my head."

"I know how we can make that happen," Ralphie grinned.

Ronnie had an idea of how and chuckled, "Yeah."

Richie wondered, "How?"

"Stay here with us," Ralphie simply said.

Richie thoughtfully hummed, thinking of his friends in Las Vegas as well as his long lost brothers now in Hawaii, becoming completely perplexed. Before he could speak, Ronnie said, "I've got friends we'll be visiting in Des Moines, Richie. We could visit your friends in Vegas too, just about any time we want."

Ralphie nodded, "I just think it's important that we spend as much time together as we can, these first few days, anyway. Your 'imaginary' friends will be in your face, reminding you it was the shrink that lied. You knew what we both knew, that there were guys missing."

"Kewl," Richie giggled. "I was stuck there for a minute." Looking up at Ronnie, he then loudly asked, "How'd you know what I was thinking?"

Ronnie shrugged, "Dunno, really."

Clapping his hands and then rubbing them together, Ralphie grinned, "We could stay here and catch up."

"Or?" Ronnie and Richie queried.

With a wicked gleam twinkling in his eyes, Ralphie giggled, "I happen to know lots o' guys here swim naked at the pool and diving well."

"Oo-oo!" Ronnie devilishly droned.

Holding both his arms out, Richie giggled, "Lead me to the dicks, so we have dream material for later."

Ralphie took hold of one of Richie's arms and Ronnie took the other outstretched arm. Together they left the dorm room on a mission. They didn't make it out of the nearby dorm door before seeing their first naked boy, twelve-year-old Thomas Cork, rescued from Anaheim, streaking out of his room toward the lavatory. Thomas waved and giggled at the stunned triplets. The three brothers glanced at each other, sighed and then hurried toward the pools, chattering about other common interests, so they didn't arrive with tented shorts. Outside and crossing the compound, another call came for Ronnie from Adam.

* * * * *

The vast majority of the orphanage kids decided to move to the dorms. Only ten of the youngest orphanage kids, six boys and four girls, chose to join the nest. All of those young kids were led to the FYS Building bear cave by John and Stephen, to choose their new best friends. Seven of the ten were from Anaheim and wanted to be with Drew and Corey. By dinner time, the first floor of three dormitory buildings were filled with boys. Also, girls had overflowed into the second dorm building.

The Scooby Gang went to Mike and Derrick just as they stepped out of one of the dorm buildings. Spike grinned, "Shiny Daddies, weez got some shinys for yous."

Smiling and lifting his furry son, Mike glanced around at the four ferret-hybrids, smiling, "You got Shinys for us?" Spike, Xander, Willow and Faith rapidly nodded and hummed affirmatively.

Happily swaying to and fro, Faith added, "And the other Core Rimmers."

"And their mommies and daddies," Willow giggled, her eyes twinkling and darting around.

Expecting some baubles to be pulled out of the ferrets' waist sacks, Derrick prompted, "Can we see the Shiny's?"

"At the parking garage," Xander toothily grinned.

Spike called, "Alden, gets all of the Core Rimmers and their mommies and daddies. Then transport everybody to the parking garage, you know where."

Across their comm-badges, Alden giggled, "Workin' on it," and then executed the order. Derrick, Mike and the Scoobies were transported to an empty area of the second floor in the four story parking garage. Spike then scampered over Mike's shoulder and crawled down to the ground, gathering with his brother and sister. Over the next two minutes the others appeared; Keith and Prez, Drew and Corey, Sean and Troy, Kaleo and Tory, John and Stephen, Jim and Jen Hundser, Anna and Carl Seibert, Bill and Lanna Seaver, Rob and Laura Gibbons, Kathleen Marr, and lastly, Judy Faris. Everybody was chattering, wondering why they had been brought to the garage.

In unison, all four ferrets squeaked, "Follow us!" and scampered off to the other side of the second floor. The large group of twenty-four boys and adults followed them. Passing the ramps to the first and third floors, they saw a collection of vehicles and everyone stopped talking. Many jaws dropped.

The first car was a red Lamborghini Aventador. Willow smiled at Derrick, "This is for you Shiny Daddy."

The car beside it was a silver Maserati MC12 with blue stripes. Noticing many mouths hanging open, Spike giggled at Mike, "This is yours, Shiny Daddy."

The next car was a black Ferrari 599 XX Evoluzione that had white interior leather. Faith told Keith, "This one is for you. It looks like a shiny piano, don't you think?" Nodding, but completely speechless, Keith stepped forward and opened his arms. Faith jumped up into Keith's embrace.

Beside the Ferrari was an Alpina BMW B3 GT3 with a white exterior and black interior. Xander pointed and cheered, "This is for the Shiny Rimmer Leader." Cracking up, Prez went to Xander and picked him up.

The four ferrets went down the line of cars, giving one to each of the remaining twenty Rimmers, explaining that the shiny cars were 'taken from the Dull Loving orphanage men'. Drew got a yellow Corvette. Corey got a lime green Bertone Jaguar. The blue Shelby Cobra Daytona Coupe was John's. Beside it was a red Porsche 911 Carrera Cabriolet for Stephen. Kaleo got a silver Mercedes-Benz SL 65 Roadster. Tory got the white Audi R8 LMS Ultra. The red Alfa Romeo Spider was for Sean. The midnight blue Aston Martin Vanquish was for Troy. Jennifer Hundser was pointed to white Rolls-Royce Ghost. The black Rolls-Royce Phantom VI was Jim Hundser's. Shiny Grandpas Rob and Carl each got Bentley Continentals. Rob's was white and Carl's was silver. Rob's was specially outfitted with bullet proof glass, and dash and rear deck police emergency lights by the Scoobies. Shiny Grandmas Laura and Anna each got Cadillac Escalades, so they could go places with car loads of kids. Anna's was white with black interior and Laura's was black with white interior. Bill Seaver was given an Ascari A10. Lanna Seaver got a red Hennessey Venom GT. Kathleen Marr got a Dussenberg J La Grande Torpedo that was at least twice the size of her old car, which was abandoned in the parking lot of the Safeway store in Hilo. Lastly,

Judy Faris got a white Weismann GT MF5. Of course, all the cars had been detailed, inside and out, to be as shiny as possible. The Scoobies were repeatedly thanked for the gifts and given hugs by all the Core Rimmers.

Across the parking lot were another two dozen 'spare' shiny Cadillacs, Hummers, Jeeps and Lincoln Towne cars, that anyone could use or give away to future Core Rimmers, whichever they decided to do. Walking out of the garage, the Rimmer families and the ferrets discussed when they could take the new cars out for a spin. Since none of the Core Rimmers had driver's licenses, Rob would arrange for that locally with Department of Motor Vehicles and the police. The discussion reminded Derrick that everyone needed to take additional driving classes for the new fleet of buses. On the way to the pools and playground to get their kids, Prez called Danny Page to start the process of arranging for bus driving lessons. Danny told Prez he would contact the Charleston Police and get back to him with dates and times.

During dinner, the Core Rimmers sat near each other and worked out how many dorm rooms were still available at the main base. It was pretty obvious that when the additional California orphanage kids showed up they would be overflowing onto another base. An additional one-hundred-seventy-six kids would be showing up within the next week and one-hundred-sixteen of them were boys. The third and final dorm at Ewa Beach would be all boys, meaning sixty would have to live at the Oneula Beach base about a mile west of Ewa Beach.

The fourth building was the UNIT dorm. Sitting with other UNIT boys, Kekoa was close to the Core Rimmers tables. Kekoa and those there were asked how many rooms were available in that dorm building. Since there were only a few rooms left in that building, it was decided to let that building remain for only UNIT kids. In addition to the fifty base security personnel, the personal security for all the Core Rimmers and their parents were billeted there.

"Hey, Prez?" Daileass called out over Prez's comm-badge, "You make that trip to Maui yet?"

"Not yet, Daileass," Prez smirked, "given the right instigation though, I was considering tonight or tomorrow."

"Tonight I think," Daileass said with a chuckle. "Sammy's on his way over, he says he needs to talk to you."

Prez shrugged, "Kewl. I haven't met him yet. Open the shield portals and let him transport over, Daileass."

"Okay, oh and you may want to make sure your mom's all stocked on her drugs." As soon as Daileass's voice faded out, a large group of people appeared next to the table. At the front of the group was Sammy. Prez recognized him since he saw him during Wednesday morning's teleconference call. Standing next to him were Vishnu and Kartick, but what really drew attention was the two Juans with him.

Standing and offering his right hand, Prez greeted Sammy, his eyes constantly shifting to the two Juan look-a-likes.

"Hey Prez. It's good to finally meet you in person," Sammy said, barely restraining his laughter. "Oh... I'd like you to meet Phobos and Deimo, a couple of friends I just made."

Realizing that Phobos and Deimos were the names of moons of Mars, considered the God of War, Prez politely greeted the two boys, and then asked Sammy, "Are they Juan clones or just incredible looka-likes?"

Phobos puffed his chest out and spoke with obvious pride. "Ares is our father!"

While Prez silently chewed on that admission, realizing why Daileass suggested the field trip to Maui sooner rather than later, Keith stood and greeted Sammy then began introducing the other Core Rimmers at nearby tables. Kaleo got up to join Keith and Prez.

Once the introductions were completed, Sammy noticed the three boys that had been rescued earlier. Sammy grinned sweetly then pointed to them. "Hey, kewl. I see you got three out of the four of them here." Before anyone could say anything, Sammy turned around. "Hey Robbie! You wanna meet your brothers?"

A second later, a bald twelve-year-old boy with big brown eyes stepped forward, his eyes immediately drawn to the three who looked just like him, save for the hair, of course.

"Quadruplets?" Kaleo, Keith and Prez incredulously gasped. Understanding his brothers were flabbergasted, John telepathically called for Drew and Corey to join Stephen and to assist introducing the four brothers.

Regaining his senses, Prez locked eyes with Sammy, wondering, "Where was Robbie found?"

"Tacoma, Washington," Sammy grinned. "And the best part was, finding him wasn't the weirdest thing we found either."

"Obviously!" Keith and Kaleo laughed.

"Daileass!" Prez hollered. "Find me a way to get the Core Rimmers about six hours at Maui, so we can return relaxed, but fully functional."

"I got one better. Tell your mom you're going on a week long vacation. You'll be back here in three minutes or less."

Mike yelled, "If we're going away for a week, our kids are coming with."

"And so is my mom," Keith reminded. "She'll want to see to it we're really relaxing."

Troy laughed, "We should bring some instruments too!"

"Get everything, and everyone you want. I'll send you guys over when you're ready." Daileass said with a laugh.

Sean giggled, "I am wondering where we're going."

Troy shrugged and grinned, "Does it matter?"

"I suppose not," Sean giggled.

Sammy laughed, "Well it looks like you guys got a vacation to plan. Enjoy it. I gotta take this lot on another trip." Sammy turned to Robbie, and his parents Jason and Trinity. "You take good care of your boys. If you ever need anything, just give me a call, okay?"

After many nods, handshakes, and hugs, Sammy and everyone with him left, leaving just Robbie and his parents standing there in front of the Rimmers. The other three brothers joined Robbie. After a brief exchange of brotherly greetings, Ralphie, Ronnie and Richie escorted Robbie to the kitchen chow line. Corey, Drew, John and Stephen helplessly giggled at the quadruplets.

Still standing with Kaleo and Keith, Prez smiled at the two adults before them. He chuckled, "Three of the four brothers had already put their stuff in their dorm room, but I see we have the shortest dorm residency on record to deal with. Let's assume the four brothers are going to want to be together for a while."

"Agreed," Jason smiled.

Trinity giggled, "Now we're de-facto parents of four, and they all look the same as the one we started with."

Prez shrugged, "When the other three decide that they want you to be their parents, I can make that official for you."

Kaleo asked, "For now, would either of you like something to eat; perhaps coffee, tea or soft drinks?"

Seeing his father and Bill Seaver approaching, Keith pointed and giggled, "Here comes your welcoming committee. While you're with them, we'll get a place lined up for your family to be together tonight."

Prez nodded, "We have big townhomes on base. They're three bedroom, two-and-a-half baths, about seventeen hundred square feet, not including the finished basement."

Jason remembered, "Our personal affects were supposed to be gathered by someone named Daileass."

Into Prez's sub-vocal, Daileass giggled, "Tell me which townhouse to transport their stuff to, Prez."

"The opposite end unit from mine, Daileass," Prez responded. He then told Jason and Trinity Taylor, "Your goods will be at your new home when you're ready." He then introduced Jason and Trinity to his foster dad and Bill Seaver. Prez then wondered, "I'm just curious, what were your jobs?"

"I taught social studies and coached football, at the middle school level," Jason answered.

Trinity said, "I taught math and algebra."

"Excellent!" Keith and Prez cheered.

Kaleo smiled, "Expect a visit from Mister Tecumseh, the Clan educational adviser."

Since the boys were done, Jim Hundser led Jason and Trinity to tables where many of the parents were already seated. Kaleo, Keith and Prez returned to their tables.

"Another eighty kids in a single day," Derrick giggled.

The day's not over yet either," Mike grinned and bounced his eyebrows.

Returning to his table and seat, Prez called, "Alden, check our list of rescued kids. How many are boys, how many are girls? Reply to all the Core Rimmers." Prez then began typing a quick e-mail to Mr. T, so he could come meet Jason and Trinity Taylor.

Alden answered, "There are two hundred-thirty-five currently on base; one hundred-fifty-three are male, sixty-four percent of the total; eighty-two are female, thirty-six percent of the total."

Sending the e-mail off to Mr. T, Prez said, "Thanks, dude." He then began puttering with his PADD, seemingly off on another task.

Surprised, Keith said, "It seemed to me that three of every five were boys. It's more like four of every six, almost two-thirds."

Derrick joked, "Hey Alden, isn't there an all girls school we can panty raid?" The rest of the Rimmers cracked up.

Alden laughed, "I'll check into it, Derrick."

Slowly nodding his head, Mike grinned and warned, "No nookie for you later."

Raising his eyebrows, Derrick smiled, "You know I like a challenge," instigating another round of laughter.

Noticing Prez was still involved on his PADD, Keith softly asked, "What's goin' on, baby?"

Humming curiously, Prez looked up and saw his hubby's concern. Prez grinned, "Minesweeper sucks and Ms. Pacman is too easy, so I'm downloading Pissed Off Chickens." Keith sputtered and tried to hold back, but all the other listening Core Rimmers cracked up, and then so did Keith.

Not very far away from the Core Rimmers' tables, the quadruplets were getting to know each other better. Finally comfortable enough to pose the question, Ralphie asked Robbie, "So, what possessed you to shave your head?"

Swallowing a mouthful of mashed red potatoes and gravy, Robbie smiled, "My friend in Tacoma has cancer. With the chemo and radiation treatments, he lost his hair and got really bummed out. I wanted to prove that hair grows back and it wasn't a big deal." Almost at once, the other three brothers cheered Robbie for making his friend feel better. They would all take a trip to Tacoma to meet Robbie's sick friend. That led the boys to chat about other trips they would be taking over the coming days and weeks. Once Ralphie shared that he had spent most of the last week at the beach riding waves on boogieboards, they couldn't wait to get their friends to come to the ROH.

Leaning back in his chair, Prez remembered his mom's home cooked Southern meals, sighing, "That was the best country-fried steak ever." Looking over his shoulder, he checked the plates before his boys. Sammy and Gage did a decent job of clearing their plates. They were considering dessert, but neither was moving off their chairs. Dee was still working on his plate, but Richie seemed to have given up.

Kaleo called, "Hey, Prez?"

"What's up, Kaleo?"

"Tory and me were thinkin', it would be very uncool for newbies at our other bases to not have Core Rimmers around."

Tory suggested, "With twelve of us, we could split up when necessary."

Kaleo added, "It's a matter of choosing who lives where, when the time comes."

Prez nodded, "Excellent points. Keith and I were thinking that certain Core Rimmers need to be here on the main base."

Keith explained, "Specifically, Kaleo you need to be here as Communications Officer. John's head of Intel, Drew and Corey work on the computers, so they need to be here. Prez and I need to be here too." He then asked Alden for a general dormitory breakdown.

Alden reported, "Dorm building one is full. In dorm building two, there's room for twenty-eight additional girls; the first floor is filled. Dorm building three has room for thirty boys on the first floor. The entire second floor is unoccupied. It's your choice, but maybe you could make that third building all boys. Then you could house most of the expected California kids here."

Prez thoughtfully scowled, "That's assuming we don't get too many other kids between now and then. That's not a valid assumption. I'm not too happy about it, but when it becomes necessary, probably later next week, Derrick, Mike, Sean and Troy may need to temporarily move to another base, at least until we get the secondary leadership structure built."

Troy wondered, "Where could we move to?"

Keith smiled, "Take a townhouse, dude."

Mike reminded, "We all have access to Alden and could get anywhere we need to be."

Turning to Kaleo and Tory, Derrick teased, "You two could adopt a few kids. That would free up a few dorm rooms."

Tory blushed and began sweating. Kaleo laughed, "You're nuts!"

"My nuts," Mike softly joked. Derrick decided to have Mike for dessert, leaned over and munched on his hubby's shoulder.

Prez tapped his comm-badge and called, "Paulie?"

Paulie replied, "Yeah, Prez?"

"Give Donnie a call at the Rapid Response Base," Prez instructed. "We're expecting that this base will be loaded in a couple o' days. We're gonna need UNIT security at the Oneula Base pretty soon."

"Will do, boss."

"Thanks, bud."

Keith tapped his sub-vocal and asked, "Alden, without a Core Rimmer, how would kids from our other bases move around between bases?"

"Dimensional doors," Alden replied.

Keith's head sagged and he queried, "Pardon?"

Connecting to all the Core Rimmers, Alden giggled, "Dimensional doors can be installed at all the bases." Becoming serious, Alden explained, "They're voice controlled, so the kids would just say where they want to go then walk through the doorway and arrive. It's like transporting, but instead of being from anywhere to anywhere, it's more controlled. For example, if dimensional doors were installed at every base dining room, then kids could walk from base-to-base as easy as walking from room-to-room. That includes other Clan bases; all of them will have at least one."

Sean grinned, "Having them at the school and FYS buildings too would be excellent."

Troy nodded and smirked, "There would be no chance of being late for school."

"Or a doctor appointment," Sean added.

Prez asked, "Who does the installations?"

Alden answered, "AI Division handles that." He then asked, "Shall I coordinate that for you, Prez?"

Prez answered, "Definitely. Let's try to get them installed this weekend; in every dining room, the school buildings and the FYS buildings. Priority authorization."

Smirking devilishly, Keith joked, "I'm gonna have a chat with Sean Short about blond forgetfulness."

Overhearing this, Dee and Sammy, both blond, shouted, "DAD!" Derrick and Sean simply glared and smirked evilly at Keith.

Corey went one step further. He tapped his sub-vocal and silently ordered, "Alden, Keith needs a dip in the diving well. Do the honors, please." Keith disappeared from the dining room and found himself falling twenty feet into the diving well.

Giggling his butt off, John scanned each of the three blond Core Rimmers to find out what had happened to his oldest brother. Settling on Corey, John loudly laughed, "I love it! You should've dunked him in the North Atlantic!"

Corey grinned, "Next blond joke, I will."

Smiling widely, but shaking his head sadly, Drew huffed, "We're gonna have to hide the rest of the night." Drew playfully suggested, "Let's go to the Command Center. The phasers are there." Drew and Corey stood and took their trays over to the table where Geoff and Lenny were sitting.

At the table where the quadruplets were sitting before empty plates and glasses, Ronnie's comm-badge chirped. Adam asked, "Hey Ronnie, you doing anything, bro?"

"We're just finishing up dinner," Ronnie replied.

"You didn't invite me? See if I make cookies for you next Friday!" Adam giggled in reply.

The other three brothers hummed hungrily. Ronnie sniggered, "We had country fried steak, mashed potatoes and southern gravy, and you missed it."

Adam quickly said, "Grandma Morrison's here, and she says she wants to meet the rest of her grandsons, like now. She kinda gets her way. I think Julio is the first person in history to stand up to her and survive!"

"Okay," Ronnie grinned, and then explained to his brothers, Drew and Corey, "We'll need to take a short trip to Naples, Florida."

Drew nodded, "Kewl, bro. We'll see ya later tonight?"

Ronnie nodded, "Yup, before bed time, so we don't start off on the wrong foot with Jason and Trinity."

"Mom and Dad," the other three brothers corrected.

Suddenly, with all four still sitting at the table, they transported away.

Corey softly giggled, "Alden, they weren't standing for transport."

Alden laughed, "I know. Kerry did it. Talk about your bouncy touch-downs!"

Seeing that Bruce had finished eating, Peter hurried over to him asking, "Ya wanna go for a little sight seeing tour?"

"Sure," Bruce quickly agreed.

While walking with Bruce over to where Jim Hundser was clearing his table, Peter explained what had happened during the course of the day at Kaho'olawe, constantly getting tongue tied just saying the island's name. Bruce was giggling his butt off by the time they reached Jim. Peter called John, Stephen and Frankie over to join them on the tour. Peter and his five guests popped out of the dining room.

Shaking his head and standing up to clear the table, Prez chuckled, "The less I know, the better." Stopping at his sons' table, Prez gathered Richie's tray. The other Core Rimmer couples stood to take their trays to the dishwasher.

Dee wondered, "Where's Daddy at, Poppa?"

"Learning," Prez softly chuckled.

Gathering his own tray of trash, Gage asked, "Do you have to work tonight, Pop?"

"Nope," Prez answered, "Uncle Drew's in charge tonight."

"Kewl!" shouted Gage, Dee and Sammy.

From the other side of the same table, Drew wondered, "How much longer, Prez?"

Prez shrugged, "Until tomorrow morning. We won't be going to school." Realizing that Drew had no idea what had happened earlier that day, Prez carefully explained, "There was a bit of an issue at school. It was enough for us to give up jazz band."

Drew groaned, "Sorry, bro."

Prez shrugged, "It's no biggie. We get to play every day, right here, for all our kids."

Corey sighed, "We know you dudes busted your butts most of the summer though."

"It wasn't wasted," Prez assured. "We learned kewl tunes. We might even get Troy to learn one or two of 'em, if he's interested."

Standing with his tray, Sammy asked, "So you won't have to leave the base tomorrow, Pop?"

Leading the pack towards the dishwasher, Prez said, "That's right, we're here with all you guys from now on." Hearing that, Richie, Geoff, Lenny and Dillon became more enthused. They suddenly and loudly squealed joyfully. Everyone that didn't already know the Core Rimmers would be around more, now knew.

Peter, Bruce, Jim, John, Stephen and Frankie arrived at number ten Downing Street, Kaho'olawe. All of them had a good laugh about the address then started walking up the deserted street. Jim was voicing how completely amazed he was. During dinner conversation, he knew what work Carl had performed that day, but didn't realize the extent, since Carl was mostly transporting to and from Kaho'olawe with machines and materials. The boys were happily chit-chatting and taking notice of buildings similar to what they were already familiar with. They approached Broadway and the very well lit intersection of Broadway and Downing Street.

Sopping wet, with a towel wrapped over his shoulder, Keith returned to the dinning room, looking for the blond bastard that had him dunked.

Troy walked past with Sean. Sean pleasantly said, "We're gonna check on Troy's mom." With Mike and their kids, Derrick calmly headed for the kitchen dishwasher, but didn't even seem to notice Keith.

Exiting the kitchen, Drew noticed Keith though. Quickly turning around, he stopped Corey, Geoff and Lenny. Drew swiftly ordered, "Alden, transport us home, to my bedroom." They disappeared from the kitchen.

Meeting with Prez and their boys as they were coming out of the kitchen, Keith looked around for Corey and Drew. "Where'd they go, baby?"

"Who?" Prez wondered.

Keith smiled, "My brother and the evil blond."

Prez glanced around then shrugged and grinned, "They were just here. Obviously, they're hiding from you."

Widely smiling at Keith, Dee teased, "You was bein' bad, daddy."

Grabbing hold of his son, Keith tickled Dee mercilessly. Prez noticed Kaleo and Tory near the tables where many of the San Diego kids were at. In Tory's arms was five-year-old Mark Fikes. Kaleo had six-year-old Leonard Santana planted on his hip. Interrupting Keith's playful torture of Dee, Prez pointed and prodded, "Check it out, babe."

Pulling Dee close and hugging him tight, Keith followed Prez's arm then grinned, "It's only a matter of time."

Prez tapped his comm-badge, calling "Drew?"

Drew giggled, "What's up, bro?"

"There are some Anaheim kids looking around, prob'ly for you and Corey."

Drew laughed, "Is Keith still on the warpath?"

Keith smiled, "I don't get mad, I get even."

Drew and Corey howled laughing. Drew then giggled, "We'll meet you by the pools."

Corey giggled, "I'm gonna get wet soon anyway."

"When you least expect it," Keith warned.

Keith's mom, Renee and Carmella approached Keith and Prez. Jennifer said, "I was just called by Hawaii Medical Center East. There are two girls, orphaned today, that need a place to live. I'll take my little ladies with me to get them."

Prez asked, "Do you want any of us to come along, mom?"

"No, I don't think that will be necessary," Jennifer Hundser smiled. "I'll have my security with us."

Prez nodded, "Okay. Do you know how old the girls are?"

She answered, "Thirteen-year-old twins, I understand."

"We'll let Drew and Corey know," Keith said.

Jennifer said, "After I pick them up, I'll take them to their hotel to get their things."

Keith moaned, "Aw, more vacationers?"

Jennifer nodded and sighed. She looked down to ask Carmella and Renee, "Ready ladies?"

Renee and Carmella chorused, "Ready, Momma." Jennifer and her two daughters walked away.

Heading for the door with Keith and their boys, Prez tapped his sub-vocal asking, "What do you know about these two orphaned girls from Hawaiian Medical Center East, Alden."

Alden answered, "Their parents were involved in a car accident on H-3 this morning. The father was D.O.A at the hospital. The mother passed earlier this evening. That's all I have, Prez."

Derrick and Mike caught up with Keith and Prez. Derrick said, "Dillon and Jonah want to watch a movie. How about we get all the little kids together in the auditorium for a flick?"

Keith nodded and smiled, "Good idea."

Prez stepped up on a chair and had Alden connect him to the base PA "We're going to head over to the auditorium for a movie. I know we've got 'Toy Story' in our library." Prez didn't need to ask if anyone was interested. Squeals and shouts burst forth. Kids began heading for the door along with some of the adults.

Keith grinned, "To infinity and beyond!"

On Kaho'olawe and crossing Broadway, Peter's group of sightseers had to pause because they heard a distant loud "MEEP-MEEP!" A roadrunner speedily ran down the street, kicking up a trail of dust, that was followed by a racing coyote, complete with fork, knife and bib.

"What the heck?" Stephen, Bruce and Frankie excitedly hollered. Peter bent over and cracked up laughing. At the stunned expressions of the boys, Jim also bellowed loud laughter.

John giggled, "Mikyvis illusions?"

"Uh huh," Peter giggled, still in hysterics.

Catching his breath, Bruce looked up and around the approaching block. In large brightly lit lettering on the corner facade of the building, Bruce read 'Downing Gardens'. It was an enormous amphitheater building, similar to the auditorium in Ewa Beach. Soon Bruce realized that only colors and distance made this building seem different. The group continued walking, but everyone was certain what they were seeing. It took only another minute for Bruce to see the plaque that Peter had erected in memory of Bruce's parents. Bruce stopped to read the plaque. Shivering and shedding happy tears, Bruce wiped his eyes then embraced Peter. The two boys remained attached in a hug for a long minute. Beginning to walk further up Downing Street, Peter explained that all the streets thus far built were named after the many Clan Short families. They didn't go very far before deciding to return home.

In their bedroom, working from their Linux computer on division web pages while Geoff and Lenny played video games, Corey turned to Drew wondering, "Is this a trick? I thought we were meeting at the pools?"

No longer interested in 'Sonic the Hedgehog', Geoff turned, yelling to Drew; "Let's go, Daddy!"

Drew tapped his sub-vocal and asked, "Alden, are they really going to watch a movie?"

Alden giggled, "I hope so. Most of the Clan is heading to the auditorium."

Standing up, Drew said, "Okay, let's beat the rush. Alden, transport us and our boys to the auditorium lobby."

Corey stood and giggled, "I'm getting wet." As soon as the four boys were gathered, Alden transported them. Drew and Corey began powering up the building.

Behind the first pack of kids entering the auditorium, Kaleo and Tory walked in. Kaleo said, "Power up the concession stand, Drew. We'll get some popcorn popped." Kids went there and lined up, ready for candies, popcorn and sodas.

Leaving their boys at the concession stand, Prez and Keith went up to the projector booth to figure out how to load and thread the film. Reading the directions and following the diagrams, they got the reels of film prepared.

An additional bonus, Keith and Prez had seen the movie several times. Once the concession stand was cleaned up, all the Core Rimmers and Reyes took a stroll to tell the available Clan moms and their dads where they were going, and then took a week off at Archmania. During their visit, the band rehearsed a lot and got some much needed relaxation time, bonding the Core team together even tighter. The Des Moines leadership team had the same idea and arrived at Archmania at almost the same time the Rimmers had. Returning to Ewa Beach, only about two minutes after they had left, the Core Rimmers split off in various directions while their sons returned to the auditorium and 'Toy Story'.

Drew and Corey walked the little ones there. Geoff realized he needed to go to the boys' room and Lenny thought it was a good idea. While the rest of the boys returned to the theater, Drew and Corey accompanied their sons to the restroom.

A few minutes later, they stepped out of the boy's room and back into the empty lobby. They all noticed strange things happening at the concession stand and came to an abrupt halt. Popped popcorn was un-popping itself and flying back up into the machine as whole kernels. The plastic soda cups, neatly stacked and arranged by size, were mixing themselves into balanced sets of upside down and right-side-up large, medium and small cups. Lenny and Geoff cracked up and looked up at the perplexed grins on their dad's and poppa's faces.

Corey checked with Drew, sniggering, "A Mikyvis?"

Shaking his head, Drew smiled, "Probably not. I can think of only one warped sense of humor that would pull this stunt to get our attention."

Together, Corey and Drew hollered, "QUINT!"

With a flash of light, Quint appeared before the four boys.

He blinked at them and in his best 'innocent little boy' voice, said, "Yes? You called?"

Corey, Geoff and Lenny roared laughing. Drew chortled, "If your gonna play innocent, maybe you could stop unpopping the corn and return the cups as they were too?"

"What? Oh, that... was just... entertaining... ummm...." Quint fumbled for a good excuse, then gave up. "I was entertaining myself. Sorry, but we superior beings need light entertainment at times..."

He snapped his fingers and the room filled with warm, sweet smelling popcorn up to the waists of the smallest of the kids. He blinked, tapping his fingers. "Dammit! Keeps bugging out on me... I'll deal with it, don't worry!" he grumbled to the others, but the twinkle in his eyes said that it was all under control.

Corey was too busy eating some of the popcorn to say much, and Lenny was already trying to swim in the stuff.

"Think I have it! There!" Quint chortled as he made most of the popcorn vanish. There was still a mound of the stuff around each kid and pre-teen.

Drew giggled, "Did you need something, or were you just bored?"

Around his popcorn stuffed mouth, Corey grinned, "No Lilliputians? All this popcorn could feed them for years."

"Yes, yes, no and agreed," Quint giggled.

Drew sniggered, "What could we mere mortals do for our Lord and Master?"

Again, Levi's hand appeared and slapped Quint.

"Well, minions," Quint grouched, as he fended off the still slapping hand, "I'd like an anti-slap head protective device, Mikyvis strength, then... buggerit! Levi! Go chase a comet or something! Where was I?" he asked them as Levi's hand vanished, leaving the little boys' giggles echoing through the air.

Covering his eyes and forcing himself to speak through his laughter, Drew replied, "You're in Ewa Beach, about to tell us what you needed."

"Right!" Quint shouted, and then told them, "You're needed back at Archmania, four days ago, but you can't know what you know, and certainly can't say what you know, so I'll just put a little lock in place, so we'll move forward, back in time."

Corey, Drew, Geoff and Lenny all grunted, "Huh?"

Quint huffed then softly grumbled, "Humans. Just come with me." He snapped his fingers, taking all four Rimmers back to Archmania, but left the piles of popcorn on the floor.

Mrs. Marr walked in just in time to see them all vanish. She looked at the piles of popcorn and sighed. Then five pairs of hands appeared from out of nowhere and started gathering up the popcorn with 'ACME popcorn Hoovers'. They vanished quickly, with all the popcorn gone.

She turned around, exited the auditorium and headed for her Valium supply.

John went to the pools with Stephen and kept on walking, seemingly standing on the water. Most of the teenagers were there too; making new friends and forming bonds. Arriving from Kaho'olawe, Bruce excitedly told John and many of his friends that a memorial to his parents had been built on the Clan's new island. Sean found his roommate Horacio, sharing a hovering lounge chair with Sonia. Sean and Troy found their own lounge chair to share. Sean called for John to do the honors. Soon, John had levitated an additional twenty lounge chairs and their occupants. Testing his newly discovered telekinetic powers, John began lifting weights at the indoor rec center. With Stephen holding him close, John realized he was levitating close to two tons and it wasn't much of an effort; his eyes hadn't even changed to shining azure blue. John and Stephen floated to the diving well. There, he held diving boys up in the air to do as many somersaults as they liked before releasing them to drop into the water. Girls on the slide were sliding back up and down over and over again until they were loudly laughing.

Stephen cackled, "You're a one man amusement park, hon."

John giggled, "It's fun for me too."

Kids from the auditorium began arriving at the pools. Derrick, Mike, Kaleo and Tory also joined the Clan at the pools. By the time Drew, Corey, Prez and Keith arrived, John had their fathers and the three remaining mothers hovering around in lounge chairs too. Seeing John's eyes shining blue, Drew pointed out to Corey, Keith and Prez that free-weights and Nautilus weights were also hovering in the indoor rec center.

Keith asked, "How much weight do you think you're holding up, bro?"

"I have no idea!" John laughed. "I lost count after two tons. Probably close to three tons or a little over." Reading Prez's thoughts, John levitated Drew, Corey, Keith and Prez so they were hovering twenty feet in the air, looking down at their Clan and the base.

Prez figured that maybe twenty or thirty of more than two-hundred people were not floating around. Prez shouted down at John, "Is any of this an effort at all, bro?"

John hollered up, "With Stephen, not really." He then levitated himself and Stephen nearer to his brothers and said, "I started with kids on lounge chairs then added more a little at a time."

Prez grinned, "Let's see what you can manage all at once."

Glancing around, John decided it was a good question. Lowering everyone, everything, himself and Stephen, John explained what he was about to do to all the kids and adults. He asked everyone to stay where they were or stand still. He concentrated on all the pool furniture, people and weights in the rec center then asked Stephen to step back and powered up. All at once, everyone and everything surrounding the pool lifted four feet off the ground, including himself and Stephen.

Turning to his dad, Prez asked, "How much do you think he's lifting, dad?"

Jim Hundser, Bill Seaver and Rob Gibbons began bouncing ideas back and forth. "Figuring two hundred and thirty kids at an average of a hundred pounds, lawn furniture and weights, I'd estimate about hundred tons," Jim Hundser answered, and then glared at his youngest son. "Does this hurt at all?"

Shaking his head, John giggled, "Nope! My head feels tingly, but otherwise, I feel fine." All the older boys began giggling and laughing because John's 'head' was tingling.

Jennifer Hundser, her security team, two daughters and the two recently orphaned teenage girls arrived at the base. They walked together to the pools, where Jennifer assumed their Clan would be. Looking directly into hovering legs, Jen didn't know who to complain to first – John, Preston or her husband, Jim.

Sensing a brewing storm, John looked around and focused on his mother. John loudly laughed, "We were doing normal stuff! All the kids watched a movie. All the teenagers came out here. We were just curious!"

Jen sighed, "If you would all please land, I could introduce our two newest girls."

Lowering everyone and everything to the ground, John shifted his focus to the two new arrivals. He could hear their thoughts, but it wasn't what John expected. He expected separate surface thoughts, each of the two girls having their own ideas. Instead, he heard the two girls telepathically conversing about the twists of this day, including the surprise of floating people. Taking Stephen by the hand, John swiftly pulled his husband over to the girls. 'Hi,' John pleasantly sent. 'You're telepathic too, huh?'

Stunned, the two girls confirmed with each other that yes, they could hear this boy's voice in their minds.

In seconds, the entire Clan were surrounding seven females. Jen Hundser introduced John, Stephen and the rest of the Clan leaders to Caitlin and Ida Durand.

John telepathically called Cesar and Felipe forward, so sets of twin telepaths could meet. While Prez performed his duty and greeted the girls, John sensed something different about these girls. Leaving the pack of kids to welcome the new arrivals, John and Stephen went inside the empty pool house.

Stephen felt John's concern and asked, "What's wrong, hon?"

"I think... no, I feel, they're gonna be N-Gen," John answered. "I dunno," John sighed, "I'm an empathic N-Gen, so if I were in their shoes, having lost both parents at once, I'd be freaking out. Is there a chance that tonight, tomorrow or the day of the funeral they could turn N-Gen? I can't help them both, I'm not even trained to help one of 'em." He looked at the wall clock. Nine-thirty-five at night would be eight-thirty-five the next morning in the U.K. John tapped his comm-badge and called, "John Hundser to Riti Evans."

Riti answered, "Good morning, John."

In the back ground, John heard many other voices, mostly kids, and perhaps some adults as well. John grinned, "It's night time here," and then presented his concerns about the twins to Riti. He wondered,

"What's goin' on? It sounds busy there."

"Oh, well, things are a tiny bit crazed here," Riti offered. "There's civil unrest from yesterday; people are bitching, moaning and whining like a bunch of little fucking babies, about the American company that messed with those kids, so we're monitoring the situation." Riti hurried, "About the twin girls, don't worry. Yes, something similar may have pushed you, but it's not stress; it's stressing their abilities. They may or may not be N-Gen, it depends on whether or not they have the gene. You can test it yourself, with a tricorder."

Relieved, John smiled, "Kewl. I didn't know there was a biological test."

"There wasn't," Riti giggled, "until you. The triplets monitored you during your transition, bro. Check your Intel console for specifics. All we know is there."

John grinned, "Thanks, Reet. This helps a bunch. I'll check out the girls."

Riti giggled, "You do and you had better float far above where Stephen can reach! Riti out."

Playing along, Stephen suspiciously glared, "He's right about that!"

Blushing, John grinned mischievously. Stephen huffed, turned and walked away. John levitated his husband and pulled him back. Stephen loudly laughed, "John! Put me down!"

Approaching Stephen and looking directly into his knees, John thoughtfully hummed and adjusted the levitation height so that he was looking at Stephen's crotch. Smiling up at his husband, John shared,

"I don't need to kneel down no more. Kewl!" Holding Stephen's butt in place, John ravenously mouthed Stephen's naughty-bits through his clothes.

Hysterical, Stephen screamed, "YOU'RE TWISTED!" and ran his fingers through John's hair. John hummed affirmatively and pushed Stephen into the boy's room to finish what he had begun.

The female Rimmers had taken control from Prez. Caitlin and Ida were more than ready to call an end to a horrendous day. They were shown the dormitory, where they chose a room and began unpacking their suitcases. For the remainder of the evening, they had twenty-eight other girls in that dorm ready to get them food, listen and offer shoulders to cry on. Adults and parents got their little ones ready for baths and bed. Suddenly, there were only boys remaining at the pools, not including Kathleen Marr and the other adult staff still enjoying the warm evening.

From the bathroom where Geoff and Lenny were bathing, Drew tapped his comm-badge and called Prez. "Hey bro, I forgot to mention, we're pretty close to having the official Rimmer web site up and ready."

Still at the pool with Gage, Sammy and Dee, Prez smirked, "What does 'pretty close' mean?"

Drew replied, "We'll have division notices available for Kaleo to keep updated. We'll only have to review the inline documentation with Kaleo. Then, all he'll have to do is keep it up to date with text. Pages for us Core Rimmers are built, so the kids will know about each of us. The only other major portion of the site pending are blogs for the kids. Each kid will have their own page with basic stuff; a photo, date of birth, date they joined our Clan, like that. In addition, the kids can update the remainder of their page with whatever additional information they want." A loud splash was heard followed by Geoff and Lenny giggling and Corey's laughter. Drew roared, "Well, you expected to get wet tonight!" Returning to his conversation with Prez, Drew chuckled, "Umm... where was I? Oh yeah, the idea we had for the kids pages was mostly for hobbies and special interests; artists can get to know other artists, musicians other musicians, and so forth. Then they can get to know each other. We'll use John's Intel database as input for the kids' pages and they'll be automatically generated every day."

Prez said, "We'll need a page for Platinum Habits too, bro."

"What for?" Drew wondered.

"The holidays are coming," Prez reminded. "We'll have at least one Christmas concert and a New Year's Eve concert. Without school jazz band, we'll be having various Clan concerts throughout the year."

Emerging from the pool house, John and Stephen walked a foot above the ground. Stephen's mother got up from her poolside chair and started towards them. The two boys lowered to the ground. Kathleen Marr said, "I've figured out what I need to do and where I need to be. I felt useful today for the first time in a long time. This morning, while I was cleaning the house, I saw the spare bedroom on the first floor. For me, an entire apartment is too much, unless you boys will be living with me."

Having already understood the surface thoughts his mother-in-law had, John smiled, "We're almost always spending nights in the basement nest with the kids. I don't think that will be changing very soon. Tonight, we'll have a bunch of newbies with us down there."

Kathleen smirked at John. "I think the best place I could be is in the spare bedroom of your parents' house. It's more than sufficient for me. I could be a housekeeper and cook for the kids at the Hundserts'. It helps your parents and keeps me nearby if either of you should need me."

Watching his mother closely while she spoke, Stephen turned to John and sighed, "Everything's so different here now. She misses me, hon." Turning back to his mother, Stephen reassuringly said, "Everything's perfect, ma. If you ever decide you want a single bedroom place of your own, just say so, okay?"

John nodded, "Yeah. I'm only thinking that you'd be sharing one of the upstairs bathrooms with a bunch of boys."

"That doesn't matter," Kathleen shared. "Since arriving, I've eaten every meal at the CIC dining room. I've only been sleeping and showering at the apartment. The rest of the time, I've been getting to know some of the other adults. I spoke with Madeline and she agreed, specialized housekeepers for the families would be helpful." Focusing on John, she said, "My only concern is whether your parents would want a live-in housekeeper."

Humming thoughtfully, John shrugged, "I dunno. Let's go find out. If they don't want a live-in housekeeper, we'll get a single bedroom condo for you, mom." Together, the three of them went to the Hundserts' house. When they walked inside, Keith, Drew, Corey, Jen and Jim Hundert were coming downstairs with the bathed kids. John asked Stephen, 'Do you wanna stay here with your mom or go downstairs with the kids?' John heard Stephen's silent desire to remain with his mom. John leaned over and telepathically called Carmella. He caught his littlest sister and lifted her in his arms then sent to his parents, 'Mom, dad, Stephen's mom has a good idea that she needs to share with you. While you talk with her, we'll get the kids to bed.' John, Drew, Corey and Keith led the pack of rug rats to the basement.

Jennifer asked, "What can I get for you, Kathy?" Starting for the kitchen, she suggested, "Coffee? Tea? A soft drink?"

Kathleen looked down at her son, unsure how to answer. Stephen only smiled. Kathleen implored, "Let me serve you, please?" and followed the Hundser adults. Bringing up the rear, Stephen remained close to his mom.

Without breaking her stride, Jen answered, "Now I can guess what this is about."

Jim said, "We are not wealthy. A week ago we were middle class parents raising a family."

Kathleen offered, "It seems you've very much completed raising your family."

Understandingly, Stephen meekly offered, "My mom just wants to be near me. Since this is where I am, mom's only trying to say that she wants to be here." Jen began filling a kettle with water.

Jim smiled at Stephen and Kathleen saying, "That's clear. What we're saying is that we won't have her acting as a maid or treated as such."

Kathleen sighed, "There's not much more I could do except housekeeping. With all the children that sleep here and eat breakfast here, I want to help."

Putting a filled kettle of water on the stove, Jen said, "Today was different, Kathy. Normally, the kids split off for the CIC dining room or the dorms for showers. Their parents or grandparents were here, so they stayed here for breakfast. On a normal day, only our own children and grandchildren might stay here for breakfast."

Offering Kathy a seat at the dinette table, Jim added, "Troy's mother is a housekeeper and a Clan mother too now. You're exactly like her and us; working for the Clan as a whole." Kathleen and Stephen sat down.

"You both work full time for Federation Youth Services," Kathleen observed. "While you were working, I was here from ten until almost one cleaning the kitchen, dining room, basement and all the bathrooms. It made me feel good, like I was contributing."

Taking a seat at the dinette table, Jen warmly smiled, "That's all anyone ever needs, isn't it?" Kathleen nodded then Jen continued, "We noticed the cleaned rooms. In the mornings, we have quite a gathering here; less than today, but we have eighteen kids and grand-kids."

Jen assured, "If you'd like to be a housekeeper, that's fine. We could use help here and around the entire compound. Please don't consider yourself our maid. I can only take so much change. That would make me crazier."

Gesturing towards the spare bedroom, Kathleen asked, "Could I move my things in there?" Jim and Jen nodded. Kathleen smiled, "Thank you, so much. I can't see myself staying in a big two-bedroom apartment or a slightly smaller one bedroom unit."

Jen nodded, "As mothers, we need to be near our kids." The kettle began to whistle and she stood to prepare cups of tea. Always listening, Alden heard and saw the conversation. He transported all of Mrs. Marr's things from the two bedroom townhouse selected Tuesday afternoon to the Hundserts' first floor spare bedroom. He carefully broke in through the ceiling mounted speakers; "Excuse me, your stuff is already moved, Mrs. Marr. What was hanging in the closet there is now hanging here. Your belongings from the dresser are on the bed in that bedroom."

Jim and Jen thanked Alden. Kathleen Marr was too flabbergasted to speak. The two Hunders began a more in depth explanation of Alden, Daileass and Draco. They hadn't yet learned of the other Clan AI's; George, Kerry and Icarus.

Heavy footsteps were heard climbing the stairs. John sent to Stephen, 'Hey sexy, ya wanna roll around above the couch?' The basement door opened. Keith, Drew and Corey emerged.

Stephen giggled then stood, kissed his mom on the cheek and softly said, "I'll see you in the morning." Stephen hurried to the basement door then skipped down the steps.

Keith told the adults, "The kids are asleep. John and Stephen will be down there with them. We're going to enjoy a quiet night by the pool."

Jim nodded and said, "Drew, program the doors to allow Mrs. Marr access to our house, please? She'll be living here with us and Stephen."

Drew smiled, "Kewl. This will only take a minute, Mrs. Marr." Leading the way to the kitchen sliding glass doors, Drew explained, "It's hand-print and voice-print activated. Just place your hand on the plate and speak your name."

Frankie walked in through the sliding glass doors. He waved and sighed, "Daddy says it's time to get ready for bed and I should come in now."

Jim smiled, "You know the way. Sleep well, Frankie."

Jen stopped Keith and whispered in her son's ear. Keith told his mother that they had just gone on a week long vacation, during which time the band learned and rehearsed two dozen new songs. Jen didn't believe it until Keith giggled and took his shirt off. Jennifer squinted suspiciously and quickly tugged down a corner of her eldest son's boardies. Seeing Keith's tanned back had indeed faded and was nearer the same white shade as his butt, Jennifer appreciatively nodded, "Thank goodness. I was about to have a fit."

Keith giggled, "We know and took care of it, mom. After last night, we needed it." He said goodnight to his mom, dad and Mrs. Marr, then went to the pool to find Prez. Corey waited until Drew was finished with Mrs. Marr. Drew and Corey then went to the pool. All the Core Rimmers were there with many of their teenage Clan. Jennifer served the tea and Jim pulled a package of shortbread cookies from the cupboard.

Once alone with Jen and Jim Hundser, Kathleen said, "I cannot begin to thank you... well, for everything. Stephen's changed so much in so short a time. For changing my scared boy into a more secure young man, I'm proud to be involved with Clan Short. I intend to show it too. I've done housekeeping before, at smaller motels in Hilo. This house, with all the kids running in and out, needs a housekeeper so neither of you need to worry about anything."

Understanding Kathleen's perspective, Jim said, "You're part of the family now. Keith and Preston used to wash their own bedsheets, but they didn't have jobs then either. Our entire family used to participate in Sunday house cleaning. With all of us working together, the boys would be done and out by one the latest. Now however, I'm certain that won't be happening like it used to. We can and will help when we can, most likely on weekends."

Jen offered, "Our boys only ate dinner here one of five nights, on Sunday. They're happy to join the Clan at the CIC dining room for most meals. Did you notice that the upstairs bathrooms have laundry chutes?"

"No," Kathleen answered, "I did look around upstairs though. There are two full size beds in three of the five bedrooms."

Pointing at the lower level bath and utility room, Jim said, "There are commercial sized washers and dryers in there. So far, our boys haven't slept in their rooms. Carmella and Renee, our two girls, slept upstairs for a short while last night. At some point they must've felt isolated though and decided to go down to the nest. I was surprised when they came up from the basement this morning."

Jen nodded and told Kathleen, "What we had planned for the bedrooms Saturday has already changed. Keith and Preston will likely move into one of the townhomes with their four boys. The smaller bedroom that was originally going to be for John and Bruce was considered John's and Stephen's room. Now with Frankie, even that's up in the air. The next room, with two full size beds will be for Bruce, Dewi and Kokaku. Carmella and Renee have claimed the last of the five bedrooms, with the mauve carpeting. Drew, Corey, Geoff and Lenny will take the largest room that was originally going to be for Keith, Preston, Dee and Richie."

Jim's eyebrows rose and he thought aloud, "Perhaps Frankie would want to share a room with Bruce, Dewi and Kokaku?"

Kathleen grinned, "That's a very large family; ten boys, two girls and three adults, including myself, and assuming that Keith and Preston move out with their boys. Since they're still living here, add six boys."

Jim softly gasped, "My God, she's right!" Jen smiled at her husband and Jim shrugged, "I lost count."

Relaxing, Kathleen teased, "Are you sure you don't need a full time housekeeper?"

Leaning back in his chair and munching on a cookie, Jim smiled, "Perhaps so."

Jen incredulously cackled, "JIM!"

Jim chuckled, "With three of us, we'll be washing clothes, sheets and towels from sunrise Saturdays until bedtime Sunday nights; dusting, mopping floors and vacuuming between loads; and then there will be the never ending task of folding and ironing the cleaned laundry, remaking nine beds and we all still have to eat at some point." Both women broke into fits of hysterics. Jim loudly said, "You're hired. And do you have three friends for the other three families to hire?"

While the adults were chatting in the Hundserts' dinette, Derrick and Mike were poolside, softly talking with their boys. Reyes, Jonah, Randy and Dillon wanted to spend the night together, as a family. This had been brewing since Monday night, Derrick and Mike learned. Tuesday night, nothing had changed because of the weddings and concert. Wednesday night, with the insanity of the orphanage operations, they again returned to the nest by default. The only question to be answered was where they would sleep that night, at the Seiberts' home or the Gibbons' home. The Seiberts' boys, Chad, Herbert, Sung and Kawazoe were pulled into the conversation. Of the Gibbons' four boys, three were already at the Hundserts' basement nest. Only Ben Hatcher was still at the pool and he was asked where he would like to sleep. Ben couldn't make up his mind; he wanted to be with his brothers, but also wanted to hang out with Jonah and Reyes. To make the decision easier, they decided to spend the night at the Seiberts' house and transport the sleeping boys to the newly created family nest. The nine boys said good night and went home with Carl Seibert. Dee, Gage and Sammy kissed their fathers good night soon thereafter then went to the nest.

Keith whispered to Prez, "Mom warned me that we needed to take some time off. I told her we did and proved it."

Prez nodded and smiled, "The faded tan line?"

Keith nodded, "How a place can be so warm and pretty, but not give us any tan at all, I'll never understand."

"Something about cellular regeneration supposedly," Prez shrugged.

On their way to their new home for the night, the Taylors, Jason, Trinity and the quadruplets stopped by the pool. Prez introduced all the other Core Rimmers to the adults, then offered to walk the family home. They politely declined, assuring they could find their way easily enough, and the various time zone differences had them all feeling quite tired.

By ten-thirty, most of the Clan had left the pools to get ready for bed, but the ten eldest Core Rimmers remained. Prez and Keith began teasing Kaleo and Tory, wondering when they were going to start a family. Kaleo and Tory hadn't realized that Mark and Leonard were becoming more than a little attached. As recent orphans, Kaleo and Tory worried that they didn't have what it takes to become nurturing parents. It was Drew and Corey that corrected the perception, reminding them that the kids had figured it out all by themselves.

Sean and Troy began giggling. The next thing they knew, the other eight were picking some little boys that Sean and Troy could adopt. At least fifteen of the five- and six-year-old boys' names were rattled off. Sean and Troy were just about to leave the others to their over active imaginations when all their comm-badges chirped.

Still smiling at the silliness, Prez tapped his comm-badge and answered, "Prez here. What's up?"

"It's Paulie, Prez. Local news is reporting that King Aalona's Palace is under attack."

All ten boys stood and began running towards the CIC Prez asked, "Do we know who's attacking?"

John and Stephen levitated and sped upstairs. Wearing stern expressions, the two boys swiftly floated past their parents. John telekinetically opened the sliding door and raced to the Command Center with his husband. Jim, Jen and Kathy nervously glanced at each other then hurried to the living room and turned on the television.

"No, the news hasn't reported that," Paulie told Prez. "Judging by what I'm seeing on TV, there's a fire-fight in progress."

Prez asked, "Our shields are still active?"

Paulie answered, "Yes, Sir."

At the indoor rec center, Nathan Hayes was teaching Brice Glotzbecker how to play handball when his comm-badge chirped. Nathan had just slammed the ball to the wall for Brice when he suddenly disappeared from the room, leaving Brice standing there watching the ball bounce. After a few moments, Brice picked up the ball and then returned it to the small storage bin in the equipment room. During that time, Brice considered why Nathan had left so suddenly. He ran out of the rec center and hurried to his dorm room to tell his roommate, Gregory Holton that something was going on. Greg was in the common room, watching 'Airplane' on a movie channel with several other laughing boys. Soon they all knew the Core Rimmers were at it again. Assuming more kids were being rescued, none thought to change the channel on the TV. Scuttle-butt began flying through that dorm and into the others.

Prez ordered, "Paulie, alert all base security. Notify Kekoa to get his troops on base immediately. Alden, try to get the King on the line. Make sure we're safe and let's get the King's family to safety. Notify Donnie to be prepared to offer assistance. The UNIT can do way more than palace guards or police."

Amazed, the ten Core Rimmers watched John and Stephen run towards the CIC, as fast as Olympic sprinters, at least a foot off the ground. John and Stephen outpaced the remaining ten and were the first to arrive in the Command Center. Already at the Intel console with Nathan, John was making entries and ordering Lieutenant Vorik to bring up camera video of the exterior of the King's palace. Each of the four intersections surrounding 'Iolani Palace had cameras and provided eight views of the perimeter.

Immediately upon entering the Command Center, Prez saw flashes of gun fire on the displays and ordered, "Get me an estimate of how many are attacking." He happened to notice the time on the digital clock. It was ten-forty-seven, exactly twenty-four hours since the California orphanage operations.

Paulie said, "I have Donnie on the line, Prez."

Prez nodded, "Patch me in." Drew went to a station and commanded satellite surveillance of Honolulu, providing a ninth video image. Derrick ordered Alden to begin recording all activity in the room. Every order and all video was to be documented so it could be reviewed afterward.

A second later, another video screen activated. Donnie asked, "You'd like us to assist the King, Director O'Brian?" In the background, Drew had the satellite zoom in on 'Ioloni Palace. Prez noticed that the silver eagle on Donnie's collar had been replaced with a single silver star.

Kekoa raced into the room as Prez replied, "Yes, General. The King is now the only head of government this country has. We're getting an estimate on the number of attackers."

Kekoa reported, "The Pacific Rim detachment is on base, Director O'Brian."

Turning to Kekoa briefly, Prez nodded and softly said, "Excellent." Returning his attention to the video display, Prez nodded for Donnie to continue.

Donnie said, "Daileass is estimating eighty armed attackers. We're coordinating with the police to cordon off the area. We'll have three hundred troops at the palace within two-minutes. So you're aware, conditions in London are getting worse. Resources are being dispatched to the U.K. Reports from the Northeast Division indicate unrest in New York City and Washington, D.C. as well."

Paulie loudly said, "Prez, I have King Aalona on the line. Audio only."

Prez nodded to Paulie, "Patch him in and let Donnie participate."

Over the Command Center's speakers, King Aalona said, "Director O'Brian?"

"Here, Majesty. Are you safe?"

"For the moment," the King nervously replied. "We are under Vulcan provided shielding in the Queen's bedroom with our son. Several of my staff have been injured. It appears that militants have penetrated our fence and are in trees outside the palace."

Prez nodded, "We'll have military support there to assist in about a minute, Majesty."

"They have medical training and can transport out with your injured, Sire," Donnie added.

Prez said, "Majesty, we must insure your safety and that of your family. This entire base is shielded and we have secure shelter available, under ground."

"I agree," the King said.

Prez ordered, "Alden, coordinate immediate transport of the King, Queen and Prince to our shelter. As soon as that's complete, transport Keith to the shelter to welcome them."

Alden reported, "Synchronizing shield portals for transport."

Prez turned to Keith and prompted, "Get them calm and comfy, T'hy'la. Whatever it takes." They kissed then Keith stepped back from Prez. The audio channel from the King went silent. Keith disappeared from the Command Center.

Donnie said, "Thirty-seconds until deployment."

A large explosion occurred on the satellite surveillance screen, causing most of the Rimmers to gasp. Paulie shouted, "They've got RPG's, Donnie. It looks like they're assaulting the palace door to enter the premises."

Prez smirked and muttered, "Too friggin' late, assholes." Donnie grinned. Prez said, "Donnie, would I be asking too much if I said that our troops should be ordered to disable only? I want answers that won't come from corpses."

Donnie sighed, "Yes, Sir. This is an attack on a sovereign government leader. They're not limiting their actions. For us to do so would be dangerous and possibly fatal to our personnel. Emily will be in command at the location."

Understanding that Donnie's partner and other Clan members would be jeopardized, Prez huffed then griped, "I'm gonna kick someone right in the nuts for this." In the background, Prez heard Daileass assuring Donnie that the Pacific Rim Division headquarters were secured.

Kekoa moved and stood beside Prez at attention then softly called, "Sir?" Prez turned to Kekoa. "Our detachment is prepared for anything that may be required," Kekoa reported. "I had everyone grab their gear and immediately transport."

Prez forced a smile and offered, "Excellent. Hang out here, Kekoa. I may need your advice." Kekoa obediently nodded.

Meanwhile, in the CIC basement, Keith bowed before the King and forced a bright smile saying, "Welcome to Pacific Rim Division headquarters, Your Majesties."

Relieved, King Aalona nodded and sighed, "I wish it were under more favorable circumstances."

"You're safe here, Sire," Keith assured. "This basement is about thirty feet underground." Keith warmly smiled at the Queen and the young Prince, who appeared to be about six or seven years old, saying, "Please make yourselves at home. Can I get you anything?"

Soft drinks or snacks?"

Turning to his wife and son, King Aalona grinned, "May I introduce Keith Hundser, second in command of Clan Short Pacific Rim Division." Turning back to Keith, the King said, "This is Queen Adamina Aalona and our son, Kaimi."

Bowing again slightly, Keith smiled, "My pleasure, Your Highnesses."

The Queen locked eyes with Keith and smiled, "Please address me as Adamina, Keith."

"Momma?" Kaimi softly called. Queen Adamina turned to her son and he said, "There's nothing 'cept beds, tables and chairs in here. Do they have toys or something to play with?"

The Queen smirked at her son and sighed, "You really should try to go back to sleep."

"I ain't sleepy no more," Kaimi pouted.

Keith chuckled then ordered, "Alden, hook up a PlayStation and television for the Prince."

A moment later, the TV and game station appeared. Kaimi cheered, "Kewl!" then hurried past Keith to play.

Keith smiled, "Anything you might want or need, just call Alden and ask for it."

Queen Adamina smirked, "Perhaps some warm milk with nutmeg for Kaimi might help get him settled down?" Seconds later, a cup appeared on the table before the Queen along with a plate of cookies.

King Aalona grinned, "We must get one of those."

Keith faced the King to softly ask, "Majesty, may I have a private moment?" The King nodded and stepped away with Keith. Keith softly said, "Sire, we've assigned Clan Short Special Forces to assist with resolution of the problem at your palace. We'd like to know who may be the cause. Since Saturday, have you been threatened in any manner?"

The King huffed, "That seems to be constant in the last week. Trade ultimatums from other countries, ROH city and Island governments trying to alter decisions previously made and influence those currently being made."

"Have any of those ultimatums suggested violence of this magnitude?" Keith wondered.

"Several," the King answered. "We've been threatened with trade embargoes over availability of pineapples, for goodness sakes. I've presented that complaint to the League Of Nations." The King paused and seemed thoughtful then said, "This is a more direct threat on me, however. Perhaps... there was a brief message referring to an announcement published in the Star Advertiser on Monday. It instructed me to use certain words from that announcement to decipher a personal message. The deciphered content basically warned me against continued Diplomatic contact with Vulcan. If I persisted then I would be killed. It was not signed and I did not take it seriously at the time."

John immediately sent to Keith, 'We're on it, bro. Maybe we'll see what the King didn't.' Alden, John, Nathan and Lieutenant Vorik concentrated on Monday's Star Advertiser Classified announcements to learn what had been written privately to the King.

Keith smiled and confirmed, "We'll investigate further, Majesty." He then asked, "Can I get you anything else?"

King Aalona answered, "May I watch one of the televisions in here? I'd like to watch the news and see what's happening at my home."

"Of course," Keith answered, and then went to a nearby table where a remote control lay. He turned on the TV for the King then handed Him the remote control. "I need to return to our Command Center, Majesty. If you need anything else, including contacting myself or Prez, just ask Alden."

Uncertainly, the King wondered, "Who is Prez?"

Keith giggled, "I'm sorry, Director Preston O'Brian. He's been Prez to me since the day we met, more than seven years now." King Aalona smiled and nodded. Keith then had Alden transport him back to the Command Center.

While Keith was busy with the Royals, UNIT troops had been transported to 'Ioloni Palace. Donnie had strategically located his troops. There were one hundred and twenty troops across the street from the external perimeter fence; another one hundred and twenty within the perimeter fence, eighteen of whom were assigned to the six roof level towers; and sixty within the Palace, divided into three groups of twenty to cover each story of the structure.

The firefight was still in progress when Keith returned to the Command Center. Donnie was still on the video display and relaying status updates to the Core Rimmers. Since Prez was occupied with Lieutenant Vorik, Nathan, John and Alden, Keith went to Derrick and Mike to learn what was happening.

Derrick began summarizing Donnie's strategy then finished, "A few had entered the Palace, but were immediately overcome by the positioned UNIT troops. The Palace interior is secure now. Everyone hurt was transported to the Rapid Response Base medical facilities for treatment."

Mike explained, "Outside, we've got them sandwiched with nowhere to run. A group of four were surrounded. Two surrendered, but the other two were killed."

Keith grinned, "So we've got two in custody. We'll learn who's responsible soon enough, either from those two or from Intel." He then looked up at the nine active video screens. Gun and phaser fire was visible coming down from the towers. Suddenly, an RPG was fired from one of the towers. A large clustering of trees on the southeast corner of the lot exploded in flames. While many of the other Core Rimmers gasped at the sight, Keith groaned then muttered, "I hope that hit their guys and not any of ours."

A few moments later, Donnie called from the video screen for Prez. Keith hurried over and explained, "Prez is busy, Donnie. What've you got?" John transported to the basement shelter. While he greeted the Royals and made Kaimi feel welcome, he performed a deep scan of King Aalona.

Donnie smiled, "It's almost over, Keith. Did you see that last RPG hit?"

Keith nodded, "Yeah, that was them being hit, right?"

"Yes," Donnie replied. "That got ten of them at once. Our recon estimates three groups of three or four remaining. We've got a bigger problem looming though. From mind scans of our prisoners, we've learned that this is only the beginning of the attack. There were bombs placed in buildings somewhere around Honolulu. They don't exactly know when they're set to go off or where though. All we can do is hope that some of the remaining wounded prisoners do know."

"Holy shit, Donnie!" Keith shouted. "They're planning on blowing up other buildings?" With a deeply concerned expression, Prez spun around and faced his husband. A dozen questions raced through Keith's mind at once; which buildings; where and when; were there people in the buildings and if so, how many?

Donnie nodded and said, "We just received four more wounded prisoners. Our telepaths will scan them. As soon as I know something useful, I'll let you know, Keith." John returned to the Command Center, still chewing a cookie and then handed one to his husband.

"Thanks, Donnie. We'll be here waiting," Keith responded. He went over to see how Prez, Nathan, John and Lieutenant Vorik were coming along, since there was nothing else to do except worry.

Clearly feeling his eldest brother's concern, John said, "I pulled the announcement name from the King's memory, but the words we're supposed to choose weren't in there; the instructions were written on plain typewritten paper that he's already thrown away. We've contacted the Star Ledger to learn who's account paid for the announcement. They haven't responded yet. The AI's are playing word skip games trying to come up with a message that threatens the King. Once we get something, we'll confirm it with Him."

Keith sighed then told Prez, "I'm gonna go back to the King, baby. We need to know if anyone or anything else was threatened in the message he received."

Prez nodded, "Go ahead, T'hy'la. Now we've gotta try and prevent other attacks while still figuring out who's responsible for the first."

Keith called, "Alden, take me back to King Aalona." Arriving beside the King and startling him, Keith apologized, "Sorry, Sire. We've learned more from prisoners and I do need to ask you more about that threatening message. Was anyone or anything else threatened besides yourself?"

King Aalona frowned, "What have you learned?"

Squatting down beside the seated King so that the Queen or Prince wouldn't overhear, Keith whispered, "Bombs have been placed around Honolulu, Majesty. The prisoners did not have specifics of where or when they might go off."

Quickly glancing beyond Keith at his family, the King then assured, "Nothing was said about any other threat, but to me, demanding that I break diplomatic relations with Vulcan or, and I quote, The King would not live to regret it."

Keith confirmed, "Those were the exact words; 'The King would not live to regret it'?"

King Aalona nodded once. "Precisely those words."

John sent, 'Got it, bro. That helps a bunch.'

Keith wondered aloud, "What would hurt you and the ROH worst?"

"We have only two major industries," King Aalona answered. "Tropical fruits exports and tourism. All else is minor in comparison."

"Tourism," Keith repeated, then a shiver raced down his spine.

Almost simultaneously, Keith and King Aalona said, "Hotels and the airport."

Jumping up from his crouched position, Keith tapped his comm-badge and said, "Lieutenant Vorik, contact Honolulu Police immediately. Evacuate Honolulu International Airport and all major hotels in Waikiki for potential bomb threats."

Vorik replied, "Aye, Sir."

Frowning at the potential loss of life, King Aalona begged, "Please stop this."

Keith nodded, "We'll do our best, Sire." He then called, "Alden, transport me back to the Command Center." Keith disappeared from the King's side. King Aalona went to his wife and explained the current circumstances. She quietly shed tears so as to not upset her son.

Upon arrival in the Command Center, Keith immediately said, "The threat was general enough to include the King and the reputation of the ROH. What have we learned about that announcement?"

Vorik replied, "We have a name and account number for payment of the announcement. The search is in progress."

John said, "The AI's have provided two alternate versions of the threat." He frowned, "Neither tell us anything more."

Prez went to Keith and said, "The police and half of our UNIT detachment are trying to evacuate the airport and hotels." He closed his eyes, inhaled deeply then sighed. "Most adults would still be out partying, but lots of little kids would already be in bed." The television in the room switched from the Palace to Waikiki, reporting that all hotels and Honolulu International Airport were being evacuated, but didn't explain the reason why. Prez loudly complained, "Damn it! This is no time to pussy-foot around! People should be panicking and getting the fuck out of there!" Prez then ordered,

"Alden, prepare to break into broadcast signals for all Hawaiian television stations and dress me in a Clan Short robe."

It was too late for Prez to make his announcement. The television news showed bright flashes of distant explosions at high rise towers in Waikiki. All the Core Rimmers gasped then various expletives flowed.

At eleven o' one that evening, Prez hollered, "RED ALERT!" then turned to the video display where Donnie was still, his mouth now hanging open. "Donnie, rescue operations at that location, immediately."

Donnie nodded and began reassigning most of the troops that had been at the palace. Alden and all the AI's went into emergency mode, taking over the mundane and obvious functions. Alden had the satellite view zoom into the new location and reported, "2424 Kalakaua Avenue. It's the Hyatt Regency. There are two towers, forty stories tall."

From Orlando CIC, Seth called, "Pacific Rim Division, current sit-rep."

Kaleo hurried over and explained, "Seth, this is Kaleo. There was a terrorist bombing of the Hyatt Regency Hotel at Waikiki." While he spoke, Alden got a full description displayed then Kaleo passed it along to Seth. "Forty stories tall, twelve hundred and twenty-nine rooms total. Estimated casualties as high as five thousand, easily." Kaleo had only finished speaking when the local news reported additional explosions had occurred at Honolulu International Airport. Kaleo included that attack in his report to Seth.

Concurrently, Keith was ordering all the Rimmers' personal security into the Command Center. They would assist rescue operations. Prez was passing out hand phasers and commanding his Core Rimmers. "Drew, Corey, Kaleo and Tory, you four remain here and coordinate as necessary. Sorry, but you four simply aren't developed enough to assist adults."

Turning to the personal security teams, Prez instructed, "Each of you need to be more worried about saving people in that hotel. Our security lies in getting people saved before parts of those towers become impassable. If we're trapped, then we're all really screwed."

Facing his UNIT Detachment Commander, Prez ordered, "Kekoa, get all our troops prepped for on-site rescue operations. We'll all need oxygen masks."

Prez told the two youngest team members, "John and Stephen, you have to go check the structural integrity of the buildings. If it's as bad as it looks, try to hold them upright for as long as you can." Nodding, John and Stephen transported out with their security to Waikiki.

Prez spun around and told Donnie, "We'll likely need a ship with tractor beams to hold up those buildings."

"I'm already on it, Prez," Donnie replied. "We'll get something there in ten minutes or less. I've also contacted Starfleet for portable force-field generators; in case the buildings do collapse, we can minimize collateral damage to neighboring structures."

In the background, another deep male voice, likely that of a gorilla, told Donnie, "We have something available, Sir."

Donnie ordered, "Get it there, ASAP!"

Prez turned to Nathan and instructed, "I need you coordinating with police and firemen, so we're not tripping over each other and slowing each other down. Tell them what we've got planned."

Nathan nodded, "Got it, Prez," and disappeared from the Command Center.

Kekoa passed portable oxygen tanks and face-masks to Keith, Derrick, Mike, Sean, Troy and finally, Prez. When Prez finished speaking, Kekoa explained, "Each of these tanks will provide you with air for up to thirty minutes, depending upon your level of exertion. Expect only fifteen or twenty minutes. You guys cannot wind up suffering from smoke inhalation. I'll have a supply of extra tanks made available on-site. They screw onto and off of the masks, so replace them as necessary." Kekoa then demonstrated how to fit the face-masks correctly so that noxious fumes would not leak in.

Already at Waikiki, in the center of the intersection of Kaiulani Avenue and Kalakaua Avenue, John and Stephen hugged and tightly held onto each other then began rising into the air. A nearby news crew hurried over. Two gorillas, Bond, Stephen's gorilla, and Lucky growled, "Get back!" causing the cameraman to lower his camera and almost wet himself. Carefully watching the heavily armed gorillas wearing green military fatigues, the man stepped back about ten paces before Lucky nodded at him. He pointed his camera up at the two floating boys.

Recognizing the view from a dream, John told Stephen, "This is what I saw in my nightmare the other night. This is the fire I was worried about."

In the living room of the Hundserts' home, Jim, Jen and Kathleen Marr had seen the attack on 'Iolani Palace and were now watching John and Stephen rise six stories, then ten and then higher. Grabbing her husband's knee, Jen squeezed hard and screamed, "Jim!"

"Try and relax," Jim softly assured, "John lifted about a hundred tons by the pools, without Stephen." He pulled his wife close. Kathleen Marr was speechless; all she could do was wipe tears from her eyes and watch the television.

Jen still covered her eyes and peaked through her fingers at the television where John and Stephen were. She softly wept, "I was there only a few hours ago, with Caitlin and Ida, picking up their suitcases." Jim's heart sank into his feet and felt like it was bouncing in his chest. Only luck and timing prevented him from losing his wife.

Pandemonium was shown on television from another news crew arriving at Honolulu International Airport. Helicopter video showed the two larger gate buildings in flames. Hundreds of travelers were running away from the main terminal structure. Fire and emergency vehicles that were normally reserved for plane crashes converged on the terminal building from the tarmac.

The towers of the Hyatt Regency were octagon shaped, John noticed. Floating higher and traversing the circumference of the northwest building, John counted eight points where there were flames. Three were at the side where the elevator shafts were; one at the tenth floor, another at the twentieth and the last at the thirtieth floor. Inspecting the eastern tower, John counted five places where there was fire. Again, two of the five were at the side where the elevator shafts were. The terrorists specifically targeted the elevators, it seemed, to trap those in higher floors.

Realizing that they were over a hundred feet high, Stephen became nervous and whimpered. "It's okay, baby," John softly said, "just hold on tight. We can fly around like this for hours, but this tower won't last. The other tower has less damage though. It'll probably last, even though it's still heavily damaged."

Stephen softly complained, "You could at least be a little afraid."

John laughed, "Of flying? Never!" John then sent, 'There's only one thing missing. Tell me you love me?'

Stephen nervously giggled, "You know I do!"

'I need to feel it though,' John reminded. 'I'm gonna try to hold this building upright. With your help, I think I can do it, for a little while anyway.'

Stephen let his love flow as much as he could and actually brought himself to tears doing so. Approximately two-hundred feet in the air, John's eyes blazed blue, focusing his telekinetic powers on the weakened and burning northwest tower. From his husband and the thrill of flying, John unwittingly got an erection, which was felt by Stephen and caused him too get hard too.

From below John and Stephen, a boy's voice called, "How's it goin' guys?"

Another voice giggled, "We told you to tie your shoelaces to a lamp-post!"

"Don't forget us!" two additional voices hollered. Rising quickly and beginning to circle John and Stephen, Benji, Eli, Sammy and 'Bastian waved. John grinned and was thankful that there was help to hold up the incredible weight of a building. John immediately felt the weight shift and begin to even out.

Nathan arrived at the mobile emergency command center used by the police and firefighters. He quickly showed his ID and introduced himself. He then explained what Clan Short Pacific Rim Division was planning, including the intent to rescue those trapped inside the burning towers, provide medical services and acquire Starfleet assistance to provide tractor beams and force field generators.

Another towhead boy popped in at street level. Then he was seen on the roof of the center structure, above famous restaurants and the hotel lobby. The news cameras tried to focus on the boy, but then he was gone. Peter Lambert was telepathically pointing the telekinetics to weakened areas of the structure.

On the ground, the Core Rimmers arrived with their security, the entire Pacific Rim UNIT detachment and another one hundred additional UNIT personnel from the Rapid Response Base. They ran towards the buildings. The fire-fighters that had recently arrived stopped them, but Prez identified himself and all the other boys as Clan Short and the firefighters begrudgingly allowed the boys to help evacuate those injured or trapped.

Last to arrive from Russia, fully engulfed in flame, Jimmy rose off the ground. He began removing heat and thus, broke the combustion cycle; effectively putting out the fires one at a time.

Another hundred UNIT personnel arrived to help evacuate Honolulu International Airport. All of this was televised and reported by the news. It was a sight to behold; hundreds of boys putting the lives of strangers before their own, and running to rescue people in two burning towers and from the airport gate concourses.

Seven boys were floating high above the ground outside one of the burning towers; one seemingly on fire himself and four orbiting the original two. Desperate tourists were trying to escape smoke and flames inside the burning buildings by crawling out onto window ledges. One woman and her child slipped and began to fall. Crowds in the street screamed in horror. However, the two never hit the ground. They simply disappeared from the camera's view. Other hotel occupants jumped from their windows to escape the inferno. They also disappeared from view.

The cameraman Lucky had ordered back loudly wondered, "What's happening? Where the hell are those falling people going?"

Lucky simply answered, "They are being transported to safety."

When the cameraman asked "Where?" Lucky didn't answer, but glared at the man, again causing him to gulp and almost loose control of his bladder. It was the combined efforts of Alden, Daileass, Draco, George, Icarus and Kerry that prevented those jumping and falling from certain, horrible deaths.

It suddenly dawned on Nathan that John, Stephen, Eli, Benji, Sammy and 'Bastian would be in deep shit if they got distracted or tired; they would fall from thirty stories up. Rather than assume the AI's could capture them before they hit the ground, Nathan suggested that airbags and trampolines be set up under the floating telekinetic boys, just in case. Another alarm sounded so that those facilities could be delivered and set up on the street.

By this time, Judy Faris and the other Rimmer parents were gathered in the Hundsers' living room watching TV. They were mixed with emotions ranging widely and shifting rapidly from concern and fear to pride. At the Ewa Beach dorm common rooms and many of the bedrooms, Rimmer rescued kids watched with increasing enthusiasm and excitement, shouting out the names of their leaders as they came into view. In Japan, Canada and the United States, nationwide cable news networks were patched in, televising the events as they happened. Also on the news were reports from London of street riots as the stock markets continued their free-fall from the previous day.

In the basement of the Seiberts' home, where Aaron, Alan, Ben,

Chad, Dillon, Herbert, Jonah, Kawazoe, Randall, Randy and Sung peacefully slept, Reyes was typing out his latest log entries when he happened to look up at the TV. No sooner did he see John and Stephen, many stories in the air, then the camera focus changed to street level. He saw Derrick and Mike materialize then run toward a burning tower. Purposefully, he closed his notebook computer, changed the channel to Cartoon Network, so his brothers and uncles wouldn't see what was happening, if they should wake, and softly grumbled, "I should've just told dad to make me a Core Rimmer. Now that I'm fully functional again, my dad, pop and friends are trying to kill themselves. Why can't they just stick to afternoon concerts?" He tapped his comm-badge, ordering Alden to transport him to the CIC Command Center, to offer what assistance he could.

In Washington D.C., where it was minutes after five in the morning, Harry and Jonas were just waking to prepare for their day in the nation's Capital. Before joining Harry in the bathroom, Jonas turned on the TV and saw the news from Hawaii. At first his jaw dropped then he called Harry. While they watched, a camera happened to catch Peter for all of three-seconds before he disappeared from view again.

The Rimmers and the UNIT troops fanned out and up flights of stairs. As hurt and trapped people were discovered, they each transported the rescued to the Rapid Response Base's medical facilities. In groups and individually, they returned to the streets outside the Hyatt Regency then ran back inside. Starfleet personnel arrived by the dozen and began setting up force-field generators around the more badly damaged structure. Another truck arrived with firemen. The men began inflating huge airbags in the street to capture the floating boys.

Evacuations and rescues continued for another seven stressful minutes before a new and never before seen site flew over the skies of Diamond Head and towards Waikiki from the northeast. Newscasters reported it as large as two aircraft carriers. It wasn't a Starship that anyone had ever seen before and no one was even sure if it was a Starship. It was the Goliath, based at the UNIT Rapid Response base, steadily moving into position and preparing to engage tractor beams.

Reyes Taraschke Personal Log 4

Wednesday, November 3, 2004

Thankfully, today was a little busy, but not crazy like yesterday.

I woke about two hours after I fell asleep, from a dream I had about Ryan, instigated by my trip to Sullivan's Island. In my dream, it dawned on me that Ryan had already managed to reprogram his eye movements to be more 'human'. I had to wake and call Jerry Owens immediately to chat about this discovery.

Incorrectly, I had understood that Jerry wanted help getting Ryan to remember and believe that he's an android. The only time Ryan's assumed belief could become a problem is if he and Paul were to leave Clan Short, like it was when they were found about a week earlier. Honestly, I'm happier knowing that I don't have to weasel around, trying to sneak in little truths that would ultimately send Ryan off on a fit and Paul into protecting his brother. Ryan evolved and modified his programming to not only believe he's human, but he actually changed code that allows him to act and appear more human. Yeah, we could all benefit from those modifications, but it's not all that important to me. Now I can simply concentrate on being friends with both brothers.

Both brothers are really kewl. I especially like the way they interact with each other; Paul as the protector, and Ryan as the silly boy. Last night, they hugged me before I left Sullivan's Island. For a few seconds, I was sandwiched between them. Those few seconds were a surprise, but I really felt good. Sitting here now writing this, I'm trying to understand how I feel about Paul and Ryan. Obviously, I like them, but is there something more? Could there ever be anything more than friendship with one or the other? That might be bad, not only for me, but also for the brother left out from those feelings. If I ever did something to cause the two brothers to argue and create an irreconcilable rift between them, I would definitely work to repair the damage, then leave both alone. Neither of the two needs to ever feel bad over something I've said or done, that's for sure.

I did notice something that concerned me. Paul was keeping a distance even while giving a heartfelt hug. He had scoped everything out in the room before moving close. He knew his escape routes. I knew enough about the street kids and abused kids that I had previously met to see it in him. I want to help him feel safe and secure, but that desire can have the opposite effect. I couldn't stand it if I drove him away from me.

Right now I'm trying to understand my own ramblings in the prior paragraph. Sure I like them, but I like a lot of other dudes here in Ewa Beach. There are a lot of great guys that are my age, and they have brothers too; like Kekipi Mahelona is thirteen-years-old and usually hangs out close to his younger brother, Konani, who is ten-years-old. Oke Ka'aukai is also thirteen-years-old and hangs out with his two brothers; nine-year-old Makaio and eleven-year-old Kimo. All five of those dudes spend a lot of time together, and I like all of them, just not the same way I like Paul and Ryan. I believe what stands out about Paul and Ryan is that we had been alone during almost the exact same period of time; I was at the orphanage and they were on the streets. That they're androids also matters to me, which I feel kind of odd about. It's my preference, and I realize I shouldn't limit my options to so few, but I can't help it.

Oh my God...

I'm starting to fall for Paul and Ryan! Now what the hell do I do?

All I can do is sigh and smirk. Could I have possibly made things more difficult for myself? I just asked Alden where my dad and pop are. He answered, "They're still on the rescue mission in California now." Great! Later, I'll get to chew on this while I sleep. Yippee! To make the situation more ridiculous, my kitten, Charles, is softly sniggering at me! At least I wasn't a babbling, stuttering idiot when I was with Paul and Ryan earlier today.

Moving right along...

Jonah and Dillon woke me around seven-forty this morning. Ben, Sung, and Kawazoe were already pulling their boardies and T-shirts on. So we wouldn't wake our dad, pop, or anyone else still asleep in the nest, Jonah whispered, "We've gotta get together as a group still, bro."

Sitting up, I nodded and quietly asked, "Where are we eating breakfast?"

Sung softly answered, "At our house."

"Kewl," I smiled, and stood to dress. I vaguely recalled Grandma Anna inviting us during the wedding reception. The five boys started giggling, causing me to suspiciously smirk.

Widely smiling, Jonah moved closer to me while I was bent over, pulling my board shorts up, and softly chortled, "It's the first time you've woke with a stiffy all week. I guess all your systems are completely back to normal."

I shrugged, "It took five days of no perverted adults wanting some."

Once I was dressed, all six of us went upstairs. We said good morning to Aunt Jen and Uncle Jim. Kawazoe told them we were going for breakfast at his house and we said goodbye before filing out the kitchen sliding door. I had just closed the door behind me when I became the target of silly morning wood jokes from Ben, Jonah, Kawazoe and Sung. Dillon loudly laughed. Walking towards the Seiberts' house, I reminded the four jokers that they had maybe three to five years before their dicks developed minds of their own too. Randy Beale came running up to us. We invited him to join us for breakfast.

Grandma Anna was awake in the kitchen when we stepped inside. Kawazoe and Sung hurried over to give her a hug and say good morning to their mom, followed by Ben, Dillon and Randy, then Jonah and I. She was then hit with a chorus of seven voices wondering, "What's for breakfast?"

"I promised you all something special," Grandma Anna helplessly chuckled. "Go ahead and get cleaned up. It'll be ready in about fifteen minutes." Chattering about how good the cooking food smelled, Sung and Kawazoe spun around, and then raced upstairs. Ben and Randy were on their heels, heading for another bathroom.

Jonah called, "Come on, bro," and hurried with Dillon. Remembering what my dad had said about his mom and dad, I stood there in the kitchen speechless for a moment or two. This woman, whom I had only met five days earlier, was only about forty-years-old, had lost her first born son and was now a mother and grandmother to a growing brood. She seemed so happy with her new life in the Clan. Grandma Anna was at the stove, so I tapped her shoulder and called, "Grams?"

Looking over her shoulder, she queried, "Yes, Reyes?" and I gave her a kiss on the cheek, then hurried after my brothers. She wondered, "What was that for?"

I hit the brakes and spun around, smiling, "A kiss usually means, 'I think you're awesome.' In my case, add 'You're a great mother and grandmother too. I'm happy that you're my grams.'" Before she could say anything, I spun on my heels and raced after my brothers. In the bathroom at the top of the stairs, Sung and Kawazoe were naked and getting into the shower. In the next bathroom, Ben and Randy were standing at the toilet, giggling and peeing. Dillon and Jonah were in the third bathroom. I stepped inside and washed my face while they finished at the bowl.

Jonah called, "Reyes?"

With my eyes closed to protect them from soap, I replied, "Yeah?"

Jonah asked, "What do you think of Randy?"

I shrugged, "He's kewl. I guess he likes us too, since he's been hangin' with us since he showed up Sunday night." Then I started rinsing the soap off my face.

"He wasn't in the nest last night," Dillon grumbled. "He was at the dorm. I don't want him livin' in the dorm."

Jonah said, "We wanna ask him to be our brother too. If he says yes, and I'm pretty sure he will, then we'll talk to dad and pop."

Still rinsing off, I chuckled, "It's kewl by me. That'll be one more kewl guy to add to our family nest tonight." Grabbing a towel to dry off, I checked with my brothers, "Do you still want to do that too?"

"Yep," Dillon chirped.

Jonah smiled, "Yeah, it'll be kewl; all us Gibbons-Seibert boys in one nest."

I reminded, "We'll have to check with the girls in both families too."

Pushing me away from the sink, Dillon and Jonah nodded. "No problem," Jonah said, "I'll check with Brandi, Christel, Lindsay and Latoya later today."

"Don't forget, we've got the Downings' funeral today at eleven," I grinned, and tossed the towel over Jonah's head, then went to relieve my bursting bladder.

Dillon cracked up. Jonah giggled, "Reyes!" then shook his head until the towel fell to the floor.

While I leaked, I noticed Dillon looking my way. I considered asking him why he was looking at my dick, but decided not to embarrass him. Dillon noticed me glancing at him though and giggled, "Your dick changes a lot."

I smiled, "When you're a teenager, yours will too."

"Jonah's dick don't change that much," Dillon observed.

Without thinking, I offered, "Jonah isn't a teenager, and his dick hangs pretty long already. Some dudes grow, like me, dad and pop. Some show, like Jonah."

Picking the towel up off the floor, Dillon hummed, and then said, "Yeah, that's true. At the pools, most boys hang about as far as their sack, maybe a little more, no matter how old they are. Jonah's hangs..."

"Dillon!" Jonah loudly interrupted. I noticed his face was scarlet red.

"What?" Dillon giggled. "It don't matter a whole heck of a lot, but yours does hang more."

I softly said, "Jonah's embarrassed, bro."

Dillon scowled at Jonah and tilted his head. He stopped drying his hands and wrapped Jonah in a tight hug.

Looking like he might cry, Jonah huffed, "It sucks. Somethin' that's a part of me that I should be proud of, or at least happy about... the pervs at the orphanage..." Shaking his head, Jonah clammed up and stopped talking.

I finished at the bowl and flushed, telling Jonah to close the bathroom door. He did so, and I put the seat down on the toilet, sat down and softly called, "Come here for a minute, please."

Still partially attached to Jonah, Dillon led the way. Locking eyes with both my brothers, I assured, "What those people did to us was very wrong. My first mom and dad never did that stuff, and neither did my cousin or his wife. From what I can recall, they didn't do it at the orphanages either, until they learned they could and get away with it."

"I know," Dillon sighed.

Jonah looked away as much as he was glancing at me and Dillon though. I told them, "I love you two guys as brothers, because you're very kawl, very nice, and know when it's time to be serious or when it's time to goof around. Right now, I'm not goofing around. It doesn't matter what's hangin' between your legs. The only person that should matter to is a boyfriend or a girlfriend, someone you already like that you want to make love with. What those jack-offs did to us isn't making love; it was only good for them, they never cared about what it was doing to us." I specifically told Dillon, "They made Jonah feel like his worth was only in what was between his legs."

At first, Dillon's jaw dropped. Then he made the angriest, evil expression I ever saw on his face. He firmly told Jonah, "I wanted you as my brother because you were nice to me, and you're still really nice to me, even though you're older. I tell my friends how nice you are. Richie and Dee and Kokaku and Dewi all like you, because you treat them nice, not because you've got a longer dick."

It was Jonah's turn to wrap Dillon in his arms. With red eyes that were ready to shed tears, Jonah weakly muttered, "Thanks, bros. I really needed to hear all that. Maybe part of me knew it, but I haven't, ya know, completely believed it."

Laying a hand on Jonah's shoulder, I smiled, "You've been my kid brother for years and will be for years to come, even when you're eighteen, all grown up, and I still look like I'm thirteen. The same goes for you, Dillon. And if Randy joins our family, it'll be the same with him too."

Still aggravated, Dillon groused, "I'll check with Randy and ask him why he likes you, Jonah. He'd better not say anything about your dick."

"I hope he doesn't," Jonah helplessly chuckled at Dillon's almost murderous expression.

I recommended, "Just be nice about it, Dillon. First ask him why he likes you, Jonah and me too. If he gives the wrong answers, then you don't need to ask him if he wants to be our brother. Just walk away, wearing that same angry expression. If he gives good answers, then bring him to me and Jonah, so we can all ask him together."

"Kewl," Dillon grinned, as if he were an integral part in a great conspiracy. Jonah released Dillon and wiped his eyes.

"Let's go eat," I smiled. Dillon hurried to the door and out of the bathroom, but I held Jonah back, picked him up and whispered in his ear, "Is that why you were so weird the other night with John?"

Jonah nodded and whispered, "He wasn't teasing me, just telling me that he liked what he saw. He knows how the adults took advantage too, and that's exactly what he called it, taking advantage. It's why I don't know what I want, Reyes. How can I tell if someone really likes me for me, and not for my dick?"

"The same way you could tell about me, Dillon, dad and pop," I answered. "You'll feel it and just know it." I then put Jonah down and we went downstairs for our grandma's special breakfast.

By the time Jonah and I arrived at the dining room table, everyone else was already seated and helping themselves to biscuits or muffins. Grandma Anna and Grandpa Carl were serving their kids and grandkids. On the table were O'Brien potatoes, scrambled eggs, grits, bacon, sausage patties, buttermilk pancakes, fresh baked biscuits, banana nut muffins, pitchers of orange and pineapple juice, and another pitcher of milk. I helped get everyone served, so we could all sit down and eat the feast prepared.

During breakfast, we discussed moving out of the main nest and into family nests. Everybody seemed ready to make the move that night, however, Grandma Anna and Grandpa Carl expected the family size to increase during the day. Grandma Anna was going to ask six-year-old May Hickox to join the family. Grandpa Carl was going to ask seven-year-olds Chad Bunting and Herbert Trumbo to join the family. All three were former FCC kids that had been becoming friends with Brandi, Kawazoe, Latoya and Sung. According to Grandma Anna, the Gibbons family might also be growing by one girl and three boys that day. Ben already knew and confirmed that three FCC boys were becoming good friends and seemed to be latching onto his new dad and mom. The adults only asked that we keep the news from Derrick and Mike, until the adoptions were formalized by Prez. All us kids wrapped up our mealtime conversation by agreeing that we would nest wherever the newest adopted kids felt most comfortable.

I helped Grandma Anna and Grandpa Carl clear the table. Most of the kids went outside to the playground and pools, except for my two brothers and Randy. Walking in and out of the dining room, I heard Dillon asking Randy if he liked us and why. It was easy for Randy to say that he definitely liked us. He then recalled Monday morning, and that it was mostly Jonah, Dillon, Dee and Richie that helped him get acquainted with the base and some of the other kids. Since Randy was seven years old, he simply felt like he fit in most with us; since he was two years younger than Jonah and two years older than Dillon. Randy then reminded Jonah and Dillon that it was them inviting him to go here or there and do this or that. While we were gone yesterday, he simply hung out with other kids, but he was glad when we got back home. I learned that Randy waited to find a seat until Jonah, Dillon, John, Stephen, Frankie, Dee, Richie, Sammy and Gage were done being ushers at the wedding concert. They then went inside the auditorium theater and sat together.

Finishing up in the kitchen, I told our grandparents to be prepared for one more in our family nest. They had already assumed that was the case when Randy was invited to join us for breakfast.

Jonah appeared in the kitchen, asking, "Are you done, bro?"

"Yeah, the dishwasher's loaded and running."

"Kewl, let's shower over at the dorms," Jonah prompted. "Randy invited us, so it's kewl."

The four of us hugged our grandparents, thanking them for an awesome breakfast and then said, "See ya later," before hurrying out the sliding kitchen doors.

I loudly laughed, "What's the rush?"

"We gotta get clean clothes and stuff," Dillon giggled.

Randy chuckled, "And my stuff is at the dorm anyway."

"Then dad and pop will be awake," Jonah added.

All three then cheered, "Then we get to have milkshakes!"

I could only crack up laughing and try to keep up as we ran into the Gibbons' house and upstairs to grab clean clothes from our bedroom. Widely smiling and wisely staying out of our path, Grandpa Rob watched the four of us race out of our room, down the hall and back downstairs. He was already dressed in his uniform and appeared ready to start his work day at the FYS Building.

We then ran down the path to dorm building one, where Randy was sharing a room with James Hahn. Randy unlocked the door and we all went inside. James was sitting at a desk in his underwear, browsing Nile-dot-com. We all said hello, and Randy asked, "Whatchya lookin' for, bro?"

James shrugged, "I'm just browsing books and CD's and stuff. I never had an allowance or money before. There's stuff I always wanted, but couldn't get. Now that I can get stuff, I'm wondering if I should spend the bucks on it or not. I read a Hardy Boys book and liked it, but I can only read a book once. Music CD's I can listen to lots of times though."

I offered, "I have an idea, James."

He wondered, "Yeah?"

"Books can be read and then shared," I suggested. "Next week, we'll be starting school, which means occasional book reports. A book you read today, others can read when you're done. If the store offers electronic copies, you could order that and share the file. Either way, you should get what you like and not worry about wasting money. Remember, you can earn more money too. You could ask Kaleo to setup a bookshelf in the common room, so everybody that finishes a book can make it available to others just by putting it there."

"Kewl!" James cheered, "I hadn't thought about electronic copies or sharing books like that. Thanks, dude."

I smiled, "My pleasure." Dillon took my right hand and Jonah took my left hand to lead me from the room.

Now shirtless and only wearing briefs, Randy said, "We'll be right back in a few minutes. We're just gonna take a shower."

Jolting as if he had a revelation, James chuckled, "Yeah, I'll be there in a minute," and stood up from his desk chair. As we left the room, James was scurrying around, gathering toiletries and setting out clean clothes.

Moments later, we were in the large lavatory in the longer wing of dormitory one. My brothers and I hadn't been in this lavatory before, but it was the same as the one in the shorter wing, where we had been before with our dads and the other Core Rimmers. Each of us took a sink and started brushing our teeth. I tapped Jonah and gestured with a slight nod of my head towards Randy. Jonah raised his eyebrows and then nodded. I assumed this shower time was like a test for Randy to pass or fail. I have to admit, it was a pretty good idea. If Randy made more than a passing remark about Jonah's dick, he would fail the test.

In about a minute, we were done brushing our teeth and walking into the mob shower changing area. Just finishing up their showers were Kanoa Hale and Louis Mares. Dripping wet and padding our way, Kanoa smiled, "Rimmer sons are showering here?"

Stripping off his clothes, Dillon nodded, "We did Sunday too."

"Down the other hall," Jonah added, and pushed off his boardies and briefs in one swoop.

Kanoa is thirteen years old and Hawaiian, like me. We're pretty close to the same height and weight too. Unlike me, he's got almost black hair and very little hair down around his boy parts, but his voice has changed and he's got really wide shoulders.

Picking up a towel and beginning to dry off, Kanoa said, "You're very welcome here, any time, dudes."

Eleven-year-old Louis nodded, "Yeah, we don't want to feel separated, and don't want you to feel that way either."

Now down to my birthday suit, I gestured at my own body and then at my brothers and Randy, now entering the mob shower, saying, "We're all the same in every way that counts. Randy just happened to invite us here to shower today."

Louis locked eyes with me and asked, "Are you really over fifty-years-old, Reyes?"

Nodding, I grinned, "Fifty-six and a half."

"And a half!" Kanoa sniggered. "As if the six months matters!"

I smirked, "But still thirteen, just like you," and then swiftly got Kanoa in a headlock. Pulling him into the showers again, towel and all, to the laughter and giggling of the others, I sniggered, "Just because I'm an android doesn't mean that I don't know how to act like any other guy!" Realizing that I was about to get him wet again, Kanoa struggled to break free. Giggling his butt off, Jonah skated across the smooth tile floor to turn on two more showers. The next thing Kanoa knew, Randy and my brothers were helping me pull him under one of the sprays.

Roy Angulo came in the mob shower, saw what was happening and cracked up. "This is why I love living here," Roy sniggered, "I never know what will happen, where, or who might be doing it." He undressed and my brothers told him what had happened to cause the shower wrestling and silliness. Already naked, James walked in the shower. Having accomplished my goal and gotten Kanoa all wet again, I released him and jumped back before he could shove me. We both cracked up and knocked knuckles. I turned my back to start my shower and was whacked in the butt by Kanoa's wet towel, causing another roar of laughter. Racing out of the room, Kanoa grabbed a dry towel and kept running, out of the lavatory and back to his room. Hysterical, Louis followed his roommate.

Out of the corner of my eye, I noticed Dillon tapping Jonah and then discretely gesturing to Roy and to James. Roy was fifteen years old. The hair on his legs went all the way up to his crotch. A little hair was also pointing up towards his belly-button. Roy's a tall dude. What hung between his legs was proportional for his overall size; about four inches long, just beyond his scrotum. At the same side of the mob shower, James had his head back to shampoo his hair. James was the same age as Jonah, maybe an inch or two taller, but what was hanging between his legs seemed longer and thicker than Jonah's. For a nine-year-old, it was a hefty slab of meat.

Grinning, Randy noticed the silent comparisons going on. He leaned over and whispered in Jonah's ear. Jonah whispered something back to Randy, causing Randy to lose his smile and vigorously shake his head. My attention was broken when Roy called, "Reyes, did everything work out okay for you yesterday?"

"Yeah, it was very kewl," I answered. "The guys in the AI Division are a lot of fun."

Roy nodded and meekly offered, "When I didn't see you or your brothers around yesterday afternoon, I asked Derrick where you were. He told me, and some other dudes that happened to be nearby, that you went for a check-up. I hope that doesn't bother you."

Shaking my head, I smiled, "Not at all. Everything checked out okay, and I learned why I was so worried about prejudices too. It was because of where I was raised. I know now it's not too much of a problem anymore."

"Kewl," Roy grinned. "You know, a lot of us are real interested in computers, electronics and stuff. We think it's awesome that we have you around."

"Plus one here too," James smiled. "What makes you so kewl is that you don't act like we'd expect an android to act, ya know, like you're just another dude to us."

Again, I gestured down my own naked, soapy body and to all the rest of the bodies in the mob shower, chuckling, "I am just another dude. Even when I have access to all the new databases they added, I intend to only use that stuff when it's necessary."

James asked, "So you didn't have to do anything special when you told me about books before?"

Shaking my head, I explained, "Since I never had to go to school, I used to read lots of paperback books. Some were mine, or my dad's, or mom's, or my cousin's books. That was just real life experience; sharing books and having the stories to chat about."

Roy asked, "You have databases but can't access them?"

I nodded, "I was told not to, since my memory was zapped at the orphanage. I have twenty-one years and a whole new life to integrate, so I locked them down for forty-eight hours. Later tonight, I'll be able to access them, if I want."

"Very kewl," Roy chortled.

Finished showering, my brothers and Randy turned the water off and went to go dry off. I hurried to complete rinsing off. I turned my shower off and went to towel dry. I reminded my brothers, "Don't forget to take your comm-badges off the dirty shirts and put them on the clean shirts."

"Ooo!" Dillon groaned.

Jonah nodded, "I would've forgot too. Thanks."

Leaning over to dry my legs, I softly teased, "There was a lot of whispering going on for a while."

Dillon lost it and cracked up, dropping his towel, shirt and comm-badge at the same time.

Jonah giggled, "I'll be chatting with James some time soon."

"Today," Randy firmly added.

Rolling his eyes, Jonah huffed, "Yes, brother."

I was only slightly stunned that Randy was asked already. Dillon noticed me and giggled, "Yep, we asked, and Randy said yes too."

Randy smiled, "I'll need to talk with James too, but it's kewl."

Beginning to dress, Jonah assured, "Dad and pop will definitely say yes to another son."

Randy giggled, "I'm really looking forward to surprising Derrick and Mike later."

"Later?" Jonah and Dillon queried.

I offered, "We could tell them at breakfast."

Pulling up his underpants, Randy briefly paused and glanced at each of the three of us. Finishing the task and grabbing his board shorts, he smiled, "Okay, then I need to tell James too."

Done with his shower, James came over to the changing area with us. He grabbed a towel and asked, "Tell me what?"

Jonah told James, "We asked Randy to join our family."

"We want him to be our brother," Dillon smiled.

James nodded, turned toward Randy and grinned, "When I woke and you weren't around, I wondered what was going on. You only slept at the dorm this one night."

Randy nodded and giggled, "I was surprised they asked, but I have to admit, I'm really happy. I couldn't see myself with any of the other families."

Roy walked in, prompting, "The Core Rimmers should be awake by now. Let's get over to the cafeteria before they leave for school." He grabbed a towel, wrapped it around his waist and grabbed his dirty clothes, then left us.

Randy stepped closer to James and softly said, "You're a kewl roommate, James."

Nodding, James smiled, "I'll ask around and find someone else to be roomies with, hopefully by tonight. That room is too big to be alone in."

Dillon asked, "Don't you want a family?"

James chuckled, "I've got family; tons of brothers and sisters. The Core Rimmers are big brothers. I like it here, in the dorm, though. In a big bed all to myself, I slept like a baby last night." He then waved and smiled, "I'll see you guys in a few minutes for breakfast," and then left the lavatory.

My brothers and I tossed our towels in the big laundry bin, gathered our stuff and left too. Randy giggled, "I guess I'll have to pack my suitcase again."

I recommended, "Do that later this morning, bro. The three of us will be going to the funeral for Bruce's parents at eleven. That'll give you about an hour, I guess."

"Kewl," Randy sighed. He glanced around at the three of us then asked, "Do you think Bruce is okay?"

"He will be," Jonah answered. "He's got John and all the Hundasers lookin' out for him."

All three of them turned to me, wordlessly asking for my opinion. I shrugged, "It's going to take some time; maybe weeks for Bruce. Having a family will make it easier. When I can, I'll have a talk with Bruce too. I hope it's today, but we'll see how he is after the funeral."

We walked into the Gibbons' home again. Grandma Laura was sitting at the kitchen table. Ben was there too, practicing his guitar. He paused for a minute and asked, "Jonah, are you going to practice today?"

"Yeah, probably after dad and pop leave for school," Jonah answered. "I didn't get to play much at all yesterday."

Ben nodded, "Just for fifteen minutes or so."

"I've just got a few things to take care of first," Jonah said.

Our dad and pop walked in while we were still congregated in the kitchen. They said 'good morning,' then Mike checked with Ben, "The spider chromatics are easier?"

Ben nodded and giggled, "Yeah, check it out." He then ran through the exercise, way up high on the neck and kept a pretty even tempo, albeit slowly, because he was softly naming the notes as he played.

When Ben finished and looked up, Mike cheered, "Excellent!"

Smirking, Jonah told Ben, "I can tell you were busy yesterday."

Ben nodded, "The note names are the same at the twelfth fret, and it's a little easier."

Jonah asked, "Show me later?"

"No problem," Ben smiled.

Grandma Laura told Pop, "The Scoobies are around here somewhere. They said that they needed to talk to you."

Pop nodded and softly said, "They've got about fifteen minutes to find me."

Dad smiled, "Then we've gotta grab breakfast before checking our Clan's status and hurrying to school."

Seeing Dillon, Jonah and I carrying wads of dirty clothes, Pop checked with us, "You dudes showered already?"

I nodded, "Over at the dorm. Before that, Grandma Anna made us breakfast."

Dad smiled, "She loves cooking. You guys made her day." Then he leaned over and picked up Dillon. Dad got a kiss on the cheek and gave one back.

"I've still got room for a chocolate milkshake," Dillon giggled.

Grandma Laura hummed, then offered, "How about we do breakfast or dinner here Saturday?"

We all agreed that would be awesome. Then Dad told Pop,

"Let's get motivated and in the shower." Pop nodded and they started upstairs, with Dillon getting a free ride. Jonah, Randy and I followed.

Soon after we started up the staircase, Jonah bluntly stated, "We want another brother."

Pop chuckled, "Give us an extra five minutes in the shower, and we'll give it a whirl." Jonah, Randy and Dillon groaned through their giggles. I cracked up.

At the top of the stairs, Dillon whispered in dad's ear. Looking down at Randy, Dad asked, "You want two dads and three brothers, Randy?"

Rapidly nodding, Randy answered, "I've spent most of my time with Dillon, Jonah and Reyes since I arrived Sunday night. Two dads is kewl with me too, especially you two. All you guys are a real family, more than my other family ever was, that's for sure."

Dad nodded at Pop, saying, "I guess we can do this. We'll just have to get Prez to do the honors."

Pop smiled, "We'll gang up on Prez and make it happen later today. Are you dudes gonna wait for us to go to breakfast? Dillon's obviously starved after only one breakfast." Swiftly, Pop tickled Dillon's ribs. Dillon loudly squealed laughing.

I checked with Jonah and Randy. When both nodded, I grinned, "We'll wait up here in our room."

Jonah told Randy, "Let's play some video games while we wait."

"Kewl," Randy cheered, and then they took off down the hall. Pop put Dillon down and the little guy ran after Jonah and Randy.

Pop pulled his T-shirt off. Dad said, "There's a pair of headphones in Mike's bedroom end table, top drawer."

Pop said, "Help yourself, Reyes. There's CD's in my room too."

Dad tilted his head, wondering, "Is everything all right?"

I checked to be certain that Jonah was out of sight, then stepped closer and whispered, "Talking about Randy joining us, I happened to learn something that bothers me." I then softly outlined all the stuff Jonah had been through at the orphanage, reminding them that Jonah was just as likely to swim with his boardies on as he was with them off, then explained the reason why. After telling them about James, and that Jonah wanted to have a private chat with him, I then asked for my dad's and pop's opinions.

Pop softly said, "Let Jonah do what he thinks he needs to do, and let's just keep an eye on him."

Dad nodded, "If it continues to be a problem, we'll talk to Doc Wiener about it. In the meantime, encourage Jonah to take his shorts off at the pools."

Pop smirked, "If I had to guess, I'd say slightly less than half of all dudes hang pretty low. Since our dudes are mostly nude around the pools, point them out to Jonah. No dude's worth is in the meat hangin' or how big it gets." He then paused and locked eyes with dad, sniggering, "I married Derrick and he's not a low hanger." I moored through my giggles.

Pointing in the first bathroom, Dad playfully ordered, "Get your butt in the shower, Lick." Nodding and evilly snickering, Pop followed the order. Dad shook his head, rolled his eyes and chuckled, then went in the bathroom too.

Before I could walk too far down the hall, I heard four high-pitched voices squeaking, "G'mornin', Shiny Daddies!"

The Scoobies bathroom ambush pushed me over the edge and I cracked up laughing again. Walking by our bedroom, I saw Jonah and Randy sitting on the carpeted floor playing a video game. Dillon was investigating the room until he saw me walk past. He ran out of the room after me, asking, "What're ya doin, bro?"

"I'm gonna get a CD from Pop's room to listen to," I answered.

"Yeah? Which one?"

"I don't know yet. Something new, that I don't remember ever hearing before."

We went into Pop's room, knelt down before the stereo and started going through the shelves of CDs. Pop had absolutely no real organization of his CD collection. The stuff he liked most seemed to be on the top shelf right hand side. The rest were scattered around. I happened to find a CD by Guster, and recalled Dad mentioning that band's name during the luau concert Friday night. I told Dillon and we took the CD back to our bedroom. Soon, we were listening to the 'Lost and Gone Forever' disk. Dillon started spinning around and dancing, shaking his little butt around. We had only heard the first three songs and started listening to the fourth song, 'Fa Fa', which Old Habits had played for us during the concert. I couldn't even tell the difference between the Old Habits cover and the original tune I was listening to. Dressed and singing along, Dad and Pop walked in the room. Pop was wearing his Shiny Priest white robe, with the sparkling stars on the sleeves and back, over his T-shirt and board shorts.

Randy loudly giggled, "So, did you make us another new baby brother?" Jonah, Dillon and I roared laughing.

Dad blushed and sniggered, "We tried."

"For some strange reason, it hasn't worked yet," Mike chuckled. "We'll have to keep tryin'."

"Let's go get some breakfast," Dad encouraged. I stopped the CD and shut down the stereo. Jonah and Randy turned off the PlayStation. In moments we were heading back downstairs. Crossing the living room, where Grandma Laura was watching the morning news on TV, we said goodbye and then headed outside. We hadn't gotten far when Ben came flying out the door and caught up with us.

Dillon and Jonah told Ben that Randy was our new brother, and that it would be official later that day.

I asked Pop, "What did the Scoobies want?"

He smiled, "I'm going to make an announcement at the CIC, since it affects us all."

Dad said, "We're safe, and all of both families are safe, but the rest will have to take the Shiny Pledge."

Reverently, Pop recited, "I pledge allegiance to the Shiny of the Shiny Nation, and to the Gleam for which it stands; one Nation under Shiny – sparkling, with incandescence and radiance for all!" Me, all my brothers, and Ben helplessly giggled.

"I guess I'm family just in the nick of time," Randy giggled.

"Wait," Mike suspiciously scowled, "are you saying that you're not a Shiny Lover?" Playing along, Derrick and I mooded.

Randy laughed, "I am, I swear I am!"

Jonah nudged Randy and smiled, "I pledge allegiance to the Shiny of the Shiny Nation."

Randy joined Jonah, reciting, "And to the Gleam for which it stands; one Nation under Shiny – sparkling, with incandescence and radiance for all!"

Dad led us into the CIC dining room and over to the chow line. I could swear I heard something up in the ceiling and looked up for a few moments. In line ahead of us were Sean and Troy. Ahead of them were Prez, Dee, Gage, Sammy, Richie, Keith, Roy, Kaleo, Tory, John, Stephen, Jamie, Jacob, Beau, Drew, Geoff and Corey. Pop went directly to Prez.

Before Pop could say a word, Keith noticed the robe Pop was wearing. He chuckled, "Your Holy Shininess! Please tell me you're not wearing that to school."

Pop smirked, "Dull one, you shall be punished for your lack of Shiny respect."

"Yeah! You tell 'em, Shiny Daddy!" Four voices yelled down from the air conditioning vent. I rolled my eyes, then huffed and turned my attention to the chefs to order my milkshake.

Turning to Prez, Mike seriously said, "We have a small problem."

Obviously afraid to ask, but having no other choice, Prez grinned, "Spit it out before it rusts or tarnishes." In the air conditioning duct, four horrified voices gasped.

"We've been Clan for four days," Mike explained. "We have three days to have everyone take the Pledge."

Keith, Drew and Corey simultaneously and uncertainly repeated, "The pledge?"

Mike seriously nodded, "I'm safe. Derrick and our kids are safe. Outside of my immediate family, no one is safe from Shiny theft."

"Omigod!" Drew and Corey laughed. Keith rolled his eyes.

"What's the big deal?" Prez grinned. "We're all Shiny lovers anyway. Do you want your CD's missing? Do you want any of the small PC or sound system connectors swiped?" Facing Mike again, Prez said, "Lead the way, Shiny Mike."

Putting his right hand over his heart, Mike chanted, "Repeat after me. 'I pledge allegiance to the Shiny of the Shiny Nation.'" Everyone in line paused, put their right hands on their hearts and duplicated Mike's words. "I pledge allegiance to the Shiny of the Shiny Nation, and to the Gleam for which it stands; one Nation under Shiny – sparkling, with incandescence and radiance for all!" Even the chefs repeated the pledge.

"I saw one who was mumbling! He's fair game!" Willow could be heard giggling.

Troy gasped and quickly repeated his pledge loudly and clearly.

"Scared that your instruments would be stolen?" Prez giggled.

Troy, still wide-eyed at his close call, nodded mutely.

Sean giggled, "No, more that he was scared HE would be stolen. He's got a shiny butt!" The other kids in line began laughing and giggling. Troy's jaw dropped. He turned ten shades of red, then hauled off and slugged Sean on the shoulder. Almost as red as Troy, Sean rubbed his shoulder and playfully reminded, "I told you there were things you had to take at face value as true."

Troy grinned, "But you told me that when we were in the shower and you were holding my shiny butt! Was I listening? Hearing yes, but not paying much attention."

The Rimmers laughed hysterically, trying to order their shakes. Prez and his family left the chow line with their breakfasts. I followed them, leading my brothers, Randy and Ben to a nearby table.

Out in the dining room, Mike stood on a chair and announced over the PA, "Ladies and gentlemen, boys and girls, for your own security, I must ask that you all pause for a moment. On this Shiny Day, all that glitters and sparkles amongst us demands that we take notice; Dull ones will be converted; Shiny Haters and Dull Lovers will be arrested or destroyed. Those of you who, like me, enjoy the brightness and warmth of the Day Shiny, then look forward to the fullness of the Night Shiny, please stand and put your right hand over your heart then repeat after me."

Everyone repeated the Shiny Pledge. "Thank you for your time," Pop said, and then took Dad's hand to step down off the chair. The chatter level rose as did some chortling.

Dad and Pop sat down with Keith and Prez, at the table next to ours. Also at a table close by were Drew, Corey, John, Stephen, Jamie, Jacob and Beau. A few tables over, nearer to the wall where the Command Center doors are, sat Kaleo, Tory, Sean and Troy. I noticed everybody seemed to have favorite groups that sat together during meals. There was occasional shifting around as conversations changed from topic to topic. All the FCC kids were sitting together and having a hushed private conversation. Sung, Kawazoe, Cesar, Felipe, Chad, Herbert, Shimizo and Murakami were sitting together at a table near Drew, Corey and John.

There seemed to be an awful lot of dorm kids wearing the same green T-shirts. Looking closer, I saw the band names Time-Touched and Platinum Habits, along with what appeared to be tour dates. It seemed rather odd, for various reasons. First of all, the tour dates and cities were completely ridiculous; I had never heard of some city names and the dates traversed centuries. Also, when had Dad and Pop left with Keith and Prez to perform these concerts? Granted, I was away most of the prior day, and I don't always know where our dads are every minute of every day, but I would think they'd have mentioned being to Jazwhoki in the year 4254. At a moment where dad was sitting quietly and listening to the conversation with Pop, Prez and Keith, I pointed out the T-shirts the kids were wearing.

Derrick tapped Prez and pointed at several kids sitting at tables not far away. Prez looked around. Noticing Prez's surprised expression, Derrick tapped his sub-vocal and called, "Alden, where did the kids get band T-shirts with our band's name on them?" Alden replied via sub-vocal, so I only heard half the conversation and explanations.

"How many 'extras' were there for a tour that hasn't happened?" Keith wondered.

A few moments later, Prez smirked, "Check out the dates and places; they're all over the place, at cities I've never heard of; some are 2014, some are 3075; they're unrealistic dates."

Mike smiled, "You obviously know something we don't, Alden."

Keith interjected, "Drew was hoping to implement a design of a recording studio for us here."

"All that's very nice to know," Prez chuckled, "but what about the tour concert dates?"

All four Rimmers incredulously laughed, "For fifty concerts?"

Pop softly muttered, "We'll need to tell Troy and Reyes."

Dad nodded, "And learn about how this is done. I can only assume time will be virtually unchanged here, but where we're going and what we're doing will take way longer than two minutes."

"We'll have to bring our kids along then," Prez offered.

"I'm not gonna let many months away pass without them," Keith stubbornly insisted.

As this haphazard conversation was going on, the FCC kids had all gotten up from their table and gone over to talk to John. One after the other, John listened to each kid and then gave a hug. John led the kids over to our table, reintroducing Dee, Gage, Sammy, Richie and Geoff as his nephews. In moments, my brothers and I were being reintroduced. The FCC kids were just a little scared and confused. The base was very different from their families and homes, and some of them were scared of me too, because I was a teenager. Jonah, Randy, Dillon, Dee and Richie assured them I was kewl, and was even more than a teenage boy, telling them that I was an android and older than any of their grandparents. Soon, I had Dillon sitting on one thigh and Richie sitting on the other. To prove to the FCC kids I was nice, Dillon asked me about life back in 1950's Myrtle Beach. Some of the youngest FCC kids stayed with me, listening to tales of long ago, while Gage, Sammy, Dee and Jonah took the older group around to nearby tables.

I was still telling them stories of crawdad fishin' and capturing pollywogs, when Kaleo loudly chanted, "I, Tiger, take you, Lover, to be my life partner, for better or for worse, in sickness and in health, for as long as we both shall live."

Prez overheard Kaleo and called over, "Who's marrying who?"

Gesturing at the two human vacuums attached at the mouth, Tory cackled, "Sean and Troy. I give them a week."

"A week?" Kaleo incredulously giggled. "A day or two, tops. We'll be lucky if they don't drop to the floor and go for it right here!"

Prez cracked up. Smiling widely at his hysterical partner, Keith loudly reminded, "We need a Vulcan for the mind-melds. At least give us a chance to call Uncle Spock back."

Four-year-old Aaron Pendergrass pointed and wondered, "Who is that?"

"That's Kaleo," I grinned, "He's one of the kewlest around and a Core Rimmer too, like John, Drew, Corey, Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike."

Five-year-old Randall Mcfarren asked, "Is he really nice?"

"He's one of the nicest," I assured, and then told them a 'G' rated version of how Kaleo saved little kids from abuses at our orphanage. Randall said that his parents used to punish him by making him pray on his knees, sometimes for hours, until he fell asleep. I told them that was bad and a form of abuse, which is why they were all rescued and brought here to be with us. The older kids returned and prompted the little ones to go finish their milkshakes. Dillon smiled and thanked me with a kiss on the cheek, then hopped off my thigh and returned to his chair, grabbing his near empty milkshake glass and going back to work.

Ready for their morning briefing, the Core Rimmers got up. They filed past our table and each of us got kisses on the head as they made their way to the Command Center. Ben and Jonah were talking about their guitar lessons and doing a little finger exercise with the fingers of their left hands tapping at the table. Gage, Sammy and Dee were ready to go over to the pools as soon as they finished their shakes. Richie and Dillon decided to take some of the FCC kids over to the playground for more introductions. I thought it might be a good idea to get a little drumming done, so I would join Ben and Jonah in the Gibbons' basement. In another minute or two, we had all given up on our milkshakes. We took the glasses to the dishwasher, then wandered off in separate directions.

On the way to the Gibbons' home, my comm-badge chirped. Ryan's voice called, "Reyes? Are you awake yet?"

I tapped my comm-badge and answered, "Hey, Ryan. I've been awake a while now. How're you?"

"I'm really good," Ryan cheered, "and so is Paul. He said that he talked to you earlier this morning and I missed it. He usually doesn't talk about people. I mean he does, but usually just monosyllables. You know... Uh... Hmmm... Yeah... Okay... Hell, he used more than one sentence. I mean, I thought the world must be coming to an end. Whole paragraphs, without much cussing or sour looks. Amazing!" Ryan had paused and giggled at that point. Then his voice took on a mischievous tone before he started speaking. "What did you say to him that's got him in such a cheery mood?" It's hard to remember that he's an android like me and his brother. It is amazing how hard it is to hear the usual signs.

I grinned, "Actually, I called to chat with Jerry. Paul happened to come by the room while we were talking."

Ryan giggled, "Oh, he was eavesdropping again?"

In the background, Paul groaned, "Ryan?"

I chuckled, "It's not nice to talk about people behind their backs, so it can't really be called eavesdropping."

"REYES!" Paul loudly laughed from the background.

"Snagged again, bro," Ryan heartily chortled.

"Busted!" Jerry commented from farther in the background.

"There goes my cheery mood," Paul softly grumbled. I became a bit concerned. He had retreated into himself. His voice had changed. It had gone almost flat. The most alarming thing was that he sounded ready for a fight.

"Jerold! Stop spying on your brothers!" Mrs. Owens said, seemingly from another room.

"And you stop listening in on Jerry, Mary!" Mr. Owens laughed.

Joey asked, "Do you needs cuddwes soes you can be cheewy again, Unca Pauw?"

"I'm fine, Joey," Paul assured.

I could hear in his voice that it was taking all he had to not run. I was imagining him looking anywhere but where there were other people like he had yesterday. His eyes had been like saucers. It had made me think of that saying, a deer in the headlights. I had imagined a set of antlers starting to sprout. He had looked like he was going to bolt just like a deer that was startled while feeding in a field. I was sure that was the look he had now and I thought it was cute. Oh boy. Something must be wrong with me. I am getting turned on by a boy with antlers, and his impossibly cute brother too. I can't fall for both of them, can I?

Jerry giggled, "Cuddles and cookies."

"YEAH!" Joey screamed, "Gwamma, can I have cookies for me and Unca Pauw?"

Aunt Mary sighed, "One cookie each, Joey. Lunch will be served in five minutes."

"I don't really want a damn cookie," Paul softly bitched.

Ryan giggled, "Yeah, you want it and need it, bro."

Jerry hummed then wondered, "Are we still talking about cuddles and cookies?"

Paul grunted as if he'd been shot in the heart, and groaned in pain, then I heard a thump.

"Jon, remind me to have a talk with Marc and Daniel about the influence they are having on Jerry!" Mrs. Owens shouted.

"Before or after you have to listen to them complaining about the influence he's having on them?" Mr. Owens laughed.

I heard the patter of running feet, then Joey hollered, "Unca Weyes, Gwamma says you needs do come ovej fow wunch doo!" Joey paused then seriously said, "Unca Pauw, did you faww down? You've weaw easy do pounce, dhis way." A moment later Joey giggled, Paul grunted and Ryan and Jerry cracked up.

Jerry sniggered, "You're invited for lunch, Reyes. Get your skinny butt over here and save your boyfriends, now."

"HEY!" Paul and Ryan shouted, obviously blushing as much as I was.

I pondered aloud, "Does it matter that I've already eaten twice this morning?"

Jerry answered, "Nope, lunch is almost ready, so tell that AI of yours to do the honors before I have Daileass do it."

"Alden," I called, "please transport me to where Jerry, Paul and Ryan are?"

Alden giggled and sang, "I'm tellin' everyone that you've got two boyfriends, Reyes."

I groaned, "Don't tell..." and finished the statement in a strange living room, "anyone anything, Alden." Looking around the room, I found Joey sitting on Paul's belly on the floor.

Jerry smiled, "Welcome to the AI Division's catering headquarters, Reyes. This is my parents' house, next door to Marc's house."

Ryan stepped closer and gave me a hug. He whispered, "For whatever you said to Paul," and then landed a kiss on my cheek.

I shrugged and smiled, "It was the truth."

Paul softly prompted, "Let me up, Joey, so I can say hello to Reyes." Paul looked incredibly uneasy. I had been right in my thoughts; he looked like he could fight or run at any moment. My heart leaped into my throat as I saw him relax a bit when he made eye contact with me.

"And give him mowe hugs and kisses," Joey giggled, then rolled off to Paul's side. I noticed he gave Joey a troubled look. It seemed to me that he was becoming attached to the little guy and didn't know what to do with it. All I could think was 'welcome to the Clan, dude.' It turns everything upside down and inside out, but always in the best ways somehow. Suddenly his whole demeanor changed.

Standing up, Paul evilly grinned, "If everyone would just allow us to get to know Reyes better, before marryin' us off, that would be kewl." Les, Victoria, Marc and Danny came in the front door.

"That's part of why I'm here," I admitted. "In the last two hours, I've already had a big breakfast and a breakfast milkshake too. Besides, I have to be back at Ewa Beach in about forty-five minutes for a funeral."

Everyone in the house queried, "A funeral?"

I nodded, "The parents of one of our rescued kids were found dead. Bruce asked me to go, and I said I would."

Coming over to give me a hug, Paul asked, "Have you ever been to a funeral before?"

I nodded, "Three, for my mom, and then for my dad, and then about twelve years later, for my cousin and his wife."

Ryan gasped, "Oh man!"

Paul frowned, "We're sorry to hear it, Reyes. Losing parents once was bad enough."

"It was a long time ago. Bruce was adopted by one of our core families. He'll have it easier than the three of us did. Now, I hope I can help Bruce in some way or another, so he doesn't stay sad for very long."

"You'we good ad making peopwe happy, you make Unca Pauw and Unca Wyan happy!" Joey innocently stated.

Wondering what had been said about me during the course of the day, I felt my face heat up. Beginning to giggle, Ryan's face immediately dropped to my shoulder. Paul simply grinned and turned away from me and Ryan. Joey's eyes widened and he giggled, "WHAD? You was dalkin' about Weyes since bweakfasd! Was dhad a secwed?"

Paul smirked, "Don't be shy. Go ahead and let it all out, Joey."

Joey giggled, "You'ww dickwe me!"

"I'll tickle you any way," Paul warned and started to advance. Joey hid behind Jerry. Seeing that the games were about to begin, Danny widely smiled and moved behind Joey, wrapping his arms around him and Jerry so they couldn't get away.

Just as the tickling and loud laughter started, I whispered to Ryan, "Is Paul ticklish?"

With twinkling eyes, Ryan nodded, "Very!" The two of us quietly walked over and each took a side of Paul. I went for Paul's ribs and Ryan went for his brother's arm pit.

Surprised and squirming, Paul loudly laughed, "NO-O-O!" He had nowhere to escape to. Jerry joined us, reaching up and tickling Paul's neck. Trying to cover up, Paul started to wilt. Joey squirmed out from between his daddy and Danny to run around and tickle his uncle to tears. In less than a minute, Paul was hysterical and on the floor again in a fetal position.

Still abusing Paul, Ryan sniggered, "The grump is laughing! Get his feet, Joey!" Danny squatted over Paul's legs, so Joey wouldn't get kicked.

Looking over at Danny, I giggled, "It seemed you were on Paul's side for a moment there."

Danny shrugged and chuckled, "I don't take sides, I just get in as many tickles as I can."

"TRAITOR!" Paul hysterically cackled.

The front door opened again. KC bounced in and hurried over to us to help teach Paul a lesson. He grinned, "Hey, Reyes, long time no see."

"I know, it's been about twelve hours for you guys," I chuckled, "Did ya miss me?"

KC sniggered, "Don't feel bad, but you'll have to stay away a little longer than eleven-and-a-half hours for me to miss you. Try a day or two."

Joey frowned, "Dhad was mean, Cwash," and flung himself onto KC.

KC caught Joey and lifted him up to his hip. "No, Twerp; mean would be taking him on a tour of Timmy's bedroom without preparation!" he informed Joey with a grin.

Joey wondered, "Is dhere somedhing wwong widh Dimmy's woom? I was dhere. Id was cwearn and nice, widh aww Dimmy's animaw fweinds and ewewydhing." Hearing that, I lost it and cracked up laughing so hard that I accidentally missed Paul and tickled Ryan instead. Ryan tickled me back, and so did Jerry, then Joey, and lastly KC shoved me down to allow Paul to get payback.

Evilly snickering at the turn of events, Danny joined the group. In seconds, all I could do was howl laughing and try to protect myself from six pairs of hands tickling me at once. Thank goodness Aunt Mary called, "Lunch time, boys!"

Joey was the first to run over to the dining room, followed by Jerry, Danny and KC. Paul and Ryan only stood and offered their hands to help me up off the floor. I was still catching my breath when I took their hands and got up off the floor. Ryan had the warmest, most appreciative smile spread across his face. Probably because I made him the first target, Paul wore a crooked smirk, but there was a twinkle of joy in his eyes that I never saw the prior night. They never let go of my hands and led me to the dining room.

Entering the already packed room, I couldn't believe the quantity of food on the table. It was a smorgasbord of stuff, including salads, a variety of dressings, eggrolls, little bagel pizzas, fried shrimp, broiled sandwich steaks, and a pile of rolls and breads. Before I sat down, I sighed and told Aunt Mary, "I'm really sorry, but I've already had two breakfasts."

"Eat as much or as little as you like, Reyes," Aunt Mary smiled. "The important thing is you're here to share the meal with us."

Sitting down, I thanked her and then everyone bowed their heads, as was done the prior night at dinner. After about thirty-seconds, Uncle Jon's head popped up. Everyone started serving themselves and passing bowls and platters around. I only took a little bit of salad, a bagel pizza and two fried shrimp, and then wondered, "Where are Caleb, Noah and Wes?"

Danny answered, "They're working on getting new AI's online and operational. I'll bring back something for them to snack on."

Nodding, I grinned across the table and asked, "When did you get here, Willy?"

Joey giggled, "Wiwwy swidhers in dhe shadows and jusr shows up!"

"It helps being a black panther," Willy softly admitted. "People don't notice me, like a shadow, unless I face them and they see my eyes."

Marc smirked, "Or when he pounces you, seemingly from out of nowhere." Baring his teeth, Willy widely smiled. There's something unnerving about a smiling Carolina panther. Maybe it's me though.

Vicky sighed, "The pouncing last night scared the dickens out of me."

Les smirked. "Hon, you have too much 'dickens' in you for one little kitty to scare out."

I was curious if Jerry, or even Paul, had spoken with Ryan about our early morning conversation, but Jerry was several chairs away from me to my left. I knew they could not bring up anything to Ryan about being an android, but there was still plenty of information that Ryan needed in my opinion. Ryan was sitting directly beside me, to my left, and Paul was directly to my right, but I thought it would be considered rude to whisper to Paul, so I simply sampled my shrimp. Once again, it was as good or better than any fried shrimp I had ever eaten before and told Aunt Mary so. One at a time, others praised Aunt Mary's culinary skills. Aunt Mary thanked each of us for our kind words.

With an evil grin on his face, Jerry commented just loud enough for me to hear him. "You know, I hear boyfriends feeding each other their 'shrimp' is the 'in' thing," he sniggered.

With his eyes, Paul shot arrows across the table at Jerry. The remark seemed to pass over Ryan's head, because he didn't even flinch or grin. Marc obviously noticed and grouched, "I don't even have any shrimp on my plate." Covering my mouth with a napkin, I helplessly giggled.

"Don't look at me!" Danny smirked, "There's still some shrimp on the platter."

"Well, you're the closest; help your brother already, Danny!" Mary smiled.

Before Danny had a chance to move, Joey reached across the table and pulled the platter to him. He then carefully picked it up, carried it over, and set it in front of Marc before climbing onto Marc's lap. "Hewe ya go, Unca Mawc; you an' me can ead aaawwww dhe yummy shwimps now!"

"Thanks Munchkin, let's dig in!" Marc giggled. Aunt Mary just shook her head and smiled. She stood and then retrieved another platter from the kitchen.

Ryan leaned over toward me and whispered, "Don't worry, Reyes. I liked you plenty last night before you left. Paul does too. We're just not gonna rush anything. Kewl?"

Nodding and smiling, I whispered, "Very kewl." Returning to my meal, I forked some salad, softly saying, "We've only been out of our bad situations about a week." Before stuffing salad into my mouth, I glanced over at Paul. He nodded slightly and sort o' smirked.

Jon nodded. "You boys have the right idea, no matter what our resident Cupid tries to tell you," he said just loud enough for us to hear.

Paul sighed then looked across the table, saying, "Mar... uh mom, would you excuse us for a minute or two, please?" Before Aunt Mary could nod, Paul had already taken my hand and started to stand. He led me just out the front door and off the porch, with Ryan trailing us. Paul huffed, "I'm really sorry for all that in there, Reyes. I guess it's because it's been only me and Ryan against the world for so long; they see me with someone I can call a friend and suddenly rice is being tossed and rings are being bought."

Ryan smiled. "Jerry doesn't mean any harm. In his own way, he's showing us that he's as happy about this morning's talks as any of us are. At last, it looks like we've found a place to be, and with people we can trust. Knowing that is at least partially thanks to you, Reyes." After a brief pause and a glance at Paul, Ryan chuckled, "They could access you or Paul or any of the androids with a satellite uplink, but they never do."

I simply asked, "Was it just you and Paul who discussed that?"

Rapidly shaking his head, Ryan answered, "It was over breakfast, so just about everybody was there; mom, dad, Jerry, Marc, Danny and Joey all know about it now."

"Thanks to you," Paul softly told me. He then suggested, "Let's all learn what it's like not living on the edge of our seats. Then we can decide where we want to go from there, if anywhere."

Ryan giggled, "It had to happen sometime, but if anyone could wake up my grumpy brother's heart, it might just be you."

I grinned, "And what is it that makes you think I wouldn't be just as interested in you?" Getting no response from either brother, I told them, "Right now, I like everybody inside at the table the same. Everybody here is nice enough, and no one has hurt me in any way."

Ryan wondered, "So where do we stand?"

Paul waited for my take on it. I shrugged, "We get back to the table and back to getting to know each other better. Tomorrow's another day. Maybe I can come back here again, or maybe you'll want to come visit Ewa Beach. Let's just see how things go."

Paul checked with Ryan, "Does that sound like a plan, bro?"

"Yeah," Ryan quickly answered, but then giggled, "The tickling was fun though, and you needed it. I say we should keep up appearances and keep acting the same, even though we know otherwise."

Paul nodded and suggested, "Let's finish lunch." I turned and headed for the door, noticing Joey was standing at the closed dining room window. Before I could turn or say anything, I was being tickled by both brothers. Giggling and laughing, we hurried back inside and returned to the dining room and our meal.

Soon after we sat, Aunt Mary glanced at me, Paul and Ryan, asking, "Is everything okay?"

Ryan and I nodded, but kept mum. Paul shrugged, "We know where we stand." Jerry began giggling. Paul smirked, "Don't go there, bro."

Jerry smiled, "No?"

"No," was the threefold chorus from Paul, Ryan and me.

Helping myself to another few of Aunt Mary's awesome shrimp,

I locked eyes with Jerry, telling him, "My twenty-one years in an orphanage, plus Paul's and Ryan's twenty years on the streets are enough for each of us to deal with for now." Before digging in, I glanced around, saying, "I've got stuff to tell Paul and Ryan, about my first family, second family and current family. It's a fair assumption that they'll be telling me some stuff about their lives too."

Les nodded, "That's a very mature point-of-view." Vicky nodded and widely smiled.

"Quite a difference from rolling around the floor tickling each other," Jon teased.

Ryan giggled, "Can't have too much of either, can we?" Paul gave his brother an evil look then returned to his lunch.

Joey asked, "Do you wanna pway dwums widh me again, Weyes?"

"I don't think I'll have the time today, Joey," I gently answered, and then promised, "I'll be around often enough where we'll have plenty of chances to do that. You could even visit me in the ROH, and maybe get to play with my dad's band."

Joey cheered, "Keww!" and then checked with Jerry, "Couwd I go, pwease, Dahdy?"

Jerry nodded and grinned, "Sure, munchkin. If I can, I'll even go along too."

I told everyone, "After I left here last night, I got to play a concert with my dad's band. I know it was recorded."

Before I could have Alden or Daileass give the song to the AI Division, a new voice announced over the speakers, "I have it, Reyes." A moment later, we heard the applause over the dining room speakers and then my dad hitting timpani and the gong, starting 'Fanfare For The Common Man'.

I wondered, "Who was that?"

Danny grinned, "Our new AI, Stevie. Caleb, Noah and Wes got him installed and running earlier today."

For the next few minutes, everyone commented on the song playing. Joey asked who was playing the drums, and I told him it was my dad, Derrick Seibert. Les and Vicky were quite impressed by the rock arrangement of a classical piece written by Aaron Copland. I outlined who was playing what instruments for everyone at the table. By the time I was done, everyone except Paul, Ryan and I were done eating.

My kitten, Charles, suddenly appeared on my lap. He looked up and bitched, "Alden said you were having shrimp, and didn't invite me. Harumph! Where's mine?" Ryan began giggling and Paul widely smiled at my kitten and then me.

"You know Aunt Mary's rules, Charles," I warned, and then put a shrimp down on my napkin for him to snack on.

"This is great shrimp, Aunt Mary!" Charles purred. "Could you please remind my pet next time that he is required to have me verify the edibility of any seafood?"

The entire room became silent, except for the music still playing from our concert. Noticing all the thoughtful expressions around the table, Joey howled laughing.

"My royal decree has been acknowledged," Charles purred as he reached a paw up and swiped a few leftover shrimp from my plate.

"Here you go, Your Highness," Mary said with a barely suppressed grin. She came over with a small dish. "I had some lobster left over from the Maine omelets this morning that is going to go to waste if you don't eat it."

Charles sniffed the bowl, then looked up at Mary. "Thank you, Aunt Mary. This is perfect to go with the shrimp. Please invite my pet for breakfast the next time that you do this; he needs to enjoy the finer things in life occasionally."

I knew my kitten had a superiority complex before I took him home. Now I only had to figure out what to do about it. My first objective was easy enough to accomplish. Immediately upon arriving home, I would tell Alden and the other AI's to stop obeying orders from a kitten.

"Just be glad he's not a panther!" Jerry commented at the look on my face. "YOU try telling Willie no when he decides that you're not treating him with the proper respect."

"One of these days you will understand your place," Willie stated with a purr. "Isn't that right, Joey?"

"Dahdy's an ardifificial indewwigence kid genius," Joey proudly giggled, and then hurried over to give his dad a hug.

Aunt Mary, Uncle Jon, Les and Vicky began clearing the table. Marc reminded, "Dinner's at my place tonight." Grinning at me, he added, "Before midnight." Without me even noticing, Willie had slithered away from the table and out of the dining room. In another minute, only Paul, Ryan, Charles and I remained in the dining room.

Holding a small piece of a sandwich, Ryan looked beyond me, wondering, "What're you thinkin', bro?"

Shrugging, Paul softly shared, "I was just remembering some details, how mom and dad died, how we wound up homeless and on the streets. We know some stuff about Reyes, but he don't know much of anything about us."

I asked Paul, "When were you activated?"

"June fourteenth, 1951," he answered. "Ryan was born the same day."

Ryan offered, "Mom and dad worked at Vision Industries. Mom worked in housekeeping. Dad worked in building maintenance."

"They got me at a substantial discount off the normal price," Paul added.

Ryan smiled, "They always told Paul, 'to us you are a real boy'."

Paul nodded and then tapped my thigh. On my boardies, he wrote with his finger, 'U' and 'S'. I quickly realized that their parents considered both of them real human boys and they told them so. Nodding once toward Paul, I indicated his message was received and understood. That's probably why Ryan considered himself a real human boy; because his parents always told him it was so.

Paul asked me my activation date, and Ryan quickly asked me about my first parents. I answered them, adding little bits about my first years at Myrtle Beach; friends I had made and the times I played percussion with my dad, at home and on gigs with his band.

We had finished eating. I had Charles transported home, with a half-eaten shrimp hanging out of his mouth. Then Paul, Ryan and I took our plates out to the kitchen. After handing them to Aunt Mary, we walked outside and down to the water line, talking about our lives before the Clan. I listened to Paul and Ryan tell me a little about their lives on the street. When I was asked to tell them about my time at the orphanage, I couldn't share a lot, because I honestly didn't remember, but I did tell them that there wasn't always sexual abuses going on; those had only begun in 1998. "Still, birthdays and Christmas weren't celebrated before 1998. Us orphans always had to do the maintenance around the house, the lawn work and all the painting and daily cleaning too. We always had to do for ourselves, to make life a little more bearable. All us kids always took care of each other, as best as I can recall."

Ryan asked, "And what's life like now?"

"It's awesome," I cheerfully giggled. "You met my brothers, Jonah and Dillon, last night. Today, we're adding another brother. His name is Randy Beale, he's seven years old, got auburn hair and brown eyes, and fits in our family perfectly. All the kids at our base in Ewa Beach are very kewl. Considering some of the stuff we've been through, there's hardly any problems ever. I've heard through the grapevine that some little kids worried about showering with older kids. Obviously that's all worked out too, because me and my bros went with Randy to shower at the dorm this morning. At one time, there was a five-year-old, a seven-year-old, a nine-year-old, an eleven-year-old, me and a fifteen-year-old in there with no problem."

Paul smirked, "That's a really big tub!"

I grinned, "It's a big mob shower. There are eight showers on each of two parallel walls, so sixteen could fit in there easily. I'd venture to say that when school starts next week, everybody in the hallway could fit in there at once, some sharing a shower spray, without bumping into one another. I'll show you around when you come to visit." Then I drew pictures in the sand, describing the basic layout of our base. Sadly, my time was up and I had fifteen minutes to get dressed for Bruce's funeral. Once more, I was sandwiched between the brothers, all three of us giggling and promising to get together again soon.

Stepping back from the brothers, I smiled, "Tell everyone I said goodbye, but I've got to hurry."

Paul nodded, "No sweat." His eyes had gone flat again. I was worried and wanted to say something to make it better, but I realized that was a bit presumptuous of me to think that I could just make over twenty years of distrust and pain just disappear.

"I'll tell Joey that he's comin' with us to visit you," Ryan smiled.

I giggled, "Kewl," and then tapped my comm-badge to have Alden transport me back home and directly to my bedroom. In a flash, I was standing there in the room I shared with my brothers. Dillon and Jonah were already there, half-dressed in shirts, socks and their underpants.

Jonah jumped and hollered, "Where the heck were you?"

"We looked everywhere!" Dillon gushed.

I chuckled, "You didn't check South Carolina." Taking off my shirt, I explained that Ryan had called and that I was invited to lunch.

Charles padded into the room, heading directly to the nearest chair. "Good food!" he purred, then added, "You help Bruce-boy, I will guard the room." He curled into a ball and promptly went to sleep, still purring.

Dillon cracked up. Jonah giggled, "Patch, Riley, Charlette and the other kittens visited us while we were in the basement practicing."

While we dressed, I asked, "Jonah, did you talk to James yet?"

Jonah nodded, "Yeah. He was kewl, but he's straight and wasn't messed with like we were. His parents sound like they were cranky fuckers. They'd take their problems out on him and ground him, so he couldn't leave the house. He actually ran away from home instead of going home from school Monday. Ya know, he didn't even notice my dick in shower. I don't think I could be like him. He's not only happy with his dick, he's very proud of it. It's gonna take me a while to just get over the orphanage and be happy, I think."

I said, "After the funeral, I'd like you to notice the other dudes at the pools. You'll see, at least a third, maybe almost half the guys here hang like you. It's not a problem you need to hold on to, bro." My brothers began giggling at my poor choice of words. I giggled, "You know what I mean! Notice the other dudes and be happy with what you've got, and who you are as a complete person. The problem was the pedophile adults, not you."

"Yeah," Dillon firmly chimed.

Jonah changed the subject by asking, "Ryan called you?"

While we finished dressing, I told my brothers about the dream I had and that I had called Jerry before they woke, and then summarized my conversation with Jerry, adding that Paul had overheard a good part of what we spoke about. Since we were running a little behind schedule, I checked to make sure that Dillon and Jonah had their comm-badges on their shirts, and then had Alden transport us to the gate. Obviously, Bruce, John and Stephen were running late too. The limousine and a stretch-Hummer were just beyond the gate, surrounded by gorillas and G-Cats. It was another couple of minutes before Bruce, John and Stephen transported to the gate, with Frankie also decked out in a suit. His dolphin necklace was proudly displayed over the tie.

Aunt Jen and Uncle Jim immediately went to Bruce and led him to the white limo. The chauffeur opened the rear door and helped Aunt Jen, Bruce and then Uncle Jim. John sent to me, 'Bruce doesn't want my help today. I'm sending you and Stephen all you need to help him out.' Nodding at John, I made sure that I remained close to Bruce. I went into the limo next, and was followed by Stephen, John and Frankie. In another minute or two, our limo was loaded and the driver pulled away.

Wiping his eyes, Bruce softly shared, "My mommy and daddy were good to me. Last Thursday, I was playing with other kids at the beach. They just wanted to go see the island from a boat. Ya know, I was having so much fun, I barely paid attention to them."

"Don't regret that stuff, Bruce," I quickly said. "You couldn't know what was going to happen and neither did they."

Aunt Jen added, "Reyes is right. Had they known, they wouldn't have left in the first place, Bruce."

"I dreamed of them last night for the first time," Bruce mumbled.

Uncle Jim asked, "Was it nice?"

Bruce scowled and shrugged, "Sort of, I guess. They said goodbye to me, like they knew they... d-died..." Losing it again, Bruce stammered through his tears, "t-t-they knew it was a long time. T-t-they f-f-floated up and away, waving and t-t-telling me we'd be together again someday."

Handing Bruce a tissue, Aunt Jen assured, "That says they loved you very clearly." Bruce only nodded and then blew his nose.

While each of us were concentrating on Bruce, I happened to notice John seemed a little distracted. I locked eyes with him. Raising his eyebrows and cracking a crooked smile, he sent, 'Local news reporters and TV crews were at the temple. Suddenly, they all decided to report on something more interesting.'

If Bruce wasn't so wrecked, I would've cracked up laughing.

Making matters worse for me, Stephen turned to John, appearing a little concerned. John sent, 'What? There's an imaginary fire and burglary they can chase down now. Nobody is stopping and talking to Bruce or any of us if I can help it. I just want to get this over with, as quickly and painlessly as possible for Bruce.'

Frankie suddenly needed to hug his daddies tight.

Bruce became very quiet. He wiped his eyes and sat between Aunt Jen and Uncle Jim, occasionally sighing. Bane, Ben and Jonah were keeping Geoff, Dewi and Dillon occupied, playing 'Go Fish' with a deck of cards they found. In a few minutes, we were at the Buddhist temple. I noticed that the gorillas and G-Cats were scattering, making sure the grounds and premises were safe. Lucky then went to the chauffeur. The chauffeur opened the door for us. The youngest were the first out of the limo, followed by Bane, Ben, Jonah, Frankie, Stephen and John. I stepped out next, but remained close to the door, just in case Bruce got wobbly and accidentally slipped or fell, so I could try to catch him. Uncle Jim followed me out and softly assured, "You boys being here means a lot to Bruce. He's just not able to express that now. Bruce wanted to invite more of you, but he wasn't sure if he could keep from crying. You boys are his closest, most trustworthy friends."

Watching wide smiles spread across the faces of my brothers and friends, I warmly smiled, "We know, Uncle Jim. Bruce won't have the chance to stay sad for very long. He's got us and way more thinking of him today."

Bruce emerged from the back of the limo. My hand, Uncle Jim's arm and the chauffeur's hand all reached for him at once. While I stayed with Bruce, Uncle Jim and the chauffeur helped Aunt Jen out of the car.

Bruce checked with me and Jonah, asking, "Do I look all right?"

"You look awesome," Jonah brightly smiled.

I nodded and reminded, "It's your day, bro. You take all the time you need and do what you have to do."

Bruce forced a small smile and weakly thanked us. Aunt Jen took Bruce's hand. He looked up at his new foster mother and seemed to gain strength. He proudly led the way to the temple doors, thanking each of the gorillas and G-Cats as he passed them. Uncle Jim followed with Dewi getting a free ride and Geoff holding his hand. Then John, Stephen and Frankie went to the temple. I led my brothers, Bane and Ben to the temple and held the door open for them.

Bruce was completely awesome during the ceremony. He was like an eight-year-old rock, causing me to wordlessly check with John. 'It's not me,' John sent. 'It's because of you guys being here, so he's being strong for all of us. He knows that if he loses it, Dewi, Geoff and Dillon will crash too, then we're all pretty much shot to hell.'

I think the worst parts of the funeral was little Dewi asking

Bruce if the photographs were of his mommy and daddy. Bruce simply nodded and gently smiled, "Yeah, they were, Dewi. Now my mommy and daddy are the same as your mommy and daddy." Dewi slid off his chair, went to Bruce and weaseled onto his new big brother's lap.

I almost lost it!

At the end of the ceremony, I waited by the temple doors for Uncle Jim, Aunt Jen, Bruce, Dewi and Geoff to leave the small room we had been in. Bruce left with the framed photos of his parents. Aunt Jen was carrying one small flower arrangement, which I took from her so she could concentrate on Bruce and the two youngest boys.

Everyone began piling into the limo. While I had the chance, I softly asked Uncle Jim, "What's happening with the remains."

"Cremation is what they wanted and Bruce is following their wishes," Uncle Jim replied. "We'll get the urns over the weekend. Bruce is thinking of spreading the ashes over the ocean. Once he decides for sure, we'll arrange for that to happen."

Still standing outside the limo, Uncle Jim and I heard Bruce inside the limo, proclaiming, "Okay guys, let's lose these ties. I don't want to see any of you in a suit ever again." The cheering and giggling voices of nine other boys carried out to us and the limo driver.

The limo pulled away and we were on our way back home. Stephen asked, "How do you feel now, Bruce?"

Bruce thought a few moments, then shrugged, "It's over. Since Sunday night, it's like I've been living two lives. Now I can think of this life, here and now. What I really am is a little hungry and very tired."

"We'll get you something to eat and then get you to bed," Aunt Jen promised.

Uncle Jim asked, "You know who to come to if you need anything?"

Bruce smiled, "My new mom and dad, or one of my brothers, or any of my friends." He became thoughtful, then softly said, "It's so weird, ya know? A really kewl vacation got bad one night, and then it became good the next day, and two days later it got bad again. The last two days have been weird. It's gonna get better again, right after I wake from a nap."

We all chatted about random topics for the remaining minutes of the drive back to base. I told my brothers about my short trip to South Carolina. Somehow, the rest of the world beyond our fences seemed different. I couldn't put my finger on a reason why I felt that way, but the sight of our base fences and the signs made me feel good. Soon, we were walking through the gate and being welcomed by our base security. Our group headed toward the CIC dining room for lunch. Few of the kids were still there, maybe a dozen or so. Everyone else had finished lunch and were returning to the pools, playground or rec rooms. Seeing his mom, Stephen led Frankie and John to her. Sean and Troy walked out of the Command Center and briefly spoke with John. When Troy and Sean left the C.I.C, John and his small group joined us in the chow line. We all learned that Sean and Troy were now Core Rimmers, and responsible for morale.

After we got our food and sat down, I heard Bruce ask, "You helped me, didn't you, John?"

"Not a bit," John assured. "I told you that I wouldn't, bro. I'll never lie to you. What I did do was help Stephen and Reyes so they could help you any way you needed."

Bruce smirked, "Really?"

Crossing his heart with his hand, John giggled, "Really, I swear."

Aunt Jen smiled, "John's a horrible liar, always has been. You can believe him, Bruce."

Facing Stephen, Frankie and Stephen's mom, John smiled, "I have no idea where I got my empathy from, really." Stephen and his mom widely smiled.

Frankie lost it and laughed, "That's a lie, daddy!" That got our entire post-funeral group laughing.

Randy Beale came running into the dining room. Seeing that we were back from the funeral, he slowed his pace and came over to our table. Randy told us that Troy had started a sing-a-long at the pools. He saw them with comm-badges and sub-vocals and was wondering what had happened, so we told him that they were new Core Rimmers. The four of us wanted to get Randy's adoption taken care of and wondered where our dad, pop and Prez were.

Chewing his lunch, John broadcast, 'Lieutenant Vorik suggested that the Core Rimmers take a nap. All of 'em, except me, Sean and Troy are resting. Prez already knows there are some adoptions to take care of. He plans on taking care of that later, before dinner, when everybody is around to witness them.' I could tell John sent his message to everyone because we all paused and turned to him for a second or two.

I guess Randy had never heard John telepathically before. He vigorously shook his head and giggled, "Okay, that was weird!"

Jonah smirked, "You'll get used to it." Jonah then focused on John and slowly nodded. Glancing between them, I noticed John grinning and Jonah appeared thoughtful. Without intending to, I began to worry.

In my head, I heard John say, 'I'm helping Jonah too, Reyes. What I told Jonah is that Stephen hangs pretty long too, and that there's someone here on base that thinks Jonah's very nice and real cute. I already checked, and the reasons he likes Jonah have nothing to do with sex. Sorry, this is one time I can't tell you who it is that likes Jonah. We'll all find out, when they're ready to tell us. Also, don't bother trying to get Jonah to take his shorts off at the pools. It won't work. Jonah will get naked if and when he feels like it. Watch him; when he's got a lot of support around, being naked is no problem. When it's only a small group of friends around, the boardies stay on.'

"Dillon," Jonah giggled, "you eat as much as me or Reyes!" Randy cracked up.

Dillon shrugged and grinned, "I'm hungry, and I don't wanna be little forever."

Over at the other table, Geoff giggled, "Yeah, me too!"

Jonah sighed then suggested, "Let's get out of these suits."

Dillon nodded then stuffed his mouth with the last of his French fries. Randy carried Dillon's half-full glass of soda. With Dillon still chewing, we gathered our trays and then got up to take them to the dishwasher. Randy handed the glass back to Dillon. Quickly sucking the last of his drink through the straw, he left it there at the dishwasher counter. On our way out of the dining room, Bane, Ben, Jonah, Dillon and Geoff paused at the Hundserts' table to give Bruce kisses on the cheek. Aunt Jen and Uncle Jim looked up at me.

I giggled, "It wasn't my idea. None of 'em ever even told me."

After getting the last smooch, Bruce smiled, "Thanks, guys. I'll catch up with you later at the pool, okay?"

All of us promised Bruce that we'd see him later.

Following the pack toward the exit, I wondered, "Whose idea was that?"

Not one of them said a word, but they all started giggling. Dillon and Randy were on either side of Geoff though. The three youngest wrapped their arms around one another's shoulders. Only by their body language was I able to figure out it was Geoff's idea. Thinking about it, I realized that Bruce was Geoff's uncle now. And being the son of Drew and Corey, Geoff was picking up some excellent ideas.

Bane was the only one that went to the funeral who lived in the dorms. He took off to get changed as soon as we got outside. Once the rest of us were back at the single family homes of the Rimmer families, we split up. Geoff went to the Hundserts' house. Of course, Randy followed our family subset to the Gibbons' house. We found the house empty, and assumed Grandma Laura was at the pools.

Upstairs in our room, I went directly for the stereo and reset the Guster CD to play Fa Fa over again while we got changed. I went into the closet and started hanging up each of our suit jackets. Soon, I heard Dillon singing, "Fa fa-fa fa fa fa fa fa, never be the same again. Fa fa-fa fa fa fa fa fa fa, never be the same again."

Suit slacks were being tossed into the closet too, I realized and scowled, but started hanging them up too. While I was folding and hanging slacks, I heard the out-of-sync chorus singing, "You were always saying something, swear you'd never say again. You were always saying something, swear you'd never say again. Fa fa-fa fa fa fa fa fa, never be the same again. Fa fa-fa fa fa fa fa fa, never be the same again." There was silence from my brothers during the next verse, which was completed by the time I finished hanging up all the clothes. I stepped out of the walk-in closet in my boxer shorts to find, in order, Dillon, Randy, Jonah and Ben line dancing in their underpants and singing the second chorus. Each of them were kicking their legs out, shaking their bottoms and having a great time. I cracked up laughing and joined the dance, at the end of the line behind Ben, thinking, "If dad and pop saw this performance, we'd all be over in Doc Wiener's office!"

We continued singing and dancing through Fa Fa and into the next song. Geoff came over and walked upstairs to find us still dancing in our underwear. Stopped at the bedroom doorway for a moment or two, the little guy grinned and then stripped his T-shirt and shorts off to join our underwear line dance through that song and the next.

Ya know, now that I think about it, that little dance was important for a few reasons. First of all, we needed it after the funeral. Secondly, it was really the first time we stayed indoors at our home for no real reason, other than being together goofing off. Lastly, it included Randy and Ben too, bonding our family together some more.

Listening to another song, we decided to get dressed and go outside. I turned off the CD player and stereo. Once Geoff was dressed, I picked him up and parked him up on my shoulders, demonstrating that I thought the kid had a great idea and it certainly helped Bruce. I carried him downstairs and outside to the pools.

Passing the Rimmer homes and approaching the indoor rec center, we could hear dance music playing. As soon as we arrived, Carmella, Kokaku, Richie, Dee, Gage and Sammy welcomed us home.

Dee asked, "How's Bruce doin'?"

I shrugged, "He's okay, for the most part. Aunt Jen and Uncle Jim are talking with him, John and Stephen now."

Ben offered, "The worst part was in the limo goin' there. Once we got there, he was very kewl. When the monk stood, Bruce did and we all did."

"It was real pretty," Jonah relayed, "not scary or sad or nothin' like that."

Bane smiled, "I liked what the monks said. It wasn't like any church service I've ever seen before."

Gage and Sammy confirmed that Sean and Troy were now Core Rimmers. Jonah and I went to find them and offer our congratulations. We found them, attached to one another, heating up the water in the diving well. I started to laugh, but I guess I had a frog in my throat, because an odd squeaking sound escaped my mouth. Jonah cracked up at me and the two human vacuums attached at the mouth. I did a quick self-diagnosis and put my right hand in front of Jonah's eyes.

"What?" Jonah giggled, and tried unsuccessfully to pull my hand out of the way. Picking up Jonah, I started to walk away. Jonah laughed, "It ain't like we never seen dudes makin' out before!"

Sean called out, "Reyes? Did you need something?"

I giggled, "It'll hold."

Jonah cracked up. Between giggles, he told me, "They're already holdin'!"

Rolling my eyes and shaking my head, I took Jonah to the other pool and jumped in the deeper end.

Surfacing, we noticed a bunch of boys about Jonah's age were tossing a beach ball around. Saying, "See ya later," Jonah swam away from me and over to join Gage, Sammy and Ben.

I decided to head over to the diving well. A few of the guys there asked me about Bruce and the funeral. Horacio was sitting at a table with Sonia. They were sharing a soda and chatting. I took my boardies and boxers off then climbed up to the three-meter diving board. On the way up, I noticed Hank Leve, Keanu Hekeia and Liki Keoloha gathered together on lounge chairs. Keanu was nearest to and chatting with a set of three girls; Ipo 'Aukai, Lani Keawe and Vera Kirkwood.

I don't know Keanu very well, but he was obviously leaning more towards straight. Before diving, I wondered why Liki wasn't getting involved in the conversation with the girls. Liki was an orphanage brother and I knew that he preferred girls. After hitting the water, and then resurfacing, I climbed out of the well and went over to Liki. Carefully, so I wouldn't be overheard, I leaned over to whisper, "Why aren't you chatting with the girls too, bro?"

Nervously looking up at me, Liki got up from his lounge chair and then took my hand. He led me to a quiet area beyond the pool house, nearer to the Rimmer homes. He softly admitted, "I... uh... some of the other dudes are better developed, I guess. The girls don't seem to pay too much attention to me, and I'm not sure why."

"You're taller and a little heavier than me," I quickly said. I then glanced down his naked body. Leaning closer, I whispered, "You hang average, just like most of the dudes."

Liki scowled then huffed, "I dunno, bro. I just feel... different, inadequate, in height, weight, what's hangin', and everything, like I can't keep a conversation goin', so..."

Sadly and slowly shaking my head, I told Liki, "I know you and I think you're a hell of a nice guy. Can I ask you a very serious personal question?"

Rapidly nodding, Liki grinned, "Sure, Reyes."

"Are you sure that you're not making a big deal out of our orphanage experiences?"

Liki sighed, "How can I, or any of us, not make a big deal out of that shit, dude?"

"You can't simply erase the past, but you can keep it in perspective. That life is over, Liki. I know that in your case you never bitched or complained much about being with women, but you sure as hell did when you were with men; they were too rough, not rough enough, their cocks were too big or too small, they needed to shave or shower. Tell me I'm wrong."

Liki shrugged, "That's all true, but..."

I waited several moments then gently prodded, "But what?"

Liki's Hawaiian skin flushed and he asked, "Please keep a secret for me?"

"Sure, dude," I nodded, "no one will ever hear what you tell me in private."

"Please don't tell, especially not your dads or brothers. I'm really kind of confused right now."

I held up my right hand and swore, "I promise to never say a word. This is between you and me."

Liki smiled, "Kewl." He paused a few moments to gather his thoughts, and then softly said, "Everything you said was completely true. Since moving here, Monday night, I took a dorm room with Keanu."

"Kewl."

"It's very kewl, maybe too kewl. So we got to talk, about what we had done, and what we kind of missed and needed. So, we do stuff together, and it's better than any sex I've ever had with any man or woman." He paused, blushed and giggled, "Last night, we got carried away. Blowjobs in a sixty-nine and swallowing, then intercourse; he did me and then he wanted me to do him too."

I chuckled, "That's why you two walked into the dining room so late this morning?"

Liki nodded, "Dude, it was awesome. Today though, I'm like, Keanu's a good friend, and he was totally into last night, kissing and all, ya know? We even fell asleep together, with my head on his chest." I nodded, and then Liki continued, "So now I'm asking myself, do I love him? Could I love him, like the Core Rimmers, forever? Would I still love him in five or ten years, when we're both adult men? That's the major problem, and why I'm not talking to the girls much today."

Holding up two fingers on my right hand, I asked, "Two questions."

"Kewl."

"First question; does Keanu know how you feel?"

Liki gasped, "Fuck no! I'm so scared to tell him. What if he says, 'No, it can't be like that'? What if he says, 'Yes, let's be boyfriends'?"

I sighed, "Well, if you guys have sex again tonight and it's just as intense, it's not gonna be any easier to ask him tomorrow, is it?" Liki's eyes shot wide open and he shook his head. "So," I continued, "you've got to ask him, and no matter what his answer is, you've gotta figure out the answer to question two; what do you want to do? Do you want to make babies of your own with a girl, or would you be just happy adopting some with a guy? No matter which you choose, know this; you were my orphanage brother and you are my Clan brother now. Most of the kids here are exactly like you and me, and Kaleo, and Tory, and so on. Those that aren't exactly like us are only somewhat different, as in they were street prostitutes. At least they got paid. All we got was extra food. The extra food us older kids got we shared with the little kids. And we kept those freaks away from the little kids too. No one here is going to say anything too bad about your past. You're cute, and you're smart, and you're definitely able to carry a conversation with anyone you please. Just figure out what you want. If you want Keanu, then let him know, before you go crazy together tonight."

"What if he says no, and wants a different roommate because of it?"

I smirked, "From what you said, he won't totally blow off the friendship. The worst I can see happening is Keanu deciding to not have sex with you, so he doesn't make matters worse for both of you." I stopped short there, because I saw Jonah running around the pool house.

Also noticing Jonah running toward us, Liki warmly smiled, "Thanks, Reyes. I'll chat with him tonight."

"Reyes!" Jonah yelled, and came to a halt a foot or so away from us. He smiled up at Liki and giggled, "How're ya doin', Liki?"

"Better now, thanks to your bro."

Jonah giggled, "Kewl, man." He then turned to me and asked, "Did you see where Sean and Troy went?"

"No, they were still attached, at the side of the diving well the last I saw."

"They're gone now," Jonah grinned. "And so are John, Stephen, Gage, Sammy and Dee. Our pool ball game has come to a screeching halt because half our team disappeared."

Liki giggled, "They're Core Rimmers now, so they could be anywhere."

I nodded at Liki then told Jonah, "Let's take a look around."

The three of us took the long way around the pool house and rec center, back to the pool and around to the diving well. We never saw Sean or Troy anywhere close by. Jonah and I shrugged.

I asked Jonah, "Does this mean we're in charge?"

Jonah giggled, "Don't look like anybody needs anyone in charge." He then poked me in the belly and added, "But if they do, you're it!"

"That's what I was afraid of."

Giggling his butt off, Jonah then ran back to the pool and his game.

By this time, Keanu was no longer chatting, but climbing to the five meter board. For the first time, I looked at Keanu with a sexual eye. He was about the same height and weight as Liki, and of course, they were both of Hawaiian descent. Keanu dove and did a somersault before straightening up and slicing into the water with very little splash. I applauded and so did Liki, some other guys and most of the girls around the diving well too. I evilly grinned and bounced my eyebrows at Liki. He cracked up laughing, stopped clapping and slightly collapsed against me.

Keanu climbed out of the diving well while some of us were still applauding. Now that I could see him closely, I noticed that he had beautiful hazel eyes. Liki had light green eyes. The two of them together would be awesome, I thought. They were both exceptionally cute and would make a cute couple.

Walking up to Liki and I, Keanu grinned, "Was it that good?"

I told him the truth. "It was great, dude! I won't even climb to five-meters to try anything fancy. You cut into the water like a knife with virtually no splash at all."

"Sweet!" Keanu smiled. "Now, can I repeat it is the question."

Liki asked, "How about we get a soda?"

Keanu nodded, "Sure, Liki." They went over to the lounge chairs and slid into their clothes. I climbed back up the three-meter ladder and watched them walk away from the well, in the direction of the CIC

I remained there at the diving well about another hour, trying dives, chatting with some of the other teens. Keanu and Liki never returned to the pools or diving well. I became somewhat concerned for them, so I got dressed and ran to the CIC. Inside the dining room, I found them sitting at a table together, way off to the side of the room, near Shirley's cage. Rather than bother them, I went into the kitchen and got a small soda.

On the way out again, Keanu and Liki hollered, "Reyes," and waved me over. I went there and watched them carefully. It seemed that both Keanu and Liki had puffy eyes, as if they'd been crying. I prepared myself for bad news.

Liki smiled, "Sit with us for a few, bro."

Doing so, I asked, "Please tell me you guys are all right?"

"We're fine," Keanu grinned.

Liki nodded, "Thanks to you, we both got to say what needed to be said."

Leaning over the table closer to me, Keanu grinned, "I've been surprised about stuff with Liki too. If it weren't for you, Liki wouldn't have pulled me aside to talk. Thank you, again."

Liki smiled, "We're on the same page, Reyes. We're starting to feel and think things that surprise us. So, for the time being, we're roommates, and more. In the future, we're going to take time to talk about this important stuff."

"We'll see how it goes," Keanu added. "Saying we're boyfriends right now would be too much too fast for both of us."

"In the meanwhile," Liki continued, "we're still roommates and I think our friendship has grown over the last hour or so."

Keanu nodded, "If things start looking like we're getting more serious, we're going to chat with Prez and Keith, and then your dads too. We need to know what they know; how this could work, long term." He then firmly told Liki, "I am not changing rooms or roommates because of this. Compared to what we used to deal with daily, this is easy, and way more fun."

I couldn't help myself and happily gushed, "I am so relieved! I thought I had really screwed up, and in the process, got you two royally screwed up too!" Sadly shaking their heads, Liki and Keanu roared laughing. I giggled, "What really matters is you two, living together and deciding where your lives could go as closer friends."

Liki tapped Keanu's arm and softly suggested, "Now, to get Reyes back, we've gotta get him hooked up with someone."

Nodding, Keanu chuckled, "There's more than a few right here that think you're hot stuff."

I blushed so hard that they both howled laughing. Covering my face with both hands, I heartily giggled. Liki teased, "Ipo thinks you're way cute, bro."

Uncovering my face, I sniggered, "Sorry, wrong parts there, dudes."

Keanu shrugged, "How about Christian Beresford?"

Shaking my head, I smiled, "It's not that he's not very cute. One thing I've already told myself is, I need another android. I've had two sets of parents already. Derrick and Mike are the third set. I can't see losing the family I have now without having someone that will last a long time with me. Luckily for me, I went to AI Division headquarters yesterday, where I met a bunch of very kewl androids, and as time goes on, I'll be sure to meet more, through that bunch."

My two friends chorused, "Excellent!"

Liki smiled, "You deserve someone, Reyes."

I shrugged and stood, saying, "Ya know, it seems to happen when both parties least expect it. Far be it for me to break from the norm." After a brief pause, I grinned, "I need to check on my brothers. I'll see you guys later."

"See ya, Reyes," they chuckled, and also stood.

Liki noticed my curious expression. He blushed and giggled, "There's about two hours until dinner."

"I know just how to work up an appetite," Keanu evilly grinned.

They actually passed me heading out of the dining room. I paused at the doorway to finish my soda, then tossed the empty cup in the trash, before hurrying back to the pool to find Dillon, Jonah and Randy.

Not only did I find them, but also my dad and pop were awake. Dad and Pop seemed quite busy with Dillon, Jonah and Randy, so I was surprised when they left those three and came toward me. Before I could say a word, I was sandwiched between them. I giggled, "Did you have a good nap, and more, I hope?"

Pop planted a kiss on my cheek and seemed to shudder, "Way more than that."

Derrick whispered in my ear, "You're as important as the other three. Don't ever forget that."

Tilting my head, I smiled, "I know, dad. This shows it very clearly."

We separated, then went back to the other three sons and brothers. For a few more minutes, we hung out at the main pool with the other Core Rimmers and their sons. Kaleo and Tory were the last two to show up. It may be just me, but it seemed all of them were happier than ever. Prez even thanked me for arranging for the buses, although he had no idea when we would use a fleet of two hundred buses. "Figuring fifty kids per bus," he sniggered, "I could see using five or ten at each base."

I shrugged and giggled, "A road trip with our UNIT guys too?"

"There ya go!" Prez cheered. "That could fill a few more buses."

Pop called, "Reyes, let's go find the Scoobies."

I nodded and told Prez, "I'll see ya later," then went to my gathered family.

We headed out beyond the outdoor recreation area and into the trees. Pop seemed to know where he was going and only called for Spike, Faith, Willow and Xander once. In the distance, between trees, I could see our school buildings. The ferret foursome scampered up to us. At that time, Pop introduced Randy, and that he would soon be adopted into the family. Each of the Scoobies went to Randy and said hello.

Crawling up Pop, Spike asked, "Beez Randy a brother now?"

"Not yet, later; when we get Prez to make it official," Mike answered.

"Oh," Spike squeaked, and then started stammering, "But... but..."

Up Pop's other side, Willow scampered. She whispered in Pop's ear. My brothers and I checked with dad, but only got a shrug in response.

Pop nodded, "Randy's kewl, but if it's really important?"

"Yup, yup," all four Scoobies chanted.

Pop went to Randy and softly explained, "Once you're a real brother, the Scoobies will get to know you, but right now, they'd like to show us something. Would you mind if we caught up with you at the pools in a little while?"

Randy shrugged, "It's kewl."

Placing a hand on Randy's shoulder and squeezing, Pop assured, "You're our son, right after we get back and surround Prez." Jonah, Dillon and I nodded and helplessly giggled.

Derrick checked with Randy, "You can find your way back okay?"

Randy nodded and smiled, "If it takes me more than five minutes, I'll yell for help, and a bunch of gorillas or G-Cats will fall out of the trees."

My brothers and I cracked up. Pointing in the direction we came from, Dad chuckled, "That's so true."

Before leaving us, Randy told Xander and Faith, "I've grown to love this family in only a few days. You'll see, I can be trusted with the Shiniest of Shinys, and more." He walked away, toward the main part of the base, loudly reciting the Shiny Pledge.

Dillon firmly told the Scoobies, "This better be really important. Randy is real nice."

Dad nodded and went to Dillon offering his arms. Dillon held out his arms and Dad picked up Dillon, saying, "Trust your pop and the Scoobies. As a family, we'll make it up to Randy so he won't ever feel left out again."

Glancing around at the ferrets, Jonah prodded, "So what's the big deal?"

"Weez gots ta show yous," Faith cutely giggled. She and Xander scampered away. Our family followed them, to the base of a dying tree. Willow and Spike climbed down off Pop.

All four pointed at a large hole near the root of the tree, squeaking, "You's gots ta follows us to sees it."

Mike chuckled, "Down there?"

I sniggered, "Couldn't we just transport to wherever?"

They all shook their heads. Spike grinned, "Not this time. You's can sees how weez found it first."

Xander, Willow and Faith scampered down into the hole. Spike held out a little paw to Pop. Taking the paw in his hand, Pop followed Spike, knelt down and crawled into the hole. Dillon and Jonah lost it and cracked up, but they didn't even give it another thought. Dillon and then Jonah followed Pop into the hole.

Turning to my dad, I giggled, "Seriously?"

Dad nodded, pointed at the ground and sniggered, "After you."

Getting down on my hands and knees, I laughed, "We're gonna get so dirty."

Also kneeling down, Dad laughed, "Dirty tree hole Rimmers!"

Up ahead, in the dark tunnel, I could hear Pop bitching and my brothers laughing as we bumped into sides of the tunnel and each other. Squeaky little ferret instructions and laughter echoed in the tunnel. Mostly, we could stay on our hands and knees, but sometimes we had to lay flat and shimmy our way down and around the passages.

Pop griped, "But that way is bigger, I can feel it."

Spike answered, "A bigger dead end, Shiny Daddy."

"Weez don't want everybody down here, so's we made some wrong turns to no wheres," Xander explained.

Behind me, dad softly sniggered, "Yeah, how silly could you be, Mike?" He raised the pitch of his voice and squeaked, "Weez don't want everybody down here!" I laughed so hard that I fell forward and bumped my nose on Jonah's sandal-covered foot.

We crawled the winding turns of the descending dark tunnel for thirteen minutes, giggling and cracking bad Rimmer jokes. At last we reached the end. I could just barely see Pop offering hands to help Dillon, Jonah and then me out of the tunnel. Brushing myself off, I watched Pop get Dad out and onto his feet. Way up the side of the space we had arrived at, the ferrets had fashioned natural gas piping and light with mirrors.

Pop asked where we were and the Scoobies all proudly replied, "This beez our Shiny Vault!"

Dillon and Jonah began checking the place out and I followed them.

Pop wondered, "Are we even on base anymore? Where exactly are we, Spike?"

"Under the auditorium's basement," Spike happily cheered.

Faith nodded, "Near where Shiny Daddies first plays us Shiny music."

Xander pointed up at another passageway saying, "That leads up to the auditorium basement." It had to be twenty feet up a sheer wall, maybe two or three feet below the ring of gas flames.

"Weez can get anywhere on base from here," Willow squealed.

Dad gasped, "My God!"

There were various shiny things in piles everywhere, not to mention hub caps, tire wheels and one really horrible modern art sculpture. I tapped it and assumed it was made of aluminum.

Mike wondered, "What's the most valuable thing down here?"

All the ferrets gathered before that awful aluminum sculpture and cheered, "This beez the Shiniest!"

Dad softly asked, "Do you guys always crawl in and out of here?"

Xander shook his head and seriously answered, "Weez can transport in and out with Shinies if weez need to."

Pop grinned, "Well, that answers how some of the larger Shinies got down here. This place is awesome, guys." He paused and wondered, "How come I don't see any guitar picks?"

Crawling up Pop and parking herself on her daddy's shoulder, Faith replied, "Oh, weez keeps them always!"

"Them's from you, Shiny Daddy," Willow reminded, and then crawled up Mike's other side until she arrived at his opposite shoulder.

I asked, "All this stuff came from Dull Lovers and Shiny Haters?"

Xander nodded, "Some of it. Most weez found."

Spike frowned, shook his head sadly and growled, "Tossed asides like garbage! Blasphemers!"

Nodding and forcing a frown, Pop huffed, "I know, it's very sad."

Pointing at four large tikis adorned with pearls, I wondered, "Where did you find these?"

Willow answered, "They was buried here already."

Scratching my head and scowling, I muttered, "They were here?" All four Scoobies replied affirmatively.

Dad asked, "What's wrong, Reyes?"

I sighed, "Tiki carvings are of Hawaiian gods, usually put at burial grounds. Tikis like these, with all these pearls, they must've been extremely important, guarding graves of very important people."

Pop gasped, "Tiki gods guarding burial grounds?" He asked the Scoobies, "Did you guys find any human remains here?"

Spike fervently shook his head, replying, "No, Shiny Daddy, no bones, just Shinies."

Xander explained, "That's why weez picked this spot; it already had lots of Shinies."

Willow nodded, "Yup! Weez cleaned the buried Shinies up."

Dad checked his wristwatch then asked, "Are we done here?"

Pop nodded and suggested, "Let's go out under the Day Shiny. Then we can all have dinner together."

While Xander climbed the wall to flip the mirror and turn off the gas flames, Dad gathered Dillon, Jonah and me. Spike held onto Pop's leg and asked, "Yous can find us now, Shiny Daddy?"

Pop honestly answered, "I probably couldn't make my way down the tunnel without getting lost, but at least I know where to find you."

The lights went out. Willow said, "Yous can call for us from any street drain. We'll hear yous down here." A few moments later, Pop called Alden and a split second later, we were all outside and by the pool house.

Across the pool from us were Prez, Keith, Corey, Drew and some new guys. Corey saw first how dirty we were and cracked up laughing. Prez covered his eyes briefly and chuckled. Keith grinned and pointed at the pool house, saying, "No pool for you dudes until you shower."

Pop loudly bitched, "That's why we're here, Dull One."

Suspiciously glaring at Keith, Spike wondered, "Is he really a Dull One, Shiny Daddy?"

"No, he took the pledge," Pop answered. Turning around and following us into the pool house, he smirked, "Keith just likes to tease and bother me. So I tease and bother him too, every chance I get."

Inside the pool house, we all started undressing. In the changing area, Dad separated our comm-badges from our clothes, then called Alden and had our extremely dirty clothes transported to the Gibbons' laundry room. Then our growing family went to scrub layers of dirt off our bodies. Randy came in and giggled, "So, was it really important?"

We all nodded and confirmed that it actually was. The Scoobies noticed us and checked with each other. Spike told Randy, "Weez showed our Shiny Daddies and brothers our Shiny Vault."

"Oh, wow," Randy gasped, "That's really important."

Willow offered, "Weez can show you later."

Still washing his face, Pop said, "Don't go too far, Randy. As soon as we're done here, we're surrounding Prez and adopting you."

Randy giggled, "With or without clothes?"

Pop grinned, "Why does that matter?"

Randy shrugged, "I just need to know how to dress, or undress for the occasion."

Dad smiled, "Then get undressed."

"Kewl," Randy smiled, and started taking his boardies and underwear off. Before Randy could pick them up off the floor, his clothes disappeared.

Over the loudspeakers, Alden said, "Your clothes are in the Gibbons laundry room, Randy."

Pointing at the ceiling speakers, Dad explained, "Alden is our division's AI"

Randy wondered, "Like a computer?"

Jonah shrugged, "Not exactly, Alden's a bit more than just a machine."

"He's a real boy to me," Dillon stubbornly added.

Alden giggled, "Okay, you guys just earned bonus points."

Still washing his hair, Pop said, "The AI's make sure all you kids are kewl. If anything were to happen to any of you, like getting hurt or sick, they'd intervene and notify us."

The Scoobies shook water from their coats, then went to the changing room, where Randy was standing. Each of them reintroduced themselves to our new brother. Then they laid two towels on the floor and began rolling around on them to dry off. Pop noticed and helplessly sniggered. Dad sputtered then turned his face into his shower spray. I could tell he was fighting the urge to crack up laughing by his shoulder bounces.

Starting with Dillon, we exited the showers to dry off. Randy sat on the bench and seemed very thoughtful. I wondered, "What's up, Randy?"

Blushing intensely, Randy mumbled, "Well, I feel kind of silly, but I guess now's a good time to ask a question." Looking up at Dad and Pop, he sighed, "Last night, at the dorm, some guys were talking about growing up and puberty. What's that last word mean exactly?"

Jonah smiled, "Okay, me, you and Dillon aren't there yet. Reyes, Dad and Pop are. They've got deeper voices, wider shoulders and hair around their dicks and sacks." Looking up at me, Jonah asked, "What you've got is what you've always had?"

I nodded, "Yep, thirteen is about average for puberty, so I've got some hair down there. Dad's almost fifteen and Pop's near fourteen-and-a-half. They've got more hair than I do."

Randy droned, "Oh, so that's why Roy has way more hair, up his legs and on his belly, he's older."

Pop shrugged, "Or he may have started earlier. Me, Derrick, Prez and Keith all started right around our twelfth birthdays. Corey Seaver is eleven, but he's got a little hair too. His voice hasn't completely changed, but you hear it cracking now and then because it is changing."

Dad nodded, "Another example is Drew. During the summer, his voice was changing. Now it's pretty much done. By the end of the summer, Drew's few hairs turned into more. Now he's got about as much as Reyes."

Randy asked, "So nothing happens like at the same time?"

Dad and Pop both shook their heads. I explained, "Some guys may get the muscles, wider shoulders and body mass first. It all depends on genetics, how it runs in both your mom's and your dad's families. Our Dad and Pop shave. I don't and haven't ever. Even if I did, I'd always have the same fine hairs over my lip, like a thirteen-year-old might. I never asked Drew, but I don't think he's ever shaved either."

Pop tossed his towel in the hamper, saying, "If Drew's like Keith, I'd give it another few months. Before Keith turned thirteen, his mom didn't like seeing him with a mustache, so Keith's dad showed him how to shave. Now Keith gets reminded when to shave by either his mom or his dad."

Dad tossed his towel in the hamper and grinned, "Okay, guys, as soon as we get outside, the four of you need to surround Prez. Give him no escape."

The Scoobies giggled, "Weez can help too!"

Pop nodded, "You sure can. Since it seems we have a few new faces out there, we'll get introduced and then tell Prez to go into adoption mode."

Dad chuckled, "If he makes any excuse, or tries to say 'later', Dillon and Randy, your job is to turn on the water works." Immediately, Dillon and Randy put on their pouty-faces. They looked so pitiful, I couldn't help laughing.

Pop sniggered, "Jonah, your job, if the sad-sacks don't get him, is to make Prez feel like he doesn't like you or any of us."

Jonah nodded and giggled, "I can do that."

Dad prompted, "Let's go." We left the shower and the pool house, walked directly around the pool and stopped before Prez and Keith. The Scooby Gang ran up onto Prez's lounge chair. Xander and Faith sat on Prez's knees. Spike and Willow went all the way up Prez's shoulders and sat there. Dad and Pop were introduced to Jesse and Julio, our visitors from Des Moines. They shook hands and knocked knuckles and made some pleasant small talk. Then Dad instructed Prez, "It's time to get your tricorder, bro."

"Now?" Prez confirmed, and glanced around our family and the two Des Moines leaders he was with. I noticed that was enough for Dillon and Randy to put on their act. Widely grinning, Keith pointed them out to Prez. "Oh, for the love of Pete," Prez chuckled, "No, not the pitiful routine!" He quickly tapped his sub-vocal, ordering, "Alden, get me my tricorder before they actually cry."

Keith sniggered, "Our boys are going to be so spoiled rotten. At the first tear, Prez will cave and give them anything they want."

Turning to Corey, Drew grinned, "Let's get Lenny and Geoff." Corey nodded and giggled. They both got up to gather the boys, preparing to adopt Lenny Cutler. Seven-year-old Lenny had been attached to Drew, Corey and Geoff since Sunday anyway.

The tricorder appeared in Prez's lap. From another chair, where she sat with Cesar and Felipe, Aunt Lanna called over, "Preston, we'll have two more adoptions over here, as soon as my husband is done with work." From the other side of the pool, Murakami and Shimizu ran over.

Seeing that the small task was growing exponentially, Prez sat up in his chair and loudly called, "Kokaku and Dewi, com'ere, please?"

The two little four-year-old boys climbed out of the pool and came over, weaseling between me and Jonah to stand before Prez. "Tell mommy and daddy the day is over," Prez told the boys. "Have them come over here, so we can get Dewi officially adopted into the Hundser family."

The two boys loudly laughed, "YAAAAAA!" and took off like a shot for the FYS Building. Neither had bothered to get dressed though. Grinning, Prez thoughtfully hummed.

Julio laughed, "Well, did you tell them to get dressed first? No-oo-oo!"

Keith sniggered, "Two naked four-year-olds should put a very quick end to the work day." Rejoining the group were Drew and Corey, with Geoff and Lenny.

John, Stephen, Frankie, Lindsay, and their two friends, Jeff and Tommy joined our group. John told Prez, "Let's make Frankie official too, bro."

Glancing around the expanding group surrounding him, Prez smiled, "Let's get started." He pressed a few buttons on the tricorder then held it out, asking, "Lenny Cutler, would you like Drew Hundser and Corey Seaver as your fathers, and Geoffrey Eckel as your little brother?"

"Yup, to me they already are," Lenny smiled.

Prez asked, "Drew and Corey, would you like Lenny as your son."

Drew nodded, "Yes."

"Definitely," Corey smiled.

Prez asked, "Geoff, do you want Lenny to be your big brother?"

Rapidly nodding, Geoff wrapped an arm around Lenny's waist, saying, "Yeah, Unca Prez." Lenny wrapped his arm over Geoff's shoulders.

"It's official," Prez grinned, "Lenny Cutler is now Drew and Corey's son and Geoff's big bro." The group around Prez applauded. Drew, Corey, Geoff and Lenny stepped back and embraced each other. Prez moved on to the next closest set, asking, "Frankie Petropavlovski, do you want John Hundser and Stephen Marr as your fathers?"

Frankie smiled, "Yes, Uncle Prez. I want their names too. Make me Francis Hundser-Marr, please."

"That's been recorded, Frankie," Prez smiled. The paperwork will be filed and Grandpa Jim will ask you to sign your name in a day or two." He paused then asked, "John Hundser and Stephen Marr, do you want Frankie as your son, and with the surname he has asked for?"

Stephen giggled, "Yeah, Prez. Thank goodness I won't have to get tongue-tied trying to say 'Petro-pav...lovski' too much more." The entire group around us began sniggering and laughing.

Prez chuckled, "John, do you want Frankie as your son?"

John nodded, "Yeah, bro. Let's get the dolphin lover hooked up." Again, we all began laughing. The only article of clothing Frankie had on was his dolphin necklace. The threesome stepped back and our group moved closer.

Prez asked, "Randy Beale, do you want Derrick and Mike as your fathers, and Dillon, Jonah and Reyes as your brothers?"

Glancing around at Dad, Pop, Dillon, Jonah and me, and getting smiles and nods, Randy said, "Yeah, Prez."

Prez asked, "Derrick Seibert and Michael Gibbons, do you want Randy Beale as your son?"

Almost simultaneously, Dad and Pop chorused, "Yeah, bro."

Prez asked, "Reyes Taraschke, Jonah Desak and Dillon Helde, do you want Randy as your brother?"

I nodded, "Very much."

"Yup," Jonah added.

Dillon giggled, "Of course," earning more sniggering and giggles.

"It's official," Prez smiled, and then asked, "Who's next?"

Uncle Bill and Aunt Lanna stepped forward with Cesar, Felipe, Murakami Junichiro and Shimizu Atsushi. In a few minutes, the latter two were part of the Seaver family. Next to step forward were Grandpa Carl and Grandma Anna, who adopted six-year-old May Hickox, giving Brandi the sister she very much wanted; and two former FCC boys, seven-year-olds Chad Bunting and Herbert Trumbo. Dad widely smiled, and softly told me that he was certain his parents would happily fill their large new home with kids of all ages.

Uncle Jim and Aunt Jen arrived at the pool. Dewi was officially made their son, and Rena Hawkin, an eight-year-old former FCC Girl, was made their daughter and Carmella's big sister. Just after five o'clock, the last and largest set of adoptions were four-year-old Aaron Pendergrass, five-year-olds Randall McFarren, Alan McHugh and Tami Hepner, all of whom were former FCC kids and were adopted by Grandma Laura and Grandpa Rob.

When it was all over, Prez recorded that the adoptions were witnessed by most of the Pacific Rim Division's Clan as well as Director Julio Hernandez and Assistant Director Jesse Crowley, from the Des Moines Division.

As we were walking away, Pop sniggered, "Almost every boy adopted was naked at the time of their adoption."

Dad shrugged and grinned, "Most of the fathers were too. I think Stephen was the only one under the age of twenty with shorts on."

Randy admitted, "I was wondering about that."

Dad asked, "How old do you think Stephen is?"

Randy shrugged, "Eight or nine, I guess. He's only a little taller than Jonah."

"He's eleven," Dad softly said, and Randy's jaw dropped.

Pop said, "All you guys get to have those morning milkshakes. Stephen has to have them twice or three times a day. A bunch of you guys are undernourished, but Stephen's malnourished. That's the one thing I'm watching very closely. I want to see all these kids growing and gaining weight." Reaching down and tickling Dillon, Pop laughed, "We'll have no little squirts in this Clan by New Years!"

While Pop and my brothers were laughing and teasing each other, I softly told Dad, "We're going to try and split off into our own family nests, either tonight or as soon as possible."

Dad nodded, "Whatever and whenever, Reyes. If any of the little guys aren't ready, it's no big deal."

I sighed, "Not for us, but for you and Pop it is." Locking eyes with him, I asked, "How many times a day did you and Pop make love in some manner before Friday?"

Dad thought a few seconds, then leaned closer and whispered, "At least twice, sometimes three times a day, and we always had intercourse once a day. He'd be bottom one day, I'd take bottom the next day."

I whispered back, "It's not been that way all week."

"It's getting back to normal, Reyes."

I nodded, "That's my goal, Dad. You two need that. Your love for each other is what made you father figures in the first place, last Saturday. My idea was to break into Gibbons-Seibert family boys and girls nests first. Then it'll be easier to move into the townhouse, where you and Pop can have that nice big king sized bed to yourselves every night." Pop had stopped messing with my brothers and stuck his ear between us to listen in. Dad and I softly sniggered. I grinned, "I'm gonna get all the kids gathered to talk about family group nests. That gives you two about forty minutes before dinner. Spend at least half that time alone, please?"

Dad nodded. Pop took Dad's hand, then tapped his sub-vocal and ordered, "Alden, take me and my husband to our townhome's master bedroom." They vanished.

I went to my brothers, who had already joined up with Aaron, Alan, Ben, Chad, Herbie, Kawazoe and Sung. We got the girls rounded up and went to a poolside private table for our second chat of the day, with a bunch of new members. Most of the kids agreed, it was time to break into family units. Lindsay had already broken off with Christel, and was enthusiastic to have Brandi, Latoya, and May join as sisters that night. Nearing the end of our conversation, I noticed our grandfathers had been watching us. I waved them over so they could hear our plan. Grandpa Rob would have the girls together that night, most likely in an upstairs bedroom. Us boys would probably make a nest in the Seiberts' basement, but we couldn't be certain when that would happen, because the youngest wanted at least another night in the main nest. Aaron Pendergrass was only four-years-old. Alan McHugh and Randall McFarren were five years old.

Our meeting was complete and our granddads clued in, so the girls went toward the Rimmer family homes. I noticed Dad and Pop walking back to the pool area. They were dressed and had obviously showered again, because their hair was still damp. Since it was near dinner time, my brothers and uncles took off to get dressed. Dad and Pop sat at the table with me and I filled them in on the results of our meeting. They were both kewl with the plans.

Dad grinned, "Ya know, Reyes, since Saturday, you've been more than a big brother. You're relieving us of some parental duties."

"Today is the second time since Monday that you sent us off to go make love," Pop chuckled. He then playfully asked, "What do you think we did yesterday without our sons around?"

Dad nudged him and laughed, "That's not all we did, but we did get chances we probably wouldn't have had." Returning his attention to me, Dad smiled, "We want you to chill out. Being a big brother is one thing, but we don't want you worrying about us as well."

"I'm fine," I giggled. "I went to AI Division this morning before the funeral. Those guys are fun, and I can't wait for you to meet them. I'm hoping to invite a few of them here soon. Also, what I said before is completely true; Dillon, Jonah and I latched onto you because we liked you as a couple and wanted you as fathers. You two can't prove to me, a fifty-six-year-old teenager, that you don't have needs. We all want you to be happy. Seeing you happy automatically makes us happy."

Dad sighed, "We need you to be happy too, Reyes."

I gushed, "I couldn't be happier. My memories are restored. I've got three kewl brothers and the best two fathers. Yesterday I met eight other androids; Danny, Marc, KC, Paul, Ryan, two adults named Les and Victoria, and a little eight-year-old android named Joey. I haven't seen another android since 1958, when Dad took me to Vision Industries for a final check-up and software upgrade before we moved here, to the ROH. Danny Page is the first android ever, a human personality imprinted onto a positronic brain. Marc Furst is really the first of the line of androids that I and most of us came from. KC is a blast, literally! He said himself, 'sometimes I'm an accident waiting to happen'. Paul and Ryan lost their parents twenty years ago. They lived on the streets almost the entire time I was at the orphanage. I learned today that their parents told them that they were completely human to them. My first parents said something similar to me too. In Paul and Ryan's case though, Ryan came to believe in that statement from his parents completely. He will swear to everybody he's one-hundred percent human. Paul protects his brother in every way, including that conviction. They were rescued only last week, a few days before we were, and they're still adjusting to Clan life. AI Division headquarters is two homes on Sullivan Island, so there aren't too many kids around, like there are here. Both are about my height and weight, Caucasian, with light brown hair and dark blue eyes, and a couple of freckles too."

My dad and pop glanced at each other and grinned. Realizing I was rambling, I moved on.

"Lastly, now that I've got my memories restored, you guys made me part of your band last night. Honestly, I couldn't be more thrilled with everything without becoming a giggling spaz. Remember what I told you last night, that I developed empathy at the orphanage?" When they nodded, I continued, "I'm not even accessing any of my new stuff yet, and I could see you both glowing as you approached before. I could feel it in my heart, from dozens of meters away. That's the kind of relationship I want, and it's what Jonah wants too. I give Randy another day or two before he's realizing he needs a special friend that may one day become his boyfriend or girlfriend. Even the Scoobies see you as something special."

Turning to Dad, Pop chuckled, "We just lost our first logic war, I think."

Dad nodded then focused on me and asked, "What do you need?"

I shrugged, "The only thing I know for certain is that I should concentrate on another android. After losing two families already, I want someone who can be with me longer than a human, so he can be there for me and I can be there for him. In the Clan, everything has changed for me and for all androids. The one thing that hasn't changed is our longevity and human mortality. At this point, I'm looking around and keeping my options open. Danny and Marc are already together, even if they won't admit it. Joey's too young. That leaves KC, Paul and Ryan, all of which are very kewl. I just don't know any of them too well yet. And there may be other androids I'll meet in the future." I paused then softly asked, "How did you two hook up?"

Pop began chuckling. Dad grinned, "The summer of 1994, The Gibbons' and the Hundses moved to our neighborhood. Keith, Mike and I were only four, but we were already interested in music. We were friends from the start. Then Prez moved here with his folks in 1997. Three friends became four."

Taking over, Pop explained, "The four of us grew up together. We learned to play our instruments together. Prez was and still is an awesome guitarist, but our band needed a bass player. He took on the challenge. By the time we were about ten years old, we had each messed around with the other three, showin' off our little bones to each other, jackin' off and blowin' each other."

"We all knew what was going on and we were all kewl with it," Dad added. "Five years passed like that. Each of us had sleepovers with the other three, either one at a time or all at once." He chuckled, "One night, Corey was sleeping over with Drew, and I was there with Keith. They caught us in a sixty-nine. So many really good times, it was the best." He then sighed, "Then the O'Brians' plane crashed. Our best friend became an orphan. It was a major shock to all of us and our parents too. We're pretty sure that their deaths led the two of us to become a couple. The Hundserts took in Prez. We became one couple, Prez and Keith became another couple."

"It didn't change much sexually or in any other way," Mike said. "When we had sleepovers together, it was four hands or four mouths working over four cocks. I love Prez and Keith. I just love Derrick a little more."

Derrick checked, "I think it was how intercourse actually worked out that made the big difference." When Pop nodded, Derrick smiled, "Anal sex with Mike rocks more than it has with Prez or Keith. It's like a matter of timing. Mike and I can cum together almost every time. It's the same with Keith and Prez. At the end of the summer, just before school started, the four of us talked and decided from then on, intercourse was between partners only."

I chuckled, "It sometimes seems that you don't like Keith, Pop."

Pop laughed, "Keith and I have been busting each other's balls from the start. He took piano lessons from a classical instructor. I took guitar lessons from a pop and rock instructor. It started really getting silly between us then." He paused and glanced around. Seeing Keith and Prez together with Julio and Jesse, he leaned closer and softly said, "Keith's cock is seven inches long by six inches in circumference. My bone is seven-and-a-half inches long by five-and-a-quarter in circumference. Intercourse was way too short between us. He'd have me groaning and cumming in no time flat and I'd have him groaning and cumming in a few short pumps."

Dad smiled, "It was the same with me and Prez, and me and Keith too. When you've got three awesome friends, all of which you love and think are awesome people, it boils down to who does it for you in the sack. What you need to do is find those kinds of people, Reyes; the friendship is the most important. When you make love, is it over too fast, or are you both enjoying it and ready to climax together? A friend that can perform that miracle is probably the right one for you."

Hearing John's laughter and Stephen's giggling, I leaned back in my chair and huffed, "Wow. I can tell you that I never had a boyfriend before. The sex at the orphanage was never like what you described."

Pop smirked, "Those were perverted pedophiles only interested in their own pleasure. No matter what I ever thought of sex with Prez and Keith, it was never like that. We're best friends. Making it good for each other was always our primary concern. Growing up together, we learned our musical instruments and how to treat our instruments." Dad and I softly chuckled. Pop smiled, "Together, all four of us went from careful and scared to enthusiastic and playful. Right after school started, after the holidays last January, Keith got the flu. For a week, Prez didn't get to sleep with Keith and sex wasn't possible. Imagine Prez getting bitchy and bitchier."

"No," I giggled, "I don't think I want to."

Pop nodded and softly sniggered, "Exactly. By the third day, we took Prez aside, before he had a complete meltdown. Keith knew about it too. It wasn't a problem for any of the four of us, and really told the whole truth; we love each other and take care of each other, no matter what the circumstances happen to be."

Dad recommended, "Have a private chat with Sean Moorhead sometime, Reyes. I don't know what happened or how exactly, but he's completely attached to Troy. And Troy refuses to take a step without Sean right there with him. Since you and Sean have similar experiences, I'd think you two could easily chat and learn something from each other. What we've just told you isn't really a secret."

Pop agreed, "It's got to be pretty obvious to everybody. I'd think everybody ten and over would understand easily enough."

Prez loudly laughed, "Okay, you three! Derrick, Mike and Reyes! You've got four telepaths ready to slam their heads into walls!" Julio and Jesse doubled up and roared hysterically.

"Lucky for you we know you told the truth," Keith loudly giggled.

Julio and Jesse breathlessly laughed, "BUSTED!"

Hanging my head, I softly giggled, "Four telepaths; John, Jamie, Jacob and who else?"

Dad sniggered, "Johnny, from Des Moines."

Turning around and glancing at Jacob, Jamie, John and Johnny, Pop laughed, "This was a private conversation with our son. Nobody asked any of you to listen in!" All four were giggling and playing innocent little angels. Suddenly, Pop covered his ears with his hands and laughed, "One at a time!" Sitting on the edge of the pool, Beau cracked up and slid into the water. He quickly surfaced, coughing and spluttering.

I noticed the adults, including the three from Des Moines, standing and gathering their littlest kids. Prez shouted, "Dinner time, Rimmers!" As usual, little kids cheered and made a mass exodus from the pool. Then the four Clan leaders sitting together got up and started to dress. I slid into my clothes while Dad and Pop gathered our family.

Arriving at the CIC kitchen, we found that our chefs had prepared two alternative main courses; there was roast beef or turkey, and all the usual side veggies, soups and salads. As soon as our family was close enough to the chefs, Pop asked, "Miguel, please get some raw chicken or turkey sliced for the Scoobies?"

Miguel nodded and smiled, but Jessica loudly said, "I'm going to the fridge. I'll get it." By the time our family was nearing the end of the line, Jessica had four small plates of chicken strips prepared. She handed a plate to each of our ferret brothers and sisters.

First to receive his plate, Xander happily squealed, "Weez get chickens and turkeys?"

Jessica nodded and giggled, "Everybody else gets a choice, why shouldn't you? Once you're seated, you can share your food with your brother and sisters, or have both."

Pointing up at Jessica's head, Willow asked, "What's that in your hairs?"

"A barrette, so my hair is secure and doesn't fall forward into food."

Widely smiling, Willow and Faith checked with each other. They squealed, "Very nice and shiny."

Spike immediately tapped his comm-badge and ordered Daileass to get barrettes for his sisters. Appearing on each ferret girl's plate were two small barrettes, one gold and another silver. Soon after our family sat down, each girl helped the other put on their new barrettes.

Dinner started normally enough, but out of the corner of my eye, I noticed some kids were being silly and giggling. Looking around, I couldn't be sure what was happening. I figured that some of the newer kids were chilling out and more comfortable with their new environment. Jonah and Ben had obviously practiced guitar during the day while I was otherwise occupied. They were chatting about their exercises when I noticed Prez at the next table. He was talking with Julio and holding a spoonful of applesauce in front of him. Unexpectedly, something fell from the ceiling and dropped into the spoon, splattering applesauce around the table. My dad, pop and I helplessly cracked up. We were just calming down and returning to our meals when three cauliflower bombs landed in my bowl of soup. Prez, Keith, Julio and Jesse howled laughing.

Squinting across the room at John, I heard him giggling in my mind, 'Wasn't me!' I grabbed a few extra napkins to clean up the splattered mess when I was hit in the back. Naturally, I quickly looked back. On the floor behind me was a half-chewed roll. John giggled, 'That was me!'

I picked up the roll and watched the parents' tables. As soon as it seemed they weren't watching, I hurled the roll back across the dining room at John. Moments later, Dad used his tablespoon as a catapult to fling a barrage of peas across the room. Watching the adults, Keith prepared a mound of mashed potatoes for launching. When the adults weren't looking, he nonchalantly fired. Potatoes dispersed and went everywhere, hitting John, Drew, Corey, Jamie, Jacob and Beau.

When the adults left the dining room, the food hit the fan. What was occasional became non-stop. After a few minutes of this groaning, laughter and messy silliness, John broadcast, 'Teens are targets!'

Troy gasped, "Shit!" and Sean cracked up, ducking for cover under the table and taking his plate with him for ammunition.

My brothers and the Scoobies scampered away. Teens that had been on the other side of the room came running to our side. Many of the older teen girls just ran for the exit, not willing to participate. Prez, Keith Julio and Jesse organized, put their leftovers on the floor, tilted the table on its side and set the chairs up as barricades. The four of them huddled behind their protection, each one occasionally popping up to fire. The dining room became a food fight war zone. Picking up my tray to use as a shield, I scooped up some corn kernels and sent them flying. Bob Busch, from Des Moines, popped out of the kitchen with a slingshot, launching deviled eggs toward unsuspecting victims. Our younger chefs, Tony and Gordon, in their mid-twenties, occasionally appeared with ladles of veggies to fire across the room. In minutes, both sides were scraping spent ammunition off the chairs, floor and tables.

It only lasted about twenty minutes, but when the last of the ammo was spent, we all looked around at the mess we had made.

Even the bird cages in the corner of the room were splattered.

Covered in food, from his hair to his feet, Robin giggled, "Watch this." He focused on one section of the room. We all watched as food remnants seemingly gathered into a large clump. Afraid of what was going to be done with this massive meter-in-diameter mess, little kids bolted for the exit, squealing and laughing. John telekinetically pulled three large trash cans into the room. Robin's clump dropped into the first trash can, making the most revolting squishy plop I had ever heard.

At the groans and disgusted faces, John howled laughing. More kids left to shower and change out of their soiled clothes. The telekinetics joined forces to clean up a majority of the mess we had made. Tables and chairs were returned to their pre-war states. Once the dining room was clean, the last of us went to shower and change clothes. In the shower with Jonah, I figured that we had showered three times and wore an amazing five sets of clothes during this one day.

Afterward, a lot of us returned to the CIC dining room and rec room to hang out.

Keith returned from the men's room with Dee. Keith sat down and Dee shuffled onto his dad's lap. Facing Prez, Keith sighed, "I think we're gonna have to call Antonio. Dee's still got the runs."

Overhearing that, Nathan turned and said, "Can I suggest a quick checkup by Reyes instead?"

"Why Reyes?" Keith and Prez simultaneously wondered.

Nathan grinned, "He was upgraded. Now he's got the knowledge of any General Practitioner stored in his positronic memory. It would just be easier for Reyes to check Dee over real quick."

I was at the next table over with Dad, Pop and my brothers. Prez called me to come over. Keith explained the situation to Dee, who enthusiastically agreed to have me play doctor with him.

Uncertainly, I checked the time. It had been forty-seven hours and twenty-two minutes since I got those databases. I overrode the lockout on only the medical databases. I widely grinned, "Holy crap! I know exactly what to do!" Dad and Pop began laughing as I hurried to the Command Center to retrieve a tricorder.

In less than a minute, I returned and easily operated the tricorder. I scanned Dee and reviewed the readings. I smiled, "He's not even a little dehydrated. I don't foresee any major problems, just discomfort from going so often. We can even take care of that. Let me just confer with Doc Andrews and Doc Howard. I'll come back with a hypo-spray and Dee will be done running to the bathrooms." Turning and slowly walking a few steps away, I tapped my comm-badge to call the two doctors. I told them what was going on, explained my readings and transmitted them to the doctors.

The doctors reviewed my diagnosis and would have Alden transport a hypo-spray to me. Prez suggested, "Would you like Reyes to be your doctor tonight, at least until we're sure you're better, Dee?" Dee enthusiastically agreed.

I returned and administered the hypo-spray in Dee's arm, saying, "This will take care of the diarrhea and lower abdominal cramps."

"How long will it take?" Prez wondered.

"Two minutes," I answered. "The intestines are packed with blood vessels." Rapidly shaking my head, I giggled, "I'm gonna have to access the various new databases I have!"

Pop howled laughing. Dad called me over, obviously beaming with pride. After instructing Dee to drink plenty of water for the next few hours, I then went to Dad. "I want you to think about something," Dad whispered. "With all your new databases, you're an incredible asset to this Clan. If you want, you can become a Core Rimmer too."

I blushed and grinned, "I don't know, dad. Playing on stage with you guys last night was awesome. That's really all I'm looking forward to."

Pulling me closer and firmly hugging me, Dad smiled, "You'll get more and more chances to do that too. As your databases become more integrated, all you have to do is tell me what you'd like to do. If you say yes then we'll talk with Prez."

Still uncertain, I shrugged at first. Seeing the pride in my Dad's eyes and realizing that he really wanted me to join the command team, I considered it more carefully and teetered on the fence. I told Dad, Pop and my brothers, "Let me sleep on it. A lot of things have changed this week. To go from messed-up memories to this in only two days, it's strange to think of myself as any kind of leader."

Pop nodded, "Take all the time ya need. There's no rush." Jamie, Jacob and Beau were wandering around. They came to our table and said good-bye, and that they were going to the U.K. soon for Joel's and Kevin's wedding. Shortly thereafter, John and Stephen left the dining room with the threesome.

From near his dad and pop, Richie hollered, "Dillon, do you wanna go to the rec room?"

Dillon checked with Randy, Ben and Jonah. All three agreed and stood. Dillon shouted, "Kewl. Let's go." At that table, Richie, Dee, Frankie, Gage, Sammy, Bruce, Dewi and Kokaku got up.

Jonah asked, "Aren't you coming too, Reyes?"

"I'll catch up with you guys later." I loudly called, "Dee, if you need anything, let me know."

Spinning around, Dee giggled, "I'm way better already, but I will, Reyes."

Jonah shrugged, "Okay," and followed the pack to the rec room.

Prez, Keith, Julio and Jesse came to our table. Before sitting down, Prez called Troy and Sean over. He had his PADD and we had a band meeting. The original four members of Platinum Habits began listing their rehearsed songs and checking with Troy and me to fit us in. I couldn't believe the number of truly awesome songs that they could play. They listed songs by Rush, Yes and Emerson, Lake and Palmer that I had no idea they could play. Of course, Troy and I were asked which songs we had practiced too, and those were added to Prez's PADD.

Our meeting was cut short when Prez's comm-badge chirped. We heard an adult man's voice say, "Vorik to Director O'Brian."

Prez tapped his comm-badge and formally responded, "O'Brian here. How can I help you, Lieutenant?"

Vorik answered, "There is a situation requiring the attention of your command team, Sir."

"Acknowledged," Prez replied, and then informed the Lieutenant, "I have Clan Short guests from Des Moines. Would it be acceptable to have them join our team, Sir?"

"Yes, that may prove advantageous," Vorik answered.

"We'll be right there, Lieutenant," Prez said. "O'Brian out." He tapped his comm-badge and sighed, "We'll continue this later, dudes." Standing and looking at me, Prez asked, "Are you joining us, Reyes?"

Dad replied, "I asked, but he needs to think on it, Prez."

Prez nodded and smiled, "It's kewl. Give it serious thought though, okay, Reyes?"

"I will, Prez."

Dad told me, "Join your brothers as a brother. Do what you want to do tonight and take it easy."

Pop asked, "Where do you think you'll be sleeping?"

"Probably at the Hundserts in the nest until the youngest guys are ready."

Pop nodded, "We'll see you later then."

The Core Rimmers and Des Moines teams headed for the Command Center. I couldn't help wondering what they were going to do with two dozen guys entering the room. There were obviously a bunch of kids to be picked up somewhere. Getting up, I checked on my brothers in the rec room. It was mostly kids twelve and under in there, but I wandered around for almost an hour chatting with the kids. Deciding to hang with other teenagers, I told my brothers that I would be at the diving well where I was sure most of the teenagers were.

When I got there, I was surprised to find only fourteen teens, mostly couples; like Horacio and Sonia, Hank and Paige, Liki and Keanu, Arnie and Jerry, Aaron Farris and Stephen Wickes, and some others, just chilling at tables with sodas and munchies. Again, I briefly socialized with the various couples. I learned that Horacio and Sonia were now considering themselves a couple. Hank and Paige were just starting their relationship, since Paige just joined the Clan the prior night. Liki and Keanu were sharing interests and building their friendship toward whatever it might become. Holding hands at the next table, Aaron and Stephen were definitely a couple. Arnie and Jerry were in a more romantic mood, sitting beside each other so they could kiss whenever necessary, and it seemed to be required, secondary to breathing.

Since everybody seemed happily occupied one way or another, I wondered what I could do. What I used to do, lifetimes ago, was practice. It was kind of late though, so going to the Gibbons' basement, where Dad's drums and my congos were wasn't an option. What I really wanted to do was go to the auditorium. On the way, I tapped my comm-badge and called, "Alden, I'm feeling like practicing. I'm going to the auditorium. Could you provide me some tunes to jam along with?"

"Sure, Reyes," Alden responded. "Let me know which songs and I'll play them for you."

At the auditorium, I went to the circuit breaker panels to powered up the lights and PA system. As I worked, I called, "Alden, could you pump the tunes through the stage monitors?"

"Absolutely," Alden assured.

"That's the only reason I'm turning on the PA. I don't need to be amplified, only the music loud enough to hear over the drums and congas."

"I've got it handled," Alden said.

Finishing at the circuit breakers, I asked, "Are you busy with the Core Rimmers?" and went inside the auditorium theater.

"Not too busy to help you out," Alden answered. "I've got subsystems to assist you. You'll hear my voice and get the songs you need without impacting the mission at all."

Walking down the aisle, I prompted, "If that changes, let me know."

Alden said, "Think of what you did just a while ago with Dee. In a few seconds, you accessed your medical knowledge, searched the digestive system, discovered what you needed to help with Dee's problem, and then accessed the knowledge to use the tricorder. I've got all that, plus several subsystems to handle tracking the Rimmers and Des Moines teams, coordinate transportation and anything they might need too. It's all interconnected and controlled by me. I'll tell you a secret."

"What's that?"

"You're hearing my voice, but this is one of my subsystems. I am also working with the various teams on their mission. Many times, I'm multitasking. Depending upon the task, whomever I happen to be talking with might never know if they're talking to me or one of the subsystems required to accomplish that particular task. When there's emotion to my voice, you're talking to the real me. If there's no emotion..."

"It's your voice through a subsystem," I finished.

"Exactly."

Climbing the steps up to the stage, I hummed, then said, "Alden, let me warm up to some early rock and roll from the fifties or sixties. How about Smoke Gets In Your Eyes, by the Platters, please?"

"Nice choice, dude."

Taking a seat at Dad's drums, I picked up the sticks and prompted, "Play it, Alden." Without a word, the song played through the stage monitors. I was about ten years old when the song was originally released and remembered every lyric while I played along. At the end of the song, I asked, "Alden, let's jump into the sixties. Line up these songs for me in this order; Please, Please Me, Eight Days A Week, Ticket To Ride, Come Together, Mister Soul, Sunshine Of Your Love, Third Stone From The Sun, Communication Breakdown, Summer In The City, Good Lovin', I Can See For Miles and Jumpin' Jack Flash."

Alden checked, "Ready when you are, Reyes."

Saying, "Let's go, dude," Alden played the songs for me and I played along. I got a little messed up twice; once during Come Together, playing those six-to-a-beat tom-tom bits, and again during I Can See For Miles, trying to keep up with Keith Moon's craziness. About eleven o'clock, when I was done with that set, I considered finding my brothers, but told myself, no, dad and pop told me to do what I wanted to do, and I was having fun. So I listed off another twelve songs from the 1970s for Alden to play for me and I played along. About half-way through the list, while I was playing Carry On My Wayward Son, I saw the theater door open. In walked my brothers and friends. For the remainder of the set, I had an audience of about twenty kids who enthusiastically applauded and cheered at the end of each song.

When I was done, I thanked Alden, then put the sticks down and stood, loudly saying, "Okay, you guys, it's almost midnight. Let's go to the nest."

During the walk out of the theater and while I was powering the place down, my brothers and all the kids were telling me how awesome I played. For me, it was simply fun, and I didn't say anything more than "thanks," never telling them about when and where I had messed up. Generally, they were right, given that I hadn't played those songs on a drum kit in over twenty years, I kept up fairly well.

We walked out of the auditorium and across the compound to the Hundasers' home. As quietly as possible, our large group went downstairs to the nest. All the kids went to bed, but I pulled out my laptop. While I'm sleeping, I'll think about becoming a Core Rimmer, but it's really not high on my list of things to do. Playing with the band is high on my list though. Figuring out my feelings about Paul and Ryan is also to be considered. For now, I'm happy enough having android friends. That's something I haven't ever had before.

Yeah, it been an awesome day. I'll write more tomorrow. Dad, Pop and the other Core Rimmers aren't back yet, so it's time to hit the sack.

Chapter 10

Ewa Beach, Oahu; C.S.P.R.D. C.I.C.

Thursday, November 4, 11:11 PM HTZ

Reyes transported into the Command Center. The first thing he noticed was the flashing red light in the middle of the Pacific Ocean, and a blinking yellow light in the Southwest United States on the World Map. He looked around at the various monitors mounted on the walls in the room. One had local news, four were various street images from the Hyatt Regency, and three more were from the Honolulu Airport. Heading for Kaleo, Tory, Drew and Corey, Reyes prompted, "Gimme something to do, before I have the first positronic nervous breakdown on record."

Corey helplessly giggled. Drew simply wore an expression of surprise, since Reyes rarely entered the Command Center and had never been seen this stressed out. Kaleo wondered, "What's wrong, bro?"

Waving his arms at monitors, Reyes rambled, "I just saw my dad and pop run into a burning tower on TV. John and Stephen are like three-hundred feet off the ground. I don't even know who the other four are orbiting them like human satellites. The airport seems to be the place to leave, in a hurry, and not from a plane. Obviously, mass quantities of feces are being thrown into many rotating blades at once. So, what can I do to help make sure everybody returns home in one piece?"

Wide-eyed and grinning at his life-long friend's rant, Kaleo wordlessly checked with Drew, who had been Acting Director the entire day.

Thinking only of where he could possibly assign an android with knowledge databases out the ying-yang, Drew called, "Alden, log this time. Reyes Taraschke is a temporary Core Rimmer, A.I. Division. He's a Toy Rimmer."

Alden replied, "Got it, Drew. By the way, Derrick offered Reyes the job last night." Alden then giggled, "His temporary status is fairly permanent, if you ask me, but we'll see tomorrow."

Drew went to Reyes, prompting, "Come with me, bro. We're keeping track of everybody rescued from the Hyatt. Right now, it's a lot of unsorted data we can't search easily. You can take that task, so you can see first hand what your dads are doing."

"Kewl," Reyes nodded, and followed Drew to a console.

Once Reyes was seated, Drew leaned over, softly explaining, "Jimmy's working on putting out the fires, from lower floors and up, since heat and flames rise. Our guys are working their way up the floors too. Everybody's gonna be fine, Reyes."

Reyes nodded and sighed, "This is dangerous, ya have to admit."

Drew offered, "Think about who would be most likely to be in those towers at this hour; little kids and their babysitters, right? That's what freaked out Prez and why he called red alert. That's why they're all there, bro."

"Right," Reyes huffed, and then concentrated on the incoming data on the screen. Already, Mike and Derrick had made three trips into the Hyatt, each of them rescuing a total of eight people. Scanning the list, Reyes figured that each of the Clan rescuers were finding between two and three people per trip, on average. At the Hyatt performing rescues were the six eldest Core Rimmers, the UNIT Pacific Rim detachment, and another hundred UNIT troops from the Rapid Response base. At the airport were a hundred more troops from the Rapid Response Base. Six hundred and eighty-eight people had been rescued from the burning towers of the Hyatt Regency in the first ten minutes. Reyes started tapping away at keys, creating a quick database of who was rescued and by whom, ages as that information became available, and medical condition. About a minute into his assigned task, Reyes realized he had never created a database before, yet he was doing it easily, thanks to the upgrades he'd received since Monday night. Having known Reyes all their lives, Kaleo and Tory were more amazed than anyone else in the room.

Also having a meltdown about this time was Rob Gibbons. Pacing the Hundserts' lower level rooms, Rob was simultaneously on his cell phone and his Honolulu Police radio, ordering police officers to "wake the fuck up" and putting them back on duty, either at the Hyatt or at the airport. Gathered in the Hundserts' living room were Jim, Jen, Rob's wife Laura, Carl and Anna Seibert, Bill and Lanna Seaver, Kathleen Marr and Judy Faris.

Laura Gibbons was preparing for bed when trouble began at the King's Palace. For her three girls, Christel, Lindsay and Tami, Laura had read from Peter Pan until they fell asleep. Unaware of what was going on, she had taken a bath and then her Valium, but was now in the Hundserts' living room, sitting on the sofa in her bed clothes, robe and slippers, nervously bouncing her legs and shaking like a leaf, bitterly complaining; "I get my husband working from home and safe, and now my eldest child is running into a burning building. Someone remind me to smack Michael tomorrow, please?"

Anna Seibert nodded and smirked, "I suggest a line-up of the entire leadership team, to get spankings like they've never had before, by each of us." All the Rimmer moms nodded and some vocally reaffirmed that plan. Jim Hundser, Bill Seaver and Carl Seibert knew the women were blowing off steam, but wisely said nothing, choosing not to test the theory and have it proven wrong.

Lieutenant Vorik learned the name of who paid for the Star Advertiser announcement and its coded threat to King Aalona. Oblivious to this, but simply tired of watching the news helplessly from the CIC basement, the King transported into the Command Center.

Drew went to the King, introduced himself as Acting Director, his relationship to Prez and Keith, and then explained what was happening, and that Prez had left Vorik with brief instructions on what to do when the individual or group responsible was identified.

"Contact the V.S.O., arrest everyone associated and perform mind scans. Then eliminate the problem according to V.S.O. regulations," Prez had told Vorik from behind his oxygen mask. Drew did not tell the King that Prez was aggravated beyond rational thought, but he recalled what his brother had said: "If I get any of these dudes within five feet of me, I'll kick them repeatedly in the nuts until Shirley has a deeper voice than they do."

Vorik followed Prez's orders. The individual was arrested and identified as an R.O.H. Human Liberation Front operative. Information obtained from one led to others and a full-scale, world-wide V.S.O. investigation was set to begin.

The Goliath centered itself above the Hyatt Regency's most damaged tower, then engaged their tractor beams. Relieved of the weight of uncountable tons of steel and concrete, John, Stephen, Eli, Benji, 'Bastian and Sammy began lowering themselves to the ground. Exhausted, they landed to the cheers of the gathered crowd. The boys smiled and waved, but then John's knees buckled and he began to collapse against his husband. Certain that Stephen wouldn't be able to hold John upright for very long, Lucky swept up John, smiling, "I've got you, Johnny-boy." Bond, Stephen's gorilla, lifted his young charge. Questions from the media bombarded the six boys, but none were answered as there were too many being shouted from too many directions. Lucky called Alden and had them all transported directly to the Hundasers' foyer, leaving the reporters with no story; not that they would've understood telekinesis on this scale from young boys, never mind what N-Gens are. All the assembled adults jumped up to greet, hug and congratulate the six young heroes. Jim, Jen and Kathleen then thanked the two gorillas for protecting the boys. After a few minutes, they returned to the living room to watch the remainder of the rescues.

Collapsing onto the sofa, John wearily huffed then remarked, "I'm hungry and thirsty." Kathleen Marr stood, but before she asked what the boys wanted, six glasses of vitamin-fortified milkshakes, a large tray of brownies, two bunches of bananas and a bowl of assorted fruits appeared on the coffee table, courtesy of Alden. The boys and gorillas dug in, watching TV, where Jimmy flew to the southeastern tower, to concentrate on putting out the fires there.

While the boys chowed down, Lanna Seaver wondered, "Where's Corey?"

Through partially eaten brownie, John mumbled, "At the CIC, with Drew, Kaleo and Tory. Which reminds me." Swallowing, John tapped his comm-badge and called, "Drew?"

Drew's voice replied, "Here, bro. Where are you?"

"Home," John answered, and then asked, "Is there anything I might be needed for?" Jen glared at her youngest son. Raising his eyebrows, John looked away before the flames in his mother's eyes set him ablaze.

Drew checked with Lieutenant Vorik.

A few seconds later, Lieutenant Vorik's voice responded, "No, we've identified the perpetrators of the Palace, airport and hotel attacks as H.L.F. The V.S.O. are now pursuing the investigation. We are sufficiently manned here and do not require assistance."

"Okay, thanks," John replied, and then helped himself to a second brownie.

Eli grinned at John, asking, "Do you even realize what you can do?"

John wondered, "What do you mean?"

"You're not pushing up off the ground to levitate anymore," Eli giggled. "You're creating mental ropes from everything above and around you, to pull yourself up."

Benji nodded, "In this case, you were like a fulcrum, bro. The buildings around the Hyatt tethered to us and then to the tower."

"Kewl," John smiled.

Eli, Benji, 'Bastian and Sammy helplessly giggled. Smiling widely around the shake glass against his mouth, Stephen had some random thoughts that John picked up on. John and Stephen began giggling, pushing Eli, Benji, 'Bastian and Sammy to loud laughter. This night, John and Stephen would sleep upstairs in their room when it was time for bed.

At the Hyatt Regency, the ten personal security gorillas for Prez, Keith, Drew, Corey, Mike, Derrick, Sean, Troy, Kaleo and Tory had gone into formation, creating a line of defense, so that no one could get near their charges. Only firemen were allowed to pass their formation. Just beyond the gorillas, near the curb in front of the Hyatt, were the replacement air tanks. As Rimmers and UNIT troops returned, the first tanks of oxygen were near empty and replaced. Dozens of window jumpers had been saved by the A.I.s. In the first fifteen minutes they were on-site, the estimated three hundred Clan rescuers at the hotel had saved over a thousand vacationers that were easily accessible. Climbing stairways higher into the buildings, they needed to use hand phasers to disintegrate whatever debris might be blocking their paths, so they could clear out the remaining rooms. With nothing more to do at the on-site mobile disaster command trailer, Nathan returned to the Ewa Beach Command Center. He joined Reyes and worked to organize incoming data from Honolulu Airport.

In a thirty-first story suite of the Northwest tower, near one of the elevator shaft bombs, Kekoa found body parts that appeared to be that of a very large, obese man. A majority of the exterior wall had been destroyed. Judging by some of the clothing remnants scattered around, and the Cartier watch still wrapped around a severed arm, the man was quite wealthy. Not allowing himself to think of the revolting mess, Kekoa rapidly moved on to check other rooms. On the twenty-ninth floor, Mike discovered a twenty-something-year-old man hiding in the bathtub. Only when he helped the man stand did Mike realize the dude was drunk as a skunk. As he transported with the man to safety, Mike thought, at least he won't remember most of what happened. Also in the Northwest tower, Derrick found an elderly man, wearing pajamas and a T-shirt, kneeling down at the edge of the bed with a Bible in his hands, praying for painless passing to the other side. "Not today," Derrick smirked, and bent over to help the man stand. Holding onto the fragile man that had to be over eighty years old, Derrick got a surprising kiss on the cheek, and then called, "Plus one, Alden." A split second later, they arrived at the Rapid Response Base medical facility's emergency room.

Prez's security, Chris and Matthew, were shadowing their charge in the southeast tower, staying as near to him as was reasonable, given the circumstances and Prez's order that everyone separate to help as many people as possible. Chris found a teenage girl and two very little kids hiding under a bed in one hotel room. At the opposite end of the hall, Matthew discovered an old woman that had been babysitting her two young grandsons when everything went to hell. Scattered around the two burning towers, Clan kids, many of which were enhanced humans, rescued people while firefighters did their job, clearing debris and extinguishing flames so the rescues could be expedited.

Back at the Ewa Beach Command Center, at 11:30PM, Clan wide red alert was called because contact with Cory Short and Joel Short had ceased. Alden reported, "Drew, as Acting Director, I need to inform you that, at this time, all Clan A.I.s are now running CSNIC processing. All functions and error handling routines have passed preliminary and advanced stress tests. Also, Draco has relocated to the Starship VHC Yoshuhlnak."

"Understood," Drew calmly said to the ceiling, expecting this announcement as a result of the Clan wide alert.

Sitting at nearby terminals, almost simultaneously, Kaleo, Tory and Reyes wondered, "What's that mean?" Corey cracked up.

Drew giggled, "It means that Alden is one of the most advanced artificial life forms on the planet. Each of the Clan A.I.s have more processing power than every other computer on the planet combined. Even with Draco helping from orbit, we still have seven A.I.s as capable as Alden, plus Daileass, all networked together, sharing resources and information." Nathan began giggling. Seeing only blank confusion on the faces of his team-mates, Drew smiled, "Think of it this way, Alden alone transported all the personnel to California last night. Had he needed to, he could've transported more, like our UNIT detachment's helicopters and jet too. Kerry, George, Icarus and all of Alden's brothers can do the same. As for Daileass, well, he's the UNIT's A.I. I'm not even sure how much he could transport at once, without taxing himself or any of the related machines, so I'll just guess-timate, about twenty times as many people and equipment. That was prior to switching technology."

"Damn!" Kaleo, Tory and Reyes gasped. Nathan Hayes lost it and cracked up laughing so hard that he almost lost his balance and fell backwards in his chair and onto the floor.

As if the A.I.s weren't busy enough, Alden giggled, "You're a stud, Pop."

Kerry snickered, "He-man, master A.I. of the universes."

George laughed, "He's taking his shirt off to bare that cough* muscular *cough chest."

"As long as he don't take his pants off and prove he's only nine, we're kewl," Icarus teased.

"SILENCE!" Daileass hysterically bellowed.

Still laughing, Nathan breathlessly heaved, "That's the PG rated version of what I was hearing, before any of them said a word."

The digital World Map on the wall beneath the various World clocks in the Command Center now showed flashing red lights in the R.O.H., Russia, The United Kingdom, Orlando, Northeast Division and in Australia's Oceanic Division. While the boys were trying to figure out what was going on, televised news reports were mentioning additional civil unrest in New York City, Washington, D.C., and Los Angeles. What made this odd was the time. In L.A., it was about two-thirty in the morning. On the East coast of America, it was five-thirty in the morning. People staying awake late, or others waking early, simply to riot was unheard of. Could this all be because of the ZCC orphanages, or was it the Human Liberation Front adding fuel to the fire? Even Lieutenant Vorik found the worldwide situations "illogical". When they looked at the World Map again, almost every Clan Division around the world was blinking red.

After Eli, Benji, 'Bastian and Sammy had eaten their fill and left for home, Jennifer and Kathleen firmly told their sons, "You're done for the night." The security personnel for John and Stephen also left the Hundsers' home.

John and Stephen went downstairs to the basement. Watching TV and the nesting kids, like they had intended an hour earlier, John and Stephen lowered down onto the cushions. Drew, Corey, Prez, Keith, Derrick, Mike, Kaleo, Tory, Sean and Troy all had the same uneasy feeling that John had. John softly told Stephen, "It don't make sense." When Stephen tilted his head uncertainly, John explained, "Everything was fine, but now I can't feel Jacob, Jamie and Beau. It's like they suddenly fell off the face of the Earth, at the same time. Just like Joel earlier, but he told me it was happening."

"That's weird," Stephen muttered.

John nodded, "Joel can stop and does, whenever he goes into Vulcan emotionless mode. The Terrible Triplets too though? They helped me become N-Gen and taught me. They're the first three links made in my mind. There wasn't fear or pain or anything; they were there, and then they weren't."

Stephen offered, "Well, if they weren't scared or hurt, then it's probably nothin' too bad."

"I hope so," John sighed.

Stephen grinned, "What can I do to get your mind back on us?"

John smiled, "Let's float upstairs to the bathroom, sexy." Blushing and giggling, Stephen nodded. Without another word they rose and silently went up the stairs. Alone behind the bathroom door, John led his husband to the bowl, took position behind him and held Stephen's dick to let him relieve himself. He gleefully whispered, "My hubby is the only Core Rimmer that's a show-er, all the rest are growers. I can't wait to see where you're at in another year or two, when puberty hits."

Stephen cackled, "John! You're making it very hard to pee!"

"Let it get hard," John gleamed, "I'll take care of everything."

Stephen nodded and giggled, "Like this morning, with you laying on your back on the ceiling?"

John grinned, "That was fun. Sixty-nine is my favorite position, so far, anyway." Helplessly giggling, Stephen finished relieving his bladder. John shook his hubby's wiener and kept shaking until it was stiff. Beginning a forceful grind against Stephen's butt, John moaned, "You're so awesome, baby."

Stephen whimpered, then pushed his board shorts down and kicked them aside. For another minute or two, while John's hands caressed his body, Stephen reveled in the fact that John loved him and the numerous ways it was shown during the last four days.

In the dormitories, only the youngest kids had fallen asleep.

Most made it back to their rooms except the four youngest in dorm building one; seven-year-olds Akamu, Amado, Maleko and Sakamoto crashed in two piles on one of the sofas in the common room. In all the common rooms, teens and tweens rambled excitedly while watching their leaders on TV at the Hyatt. Things had calmed somewhat at the airport. Televised news showed mostly traffic jams on roadways leading away from the airport. Fires were still being extinguished, but all of the tourists had left the vicinity. News reports said that incoming air traffic had been re-routed to the landing strips at the UNIT's Rapid Response Base. Outgoing flights were temporarily suspended until those incoming planes were dealt with, and passenger jets could be relocated to the R.R.B.

Jake Westscott, Terry Parkinson and Chuck Fortenberry, all from the two Anaheim orphanages, were chatting with Mike Busse and Dave Lydon, from the San Diego orphanage, about what they were witnessing. The five thirteen- and fourteen-year-old boys were simply amazed with what Clan Short was able to accomplish. In little more than a day, they had been rescued, clothed, fed more food than they'd eaten in the last week, and been given medical and dental attention; they had witnessed the rescue of the King of the R.O.H., and now the Clan were rescuing people from the airport, a huge hotel and providing an alternate airport for travelers too.

Two of the California girls from dorm building two came over to where their orphanage brothers were, in the first floor common room of building three. As amazed as the boys were, the girls were very concerned for everyone at the Hyatt. All seven of them took a walk to dorm building one, where some 'old-timers' could answer their questions. Horacio was there with Sonia, as well as Keanu, Liki, Hank, Louis, Jerrold, Arnold, Gerald and Roy. None of the boys were the least bit concerned. They pointed out that every few minutes another Core Rimmer could be seen returning to the Hyatt, before they ran back into the buildings. Also, they had noticed that Drew, Corey, Kaleo and Tory had never been seen on TV. To answer the question definitively, Roy quickly shouted, "Alden, where are Kaleo, Tory, Drew and Corey?"

"In the Command Center, holding down the fort," Alden answered, and then played back Prez's recorded voice, telling those four they weren't developed enough to help adults.

That was all the kids needed to know. The visitors at dorm one returned to their own dorms. Within a few minutes, everyone awake knew the same information.

At the less damaged, but still burning southeast tower of the Hyatt Regency, Prez found the elevator end of the twenty-ninth floor hallway still ablaze. He went to check the opposite end of the hall. Every door that had not been left open from prior rescues, Prez disintegrated with his phaser. Hollering "Hello?" as he entered each room, Prez then waited a few seconds for a response before moving on to the next room. All those relatively safe rooms were empty. With only the other end of the hall to check, Prez crouched down and began firing on doors. He then shouted, "Is anybody there?" and waited for a response. Somewhere down that hall someone did respond. Prez ran into a nearby cleared room and stood in the shower to wet himself down, because he was going to have to race through flames. Dripping wet, he exited the room and softly grumbled, "This is probably gonna leave a mark," then raced through the flames into each room. In the third room, Prez found a woman and a small girl crouched in the bathroom tub. He tried to gather them in his arms, but for some reason, they cowered away from him. Prez only touched their shoulders then ordered, "Three Alden, now!"

"You're on fire!" The woman screamed, almost simultaneously with Prez's words and Alden's teleportation.

The transport extinguished the flames, but Prez was now wearing melted sandals and most of his boardies were blackened and smoldering. The lower edge of his T-shirt had also caught fire. Only the crotch of Prez's boardies were not horribly burned, because at some point, he had unconsciously released his bladder. Even at the Rapid Response Base medical facility, Prez didn't fully comprehend what had happened. Not two nurses, but three hurried towards him. The woman and little girl were taken from him. The third nurse swiftly cut off his shorts and T-shirt, leaving him naked except for his face-mask and melted sandals. Prez excitedly hollered, "What the hell?"

"You've been burned," the nurse loudly told Prez, and then instructed, "Lift your left leg so I can cut these sandals off you."

Prez did as he was told. Only when he looked down and lifted his leg did he feel pain. The hair on his legs was gone and his skin was redder than it had ever been from any sunburn. Oddly, to Prez anyway, he began to shiver as he lifted his right leg for the other sandal to be cut off. He took his face-mask off and sighed, "Keith's gonna kill me. This was Mike's KISS 'Hotter Than Hell' T-shirt. He's gonna kill me too."

Appearing worried, the nurse asked, "How do you feel?"

"Freezing cold," Prez shivered. He didn't notice that his skin was covered in goosebumps, as his body automatically pulled blood from his skin and extremities to send to his vital organs, but the nurse had.

"Gurney!" the nurse screamed. "He's going into shock!" Two orderlies came from out of nowhere, one with the gurney and the other took hold of Prez to help get him on the gurney. In a mild state of shock, Prez couldn't understand what had happened or how. The gurney he was on was rolled into a treatment room. The nurse and three orderlies crumpled in their hands the sheet Prez was laying on and then transferred him to a bio-bed. Prez silently wondered how his wet clothes managed to catch fire and where the third orderly came from.

From somewhere in the distance, it seemed to Prez, someone asked for someone's name. Working to cautiously clean Prez of the grime and soot from the burning towers, the same nurse asked his name again before Prez replied with his full name. The nurse confirmed, "Pacific Rim Director Preston O'Brian?"

Prez nodded and replied affirmatively, "That's me."

Pressing an emergency call button on the bed that lit a red flashing light outside the treatment room, the nurse turned and yelled down the hall, "Doctor here, stat!"

In a flash, two doctors hurried into the room. The nurse introduced the doctors to the Pacific Rim Division Director. The older doctor quickly examined Prez's burns and carefully rolled him onto his side. He pronounced, "Second degree burns on his feet and buttocks. Mostly first degree burns on his legs." The second, younger doctor administered a hypo-spray, then instructed Prez to lay on his belly, explaining that he would be more comfortable since his rear was burned badly.

Doing as requested, Prez hummed then smiled, "That's warm and tingly."

The second doctor grinned, "A future morphine junkie. We'll have to watch this one."

The first doctor ordered, "Monitor his vitals and let the bio-bed treat the first degree burns. Then get him into one of the medicated tubs to treat the second degree burns." Looking down at Prez, the doctor smiled, "We'll get you back to your Clan by morning, Director O'Brian. I'm afraid you won't be very comfortable in clothing, from the waist down, for the next twenty-four to thirty-six hours."

Slightly stoned, Prez giggled, "Don't tell my husband that." Both doctors and the nurse softly chortled. The older doctor left to care for other incoming patients. The younger doctor monitored the bio-bed for many minutes before feeling comfortable enough to leave Prez with the one nurse. Now that he had something substantive to report, the younger doctor contacted the Ewa Beach Command Center.

Notified of Prez's condition at seven minutes after midnight, Drew quickly told Kaleo, "You've got the ball now, dude." He tapped his comm-badge to tell his dad what had happened, and then had himself and Corey transported to the treatment room where Prez lay. Seconds after Drew had taken his older brother's hand, Jen and Jim Hundser were bedside with their foster son. Jennifer broke down crying and kissed her foster son while wiping the hair off his forehead with one hand. Prez's mother, Margaret 'Maggie' O'Brian, had been Jen's friend for five years, before the accident that left Prez in her care. This was the first time Prez had been in a hospital that Jen knew of, and the many emotions flooding her mind from this one day left her completely bewildered. Several minutes later, Keith was mid-rescue when Alden told him that Prez had been burned. Upon arrival at the medical facility with three young kids and a teenage boy, Keith tore off his face-mask and raced down the nearest hall of treatment rooms calling his husband's name.

The nurse that had begun treatment on Prez exited the room and went to Keith, then led him back to the room, explaining that his husband would be fine, but to expect him to be uncomfortable for another day or two. She stopped at the doorway, preventing Keith from completely entering the room. The nurse softly explained that Prez had automatically released his bladder when his clothes caught on fire. "That simple act prevented what would've been very painful burns for any man," the nurse added. "He had no knowledge that he had even caught fire when he arrived." She then firmly told Keith, "I can't let you get too close to him."

Keith dramatically frowned, "Why not?"

"You're filthy from the rescues and he could get an infection," the nurse said.

"Oh!" Keith gushed, then looked down at himself adding, "I guess I am a mess." He then looked at his husband and said, "Lemme grab a shower and get cleaned up, baby. I'll be right back."

Prez nodded, "I'm not goin' anywhere, T'hy'la." Keith transported home. Prez turned to Drew, asking, "Do we know how many we were able to save?"

Drew nodded, "Best guess, near three-thousand, the last I heard. The stats showed two-thirds were under seventeen."

"How many confirmed dead?" Prez wondered.

Drew softly answered, "About a hundred and fifty, from rooms near, above and below the bombs."

Prez grumbled then asked, "Did we learn who did it?"

Drew answered, "The palace, airport and hotel bombings were the H.L.F. The V.S.O. are on it, Prez."

Closing his eyes, Prez wearily ordered, "Get 'em all, bro. If they can't be re-educated, remove them."

Drew nodded, "Relax, Prez. Lieutenant Vorik is handling the H.L.F. "

Prez sighed and kept his eyes closed, but asked, "Was anyone else hurt; Core Rimmers, Rimmer Detachment or anyone from the UNIT?"

Drew shook his head, "From the Hyatt, minor scrapes, cuts and burns only. The airport was successfully evacuated before anyone was killed. A couple of the airport security guys and some travelers were real close though and have temporary hearing loss. Some of the UNIT dudes at the Palace were fired on, but they're fine too, thanks to their armor. They just got bruised and the wind knocked out of them. You're hurt worse than anyone else, so chill, bro. Kaleo's got the ball with Lieutenant Vorik."

Hearing that, Prez relaxed and gave in to the morphine then fell asleep.

Asking what they were thinking when starting the rescues at the Hyatt, Jen initiated a very stern but soft conversation with Drew and Corey. Drew reminded his mom of exactly how many people had been saved only because of Pacific Rim Division intervention. First Drew reminded his mom of John, Stephen and the other Clan members that held the building stable for rescues before the Goliath engaged tractor beams, and then he stated, "Several dozen fireman wouldn't have been able to save that many before the building collapsed, that's for sure. We probably would've lost firemen in addition to tourists." Corey quickly calculated that of the three-thousand rescued about two-thousand were kids under seventeen. Drew explained that Prez had guessed that it would be mostly kids at the hotel and that was why he called red alert. Drew, Corey and even Jim affirmed that under the same circumstances any of them would've done the same.

The last of the hotel's occupants that could be rescued had been. Just after Drew and Corey left for Prez, when the incoming data had slowed to a trickle, Kaleo asked that Reyes pass the relevant numbers of casualties and rescued to the Core Rimmers' PADDs and to the press. At twenty-two minutes after midnight, Friday November fifth, the news crews reported that of the four-thousand-eight-hundred and seventy-nine registered hotel occupants, one hundred sixty-six had been killed by the explosions or resulting fires. Approximately one-thousand-five-hundred had not been in the hotel at the time of the blasts; they were still out sightseeing or island hopping. Three-thousand-two-hundred-twelve had been rescued by members of Clan Short of Vulcan. At Honolulu International Airport, evacuations saved hundreds of lives at terminals 'A' and 'C'. A list of people missing from the chaos at the airport and Hyatt was growing near to two hundred, which was considered very low, and some of those missing might simply not have checked in yet. The details of the perpetrators of the night's violence had not been released to the press as in progress V.S.O. investigations were temporarily suspended to deal with developments in the U.K.

Back in Waikiki at the Hyatt Regency, Jimmy had completely extinguished the fires and transported back to Russia. Honolulu police and firefighters were instructed to clear the streets surrounding the Hyatt Regency. The portable force field generators placed by Starfleet were activated. At twelve-fifteen, the Goliath slowly reduced energy levels sent to the tractor beams that had been holding up the northwest tower. When the tractor beam was completely disengaged, the Goliath moved off to the northeast. Standing in the street in front of the Hyatt with Mike, Kekoa, Sean and Troy, Derrick called Kaleo to let him know all that could be saved had been.

With the excitement drastically reduced and no further notifications of other pending emergencies around the Pacific Rim, Kaleo turned to Lieutenant Vorik, asking, "Can we stand-down from red alert now?"

Lieutenant Vorik nodded and suggested, "Local condition yellow would be sufficient to allow everyone to relax. Circumstances in the U.K. do not allow us to reduce our status further."

Kaleo thanked Donnie for the UNIT's help while Tory went to the communications console to notify Orlando and the other divisions. Derrick, Mike, Kekoa, Sean and Troy returned to the Command Center. They appeared dirty and sweaty, but were otherwise fine. Emotions that Reyes had successfully contained for over an hour exploded in a torrent of happy tears the moment he saw his dad and pop appear in the room. Bouncing out of his chair, Reyes hurried across the room to Mike and Derrick, blubbering, "Each of you guys rescued about forty people."

Derrick and Mike sandwiched Reyes between them. Derrick smiled, "It was worth climbing the stairs."

"Every five minutes, about fifteen times," Mike chuckled.

Wiping Reyes' tears away, Derrick smirked, "I guess you decided to be Core Rimmer?"

Nodding, Reyes nervously sniggered, "I saw you on TV. I changed the channel so the kids wouldn't see, if they woke, then transported here."

Kaleo enthusiastically congratulated the team and presented the numbers saved, by checking Reyes' database. He then reported that Prez had been burned during a rescue, about thirty minutes earlier, but that he was fine and would be home by morning. Troy and Sean looked down at the floor. Derrick and Mike cursed the situations they were thrown into by mindless cretins. Kekoa looked like he was going to have fit, but didn't say a word.

All away team members stored their phasers. Kaleo and Tory offered to remain in the Command Center as long as necessary. Sean and Troy were asked to take charge the next morning, and they agreed. Derrick ordered Alden to stop recording and save the files for later review. All five were tired and filthy anyway, so they all left for home. Derrick, Mike and Reyes went to the Seiberts' home, where their kids were, to shower and call it a night. Reyes could barely let Derrick and Mike out of his sight. Without any complaints, Derrick and Mike allowed Reyes to follow them into a bathroom. While his dad's showered, Reyes leaned against the vanity and shared all he had done with databases in the Command Center, babbling about schemas and other techie gobbledegook. Derrick and Mike helplessly giggled at the upgraded Reyes.

Sean and Troy went to the Faris' condo. The last thing Judy, Troy and Sean saw before turning off the living room TV was the northwest tower teetering and collapsing under its own weight. The Starfleet force-field generators prevented collateral damage to other nearby buildings, but the center lobby and restaurant area of the Hyatt Regency was flattened.

After ensuring all Pacific Rim Detachment personnel were accounted for, Kekoa ordered them to stand down, and then went to his dorm room and collapsed onto his bed. Although physically exhausted from climbing stairs for about an hour, his mind could not stop racing. Kekoa was in an awkward position, being responsible for the safety of the Core Rimmers, but also being subordinate to Prez and having to take his orders. Kekoa didn't like Prez's order to have everyone act separately, strongly believing that Core Rimmers should always have had at least their enhanced human security with them at all times. If Kekoa had insisted on that one detail, Prez probably wouldn't have been hurt. Finally coming to the conclusion that he needed to talk to Prez the next day, Kekoa closed his eyes and tried to sleep.

Finished with his shower, Keith got unexpected chills while dressing. He just knew something was very wrong and thought it might be Prez, so he flew into clean clothes.

The stand-down from red alert didn't last an entire fifteen minutes. At twelve-forty, a teleconference call between Clan Divisions was initiated by Sammy and Seth in Orlando. Included in the call were Kaleo, Tory and Nathan; Julio and Jesse from Des Moines; Brent and Lance from Nevada Desert Division; from the Rapid Response Base were Donnie and Emily; and lastly from Northeast Division were Skipper and Calvin. At two minutes before one in the morning, six-fifty-eight Eastern time, the Northeast Division called Red Alert. Civil unrest in New York and Washington D.C. had become organized. News reports showed fires scattered around Manhattan and more buildings ablaze in the Nation's Capital. In St. Petersburg, Russia, the Tsar's Palace was under attack. In Mumbai, India, and Kobe, Japan, and in Shanghai, China, the seaports were ablaze. Cargo ships moored at the docks were making hasty retreats to open water.

When Keith arrived at Prez's hospital room, Prez was still asleep. The bio-bed was still doing its job though, so Keith could only hold his husband's hand. Jim gave Prez's comm-badge to Keith, which had been given to him soon after he arrived. Jen then outlined some of the work that she had planned to do the next day. She also knew that world events were such that the boys would be busy the next morning. Since it was almost one in the morning, she 'recommended', in that motherly fashion that made it an order, that Corey and Drew return home and get some rest. Keith would stay at the hospital with Prez until he was released.

Wound up and not very tired, Drew and Corey sat together on the sofa in the Hundserts' basement. On the other end of the sofa, Stephen sat on John's lap while John explained why everyone suddenly felt weird around eleven-thirty. Though the TV news was on, Corey and Drew were paying more attention to the PADDs they were reading, trying to learn more about who was responsible for the evening's chaos. The dry reading did make them tired. Eventually, Drew and Corey retired to the nest where Frankie, Geoff and Lenny were sound asleep, blissfully unaware of anything that was happening anywhere in the world. John and Stephen went back upstairs to their bedroom.

By this time, the last of the rescued kids who were watching world events unfold gave up the battle to stay awake and went to their rooms. Horacio and Sonia gently woke the four snoozing boys on the sofa, and then followed them to their dorm room. Once the boys were safe and sound, Horacio walked with Sonia upstairs to her room. They hugged and kissed then said goodnight. Horacio then returned to his room. The remainder of the teens went directly to bed, but many turned on their room television, turned the sound way down to almost nothing, then got undressed and climbed into bed.

Arnold James Smithson and his roommate Jerrold Hebda returned to their room, each bursting at the seams to say something about what was said earlier in the auditorium, and what they had witnessed that night. Both were thirteen years old and from the original group of eighty-seven rescued by Joel. Arnold was five-feet-two-inches tall, weighed one-hundred-twenty pounds, had dark brown hair and gray eyes that seemed somewhat blueish in the daylight. Jerrold was an inch taller, five pounds heavier, and had red hair and blue eyes. Arnold was at the same orphanage as Sean. Jerrold had been there too, but was fostered two years earlier. They had moved into the first dormitory Monday night. Simultaneously, each boy asked, "What are we gonna do?" Breaking into giggles, they queried, "What do you want to do?" and then cracked up and embraced.

Not releasing his boyfriend, Jerrold leaned back so they could talk, reminding, "In this dorm, some of the younger kids are already looking up to us, asking what we're doing with our credit cards, even asking us if it's kewl to shower with older dudes."

Arnold nodded, "They've seen us picking up our stuff and organizing our room, so they do it too. I mean, we're clueless about a lot of stuff too. Some kids think you're related to Prez too though, so that might have something to do with it." Prez and Jerrold both had longish red hair, blue eyes and milky, pale skin decorated with freckles, but they were not related.

"Like the four seven-year-olds sharing a room down the other hall," Jerrold shared, "They asked us why we were cleaning up after ourselves. It's not only because we used to have to do it, but because the housekeepers shouldn't have to pick up our dirty clothes and underwear for us. We've all got laundry bags. We don't have to do our own laundry anymore, but the housekeepers shouldn't have to do everything for us."

"With only two of us in here, we get plenty sloppy," Arnold sniggered, "Their room was twice as bad with four of them in there. It was kewl how they had Daileass set up the bunk-beds perpendicularly, so the four of 'em could have desks and laptop computers."

"Where do we go from here?" Jerrold wondered.

Arnold shrugged, "I'm with you, Jerry. If you want to try for leadership roles, I'm kewl with that."

"Are you sure?" Jerrold confirmed, and then offered, "It would be very un-kewl to decide later that we don't want the jobs. I want you near me, but if being a leader worries you at all, just say so. I don't want that stuff interfering with you and me being together."

"I missed you when you left the orphanage, Jerr," Arnold reminded. "As long as I can stay with you, like we used to be, before you left the orphanage, then I'll play dorm leader with you."

Jerrold hummed, "I missed you too, Arnie," then softly suggested, "How about we see what happens? If Prez, Kaleo or any of the Core Rimmers ask for help with something again, we'll offer to help."

Arnold rapidly nodded then stole a tender kiss. Jerrold returned the kiss more deeply. When the kiss broke, Arnold whispered, "I've always loved you, Jerry."

"I love you too, Arnie," Jerrold firmly assured, and made it a promise by adding, "I always have and always will."

Arnold happily giggled, "Take me to bed, ya sexy redhead."

Taking hold of Arnold's T-shirt, Jerrold stepped back, cackling, "I'm sexy? I don't have gray eyes that peer into souls," and pulled his boyfriend's shirt off. He smiled, "We haven't used both beds once, we always sleep together, since the nest."

Once his shirt was dropped on the carpeted floor, Arnold reached for Jerrold's shirt, pulling it up and off. Without pausing, he reached for the drawstring on Jerrold's boardies and untied it. Arnold smiled, "Ya know what the best part of us being together is?"

"What?"

"We've known each other for a long time, even though we were separated," Arnold admitted. "When we were rescued, we picked up where we left off without any problem."

"You were always my best friend," Jerrold confessed, "Now we're boyfriends, just like our leaders."

"In lots of ways," Arnold gushed. "We're almost the same height and weight. Our dicks are similar, soft and hard, only you're uncut and I'm cut, like Prez and Keith, and Derrick and Mike."

Gently taking hold of Arnold's stiffie, Jerrold gleamed, "Cut versus uncut makes no difference," and led his boyfriend to bed. Jerrold sat on the edge of the bed and pulled Arnold down on top of him. They laughed and giggled between deep kisses before shifting completely onto the bed and wordlessly moving to orally make love.

At the Rapid Response Base hospital, Keith watched TV and checked incoming messages and reports from the Command Center on his PADD while Prez recuperated on the bio-bed. Whenever a doctor or nurse came in to check on Prez, Keith asked for an update on his husband's condition. Between the news and his PADD, Keith feared that the situation was very bad in London, such that BBC broadcasts were not being received, and things were getting just as bad in New York City and Washington, D.C. Those cities were most important to Keith because that's where friends were known to be; Joel, Cory and Sean Short were in London; Harry and Jonas had notified all the other Clan Divisions that they would be in their nation's Capital city. Scattered around the world, so many other cities were impacted, Keith could barely wrap his mind around the ever-increasing list.

In the Ewa Beach Command Center, Kaleo, Nathan, Tory and Lieutenant Vorik were working to prepare for the inevitable casualties and refugees. Around the R.O.H., there really weren't any major problems in any of the islands' cities. In Honolulu, the only unrest was at the American Embassy, at the gates of Pearl Harbor and at Hickam Air Force Base. Making efforts to protect his small country, King Aalona was on a phone and computer station, contacting military and police leadership of Hawaii and then those Admirals and Generals stationed at Hickam and Pearl Harbor. During this time, they all learned that it was Romulans disguised as humans that stirred up the existing civil unrest to this critical level. A world-wide signal was being transmitted that would cause their bio-phase chips to fail and uncover them. This would likely change the focus of the unrest as individuals suddenly phased to their true Romulan forms, but it wasn't expected to make matters any better for quite some time.

Unable to sleep, Melonie Correro walked out of dorm one to stroll around the base perimeter. Soon after she got away from the lights of the housing area, Melonie saw several jets flying over the base. Every few minutes, another formation of fighter jets taking off from Hickam sped past. Melonie was aware of what had happened earlier at the Hyatt and Honolulu airport, but didn't know anything more. Down at the south side of the base, where there was a clear view of the beach, Melonie saw bright lights of ships off-shore cruising at high speed by the island. For Melonie, it was very impressive and quite pretty to see late at night. Of course, she didn't realize that the jets and ships were task forces scrambling to support military activities on opposite sides of the Pacific Ocean.

At two-fifteen, Prez was moved to a medicated tub for the final stage of treatment. At last, Keith and Prez could talk. Right after they were left alone, Keith told Prez where the worldwide situation was at.

When that was completed, Keith smirked, "I'm just wondering why you didn't call Jimmy to put the fires out?"

Prez shrugged, "I honestly didn't think about it. Jimmy was doing his job and we were doing ours. I drenched myself in a shower before running and jumping through flames. I didn't think my clothes would catch fire, and honestly didn't know they had until the nurse said so. Even then, it didn't register." A moment later, Prez then wondered where his comm-badge was.

Keith answered, "I've got it in my pocket." Dramatically frowning, Keith softly shared, "There is some more good news and bad news."

Prez rolled his eyes then huffed, "Bad news first, please."

"You won't be dressed for the next thirty-six hours," Keith leered. "The good news is, I'll be alone with you as often as possible." Both boys began laughing and made plans to spend their first full night alone together in their townhome's master bedroom.

On television news, residents of Washington, D.C. were evacuating across the Potomac River to Virginia, or north and east into Maryland. People evacuating from Manhattan Island were walking across bridges and through tunnels into Brooklyn, Queens, The Bronx and New Jersey. American Civil Defense authorities working with the Red Cross were setting up local refugee shelters at The Meadowlands, FedEx Field, and other similar large stadiums and venues. Full communications with the United Kingdom hadn't yet been restored, so there was only hearsay being reported from refugees that had managed to escape London. Since many people would be displaced for weeks or longer, the Clan leaders on the teleconference call began discussing ways to get refugees from the local shelters to places more fitting for families.

An alert message arrived on Keith's PADD around two-thirty in the morning, informing him that Queen Elizabeth had made the Terran Call, stating that all Earth's military should go on alert as the planet was under imminent threat. For another fifteen minutes, Keith searched his PADD and listened closely to the television to learn who was threatening the planet. At almost the same time, he read about Romulans masquerading as humans and heard the same report on the TV news. Unfortunately, this information only made the rioting and other madness in the United States and around the world worse. Now people didn't trust each other. Accusations flew and rioters began fighting amongst themselves. The familiar New York City skyline had scattered billowing smoke rising in the air and fires could be seen.

About the same time, at two-thirty in the morning in Hawaii, battles in London, St. Petersburg and Washington, D.C. had created refugees estimated in the tens of thousands and as high as a quarter-of-a-million in total. How to deal with them was the latest problem at hand. Kaleo, Tory, Nathan and Lieutenant Vorik worked with the other Clan Divisions to organize and prioritize the situation. Of course, family groups needed to stay together. All the missing needed to be listed, so that when they were found, either among the dead or alive, the remainder of their families could be quickly located and either notified of the death or the family could be reunited.

All the Clan leaders on the teleconference talked about housing available in their areas. There were twenty-six donated military installations scattered around the States that could be used as refugee housing. Surprisingly, Prez had snagged one of them; The Presidio on the northern tip of the San Francisco peninsula. There they had housing for about five thousand, they estimated. Kaleo knew that some of the housing at Oneula was already occupied with employees, but he confirmed that all of the housing at the Pacific Rim bases at Hawaii, Kauai and Maui were unoccupied. Those houses, townhomes and dormitories could give about three-thousand people temporary places to reside. Also taken into account was the island of Kaho'olawe, capable of providing temporary residences for about twenty-five-thousand. Nathan quickly estimated that between the three bases and the uninhabited island, Pacific Rim could provide shelters for about thirty-thousand-five-hundred individuals.

Julio offered, "We can use Wells Fargo Arena as our stage two refugee center. We'll get those folks out of the local shelters to Wells Fargo Arena, and then from there, over to final housing destinations." All the Clan Leaders agreed with that three step plan.

Seth loudly announced, "We've just been notified that the F.A.A. has grounded all North American air traffic. The order comes from the President of the United States. Only military aircraft and Starfleet shuttles used as emergency transportation are allowed in our skies."

On Kaho'olawe, Peter Lambert had provided buildings, but no one knew if any of them were furnished. Since there were standard Clan video and audio monitoring capabilities in all the buildings, Alden answered the question. "None of the buildings have any furnishings of any sort."

Nathan ordered, "Alden, start furnishing those homes and dorms now. Before we've exhausted what's in the UNIT warehouses, contact Tako Corp and have them fill our warehouses again. We need everything; from furniture and window treatments, to paper towels and toilet paper."

Tory scowled, "Make sure it's the nice, soft T-paper, Alden; like we have here. For five years in that damned orphanage, my butt was repeatedly abused, by men and cheap, rough T-paper." Everyone in the Command Center and on the teleconference call cracked up. Kaleo threw himself at Tory and kissed him hard. When the kiss broke, Tory giggled, "Too true?"

Kaleo nodded and sniggered, "Talk about adding insult to injury, even a nice shit is ruined."

Getting everyone back on track, Nathan sighed, "Refugee estimates are climbing in leaps and bounds. Contact Starfleet and have them start replicating more housing too, Alden. We'll need it before the day is done."

Kaleo's comm-badge chirped. Stepping back from Tory, he answered the call. Keith reminded Kaleo, "Julio's Uncle is Iowa State Governor Ted Jacobs. We're going to need lots of help getting all these buildings built and refugees settled in."

Prez added, "They'll need food and drink too. The last thing we need are refugees passing out on us."

Away from the main teleconference, Julio could be heard chatting with his uncle. Moments later, an older man's voice, presumably that of Governor Jacobs, ordered, "Mobilize the Iowa State National Guard Corps of Engineers."

Minutes after that, Julio returned to the teleconference, stating, "Uncle Ted's calling neighboring states for their Corps Of Engineers. He'll contact the Governors of New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Maryland, and Virginia. Soon we'll have skilled construction workers and support staff to man Seibert Mall Food Court and various other restaurants around Kaho-o-whosie island."

At two-forty in the morning, Pacific Rim Division learned Starfleet Headquarters, San Francisco, was tracking an incoming Romulan Warbird entering the atmosphere from west of the city, approximately two-thousand-five hundred miles distant, over the Pacific. It was presumed that within the hour the Warbird would reach the city. Kaleo, Tory and Nathan decided to assist with defending the city. Donnie immediately ordered the Goliath to intercept the Warbird. At the same time, Kaleo woke Kekoa, explained the situation and then asked "What have we got, Colonel?"

"Plenty," Kekoa replied. "Let me get them airborne, and then I'll explain further." Before Kaleo could question the Detachment commander, Kekoa abruptly said, "Kekoa out." Only half-dressed in his fatigues and barefoot, Kekoa transported out to the Rapid Response Base, where he put Strike Teams Oscar, Romeo, Tango and Whiskey on alert. Teams Oscar and Romeo were put to work arming the Hind Gunship and the F-15E Strike Eagle. With the help of the A.I.s and an electronic map of the northeastern Pacific Ocean, Kekoa briefed teams Tango and Whiskey, the pilots for the Hind and F-15E. A blinking dot, about one-thousand kilometers north of the R.O.H., indicated their target.

General Donnie Williams entered the hangar, informing the pilots and Kekoa that the Goliath was taking off within the next minute or two. The group was informed that the Lafayette was in orbit firing on the Warbird, and that the Goliath would present a formidable opponent in the air. On and in the ocean, League Naval Battle Groups were already confronting and firing on the Romulan ship with all they had, including phaser cannons and photon missiles. The jobs of the Hind and F-15E were to transport to the Warbird, rapidly fire all their weapons and come back for rearmament. They were small and maneuverable enough to avoid enemy fire and would initially be considered annoying mosquitoes on the ass of a rhinoceros, until the Warbird was hit with phaser cannons and twenty simultaneous matter/anti-matter missiles.

Donnie finished his briefing, telling the pilots, "The Goliath is running hypersonic and will be on target in fifteen minutes or less. Our job is to make certain those Romulan fuckers never get close to San Francisco. They go down in pieces or as a new hunk of ugly reef material off shore, but they are going down, correct?"

"Sir, yes Sir!" Twenty voices shouted.

With a nod from Donnie, Kekoa ordered, "Man your aircraft." Four boys ran to the flight-line and the remaining sixteen hurried to assist the teams preparing armaments. One pilot climbed into the F-15E. The other three boarded the Hind Gunship.

Noticing Kekoa's stressed expression, Donnie pulled him close to softly say, "I was briefed on the Goliath shortly after it departed for the Hyatt Regency. It's three-hundred-sixty meters long, one-hundred meters wide, wedge shaped and aerodynamic. It's basically an atmospheric battleship, powered by microfusion generators; it has all the same weapons and armaments as Starfleet, and the chimps developed configurable parabolic reflective shielding."

Kekoa scowled, "Which means?"

"It can absorb incoming fire to augment the shield power, and reflect a portion of the firepower back at the source," Donnie grinned.

Kekoa's jaw dropped, and then he chuckled, "The more it's hit the stronger it gets. They should've named it 'Rocky'."

"That Warbird will take a pounding from our forces, Starfleet and the League's naval and air forces," Donnie stated, and then huffed, "The only question is, how long will the Warbird last?"

* * * * *

U.S.S. Abraham Lincoln Strike Group

Near 38 Degrees North Latitude, 160 Degrees West Longitude,
2:50 AM HTZ

Petty Officer Third Class Radcliff Conklin, standing at his General Quarters duty station at the forward phaser cannon, wondered when his life would start flashing before his eyes. He'd joined the Navy to see the world. During his three years in the Navy, he had seen a lot for a man of twenty-one years; the port cities around the Pacific Rim, from South America to North America to Pearl Harbor to Tokyo and Kobe, were his vacation spots. For the last two years, his primary home was the heavy destroyer U.S.S. Nicholson. Now Radcliff could include the sight of a Romulan Warbird burning through the atmosphere in his list of memories for old age; assuming he survived this encounter.

Firing his phaser cannon in controlled ten-second bursts at the Warbird's warp nacelles, Radcliff recalled basic training, when his nickname changed from Cliff to Rad, simply because his long red hair was uncontrollable those first two days at the Great Lakes Naval Training Center. Even after they shaved his head, the nickname 'Rad' had stuck all through basic training.

The night he arrived at his job training location at Dahlgren, Virginia, his nickname became even more permanent. After eight weeks of no alcohol at all, those first three beers hit him like a tidal wave, allowing Rad to tell his buddies that he was bisexual and didn't care who any guy decided to have sex with, and his intoxicated list included animals and watermelons. Soon thereafter, when his first week of training was completed, another inebriated experiment with his pals actually included three watermelons. Adequate holes were bore into the giant fruits. He and his five buddies pounded away at the watermelons to prove 'any port in a storm' was adequate. 'Rad' was a radical from that point forward.

Phaser and photon torpedo blasts lit up the night sky over the Pacific Ocean. The carrier Abraham Lincoln had Hornets and Falcons zipping around the massive alien spacecraft. From the surface of the ocean and from below the waves, matter/anti-matter missiles fired at the belly of the beast. Most disconcerting to Rad, to the fighter pilots and even to Admiral Noonan, aboard the Abraham Lincoln, was that all the firepower didn't seem to be impacting the Warbird's flight path toward San Francisco. Admiral Noonan had sent thirty of the armada's seventy aircraft on this first attack encounter. For the first time, their weapons seemed ineffective. For all previous Earth-bound encounters, the phasers and photon missiles were extremely effective. The Admiral would soon demand full-yield Starfleet phasers and matter/anti-matter weapons, not these almost worthless one-fifth yield weapons. It wouldn't take long before the Warbird was out of range of the strike force. At flank speed of sixty knots, the strike force was being outpaced by the Warbird. All Noonan could do was hit the Warbird with everything the strike force had.

Proving that they were getting the attention of the spacecraft's command, it discharged its fore and aft disruptors on ships of the surface fleet. One shot missed, but the other hit the Royal Navy cruiser Blake midships. In seconds, Admiral Noonan received word that the Blake was going down, and its Captain had ordered his men to abandon ship.

On the tail of that transmission, a second transmission came in, notifying the Admiral that air assistance from Clan Short had been dispatched from Oahu and would be on location within two minutes. Adm. Noonan loudly asked, "What type of air assistance?"

Communication Officer Nealy replied, "One F15E, one Hind gunship and something referred to as a battleship named Goliath, Sir."

Adm. Noonan incredulously hollered, "A fucking battleship in the air?"

The communications officer could only shrug and then report, "Incoming transmission from the commander of the Goliath, Sir."

"This better not be some bullshit story cooked up by those Clan kids," Noonan softly grumbled, and then loudly ordered, "Over speakers, lieutenant."

A deep voice resonated over the speakers in the bridge. "This is Captain Tau of C.S.S. Goliath. Please switch to encryption code Delta four."

"Do it," Adm. Noonan ordered. A moment later, he said, "This is Admiral Noonan. What the hell is a C.S.S. Goliath, Captian Tau?"

"Clan Short Ship Goliath is a specially developed battleship, Sir," Capt. Tau replied. "We'll be in visual range to your south any second."

Picking up his binoculars, Noonan grumbled, "I don't have time for games," and then peered out to his south. He saw blinking red and green lights outlining a huge airframe that by all rights shouldn't even be able to fly.

"We are not here to play games either, Admiral," Capt. Tau assured. "Please inform your pilots that we are friendly and here to help. Have them target their weapons to the north of the Warbird and we will take the south."

The rumble of a sonic boom shook the Abraham Lincoln as the Goliath flew over head, approximately one-hundred nautical miles to the south of the Romulan Warbird. Flabbergasted by the sight of Goliath, the Admiral blinked, and then told his communications officer, "Transmit to air wings Alpha, Bravo and Charlie to concentrate on the north side of the Warbird." He then yelled over the speakers, "Capt. Tau, we haven't slowed the enemy vessel at all in the last five minutes. If we can't slow her down, my forces won't be able to keep station."

"As soon as your aircraft are clear, we'll lock on to get her attention, Sir," Capt Tau reported. In ten seconds, the last of the Navy's aircraft had moved behind the Warbird. Closing from the southwest and perpendicular to the Warbird, as soon as the Goliath was in range, Capt Tau ordered, "Tactical, fire port weapons." A barrage of missiles and phasers fired from the port side of the Goliath at the Warbird and impacted against her shields a moment later.

Blinded by the flashes, Rad Conklin backed off from his targeting system with his eyes closed and hollered, "Holy fucking hell!"

"Tactical, fire starboard weapons," Capt. Tau ordered. Another outpouring of weapons from the Goliath hit the Warbird moments later. Slowing considerably, the Warbird returned fire on the Goliath. From Admiral Noonan's perspective, the Goliath visibly rocked from the disruptor's impact.

Across the communications link with the Goliath, Adm. Noonan heard a higher pitched voice report, "Shields at ninety-percent Captain, and recharging from the absorbed energy."

Capt. Tau ordered, "Tactical, fire at will." He then called, "Admiral Noonan, please inform your strike force to pound the fucking shit out of this pigeon from below and the north."

Chuckling madly, Adm. Noonan cheered, "You slowed her down and got her attention. We'll follow the bitch all the way to San Francisco at this speed."

"F15E and Hind, incoming from the east to smack that bird right on the beak," Capt Tau told the Admiral. At supersonic speed, a single F15E approached the Warbird and fired twelve matter/anti-matter missiles. The F15E pulled up hard and vanished. Then the Hind hit the Romulan craft again with another eleven photon missiles while simultaneously firing its phaser cannon. After fifteen seconds, the Hind disappeared from view and all radar scopes. From beneath the waves, four photon missiles broke through the surface, heading directly for the underside of the Warbird. All four impacted.

Again able to see through his targeting system, Rad aimed his phaser cannon and fired, gleefully muttering, "We've got you now, you skanky fucking whore."

The Warbird fired its fore and aft disruptors. The starboard side rocked the Goliath. The port side disruptor blasts hit the destroyer U.S.S. Meredith and one of the Hornets buzzing around. The ops officer aboard the Goliath reported, "Shields at seventy-seven percent and recharging."

At the loss of another ship, Admiral Noonan shouted, "GODDAMNIT!" He then told the communications officer, "Relay to the captains of our boomers, I want to see a missile fired from them every five seconds to keep that bird blind. If I lose the last cruiser and destroyer, we're fucked."

"Aye, Sir."

Turning to flight ops, Noonan ordered, "Get wings Delta and Echo in the sky."

"Aye, Sir." A moment later a klaxon sounded to get the next air wings off the deck.

All around the Romulan Warbird, phaser and photon missiles from aircraft, surface vessels, submarines and the Goliath were fired and hit her shields. Now well below supersonic speeds, she still held her easterly course for San Francisco. Additional Naval forces were heading northeast from Pearl Harbor to intercept. From Alameda, the U.S.S. George Washington and her strike group was prepared to block the Warbird's path. The battle raged on across the Pacific Ocean. Every six minutes, the F15E and Hind reappeared and fired their weapons, before returning to the Rapid Response Base for rearming. At three-thirty in the morning, the Royal Navy cruiser Lion was hit.

A thousand miles off the west coast of America, the Abraham Lincoln strike group had lost three of its four surface ships. All that remained were the heavy destroyer Nicholson and the two submarines. Of the fifty aircraft sent to engage the enemy, thirteen had been shot down and twenty needed to return to the Abraham Lincoln for refueling and arming. Airwings Foxtrot and Golf were launched so that the remnants of wings Alpha, Bravo and Charlie could return.

Eight hundred miles off the coast, two U.S. Air Force tankers and fifty fighter jets from Vandenberg and Travis Air Force Bases engaged the enemy. From the bridge of the Abraham Lincoln, the view was partially blocked by the wedge-shaped doorstop named Goliath, but beyond it there seemed to be almost a hundred fireflies attacking a hawk. Somehow, in the midst of all the bright flashes, a disruptor blast managed to connect with the Nicholson, hitting her aft section. The captain ordered "Abandon ship!"

Leaving his duty station at the forward phaser cannon, Rad Conklin bitterly complained, "Still no life flashing before my eyes? Com'on! I love a parade!"

Racing toward a ladder that would get them on deck, one of Rad's shipmates hollered, "You're fucking nuts!"

"What makes you say that?" Rad countered, and then rambled, "Just because I was looking forward to Christmas shore-leave on Waikiki, with a hot girlfriend, a hotter boyfriend, and a bored out coconut, for when they weren't around, I'm kookie? I don't think so! What is nuts is how badly this ship is listing, and we're still trying to climb the fuck out. Now, move it!"

Other nearby shipmates, all scared to death and hurrying to save their asses, began evilly snickering and teasing Rad about his sexual preferences, or lack thereof. Once on deck, several men slipped down the steep incline into bulkheads and the sea, but Rad had managed to grab hold of one of them and swing him around the hatch. Clinging to the side of the superstructure that led to the bridge, Rad grinned at his ship mate; "Don't get the wrong idea, 'cos I saved your ass. I am not fucking you."

The nineteen-year-old blond Seaman nervously chortled, "If we survive this, I'll fuck you and then the coconut."

"Incentive!" Rad cheered, and then instructed, "She's teetering. When she leans starboard again, run for the edge and jump as hard as you can." After what seemed to be an extremely long and drawn out thirty seconds, with lights flashing above them from the ongoing battle, Rad and the Seaman bolted for their chance. They climbed the ship's railing and pushed off with all their strength, landing in the cold water of the Northern Pacific Ocean. Only when they resurfaced did Rad ask, "What's your name again?"

"Gilbert Hoover. Why?"

Rad grinned, "If I'm gonna spread my legs, I should at least know your name." Hoover cracked up. Rad reached down to take his pants off and then tied the legs to fashion an emergency flotation device. Since Hoover was only watching, Rad prompted, "Get to it, Gil. I'm looking forward to a real fun night with you, on land, in a warm comfy bed." Snapping out of his trance, Gil took his pants off to create his own flotation device. When that was taken care of, they began swimming away from the sinking U.S.S. Nicholson.

A fair distance from the ship and seemingly safe, Rad and Gil stopped swimming. Gil called, "Hey, Rad?"

"You know my name?"

Nodding, Gil grinned, "Everybody knows you, dude, from the engine room to the bridge." He paused to control a shiver, then assured, "You're really not as crazy as everyone thinks."

"What makes you say that?"

"You grabbed hold of me, kept me calm and focused enough to abandon ship, reminded me to make my pants into a float, and then swim to safety. Four times you saved my ass."

"Honestly, I didn't get to check out your ass. I would've done the same for anyone."

"So, are you straight, gay, bi, or just into fruits?"

Rad smiled, "Bisexual, and I'm really not into fruit at all. It took a long time to wash sticky watermelon juice off my dick, nads and out of my pubes."

"Your Christmas plans were just made up then?"

"Mostly. I was planning on Waikiki, but the rest was all my imagination."

"Not anymore," Gil giggled through another shiver. "Come hell or high water, I'll be there too."

"Why?"

"To be with you."

"Why?"

"I want to try, with you."

Rad hummed then grinned, "I should've paid more attention to your ass long before tonight."

Gil asked, "Would you really want a boyfriend, or just one-night stands?"

"Now I know why my life never flashed before my eyes," Rad smiled. "My life's about to restart down a pretty nice course."

"Once we get out of the water."

"We stay right here. The battle is still heading east."

Gil paddled a little closer to Rad. Rad reached for Gil's hands. Gil wrapped his legs around Rad's waist, wondering, "How long until we get picked up?"

Rad brightly answered, "A couple of hours, long enough for us to get to know each other, I hope."

Aboard the Goliath, the chimp at Ops called, "Shields at sixty-six percent and recharging. Sensors detect the Romulan Warbird shields have been dropping steadily, now estimated at fifty-five percent."

Capt. Tau muttered, "We're holding shields pretty well, but not inflicting enough damage on the Warbird." He tapped his console, calling, "Engineering."

"Here, Sir."

"Is there any chance we could use part of the energy we're absorbing to augment our phasers?"

The chimp cackled, "Judging by some mischievous grins around the room, I think that might be possible, Sir. We'll have to design an electro-magnetic variance buffer and an ion-flux containment unit."

"Make it happen," Capt. Tau ordered. "I want to hit their nacelle with a blast that'll knock out the shield and fry their drive engines."

"Give us a few minutes, Captain."

"You've got twenty minutes, Engineering," Capt. Tau relayed. "In thirty minutes, we're at the coast."

"Aye, Sir," a half-dozen chimps happily answered, and then set about their new task.

At this point, Naval Air Forces from the U.S.S. George Washington engaged the Warbird. There were now well over a hundred and twenty jets attacking the alien vessel. Making their presence known, the two submarines from the George Washington strike group fired their photon missiles. Commanding the U.S.S. George Washington strike group was Admiral Harold Simmons. They were at station keeping two-hundred miles off the coast of San Francisco. Admirals Noonan and Simpson were coordinating their forces and sending rescue ships to assist those men who were floating around the north Pacific like a trail of debris from the earlier encounters.

Now included in the rescue missions were the Pacific Rim Division's Huey, and the Rapid Response Base's two new destroyers that were equipped with two Seahawk helicopters each. The destroyers weren't able to get to the fight in time, but they could easily help rescue the men left bobbing in the sea. With the help of Alden and the A.I.s, helicopters could take off, transport to the locations and pick up a dozen men each, and then return to their ships or the R.R.B., all in a matter of minutes.

When the men from the U.S.S. Nicholson were rescued, Petty Officer Third Class Radcliff Conklin and Seaman Gilbert Hoover were cuddled together under one blanket. This was no surprise to the UNIT boys aboard the Huey, but the resulting silliness and claims of fucking coconuts and watermelons had the boys laughing their asses off. Donnie Williams was there to greet each and every man that stepped off the Huey. Rad and Gil were pointed out as exceptional. Donnie made mental notes to meet with the two men after they got warm and rested. If Donnie had his way, which he usually got, their time serving in the Navy would soon end. They would be offered positions in the UNIT or, pending a meeting with Director O'Brian, might be employable at Ewa Beach.

Three-hundred miles off the coast of San Francisco, the Romulan Warbird's shields were down to thirty-three percent. The buffering and containment system developed by the chimps was put online. With one hit from the disruptor, the Goliath received almost a gigawatt of additional power that could be routed to their phasers. With the okay from his engineering staff, Capt Tau ordered a port side phaser shot on the Warbird's starboard nacelle. The phaser broke through their shield and hit the nacelle, causing the Warbird to stop in mid-air.

The Goliath was jolted by another disruptor blast. Capt. Tau ordered, "Target their port nacelle. Starboard side phasers, fire!" This shot not only caused the Warbird's aft shielding to fail, and damaged the second nacelle, but brought all their shields down to ten percent. Capt Tau broadcast this information to all the ships, aircraft and land based armaments defending San Francisco. The Warbird was hit repeatedly from all the forces. The port side nacelle fell off into the Pacific Ocean. In the dark, pre-dawn sky off America's west coast, lighting inside the Warbird was seen flickering around the decks and then failing. Pulling back from the crippled Warbird, Capt Tau ordered another round of photon missile attacks. With no shielding remaining, each missile broke off a piece of the Warbird, sending them crashing down into the Pacific. The remaining shattered hull of the Romulan Warbird dropped into the sea, approximately two-hundred-fifty miles off the coast of San Francisco.

* * * * *

C.S.P.R.D. Command Center

Friday, November 5, 2004, 3:07AM

Finished at the Rapid Response Base, Kekoa returned to the Ewa Beach Command Center. Still barefoot and with his shirt only partially buttoned, he reported to Kaleo, "Sir, our F15E and Hind gunship will be assisting in the battle for San Francisco. Also, the UNIT's Goliath is on course."

Kaleo knew that he would be held responsible for the lives of the pilots, and worried, "Are their chances of success and returning home alive good, Colonel?"

"They're excellent, Sir," Kekoa grinned. "Once our birds take off, they'll be transported to the battle location. They will fire upon the enemy and return for rearmament. Both are highly maneuverable aircraft. It would take a lot of luck for them to be hit in the short times they'll be engaged."

"And what about the Goliath?" Kaleo wondered.

"I was only briefed about it from General Williams," Kekoa answered. "Suffice to say, the chimps have developed systems that I never dreamed of. The Goliath will present the Romulans with an above adequate opponent."

Nodding, Kaleo smiled, "I really hated waking you up. Take a seat and stick around, Kekoa. Your job is to report the status of our mission for San Francisco. Once that's done, say good night and go back to bed."

Nathan grinned, "Over here by me, Kekoa. You can just take that shirt off any time you want." Kekoa stopped and smiled. Nathan giggled, "Vorik is the only guy here not wanting to touch your chest."

Glancing around the room, Kekoa chuckled, "Rain checks, please?" and took the chair beside Nathan.

Every boy in the room began scribbling personal "rain checks" on note paper and stuffing them in Kekoa's open shirt, some taking the opportunity for a quick feel.

There was a small earthquake around three-fifteen in the morning. It only lasted about ten seconds, causing Keith and Prez to feel a little dizzy. The swaying window blinds confirmed that it wasn't their imaginations. Kaleo, Tory, Nathan and the others in the Command Center didn't think twice about it, but it was confirmed via news flash that there had been a magnitude four-point-seven tremor.

Kekoa reported, "The Lafayette is breaking off to engage Romulans in a space battle. We've lost two ships from the Abraham Lincoln's strike force. With approval, I'll dispatch our Huey to help with rescue and recovery operations."

Tory quickly answered, "Go for it, Kekoa. The only snacks the sharks can have tonight are Romulan hors d'oeuvres."

Clan leadership on the teleconference decided that refugee support personnel would follow the sun. Each division would provide as many as they could to help get refugees from the local areas to the stage two area and out to the housing destinations. Intermittently, Kekoa reported losses of Naval pilots that would also be recovered. At three thirty, Kekoa sighed, "We lost a fourth ship, the U.S.S. Nicholson."

At four-thirty in the morning, Kekoa switched a monitor to the satellite covering the battle with the Romulan Warbird. The Goliath was half the size of the Warbird. Suddenly, bright flashes sprung from the Warbird. The boys watched for a few minutes as the battle culminated with the destruction and subsequent sinking of the Warbird's tattered hull. Everyone in the room and on the teleconference call cheered. It had taken an hour and forty minutes, but they had accomplished their goal to save San Francisco. Romulan ground forces on the peninsula were being met with deadly force from Starfleet and California's National Guard.

Still working at his computer station during the celebrations, Kekoa received reports from the Goliath that thirteen chimps in the engineering section were wounded and five had died from their injuries. Before leaving for the night, Kekoa reported the losses to Kaleo, Tory and Nathan. "They developed something to enhance the ships phasers," Kekoa softly said. "It worked, but overloaded some of the phaser banks, causing several explosions in the engineering section."

The news brought tears to they eyes of Kaleo and Tory. Nathan said, "They're heroes and will always be remembered as such."

Nodding, Kekoa finished his report, saying, "The Goliath is returning to the Rapid Response Base. It should be home in about an hour."

Kaleo, Tory and Nathan each hugged Kekoa and softly reminded him that he had done an excellent job twice that night, and now it was time to go to bed.

With all his adrenaline seemingly draining out from his heels, Kekoa sleepily said, "Goodnight, or good morning, whatever... see ya later," and then headed out of the Command Center.

Also happening at this time, Prez was examined and released. He was given a white terrycloth robe that barely reached his knees. Keith reached into his pocket, then put Prez's comm-badge on the robe. The doctor ordered Prez to wear only that robe for thirty-six hours. Saturday afternoon, he could have Doc Andrews examine him again to be sure he was ready to wear regular clothes again. Simply so Prez could sleep without waking due to pain, the doctor administered another hypo-spray of morphine. He was given a bottle with twelve tablets of Acetaminophen with Codeine to take no more than three times a day over the next two days.

A small disagreement ensued. Prez didn't want to take meds every eight hours. All he wanted was to be able to sleep. The doctor explained that codeine was one of those pain medications that needed to build in the system to perform at maximum efficiency, so that he could sleep. Obviously stoned again, Prez dramatically frowned and let out a brief childish wail.

Because Prez looked like Richie for a brief moment, Keith laughed, "Alden, take us back to our townhouse, dude."

Alden giggled, "He's so cute when he's out of it!" and then followed the order.

Keith and Prez arrived inside their townhome. They turned on the lights. Prez immediately began taking his robe off, but Keith forcefully said, "No, leave it on, baby."

Turning to his husband, Prez whined, "Keith, I'm gonna have to... wear..." Finally noticing Keith's leer, Prez grinned, "It looks that good?"

Keith nodded and admitted, "You had me so worried for a while there."

Stepping closer to Keith with his robe still on, but untied, Prez sighed, "I know. I felt you."

Keith carefully embraced Prez then whispered, "Lives were saved. I'm just sad that you got hurt. We'd both be sad if any of the other dudes got hurt. Given that, we can expect Kaleo, Tory, Sean, Troy and especially Kekoa to be equally upset. Imagine how Dee, Gage, Richie and Sammy are going to feel tomorrow too. I'm not asking anything more than for you to be a little more careful in the future, okay?"

Prez nodded, "I should've thought of Jimmy. He could've cleared my way in a few moments. I guess I was more worried of wasting that time and losing lives because of it."

"I know you, baby," Keith assured. He then reminded, "You said it yourself, the first time anyone on this team gets hurt, you would lose it. Now the leader of this division has been hurt. You're gonna be the center of attention wherever you happen to be most of tomorrow."

Prez groaned at that thought then suggested, "Can we just hide out in here?"

Keith chuckled, "Sure we can, but we can't hide from our family and kids. Eventually, everyone needs to see that you're all right."

Prez nodded and firmly hugged Keith. They both relaxed for a minute, but then Prez softly chortled, "I burned my buns!"

Squinting and taking one step back, Keith took hold of his husband's privates, forcefully reminding, "These are mine! They're only attached to you, but they're my favorite toys. We're both damn lucky you didn't burn these too. Do you want to see me go bonkers? I can't go without for days, baby. I barely made it through last Saturday and Sunday."

"Neither can I," Prez quickly interjected.

Keith smiled, "You wait until this weekend. Once you're better, your buns are gonna feel way toasty."

"I'll look forward to that," Prez giggled. A moment later, he reminded, "I'm not untouchable now, you know? Only my feet and ass cheeks are sore."

Keith softly reminded, "I can't live without you. It's been so many years that I can't even imagine my life that way." Prez nodded then they walked upstairs and into their bedroom.

The Goliath landed at the Rapid Response Base just before dawn. Donnie had arranged for honor guards of chimps, gorillas and humans to be present, in full dress uniforms. General Williams led the formation as they marched toward the hatch in two columns, stopped and spun on their heels to face each other. As is customary, Captain Tau was the first to exit the vessel. He went to the end of the line on his right side and loudly ordered, "Present, Arms." All of the honor guard troops snapped into position, and remained that way for all five stretchers carrying the deceased chimps who valiantly gave their best ideas and lives for their ship and for their world.

Asleep with his husband Stephen, John was having an odd dream and stirred in his sleep. He barely opened his eyes, figured none of his dream made any sense at all, and so snuggled closer to Stephen and fell promptly back to sleep.

* * * * *

Around seven that Friday morning, as kids began waking up and wandering into either the showers or the CIC dining room, the world was a different place. Nathan, Kaleo and Tory had been awake all night in the Command Center with Lieutenant Vorik. Sean and Troy were called to relieve them. They quickly got out of bed and showered. On the news that morning, Sean and Troy learned that battles had been fought and won in London, St. Petersburg, Sydney, Beijing, and in San Francisco. Unconfirmed reports flew that the battle for Washington D.C. was still in progress but almost won. Civil unrest was still occurring in Los Angeles. Hurrying through their shower, Sean and Troy knew that Nathan, Kaleo and Tory had been awake about a full day and needed to rest.

Those Rimmer kids who went directly to their laptop PCs upon waking were getting Internet timeouts from various servers. The problem was not local. It wasn't an information blackout, as had been experienced by many in the R.O.H. the prior weekend. Nothing seemed to be available because worldwide networks were busy dealing with the Romulan threat and military responses.

Showered, dressed and grabbing their breakfasts from the CIC chow line, Sean and Troy learned from the other kids about the Internet being unavailable. Television news reported on the various parts of what was being called "The Battle of Earth". Standing upon a chair in the dining room, Troy pointed at the TV and announced, "There's the reason why the Internet is slow and appearing unavailable. What started here as terrorist attacks at the King's Palace, the airport and at The Hyatt Regency has become a war."

Sean stood on another chair and pleaded, "Guys, don't worry about the Internet. We have water, food and each other. Lots of people around the world have probably lost loved ones. Lots of people are probably searching for food and water. We're not suffering. Remember how little we were allowed to have only days ago? We've still got it good compared to lots of other people."

Nathan, Kaleo and Tory stepped out of the Command Center looking like they had been awake all night. Troy nodded and added, "A little patience and compassion, please guys? What I'm hearing from the news is that Clan Short, The UNIT and Starfleet have been important in winning these battles. We've got a lot to be proud of."

Kaleo got up on a chair and said, "Troy's right, we do have a lot to be proud of. We also have reason to be compassionate. Many were lost in the battles over night. Among those lost were UNIT troops, including five chimps aboard the Goliath. For those of you that don't know, The Goliath was the ship that engaged tractor beams at The Hyatt Regency only hours earlier. Another of those losses hits home for us, as Clan. Early reports from London have said that Commander Charles 'Chip' Dodds has been killed. For those of you that aren't sure who that is, Commander Dodds was the adopted father of several Clan members." Choking up, Kaleo wiped his eyes and explained, "He was the father of Jamie, Jacob and Justin Dodds. Jamie and Jacob were just here for a few days, Monday through Wednesday."

Hushed whispers fell over the dining room broken only by a few snuffles. Tory stood on a chair and revealed, "The other night, during our California operations, me and Kaleo realized just how nice our adults are compared to some of those adults we had to put up with. We've started to show our adults just how much they mean to us. I suggest we all do the same; show our adults how glad we are that they're here and caring for us."

Kaleo nodded then added, "Show all those that you care about how much you care. Show it to the adults and show it to each other." Kaleo got down off the chair. Tory, Sean and Troy stepped down also. Leading by example, Kaleo went to Sean and the two hugged the breath out of each other. Tory went to Troy and they also hugged. All the kids in the dining room began hugging their friends and others they only knew by name. Tory then went to Sean while Kaleo went to Troy. Hugging each other like it might be the last chance they ever got to do so, all four clearly showed just how deeply they had been affected by the recent news. Thirteen-year-old Jerrold Hebda and his boyfriend Arnold Smithson, went to the kitchen and were the first to thank the on-duty chefs. Many of the newbies from California thought that Jerrold was related to Prez, because they had the same shade of red hair, freckles, blue eyes and were very similar in build. Other teens and tweens followed Jerrold to the kitchen to thank the adults that had been feeding them for a week.

As other kids came into the dining room, they saw their leaders and other kids already there meandering about, hugging one another. Soon, an assembly line of kids formed in the kitchen to hug the chefs. It delayed service to some extent, but no one seemed to mind. Others around the world would very likely go hungry and thirsty this day. Kaleo and Tory went back to their dorm room. Sean and Troy went into the Command Center, but were only in there for thirty minutes, long enough for Lieutenant Vorik to meditate and refresh himself. Kids that arrived in the dining room at seven-thirty were still there when Sean and Troy stepped back in the room. The hugging and heartfelt words of appreciation were still being shared.

From his bedroom at home, John felt what was happening in the CIC dining room, and the mass of shared compassion woke him up. The dream from hours earlier still wasn't clear. Things like that didn't happen. If it had, he would've grabbed a phaser, put the division back on red alert and told Donnie to get his entire Rapid Response Base prepared for another alien attack of winged demons. Softly sniggering, he gently munched on Stephen's shoulder. After a quick virtual romp around rooms in John's N-Gen mind, they stretched and started to climb out of bed. From the window side of the bed, Stephen pointed at the window sill, softly asking, "Hon, where did that statue come from? I don't remember it being here when we went to bed, do you?"

Padding naked around the bed, John saw the statue: a large stone-like base, about six inches by three across, and standing an inch high, with a figure of Joel in his armor and carrying his sword standing on it. In all, the whole thing was about ten inches in height, and clearly what he recalled from his dream. With a whisper he repeated what that dragonish, demonish creature had said to him; "I was bidden by Vae'Yarim to give this unto you, little Beloved..."

Looking more closely, John grinned, "Maybe it's a new N-Gen skill? It's from the dream I showed you."

Stephen hollered, "Alden, who was in our room last night?"

Alden giggled, "Our shields are still up, Stephen. I'm reviewing the surveillance for that room, but no one got on base without our knowledge. Only family could've gotten inside your house and in your room. The surveillance video shows nothing too terribly abnormal, just three-point-two-one minutes of blackness, which isn't right, but only means the camera is on the fritz. I'll replace it, guys."

John nodded, "Thanks, Alden. Since Prez is out of it, I'll take a status report in the shower."

Alden giggled, "And Stephen too, no doubt."

"SHUSH!" both boys demanded.

After sharing the news of Commander Dodds' passing with Stephen, Mrs. Marr and his parents, John felt he needed to do two things. The first and most easily accomplished was to join his Clan in the dining room. A little after eight o'clock that morning, John, Stephen and Frankie came in the dining room. Asking everyone to put down their milkshakes, John did what only he could do – create a group hug of two-hundred kids ten feet off the floor. For John, the love and compassion flowing from such a group sufficiently made up for the strain of holding up a building the prior night. Derrick, Mike and their kids walked in to this amazing sight. John telepathically shared the news with them, then pulled them up too, so that they could participate in the warmth and good feelings. John asked for a minute of silence to wish Commander Dodds, and all those lost, well on their journey to the other side. A flash of light engulfed the floating Clan, like that of an old fashioned flash camera. But there was no one with a camera in the room. John hadn't done it nor had Alden or any of the A.I.s. It became another one of those strange things that was generally unimportant yet experienced by many, like the silvery, light musical laughs occasionally heard.

John lowered everyone down to the floor to return to their breakfasts. Then he and Stephen went into the Command Center to perform a second task. John's hope was to have a brief video conference with Jamie and Jacob. Sadly yet understandably, they weren't available, so John recorded a video message for them. John said, "You guys have been in my head since Monday. When I say I feel you, you know it's true. I'm doing what I can and what you dudes will allow me to do. Know this though, all two hundred and thirty-five Rimmer kids just shared a moment of silence for your dads. They were loved and their sacrifice has been noticed. The same goes for you guys, and Justy too. When you're ready, we're here for you. Just say the word and I'll be there with Stephen and as many kids as I can gather. Take care now, buds." After a brief pause, John said, "End message."

Somewhat shocked, Stephen softly asked, "That's all you're going to do, hon?"

John nodded and sighed, "I feel them, baby. They only had good fathers for about two months. I'm not gonna barge in on them, as much as I really want to. They need time and that's something I can't give them."

Nodding, Stephen sighed then muttered, "I wish we could do something more."

Pulling his hubby close, John nodded, "We all do. As soon as they're ready for me, I'm there or they're here, whichever they choose." John turned to Lieutenant Vorik, asking, "Is there anything required of our team, Lieutenant?"

Lieutenant Vorik answered, "Refugee relocation is in progress. Assistance will be needed, at Des Moines, at Hawaii, Maui and Kauai, and at Kaho'olawe."

Telepathically contacting Johnny in Des Moines, John said, "A few of us need to remain here, for the King, covering the command center, and another couple, just for support and emergencies."

"Agreed."

John offered, "Let me talk to the kids in the dining room. Hopefully, we can get a bunch more helpers." He then wondered, "How many do you think we'll need?"

Lieutenant Vorik answered, "At least eight on Kaho'olawe and another four in Des Moines. If we could provide more than that, refugees would be helped quicker."

"Put me and Stephen down for Des Moines," John instructed.

Vorik nodded, "I will arrange for security for the volunteers and our other bases." While Lieutenant Vorik handled those tasks, John and Stephen went back to the dining room and their Clan to get as many helpers as they could.

During the time that John and Stephen were in the Command Center, Dee, Gage, Richie and Sammy learned from Derrick and Mike that Prez had been burned. Extremely concerned for their Poppa, no words could help them relax. The boys had to see Prez for themselves. Other nearby kids overheard about Prez and more hushed words spread around the dining room. Derrick asked Alden where Keith and Prez were. As soon as Derrick said, "They're in their townhouse, still asleep," the four boys charged out of the dining room.

Mike grinned, "We're in trouble again."

Derrick shrugged, "What were we supposed to do; lie to them?" He then told Mike, "Now we have to initiate our newest Core Rimmer." Derrick and Mike evilly grinned at Reyes. At their dad's and pop's devious expressions and Reyes blush, Dillon, Jonah and Randy cracked up laughing. At some point, probably when he was least expecting it, Reyes would be grabbed by all four limbs and thrown into the diving well.

Via sub-vocals, Alden warned Prez and Keith that their kids were on the way. After only four hours sleep, Keith and Prez woke, but had not gotten out of bed before the townhouse door was opened and their kids were racing up the stairs. Dee and Gage entered the master bedroom in tears. Wordlessly, Richie ran around the king size bed, lifted the bed sheet and checked his Poppa out for himself. While Keith concentrated on reassuring Dee and Gage, Richie put the sheet down and glared at Prez, wearing a crooked smirk.

"What?" Sammy hollered at Richie. "Is it that bad?"

Richie shook his head, but said nothing. Having no other choice, Prez tossed the sheet aside. The boys looked at Prez's blistered feet, red and now hairless legs, and morning chubby, still surrounded by red hair. Prez got out of bed and turned in place for inspection.

At the sight of his Poppa's very red and blistered buttocks, Richie gasped, "Poppa? You burned your butt too?"

Prez picked up Richie and kissed him, then glanced at each of his sons, saying, "I'll be fine by tomorrow night, guys." Dramatically frowning, Dee scratched the side of his head. Prez asked, "What's wrong, Dee?"

"Well," Dee softly began, "I'm just wonderin', with your butt, feet and legs so red, how're you gonna get dressed?"

Putting Richie down, Prez chuckled, "I'm not," and then went to the chair where he had tossed his white robe. Prez put the robe on and made a show of modeling it, smiling, "This is all the doc said I can wear until Doc Andrews checks me over tomorrow night."

Playfully bouncing his eyebrows at Prez, Keith turned then teased his sons. "It looks pretty good on Poppa, don't you guys think?" Evilily snickering, Prez rolled his eyes.

Gage covered his eyes with one hand, then began laughing. Dee and Sammy groaned, then accusingly yelled, "Daddy!"

Dee pounced Keith, giggling, "Poppa's hurt! You be good!"

Falling back on the mattress, Keith cracked up. Then Richie pounced Keith, followed by Gage and Sammy. Taking his robe off again, Prez joined his sons, tickling and generally abusing Keith. Afterward, the entire family kicked back on the king-size bed. Keith turned on the TV in the master bedroom. Sammy and his brothers began telling their fathers about the Battle of Earth and the casualties already known.

Not really understanding the seriousness of the world-wide situation, Richie asked Prez, "You hungry, Poppa?"

Before Prez could reply, Keith said, "Yes he is. Poppa has some pills to take, and they should be taken with food." Again, Prez rolled his eyes. Keith got up asking, "Who wants to help make Poppa breakfast in bed?" Four positive replies burst forth from the boys.

Prez negatively grunted, "Nuh-uh," and then got out of bed, before Keith could say another word about it. Noticing five very disappointed expressions on his husband and sons, Prez complained, "Come on, you guys. I'm not an invalid." None of them moved from the doorway. Returning to bed, Prez asked, "Ya wanna stay and keep me company, Richie?" Smiling widely, Richie nodded and ran to the bed, then scrambled across the mattress. Keith, Dee, Gage and Sammy left the room rambling about what they could make for breakfast.

On the way downstairs, Gage briefly stopped in his bedroom, then followed his Dad and brothers down the steps. "Dad," Gage called, "the PC I powered up Monday is stuck. It's got a blue screen with lots of letters and numbers on it."

Tapping his sub-vocal, Keith said, "Alden, please replace Gage's computer. Also, please limit our visitors to only immediate family and the other Core Rimmers."

Alden replied, "Got it, Keith."

In the kitchen, moments later, Keith opened the refrigerator, but found it empty. In the cupboards, there were plates, silverware and glassware, but no groceries of any sort. While the boys expectantly looked on, Keith chuckled, "Hey, Alden? It's time for some food and household supplies in here. We'll be here this weekend."

Alden asked, "What would you like, Keith?"

Humming thoughtfully, Keith then said, "I'm thinking mostly non-perishable stuff, but we will need bread, butter, milk, eggs, juices and sodas."

Gage loudly cackled, "And cookies, lots o' cookies!"

Alden giggled, "Food for the Head Rimmer's family, comin' up. Stand-by." Keith got a frying pan out and put it on the stove to preheat. Sammy ran out of the room on a mission. Above the kitchen cupboards, just within reach, Keith spied a stack of trays and pulled them down. He put one tray down on the counter and returned the others. Gage got silverware out and put it on the tray. Sammy returned with a step stool found in the entryway coat closet. He then went to work gathering a bowl, a small sandwich plate and a large dinner plate. Dee took each from Sammy and placed them on the tray. Over the loudspeakers, Alden said, "You're set now, Keith."

Keith opened the refrigerator doors. What had been a lot of empty space was now full of stuff, more than Keith had asked for. In the fridge, there were condiments, sandwich meats and even a gallon of chocolate ice cream in the freezer packed along side packages of meats. Beginning to giggle, Keith checked the cupboards again. They were now filled with boxes and cans of various foods. Only wanting to make Prez some scrambled eggs and toast, Keith now had to make decisions and giggled, "Alden, you're awesome."

Dee, Gage and Sammy cracked up laughing then began checking lower cupboards. Under the sink, cleaning liquids, dishwasher detergent and sponges were found. In the lower level bath, they found more cleaning fluids and extra rolls of toilet paper under the vanity; toothbrushes, toothpaste, safety razors, shaving cream, a septic pencil and various over-the-counter medications in the medicine cabinet. Sammy returned to the kitchen to help Keith. Dee and Gage checked the two bathrooms upstairs. Galloping downstairs with Dee, Gage loudly announced, "We're set with everything. We can live here as long as we want."

Susana Gault left the dining room with Doc Howard. She had waited a day, as the doctor had recommended, but felt even more certain that she didn't want the baby. Susana had spent almost two hours with Doc Wiener the prior day, chatting about the reasons she wanted an abortion. After hearing all the good and logical explanations, Doc Wiener reminded Susana that she would very likely feel somewhat depressed after the procedure. Some of those negative feelings would be the result of hormones thrown out of whack, but other thoughts may be valid concerns and fears. He would be available for Susana to chat with whenever she felt the need to talk. Susana and Doc Howard started towards the F.Y.S. building. Seeing Susana leave with Doc Howard, Doc Wiener went to tables where Susana's friends sat, gently preparing them for the event about to happen and asking that they keep an eye on Susana. Doc Howard led Susana to a small, private treatment room, so she could undress and get comfortable on a bio-bed. The entire procedure would be completely noninvasive, take less than an hour, and Susana would be able to leave the F.Y.S. building in under four hours to have lunch with her friends.

In the CIC dining room, John levitated so he could be easily seen to make his request for helpers with refugee relocation. Drew and Corey went over to join John and Stephen. Next to stand and head toward John were Relud and Inoyra Glith. Finished with their breakfasts and coming out of the kitchen, Horacio Sulin and Sonia Baugh agreed to help and walked over. Almost at once, from various areas of the dining room, Roy Angulo, Gerald Mayers, Liki Keoloha, Keanu Hekekoa, Corbin Sancho, Dominic Crassus, Bianca Heres, Adrienne Norensis, Stephen Wickes, Aaron Farris, Jerrold Hebda, Arnold James Smithson, Nell Deckert and Mollie McElhannon joined John and Stephen. Over John's comm-badge, Carl Seibert and Laura Gibbons also volunteered. John asked the two adults to join the group in the CIC dining room.

Over the P.A., John announced, "Okay guys, all you kids will need to take care of yourselves for the next few hours, until dinner time. Nathan, Kaleo and Tory were up all night, so let them sleep in as long as they need. Sean and Troy, Mike and Derrick, Prez and Keith, Reyes and Corey's mom, Aunt Lanna will be here to take care of what's needed. There are lots of people without homes to go to or food to eat that we need to take care of."

Fifteen-year-old Lance Elling stood and assured, "Don't sweat it, John. Us older teens can hold down the fort for just about everything."

"We'll all chip in to help around here," thirteen-year-old Nick Shavers added. A bunch of other kids, even some of the youngest assured everything was kewl.

Lowering to the floor, John addressed the group of helpers. "We've got hundreds of thousands to get settled down, fed and sheltered. Some of us will go to the United States and help at staging areas. Some will go to our other unoccupied bases to help there, and the rest will go to Kaho'olawe. All you guys and girls need to remember is to be helpful, keep stuff organized and people in transit to the destinations. In case of problems, Lieutenant Vorik will assign personal security to each of you, so you'll have nothing to be scared of. Trouble makers have a habit of making their presence known and will be dealt with accordingly. Don't put up with any bull, okay? The first time someone stirs up trouble, to the back of the line they go. If they don't like that, offer to have them arrested. If they're still crabby, then it's the third strike and they're out. The more time we spend farting around with butt-heads, the longer everyone else has to wait." Seeing nodding heads and grins, John paused and checked, "Is everybody ready?" Getting vocal confirmations from the group, he called, "Alden, I need eighteen PADDs, comm-badges and sub-vocals."

"On the table beside you, Soul Rimmer," Alden giggled.

John handed out the communications devices and did light scans of each of the volunteers to find out if they were too scared to be of much help to anyone. Drew and Corey went to Kekoa and asked him to work with Lieutenant Vorik for security for the eighteen helpers. Carl and Laura arrived and watched John in full Core Rimmer mode. In minutes, everyone had their personal security and were ready for assignments. Telepathically sharing personnel information with Eddie and Johnny in Des Moines, John sent Arnold, Jerrold, Nell and Mollie to the Rimmer Hawaii base. Adrienne, Bianca, Corbin and Dominic went to Maui; Stephen Wickes, Aaron, Liki and Keanu went to Kauai. Horacio, Sonia, Roy, Gerald, Inoyra and Relud went with Carl Seibert and Laura Gibbons to Kaho'olawe. John, Stephen, Drew and Corey transported to Des Moines, Iowa and the Wells Fargo Arena.

Doctor Randall Wiener walked into the F.Y.S. building carrying a set of three files. It took all week to gain access to the information in the files. Some of it came from the Honolulu Police, some from R.O.H. C.P.S., and the last bit from the coroner's office. The subjects of the file folders were three brothers; thirteen-year-old Oke Ka'aukai, eleven-year-old Kimo and nine-year-old Makaio. The three boys came to see him Monday afternoon. Doctor Wiener had made arrangements with the boys the prior evening to come see him. He had spent the early evening studying the files to be prepared for the boys.

Noticing the long face on the Doctor as he walked in the door, Rob Gibbons said, "Good morning, Randy. Are you all right?"

Forcing a small grin, the doctor replied, "Good morning, Rob." Approaching the desk where Rob sat, the doctor held up the files and softly explained, "This case is disturbing. It would be a horror story for any child. First, the father died at work; an accidental drowning while fishing off the coast of Maui. Barely two years later, the boys came home to find their mother dead on the kitchen floor. To cap it all off, the orphanage personnel convinced the boys that their mother's death was their fault. Now I get to tell them truth, reopening the old wounds so they can heal."

Sighing, Rob nodded, and then gently said, "If anybody can do it, you can."

Nodding, Randy smirked, "What's amazing is the way the boys confronted me. All three are truly remarkable young men. I've seen them with the others, living, loving and playing as they should have always done. Knowing what's in these files, if I were in their shoes, I'd be alone in a corner, rocking and crying. For the first time last night, instead of one bed-time Martini, I had two, and wished that I could confront the sadistic assholes that told them it was their fault."

Rob grinned, "Would you like help with stress relief, Doc?"

Randy smiled, "Not this time, Rob. Sparring tonight with you would be dangerous. Your wife would beat the hell out of us both." Nodding, Rob softly sniggered. Randy chuckled, "Tonight, I'll take some frustration out on a punching bag at the rec center. No matter when I go, there will likely be a few of our base security kids there to cheer me on and instigate me." Helplessly, Rob and his security gorilla laughed. Randy smiled, "As soon as the Ka'aukai brothers arrive, please have them come right up to my office?"

Rob nodded, "Will do."

"Now it's time to make a nice relaxing cup of green tea with honey," Randy Wiener pleasantly said, and then left Rob's security desk in the lobby and started for the elevator.

Once alone with Prez, Richie said, "Poppa, tell me why."

Looking over and down at his youngest son, Prez wondered, "Why I got burned?" When Richie rapidly nodded, Prez briefly explained about the fire, how he had disintegrated doors, and when he realized there was someone needing help, how he wet himself down in a shower to go get the woman and little girl.

"Wasn't you scared, Poppa?"

Prez grinned and nodded, "Yep. Very scared."

"But you did it anyway?"

Prez sighed, "Being scared of doing things isn't a reason not to do them, Richie. Do you want to know a secret?" Again Richie nodded. Scooting down in the bed, nearer to Richie, Prez whispered, "I was scared when I realized how much I love Daddy. I was scared again Saturday night, when me and Daddy adopted you and Dee. What scared me most, both times, with Daddy and with you and Dee, was simply that I might not be ready, might not be good enough and screw up bad. Then I would hurt very important people."

Beginning to shed tears, Richie whimpered, "That's what I was thinkin' too. That I might not be good enough... and you might not want me no more."

Wrapping an arm around Richie and pulling him close, Prez assured, "I'll always want you, Richie. Adopting you and Dee was as important and as wonderful as marrying Daddy. To me and Daddy, you, Dee, Gage and Sammy are perfect in every way."

Wiping his eyes, Richie bravely asked, "You didn't get burned to get away from me?"

Patiently and softly, Prez explained, "Richie, I got burned because I wanted to help some people. I'll never, ever want to get away from any of the people I love. I knew I was taking a chance, but people needed our help. I love you, Richie, very much. Yesterday, when you were helping in the store with the newbies, you and your brothers made me very proud."

"Still?"

"Always and forever, Richie; each and every day, no matter where I am or what I'm doing." After a pause to allow Richie to calm down, Prez asked, "Is that why you smirked after looking under the covers, because you thought I did it to get away from you and your brothers?"

Richie shook his head and began giggling. Barely controlling himself, Richie answered, "Because you got no hair on your legs no more, you're all red and hurt, but still had a big hard dick."

Tickling his son, Prez laughed as hard as Richie was. Of course, Prez blamed Keith for his excited state.

Arriving at the Rimmer Hawaii base, Nell, Mollie, Arnold, Jerrold and their UNIT security showed their ID badges to the on-duty Starfleet Security officers. Stepping forward, Jerrold explained that they were assigned to assist with refugee relocation and that additional security would be assigned to the base while the refugees were residing there. Glancing at one another, sixteen-year-old Nell and fifteen-year-old Mollie were quite impressed with Jerrold's outgoing demeanor. Arnold caught the glance and briefly chortled. Walking away from the gate security station, Mollie joked, "He looks a little like Prez and even acts like him."

Regardless of Jerrold's blush and Arnold's giggles, Nell grinned, "A take control sort o' guy. Funny how he volunteered, since Jerrold's generally very quiet."

Jerrold softly said, "Call me Jerry, okay?"

"And call me Arnie or A.J.," Arnold added.

"We'll probably be working together most of the day," Nell thoughtfully muttered.

Mollie gasped, "What about lunch? How're we goin' to feed all these people?"

John sent, 'Don't worry about that. I've already told my mom and dad and Charles and Madeline to get the three bases staffed with the pending employees already hired and on the payroll. If you guys are busy, lunch will be brought to you. We're gonna get our bases filled first, then we'll send folks to Kaho'olawe. Keep a close eye on your PADDs. We'll keep stuff organized that way. It's enough to keep track of who is where. That's our job.'

"It creeps me out when you do that, John," Nell groused.

All four heard John's laughter in their minds for a few seconds while they walked around the base. In most respects, the Hawaii base was the same as Ewa Beach, except there were basketball and tennis courts at Hawaii. All that was missing was the domed CIC and condominiums. In place of the CIC was a building that was more like a buffet restaurant with the attached rec room. This base's auditorium was attached to the dining hall by covered walkways. In the dining hall, the four decided to pull two tables together and set up for refugee arrivals in the dining room.

The four enhanced human security were Patrick Pegram, Brian Whiting, Alice Straley and Wendy Gaitan. All four had MP5-AX rifles. Also assigned were two gorillas, for the boys, and two G-Cats for the girls. The hybrids were carrying fifty-caliber machine guns. Assuming there would be lines of people, all twelve decided to move some tables and chairs aside to make space for two lines. They also discussed how to get refugees from the dining room and to their assigned residences. For any of them to take time away from the dining room was considered a bad idea; it would only slow down the process. They agreed to have maps drawn up.

Into their sub-vocals, Alden interjected, "I can get the maps for you guys. Give me a few minutes to get them printed and I'll transport them to you." All four volunteers cheered and thanked Alden. While they waited, they chatted about numbers of refugees that might be expected. None of them had ever been in the townhomes or the single family homes, so they didn't know how many could fit in those residences. Arnie tapped his comm-badge and called Drew to ask how space should be allocated.

Drew replied, "All the single family homes can accommodate large families of eighteen to twenty, assuming two of the twenty are babies or toddlers. The townhouses can hold six easily or eight, if two are babies or toddlers. The dorm rooms can hold smaller families of no more than four. Alden just told me what you guys have been doing and talking about. You're all doing great! The stuff you've done has been shared with the teams at Maui and Kauai. Even the guys at Kaho'olawe are getting their act together. We just transported four of our buses to Kaho'olawe. Jerry Owens is giving Mr. Seibert and Mrs. Gibbons quick instructions on how to operate the buses. Good job, guys. Drew, out."

With that information and the boost to their egos, Arnie, Jerry, Mollie and Nell did some quick math on their PADDs. They figured they could house nine-hundred-fifty people. When they looked up from their PADDs there were four stacks of maps and a pile of colored markers on the tables in front of them. The maps were actually black-and-white satellite photos. Similar maps were also made up for Kauai and Maui. One-thousand copies of maps were sent to each base, so each refugee could have a copy. Alden had even assigned numbers to the residences, so they could keep track of who was residing where. Barely a minute later, the first group of fifty refugees arrived. At the same moment, Alden had also transported similar numbers of refugees to Maui and Kauai. Chefs, housekeepers and lawn maintenance personnel arrived at each base and everybody went right to work. Every fifteen minutes or so, another fifty or sixty refugees were transported to each of the three Pacific Rim Division bases.

From outside Doctor Wiener's office, Oke Ka'aukai meekly called, "Doc Wiener?"

Looking up from his computer terminal, Doctor Wiener smiled at the group of three boys in his office doorway, pleasantly saying, "Good morning, guys. Come in and lets get started." Oke, Makaio and Kimo filed into the room. Doc Wiener stood, went around his desk and watched the boys head toward the sofa. He gently closed the door, checking, "Have you boys had breakfasts?"

All three nodded, but wore serious expressions. Oke said, "We had showers, milkshakes and even got floated by John."

"Cut the crap, Doc," Kimo smirked, "We've been waiting three years for what you're about to tell us. Get on with it."

"Yeah," Makaio chanted, "prove to us the adults at the orphanage were bigger dicks than what they actually had hangin'."

Purposefully, Doc Wiener chuckled and sat on the edge of his desk, facing the boys. He smiled, "Given what I've read last night, Makaio's nine-year-old pecker is bigger than all of their sad units." All three boys giggled. Makaio blushed too. Doc Wiener reached back for the neat stack of files on his desk. He displayed them to the boys, and explained, "Here is the whole story. Now, I'm going to show you only one of the photographs in these files, boys, but I am going to show you the real medical reports. When you're ready, I'll call and have Doctor Andrews come up and tell you what the big words mean." He confirmed, "Ready?"

Oke checked with his two brothers. When they nodded, Oke prompted, "Go for it, Doc."

Opening the top file, Doc Wiener explained, "All the files contain the same general information. For some reason, the C.P.S. notes on each of you are slightly different, but given what we now know, C.P.S. told more lies in one day than every kid on this base combined." He stood and stepped toward the sofa, handing each boy a copy of the same police report. After giving the boys a minute or two to read, review and confirm that they all had the same page, Doc Wiener explained, "Your mother passed on that Saturday afternoon, while you three were out playing. Please note the approximate time of death. You three all told me the same thing; that you came home for lunch, ate, and then went back out, returning home about five that afternoon and finding your mother on the floor in the kitchen. Your mother's estimated time of death was two that afternoon, at least an hour after you left the house and went back out to play. That's point one; proving that none of you had anything to do with her passing." He paused to gather three copies of another report, then handed each boy a copy. Again, he gave them time to read, review and confirm that they all had the same page in their hand.

"That coroner's report states two reasons for your mother's passing," Doc Wiener explained. "The medical examiner's investigation says that your mom was cleaning with a nasty combination of bleach, pine-cleaner and ammonia. She was moving furniture around and breathing in the fumes from those cleaners. It probably caused her to cough and gasp for fresh air. That caused her lung to collapse. Struggling to catch her breath, she likely got dizzy and slipped on the floor, which caused the broken leg that each of you remember seeing. She didn't die from the broken leg, but since she was already in distress, the compound fracture caused her to lose consciousness and she fainted. She did not die from the fracture or the resulting blood loss. None of you left anything out for her to trip and fall on. There's nothing about toys in either the police or coroner's report. Her primary cause of death was asphyxiation due to the collapsed lung from the chemicals she was cleaning with." Pausing again, Doc Wiener watched the boys check over the report and softly confirm what they had heard him explain.

When all three expectantly looked up at him, Doc Wiener asked, "You boys have two options at this point. Either I can call Doc Andrews in to explain things to you in more detail, or I can show you a police photo. The reason I'm giving you that choice is the photograph does show your mom's hand and arm on your kitchen floor. It also shows something that none of you recalled to tell me about. So talk it over and tell me, is it Doc Andrews or the photo?"

Oke, Kimo and Makaio chattered briefly. Makaio looked up and asked, "It's really only her hand, right? We've had plenty of nightmares about finding her that day."

Oke nodded, "We can't see her face all blue again. We'll all start having those nightmares again."

Doc Wiener nodded and assured, "It's only her hand and a small section of arm." He swiftly added, "It's not her that I want you notice in the picture. It's what's also on the floor that I want you to notice."

The three boys checked again. One after the other, they elected to see the photograph. Doc Wiener wordlessly handed each a copy of the photograph. He did not return to his desk, but stood before the boys and gently prodded, "What's on the floor?"

Makaio visibly shuddered. Kimo looked up with tears flowing down his face. He tried to speak, but failed. Also shedding tears, Oke choked out, "A phone and a mop handle."

Doc Wiener nodded. He handed them a box of tissues, then waited for the boys to finish crying. He said, "Last night, after I reviewed these reports and the photos, I spoke with Jim Hundser, a lawyer, and Rob Gibbons, a police lieutenant, to play Sherlock Holmes with me. Given the conditions, we concluded that when your mom collapsed her lung, she used the mop to keep her steady on the wet floor, then went to the phone. Before she could call for emergency help, the mop likely slipped, she fell, broke her leg and hit the floor unconscious." He firmly told the boys, "She did not die in pain; she did not give up, she fought for her life; she did not trip on any toy or anything else left on the floor. The floor was wet from her cleaning it. Another photograph that shows too much of your mom's broken leg shows a chair tipped over. She almost certainly broke her leg on that chair. The coroner's report even states that they found her skin and blood on the chair. Although it cannot be guaranteed that was what happened, any court of law would find all three of you blameless."

He waited for all three to nod that they understood. Doc Wiener smiled, "So, I'm standing before three of the strongest, most incredible boys on this base. They survived two tremendous losses, three horrible years in an orphanage, and yet had the common sense to come looking for help to find answers to their questions. You could have gone to any adult on this base. I was privileged to be the one you decided to come to. So, you tell me, who has the most guts and the bigger dick, those jerks at the orphanage that blatantly lied, or you three?"

The three boys giggled. Since they met the man before them on Monday, they had concluded he was kewl and could be trusted to tell them the truth. Since Doc Wiener had told them and shown them more than they ever expected, their trust was confirmed. Oke smirked, "Makaio had a bigger dick at two than any of them jerk-offs." This started revolving commentary between the boys on each of their dicks. With loose remarks about Oke's newly sprouting pubes, they started play fighting and rolling around on the couch.

Laughing louder than necessary, only to show the boys that they were mature and had impressed him, which was the truth, Doc Wiener went to his desk. He picked up the handset, pressed a button and called Doctor Andrews to join him in his office "with three very kewl young men". Two minutes later, Doc Andrews knocked on the door. Hearing the knock, the boys stopped play fighting and watched Doc Wiener answer the door.

One thing both men knew was that, working with these kids, appearances meant more than anything. If they acted stuffy and superior, most of the battle was lost before they had a chance to open their mouths. The two adult men sat on the easy chairs across from the couch the boys were sitting on, put their feet up on the coffee table and chatted with the boys on their level. Doc Andrews then started answering questions. The biggest question was the one Doc Andrews had prepared for. He pulled a syringe out of his white coat and a folded, small paper cup. The syringe contained small amounts of the same cleaning fluids that the boys' mother had used. He squirted the contents of the syringe into the cup, allowing the boys to take short sniffs. Each of them coughed and felt the burning sensation in their lungs. When the boys stopped coughing, Doc Andrews reminded,

"That was after only brief sniffs. Your mother was breathing that in the whole time she was cleaning. The collapsed lung alone wouldn't have killed her. The broken leg wouldn't have killed her. The combination of circumstances and events is why she died."

Each doctor asked the boys if they had any other questions. The brothers were satisfied. Doc Andrews shook their hands and knocked knuckles with them, then left the office. To conclude the visit, Doc Wiener told the boys, "After what we've talked about and seen today, I wouldn't be surprised if one or all three of you had nightmares tonight. I'm not going to allow that to happen. What we discussed is the reality of the situation, so I will not allow your dreams to cloud what we've discussed. Tonight, and for the next two nights, at ten o'clock, I'd like to meet you at your dorm room. I'll give each of you a small pill..."

"Gag me!" Kimo grimaced. Giggling, his two brothers nudged him.

Again, Doc Wiener overreacted and loudly laughed, "Scratch the pills. Hypo-sprays for all?" When the boys nodded, he said, "Be completely ready for bed, because this shot will have you drowsy in five minutes, and a zombie in fifteen minutes. You'll sleep through the night, without any dreams or nightmares, and wake completely refreshed. Only to be sure none of you have a chance to hurt yourselves, I'll stay with you until you're all asleep, then leave your room."

He looked up at the ceiling, calling, "Alden, what dorm room are these three men in?"

"One, one, o' seven; dorm one, first floor, room seven, Doc," Alden replied.

Doc Wiener reminded, "The next three nights, I'll be at your room at ten o'clock. Do everything that needs to be done. You'll wake to leak if you need to, but be..."

"Zombie status," the boys chorused.

"Precisely," Doc Wiener chuckled at the performance.

Oke nodded and promised, "We'll be ready."

Pointing at the displayed certificates and diplomas on the wall, Kimo teased, "You don't act like any doctor I've ever been to. You sure those are yours?"

Standing and going to retrieve a specially made certificate, Doc Wiener showed it to the boys. Oke giggled, "What the fuck? Professor Porky Pig and Dean Bugs Bunny, E. Phud, of Warner Brothers University?"

Doc Wiener went into his well rehearsed 'Wabbit season, duck season' routine.

The three boys stood and left the office, giggling; "He ain't giving me no shot", "no way!" and "let's lock the door".

Entering the Ewa Beach dining room from the Command Center were The King, Queen and young Prince. Mike and Derrick greeted them. All three were still wearing the clothes that they arrived in. Derrick asked Alden to scan the three Royals and prepare to get them clothes and basic necessities, then Mike and Derrick showed them through the kitchen chow line. Prince Kaimi was offered a breakfast milkshake. Of course, he enthusiastically agreed, but first, Derrick explained to the Royals that the milkshakes had been developed by Doctor McCoy of Starfleet and were vitamin fortified. Kaimi became far less enthusiastic and scrunched his nose.

Mike smiled at the boy; "Just try a little bit. You'll see, they're really very good. Pick your favorite flavor, Kaimi."

Not believing it could be good, Kaimi reluctantly said, "I'll try the strawberry." In moments, the Prince had a small sample cup. He put it to his lips like it was medicine, fully prepared to spit it out. After the first cautious sip, Kaimi's face brightened and he gulped down the remainder.

The King and Queen smiled at their son. King Aalona asked, "Would you like more, Kaimi?"

Rapidly nodding, Kaimi cheered, "Yes, please!"

While the Royals got their breakfasts, Mike excused himself. He went back out to the dining room to gather Dillon, Randy, Jonah, Geoff, Frankie and Lenny. The Rimmer boys were assigned to keep Kaimi company, and when he finished his breakfast, to show him around the base. Walking with the boys towards the kitchen, Mike explained, "At some point, the King will want to go back to his Palace to get personal items, and survey any damage done. I don't know if they'll be staying with us another night, but I'd expect them to. If so, we need to make them feel at home for as long as they're here."

Derrick chatted with the King and Queen, asking what they would like to do that day. King Aalona summarized, "First, I would like to visit my wounded palace guards and employees. Arrangements will need to be made so I may speak to the people and the press. I will need to answer questions that will likely be posed."

Tapping his PADD, Derrick nodded, "I have casualty numbers right here, Majesty." Pausing and carefully considering his words, Derrick softly reminded, "Since investigations are still in progress, we can't mention the H.L.F.," and then passed his PADD to the King.

The King evilly grinned, "I am aware of that from Lieutenant Vorik. I will act ignorant of that information for the time being, but rest assured, the people will know I am not standing for this sort of militant terrorism."

The Queen interjected, "Our lives were put in jeopardy because of our own lack of experience. The last remnants of innocence have been shattered with the windows of our home. It will not happen again."

"I am considering several options available to me," the King told the Queen.

While Mike and Derrick were busy with the Royal Family, back at the townhouse, Keith and his sons were putting the finishing touches on breakfast for Prez. On the tray were scrambled eggs, buttered toast, a bowl of mixed fruit and a large glass of orange-pineapple juice. The final touch was a small flower, plucked by Dee from one of the bushes outside the townhouse, in a glass of water. The three boys raced back upstairs while Keith carefully carried the tray up.

Prez had just started eating when Alden announced over the speakers in the master bedroom, "Gage, I got you an Apple MacBook Pro."

Sliding off the king-sized bed, Gage hurried to his bedroom, saying, "I'm used to Windows. How much different is a Mac?"

"Almost everything available for a PC is available for a Mac," Alden replied. "I've already set it up to work with the printers in the house, so you're set for school and play."

Gage asked, "And it would work today?"

Alden answered, "Only Internet access would be affected, but that's not this Mac's fault; it's military conditions around the world causing that problem."

"Sweet," Gage giggled. He then started trying out his new computer. Sammy walked in and sat down beside his brother. Together, they figured out how to operate the machine.

Entering the room where his brothers were, Dee softly giggled, "Daddy and Poppa are being silly."

Gage smiled, "They love each other so much. It's a big change from the way my ex-parents acted."

Sammy pulled Dee closer and the three boys learned about the MacBook together. They learned that the Apple web site had a plethora of videos to help them, but download speeds were crawling along at a snail's pace. During the process, Sammy and Gage learned that Dee had been left back a year at his old school. In September, Dee had restarted the third grade. He wasn't the least bit familiar with computers. Sammy and Gage began teaching Dee all the fundamentals of operating a computer.

Meanwhile, the newly reunited quadruplets, Ralphie, Richie, Robbie and Ronnie had woken at their new home with their parents. The family was awake late, getting acquainted with one another and their spacious new home. Even after Jason and Trinity had gone to bed, the quadruplets remained awake in the living room, chatting and excitedly watching events unfold at the Hyatt Regency. At one in the morning, the four boys turned off the TV, then went upstairs to bed.

Ralphie and Richie were the first to climb out of bed and take a shower together. It was a completely new experience for the two looka-likes to see what their backsides looked like to the rest of the world. All the shampooing and soaping had the usual effects on the boys. Washing each others' erections, they giggled and stopped before reaching their climaxes, but they tightly hugged and promised to switch things around, so all four of them would have opportunities in the shower with one another. By the time they had finished and returned to their room to get dressed, Robbie and Ronnie were awake. The latter two confirmed that the former two had showered together.

Only wearing underwear, Ralphie explained, "We should've been bathing together all our lives. We've got twelve years to catch up on, bros. Tomorrow, I'll wait for one of you two to shower with."

Smiling, Richie added, "Now we know what everything looks like, from hair to teeth and from butts and dicks to toes, before we go out to the pools and get naked around the other kids." All four began giggling.

Smirking, Ronnie wordlessly checked with Robbie. Richie and Ralphie each grabbed a brother by the arm, and pulled them into the room. Closing the door, Ralphie softly said, "Yeah, we did wash everything. I knelt down and washed Richie's feet, legs, crotch, dick and nuts, and then kept going up until I finished washing his hair."

"I did the same for Ralphie," Richie proudly admitted. "We're catching up on lifetimes of missed opportunities." He paused and sighed, "It was better washing him and being washed by him than any shower I've ever had before. I was real careful with Ralphie. It seemed he was just as careful with me, maybe more so."

Robbie grinned, "Did you take it all the way?"

Richie and Ralphie shook their heads. "We could've, but stopped before that," Richie explained. "This time was more to act like real brothers, not to get off."

Ralphie nodded, "Maybe another time. We need to get familiar with each other. We think these first few times should be like if we were younger; getting to know each other in every possible way, before we try anything more."

Richie devilishly grinned, "Before I try something for the first time with a boyfriend, and chance screwing up in a really bad way, I'm gonna try things with my brothers first, so we all learn what's kewl and what's not. Together, we can do stuff without losing brotherhood or friendship."

"I want to learn with and from my brothers, like it always should've been," Ralphie stated. He cupped his package through his briefs, giggling, "Down here, we've both got peach fuzz and exactly six longer pubes. I didn't notice any of that before. It's like all at once, we're together and starting puberty at twelve-and-a-half-years-old."

Covering his mouth to keep his voice from being heard outside the room by the two adults, Richie laughed, "The hairs are in slightly different spots, but it's so weird we've both got six of 'em."

Picking up his board shorts, Ralphie chuckled, "Let us know if you've both got the same number. That would be wicked kewl."

Robbie and Ronnie chimed, "Very kewl," and then opened the door to take their first shower together. The only thing different with this pair was Ronnie getting completely carried away shampooing Robbie's buzz-cut hair, remarking that it felt like velvet and setting both off in hysterical laughter. Ronnie would have gladly done anything that Robbie wanted, but they both decided that all four of them would experiment either as pairs or together. Robbie counted six actual pubes on Ronnie. When Ronnie was checking his brother out, he found Robbie had a seventh of respectable length. The only reason Robbie could come up with was a joke about his buzz cut and that the extra hair had to grow somewhere. Again, the two boys roared laughing.

Dressed in board shorts and T-shirts, Ralphie and Richie went downstairs. Both boys gave morning hugs and kisses to their new mom and dad. Neither Jason nor Trinity expected hugs or kisses. Feeling shivers of contentment, like this is the way the family always should have been, Trinity kissed each boy back, and then went to get them fed. Breakfast sausages and pancakes were already made and keeping warm in the oven. Neither boy felt too comfortable being served, but Trinity insisted, reminding the boys that she very much wanted to, and that they would often have meals at the CIC, simply out of convenience.

While the first two boys ate, the family began talking about what had happened overnight. Ralphie and Richie were thrilled that Clan Short seemed to have saved many lives in the R.O.H., and according to the news radio reports, had also been of humanitarian and military assistance around the world. Robbie and Ronnie came downstairs, greeted their parents the same way and were served breakfast.

Once the Battle of Earth conversation was finished, the family then shared their plans for the day. The two adults would spend time at the F.Y.S. building and hoped to meet Mister Derek Tecumseh. They would then go to the base school and get familiar with those facilities. The boys wanted to invite their friends from the United States to Ewa Beach. They would spend the day together, getting to better know all the various friends, the kids already there, and the base facilities. Jason and Trinity reminded their boys of world events and advised them to check before making the invitations. The quadruplets realized that asking before inviting, on this particular day, would be a good idea. Amazingly, the quadruplets took their empty glasses, plates and utensils to the kitchen. Jason and Trinity were dumbfounded watching four boys, who were complete strangers a day earlier, work together at the sink and dishwasher as if they'd been doing it all their lives.

The four boys stepped outside and went to the pools. They weren't too surprised to learn that many Core Rimmers weren't on base, and those that were around probably wouldn't be seen much, as they were dealing with Battle Of Earth repercussions. The only Core Rimmer near the pool was Reyes, the newest of the lot. Since they hadn't really gotten to know Reyes the previous night, all four went over to say hello. Reyes made the rounds with the quadruplets, taking them over to the diving well to meet some of the teens, and then back to the pool to meet other tweens. The introductions finished with Lanna Seaver, the shared Rimmer 'mom' for all the kids, and her boys, Cesar, Felipe, Murakami and Shimizo.

The telepathic twins didn't wait very long before sending their first thoughts to the quadruplets, simply to test and learn if they were telepathic too. Only just beginning to discover that they could understand each others' thoughts with little more than a glance, Ralphie, Richie, Robbie and Ronnie were surprised to hear the twins' voices in their minds. Quickly checking with each other, the quadruplets softly droned, "Whoa."

Squinting suspiciously at her twins, but helplessly grinning, Lanna queried, "What are you boys doing?"

"Just checkin', mamma," Cesar giggled.

Felipe nodded and laughed, "They heard us and we heard them.

John's gonna love this!"

Looking up at the four older boys, Cesar prompted, "Go ahead and ask Reyes what you want to ask. It'll be kewl."

Out of the telepathic loop, Reyes checked with the quadruplets, "Ask me what?"

Blushing, Ronnie grinned, "I was hoping to invite some friends from Des Moines here for the day."

Nodding, Richie added, "And I'd like to invite a few friends from Vegas Desert Division here too."

Reyes asked, "Have you called your friends already?"

All four shook their heads. Ralphie offered, "Since things are kind o' weird just about everywhere, mom and dad thought it would be better if we asked first."

"Very kewl," Reyes smiled, and then tapped his sub-vocal, calling, "Alden, once the quadruplets have invited their friends, go ahead and allow transport through the shields."

Alden giggled, "Kerry says the double twins are on the same wavelength already. They weren't sure if our four were awake or not yet. We're set, Reyes."

Reyes told the quadruplets, "Call your friends. They're waiting on you."

Ralphie smiled, "Kewl," and led his brothers only a few steps away. Ronnie contacted Des Moines and Richie called Las Vegas.

Concurrently, while the quadruple R's were at the pool, and Prez and the Royals were being cared for, Sean and Troy were back in the Command Center. In the United States, President Bush did not make it safely out of Washington, D.C. He had been wounded and incapacitated when Air Force one was shot down. It was reported that thoracic vertebra T5 through T10 had been crushed. President Bush might survive his injuries, but he was paralyzed and required mechanical assistance to breathe. Many of the President's Cabinet and much of the Legislative Branches of government had been killed or injured during the Battle of Washington. That left one man, who had been out of the country at the time, in power – Secretary of State Colin Powell. He was in transit across the Pacific and would be landing at Hickam Air Force Base within minutes. Also needing a secure place to reside for at least the next day, Mister Powell would be staying at the Ewa Beach base. Sean and Troy were ordered by Seth in Orlando to transport to Hickam with their security, greet the President and transport back to Ewa Beach with Mister Powell and his entourage.

There was only one place to put Mister Powell. Troy checked with Alden to make certain that the third condominium building was empty. From investigating condo building one where he lived, all Troy knew was that the top three floors of every condominium contained single large apartments. He and Sean transported to the tenth floor of the third condo and got it set up, turning on the air conditioning, ordering beverages and food for the kitchen, flowers for tables in the dining room, living room and each of five bedrooms.

Sean's comm-badge chirped. "Air Force One has been cleared to land," Seth reported.

Heading for the door, Sean nodded and said, "We'll gather our security."

Troy added, "Let us know when his plane is taxiing and we'll be there, Seth."

"Thanks guys, will do," Seth replied. "Orlando out." Sean and Troy stepped into the waiting elevator.

Sean called for their security team, and requested Keith's and Prez's team also, only to make certain that Mister Powell's secret service felt the new President would be safe. On the way down the elevator, Sean wondered, "Do we bow to him like the King?"

Troy shook his head answering, "Definitely not. President Washington wouldn't allow that and no President ever has. We'll show our identification and greet him like anyone else, then we'll assure him and his secret service that Ewa Beach is the safest place to be for as long as he needs to be here."

Sean giggled, "This one's mostly yours, Lover."

"Thanks!" Troy laughed. He then joked, "When Sir Paul McCartney comes knockin', you'll have to greet him. I'll be on the ground, unconscious."

Sean smirked, "And when you wake up, you'll have him teach you every song he's ever written."

Troy hummed then admitted, "You're probably right." The elevator arrived at the ground floor. Heading down the hall for the exit doors, Troy called Alden and asked, "Connect me to all the Core Rimmers that are awake, please?"

"Go ahead, Troy," Alden soon said.

Troy reported, "Just a heads up guys. Not only are we billeting the King and our Royal Family, the defacto-President of the United States will be here soon. Secretary of State Colin Powell is about to land at Hickam. Sean and I are going to pick him up. We'll be back in a few minutes. In the mean time, maybe someone should let our chefs know. I don't know where he was at or how long it's been since he's eaten. Sean and I got the top floor of the third condo building ready for his party, and that included some basic food and drinks."

Keith quickly said, "Troy, get a housekeeper prepped too, bud."

Troy grinned, "Isn't it convenient, I just so happen to be on a first name basis with one."

Pausing from his breakfast in bed, Prez asked, "Did you gussy up the place, Troy?"

Arriving where four security gorillas and six teenage security were waiting, Troy answered, "We didn't have much time, Prez, but I did get Alden to deliver drinks, flowers and food."

"Good job, dudes," Prez cheered.

Sean called, "Have you got a fix on Mister Powell's plane, Alden?"

Alden replied, "It's taxiing now, Sean. There are U.S. Marines and Air Force security already stationed. I'll put you down near them."

Troy worried, "Please tell me that they're expecting Clan Representatives. I really don't feel like being shot today."

Seth interjected, "They're not only expecting Clan, they're specifically expecting you and Sean. Expect the usual security pat down though, guys. With all the crazy stuff going on in the world, they're probably in a bad mood."

The security team encircled the two Clan leaders. Sean grinned,

"I'm the only one allowed to pat down Troy."

Hanging his head, Troy blushed and giggled, "Twelve to transport, Alden."

Alden transported Sean, Troy and their security. They arrived at Hickam Air Force Base, standing about three meters before a group of heavily armed Marines. The jet carrying Mister Powell was some ten meters behind them. In an instant, several Marines were pointing rifles at The Clan team, and of course, the UNIT security pointed their weapons at the Marines. After a few silent and tense seconds, the Marine Captain in command screamed, "Drop your weapons now!"

In the hope of diffusing the situation, Troy calmly said, "That will not happen, Captain. We are Clan Short Pacific Rim Division representatives, ordered here to escort Mister Powell to safety."

The captain loudly grumbled, "I was told of no such plan! Now drop your..."

"I was told!" another man's voice shouted. Sean and Troy turned to see a man coming down the steps of the air-stairs. Approaching the two groups, he ordered, "Drop your weapons immediately, Lieutenant."

The Marine reminded, "Sir, I am a Captain."

The other man nodded then said, "And Mister Powell was a four-star general in the United States Army. Did it not occur to you that anyone simply appearing from nowhere might be associated with Starfleet? No, of course not. The longer you wait, the longer Mister Powell waits and the more disturbed he becomes. Drop your weapons now or find out who Mister Powell knows and how fast you will become a Lieutenant."

Saying, "Aye-aye, Sir!" the captain shouldered his weapon and his team followed suit. Sean's and Troy's security team then did the same.

The man then politely called, "Misters Faris and Moorhead, I assume?"

Stepping towards the man, Troy identified himself and then Sean did.

"My name is Gordon Rice, head of Mister Powell's security. May I see your Clan Short and Starfleet identification cards?"

Almost simultaneously, Sean and Troy apologized and fished out their I.D. cards. With all the excitement and with their nerves still settling down, they simply forgot. Troy offered, "I even asked if we were expected so we wouldn't get this kind of reception."

After reviewing the Clan and Starfleet cards for both boys, Mister Rice returned them to Sean and Troy, then waved them forward to follow. He then softly said, "Marines are a different breed. We had only just got the stairs and the hatch opened when you arrived." Shaking his head and sighing, Mister Rice confirmed, "Your base has Starfleet shielding?"

"Yes, Sir," Troy answered.

Sean added, "And it's active; has been since Monday night."

Leading the way up the air-steps, Mister Rice asked, "What sort of accommodations are available?"

Climbing the stairs, Troy replied, "We have the top floor of a ten story unoccupied condominium prepared."

"How many bedrooms?" Mister Rice wondered.

Sean answered, "Five."

Mister Rice grunted then asked, "Could additional condominiums be made available? We have fifteen secret service and four reporters in addition to Mister Powell and myself."

Troy nodded, "We'll make all three top level condos available. They're all five bedroom apartments. We'll make lower level single and two bedroom apartments available as needed."

Privately to Sean and Troy, Alden assured, "I'm on it, guys. The seventh, eighth and ninth floor condos will have beverages and food by the time you return."

Noticing the security teams following them up the air-stairs, Sean turned and wondered, "Leo, what're you doin'?"

"Keeping an eye on you," Leo replied. "After a welcome like that, it's more imperative now than ever."

Gary added, "We would've done so anyway."

Mister Rice turned at the top of the stairs and grinned at the gorillas. He helplessly chuckled at the four gorillas, "I had heard things... We have the same objectives, the safety of our charges. My men will not interfere with your job as long as you do not interfere with ours." Unhappy about their greeting by the Marines, Leo and Gary mutely nodded.

Inside the jet, Troy could not believe his eyes. There was a first class seating section forward, but behind that separating wall were couches, desks and all the comforts of home. If this was the Secretary Of State's plane, Troy could only wonder what the real Air Force One had on-board. Confidently approaching the front of the plane was Colin Powell. Suddenly, Troy felt butterflies flapping in his gut and was uncertain how to even address the man. Stopping and coming to attention in a very un-military fashion, Troy waited until he was spoken to. Seeing his boyfriend come to attention, Sean did as well.

"Gentlemen," Colin Powell pleasantly said as he came nearer. "My apologies for the Marines. We had only just landed, got the air-stairs and opened the hatch when you appeared. My intention was to forewarn them." He then turned to Mister Rice and asked, "You put the fear of God into them?"

Mister Rice nodded and chuckled, "Yes, Sir; God and demotion. A simple reminder of your previous rank and contacts was sufficient."

Colin Powell nodded and smiled, "Not a bad idea. A six-month tour of duty in Antarctica, during winter, sounds appropriate." Returning his attention to Troy and Sean, Mister Powell said, "I assume we'll be transporting onto your base?"

Troy nodded, "Yes, Mister President. I thought..."

"God!" Colin Powell loudly interrupted. He bitterly complained, "Three months until January and Inauguration Day? I might go insane before then." He then sighed, "Please don't call me Mister President. I don't want the job. The sooner I get relieved of this mess, the happier I'll be. Call me Mister Powell, Uncle Colin, General Powell, or call me Mudd for Christ's sake, but don't call me Mister President."

Troy grinned at the man and Sean quickly covered his mouth, struggling to hold in his laughter.

Regaining some composure, Mister Powell asked, "Which of you is Sean Moorhead and which is Troy Faris?"

Mister Rice then introduced both boys and Colin Powell shook their hands. "Can we transport from here?" Mister Rice asked.

Tapping his sub-vocal, Troy asked, "Alden, can you transport us from within the plane?"

"No, I can't, Troy," Alden replied over the comm-badges. "Without a camera, you or Sean would have to be in physical contact with Mister Powell, like the rescues last night. There's an airport security camera pointed at the air-stairs. I can transport from the top step there to Ewa Beach."

Troy and Sean turned to Mister Rice. Security teams discussed how they would proceed exiting the aircraft so that Sean, Troy and Colin Powell were never left open to possible sniper fire. Surrounded by their security, Sean and Troy left first and returned to the tenth floor condo. Soon a team of five secret service agents arrived, one of whom looked somewhat like Colin Powell, but was obviously not the same man. They spread out, searching the condo, noting the video and audio surveillance systems. Then Colin Powell, Mister Rice and three additional secret service agents arrived.

As soon as the last groups arrived, Troy and Sean began showing everyone around. The condo had a very open floor plan. From the elevator, there was a lobby to double entryway doors and into a spacious foyer. To one side of the foyer was the kitchen and a large dining room table with seating for twelve. Opposite the kitchen and dining room was the living room area with three sofas and additional chairs. There were also five bedrooms, two of which were on the elevator side and very large. At the opposite end of the condo, beyond the kitchen, dining room and living room areas were the other three slightly smaller bedrooms. Every bedroom had sliding glass doors to the patio and there were two other pairs of sliding glass doors, one at the dining room and another at the living room side.

Lastly, were the four bathrooms. From this condo, five floors higher than the Faris apartment, the views out the windows were even more breathtaking. Troy and Sean could easily see the similarity with the two bedroom, two bath condo they were familiar with.

Troy then tapped his sub-vocal and asked Alden to connect him to the base P.A. Barely controlling himself, Troy called, "Attention. Would Judy Faris please report to condominium 'C', tenth floor, on the double? Judy Faris to condo 'C', tenth floor."

Hysterical, Sean collapsed onto a sofa and roared, "On the double?" Outside, kids scattered around the base that recognized Troy's voice calling his mother began laughing and giggling.

At Sean's reaction, Troy giggled, "I can't wait until she gets here!"

Colin Powell smiled at Troy, asking, "That's your mother, I assume?"

Troy nodded, "Yes, Sir. She's a base housekeeper and I'm assigning her here." Breaking into a fit of laughter, Troy admitted, "It never occurred to me before that I could assign her a job." Grabbing his belly, Sean howled laughing and rolled off the sofa onto the floor.

Meanwhile, Mister Rice had begun assigning secret service to cover the building. Two would be at the first floor entrance; two would be out in the lobby between the elevator and the condo doors; four would be assigned to the balcony to cover the outdoors flights of stairs.

Shaking his head and grinning, Colin Powell warned Troy, "You're going to get a talking to, young man."

Wide-eyed and obviously looking forward to it, Troy nodded.

Crawling back onto the sofa, Sean cackled, "And the first spanking since he was five!"

Finished loading washing machines with bed sheets at the first dormitory, Judy Faris began the walk to the condominium, softly rambling the entire time. "My son, the Clan Short leader. Wise-ass! I wonder what he enjoyed more, calling me over the P.A., calling me by my full name, or simply requesting that I hurry? Someone is getting an extended time-out! Oh yes, even better, an extended time-out from Sean!" She began giggling, then wondered why Troy had called her to the empty condominium in the first place. The answer to that question came as she rounded the path from the second condo to the third, when she noticed two men in dark suits on either side of the entry doors.

One of the men stopped Judy and asked her name, and then her reason for being there. He then spoke into a small device on his wrist. The gentleman paused briefly, obviously hearing a reply in his electronic ear-piece. A few moments later, she was allowed to enter the building. She got in the elevator. Judy was aware of the world events, but had no idea who her son was with.

Troy was working with Alden to get adequate communications set up in the condo for a head of state. Desks, computers, voice and video conferencing abilities were arranged in the foyer. During this time, Troy mentioned that the Royal Family of the R.O.H. were also on base. Sean began taking the reporters to the seventh floor's two-bedroom apartments. Mister Powell asked to meet with King Aalona. Derrick and Mike were near The King and Queen in the dining room when Troy called over his comm-badge for King Aalona. While Mister Powell waited for the King's arrival, he contacted NORAD and the State Department to let them know of his whereabouts, and ensure them he was safe. A Federal judge would be dispatched to Oahu to have Mister Powell take the Presidential Oath of Office. That meant mobile television news teams would be coming too. At the Ewa Beach main gate, the last two Secret Service agents arrived in a van with all the luggage. Once clearance was received from Troy, the van was instructed to park at the base parking garage. Derrick would meet them to get the men and luggage transported to the condominium.

At the tenth floor lobby, Judy was again met by two men in dark suits. One opened the door for her and announced her arrival as she entered the apartment. Smiling like a Cheshire cat, Troy turned and waved at his mother. "Hi mom," Troy began. "I'd like to introduce you to Mister Colin Powell and Mister Gordon Rice, the head of Mister Powell's security." Judy began blinking fast as the two men turned and approached her. She immediately recognized Colin Powell.

He reached out his hand, saying, "Good day, Mrs. Faris." Judy shook the famous gentleman's hand, greeted him and asked that she be addressed by her first name. She then shook hands with Mister Rice and asked the same of him.

Seeing an opportunity to explain the situation to his mother, Troy quickly jumped in. "Mom, for the time Mister Powell and his group are here, I'd like you to coordinate housekeeping and anything like that they might need."

Judy smirked at her son. She softly warned, "You're enjoying this too much."

Troy blushed and giggled, "Just doin' a job that was assigned, really!"

Returning from his mission at the seventh floor, Sean found himself in the elevator with Mike and King Aalona. None were stopped at the tenth floor. Mike opened the door and announced the King's presence. Everyone stopped what they were doing, including Colin Powell. King Aalona and Colin Powell greeted each other. While Heads of State met and began chatting, Judy went to the kitchen to ensure there was sufficient food and beverages, then began checking the bathrooms and bedrooms.

Troy, Mike and Sean stepped aside for a private conversation. Troy told Mike that the top four floors of the condo were occupied with Colin Powell's party. He then explained that a U.S. Federal Judge and television news crews would be arriving to swear in Colin Powell as President. The three boys began estimating the numbers and quickly assumed that the entire condo would be filled by that evening. Depending upon the actual numbers, some news crews might have to stay off-base. Mike contacted the Command Center to let UNIT security know to expect more guests. Security needed to know who would be arriving by name, so no one unexpected would be allowed on base. Troy passed the requirements to Mister Rice. Since Nathan, Kaleo and Tory were asleep after covering all night, Mike tapped his comm-badge and informed Clan Headquarters what was going on locally. Troy went to his mom and told her the situation. Initially, Troy thought his mother would be sufficient, but it was now obvious additional housekeepers would be required. Judy agreed and instructed her son to contact Madeline Hupp to allocate housekeeping resources for the V.I.P.'s.

Half-past ten that morning, while Judy, Troy and Sean were busy in the Executive condo, Prez, Keith and their sons emerged from the townhouse. By this time, kids were scattered around enjoying themselves by the pool, diving well, indoor rec center and playground. Bruce, Dewi and all the Hundser kids were first to run to Keith and Prez, which started a tsunami of kids to gather around. The first order of business was for Prez to assure everyone that he was fine. Prez removed his robe and turned in place, saying that only his tush and feet hurt, like a really bad sunburn. It actually was a bit worse than that, but the kids didn't need to know it, so he said only what was necessary.

The kids surrounding Prez and Keith dwindled and returned to what they had been doing. The quadruple 'R's' stepped forward with six additional kids, two sets of twins and two other boys. Putting his robe on again, Prez smiled, "How're you guys doing?"

Helplessly giggling at quadruplet and double-twin speak he was hearing in his mind, regarding the cute teen redhead director with burned buns, Ralphie replied, "We're kewl, Prez. We only wanted to introduce some of our friends."

Taking over and bringing Adam along, Ronnie reminded, "The same time I was rescued, my foster bro, Adam, was rescued too. You can tell that Mark's his twin, and Jeff and Brian are their brothers and twins too." Prez extended his right hand to knock knuckles with each of the four brothers, and Keith did the same.

When that was complete, Richie moved forward to introduce "Prez, this cutie next to me is my foster brother Carrol. We've been brothers for about seven years. A few days ago, Terrence was brought home to live with us. When Pat started his crap with Terrence, me and Carrol got him out of there, which got us to the Desert Division Clan. Guys, this is the Pacific Rim Director, Prez, Preston O'Brian, and his partner Keith Hundser." So that Terrence would understand, Richie explained, "Prez and Keith are like Brent and Lance are at home."

"Kewl," Terrence warmly smiled. Keith greeted Carrol and shook hands with him.

Unable to bend comfortably, Prez knelt down to shake hands with Terrence, saying, "You've got two very kewl big brothers, huh?"

"The best," Terrence enthusiastically replied. "They's like brothers and real dads at the same time."

"I'll bet they are," Prez chuckled. "You be sure to remind them how nice they are by being just as nice too, don't ya?"

"All'a time," Terrence blushed and giggled.

Standing again, Prez extended a hand to Carrol, smiling, "Awesome job, dude."

Shaking Prez's hand while Keith said hello to Terrence, Carrol shrugged, "It was Richie that made me realize it couldn't wait."

Nodding, Prez smiled, "Good job, all around, dudes." He then asked, "Richie has given you the tour?"

"Not yet, Prez," Richie giggled, because Prez's robe had reopened. Pointing down at Prez's crotch, Richie giggled, "They just got here, seconds before you and Keith showed up."

Rolling his eyes, Prez closed his robe and tied the belt again, smirking, "That's twice this robe has opened itself in five minutes. This is going to be an interesting day." All ten kids nodded and helplessly giggled. Prez sighed, "I've got some other folks to meet, but you dudes have a good time while you're here, kewl?"

The quadruplets, double-twins, Carrol and Terrence chorused, "Kewl. See ya later."

Next on the to-do list was to greet Prince Kaimi and Queen Adamina. Once those tasks were completed, Prez decided to at least say hello to the V.I.P.s now residing in the third condominium. Prez contacted Troy, who in turn warned Mister Rice that the Division Director was on his way, inappropriately dressed in a white robe, due to burns suffered during the prior night.

About the same time, Sean disappeared and reappeared with Derrick, the secret service agents and all the luggage, at the tenth floor condominium. Keith and Prez arrived at what they were calling "The Executive condominium". The secret service agents and journalists were gathering their luggage and returning to their temporary residences.

After brief introductions, Uncle Colin got busy with affairs of state. Prez and Keith approached Mister Rice. "I understand the length of your stay with us will be at least a day," Prez began. When Mister Rice responded affirmatively, Prez asked, "Is there anything I can get for you?"

Keith added, "TV and radio isn't much. We could get just about anything you like."

Mister Rice hummed then said, "Up here, we probably won't need much. What I'm thinking is some form of entertainment. Would it be asking too much for a dart board in the two condos downstairs where my men are staying?"

Prez smiled then called, "Alden, for the time Uncle Colin's party is here, please get us regulation dart boards and pool tables with cues and chalk for the eighth and ninth floor condos."

Alden giggled, "Comin' right up, Prez."

Unaccustomed to this, Mister Rice asked, "You got us pool tables too?"

Prez nodded, "If it's not there already, it will be soon."

Keith smiled, "Anything that will make your stay more comfortable, Sir."

Into Prez's sub-vocal, Alden interjected, "It's all there now, boss."

Prez told Mister Rice, "Your dart boards and pool tables have been delivered."

"Amazing," Mister Rice chuckled. He then turned away suddenly.

Prez and Keith were both wondering if something was wrong elsewhere in the condo that got the man's attention. Finding a probable cause, Keith giggled, "Your robe opened, T'hy'la."

"Oh!" Prez gushed, and then quickly closed the robe and retied the belt. "Don't worry, Mister Rice. Here in Hawaii, we aren't as concerned about nudity. And I can't really tie this belt tightly without irritating the burn near my waist."

When the man turned and faced them again, Keith added, "Over at our pools, anywhere from half to two-thirds of the kids are naked at any given moment. It's truly no problem at all."

Prez reminded, "The kids here all have histories that make most of us shudder. Our first group were sexually abused. For the first time in their lives, they can swim and play naked without some perverted adult wanting something sexual from them. Others had been emotionally or physically abused, while others had been street prostitutes. Finally, we have kids from the orphanages in California and more street kids from a Los Angeles gang."

Keith nodded, "They're learning to let their guard down, at least a little bit. When they're hungry or thirsty, they're free to go to our CIC's dining room and get whatever they want. Actually, the dining room is the only place we've told our kids that they have to have clothes on. Board shorts, T-shirts and sandals are required in the kitchen and dining room. It's as much for health and sanitation as it is common decency. They didn't know that a day, two days or a week ago, but they do now."

Mister Rice wondered, "How do you manage? I mean, you're still kids yourselves."

Prez and Keith grinned at each other. Prez explained, "First and foremost, our parents are the best. We weren't emotionally and physically abused like many of our rescued kids. We got time-outs and swats on the backside when necessary, but rarely. Push the disapproval to screaming and yelling, or time-outs and swats on the butt, and any kid knows he's gone too far. Parents that do take it further have as much of a problem, if not more so, than the kid. A parent's eyes can express most of what any kid needs, from acceptance and pride to displeasure."

"We also have doctors and a child psychologist on base," Keith offered. "Those that need special care, get it. As for our command team, we've learned all we need to know to perform most duties from Clan teachers. The rest, like greeting important people, is common sense stuff. We help each other whenever needed. Troy and Sean greeted you at Hickam because we couldn't. Kaleo and Tory, whom you haven't yet met, stayed awake last night in our Command Center, dealing with whatever was necessary. When they wake up and get the chance, we'll introduce you to them."

Prez smiled, "We're especially proud of Kaleo, Tory and Sean. Last Friday, they were among the first rescued. Kaleo was the first to join our leadership team, last Saturday. Tory, Troy and Sean joined Wednesday."

Mister Rice nodded, "I'll share this with Mister Powell. I would have never guessed that Sean was recently rescued. Mister Powell will be just as impressed as I am, guaranteed. We'd like to meet your parents at their earliest convenience."

Keith nodded and smiled, "We'll make sure they know. Most of 'em are at work at the Federation Youth Services building, which is our next stop." Mister Rice nodded then began chuckling and turned away again. Keith laughed, "Prez!"

Looking down at himself, Prez grumbled, "Damn it!" then adjusted his robe again.

Shaking his head, Keith grinned, "Mister Rice, if you need anything, just call for Alden to contact one of us," and then walked Prez toward the door. Keith softly giggled, "And you wanna jam for the kids this afternoon? When your robe slips open in the middle of a song, what then?"

Prez shrugged and giggled, "Dance? You always say my bits swing real nice."

Once they were alone in the descending elevator, Keith teased, "Show off."

"You love it too."

"There's no doubt about it," Keith chuckled, and then pushed Prez into the corner of the elevator for a few moments of passionate kissing. The elevator stopped at the ground floor, the bell rang and the doors opened.

Separating and beginning to walk out of the elevator, Prez double checked his robe was closed. Prez playfully complained, "You got me hard, T'hy'la." Grinning, Keith put on his innocent act. Keith was hard too, but wearing board shorts and boxers made it far less noticeable than Prez. Before they exited the condo, Prez stopped short, calling, "Alden, my feet hurt. Transport me and Keith to our townhouse bedroom."

Alden giggled, "A likely story," then executed the order.

Back at the pools, Reyes had just been introduced to Adam, Mark, Brian, Jeff and Garrett from the Des Moines Division. Alien, Mini and Colin had decided to join the five newbies, making up poor excuses about how they would need security from The Rimmers. Richie introduced his two brothers, Carrol and Terrence, from the Vegas Desert Division. The fourteen boys were still near Reyes when his comm-badge chirped. Reyes tapped his comm-badge and greeted, "Hi, this is Reyes."

"Hey little brother," Danny Page's voice called, "are you very busy?"

"Not too busy, compared to the rest of the Core Rimmers," Reyes replied, and then wondered, "What's up, Danny?"

"We got a call a little while ago," Danny began. "There was an accident in Breckenridge, Colorado this morning. Debris from a Romulan starship, of some sort or another, burned through the atmosphere, landed on a house and killed the parents of three boys. We were called because two of the three are androids that Marc's been keeping tabs on. We need you to go pick them up, bro."

Reyes gasped then squealed "Me? Why me?"

"You said you weren't busy," Danny sniggered.

In the background, Marc hollered, "You've got two choices, Reyes. Either you go to Colorado or you get your skinny brown ass here, suit up and grab a scalpel."

The fourteen boys surrounding Reyes broke into giggles. Reyes smirked, "You're both nuts! I don't have experience with rescues or surgery."

"Neither did the rest of us," Marc shouted. "Welcome to the club!"

Danny giggled, "You didn't have experience with databases either, until last night."

Marc yelled, "Pick your poison, Reyes; rescue or surgery. We can use help either way. Tag! You're it!"

"You forgot the third option. BOTH!" Kerry added helpfully over their comm-badges.

"Hey Kerry, remember that we've already started a blackmail file on you in our head!" Mini giggled evilly.

"It's gonna be a small file then!" Kerry giggled. "No matter which head you're using!"

"Kerry, have you been picking on your Division again?" Danny asked semi-seriously.

"Only a little bit, Grandpa Danny!" Kerry said sweetly.

"Well pick it up then; you're giving the family a bad name!" Danny giggled.

"Okay, Grandpa!" Kerry said, his voice conveying the evil plots that were already forming.

The boys around Reyes cracked up and turned away. Reyes smirked, "Alden, take care of your little brother. Danny, I'll choose the lesser of two evils, the rescue. Alden knows where I'm going?"

Alden giggled, "I do now, Reyes. As for taking care of Kerry, it's a lost cause."

Reyes said, "I'll head to Colorado, Danny. These fourteen hysterical jokers around me are coming with me. Get them comm-badges, Alden. When I'm done with this, I'll call for Paul and Ryan and sedation, not necessarily in that order."

Danny and Marc chorused, "Good luck, bro. Danny out."

"Why not drag them into the fun?" Adam giggled. "You're outnumbered by quads anyways!"

"Who needs sedation?" Mark added. "Just grab a wave!"

Alden giggled, "There are four comm-badges on the table beside you for the quadruple Rs. All the Des Moines and Vegas guys have them already."

Reyes stood, picked up the first comm-badge and handed it to Ralphie. "Reyes," Ralphie sniggered, "we're even less experienced than you are. We just got here yesterday."

Reyes smiled, "Misery loves company," and passed the next comm-badges to Richie, Ronnie and Robbie.

Richie passed his comm-badge back to Reyes saying, "I've got one already."

"You're not wearing it," Reyes noticed.

Richie sniggered, "I actually didn't think I'd need it, so I left it at the townhouse."

Handing the comm-badge back to Richie, Reyes prompted, "Keep it. We'll sort it out after this little trip." He then tapped his sub-vocal, calling, "We're ready when you are, Alden."

Alden giggled then reminded, "I'm ready, but you guys aren't. The temperature here is eighty-one degrees Fahrenheit. The temperature in Breckenridge is thirty-eight degrees Fahrenheit. Stand by." A moment later, all fifteen boys were standing there naked. Garrett and Ronnie quickly peeked at each other, causing all of them to laugh. A second later, all were wearing sneakers, socks, jeans, long-sleeve shirts and jackets.

Adam scowled, "We just got changed out of winter clothes to come here, now we're bundled up again."

"Hey, it's better than seeing all you cuties going turtle!" Brian giggled.

"Our brother, the perv!" Mark, Adam, and Jeff chorused proudly.

Ralphie giggled, "Attention Starfleet Command, we have a problem."

"Problem acknowledged," Robbie sniggered, "state the nature of the problem?"

"Garrett noticed that all four brothers' dickies look exactly the same!" Ralphie cackled.

Blushing bright red, Garrett loudly laughed, "Did not!"

"Yeah, and you're not drooling either, bro!" Adam giggled. "Wipe your chin, you're givin' us a bad rep!"

"No drooling allowed in freezing temperatures," Richie sniggered.

Robbie chuckled, "It'll only make icicles on your chin."

Reyes laughed, "Alden, get us out of here!" A moment later, all fifteen were standing in front of a fire station in the mountain town of Breckenridge, Colorado.

Zippering up his jacket, Ralphie shivered, "It's cold! I'd forgotten what it meant to be so cold."

Also unaccustomed to this, Richie followed suit, zipped up and stuffed his hands in his jacket pockets. Carrol and Terrence not only zipped up, but also pulled the hoods up over their heads. Richie checked with Ralphie, "Turtle status?"

Ralphie nodded and grinned, "Itty-bitty turtle, hiding up by my stomach."

Leading the way into the fire station, Reyes prompted, "Let's meet our new guys and get back to Ewa Beach quickly."

"You guys are such wimps!" Ronnie and Adam chorused as they unzipped their jackets.

"Bite me!" Mark, Jeff and Brian exclaimed as they tried to curl up into their jackets.

Holding the door to let everyone step inside, Ronnie giggled, "Can't bite what's currently all turtled up."

Pausing inside the doors, Reyes grinned, "Try to be nice now, dudes. Let's make believe we don't know anything about hybrid gorillas, ferrets, G-Cats..."

"Badgers, N-gens, wolverines," Alien smiled.

"Don't forget talking to raccoons and other small creatures!" Adam sniggered. "So don't mention Johnny's security detail!"

"Right," Reyes chuckled, "let's wait until we get them home to completely corrupt them." He turned and saw a fireman approaching. Reyes politely said, "Good afternoon, Sir. We're from Clan Short, here to pick up the three boys orphaned this morning."

"You guys got here pretty fast, considering everything that you're doing," the man said as he held out his hand. "I'm Captain George Waters."

Reaching out to shake hands with Captain Waters, Reyes introduced himself and all fourteen of his companions. Once finished, Reyes asked, "Where are the boys, Captain?"

"They just ate and they're helping the guys clean up," George replied. "We're trying to keep their minds occupied."

Reyes nodded and softly said, "We heard the parents were killed this morning, by falling debris, but haven't been told much else. All I know is that one boy is human and the other two are androids, which is why they sent me to lead this mission."

George tilted his head. "That explains why the two boys are trying to help the third one so much. We lost two families that were very active in the community today. I hope that you guys are able to help them with their loss."

Reyes gasped, "Two sets of adults?"

Having lost his own parents and his uncle, Ralphie sighed,

"Please tell us more, so we can help them a little better."

"Chauncey and Fred are from one family," George responded, "and the little one, Brandon, is from another. The fathers of both families were brothers. The pair of families were pillars of the community, always active in helping others. From what we can tell, a piece of debris from something that was shot down took out the west wing of their house, where the parents were at the dining table, while the boys and one of their friends were being home-schooled by a hired tutor in the east wing."

Reyes prompted, "Please lead the way, Captain." Captain Waters led the group back and into a combined kitchen and dining room off the main garage area. Without a word of instruction, the quadruplets and the double sets of twins headed for the three boys.

Seeing quadruple and double-double vision, all three recently orphaned boys came to an abrupt halt; all had dishtowels, one had a pot, one had silverware and the other had a glass. The pot and silverware fell to the floor with loud clangs. The glass slipped from the third boy's hand and he tried to catch it, juggling it several times before finally capturing the wet, slippery glass. Reyes watched that boy's eyes and realized that one was definitely an android, apparently twelve or thirteen years old.

Reyes helplessly chuckled, "Nice catch, dude!" Ronnie began introductions for his brothers, then Mark continued introducing his brothers and Garrett. Richie introduced Carrol and Terrence. Lastly, Reyes introduced himself, Alien, Mini and Colin. The android boy introduced himself as Fred Eckhart, his brother Chauncey and his younger cousin as Brandon Phillips.

"Why are you guys all here?" Brandon wondered.

"Because you guys automatically fall under Clan protection," Colin replied seriously.

"How?" Fred asked.

"Orphaned androids are automatically covered by the A.I. Division," Colin answered.

"And kids who lose their families are automatically covered in Colorado, by request of the head of Colorado C.P.S., as of about two hours ago," Mini added.

Prepared to explain more, Reyes was preempted by Ralphie saying, "Our job is to help you every way we can, give you guys a warm place to sleep, plenty of food, the best of education and recreation, and more friends than you can count."

"It's the same at Vegas and all our divisions," Richie smiled.

"Yeah, you should see the place we got in Des Moines." Mark added. "The Clan runs the entire neighborhood, and everyone looks out for everyone else."

Noticing the curious expressions on both androids' faces, Colin stated "I'll give you guys two names – the two people who won't let you guys or anyone you call family be left behind: Marc Furst and Danny Page."

Gasping, Fred's eyes widened, and then he muttered, "Danny Page? He's real? I thought he was a legend."

"Alive and well in South Carolina," Reyes smiled. "I met Danny, Marc and a bunch of other kewl brothers there on Tuesday. Once you guys are settled, we'll get you there for a visit too, to get you a checkup, Fred. You too, Brandon. One word of warning, if Danny asks you to get undressed, ask him why first." At the memory, Reyes grinned widely.

Fred nodded and giggled, "I get the feeling you didn't heed that warning."

Reyes nodded and smirked, "He's awesome in lots of ways, but a bit of a perv. Stand still and he'll tickle you."

Chauncey stepped forward, cautiously asking, "We really don't have to leave anyone behind?"

"Course not, dude," Reyes assured.

Checking around the large group and seeing only smiles and nodding heads, Chauncey then knelt down and called, "Com'ere, Rikko." From a blanket in the corner of the room, a Siberian Husky puppy trotted over. Chauncey looked up and smiled, "He was my birthday present last month," then broke down weeping, "The best birthday... and the best birthday present... was the last... with..." Before Chauncey could finish, Fred and Brandon were on their knees consoling him. Soon, the entire group were on the floor too, each sharing Chauncey's pain in his own way.

Reyes assured, "Rikko's your companion, Chauncey. He'll go wherever you do, from now on." Standing and stepping back, Reyes made soft whimpering sounds, then barked. Rikko scrambled out of the pile he was surrounded by and bounced around at Reyes' legs, playfully barking and growling, quite obviously pleased to know Chauncey would be cared for and that he wouldn't be left behind.

Wiping his eyes, Chauncey giggled, "How'd you do that? Rikko's been freaked out all day. First the crash, and the fire, and then all the firemen, and then coming here, to a strange place with all these strange people, he's been just as bad as me, Fred and Brandon."

Reyes shrugged and grinned, "He knew you were sad and worried about him. You may not believe it, but soon Rikko will have so many new friends that will understand him as much as you." Ralphie giggled at the understatement, which started all the other Clan boys laughing. "Rikko's ready to go," Reyes smiled, and then asked, "How about you three guys; are you ready to see your new home?"

From behind Reyes, Captain Waters said, "They each have two suitcases and a gym bag of clothes and other personal belongings." Waving the three boys forward, Captain Waters led them to the locker room to get their things. Rikko followed the boys. Certain they would need an extra pair of hands for the luggage, Mini followed Rikko.

Once alone, Robbie grinned, "The next time we go some place cold, I'd like a hat too." Before he could say another word, Robbie's other three brothers were rubbing his bald head. Trying to duck away, but failing to get very far as more hands reached for his head, Robbie giggled, "We don't have to go back outside, do we?"

Alien giggled, "Nope, we're kewl. Alden's got us easy, because of our comm-badges. We'll just surround them, have Alden grab three extra, the puppy and the luggage."

Pulling along two of the large suitcases, Captain Waters led the group back to the kitchen and dining room, praising the boys' parents and hoping that they would see each other again soon.

Reyes waited for the boys to enter the room to hear him say, "All three will be able to visit, Sir. They'll have the very best of everything, from education to entertainment." Focusing on Brandon, Chauncey and Fred, Reyes told them, "This isn't goodbye, dudes. It's more like, we'll see you again later."

The quadruplets and double twins went to the three newbies and offered to help with their luggage. In moments, Brandon, Chauncey and Fred had only gym bags and Rikko. Each boy hugged Captain Waters and thanked him, then they stepped back into the group. Reyes shook hands with Captain Waters and reminded, "Anytime you need to contact these guys for anything, just contact Family Clan Short Pacific Rim Division, toll-free. We'll get you hooked up."

Colin nodded and added, "That reminds me, guys; I heard that you were with a friend being schooled. What do you say we go visit your friend before we leave, so you guys can exchange contact info?"

Ralphie kept mum, but heard Richie in his mind saying, 'I hope it's a very short trip and we get inside a warm place quickly.'

Ralphie sputtered briefly, then silently replied, 'Short, like my shrunk one inch dickie, and warm like the spot between my stomach and my spline, where my dickie is hiding!'

Rolling his eyes, Ronnie smirked, 'You ain't been cold until you've been shivering in long-johns, jeans, a thermal T-shirt, a sweatshirt and a parka, like in Michigan, when the lake effect snows are blowin' and it's ten below zero during the day.'

'You guys are both pervs!' Adam giggled mentally. 'What're ya gonna do if we go someplace cold?'

'Stay home!' Richie and Ralphie telepathically shouted. Since arriving, Carrol had noticed how Richie seemed to fit in perfectly with his brothers. Now Terrence was noticing it too.

'Staying home means no making snow tunnels!' Adam added, ignoring Mark's brotherly glare.

Shaking his head, Robbie zipped up his coat and sent, 'The four of you are so outta control, you better zip up, cos we're leaving any moment.'

"Hey Kerry, our brothers think it's cold here!" Adam announced.

"I can fix that... just a second!" Kerry giggled. Alden was heard snickering as well. About ten seconds later, the entire group found themselves in front of a roaring fireplace, with a ten-year-old boy and his parents pointing hair dryers at them set to high heat.

Brandon, Chauncey and Fred cracked up and hurried to their friend, partially to get away from the blasts of heat, but mostly just to greet him and his parents. Giggling, Adam, Mark, Brian, Jeff, Garrett, Robbie and Ronnie surrounded Ralphie and Richie, tickle-torturing them for getting the whole group into this A.I.-plotted situation. Once the hair dryers were turned off and the tickle-torture was completed, Fred introduced their friend, Neil Bailes, and his parents, Hugh and Tanya Bailes.

While the group was occupied with introductions, Reyes asked Colin, "How can we deal with Neil contacting Brandon, Chauncey and Fred?"

Colin answered, "Simple, we make Neil a Clan liaison on detached duty and give him a comm-badge." Holding his hand out, palm up, Colin asked Kerry for Neil's comm-badge. The small device appeared, and when introduced, Colin stepped forward and pinned the comm-badge onto Neil's shirt, explaining that he could now contact any of his three friends just by tapping and calling their name. By the time Colin was done and Reyes' name was called for introductions, Reyes had three comm-badges for Brandon, Chauncey and Fred. The three communications devices were passed out and the four boys scattered to various areas of the house to try them out.

The four friends returned to the living room. Colin told Neil, "You can use the comm-badge for more than contacting your friends. Being a Clan Liaison, you could help kids in trouble too, ya know? If you know of or see a kid being abused, don't ever put yourself at risk. Call me or Reyes for help, okay? We'll put a team together to help and be there with you in no time. We'll sort out the details, and if necessary, deal with the extraction."

Neil giggled and sang, "Sweet!" He then proudly called, "Mom, dad, I'm Clan too!"

Tanya smiled, "That's wonderful, Neil."

Hugh gently warned, "Be sure to use it responsibly, and heed Colin's instructions."

Tanya added, "Look at how many Clan arrived just to pick up three."

"That was just luck and circumstances," Reyes grinned at the two adults. "When the call came in, I was being teased and laughed at, so they all earned the trip."

Before Reyes finished speaking, his comm-badge chirped and Drew called, "Reyes?"

Tapping his comm-badge and stepping back from the group, Reyes replied, "Here, Drew. What's up?"

Drew asked, "What're you doin', bro?"

"I'm wrapping up my first rescue operation," Reyes answered.

Drew chuckled, "Good. I was afraid of dumping a task on you that you hadn't done before. I've got three more here that I'd like you to pick up and bring home."

Colin interjected, "I'll bring this bunch back to Ewa Beach, bro. We'll meet you there."

Reyes smiled, "Kewl. I'll be right there, Drew."

"Thanks, Reyes," Drew responded, "I'll see you soon. Drew out."

Returning his attention to Neil, Hugh and Tanya, Reyes sighed, "It was nice meeting you, but duty calls and I've got to be going."

Offering his hand to Reyes, Hugh smiled, "Thanks so much for coming to get the boys. When Neil told us what had happened, we were concerned. Now we know they'll be safe and cared for."

Shaking hands with Mister Bailes, Reyes smiled, "That's what we do best. I expect I'll be seeing Neil again in Ewa Beach soon enough."

"You bet!" Neil chimed.

"Maybe even this weekend," Chauncey giggled.

Locking eyes with Colin again, Reyes softly assured, "I'll see you guys in a few minutes." Colin nodded. Reyes tapped his comm-badge, calling, "Alden, take me to where Drew is, please?" The group waved as Reyes disappeared from the living room into the Wells Fargo Arena, in Des Moines, Iowa. Immediately upon arrival, Reyes eyes widened at the many thousands of refugees scattered around the arena. He excitedly gasped, "Holy crap!"

Corey, Drew, John and Stephen briefly turned in their seats and greeted Reyes. Drew pointed at the three boys seated not far away, saying, "Those three lost their parents in Washington, D.C. this morning. They know each other and chose to stay together. I'll be over in a minute, Reyes."

Nodding, Reyes walked over to meet the three boys. He introduced himself, then asked their names. The oldest, a dirty-blond teenager with striking light gray eyes, stood and said, "My name's Christopher Stokley. Call me Chris." He then pointed at the next boy, a freckle-faced, red-haired pre-teen and introduced, "This is Pat, Patrick O'Hara." Chris gestured to the next younger boy, introducing, "And this is Raphael Montigua, we call him Rafe."

Drew stepped beside Reyes and warmly smiled, "Reyes will get you dudes to our base in Ewa Beach, Oahu. He'll show you around, feed you, get you clothes and all the other stuff you'll need. Like Corey said earlier, you guys can choose dorm rooms or sleep with us in our nest until you feel more comfortable." Turning to Reyes, Drew sighed, "Lots of kids lost parents and homes. Every one of 'em are being asked who they'd like to stay with, and then where they'd like to live, then we get them to a Clan Division. I wouldn't be surprised if I called you again in another few hours, Reyes. We'll probably come back home with a couple more too."

Reyes checked with Chris, Patrick and Raphael. "How're you guys feeling after everything that's happened?"

Chris shrugged, "Totally blown away. Half our apartment building was destroyed during the attack. Just getting downstairs and out was a challenge, to say the least."

Patrick nodded and softly mumbled, "Everything's changed. I guess I'm too confused to even remember how we got out of the city and here."

Beginning to cry, Raphael sobbed, "I had parents and an older brother last night. Today..."

Kneeling down before the youngest of the three, Reyes opened his arms. Raphael leaned forward and embraced Reyes, letting the tears flow freely.

Wiping his eyes, Chris sighed, "Rafe's brother, Jay, was a classmate and my b-best friend."

"We'll take care of you now," Reyes calmly assured. Looking at both of the other boys who were bravely holding back their own tears, Reyes promised, "Tonight you'll have about two hundred brothers and sisters, warm beds and good food. I'll get you to our doctors, so they can make sure everything's kewl. I'll introduce you to our child psychologist too, so you can talk to him about everything."

Patrick prompted, "Get us out of here, please? This place, and all these people, it's freaky and making matters worse."

Nodding at Patrick, Reyes gently checked with Raphael, "Are you ready to go to your new home?" Taking Reyes' hand and then Patrick's hand, Raphael pulled back and nodded.

Chris took Patrick's other hand and smiled, "Thanks for everything, Drew."

"No sweat," Drew smiled, "I'll see you three in a couple o' hours. Reyes will take care of you until then."

"Got 'em covered," Reyes assured Drew. He then called, "Alden, take me and our three new Rimmers home, to the CIC dining room."

Upon arrival at the Ewa Beach dining room, Chris incredulously snickered, "What did you just call us?"

Reyes grinned, "Drew didn't tell you? This is Clan Short Pacific Rim Division, therefore we're all Rimmers." Chris lost it and cracked up laughing. Bouncing his eyebrows, Reyes giggled, "Who's hungry?" Letting go of Patrick, Chris grabbed his belly and roared laughing.

Uncertainly, Patrick grinned at Chris and then Raphael.

Wiping his eyes, Raphael looked up at Chris and teased, "So umm... you and Jay never..."

"Rafe!" Chris hollered.

"What?" Raphael giggled, "Like I didn't know Jay was your boyfriend. Thin walls in that apartment."

Covering his blushing face with both hands, Chris screamed, "Oh God!"

Patrick sniggered, "Maybe it's all working out for the best. I like boys too, but never could o' told anyone before."

"There you are," Colin said as he led the Colorado group, the quadruplets and the double twins into the dining room. All the Clan members had changed out of winter clothes and back into summer clothes.

"We arrived at the pools, thinking you'd be there," Alien stated.

Mini nodded, "When we didn't see you, we came here."

Reyes shrugged, "It's close enough to lunch time. I figured, we'll eat and then I'll get these three newbies to the store."

Richie noticed Ralphie seemed a little out of it, and wondered,

"What's wrong with you?"

Ralphie blushed and sharply shushed his brother.

Reyes first introduced Chris, Patrick and Raphael to Brandon, Chauncey and Fred. Quadruplet and double twin thoughts were silently flying while Reyes continued down the line from Carrol, Terrence, Colin, Alien and Mini to Adam, Mark, Brian and Jeff, and lastly to Ronnie, Robbie, Richie and Ralphie. While all the boys shook hands or waved to each other, everything suddenly stopped when Patrick locked eyes with Ralphie and blushed, "Hi."

Uncharacteristically, Ralphie squeaked, "Hi."

Reyes and Colin led the newbies to the kitchen chow line. Patrick reluctantly followed, but looked back over his shoulder to see if Ralphie was still watching. For some reason, Patrick felt like he had met or seen Ralphie before, but couldn't understand why.

Giggling began with Ronnie and Adam and progressed around to Garrett, Mark, Robbie, Richie, Brian and Jeff. Eight pairs of hands led star-struck Ralphie to a nearby table and sat him down before he wobbled and fell down. The same eight voices sang, "Ralphie's got a boyfriend!"

Blushing and suddenly feeling very warm, Ralphie giggled, "Oh my God, if only. Did you see his eyes? And freckles too? Cuteness overload! The next time he talks to me, I'm a goner."

Richie grinned, "I noticed that none of those three had suitcases, just the clothes on their backs."

Ronnie nodded, "We might have to let Ralphie join them in the store."

"Who knows, maybe Patrick will need help in the changing rooms," Robbie joked.

Garrett chuckled, "It's pretty obvious he likes you too, Ralphie."

Playing along, Ralphie fanned his face with one hand and wiped sweat from his forehead with the other. The whole group fell about each other, laughing hysterically.

Back at Wells Fargo Arena, John, Stephen, Drew and Corey were processing refugees as quickly as possible. Reuniting families was again made easier by the Clan A.I.s, who could correlate incoming data, then make that information available on PADDs and via sub-vocals. For almost three hours, people moved forward through lines to tables where Clan representatives sat, doing their very best to get everyone reunited, processed and sent off to various destination refugee housing facilities.

From the back of the line formed before Corey's and Drew's table, there was a commotion. A small child began crying and an older woman began swearing. Moving forward through the line was a very large man, a woman and a young girl. Corey got up to discover what the problem was. Following Corey were his personal security, Baakir and Chuck. Corey walked back through the line, but was stopped by the fat man, who demanded to be processed immediately.

The woman comforting the crying child hollered, "That fat sweaty putz knocked my son over and down."

"I'm an agent for the United States Secretary of Agriculture," the fat man grumbled.

The woman next to the fat man screamed obscenities at the other woman, then hollered at Corey, "My husband is Under-Secretary of Agriculture for Pork Futures! We've been waiting for hours, and will not be herded with the common people..."

"I demand to see your superior," the fat man interrupted, and then roughly took hold of Corey's shoulder.

Baakir grabbed the man's arm and forcibly removed it from Corey, growling, "Porkie, you're under arrest. This boy is a Clan Short leader. All these other people are patiently waiting in line, but you and your wife seem to think you're better than everyone else." Porkie struggled to get free of the gorilla. Glaring at the obnoxious man, Baakir yanked and dislocated the man's arm at the shoulder. The man screamed in pain. Baakir told Corey, "I'll be right back, Cor." Corey only nodded and Baakir disappeared with Porkie, his bitch of a wife and the girl that was with them. The nearby crowd erupted in applause, cheers, and laughter.

Corey giggled, then loudly laughed, "He's the Under-Secretary of Agriculture for Pork Futures, so I guess that makes him pulled pork now!" Others in the lines around him chuckled and laughed. He went back to check on the small boy that had been knocked down. Seeing that the boy was only scared, his mother thanked Corey. Corey had Alden deliver a chocolate ice cream cone, which he handed over to the boy, who abruptly stopped crying and concentrated on his treat. Corey returned to the table and sat beside his softly sniggering husband. "Porkie" was the butt of many jokes in nearby lines for quite a while.

Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike entered the CIC dining room with much of the Rimmer Clan, just as Reyes was preparing to take Chris, Patrick and Raphael to the basement store. Once he had explained about the two rescues he had done, Reyes introduced his dads, Prez and Keith to the six newbies. He then took the three that needed clothes to the store. Wanting time together, Ronnie and Garrett volunteered to help the newbies. They pulled Ralphie along to get to know Patrick better.

At the F.Y.S. building, Jennifer Hundser had finished another interview with an Ex-C.P.S. employee. Since her husband was still busy on the phone, she went to get Anna Seibert and Bill Seaver, so they could all have lunch together. Bill and Charles had finished their interview with Roy Combs, who would fill the position of Facilities Manager at Ewa Beach.

When the adults walked into the dining room at the CIC, around half past noon, none of the Core Rimmers except Keith, Prez, Mike and Derrick were there. The Queen and young Prince Kaimi were there. Soon after the parents ordered their mid-day meals and sat down to eat, they were very surprised when King Aalona walked in with Sean, Troy, Logan Busch, Colin Powell and six secret service agents. Troy and Sean left the V.I.P.'s at the kitchen and went directly toward the Command Center. They had to arrange for Uncle Colin's Inauguration and those that would be attending the occasion on base.

Prez stood to greet the King and Uncle Colin, but his robe slipped open again. Giggling and shaking his head, Keith pulled Prez back down to his padded chair, joking, "I'm really starting to wonder, baby. Are you that horny? Let me deal with the V.I.P.s."

Relenting, Prez nodded and teased, "King Aalona is in his thirties and Uncle Colin is sixty-something. Neither could keep up with you or me."

Landing a quick kiss on his husband's cheek, Keith whispered, "You got that right, sex machine." He then stood and went towards the kitchen, leaving Prez at the table with their sons. Keith stopped by the parents' tables to let them know that Colin Powell wanted to meet them.

Jen asked, "When did you get home with Preston?"

"A little before five this morning," Keith answered, and then hurried to the kitchen to Uncle Colin and King Aalona. Mike and Derrick quickly told their boys they were taking some time alone at their townhouse. Jonah was glad to hear it and promised he would watch over his brothers and Kaimi. Richie, Geoff and Lenny were also with Kaimi and seemed perfectly happy. King Aalona went to the table where his wife and son were sitting. When Prez saw Keith return to the dining room from the kitchen with Uncle Colin, he stood and properly closed his robe, gathered his sons, and then went to get his husband the heck out of there. Once finished introducing all the parents to Uncle Colin and Mister Rice, Keith went with Prez and their sons, intending to go their townhouse.

Kekoa was coming toward the dining room as Prez, Keith and their sons were walking out. Kekoa formally called, "Director O'Brian, may I have a few minutes?"

"Sure," Prez answered, but held up his index finger to signal a pause, then told Keith, "I'll be right there, babe. Take our kids home and I'll meet you."

Keith started to walk away with his sons. Prez returned to Kekoa, stepped off the walkway to the grass and prompted, "Your report, Colonel?"

Kekoa said, "Sir, I understand the reasons why you ordered us all to separate last night, but that put me in a very difficult position. I report to you and to General Casey. It is also my job to make certain you are protected at all times. If Chris, your enhanced human security, had been with you, then you wouldn't have been injured."

"I know where you're heading," Prez quickly interjected, and then asked, "Let me say a few things, please?"

"Yes Sir," Kekoa replied.

Prez grinned, "At ease, Kekoa." Kekoa went to parade rest. Prez said, "I screwed up. I knew Jimmy was here and could've contacted him, but simply thought more about the people trapped and didn't consider that at all. Keith already gave me hell over it. Thanks to rumors of my burns, I had to prove to the kids that I'm fine earlier today." Prez paused and sighed, "We're both in the same shitty situation. If any of your troops, you or anyone had got hurt last night, I'd be far more disturbed than I am now, that's for sure. I'm glad I was the worst injury and not anyone else."

Kekoa nodded, saying, "I can understand that, but at the same time, it's our job to be the ones who get hurt. I feel I should've been more forceful. Chris, Matthew and Gamba are all pretty annoyed with themselves too."

Prez smirked, "I'll take care of them. Keith and I were planning on spending some time off with our security teams any way. Now, let's play something out here. If each of the six Core Rimmers had kept their enhanced security with them at all times, then what?"

"Chris might've remembered Jimmy," Kekoa offered. "And Chris could've run faster and healed quicker than you."

"But I'd still feel like shit for allowing him to get hurt," Prez reminded. "And it would've taken longer to rescue about twenty people. Multiply that twenty by six for each Core Rimmer, and that's a hundred and twenty people that may or may not have been rescued."

Kekoa sighed, "Permission to speak freely, Sir?"

"You always have that with me, Kekoa."

"Given what we now know regarding the H.L.F., you and all of the Core Rimmers were in danger last night, not only from the fire, but also from enemy gun fire as well. For all we knew, there might have been H.L.F. snipers there. When I reported for duty, you told me that more dangerous rescue operations would rely entirely upon the UNIT detachment. We did not follow that protocol last night. We're all damned lucky only your butt and feet were burned. You and all the Core Rimmers might've been killed. Also, General Casey is eventually going to ream me a new asshole for allowing events to transpire as they did."

Prez groaned, then sighed, "Understood. I hadn't thought of that, but I will personally contact Adam. Let's treat this as a learning experience, from a new division director and a new division detachment commander. If Adam's gonna ream you a new one, then I should be there too, for the same chewing out." Finishing with a cute smile and tilt of his head, Prez waited for more to be said.

Kekoa sputtered, then laughed, "Yup, rimmers, I get it," and walked away as Prez started laughing too.

Prez bellowed, "You knew we called ourselves 'Rimmers'. That's why you accepted the assignment, isn't it?"

Never breaking his stride, Kekoa only briefly turned his head and sniggered, "Not goin' there, Prez."

Down in the basement store, Ronnie and Garrett maneuvered to get Ralphie separated, alone with Patrick. Garrett and Ronnie helped Chris and Rafe get clothing and everything else they needed at the store. Ralphie's brothers and new friends had helped get him over his initial awe, so he was ready to make the best impression possible.

With his modeling experience, Ralphie went right to work helping Patrick. Patrick picked up a package of three white BVD briefs. Since Patrick had pale, freckled skin, red hair and dark gray eyes, Ralphie picked up a package of four multi-colored FTL briefs. Showing them to Patrick, Ralphie slyly suggested, "These would look really good on you, I think."

"Umm..." Patrick blushed and stammered, "I've n-never worn... colored b-briefs b-before."

Rather than focus on Patrick, Ralphie instead pointed at the package, explaining, "Navy blue, sky blue and especially gray would look kewl though. When we get to boardies, I'll concentrate on those same colors, especially gray."

Patrick wondered, "Why is gray so kewl?"

"It would match your eyes," Ralphie softly said, and grinned.

Breaking into giggles and another blush, Patrick turned away for a moment or two, then concentrated on the safer white sports socks. Without facing Ralphie, he then giggled, "Get two packages like that."

Ralphie enthusiastically sang, "Sweet!" and grabbed another package, with black, blue and gray briefs. He dropped both packages into the cart. Ralphie gently called, "Patrick?"

With three packages of socks in his hands, Patrick hummed curiously, and then turned to quickly toss them in his cart.

Ralphie cautiously asked, "Am I embarrassing you? I don't mean to, ya know?"

Patrick shrugged, "I know. I can't help it. I never thought... like the way we met before... and that you... or that I..." Flustered, Patrick huffed, "I'm not saying or doing much right."

"Don't worry about it."

"I can't help that either, because I am worried, and scared, and happy, and really confused."

Gesturing to boys' pajamas, Ralphie seriously said, "So am I. I just wanna get to know you better, after what happened up in the dining room and all."

Patrick stammered, "How're you... ya know, dealing with it so easy?"

Ralphie smiled, "Does it seem this is easy? It's really not, but neither was getting left alone for a week by my manager. It wasn't easy learning I had one brother, that became two and then three. And the last brother, Robbie, brought along his parents too, so suddenly we're not really orphans any more, we've got parents by default too. I guess I always had to roll with the flow on photo shoots, so I do that pretty easily. I'm really trying to roll with the flow now too, with you."

"I don't mean to make it rough."

"You're not," Ralphie giggled, "I am!"

Patrick smiled, "How're you making it any more rough? Sorry, I don't see that."

Stepping closer to Patrick, so he could speak more softly, Ralphie sighed, "Every instinct tells me that I should drop to my knees and beg you to like me. I know that's not how it works, but that's really what I want to do."

Wrapping his hands behind his head and cradling his skull with his arms in the cutest way, Patrick giggled, "That's what I was trying to say before. You and all your brothers are way cute, but you, your eyes locked on mine and we... it must've seemed really goofy."

Ralphie shrugged and smiled, "So what if it seemed goofy." Getting down on his knees, Ralphie looked up, giggling, "Ple-e-ease say you like me?"

Dropping his arms, Patrick cracked up. Noticing Reyes, Chris, Rafe, Garrett and Ronnie looking at them, Patrick laughed, "Everybody's watchin', you nutcase! Stand up!"

"Not until you say you like me," Ralphie stubbornly cackled.

"Oh JEEZ!" Patrick laughed. Still giggling, he leaned over and helped Ralphie stand, playfully reminding, "I said you're cute. It sort o' follows that I like you." The group of boys many meters away began clapping and cheering.

Holding Patrick's arms, Ralphie smiled, "Kewl, 'cos I think you're totally awesome, cute and cuddly too."

Patrick sniggered, "Before we start cuddling, we really should know each other."

"Which is what I was trying to do," Ralphie smiled. "I used to model clothes, from underwear to suits and everything in between. I want my boyfriend lookin' his very best, all the time."

Now knowing why he had felt like he knew Ralphie from somewhere, Patrick softly joked, "So, even though I might be a mass murderer, you still want to be my boyfriend?"

Not believing it, Ralphie smirked, "So you broke a few hearts.

Just let me be your friend."

Nodding, Patrick assured, "We are. And we're falling way behind the other guys."

"Your wish is my command," Ralphie smiled, and took hold of the cart. Before going too far, Ralphie confirmed, "You don't wear pajamas?"

Patrick shrugged, "Only during the winters in D.C., when it was really cold." In seconds they were in the footwear department.

Ralphie nodded, "It don't get very cold here. I haven't seen it fall below sixty-five degrees in a week."

Softly talking about their pasts while selecting new sneakers and sandals, Patrick admitted that he had seen some modeling photos of Ralphie. Patrick's apartment home was within Washington, D.C.'s city limits. He had woke to the sounds of yelling outside. After trying to ignore it for a while, he got up and went to look out the kitchen and dining room windows to see what was going on. Then there was a loud explosion, crashing and rattling sounds. He ran back down the hall to his bedroom, but there wasn't much of a hallway or any rooms there any more. His parents' bedroom was also gone, seven stories down in a heap of rubble on the ground.

Seeing Patrick blinking fast, Ralphie consoled him. Patrick sighed, "My folks weren't the greatest, but they weren't the worst either. They worked all the time. Dad did road work and mom worked shifts at a restaurant. I rarely got to see them for more than an occasional breakfast or dinner. I guess I still don't know how to feel about them or anything that happened all day today."

Ralphie softly assured, "When you're ready, I'll listen. Somehow, I'll find a way to help get everything perfect." Believing his life could make a turn for the better, Patrick nodded, stepped back and wiped his eyes.

Soon, they were collecting board shorts, cargo shorts and Speedos. Patrick told Ralphie, "Don't get anything green, it makes me look like a Christmas tree."

"No greens, check," Ralphie confirmed. Rifling through shirt racks, Ralphie selected seven T-shirts and three button-down sport shirts, leaving Patrick with nothing to do except approve or refuse Ralphie's selections, and push the cart forward through the store.

At the jeans area, Patrick got to stand like a mannequin while Ralphie checked his waist and inseam measurements. Breaking into giggles, because Ralphie was once again on his knees before him and some of the other guys saw, Patrick told Ralphie, "If this is what having a boyfriend is like, I'm gonna be so spoiled."

"Tell ya what," Ralphie smiled, "you could pick out some clothes for me? I've got plenty of Speedos and briefs, so anything else is kewl." Following Patrick back to the shirts, Ralphie found himself telling Patrick about the base facilities, the Core Rimmers, his brothers, new parents and the new townhome they lived in.

Patrick held up a Heineken Beer T-shirt against Ralphie's shoulders. Since they were so close, Patrick left his hands resting on Ralphie's shoulders, nervously whispering, "I never had a boyfriend before."

"Me neither," Ralphie softly assured.

"I know I like other boys, but don't know much else. So I know for sure and don't chance breaking your heart, would you kiss me?"

Shocked silent, Ralphie slowly nodded. He carefully held

Patrick between his hips and ribs, leaned forward and gently kissed his new boyfriend. It wasn't a baby kiss nor was it a deep French kiss, but it was held long enough for both to know what soft lips felt and tasted like. Pulling back only a few inches, Ralphie asked, "Was that okay?"

Locking eyes with Ralphie's brown eyes, Patrick smiled, "More than okay. That was really nice."

"You kissin' me back made it great," Ralphie giggled.

Carrying a Clan Short poncho and pulling a suitcase, Reyes slowly approached, saying, "Chris and Rafe are checkin' out and loading up suitcases." Slinging the poncho onto Patrick's cart, Reyes prompted, "Try this on when you get a chance, Pat." He then slid the suitcase under the cart, telling Pat and Ralphie, "I'll finish up with the others, transport them out of here, then come back to help you two dudes."

Patrick smiled, "Thanks, Reyes."

"We won't be too much longer," Ralphie assured. Turning to Patrick, Ralphie scowled, "I don't like the idea of you being at the dorm, sharing a room with another guy."

Patrick nodded, then asked Reyes, "Please tell Rafe he's my roommate at the dorm?"

Reyes smiled, "I will, but he and Chris want to check out the nest tonight. That's where a lot of kids and Core Rimmers sleep. Rafe's been telling Chris that he needs to move past Jay and find a boyfriend too. Chris doesn't know how fast that might happen; he only wants to get used to the place and meet everyone."

Patrick nodded, "Okay, tonight I'll be crashing in the nest too then." Ralphie pasted on a dramatic frown. Patrick giggled, "Just for tonight. I get the feeling I'll be spending a lot of nights with you, or you'll be with me."

"I'll be back in a couple o' minutes," Reyes chuckled.

Stepping back from Ralphie, dropping the Heineken T-shirt into his cart, and then picking up the poncho, Patrick smiled, "We may even be close to done, ya never can tell." Realizing he would be completely alone with Patrick for a while, Ralphie widely smiled.

Walking away again, Reyes helplessly laughed.

* * * * *

Before beginning his lunch, Colin Powell smiled and glanced around the dining room. Returning his attention to the Hundserts, he remarked, "They're so much like any other kids, it's hard to believe their pasts."

Jen nodded and explained, "Some just arrived yesterday and are still generally afraid of adults. All are basically good kids. They've been taught to do the right things, just for the wrong reasons. If the pattern holds, they'll be much better by Sunday evening."

Covering his mouth with a napkin because he was eating, Colin asked, "How so quickly?"

Jim smiled, "Mostly by watching and emulating the other kids. A few have more serious issues and see our child psychologist. Like any other child, what they fear most is rejection from their peers or failure."

Lanna Seaver offered, "About twenty of the original eighty-seven were ready to start fresh Saturday night and Sunday. It started with our sons adopting Saturday night."

Mister Rice asked, "You allowed your boys to adopt?" and all the adults began chuckling.

Rob Gibbons answered, "We allowed nothing. As Clan Leadership, they're Starfleet ensigns and considered adults. As of Wednesday, they're all Starfleet Lieutenants. I must admit, I didn't expect it to be this easy. All our boys are doing great jobs parenting, even John and Stephen, the youngest of them."

Jim Hundser reminded, "Two hundred years ago, it was considered normal for teens to marry and have children. By the time our generation had arrived, a slew of requirements were added and simple economics had changed that perception."

Anna Seibert added, "Your generation, Mister Powell, had many more young parents than ours. With all the requirements for education, and two working parents, such as there are today, why is it that so many children are getting in trouble with the law? Or, like many of these kids, winding up cared for by perverts or sadists? There is something fundamentally wrong with our economics, and with our perceptions of what constitutes an adult."

"I agree," Colin said. "If there's one thing I could change, it would be economics. Two parents working eight- to twelve-hour days leaves no time for the most important task, raising our children the right way. The trouble is, many parents don't understand what constitutes the 'right way'."

Jen said, "It takes a village. Grandparents available, aunts and uncles, parents of friends; adults working together to make our children responsible and capable young people, without fear of rejection, without fear of failure. Look at what our boys and thousands of others did around the world in the last day. Many of the Clan and UNIT boys have their own fears and troubles, yet they performed admirably under the worst case scenarios."

"They're a part of something bigger than themselves," Bill Seaver offered. "In my own son's case, for instance, before he was made a Clan Leader, he was responsible for stage lighting while his partner ran the band's sound system. Drew was asked to help his brother as a sound engineer. He wanted to do a good job. Corey was asked to run the lights. Drew wanted Corey with him. It's the simple desire to do a good job for those you care about that makes the difference. That's what all the boys did last night, all around the world; they wanted to do a good job and make a difference."

Lanna Seaver grinned, "Mister Powell, what would you say if I told you two six-year-old boys were part of this division's Intel team."

Raising his eyebrows, Colin said, "Twenty minutes ago, I might've said, they're too young."

"And a week ago, I would've agreed," Lanna admitted. She then explained, "They are being trained, and to make me feel more comfortable, their duties are limited. Two six-year-old boys, recent orphans themselves, wanted to be part of the team. How could I deny them the opportunity to grow, learn and be part of the bigger team?"

Jen said, "Lanna worries about them, of course. We all worry about our sons. They've taken on a lot of responsibilities and performed wonderfully for a week. Sean and Troy are basically in charge today. Other members are off performing other duties to help with refugee relocation."

Jim added, "Our boys are still chipping in to help, but they are mindful of what we've said. If I had my druthers, they'd all be at the beach, surfing and having a good time with very few responsibilities. Given world events, however, that is not reasonable. Two cannot perform the jobs of twelve without burning out or getting frustrated."

Colin nodded, saying, "King Aalona and I already had a similar conversation. He is very impressed with Vulcan culture and logic. He feels your boys saved him and his family from a very unpleasant demise. Several State Governors are equally impressed and making alterations to their laws.

"Once my plane was airborne, we searched for a safe place to land and refuel. Diplomatic contact with Vulcan led us here. I am also impressed with the reception my entourage has received. I have had reason to thank the boys several times. And what do I get in return? Not cocky attitudes, but modest thanks. Even Judy Faris responded similarly.

"Whenever I am out of the country, I'm locked in a vicious circle; moving from a plane to a car to a room, to a car, to a meeting, to a car and back to a room. Yet here, I am considered safe enough to leave our spacious accommodations and join you for a meal." Colin finished his glass of iced tea then smiled, "Thank you. Our jobs are to serve. In the United States, that is taken for granted. In my travels, I have found it is not so in other countries."

Jim asked, "If I may, I can't help wondering, what is the status world-wide?"

Colin sighed, "We're in a bad way. Many governments have lost vast numbers of public servants. Queen Elizabeth is alive and well, however President Bush was not able to get out of Washington safely. The Capitol Building has been demolished. We have great challenges ahead of us, but we will persevere. As always, we will survive and become stronger for our sacrifices." Colin then nodded at Gordon Rice and both men stood, as did the other secret service agents nearby. They took their leave of the other adults, then carried their trays to the kitchen dishwasher.

Some rescued Rimmer kids that had finished their lunches were in the adjacent CIC rec room. After briefly checking the rec room, Colin Powell, Mister Rice and the other secret servicemen left the CIC and began a brief tour of the base. They followed another group of kids toward the pools, walked around the indoor rec center, between the soccer field and basketball courts, between the dorms and single family homes, then back towards the condominiums. Everywhere the group of men walked, they saw groups of kids acting like well behaved, friendly and "normal" kids.

Sitting with the King, Queen and young Prince were Jonah, Dillon, Randy, Geoff and Lenny. Kaimi had been having the time of his life at Ewa Beach and had made five new friends that morning. Kaimi was so taken with everything he had experienced that he begged his parents to let him come back and attend school with his friends. "We will see. This must be discussed with Director O'Brian," King Aalona replied.

Kaimi dramatically pouted, "I like it here. It's much nicer than my school."

King Aalona nodded, "I agree, but we must check with Director O'Brian. That is only considerate."

Geoff quickly said, "That's okay, Kai. Unca Prez will say yes. I know it."

Dillon looked up at Queen Adamina, saying, "We have nice new schools here. My Daddy and Poppa says we're gonna have tests on Monday. That way, kids that are as smart as each other get grouped together, no matter how old they are."

Queen Adamina confirmed, "You are Derrick's and Mike's boy?"

Dillon proudly nodded, smiled and hummed affirmatively. Geoff reminded, "Drew's mine and Lenny's Daddy, and Corey's our Pop."

Turning to Kaimi, Queen Adamina assured, "Your father and I will speak with Director O'Brian. We also need to ensure the quality of the school. If it meets our requirements and Director O'Brian approves, you may attend school here to be with your friends."

"Thank you, Momma," Kaimi cheered. He then checked with his friends, "Let's go out and play." In seconds, all five boys were hurrying out of the CIC.

Finished with their lunch, Sean and Troy went into the Command Center. In San Francisco, it was almost four in the afternoon and the battle for Starfleet Headquarters was won. Clan-wide, alert conditions were lowered. At the Rapid Response Base medical facility, a pair of girls had lost their parents, victims of burns suffered at the Hyatt Regency. Their names were Helen and Mary Donofrio. Helen was ten years old and her sister Mary was eight. Since he and Sean couldn't leave the base, Troy went back to the dining room to ask Mrs. Hundser if she could retrieve the latest pair of recent orphans.

Since there were a few more interviews to complete, Jen asked, "Anna, could you take care of this recovery?"

Excited at the opportunity, Anna brightly smiled, "Of course. I'll bring my girls along to help keep them calm." She tapped her comm-badge to call for her security team to meet her by the dining room doors, and then went to gather her three girls.

Back at the Wells Fargo Arena, it was dinner time. Additional tables had been teleported between lines of refugees containing food and drink for the masses, so they could eat and not lose their places in line. A man wearing a tattered pin-stripe suit approached the table where John and Stephen were processing a small family. Without excusing himself, the man in the suit asked John, "Where's your permit to distribute food?"

Blinking uncertainly at the man, John telepathically got a brief impression that this man had authority to ask the question. Beginning a full telepathic scan, John innocently asked, "What's your name and job?"

"My name is Javier Kukla, and I work for the Food and Drug Administration," the man replied.

"Why?" John prodded.

Mister Kukla sourly wondered, "What kind of question is that?"

Lucky moved around the table and stopped beside the man. John grinned, "You didn't need the job you had, other than to make bad decisions that lined your pockets. You've accepted large amounts of cash from Keka Pharmaceuticals, to prematurely release drugs to the American public, drugs that you knew were dangerous to kids. You've been telepathically scanned by a Vulcan-trained telepath, you greedy shit, and are under arrest." Lucky grabbed the man and evilly chuckled. Stephen lost it and howled laughing. From the next table over, Corey and Drew softly snickered. John laughed, "Watch how fast we get those drugs off the market and find the jack-off at Keka responsible. Ask some prisoners at the moon you'll be serving time at where their permits are, you jerk. Had you just kept quiet and accepted the food we're graciously providing, I wouldn't have had the chance or reason to scan you. Your guilt has been determined. See ya later!"

Lucky sniggered, "I'll be right back, Johnny-boy," and disappeared with Mr. Kukla.

Around one-thirty that afternoon, Dee, Gage, Richie and Sammy decided to leave their dad and pop to go to the pool. With little else to keep them busy, Prez and Keith chose to head to the Command Center to relieve Sean and Troy, so the latter two could take some time off during the afternoon after a busy morning. Since Prez was burned and really needed to rest, Sean and Troy agreed to take only a few hours off. They would then return to the Command Center, so Prez could take a break.

Around the same time, Derrick, Mike and their security teams went with King Aalona to his palace. The Palace lawn and trees were in bad shape. The main entry doors were destroyed. Inside though, only the immediate area by the main entry foyer was in need of repairs. Half a dozen of the King's uninjured staff rushed to the foyer to greet him. King Aalona's staff had called to have the doors replaced, but were uncertain about Him returning to his palace that night. The King told his staff that he would remain at Ewa Beach for a few days then went to gather suitcases, fill them with clothes and other personal affects.

On the way, Derrick said, "Majesty, if I may?" When King Aalona nodded, Derrick called Alden to check on condo availability. Derrick then told King Aalona, "We have two five-bedroom condos available in building 'B', beside where Mister Powell and his party are staying. In building 'C', where Mister Powell is staying, there are still six two-bedroom units available."

"The two bedroom units are very large, Sire. That's where Troy and his mom live. We could easily keep you safe," Mike added. "All you would need to choose is which condo you prefer, Majesty."

King Aalona sighed then forced a small smile. "Thank you, boys. I will consider the choices while visiting my wounded palace guards and other servants."

Derrick said, "Anything you need, Sire." He then called Alden to have the Royals' suitcases transported to Ewa Beach, and their group transported to the Rapid Response Base medical facility. All twenty of King Aalona's palace guards had been injured and two had died from their wounds.

The King's face saddened for a minute, but then became very stern. Stepping away from the receptionist's desk, King Aalona turned to Derrick and Mike. "This will never happen again," King Aalona firmly said. "Before I return to the palace, I would insist upon having my entire palace shielded." The King started walking to go visit his men.

Following the King, Derrick nodded and softly assured, "We'll make that happen for you, Sire."

Mike immediately tapped his comm-badge and called Prez. With Keith nearby in the Command Center, Prez said, "What's up, dude." Mike relayed the King's wishes to Prez, adding that two palace guards had been killed during the fire-fight. "No problem," Prez said, "I'll make the request from Starfleet now. Until it's installed, The Royal Family can stay with us."

Mike informed Prez, "That topic's already been discussed. Derrick and I will show the King several available condo units and let Him choose where He would like to be."

King Aalona asked, "Director O'Brian, how long before the shielding is operational?"

Prez replied, "I won't know until I make the request, Majesty. Given world events, it might take a while, but I will do everything in my power to have it expedited. I can almost guarantee you'll be back at your Palace by Monday evening. If I have to call Cory Short to make that happen, then I will. Is that acceptable?"

"Yes," King Aalona answered. "You and your team have been more than kind. Kaimi has grown to enjoy being on base with other children. Thank you, Director O'Brian."

Prez smiled and assured, "However we can help, Majesty, let Derrick or Mike know. What they may not be able to accomplish, I can. O'Brian out."

Facing the King, Derrick asked, "Is there anything else we can do, Majesty?"

The King nodded, "I would like to stop at a gift shop or florist to get live plants for my wounded men." King Aalona then spent the next hour going from room to room, visiting his wounded palace guards.

Returning to the medical facility's main entry, where they had arrived, they stopped at the gift shop. King Aalona arranged for flowering plants to be delivered to each of his palace guards and two additional much larger plants to be delivered to the families of the deceased. He then filled out cards to be attached to all the plants. The families of the deceased guards were informed that they would not have to worry about funeral arrangements, The King would take care of that for them. King Aalona then asked to be shown the available condominiums, so he could prepare the funerals as promised. Assuming the King would want accommodations similar to Mister

Powell, Derrick had Alden transport the group to condo building 'B', tenth floor.

King Aalona hummed for a few seconds, then said, "This is much too large for my small family and a temporary stay. Might I suggest a two-bedroom unit in the adjacent building, where Mister Powell already has security stationed? Although we know we are safe, my wife and son might feel more secure after last night."

Derrick nodded, "I thought you might rather less traffic. That building will be very busy by later tonight, Sire."

The King nodded, "That will not be a problem. We would not be there often and would have our main meals at the base dining room. The smaller unit will be acceptable."

As they started walking towards the doors and elevator, Mike checked with Alden to confirm which two-bedroom units in building 'C' were available.

Alden answered, "All units on the fourth floor to the sixth floor are empty, Mike."

In the elevator, Mike said, "Majesty, you have a choice of two-bedroom, two-bath units. With all the traffic expected in that building, might I suggest the fourth floor? If the elevator is occupied, you and your family could use the balcony stairs. Units are available as high as the sixth floor; I'm just considering convenience, especially for Prince Kaimi."

King Aalona smiled, "You boys are quite remarkable. Is there anything you do not think of?"

Mike giggled, "We have about a hundred kids under ten years old, Sire. We always think of the littlest kids first." Derrick and Mike showed The King the condos in building 'C'. Once the King had approved of the fourth floor condo, Derrick had Alden transport the Royals' suitcases there. The Queen was then transported from the pool area to the condo to begin unpacking and setting up their temporary residence. Alden filled the cupboards and refrigerator with food and drinks.

With an opportunity to be alone together, Richie, Carrol and Terrence sat at a poolside table. Sitting on Carrol's lap, Terrence asked Richie, "You really like it here, huh?"

Nodding, Richie smiled, "My brothers are pretty kewl, and so are Jason and Trinity."

Appearing very sad, Terrence asked, "Don't you wanna come back home with us?"

Richie sighed, "I do, but I want to be here with my brothers too. You're both important to me, but so are my brothers. What I'd really like most of all is if you two would want to stay here with me."

Carrol wondered, "Could that happen? I mean, we just started getting settled in Vegas. What about Brent, Lance and everyone there?"

Richie shrugged, "We're still part of the Clan. I'd have to believe that Brent and Lance would want us to be happy. We could still visit our other friends in Vegas too, almost anytime we want. So, I guess the question really is, do we want to stay together enough to make a small change from the Vegas Division to here?"

Carrol muttered, "We missed you last night, Richie. I feel like I'm being really selfish, wanting you with us there, but I know how much you need your brothers too." Tickling Terrence's ribs to get his little brother's attention, Carrol grinned, "What do you think?"

Terrence shrugged, "I like it there, but here's not so different. There's still lots o' kids to play with. I just don't know any of 'em."

Walking over to the group, Cesar sent to Richie, 'Let us take care of Terrence and show him around?'

'Thank you so much,' Richie quickly replied.

As if he didn't already know, Felipe introduced himself to the boy on Carrol's lap. "I'm Felipe. What's your name?"

Shyly smiling at the nude boy, Terrence introduced himself and then Carrol as being from the Las Vegas Desert Division.

Cesar introduced himself and quickly asked, "Ya wanna play over at our playground with us, Terrence? It's really kewl, with swings, slides, jungle-gyms and merry-go-rounds."

Checking with his two older brothers, Terrence asked, "Can I?"

Richie said, "Sure you can. While you're doing that, me and Carrol will be here by the pool. I'll introduce him around to some of the other guys." Nodding, Carrol helped Terrence down.

Wandering off between Cesar and Felipe, Terrence asked, "How can you play on the slide without clothes? Won't that hurt?"

Felipe giggled, "We like the swings and jungle-gym most."

"There's lots of other kids there already," Cesar smiled.

Alone with Carrol, Richie grinned, "Now it's your turn. I want you and Terrence here with me." He stood and untied his boardies, sniggering, "The natives our age are mostly naked."

Carrol giggled, "You've gone completely crazy in a day!"

"By tomorrow, you'll be just as crazy as the rest of us," Richie smiled, and tossed his boardies onto the chair he had been sitting on. With a nod of his head, Richie prompted, "Come on." Carrol stood but didn't take his shorts off. In moments, Carrol was in the pool with Richie and being introduced to other tweens, like Kale, Chiba, Greg, Brice, Kelome and Thanh.

Meanwhile, Reyes had finished with his first set of newbies. Once they were mingling around the pool and diving well, getting to know the other kids, he stripped off his T-shirt and shorts, and then climbed up to the three-meter diving platform. Before diving into the well, Reyes saw Chris Stokley stripping out of his shorts, chatting with three of the other teenage boys. Reyes hadn't hit the water when he heard the chirping of a comm-badge. Rising above the water again, he heard a bunch of teenagers calling "Reyes!"

"Yeah, I know," Reyes smiled, and then swam to the edge. Wondering who might be calling this time and why, he climbed out, went to put his shirt on and tapped his comm-badge, saying, "Reyes here."

Drew giggled, "Alden said you've finished with the first batch, bro. Sorry to interrupt your break, but we've got five more here at Des Moines, for you to bring home."

Reyes grinned, "Not a problem, Drew. Let me dry off, hit the boys' room in the pool house and I'll be there."

Across the comm-badge, Reyes heard Corey giggling. Drew laughed, "Hurry, five just became seven. Grandma Morrison gave us two more."

Reyes queried, "Grandma Morrison; as in the grandmother of Adam, Mark, Brian and Jeff?"

"The one and only," an adult woman's voice answered, "now get your skinny butt over here, so that I can make sure these young men have a suitable escort."

From the other side of the pool house, Ronnie loudly laughed, "Better hurry up, Reyes."

"Yeah, I'm hurryin', grandma," Reyes giggled, and then added, "See ya in a couple o' minutes. Reyes out."

Naked and laughing, Ronnie and Garrett jogged over while Reyes was pulling his boardies up. "She's timing you, Reyes," Garrett giggled.

Widely smiling, Ronnie nodded, "She gets her way and don't usually back down."

Garrett sniggered, "Yeah, Julio was the first to lay down the law with her, and survived."

Reyes grinned, "I really have to pee first." He then wondered, "How're the other newbies doing?"

Ronnie chuckled, "Ralphie's with Pat at the pool. The first thing Ralphie did was get himself and Pat in Speedos, the horn-dog. Ralphie swears he and Pat were good and didn't do anything; Pat changed in the upstairs bathroom, while Ralphie changed in his bedroom. Right now he's trying to talk Pat into a trip to the jacuzzi or sauna."

Rapidly nodding, Garrett smiled, "Rafe's with Fred, Chauncey, Brandon, Richie, Carrol, Bane, Thanh and some other guys at the pool."

"I guess I'll make this trip alone," Reyes smirked, and then headed directly into the pool house. Standing at a urinal, Reyes softly muttered, "I don't believe this. Now I know why dad and pop wanted to take that vacation at Archmania so badly." Finished relieving himself, he stuffed his pecker back in his shorts, then went to wash his hands. Standing at a sink, he had an idea and began evilly snickering before he finished drying his hands. Once that task was complete, Reyes giggled, "Alden, get me a PADD, load Pissed Off Chickens on it, and transport me to Drew at Wells Fargo Arena, not necessarily in that order."

"It took Prez five days to digress to Pissed Off Chickens," Alden giggled, "I guess that's why he's Head Rimmer," and transported Reyes to Des Moines.

Appearing at the Arena, behind Corey, Drew, Stephen and John, Reyes complained, "Twice today people have commented on my skinny brown ass. Is it really that skinny?"

Corey and Stephen lost it and howled laughing. John sniggered, "You've only been eating right for a week, bro."

Drew nodded and giggled, "If your butt is still skinny at the end of the month, one of us will let you know."

Through his laughter, Corey warned Drew, "You'd better not!" The seven boys seated behind Reyes also began giggling. The three older boys playfully passed remarks about their preferred butt shapes.

Holding out a PADD, Stephen giggled, "Reyes, Alden says this is yours. Pissed Off Chickens is pre-loaded."

Standing, John smirked, "Challenge Prez to a few games."

Taking the PADD from Stephen, Reyes grinned, "I intend to, that's why I requested the game."

Stepping forward, an older woman smiled, "I'm Grandma Morrison, Reyes. I love how you and Preston are letting everyone believe you're cracking up. My grandsons and the quadruplets really enjoy the asylum atmosphere at your Hawaii base."

Shaking hands with Grandma, Reyes giggled, "Oh, are we faking it? That's good to know."

Leading Reyes to the seated boys, John introduced them. "Reyes, this tall guy is fifteen-year-old Travis Mcauley, this is fourteen-year-old Scott Shetley, and this is thirteen-year-old Lance Kinchen."

Grandma interjected, "Scott and Lance are guitar players out of New York City. Both left with only their guitar cases. Knowing your leaders have a band, and will be teaching music, I knew that they belonged in Ewa Beach."

Gesturing to the younger look-alikes, John continued introducing, "The platinum blond twins are Tanner and Toby Stoeher. They're ten years old. It's easy to tell them apart when they talk; Tanner's the joker and Toby's like his bro's straight man. The two red heads are the McPhearson brothers; Albert is seven and Charles is five." John paused then wrapped an arm around Reyes and introduced him to the seven newbies. "Reyes is our newest team member, but he's actually older than any of our parents. Reyes is an android and the eldest son of two other Core Rimmers. He'll get you clothes and stuff, then show you around our base. By the time all that's done, it'll be dinner time. You guys can decide where you'd like to sleep tonight, in the dorm or in our nest."

Reyes said, "I can tell all you guys are a little freaked out by your expressions. Let's get you guys out of here and to your new home. You'll see, everything's going to be better than fine, it's gonna be very kewl." The boys all stood. Scott and Lance walked around the chairs they had been sitting in to pick up their guitar cases.

Little Charles McPhearson approached Reyes and felt his arm, then took his hand. He asked, "Is you really an an'roid?"

Reyes smiled, "Yup, I have a positronic brain."

Squinting suspiciously, Albert challenged, "You seem like any other real guy."

"Only my brain is a little like a computer; the rest of me is human," Reyes explained.

Taking Reyes' other hand, Toby looked up and smiled, "You're even warm."

Reyes grinned, "Real blood pumping through a real heart to real skin."

Tanner giggled, "Kewl!"

Travis, Scott and Lance gathered around Reyes. Travis asked, "Please tell us that people aren't goin' nuts, like they are in New York?"

Reyes sighed, "Let me tell you what I know happened first, okay?" Seeing seven nodding heads, Reyes explained, "Romulans masquerading as humans took advantage of us. They saw that people were angry about the California orphanages and the company that owned them. The Romulans tried to make a bad situation worse, by directly attacking major cities, or by inciting riots in other big cities, like New York. Then survival instinct took over for other people, which only added to the chaos. In Honolulu, we have some people protesting still, but compared to other big cities, mostly everything is fine. On our base at Ewa Beach, it's very much like every other day. We're all very safe there. We've been fed breakfast and lunch, we'll be fed dinner, and you'll all have warm places to sleep. You'll make new friends with some of the other two-hundred kids on our base. It'll take time for cities like New York to recover and rebuild, but your lives have already changed for the better. You're safe now."

Scott nodded and smiled, "What're we waiting for? Let's go."

"Don't worry, boys; I will be personally checking on your living conditions before the day is over," Grandma stated. "I expect you to take care of each other and help the boys in Hawaii to welcome the other youth that will be joining you. Understood?"

Seven boys chorused, "Yes, grandma."

Reyes tapped his comm-badge, calling, "Alden, please transport me and our seven newbies directly to the CIC basement store."

By three o' clock, the Pacific Rim Division bases at Hawaii, Maui and Kauai were filled. Each location notified their leaders of the status. When they finished at the bases, the teams were transported to Kaho'olawe to assist with refugees there. There seemed to be thousands waiting still for assistance. All three teams went right to work setting up additional staging areas and calling people over to be assigned residences. What many of them didn't see was the flurry of activity from Starfleet and the Army Corps of Engineers from many States working to get more condominiums, dormitories, homes and townhomes built and made available.

In the Command Center, Prez and Keith worked to get Hawaiian news, radio and television reporters to come to Ewa Beach at seven that evening for an announcement by King Aalona. All the reporters had to be identified and have appropriate identification to be allowed on base. Once they were done with that, they made all the gathered information available to UNIT security.

About five minutes after three, the Command Center received a call on an outside phone line. This was meant to be commonly used for public calls to Pacific Rim Division, expected to be emergency calls. With his butt sore and unable to comfortably sit, Prez had been standing, roaming around the room the last hour-and-a-half. Jimmy was closest and most available to answer the phone. "Family Clan Short, Pacific Rim Division Headquarters," Jimmy formally said, and then asked, "Please state the nature of your emergency?" Concerned that there might be a need for an extraction, on this of all days, Keith and Prez went over and stood by Jimmy, preparing to call Derrick, Mike, Sean, Troy, and even wake Kaleo and Tory, if need be. Jimmy prompted, "Ma'am, please calm down, take a few deep breaths, and try to tell me again what's wrong." After a pause, Jimmy nodded, "Yes, Ma'am. You're in luck, because Director O'Brian is standing right behind me. Please wait a moment." Pressing the 'hold' button on the phone, Jimmy turned around saying, "It's Ms. Laxmi Diaz. Isn't that your old music teacher, Prez?"

Prez nodded, "Yep. What's the problem?"

Jimmy explained, "Because of the parents of two students complaining about losing their places in the band, she was summarily fired today. She's hoping we can help her before she loses her house."

Keith smirked, "Bobby and Sheryl again; Mister and Miss Stuck-Up."

Prez asked Jimmy for the phone and gestured to be taken off hold. Prez said into the phone, "Hi Mrs. Diaz." He paused for a long while, scowling and then frowning while he listened to his teacher's more thorough explanation of what had happened. He then said, "Don't worry about a thing, okay? We have schools right here on base. Come on over tomorrow. We'll have you chat with our mom, at Federation Youth Services, and then get S.O.P. telepathic scans, and then talk with the Clan Short Education Adviser. We'll pay you more than you were getting paid and provide you with on-base housing. You, your husband and family can move here and then rent or sell your other house. This problem is resolved to your benefit and to ours, because we need teachers still."

After another brief pause, Prez chuckled, "It's easy. I told you yesterday and Monday, I'm in charge here. My mom is Director of F.Y.S. for the Pacific Rim. So unless you've been really good at hiding some very uncharacteristic personality flaws that I've missed, you'll be working here Monday. And we won't fire you because two stuck-up kids bitched to their parents, who just so happened to make sizable cash contributions to the school. As for your husband, we can either find him a job on-base, which is preferred, or make arrangements so he can continue his job off-base. I know we need help in our medical departments, so it would be advantageous for us to help him get his degree and license as quickly as possible." Prez paused again then chuckled, "Good, you've made my day too. I'll let me mom know that she can expect you tomorrow morning about eleven. Have a good night. Yes, it will be good to see you again too. Bye."

Prez passed the phone back to Jimmy then smirked, "Their loss is our gain. We've got a new music and math teacher waiting in the wings." Tapping his comm-badge, Prez called, "Mom, are you busy?"

"I do have a future employee in my office," Jennifer replied, and then asked, "What's wrong, Preston?"

"Nothing's wrong," Prez chuckled, "as a matter of fact it's pretty good news. I just wanted to let you know that our old music teacher, Ms. Diaz, will be coming in tomorrow morning about eleven for an interview. Her husband is also coming. He's an intern, finishing up his dental degree."

"I'll mark them in my schedule," Jennifer said.

Knowing his mom was busy and not alone, Prez suggested, "We'll talk more about it during dinner, mom."

"That's fine," Jennifer said, and then asked, "How're you feeling?"

"I'm good, mom, as long as I'm standing," Prez chuckled. Keith and several other boys in the room sniggered.

Jennifer ordered, "Get some rest, Preston."

"I will; in about fifteen minutes, Troy and Sean will relieve us, and then we'll go back to our townhouse."

Jennifer said, "Good. Mom out."

In a very poor Irish brogue, Jimmy teased, "I'll let me mom know?"

Shrugging indifferently, but smiling widely, Prez tapped his comm-badge again, calling, "Mike?"

Obviously by the pools from the sounds, Mike answered, "What's up, Prez?"

Prez explained the story behind Ms. Diaz's situation to Mike. When Prez finished, Mike evilly snickered, "Those Dull Lovers shall pay!"

"Take the gloves off, dude," Prez chortled.

"The Scoobies will take care of Bobby's and Sheryl's families by day's end," Mike promised.

"Not one Shiny is to be left in the house, bro," Prez smiled.

"If they have a brushed steel fridge, it and everything in it is ours," Mike chuckled.

"Kewl beans. Prez out."

Keith laughed, "Prez! Can you do that?"

Prez shrugged, "I just did. Good teachers shouldn't lose their job because two stuck-up brats whined and complained. They were sucky musicians in the first place; now we know they're selfish sucky people too."

"The codeine in those pills is affecting your accent and judgment," Keith giggled.

A group of four leprechauns popped into the Command Center. Celtic music loudly played and all four began doing a jig. All the boys in the room, including Keith, loudly laughed. Prez clapped his hands to keep time with the dancers and music. After about thirty-seconds, all the music stopped and the leprechauns bowed, then disappeared.

Prez groaned, "Aw, I was just starting to get into it too."

Since the sudden appearances and disappearances didn't faze

Prez in the least, Keith howled laughing.

Sean and Troy stepped into the room to the remaining laughter and grinned. Prez sniggered, "I am not stoned. I'm a little disturbed about the shit last night with the H.L.F., and all the stuff we've had to deal with ever since, all night and into today. Bobby and Sheryl are stuck-up brats, and their parents are just as bad, causing a really good teacher to lose her job. We've all lost some of our innocence because of today's crap." Prez paused, then imitated Mike, laughing, "The Shiny Haters know not the shine they have within, and will therefore lose all their hoarded shiny belongings, starting with these two families."

Parking his butt in a chair and covering his face, Keith giggled, "Thank goodness Lieutenant Vorik isn't here to witness this."

"It's perfectly logical," Prez grinned at his hubby. "I can't prosecute them for being inconsiderate assholes, but karma levels everything out."

Keith hysterically wheezed, "Yeah, karma, right!"

Prez and Keith turned over the Command Center to Sean and Troy. Outside by the pools, Mike called the Scoobies and shared that Shiny Leader Prez had given them an assignment. Mike's only request was that the Scoobies stay together and keep one another safe. Proud of their assignment from the division director, the ferrets immediately went to work, learning where the Dull Loving families lived and planning their infiltration from the safety of their Shiny Vault.

Five-year-old Dulce Kentesius, one of the Latin King kids rescued from Los Angeles, was over by the playground with many of the other younger kids. She sat in the grass by herself, but would occasionally giggle and speak. Not very far away, climbing one of the jungle-gyms, Prince Kiami, Dillon, Geoff and Lenny noticed the new girl. Wondering why she was alone and talking to herself, the four boys went over and sat in the grass with her. As the eldest in their group, Lenny introduced the other boys and asked the girl her name.

Dillon gently asked, "Are you feeling lonely, Dulce? Do you miss your mommy and daddy?"

Shaking her head, Dulce answered, "Daddy died a long time ago, when I was a baby. Mommy was arrested. I was living with my aunt and cousins, Antonia and Barbara Nepos." She pointed to Antonia, who appeared only a little older than Dulce. The two girls waved to each other. Antonia went right back to playing with the other kids on the merry-go-round.

The four boys were confused and glanced at each other. Since he didn't see any of the older boys knew what was going on, Geoff blurted out, "Who were you talking to?"

Looking down, Dulce shyly admitted, "The Hawaiian boy. He says he was a prince."

"I'm a Prince too," Kaimi quickly said. "My daddy is the King of the Republic Of Hawaii." He then wondered, "In what country is your friend a Prince?"

Dulce frowned, "He ran away. You boys scared him, I guess."

The boys shrugged. Lenny smiled, "Let us know if he comes back. We'd like to meet your friend."

"Okay," Dulce giggled, and waved as the four boys got up and said goodbye. They started back toward the jungle-gyms.

Geoff paused and turned around. He shyly asked, "Umm... if you want, you can come play with us?"

Dulce checked with her new Teddy bear, named Aster. The Teddy offered its hand and smiled, "Let's go play." In moments, Dulce and Geoff were climbing the jungle-gym.

At three-thirty the alarm clock in Kaleo's and Tory's dorm room went off with music from Hawaiian radio station 92.7 KHWI. The Eagles hit 'Get Over It' was playing. The waking boys especially liked the line, 'I'd like to find your inner child and kick its little ass,' and started giggling into their kiss. Proud of the great work done by Clan Short all night, they made love. Kaleo entered Tory and kept going until they were close to climaxing. Kaleo then switched positions, rolled a condom onto Tory's cock and went for a ride. Since they were already close, they didn't last more than two minutes. Kaleo shot a whopper onto Tory's chest and belly. Seeing that, Tory gave up the battle and filled his rubber. After that pleasant start to their day, they cuddled for a few minutes, chatting about the changes in their lives over the week and waiting for their erections to deflate before taking a shower. The two Core Rimmers got status updates from Alden while under the hot showers. As soon as they were finished, dried off and dressed, Kaleo and Tory decided they would eventually take a quick trip to Kaho'olawe, to check on refugee relocation and take a look around.

Stepping out of their dorm, Kaleo and Tory first went to the CIC for some food, since they hadn't had breakfast or lunch. Miguel fixed the boys breakfast sandwiches and vitamin fortified milkshakes. They hadn't sat down with their trays when Marvin Perkins led a group of young boys from the Anaheim and San Diego orphanages into the dining room. With the little guys were their new Teddy bears. All the kids were a little hungry and wanted a snack, but when they saw the two Core Rimmers were awake, they stopped briefly to let them know that a bunch of teenagers were helping with Battle of Earth people, and that Prez and Keith had been around base since before lunch. "Prez even showed everyone his burned butt," some of the boys giggled. Kaleo and Tory already knew what the little guys were telling them, but let them ramble on simply because they were showing signs of adjusting to their new lives.

Once the mini-news team seemed to run out of steam, Kaleo prompted the kids to get some food and return to the table, so they could all eat together. The boys hurried to the kitchen. Kaleo grinned, "We'd better be prepared."

With his bacon, egg and cheese sandwich already in hand, Tory paused, wondering, "Prepared for what?"

"Adopting," Kaleo sniggered.

Tory whimpered, then suggested, "Let's wait for the question to be asked, huh?" Kaleo nodded, then bit into his sandwich. Around the food he was chewing, Tory asked, "Do you think we can be parents?"

Kaleo shrugged, "I'd like to try, which means I sure won't act like the assholes at the orphanage. Let's watch how our Core Rimmer brothers and their parents deal with their kids. Maybe ask some questions, before any kids ask us if we would be parents." Seeing Marvin and the first set of boys returning, they clammed up and ate.

Behind Marvin was Leonard Santana. Behind Leonard was Mark Fikes, carrying a tray with a lunch meat sandwich and a small drink. The latter two boys were walking slowly and carefully, but they somehow managed to fumble, causing both trays to fall. Marvin quickly put his tray down on the nearest table. Kaleo and Tory got up to help the boys. By the time they reached the kids, all three were in tears and the others coming out of the kitchen seemed ready to cry too. Kaleo and Tory helped all the boys get their trays onto the same table where Marvin had placed his tray, then set about relieving the crying and very upset boys. On his knees to be at eye level with the kids, Kaleo assured, "The trays get heavy and accidents happen."

"This ain't like California, guys," Tory added. "When accidents happen, you won't be punished or yelled at."

"Or told that's all the food there is," Kaleo explained. "What we do here is just help clean up." He showed the boys what was meant by picking up the plastic trays. Tory carefully picked up the plates that had fallen. Remarkably, one broke clean in half while the other didn't even have a chip.

Working in the kitchen that afternoon was fourteen-year-old ex-prostitute Christian Beresford. He rolled a bucket and mop into the dining room, grinning, "Well, we got past a few days without saying grace. Now we get to say it twice." While Kaleo and Tory helplessly sniggered, Christian went to work cleaning up. Not understanding the joke, but seeing the two leaders smiling, the boys calmed down to sniffles. Kaleo was about to lead them back to the kitchen for replacements when Miguel rolled a cart into the room with two replacement sandwiches for the boys.

"Look at this!" Kaleo cheered. "No big deal, guys. Even Miguel did his part and got you fresh food made up."

Mark and Leonard humbly said, "Thank you" to Miguel.

Miguel carefully picked up pieces of the two broken glasses, then took the remains to the kitchen. Tory went to the kitchen to dump one plate into the trash and put the other on the dishwasher shelf. He returned to the dining room, then went to get his and Kaleo's trays to bring them to the table where many of the boys were already sitting.

Miguel made eye contact with Kaleo, then offered, "Maybe we should make these first rows of tables, close to the kitchen, just for the younger kids?"

Kaleo nodded, "That sounds like a great idea. Have some signs made up for that, please." Kaleo then called Alden to have a group of twenty tables near the kitchen replaced with child-sized tables. Returning his attention to Mark and Leonard, Kaleo warmly smiled, "It's all over now. Nobody yelled or screamed or punished you guys at all, right?" All the kids nodded and some vocally confirmed that everything was kewl.

Putting Kaleo's tray down at the table, Tory started praying, "For what we are about to receive..."

"may the Lord make us truly grateful," Christian chorused with Tory.

"And just a little less graceful," Miguel softly joked. He then turned and headed back to the kitchen.

All the boys now got the joke and giggled, "Amen." Mark and Leonard were blushing bright pink and still giggling when Kaleo and Tory sat with the boys at the table.

Tory asked what the boys had been doing so far. He got the usual answers, that they had spent much of the days at the pool or at the playground. Some had been inside the rec center, but they were only exploring. All the boys liked sleeping in the Hunders' basement nest the prior night. They went there with all the other little kids, but didn't get to play any of the video games because they were very tired. Kaleo reminded them of the three-hour time zone difference. To them, nine-thirty at night felt more like half-past midnight. Pointing across the dining room, Tory reminded them that they could go to the rec room anytime they wanted to play video games.

Once all the boys had finished their mid-afternoon snack, Kaleo told them that he and Tory needed to check out what was going on in the Command Center. Heading to the kitchen dishwasher, Kaleo and Tory helped the little guys with trays and glasses, then let them look inside the Command Center. Not seeing the Vulcan Lieutenant in the room, Kaleo asked Sean where Vorik was. "We sent him off to get some sleep late this morning," Sean answered. When the group of small boys had seen enough of the Command Center, they thanked Kaleo, then took off to return to the pool. Kaleo and Tory went inside and got briefed about what had happened since they went to bed that morning.

All four Core Rimmers were curious about what was going on at Kaho'olawe. Kaleo and Tory called for their security, then transported to the island's new airport hangar, where refugees were being processed by Rimmer volunteers. After taking a bus trip with Carl Seibert, Kaleo and Tory were simply amazed with all the development that had been done and was still going on. Down the center of Broadway, a monorail track had been built. The monorail train was still being prepared, but was expected to be online before sunset. The island now had a population of two-hundred thousand, many of which were seen from the bus windows walking along the sidewalks beside streets. When Kaleo and Tory transported back to the Command Center, Sean and Troy took a trip to Kaho'olawe.

Brandon Phillips spent most of the afternoon at the pools with Colin, Alien, Mini and the double-twins from Des Moines, and slightly less time with the quadruple Rs, mostly because Ralphie was occupied with Pat, and Richie was spending time with Carrol and Terrence. Colin seriously asked Brandon, "Would you consider moving to Des Moines?" and then quickly added, "We'll be spending lots of time visiting here, and Rimmers will eventually visit us there too. You all have comm-badges, so you can visit your cousins anytime you want."

Alien added, "The Rimmers now have three androids and we don't have any at Des Moines. You'd be an important addition to our team, Brandon."

Brandon shrugged, "I don't see that as a problem at all, since we can visit each other easily. Let me just talk to Chauncey and Fred about it." In the pool playing water polo with many other tweens, Fred and Chauncey were closest to Robbie and Ronnie.

When Brandon called for Fred and Chauncey, Fred held up his hands in a 'T' shape and hollered, "Time out!"

Chauncey and Fred waded to the side of the pool and climbed out. Brandon explained the situation to his cousins, carefully watching Chauncey for any signs that he might not be ready for a separation. Once he heard the entire explanation, Chauncey was the first to tell Brandon, "That's totally kewl, cousin. It'll be only a little different than home. We lived in the same house, but you sometimes went places with your folks and we did stuff with ours too."

Fred checked with Chauncey, "Are you really sure? It won't be like home, where we were together part of every day. We might not always get to see Brandon every day. It'll be very different from home."

"What isn't different?" Chauncey giggled, and purposefully glanced around at the exposed dicks in their group. He then reminded, "Skinny dippin' is something we'd do at home maybe once or twice every summer. Here, it's normal. When we miss each other and want to see each other, even if it's only for an hour or two, we can do it easily enough. Another bonus is Neil visiting us here or Brandon in Des Moines; it gives him two places to go now and then."

Pleased beyond words, Brandon hurried to give Chauncey and then Fred hugs, whispering in their ears, "I really love you." He then told Alien, Colin, Mini and his cousins, "We'll have dinner together here and then leave afterward." Once that was agreed to, Brandon, Colin, Alien and Mini were invited to join them playing water polo for a while.

All six jumped in the pool and Fred yelled, "Time in!" The teams were uneven and had to be redistributed, but soon the game was in motion.

Resting his head on Keith's lap, Prez had fallen asleep in the living room of their townhouse. Lowering the television volume, Keith closed his eyes and quickly fell asleep. When they woke after an hour nap, Keith led his husband upstairs to the master bathroom for a shower. Some of the blisters on Prez's tush had already popped, Keith noticed, and checked the robe for bloody drainage. Keith suggested a quick trip to see Doc Andrews, which Prez reluctantly agreed to. Stepping out of the townhouse before five that afternoon, they went to the F.Y.S. building.

Surprisingly, there was a room with six bio-beds. Doc Andrews had Prez lay on a bio-bed for another quick scan. While the bed did its job, Doc Andrews checked Prez's robe. Laying there impatiently, Prez said, "Hey Doc, that robe really isn't working out. It's one thing to hang out naked at the pools, but now I'm the only Clan Division Director that can say he's flashed the future President of the United States, our King, and Uncle Colin's head of security too." Keith cracked up.

Softly sniggering, Doc Andrews returned to the bio-bed, offering, "How about a terrycloth shower wrap with a Velcro fastener instead? Then you're only showing off your leg."

"Works for me," Prez cheered.

Checking the readings on the bed, Doc Andrews nodded, "Remember to keep it on, Preston. I need to check for drainage. You're going to feel some tingling on your backside and feet while the bed keeps our Flashing Director free of infections." For another minute, the bed did its job while Keith sat in a nearby chair chuckling. When the bio-bed was finished, Doc Andrews proclaimed, "All set," and offered a hand to help Prez sit, reminding, "No pools until tomorrow night, after I check you over again. Assuming you're doing just as well, you'll be able to put on shorts and underwear again right after, although I'd doubt they'll feel very comfortable."

Sitting on the edge of the bio-bed, Prez queried, "When then?"

"Probably Sunday morning, you'll be clothed, at least when you're not in the pool," Doc Andrews replied, and then had Alden get a terrycloth shower wrap and T-shirt for Prez.

Scowling and curling his lips, Prez told Keith, "We never go more than two days without rehearsing. Our kids are gonna want our band to play tomorrow." Keith nodded, smiled and gestured an open palm to Doc Andrews.

Handing Prez the wrap and T-shirt, Doc Andrews shrugged, "If you're comfortable and awake to do so, that's fine. Rest when your body says it's time, Preston. It may seem a waste to you, but your body is recovering and sending you the signals needed to get well faster."

Keith offered, "Let's set up another movie for the kids tonight, baby. I'll have Kaleo check around and see if the older kids want to watch another movie afterward." Nodding, Prez pushed off the bio-bed, landed on his feet and put the wrap on. Holding out the new white T-shirt, Prez read the words printed in large letters across the back. Smirking, he showed it to Keith.

I flashed the U.S. President and The King of the R.O.H. at the same time!

Again, Keith cracked up.

"Alden!" Prez laughed.

Over the ceiling mounted speakers, Alden giggled, "You've got bragging rights no other Clan Director can match, Prez."

Tossing the shirt on the bio-bed, Prez nodded and giggled, "Let's not advertise it, especially to the King or Uncle Colin. Put that on the bed in my townhouse and get me another T-shirt. I promise to wear that one after the King and Uncle Colin have left."

"Okay," Alden giggled. The new white T-shirt vanished. In its place, a white Beatles Abbey Road T-shirt appeared.

"Excellent," Prez chirped, and pulled the Abbey Road T-shirt over his head.

Doc Howard stepped into the open doorway and smiled, "Fashionable yet not too gaudy."

Finger combing his hair, Prez giggled, "At least I'm not showing off my goods to every visiting dignitary on the planet."

Glancing at the two doctors, Keith asked, "Will you be coming to dinner?"

"As soon as I finish off a report on our Flashing Head Rimmer," Doc Andrews grinned.

Taking Prez's hand, Keith chuckled, "We'll see you at the dining room." They left the treatment room and the F.Y.S. building then started for the CIC. Keith grumbled, "Dammit, I forgot your pills, Prez."

Prez nodded, "Right after dinner, T'hy'la." They walked into the dining room. All the Rimmer sons and their parents' kids, and the majority of the other rescued kids were already inside. The various refugee helpers who had volunteered were back home too. John, Stephen, Derrick, Mike, Kaleo, Tory, Troy and Sean approached. Prez asked, "How're things goin', dudes?"

Kaleo answered, "We're good locally, Prez. We might have some of those kids you were lookin' for, to act as dorm leaders. Today we got help with refugee relocation from Relud and Inoyra Glith, Horacio Sulin, Sonia Baugh, Arnold Smithson, Jerrold Hebda, Roy Angulo, Gerald Mayers, Adrienne Norensis, Bianca Heres, Liki Keoloha, Keanu Hekekia, Corbin Sancho, Dominic Crassus, Stephen Wickes, Aaron Farris, Nell Deckert and Mollie Mcelhannon. All of them did fantastic jobs. They kept working through lunch. Afterward, the twelve that were at our other bases went and helped at Kaho'olawe, then were relieved by Oceanic Division. Tory and I went to Kaho'olawe for a little while today, just to have a look around. That little barren island is gorgeous and populated now. Elsewhere around the world, things are pretty well fucked. Common landmarks all over are either damaged or destroyed."

Tory added, "Population is two hundred thousand and growing. Some people are already doing stuff, working in their regular jobs, just at a new place. The food court at Seibert Mall was hoppin' with people."

Sean nodded, "What's really awesome is the diversity; Americans, British, Chinese, Japanese, Mexicans and Russians, all coexisting and getting along."

Derrick nodded, "Our population is up by seventeen too, Prez. Reyes picked up three from Colorado, two of which will stay here, and one will go to Des Moines. My mom picked up two girls. The other thirteen were all refugees from Wells Fargo Arena in Des Moines. Reyes picked ten up in two trips. Drew and Corey came back with the last three brothers. We're up to two hundred forty-nine."

Mike offered, "We'll take you around to meet them. Two play guitar, Scott Shetley and Lance Kinchen. Lance came out of New York City with his Gold Top Les Paul. Scott met Lance on the way to The Meadowlands, with his Strat, and they've been together ever since. I'd expect some more kids as the night progresses."

"Reyes is ready for more rescues," Derrick slyly grinned. "He's got his own PADD running Pissed Off Chickens."

Prez cheered, "Competition! Sweetness!"

Troy smiled, "Our ex-Latin King kids were worried about loved ones in and near Los Angeles. We let them use phones and call whomever they wanted for as long as they wanted. Sean, Kaleo, Tory and I went to Hawaii, Maui and Kauai, just to quickly check things out for ourselves. We were only gone for fifteen minutes, but reports from Starfleet security were positive. This war was a definite pain in the ass, pardon the pun, Prez; but if this is the result, people treating each other with consideration and respect, it's long overdue."

Prez giggled, "From now on, when folks talk about a pain in the ass around here, everybody's gonna be looking at me."

"Face it, bro," John cackled, "your injury is symbolic of the whole war. And we know it was the Romulans that stirred everything up, too." John read Prez's next thought and silently replied, 'The H.L.F. is screwed now. We have entire families under arrest. Everyone that can be re-educated will be. All the rest are being held accountable for two deaths at the King's Palace, and the deaths at the Hyatt Regency. I'd give you numbers of H.L.F., but we're not done gathering them all. Roughly about two-thousand under arrest, so far, from around the world.'

Prez asked, "What's for dinner?"

Stephen giggled, "Italian buffet, featuring..." Stephen spun around, signaling the mass of kids.

Enthusiastically, over two hundred voices shouted, "Pizza!"

Chapter 11

C.S.P.R.D. CIC Dining Room

Friday, November 5, 2004 5:35 PM HTZ

Adults and parents arrived at the dining room while the Core Rimmers were mingling, stopping at tables to ensure their Clan was doing well. Time was specifically spent with the eighteen refugee center helpers. Some of the kids felt their leaders needed hugs and embraced them. The parents of the Core Rimmers went to talk to their boys. On the way, the Rimmer adults got surprising hugs from many kids. The hugs were left-over from the morning's compassionate gathering. For the kids, the best part was the adults knew their names to thank them.

Judy Faris went to where AJ and Jerry were sitting, and Troy, Sean, Kaleo and Tory were standing. Jim and Jen Hundser went to Prez and Keith. Kathleen Marr spoke to John and Stephen. Bill and Lanna Seaver chatted with Drew and Corey. Anna and Carl Seibert, and Laura and Rob Gibbons spent their time visiting tables where the refugee center helpers were sitting. Kaleo and Tory went to share a few whispered words with Keith and Prez. The latter two then went to the table where AJ and Jerry were sitting. While all this was going on, many of the kids were making their way through the kitchen, and then to tables with their dinner, or second helpings of pizza.

Having spent the last hour unpacking and setting up their temporary residence at the third condo, King Aalona and Queen Adamina entered the dining room. Eating pizza, Prince Kaimi was already sitting at a table with Bruce, Richie, Dillon, Geoff, Lenny, Kokaku and Dewi. The Royal couple mingled among the parents. The parents gathered their sons, and the other Core Rimmers together for a discussion with the Royal Couple. They softly spoke for about ten minutes, then Prez asked John, "Levitate me about a meter, please, bro?"

Nodding, John did the honors and teased, "Any higher and some of the little kids will be able to see what's underneath that shower wrap."

Stephen helplessly giggled, "Italian or Irish sausage?"

'My German sausage is for you, baby,' John smirked.

Rising up off the floor, Prez smirked at his youngest brother and brother-in-law. He then had Alden connect him to the PA. "I'd like to make some announcements," Prez began. "First of all, for those that aren't sure or don't know at all, Reyes Taraschke was made a Core Rimmer last night." Prez waited for some clapping and remarks to dwindle, and then explained, "Reyes' primary job will be Toy Rimmer, with Drew and Corey, but he's a backup for his dad and pop too, as Analyst Rimmer and Clan historian.

"Next, I'd like to thank all of our helpers today," Prez continued. "Eighteen of you guys stepped up to the plate to help with refugees, and according to Aunt Lanna, a bunch of teens and tweens split the day to watch our little tikes at the playground. Reyes has said that the quadruplets and their friends from Des Moines and Las Vegas were very helpful with a rescue in Colorado today." Watching the quadruplet brothers, Prez chuckled, "You're not here a full day yet and already making waves." Getting nudges and pats on the back from their friends, the boys blushed and giggled. Prez playfully sang, "We're watching you."

After a momentary pause, Prez sighed, "When you think about it, this place could've been out of control, but you guys took care of one another, and everybody did more than their share to keep things running smoothly. I didn't do that, you guys did, so give each other a round of applause." Prez started clapping as did the other twelve Core Rimmers and all their parents, and the King and Queen.

When the applause faded, Prez smiled, "Right now, we have some changes to announce. Relud and Inoyra Glith have elected to join John's Intel team." More applause traveled around. Prez then said, "Nell Deckert, Mollie McElhannon, Horacio Sulin and Sonia Baugh would like to become dorm one leaders. When you guys in dorm one need help, Nell, Mollie, Horacio and Sonia are your contacts. Over at dorm two, Corbin Sancho, Dominic Crassus, Adrienne Norensis and Bianca Heres have agreed to become dorm leaders. For the time being, the twenty boys at dorm three can also contact those eight leaders for help, until we find four more who would like the job at dorm three. Those twenty at dorm three have only been here a day, but if two are interested, just let any Core Rimmer know.

"Thanks to some glowing recommendations from team mates and from two adults, we have two new Core Rimmers; Ensign Jerry Hebda and Ensign AJ Smithson are now Mouth Rimmers, reporting to Kaleo," Prez shared. More applause and congratulations were passed. "As I understand it, since yesterday's meeting in the auditorium, Jerry and AJ were only considering becoming dorm leaders. However, while helping with refugees today, each proved that he can make himself clearly and loudly understood." Chuckling, giggling and laughter erupted in the dining room. Widely smiling, Jerry and AJ turned scarlet red. Locking eyes with Jerry, Prez teased, "Now I know what I look like when I blush."

Nodding, Jerry loudly giggled, "But we are not related."

Prez nodded and sniggered, "Not so far as we know, any how. We'll let our doctors do a quick DNA scan to determine if we're distant cousins or something." Prez grinned, "The last announcement is that our division's web site will be up by morning. If your laptop is already active in your room, your browser home page will be changed to this division's home page. The Mouth and Toy Rimmers will get these last announcements added tonight. Before I turn over to Drew and Corey, I'd like to remind everyone that school starts Monday morning. Our placement tests will be in two sessions, from nine in the morning until eleven, and from one in the afternoon until three. Sunday night, all the Core Rimmers and the dorm leadership will be making sure that everyone gets a good night's rest."

John lowered Prez to the floor, and then levitated Drew and Corey. The four televisions in the room changed to the division's web site home page. Everybody saw the moving ring of fire graphic surrounding the Clan Short Crest. Pointing at the nearest TV's, Drew began, "Alden's helping us out with this quick introduction. That's our home page." Still eating, many of the kids watched the monitors as Drew explained, "By midnight, all the Clan Divisions around the world will be able to access our site. No one else, anywhere on the planet, can access this site. It's for internal Clan use only because we have your photos up on each of your personal pages. The idea was for you guys to share interests, start personal blogs, and get to know other Clan kids that share your interests. By clicking anywhere on the graphic, you'll be presented with a few menu options; Announcements, Blogs, Command Team, Education, FYS, Maps, Other Divisions, Our Clan, Platinum Habits, Recreation and Site Suggestions."

Corey took over, saying, "Alden, let's start with the announcements menu." The screen pointer moved to 'Announcements', the letters flamed up, and then presented the menu beneath. Many kids giggled at the flaming graphic. Corey giggled, "Yeah, the Clan started with two gays dudes, so I ran with it."

"I can see you guys aren't worried about being formal," Thanh sniggered.

Corey smiled, "Course not. Announcements are from the command team, so we have Head Rimmers, which is stuff from Prez and Keith; the historians are under Analyst Rimmers, mostly to introduce newbies; communications are from the Mouth Rimmers, so we'll all be looking there to read about stuff that they have to tell us. Right at the top of the Mouth Rimmers section is a link to a listing of available odd jobs and a place where you can sign up for those odd jobs. Since we're on the subject, just to make sure the newbies are aware, you'll be getting ID and debit cards in a few days. Your debit cards hold your weekly allowance and all you've earned from doing odd jobs around the base. Specifics about who can sign up for what jobs are listed on the odd jobs sign up page."

"Soul Rimmers are the Intel department," Drew said, "so anything security related will be in this section. Sean and Troy are Morale Rimmers, so any activities, clubs, or events they want to announce will be there; then we have all the tech stuff from the Toy Rimmers, me, Corey and Reyes. There are places where you guys can send us notes in each of those sections. Please use them when you have a question, comment or suggestion directly related to command, or history, or communications, or Intel, or Morale or geeky stuff. Right off the bat, Prez has arranged for all of us to get comm-badges. When they arrive, Sunday or Monday, we'll get them distributed.

"Also, in the Intel section there's a listing of blocked sites," Corey added. "Many of those sites are pornographic. We know most of you aren't too interested in that stuff, but we do allow a large selection of sites that Mr. T has reviewed and considered educational.

If there's something you'd like to visit, but can't because it's blocked, the best place to make the suggestion that it be reviewed is under Soul Rimmer's Intel section. If it passes John's team, then we'll talk about it and check it out. The last step is when Prez says, 'okay, pass it up to headquarters in Orlando with our comments'. Sometimes, you mistype stuff and go to bad sites. That's no biggie; you'll simply see a screen telling you that the site was blocked and why. However, if you constantly try to access blocked sites, one of us Core Rimmers will be having a chat with you, especially if you haven't sent us a suggestion to modify the blocked sites list." Glancing around, Corey paused then queried, "Kewl?"

Seeing only nodding heads, Drew took over again and explained, "The Blogs section is sorted by individuals and is completely searchable. If you like American football, and want to get to know others that are too, search for football. Results will be broken up by division, and then by the person's last name. Whatever the topic, if the person has added that to their list of activities, hobbies or interests, you'll find them, so you can e-mail them or participate in their blog, and they can participate in your Blog too. Each of you can add stuff to your personal page; each of you can start a Blog. We've started a few basic Blogs for Art, Movies, Music, Musicians, Sports and Television. As you can see, each selection will open in new browser tabs, so you can find where you started and can get back to it easily. It's common Net-iquite to participate in someone's Blog first, so they get to know you and you get to know them, before you e-mail the Blog's owner, for a more personal friendship to be established."

"The Command Team menu option is strictly for you to get to know us," Corey instructed. "Right now, it doesn't include Jerry or AJ, but we'll get those pages loaded tonight too. Our pages are in the 'Our Clan' section too, but this way you guys don't have to remember our surnames." He giggled, "We've only been together a little less than a week, and some kids still confuse Seaver and Seibert."

"It's a blond thing," Mike softly sniggered. Corey squinted at Mike. Without a word spoken aloud, Mike vanished from the dining room. Kids began chuckling and giggling.

Corey laughed, "I did not do that!"

Bouncing his blond eyebrows, Derrick grinned, "I did." Still gathered together, the Core Rimmers cracked up.

Reappearing in the dining room, dripping wet and freezing cold, Mike bitched, "Nice! I know what an iceberg looks like now, in the dark, from up close!" The entire dining room seemed to explode with loud laughter. Mike left to go change into dry clothes and un-shrivel his bits.

Drew giggled, "Speaking of education, the Education section is for you to get to know our teachers, do homework assignments or send essays and such to the teachers. FYS is Federation Youth Services. That's where you can get to know any of the adults, from our parents to the doctors and nurses, and even our housekeepers, grounds keepers and chefs. The 'Our Clan' menu option has links to other divisions so you can search there. The majority of the screen is an alphabetical listing of kids in this division. You can change the sort order, from the default of last name to first name, or by age, ascending from youngest to oldest, or descending from oldest to youngest. To make it a little easier, we've added labels to search for kids, ages up to nine-years-old; tweens are ages ten through twelve, and teens, for thirteen and up. You can also search by name, age, birthday, interests and hobbies."

"Maps are printable graphics of our bases and all the Clan bases," Corey explained. "Some of you guys may be taking classes at other bases. That's why you all need comm-badges. Of course, once you're there, it would be nice to know where you are and where you need to go to. The Other Divisions option simply makes some stuff available that we've already shown, all in one place without digging into other menu options. There are links directly to their site, maps, their leadership teams and searchable lists of kids.

"The Platinum Habits section is for the band and where they may be performing concerts. The band doesn't consider performances here for us as concerts; they're rehearsals, so they won't appear. It also allows other divisions to request that the band perform for some function there. Recreation lists all the stuff we've got here and at our other bases. Maybe you don't like playing soccer, but you enjoy watching the game. When there are those sorts of activities going on, we'll list them here and you can go watch the game. The last little section is simply a form to fill out for site suggestions. If you have a good idea that we include, you'll get credit for it and a money bonus on your debit card too."

Drew smiled, "That's all we've got for you. I would like to know if any of you haven't tried powering up your laptop computers yet though. Just a show of hands, please?" Glancing around, Drew and Corey saw mostly newbie kids, and those that had only been around a little more than a day. Drew nodded, "Kewl. Remember, if you're having some laptop problems, Alden can help you and so can we; just let us know if you need it." John lowered Drew and Corey to the floor. The Core Rimmer team went into the chow line to get their dinners.

Around the dining room, the chatter level rose. Some were talking with the new dorm leaders. Others were talking about going back to their dorm rooms immediately after dinner, to investigate the new division web site, update their personal information with activities, hobbies and interests, and perhaps start a blog. Also, some of the teens were discussing the limited access to porn sites.

Overhearing the conversation, Aaron Farris excused himself and reminded, "Some of us have been through that, having our pictures taken and being prostituted by adults for other adults. We never saw a penny of the money made."

Stephen Wickes agreed with his partner and added, "We're all naked half of every day. What can you see at those sites that we don't see all the time?"

Twelve-year-old Chiba Atsushi smirked, "Prob'ly stuff a lot of us wouldn't like to see, that we've experienced, and would just as soon not have any reminders of."

One of the teen girls nearby, Vera Kirkwood wondered, "Why look at pictures?" When she got no reply, she shrugged, "Some of us have partners and some don't. I'd think having a real person, as a boyfriend or girlfriend matters more. There are gays, lesbians and straights here, so why look at what you can't have, when there are kids here that might like having a partner?"

Coming out of the kitchen with their dinners, John, Stephen, Drew and Corey overheard parts of this debate. Clearly, without using the PA, John said, "It's not a matter of disallowing porn completely, without regard to content, it's more like who's got a bad reputation; who's really mistreating or capitalizing on the models without proper compensation."

Drew nodded, "There are sites you can visit that are kewl, with good stories and good pictures. The sites we don't want you guys visiting are the ones that want money for nothing, or sites that go phishing for e-mail addresses, so they can share your address with another porn company and start sending you spam."

Sean walked out of the kitchen with Troy. Hearing the debate, Sean sighed, "Ya know what, guys? This is kind of silly and I'll tell you why I think so. Let's say you're developing and not certain where your interests really are; as in you haven't decided if your gay, lesbian, bi or straight. Everybody is at least a little bisexual, so it can be really confusing for some of you. Please come talk to any of us. If you need something that will help you grow and learn, we'll get it for you."

Troy smiled, "And that's from a guy who is as shy as I can occasionally be. Growing up here, you've all got the best people working for your benefit. Maybe you're one of the really shy ones that can't figure out who to talk with. The truth is that you can talk to any Core Rimmer, dorm leader or any of the adult employees, in complete confidentiality. I know Kaleo has rubbers and lube, free for the asking for anyone that needs or wants them."

"I don't ask questions either," Kaleo offered. "You want it, and you've got it, plain and simple. If you think that you might be gay, but aren't sure, ask me and Tory, and then watch how many suggestions we give you. If you want a dong or a dildo to figure it out, I'll get you exactly what you want. The same goes for you girls. We're purposefully choosing girls as part of the dorm leadership teams, so you can get what you need, without worrying about being embarrassed. What we don't want is for any of you to become like the pedophiles many of us had to deal with."

"Maybe some of you are scared, because of your experiences at orphanages, foster homes or out on the street," Tory explained. "Let me address that right now. Me and Kaleo are married now, partially because we were good friends at the orphanage. We discovered right here what it really means to be in love and make love. It's nothing like what those jerk-offs at the orphanages put us through. Yeah, you feel that same twitchy, anxious feeling in your belly, but the aftermath is completely opposite what it used to be. Instead of feeling worthless and valueless, you feel more deserving, worthy and valuable; that's caring and loving."

Sitting down beside Jonah, Reyes leaned over to whisper, "Listen and learn, bro."

Jonah whispered back, "I am. I'm pretty sure I'd like a boyfriend, but the past is still messing with me too."

Reyes nodded and softly said, "He'll fix that too, one way or another."

Before sitting down with his dinner, Keith grinned, "What have we been saying all week about giving and receiving abundantly? A sexual relationship is only part of that idea. It also applies to parents, children, friends and acquaintances; relationships that aren't sexual at all. When someone gives you something, you return something else to show your appreciation and thanks. We can't all be the best of friends, but those that do become best friends just so happen to be on the same page; the turnabout of giving and receiving is more meaningful. It's what makes us individuals and not carbon copies of each other."

Over at the table where the quadruplets and double twins were sitting, some giggling and loud laughter broke loose. Keith sniggered, "Even you guys aren't carbon copies. I see three different hairstyles and one with almost no hair. Earlier today, I saw all eight of you in the pool and could only positively identify Robbie. It won't be that way in a couple o' days." Before sitting down, Keith noticed Prez had started eating, but remained standing. He softly huffed, "Right after we're done eating, we're going home to the townhouse and you're getting a pill."

With his mouth full and chewing a bite of pizza, Prez obediently nodded.

At the tables where the adults were sitting, Jennifer Hundser heard her PADD chiming, alerting her that an e-mail had come in. After a few minutes to eat and converse, she checked the e-mail. Mr. T had responded and would be available Sunday evening for about two hours. Jennifer let Jason and Trinity know when their final interview with Mr. T would be. She also sent a text message to Mrs. Diaz, so she would be available and on base too.

AJ and Jerry were at a table with Nick, Roger, Aaron and Stephen Wickes. This evening, Aki and Hajime asked if they could sit with the six older boys. They all lived in the same hall of dorm one and had made some educated assumptions about one another. Continuing beyond the topic of internet porn, the eight gay lovers spoke of their relationships and pasts, and where they hoped to be in future weeks, months and years. Twelve-year-olds Aki and Hajime got some verbal lessons from the six older and more experienced thirteen-year-old boys. On the topic of oral sex, Aki and Hajime learned it was actually way better to kiss and lick private parts; that way the whole experience lasted longer than when simply sucking like mad at the glans 'knob'.

"Make love to your partner's body," AJ softly instructed. "Jerry knows I'm all his. I know he's all mine. It's totally awesome when, after about twenty minutes of little kisses and touches, another simple something pushes you unexpectedly over the edge."

Jerry grinned, "It's very kewl to ask afterward, 'what did I do to cause that?' Even better is the answer, 'everything!'"

Aaron whispered, "We had to do stuff with men and women that we didn't want to do. I think that's when rushing through it is actually appropriate. With Stephen, I don't want any reminders of that noise."

"It's like what the Core Rimmers say, give today, but be ready to receive tomorrow," Stephen softly agreed.

The conversation got silly and talking led to demonstrations, using folded slices of pizza to instruct Aki and Hajime on the finer points of rimming, which the two younger boys hadn't tried. It was all a matter of personal cleanliness, they learned. On occasion, it was necessary to take a quick shower before returning to their room and making each other messy and sweaty. All six were soon loudly laughing. It was no longer anywhere near serious by the time the crisp pizza crusts were soggy wastes of bread. So all eight went to the kitchen and asked for Italian sausage links to continue their goofy competition.

At another table, Judy Faris, Kathleen Marr, Jason and Trinity Taylor shared a table with the King and Queen. The monarchs were completely amazed with the entire leadership team. Although they had previously spoken with Lieutenant Vorik on the same subject, the dinnertime announcements and subsequent sexual discussion pushed the Royals beyond the logical chat with the Vulcan man. Now they were curious to learn the perspectives that the other parents had.

Judy Faris smiled, "I've always known where Troy was at. As a young boy, about Kaimi's age, he might go out and play with other boys, and come home filthy and bruised, but then he would poke at the Casio keyboard I got him, figuring out melodies by ear. He was a boy that enjoyed being with other boys, but also had a sensitive side."

Nodding, Kathleen agreed, "Stephen is very sensitive too. However, he's participated in more here these last few days than he has his entire life."

"Robbie's somewhere between those two examples," Jason simply offered.

Queen Adamina asked, "When did you tell your sons the facts of life?"

Trinity answered, "On Robbie's tenth birthday."

Smiling and nodding, Jason recalled, "He treated it like another present. With that information, he could understand what older boys at his school were really saying."

"Troy asked me when he was about nine-and-a-half," Judy smiled.

Kathleen sighed, "Other boys were mocking Stephen. When he told me that, I began the process when he was nine-years-old."

Jason frowned, huffing, "That's sad, and I can guarantee that the boys mocking Stephen had less knowledge than Stephen had."

Trinity nodded, "You probably saved him from some battles with ammunition to protect himself."

Quietly absorbing the conversation, King Aalona said, "Earlier today, Kaimi asked to be allowed to go to school here. I had several good reasons to allow it, but I also had reservations, because of the histories of many of these children. This evening's conversation and what the leadership team said has greatly reduced my concerns. This environment would be progressive for Kaimi." He wiped his mouth with a napkin, then said, "Excuse me, please." The King stood and went to Prez.

Wide-eyed, the Queen smiled, "It seems that I must prepare to get Kaimi's school transcripts."

Seeing the King approaching, Prez wondered, "How can I help you, Majesty?" King Aalona told Prez of Kaimi's requested school change, and his own observations, made during the course of one of the most difficult days in history. He asked that Kaimi be permitted to attend school on base, and Prez quickly agreed. King Aalona also asked if Prez could join him at the time of the press conference he had scheduled for seven that evening. After mulling it over a few seconds, Prez smiled, "I'd be honored to do that, Majesty, but there are two problems with it. First, I can't be dressed in much more than I'm wearing now. Also, I need to take medication right after dinner. I don't want to make you appear bad, so, if it's acceptable, could Keith take my place? As assistant director, he knows all that I know, and is equally capable."

King Aalona nodded once, saying, "Again, you have impressed me. Yes, Keith can take your place at this evening's press conference."

After wiping his mouth and standing, Keith asked, "How would you like me to participate, Majesty?"

King Aalona smiled, "Join me in my condo apartment when you're done eating, Keith. I'll review my speech notes with you, and then we can discuss what you may want to add."

Keith nodded, "We'll have security for us available before we meet with the press."

"Very well," King Aalona smiled, and then walked away. Keith sat down again to finish his dinner. King Aalona stopped at the table where he had been eating, shared a few brief words with the Queen and other adults, and then left the CIC

Wearing a Cheshire cat grin, Prez glanced down at Keith and softly sniggered. Keith grinned, "Very funny! What the heck am I going to say?"

Prez chuckled, "I didn't know what He wanted. Having you do it was logical. I can't stand there in my Clan Short robe with only a shower wrap underneath, and I sure as hell can't do it on pain meds."

With his eyes spinning, Keith started singing the Celtic music that was played in the Command Center only a few hours earlier. Mike, Derrick and Reyes cracked up. Looking around the dining room, Prez found his and Keith's security sitting together, and then walked over to them. He told them what was planned, asked them to get changed into dress uniforms when they were done eating, and to be prepared for anything during the press conference. Getting positive replies from all six, he thanked them, then went to the table where his parents were sitting, to let them know what Keith was about to do.

Naturally, those sitting nearby overheard the King and Prez. Soon everyone knew that Keith was going to be on television with the King. When Prez got back to his table, Kaleo offered, "We should prob'ly get the auditorium powered up to show a movie."

Prez nodded and smirked, "I'd doubt the little tikes will understand the content of the press conference or care, for that matter. That's a good idea, Kaleo." He then asked, "Troy, where's Uncle Colin?"

"His sleep schedule's all messed up," Troy answered. "The last I heard, he was taking a nap, before his swearing in ceremony. All of the press are staying at hotels off base, Prez. The only additional guest we'll have here is the Federal Judge and his wife."

Prez nodded, "Let Uncle Colin's secret service know what the King is doing. Maybe Uncle Colin will want to be there, or at least watch it on TV. Then you and Sean can give Kaleo and Tory a hand at the auditorium. Get a movie set up for the kids."

"Kewl," Troy smiled.

Sean whispered to Troy, "I'll get us a cot." Troy's smile widened.

Turning to where John was sitting, Prez said, "Be there with Keith and the King, bro. We don't need any more drama today."

With his face stuffed and chewing his food, John gave a thumbs up and sent, 'No problem, Prez.'

Prez nodded, "Wear your Clan Short robe too."

'I'm bringing Stephen too, to add to his training,' John relayed.

Tilting his head, Prez asked, "You're training Stephen?"

John nodded, "With me, he's telepathic, but not generally. Having an empath there is still good. Besides, I want him with me."

"Grrr," Stephen softly growled. Covering his mouth, Frankie went into a giggling fit.

At the young family's interaction, Prez grinned, "What about Jerry and AJ?"

"They've got the dump," John assured, and then recommended, "Give them tonight to sleep on it. A snap quiz in the morning might be good, just to be sure."

Prez nodded, and then went into the Command Center. The moment he stepped in the room, Paulie giggled, "You're starting to act telepathic, Prez."

Prez grinned, "I only came in here to ask Lieutenant Vorik to get personal security assigned for Jerry and AJ." Vorik immediately contacted the Rapid Response Base to complete that task.

Paulie smiled, "We just got a call from Des Moines. They've got more kids for us."

Curling his lips inward, Prez hummed, and then asked, "How many?"

"Nine in this group," Paulie answered. Checking his computer monitor, he continued, "Three sets of brothers. The first are a fifteen-year-old and a twelve-year-old, the second set are eight, six and four, and the third are all seven-years-old." Paulie sniggered, "It's another set of quadruplet boys."

Prez smiled, "Well, I was hoping to let Jerry and AJ have the night off. I guess that's shot now."

Paulie shrugged, "It's an easy pickup, boss; there and back in five minutes. They'll spend more time in the basement store."

Prez nodded, and then locked eyes with Lieutenant Vorik. Before being asked, Vorik said, "Additional security will be available within the hour, Sir."

"Okay," Prez sighed, "I don't want to delay this mission, and there are some very young kids too, so I'll send AJ, Jerry, Drew and Corey along with their two boys." He turned around and walked back out of the Command Center. On his way across the dining room, Prez thought of a better plan. Stopping at the table where his sons sat, Prez explained the situation. He asked, "Richie and Gage, would you go along to help?" Both happily agreed.

Dee frowned, "Why can't me and Sammy go too?"

Prez smiled, "Because daddy will be busy for the next hour or two with the King. I need you two here as witnesses, so daddy knows for sure that I took my pills."

Standing with gathered trays to take to the kitchen, Keith smirked, "Yeah, as a matter of fact, take Poppa to do that now. I'll see you guys later."

At Keith's suspicion and Prez's rolling eyes, Dee cracked up. Sammy giggled, "Okay, dad. We'll make sure pop pops his pills."

Heading for the kitchen, Keith said, "And make him relax for a little while. Sit down and watch TV for at least a half hour." He told Prez, "Mike, Derrick and Reyes can take over."

Softly chortling, Mike locked eyes with Prez. Wishing he had never chanced running through flames, Prez shook his head and sighed. Derrick smiled, "Go take a break, Prez. We'll keep the place running."

Prez sighed, "Come on Richie and Gage, let's go get the rest of the team." Heading towards the table where Corey and Drew were sitting, Prez shared the plan. Soon, Geoff, Lenny, Jerry and AJ were informed. Prez leaned over to kiss his sons and thank them.

Gathered with Corey, AJ, Jerry and the four sons, Drew called Conner, Chuck, Ata and Baakir to join the away team. Once the group was together outside the CIC, Drew tapped his sub-vocal, calling, "Alden, take us to Des Moines, where we've got kids to pick up."

They had only just vanished when Prez felt hands sliding into his. Looking up, Sammy smiled, "Let's go, pop. None of us really want to see dad having a hissy fit."

Arriving at the Wells Fargo Arena, Drew glanced at Jerry and AJ, asking, "Would you like to run the show?"

Before either teenager could answer, Grandma Morrison laughed, "Drew and Corey are back again, already?"

Spinning around toward the sound of the woman's voice, Corey hurried to her, giggling, "Hi Grandma," and gave her a hug.

Drew approached more slowly, but still wore a wide smile. "You know we couldn't have stayed away from you for very long." He gave her a hug, then gestured to the others they arrived with, introducing, "Grandma, this little guy here is our son, Geoff, and beside him is our other son, Lenny."

Grandma had squatted down and opened her arms to meet both boys. "Oh my goodness!" Grandma heartily giggled, "They're so precious."

While she was down, Drew smiled, "The red haired boy is our nephew, Richie. He's Prez's and Keith's son, and so is the next dude, Gage, with chestnut brown hair."

Hugging the two boys, Grandma looked up and joked, "Is every boy at Ewa Beach this handsome?"

Drew giggled, "I guess." When Grandma stood, Drew smiled, "These last two dudes are new Core Rimmers, Grandma. The red haired dude is Jerry Hebda. The one with brown hair is his partner, Arnold James Smithson. We call him AJ."

"My Lord!" Grandma gasped. She then smiled, "Yes, I will be making a quick trip to Hawaii tonight. Come give me a hug, Jerry and AJ."

Shyly, both teens stepped forward to be engulfed in Grandma's embrace. When they were sufficiently deprived of oxygen, she released them, smiling, "Let me introduce you to your new brothers."

Shortly after starting the walk, Richie and Gage stayed with Grandma, but the others remained with Drew and Corey. Jerry tapped Drew and whispered, "Is she always like that?"

Rapidly nodding, Drew softly answered, "I'm sure she's knocking back her enthusiasm a notch or two, because the refugee kids are victims, and she knows a lot of Clan kids have had bad times."

An adult man's voice called, "Mom, we've got another boy that chose to go to Hawaii." Immediately veering off course, Grandma led the pack in that direction. Walking with a boy of about twelve or thirteen, the man said, "This is Raymond Varga, from Los Angeles. His father was a county sheriff and a casualty of the riots there."

"Yes, you definitely need to go to the islands; you are too handsome to be wasted on the continent." Grandma stated matter-of-factly. "Drew, introduce your brother to his family. Then you need to see your Aunt Nancy immediately for your evening shakes."

Corey howled laughing. Drew giggled, "Grandma, we just had dinner, ten minutes before we got here! I had four big slices of pizza!"

Nudging AJ, Corey cackled, "She's warming up now."

"You are nine minutes overdue, young man. Now move it before I decide that you and Corey need to expand your family even more."

Losing control, Corey laughed himself into a case of hiccups.

Richie, Gage, Geoff and Lenny were giggling. Jerry widely smiled at this madness. AJ simply appeared astonished. Drew sniggered, "And what about Raymond and the other nine we came here to get?"

"Georgie, could you please send that nice young boy Leo over here, that Jeff and Brian just processed?" Grandma said sweetly into her comm-badge.

"Yes, Grandma." George responded amazingly quickly. About two-seconds later, a skinny white-blond nine-year-old boy with ice-blue eyes appeared next to her.

"Leo Daniel Scott, meet your new parents, Drew and Corey. Jeff said that you wanted parents like the ones you just lost, ones that like being funny."

After pausing long enough to ensure Leo was sufficiently glued to his new parents, Grandma added, "I instructed Nancy to ensure that your other nine additions were comfortable. They are waiting for you with her."

Shyly saying, "Hey," Leo glanced up at Drew and Corey.

Unable to catch his breath from laughing through his hiccups, Corey wobbled and fell down. Wide-eyed and grinning madly, Leo silently wondered what was going on. Geoff and Lenny went to help their pop, but they were too small and Corey accidentally pulled both down on top of him. All three became hysterical. Trying desperately to maintain composure during his first Core Rimmer mission, Jerry sputtered. Richie and Gage were happy to join Grandma for milkshakes. Seeing his partner was having fun, AJ tickled Jerry while simultaneously telling him to "Stop laughing!"

Pulling Leo close, Drew sniggered, "Is this the best part of your day?"

Leo nodded and giggled, "Beats the heck out of waiting around here, doin' nothin'."

Raymond grinned, "So, umm... is it like this in Hawaii?"

"Nah," Drew giggled, "it's better." Noticing Grandma walking off with Richie and Gage, Drew smiled, "Let's follow Grandma, dudes." Drew, AJ and Jerry helped get Corey, Geoff and Lenny off the ground. The group hurried after Grandma, Richie and Gage.

Jogging along, Leo remained close to Drew, asking, "Do you think I could get a charger for my iPod Nano?"

"Not a problem," Drew answered, and then sniggered, "Remind me later, when we get home, with twenty more kids than the nine we came here to get."

Back at Ewa Beach, at his family's townhome, Prez had taken his pills. He sat down in the living room to watch TV with Dee and Sammy. What they saw and heard on the TV was all of what had just occurred at Des Moines. Catching his breath, Prez chuckled, "Alden, who is Grandma?"

Alden giggled, "Genetically speaking, she's the grandmother of Adam, Mark, Brian and Jeff. She believes that Ralphie, Richie, Robbie and Ronnie are her grandsons too, since Ronnie and Adam were, and still are, foster brothers. As you can see, the kids like her, so she's basically adopted all of Clan Short."

Dee giggled, "Should we tell our grandma about Leo?"

Prez smiled, "Let's wait and see what Leo, Drew and Corey want to do."

Outside by the pools, the Des Moines group and Brandon were ready to head home. It was after eleven o'clock in Des Moines. Brandon hugged and kissed his cousins, but instead of saying goodbye, he said, "I'll see you tomorrow." The quadruple Rs said goodnight to the double-twins, Garrett and the rest of the group. Colin ordered Kerry to grab Brandon's suitcases and gym bag. As soon as all the farewells were done, Alien told Kerry to take their group home.

At the Wells Fargo Arena, Grandma and Nancy had gotten everyone milkshakes and introduced the new boys to the Ewa Beach group. There were the Hunnicutt brothers, four-year-old Shaun, six-year-old Michael, and eight-year-old Kenneth, from New York City. The seven-year-old Steib quadruplets were Kelly, Lawrence, Matthew and Nicholas, from Washington, D.C. The Nash brothers were fifteen-year-old Craig and twelve-year-old Phillip, from Los Angeles. Grandma and Nancy went back to work with refugees, allowing the boys to get to know one another.

Beginning the transition to Clan life, Richie and Gage talked with the Steib brothers; Lenny and Geoff chatted with the Hunnicutts; AJ and Jerry oriented Craig and Phillip; Corey and Drew spoke with Leo and Raymond. All the boys were told that there was pasta and pizza waiting for them at Ewa Beach. Still, they liked the shakes, so they wanted to finish them.

During the day, Corey and Drew learned not to dwell upon the Battle of Earth. Refugees craved normalcy. While they were chatting with Leo and Raymond, they learned that both were into music and water sports. Leo had played water polo at his school and preferred Top 40 radio hits. Ray liked to surf and para-surf and liked alternative music, like Toad The Wet Sprocket and The Lemonheads. With Craig and Phillip, Drew and Corey spoke of favorite sports, learning that the two brothers really enjoyed soccer and played on their schools' teams. The Clan leaders asked that, once Craig and Phillip got settled, they start teaching the game to the others at Ewa Beach.

Sitting on the ground in a circle, Richie, Gage, Geoff and Lenny spent almost all their time assuring the younger group of rescued boys that life was really very good at Ewa Beach. Little Shaun Hunnicutt went to Jerry and held his arms out and up, wanting to be held. Grinning at the rug-rat, Jerry squatted down, lifted Shaun and parked him on his left hip.

Grandma returned and saw that most of the milkshakes were near finished. She prompted, "If you boys are ready, let's go to Hawaii."

Corey smiled, "You're coming too, Grandma?"

"Of course," she answered, "I've always wanted to visit Hawaii, and from what you boys said during the day, it sounds very different from the Des Moines neighborhood I'm at. Besides, I'd like to meet some of your parents, leaders, and some of my other grandchildren." She pointed at trash cans, so the boys could dump their cups. As the boys gathered around her, she wondered, "Is there someplace we need to be?"

Drew nodded, "First stop is our CIC dining room."

"Kerry, do the honors, please," Grandma called.

Upon arrival, AJ and Jerry got the newbies over to the chow line. Richie, Gage, Geoff and Lenny joined the group. Drew asked Grandma, "How about I get my mom or dad to show you around?"

Corey quickly added, "If they're busy, my folks, or Mike's or Derrick's could give you a tour, Grandma?"

"Thank you," Grandma smiled. She went over to check on the new kids in the chow line. Corey and Drew called their parents. In moments, Jim Hundser as well as Bill and Lanna Seaver were transported to the dining room. Corey and Drew took their parents to the kitchen, where Grandma was helping little Shaun Hunnicutt.

Drew said, "We'll take over, Grandma. Let us introduce our parents." When the woman looked over and Corey had taken over with Shaun, Drew introduced his dad and Corey's parents.

The adults shook hands and Grandma began chattering, praising Drew, Corey, John and Stephen. Leaving the boys in the kitchen, the adults started giving Grandma a base tour. The sun had set, but all the automated lighting had turned on. From the CIC, they followed the sidewalk through the dormitory 'quad'.

There was a knock at the front door of Prez's townhouse. Since Prez was drowsy and relaxing, Dee shouted, "I'll get it, Poppa," and hurried to the door. He opened it and found Lindsay Gibbons standing there. Dee giggled, "Hi, Linds!"

Lindsay smiled, "Hey, Dee. Is Prez awake?"

Dee nodded, "He's just watchin' TV with us." Stepping back, Dee waved Lindsay inside, and then closed the door behind her. Dee returned to the sofa, where Prez and Sammy were lounging.

Prez smiled, "How're you doin', Lindsay?"

Lindsay shrugged, "Okay, just a little confused, Prez."

"About?" Prez prompted.

Lindsay shuffled her feet and rambled, "I was talkin' with my mom after supper. It's a little strange, we think, that other girls are being made leaders. Remember Saturday at the beach, almost all the girls were naked, no matter how old they are? How often have you seen a completely naked teenage girl since then?"

Prez blinked, "Never naked, only topless, and even that's pretty rare."

"You know why, don't you?"

Shaking his head, Prez heard John's voice in his mind, loudly hollering, 'Oh shit! We're in trouble now.'

"I did that," Lindsay frowned. "I taught them that their bodies are theirs and not to make boys happy. Boys show off, but girls shouldn't and don't really need to be like boys that way. They used to think differently, ya know? Now they know better and ya know what? Some are getting boyfriends too! The boys like them more this way, at least the straight ones do. The FCC girls were the exact opposite; they were taught that liking boys was bad. I told them and showed them that boys are boys, they act different, but they're just like us with different parts, and when we grow up, maybe we'll marry boys and have babies with them."

Prez nodded and grinned, "That's great. I didn't know that."

Lindsay scowled, "So how come you made other girls leaders and not me? I was thinking you were making only boys leaders, which isn't fair, but you're the director, so..."

Holding a hand up to signal a pause, Prez sighed, "I'm sorry, Lindsay. I had no idea you had done anything. It's not a secret that girls need girl leaders for some stuff." He then called, "Alden, get a comm-badge for Lindsay." The communications device appeared on Prez's shower wrap on his lap. He picked it up, offering it to Lindsay, smiling, "You're now a leader too and definitely deserve it. When I call for a leadership team meeting, that'll include you. You're not a Core Rimmer and won't be doing rescues, so tell your mom and dad that your duties are strictly limited to our five bases." Prez then gently explained, "Doing rescues, so far as I've seen, really requires boys. It can be rough and very distressing. After Wednesday night's California orphanages, we all had to have Vulcan mind melds to cope with what we had seen and done."

Pinning the comm-badge onto her shirt, Lindsay nodded and sighed, "John only told me a little bit. He wouldn't even say it aloud or why he wouldn't tell me more. My brother ignored my questions."

"It was that bad," Prez firmly assured.

Realizing that Prez wasn't going to say more, Lindsay sighed, "Well, thanks Prez. I'm going to go over to the dorms to let the other girls know. They're all really happy that you're making us leaders. Then I'll go home and tell my family." She giggled, "I can't wait for Mike to find out."

Prez laughed, "Neither can I."

Waving, Lindsay said, "See ya later," and went to the door. She stepped outside and closed the door. Dormitory one was closest and the second floor was filled so she jogged there.

Prez glanced at Sammy and Dee, wondering, "Did either of you know any of that?"

Dee shook his head. Sammy shrugged, "I've seen Lindsay going in and out of dorms with other girls, but I wasn't around Saturday either."

Only moments later, while Sammy was channel surfing for something on TV to watch, there was another knock at the door. Again, Dee bounded up off the couch to answer it. He opened the door and recognized the two teen boys standing there, wearing Clan cloaks with dirty and tattered suits beneath, but had to search his memory to remember their names. Dee muttered, "Harry and... uh?"

Prez leaned forward and looked over at the door. Standing, he excitedly called, "Jonas and Harry! Damn, I'm glad to see you two in one piece. Several times last night, Keith and I wondered if you were safe."

"Jonas!" Dee giggled and blushed, "yeah, that's it, sorry."

Harry gave Dee a quick hug and warmly smiled, "A week is long time when things are always changing."

"Can we come in and talk?" Jonas asked.

"Sure, dudes," Prez warmly smiled. Dee stepped aside, allowing the taller Clan leaders to enter. Once they were inside, Prez gestured to chairs and prompted, "Please have a seat, you look like you need to."

"We've been on the go since about five this morning," Jonah wearily offered, "and we left Washington at midnight. The place looks like something out of a disaster movie. And there's more people dead or homeless than I even want to think about." Two younger boys followed Jonas and Harry inside.

Dee giggled and hugged Peter Lambert before the shifty Mikyvis could vanish to prevent it.

"This is Galen, Kurt's nephew from the new compound in upstate New York," Jonas introduced the other boy. "He was dead earlier today."

Squinting suspiciously, Sammy muttered, "Rapid recovery?"

Releasing Peter and lunging for Galen, Dee said, "Hi," and told Sammy, "See the purple eyes, bro. They're Mikyvis'. Remember me telling you how bad my butt hurt Saturday? It was Peter that fixed me, so I could have fun the rest of the day."

Peter giggled. "Yeppers! And I couldn't let somebody as cute as Galen stay dead." He blushed, and the two Mikyvis hopped onto the couch, one on either side of Sammy, cuddling him.

"The Capitol is in ruins, dude," Harry softly told Prez. "So's the Pentagon, and part of the White House, and a whole bunch of office buildings, stores, homes, condos, and you-name-its all over Washington. Most of Congress is dead, so're the President and Vice President. We had Romulan moles in government positions. Jonas shot one of them, and the V.P. was another. And you wouldn't believe how many, um, rectums were trying to 'follow standard procedure' when that would benefit nobody but the Romulans."

"We came here because you guys are playing host to the guy who is now the new President, to let him know," Jonas added.

Nodding, Prez sighed, "Keith told me about some of that." He then asked, "Please relax a few minutes? Are you hungry?" When his two worn out friends nodded, Prez called, "Alden, get a pizza and two Cokes here for Jonas and Harry. Then contact Uncle Gordon, or any of Uncle Colin's security. Let them know I'm coming for a visit with two additional Family Clan Short leaders, and give them Harry's and Jonas' full names. To make this clear to you, them and Uncle Colin, this is not a social call; it's business, so there's no choice. The most we're doing is showing our ID cards, but we are going to talk to Uncle Colin. They've got about fifteen minutes to get ready. As soon as Harry and Jonas are fed and ready, we're there."

"Full court press?" Jonas asked, referring to Prez's tone.

Prez explained, "It's not been a great day. You two look like something that cat dragged in, played with and left to rot on the floor. Be that as it may, you guys were there, in Washington, where Uncle Colin eventually must go back to. He needs to hear what you have to say."

Interrupting Prez, Lay's potato chips dropped from near the ceiling onto Prez, Jonas and Harry. Alden giggled, "There, now you guys can say you got leied in Hawaii. The pizza and Cokes are on the table."

Harry asked, "Alden, are your circuits waterproof?"

"Um... no."

"Well, then no dunking until after you get your body," Harry warned. "But just remember, we owe you!" Turning to Prez, he smirked, "So, is this the new 'in' thing for Clan leaders; T-shirt and short terrycloth sarong?" Harry quipped about Prez's outfit.

"And it looks like you're shaving your legs now too!" Jonas chuckled.

Prez grinned, "Do you want to eat or see my burned butt? I'd think eating might be a little more important, but it's your appetite."

Over on the sofa, where two boys and two Mikyvis were sitting, Dee burst into giggles. The three teens glanced over to find billows of smoke rising off the front of Sammy's board shorts. Blushing, Peter giggled, "That's what're known as hot pants, hot stuff!"

"We're eating!" Jonas replied to Prez, scarfing down pizza. "Seriously, how bad was it?"

"Second degree on my feet and tush, first degree on my legs," Prez answered. "Earlier today, I was in a robe that kept slipping open. Today, I've accidentally exposed myself to three dignitaries. At least a shower wrap keeps my dick out of everyone's sight. The worst part is the pain pills have codeine in them, so I'm not all here, really. I'll probably escort you to the condo, introduce you and then excuse myself to return here. Keith told Dee and Sammy to make sure I relax. Rather than get my sons in trouble, or make an ass out of myself in front of Uncle Colin, I'll avoid all that. I can see you're tired, but when you're done with Uncle Colin, please come back here?"

"Glad it's getting better, and that plan sounds good," Jonas said. "'Uncle Colin,' huh?"

Prez chuckled, "Troy, one of my new Core Rimmers, made the mistake of calling him 'Mister President'. Don't go there, or risk a ranting ex-four star general. He prefers Uncle Colin."

"Got it," Jonas and Harry said. They each finished a third slice of pizza and drank down some Coke.

In short order, the pizza was gone. Prez led Jonas and Harry to condominium C. All three showed their ID cards to the secret service men at the entrance. Since they were expected, they were quickly allowed inside and went up to the tenth floor executive condo. Uncle Colin was awake, but wearing a robe, proving that he had been asleep. Prez introduced Jonas and Harry as Family Clan Short Northeast Division director and assistant director. After briefly explaining his own situation and that his sons were expecting him home, Prez left Uncle Colin, Jonas and Harry to their discussion and returned home.

At half past six that night, Mike made an announcement over the PA to the entire base that was heard in the auditorium, CIC, the dorms, the homes, the rec center and outdoors. "Attention all Rimmers; we will be receiving guests over at the FYS Building. They are news reporters who will have cameras, for our King's announcements. The reporters will be warned not to take photos; however, to be sure all of you are safe, please do not go anywhere beyond the CIC and auditorium. For your own safety and security, do not go near the shuttle pad, the FYS Building, or the parking garage. Stay to the south side of the base, in the housing area, by the playground, the pools or indoors. You can do whatever you like, but we'd like to be sure you're all safe. Our base security are concentrated north of the CIC. If they see you there, they will turn you around, so just don't go there. In a few minutes, Derrick, Reyes and I will leave the Command Center and be available to answer your questions. That's it, guys. Get back to having fun."

Roaming around their new home only to get familiar with it, Lance Kinchen and Scott Shetley were chatting about their favorite music CDs. They paused their conversation to hear Mike's announcement. In the trees to the northwest of the shuttle pad and realizing they were where Mike had said they shouldn't be, they started jogging toward the driveway leading to North Road. Lance grinned, "So the top five CDs are?"

Scott answered, "Number five is The Beatles White Album. Number four is Deep Purple's Machine Head."

"Number three is AC DC's Back In Black," Lance offered.

Scott said, "Number two is Zeppelin's Physical Graffiti."

Together, they cheered, "Number one is Zeppelin's fourth, ZOFO," and started laughing.

Scott chuckled, "It's so amazing that we never knew each other, but have the same taste in music."

"I wouldn't have listed The White Album at all," Lance truthfully admitted, "but you're right, there are too many classic rockers on those disks to ignore. Helter Skelter was one of the first metal songs ever written. That song alone gets it on the list." Taking an easy tangent, he started singing, "Why don't we do it in the road? Why don't we do it in the road? Why don't we do it in the road? Why don't we do it in the road?"

Joining with Lance, Scott sang, "No one will be watching us, why don't we do it in the road?"

Seeing the two security guys at the checkpoint were grinning at them, Lance cracked up and slowed to a brisk walk. Chaz asked, "Are you newbies all right?"

Also slowing his pace, Scott chuckled, "Just at the wrong place at the wrong time... again."

"For the second time today!" Lance laughed.

Chaz wondered, "Where are you from?"

"New York City," both teens answered.

Billy smiled, "That tells us why you're still wearing jeans and long sleeve shirts."

Lance smirked, "Now we're sweaty again."

Nodding at Lance, Scott asked the two security guys, "Is there someplace we can take a shower?"

Billy smiled, "There are showers in all the dorms, in the pool house and at the rec center."

Tapping his comm-badge, Chaz called, "Alden, can you keep an eye on these two and get them clothes appropriate for the climate?"

"No problem, Chaz," Alden replied.

Lance grinned, "We've been to the store and already got new clothes, just before dinner."

Scott offered, "We didn't want to put clean clothes on when neither of us had the chance to shower before evacuating Manhattan."

Nodding understandingly, Chaz explained, "It's not a problem, dudes. Wherever you decide to shower, Alden will get you what you need."

Lance and Scott thanked Chaz and Billy and introduced themselves. Billy pointed out, "That first building is dormitory one. The first floor is already filled with guys, and the second floor has girls. This is your home, so take a look around, grab a shower and make yourselves comfy."

Scott grinned, "Reyes showed us around. When we were done with dinner, we decided to go for a walk to digest."

"This base is huge," Lance smiled. "We just discovered that all the buildings are in the center of the lot."

Chaz nodded, "We've got room to expand, if we need to, after we get the other four bases filled."

"Thanks for everything," Scott warmly smiled. He turned to Lance, asking, "Wanna check out the dorms?"

Lance nodded, "It's closest and I'm long overdue for a shower." He waved at Billy and Chaz, saying, "We'll catch ya around later." Following the driveway, Lance and Scott walked toward the CIC and dormitories. Once they were alone, Lance asked Scott, "Is it just me or is everybody very kewl here?"

Scott chuckled, "It's a far cry from the city life we're used to, huh?"

Lance giggled, "I know they're really busy, but I'd really like to talk to more of the leaders."

"I can't wait to hear their band," Scott admitted. "I know what a virtuoso is, but I couldn't name one, and I don't think I've ever heard a virtuoso band."

Thinking about it for many moments, Lance turned to his new friend, wondering, "What kind of music do you think they play?"

Shrugging, Scott answered, "To be virtuosos, they could probably play anything and everything they want."

Walking around the CIC, they continued chatting about Derrick, Mike, Reyes, Kaleo, Tory, Drew, Corey, John and Stephen, the leaders they had already met and talked with. They walked into the nearest dormitory. In the first room, number twenty-six, two older teenagers were watching TV. Three rooms down the hall, two pre-teens were sitting on the floor and playing video games. In the next room, there were four young boys. They had double-sized bunk beds, four desks and chairs. A few doors further down the hall, two slightly older boys were naked and sitting at their desks browsing the Pacific Rim Division's web site.

Lance and Scott walked into the common room, where two teenagers and two pre-teens were watching the big television. Roger Mosqueda, Nick Shavers, Jerry Burk and John Huth introduced themselves to the two newbie teenagers. Lance and Scott told them why they were there and asked some general questions about the rooms. Roger and Nick led Lance and Scott down the other hall to their room, allowing the two newbies to get a good look around. Standing in the center of the room, Lance and Scott realized how large the rooms really were. Roger pointed out the stereo, thirty-two inch television, X Box game station, and the two laptop computers. Nick opened his closet, his dresser and night table drawers.

Scott grinned, "This room is expansive!"

Nick nodded and explained, "When we moved in, the beds were under the windows. We moved them to the adjacent walls. So it would all fit, we had to move the dressers closer to the desks."

Roger added, "The TV and stereo have timers, so we can watch TV or listen to tunes while we're going to sleep, and they'll turn themselves off. Even in the mornings, we'll turn on the TV, set the timer, hit the bathroom and shower, and go to the CIC for breakfast, knowing that the TV will turn itself off."

Nick said, "There are solar panels on the roof, so the building has its own power source. The hot water is also solar and heated more by electric water heaters. There are over a hundred kids living in this dorm and we've never run out of hot water."

At the enthusiastic descriptions, Lance chuckled, "We're guitarists and will hopefully have amplifiers pretty soon. I can easily see how we could set up a room so that we have space for all that stuff and still have plenty of area in the middle of the room."

Taking Roger's hand, Nick grinned, "We're a couple, which is why we came to the Clan; our parents couldn't deal. Are you dudes gay too?"

Scowling, Lance blinked at Scott then softly sighed, "I always considered myself straight, but honestly, I really don't know."

Scott nodded, "Same here. I've been concentrating on learning guitar since my tenth birthday."

Lance giggled, "You've been playing since ten too?"

Scott smiled, "I had an acoustic that I messed with before that, but got seriously into it when I turned ten."

Roger grinned, "The greatest thing about the Clan is we can figure everything out; sexuality and our education goals too, so we can choose good careers. You dudes are gonna flip when you hear Platinum Habits play for us."

Slightly out of sync, Scott and Lance uncertainly repeated, "Platinum Habits?"

Nick giggled, "The Core Rimmers' band; Prez plays bass guitar, Mike plays guitar, Derrick and Reyes on drums and percussion, Keith and Troy play keyboards."

"Troy also plays guitar, saxophone and harmonica," Roger smiled. "They're awesome! After your shower, come back here and we'll play a recording of their wedding concert for you."

"Thanks!" Lance happily cheered. "We've been hoping to hear them soon."

At Lance's enthusiasm, Scott chuckled, "Give us ten or fifteen minutes, and we'll be right back."

"Take your time," Nick giggled, "we'll be here."

Scott led the way from the room and Lance followed. Just a little further down the hall was the lavatory. They walked in and went directly to the commodes. Sitting on a toilet, Scott said, "Tonight's dinner was fantastic. I didn't expect good New York style pizza, but it was awesome."

Letting a loud one rip, Lance giggled, "Gotta love Italian food and garlic!" Scott roared laughing. About a minute later, when Scott had quieted to soft chuckling, Lance giggled, "Do you want to be roommates, Scott?"

"On one condition."

"Name it."

Scott chuckled, "You always fart in the bathroom!"

Lance giggled, "When I'm awake to control it, I promise to try."

"Beware my silent but deadly farts, pal," Scott sniggered.

Seconds later, noxious fumes drifted beyond the wall separating them. Lance squealed, "OH MY GOD!" and Scott cracked up.

Hurrying to finish, Lance laughed, "The ceramic tile is melting, man!"

"And this cast iron bowl is a little less white too," Scott sniggered.

"No doubt!" Lance giggled. He flushed and pulled his jeans up, but left the zipper and button undone, and then went directly to the mob shower changing area. He started to strip and heard the other toilet flush. Scott stepped out, holding his jeans up with one hand. Lance giggled, "You could at least blush!"

Shaking his head, Scott entered the changing area, sniggering, "Ya still wanna be roommates?"

Nodding, Lance grinned, "I know now to give you space after eating Italian food," and padded naked into the mob shower. He looked around the new environment. About three feet off the floor, there were soap dispensers on the pale blue ceramic tiled walls between every shower head. "For the little kids," Lance softly muttered, and turned on a shower.

Entering the shower in his birthday suit, Scott asked, "What's that?"

Pointing at the soap dispensers, Lance repeated, "They're pretty low for us, but for little kids, it's a good height."

Turning on the shower across from Lance, Scott offered, "I guess we need to get into big brother mode somehow."

Stepping under the warm water, Lance shared, "I had some younger cousins out on Long Island. It won't be too big a problem. Mostly, we just need to keep them entertained, even when you're teaching them stuff." Rather than stare blankly at his new friend's admirable body, Lance turned to face the wall, wet his front and got a palm full of soap. Scott had a really nice body to match his great personality, Lance had to admit to himself. He had a nice thick uncut dick that hung just a little longer than his sack. He also had wide shoulders and a torso that was appropriate for a guitar player; not too muscular, but certainly not beanstalk arms and legs, like on his own wiry frame. Then again, Scott was about a year older. After grabbing another palm full of soap, Lance turned around asking, "What's your birthday, Scott?"

"May second, 1990," Scott answered, and then asked, "What's yours?"

"February sixteenth, 1991," Lance replied. He grinned, "We're only about ten months apart, man."

Turning to the wall, Scott checked, "You said you're from Chelsea?"

"Yep. You lived in Kips Bay?"

"Yeah, barely a mile from you; it might as well have been twenty miles."

Forcing himself to stop staring at Scott's muscular ass, Lance turned again, asking, "Would I seem fickle if I said I already like it more here?"

"Nope," Scott quickly responded, "I like it here too. The climate is awesome." He turned around and closed his eyes to wash his face, thinking, 'God dammit! What the fuck is wrong with me? I never looked at any other guy like Lance. So he's got a longer snipped dick! Good for him! He's been a great friend all fucking day. If I hadn't met him walking out of the city, I might've gone insane long before now. Don't screw it up by imagining he's gay. I have to keep my bisexual past secret or I'll lose a friend and damn good guitar player in one swipe.'

Breaking Scott out of his thoughts, Lance started singing; "Oh Yeah, yeah. We roll tonight, To the guitar bite. Yeah, yeah, oh. Stand up and be counted, For what you are about to receive. We are the dealers. We'll give you everything you need. Hail, hail to the good times, 'Cause rock has got the right of way. We ain't no legend, ain't no cause. We're just livin' for today."

Sliding around and playing air guitar like Angus Young, Scott faced Lance and joined him, singing; "For those about to rock, we salute you! For those about to rock, we salute you! We rock at dawn on the front line, Like a bolt right out of the blue, The sky's alight with the guitar bite, Heads will roll and rock tonight!"

Lance shook his butt around and played air guitar too, continuing the chorus with Scott. "For those about to rock, we salute you! For those about to rock, we salute you! For those about to rock, we salute you! Yes we do! For those about to rock, we salute you! Oooh, salute! Oooh, oooooh yeah!"

Simultaneously, both teenagers cracked up laughing. Neither could bring themselves to admit the right thing to do was hug each other tightly and say thank you for turning a horrible day into a good one. Instead, Lance giggled, "That was too much fun for the fuckin' shower!"

Nodding, Scott chuckled, "Yeah, but we definitely need to practice singing."

"That's why we decided to come here," Lance reminded.

Rinsing his back and butt, Scott smiled, "I really needed this shower. All day I've felt so funky, man."

Lance giggled, "Let me just make sure I got all the soap rinsed from under my balls and we're outta here."

Feeling half his blood supply surging into the middle of his body, Scott adjusted the water so it was much cooler and faced the wall again. About a minute later, Scott and Lance turned off the water and then returned to the changing room. On the wooden slat bench, they found neatly stacked board shorts, underwear and T-shirts. Blinking and scowling at each other for a few moments, they grabbed towels and started drying off. For the first time, Scott uncertainly called, "Alden?"

Alden giggled, "Hi Scott."

Still toweling off, Scott wondered, "How'd you know what size clothes to get us?"

Alden answered, "For now, I'm an AI, without a body. The cameras in the corner let me see you and the speakers allow me to speak to you. I've got lots of jobs around here, but mostly I keep my cameras on all the kids to make sure you're all safe. Soon, I'll be like Reyes, an android, walking around with you guys." He paused and then giggled, "Maybe I'll even get to dance naked in the shower and play air guitar with you!" Suddenly and very loudly, AC DC's For Those About To Rock (We Salute You) played from the ceiling, with Alden singing along.

Covering his blushing face with his towel, Lance giggled, "Oh God!"

Scott chuckled, "He could've played the recording for us."

Having never spoken with an AI before, Scott grinned at Lance and tapped him on the shoulder. Pulling the towel off his face, Lance cutely smiled, "This will take some getting used to."

Nodding, Scott suggested, "Let's get back to Nick and Roger so we can hear Platinum Habits." They hurried to finish up, got dressed in clean new clothes and rolled up their dirty clothes then went to room eleven. Soon, the four boys were listening to the Wedding Concert. At first, Lance and Scott didn't believe it was their leadership team, but Nick and Roger were there. Jerry Burk and John Hoth joined the group in the room, also confirming that they had been at the concert too and it was Platinum Habits they were listening to. Completely captivated and enthralled, Scott and Lance remained there through most of the recording, until hearing their names called by Drew.

At the Iroquois Avenue gate, newspaper journalists, television news reporters and cameramen started arriving. Each vehicle was stopped and the base security checked all their identification cards. Standing nearby, in their Clan Short robes, were Nathan, John and Stephen, empathically and telepathically scanning each individual in the cars and vans.

Chefs were rolling carts of coffee and tea into the nearby Federation Youth Services Building, where the King would have his press conference. The largest first floor conference room had been set up for the dozens of men and women. Passengers in each vehicle were told that no one would be allowed beyond the FYS Building. Anyone caught filming or taking pictures outside the FYS Building's conference room, or anywhere outdoors, would be summarily removed from the base and the camera would be confiscated. Extra security was at the family housing checkpoint, around the FYS building and around the parking garage. Seeing many armed gorillas and G-Cats around the driveway, no one in the vehicles argued.

A call came into the Command Center from Gordon Rice, the head of Uncle Colin's secret service detail. Derrick took the call. Mr. Rice had a list of names for Uncle Colin's Inauguration, including a U.S. Federal Judge and three dozen news reporters and cameramen. Only the Federal Judge and his wife would be staying at Ewa Beach for the day, and would fly back to the United States Saturday evening. All the reporters would be at hotels in Honolulu. The Inauguration was scheduled for ten o'clock Saturday morning, but reporters and the judge would begin showing up by nine o'clock in the morning.

Also, Uncle Gordon told Derrick that the White House damages would take at least a week to repair. That meant Uncle Colin would be remaining on base until the White House repairs were completed. Preparations would need to be made to allow Uncle Colin and his secret service to transport out and back to Ewa Beach. Derrick recommended Clan comm-badges and the Family Clan Short bases in the United States as secure interim locations and Uncle Gordon agreed. To get the ball rolling, Derrick contacted Seth at Orlando HQ. Mike and Reyes worked with Ewa Beach UNIT Security so that they were equipped for more reporters and the Federal Judge.

Prepared for their meeting and dressed appropriately, King Aalona and Keith stepped out of the Royal family's condo apartment. Waiting there in the hallway were Keith's enhanced security, Danny, and Prez's enhanced security, Chris. Down the hall, Keith saw the elevator doors opened and locked, with Matt and Justin waiting inside. All of them were dressed in formal uniforms. This seemed a little extreme to Keith. Following the King into the elevator, he grinned, "What's going on, dudes?"

Unlocking the elevator, Chris shrugged, "Prez told us to keep you and King Aalona safe." He pressed the button for the ground floor. The elevator began its descent.

Danny nodded, "Gamba and Nasir are waiting outside. Like we did at school, we'll surround you and our King. The gorillas will lead the way. The four of us will be to the sides and behind you."

King Aalona noticed, "You're not armed." Wearing cute grins, all four boys began whipping out collapsible batons, automatic hand guns and extra clips. At the King's shocked expression, Keith sputtered, then helplessly cracked up.

Matt chuckled, "The gorillas have MP5-AX rifles and Lord knows what else."

Justin nodded, "Derrick and Mike added to our orders. Regardless of what either of you say during the conference, no one is getting within arm's reach of you. This will be an orderly press conference."

"Or else," Chris seriously warned. The elevator doors opened. Chris and Danny led the group out into the hall. King Aalona and Keith walked out next, with Justin and Matt bringing up the rear.

"Mike and Derrick have all of the gorillas and G-Cats posted north of the CIC, beyond the housing checkpoint," Justin continued. "With the attacks here last night, and all the Battle Of Earth crap, Mike and Derrick asked us, UNIT security and Kekoa, how to keep everyone safe. They're following the plan to the letter."

King Aalona grinned. Keith noticed, but he also heard noises in the air conditioning ducts above his head. Knowing it was the Scooby Gang, Keith sighed and thought, 'great, everybody's at high alert again, for a friggin' press conference.'

Stepping outside, Keith and the King noticed Colin Powell's secret service holding open the doors. The two gorillas were also dressed in their formal uniforms. Not only were they carrying their rifles, but also had their sheathed swords wrapped around their waistbelts. The gorillas sharply turned about-face and started walking the path toward the FYS building. The other four took their positions to the sides and the rear of Keith and the King. Keith wondered, "Nasir, is that sword ceremonial or what?"

Keith's gorilla didn't pause, but unsheathed his sword. Passing a tree, he jumped and took a swing at a low hanging branch of fair diameter. The branch fell to the ground. Returning the sword to its sheath, Nasir shrugged, "Or what, it seems."

Pulling his robe hood over his head, Keith covered his face with his other hand, softly giggling, "Omigod."

Over at the FYS Building, a female reporter from the Tribune-Herald went to the ladies room. On her way out, she noticed a door left ajar and pushed it open. It was one of the doctors' treatment rooms with two bio-beds. She took her cell phone out of her handbag and snapped a photo. A gorilla and a G-Cat converged on her. The gorilla took the cell phone, held it in front of her face and crushed it. Little pieces of plastic and microchips fell to the floor like dust. The G-Cat informed her, "You're out of here. Let's get your things."

"But my job is to report this press conference," the lady meekly reminded.

The gorilla snarled, "Your instructions were no photographs beyond the conference room."

"What if a doctor was in there with a child?" the G-Cat hissed.

Without answering the question, the lady complained, "My editor won't be happy."

"That's not our problem," the gorilla indifferently said. "If you still have a job, next time you'll listen to instructions and follow them."

The woman was escorted to the conference room to retrieve her jacket and other belongings, then led to her car. She drove off base, certain that this would be a major problem at the newspaper and she would likely have to find another job.

Only moments later, King Aalona and Keith arrived at the FYS Building. By this time, the gorillas had confirmed proper protocol with the King. Entering the conference room, Gamba and Nasir stepped to the sides of the doorway. Gamba loudly announced, "All rise for His Majesty, King Aalona, King of the Jeweled Isles, Lord of Hawaii and Protector of the Pacific Rim."

Everyone stood and applauded. King Aalona entered the room and wordlessly went to the podium at the front of the room. Keith followed with the four security boys. Televisions around the ROH were tuned in at homes, in the dorms, and at the CIC. Since he was still awake after meeting with Jonas and Harry, Colin Powell was watching from his condominium. Those watching saw Keith take a position to the right of the King and only a step back. Keith appeared very unhappy, like the room of reporters were enemies to be carefully watched. The security personnel took positions near the front row. Other gorillas, G-Cats and human base security were along the sides of the room.

One of the teen boys gathered in the CIC's rec room, Peter Dano noticed that "Keith looks really annoyed."

Hugh Gartrell nodded, "After all the crap last night and into today, with Prez's ass blistered and burned, I can't blame him."

Peter sniggered, "I wonder if the security dudes look that intense. Screw taking names, Keith looks ready to kick some ass."

The stress of the last day was clearly written on the King's face. He prompted, "Please be seated." Once everyone had returned to their chairs, King Aalona began; "Aloha, citizens of Hawaii. The scope and severity of events here and around the world have left me officially dumbfounded, and personally outraged. As a race, acting as one with our off-planet allies and friends, we managed to fight off our attackers, and triumph, winning our right to exist as a species, with our freedoms, without their interference. We have won back our world. Those celebrating have good reason. I am also pleased and relieved with you."

The King looked down at his notes. With fire in his eyes, He looked up again and loudly raged, "These events started here, in our wonderful small nation, AT MY HOME! Violence started here, BY HUMANS! Humans, acting alone, without Romulan interference or intervention, ATTACKED MY HOME, PUTTING MY WIFE AND MY SON IN DANGER!" The King's words seemed to echo in the conference room. Several of the reporters visibly jumped in their seats at the strength and fury the King projected.

Taking a deep breath, King Aalona more calmly explained, "I was attacked because I chose to accept help from our Vulcan friends and allies, to reform our damaged government. For no other reason, but to tell me to break off relations with Vulcan, I was attacked. For the same purpose, those people attacked Honolulu Airport and The Hyatt Regency at Waikiki. Innocent lives were carelessly taken. Those responsible have been identified and they are being brought to justice. They will be held accountable for two deaths at my palace and one-hundred-seventy deaths at the Hyatt. The penalty is death. By my standards, by our society's standards and by the standards of Vulcan, mass murderers must pay with their lives. Does it give me my palace guards back? No. Does it alleviate the pain and suffering of the families of those men? Not entirely. Children are still without their fathers. Wives are still without their husbands. However, they do know that those who have harmed them have been dealt justice.

"If you are asking, what is justice, then I'd like for you to consider the similar attack on an abortion clinic last month. What did those women, doctors and nurses do to deserve being killed and maimed? Citizens of Hawaii, I am done with this. Enforcing your beliefs in that militant fashion will not be condoned in this nation. If you do not believe in a women's right to choose, that is your problem. If you do not like Russians, or Americans, or Vulcans, that is your problem. If you encroach on another in this nation, you will be dealt with, in as severe a manner as you dealt with others.

"I am working with our Vulcan allies, and with diplomats in Japan, and with diplomats in the United Kingdom, and with the United States of America. Our laws will be changing, in a logical manner. Justice will be served, in all cases. Prove yourself a bigot, and you will pay the price, as a criminal, in a detention facility, where other bigots can treat you in a bigoted manner.

"Since last night, I have been here on this Clan Short Base, with over two hundred children, of varying ages, nationalities and races. I have watched them interact. Prior to having my crown restored last week, I have seen adults in many of our cities acting less mature than every child on this base. And these are children that have been abused. I defy people to try to make excuses and justify their actions when these children are more mature.

"No longer will this be the case. My innocence was lost with gunfire through windows of my home last night. World wide change is upon us. The attacks, battles, riots and the resulting changes were instigated. We were taken advantage of, and we have responded as one world. I will see this country through our changes, giving support where it is necessary, and delivering justice, with a logical perspective.

"To my right is the Assistant Director of Clan Short Pacific Rim Division, Keith Hundser. He is with me because the Division Director was injured last night while helping people evacuate the Hyatt Regency. Someone please explain to me why three hundred Clan boys assisted and not one additional adult, beyond our police and firefighters, even offered to help?"

The King waited for a response for almost a minute. He then grinned, "These boys assisted me at my palace, they dealt with those that were attacking, they helped evacuate innocents at the airport and at the Hyatt. Most of the day, Clan Short military assisted in winning battles and Clan Short civilians helped relocate refugees. If you find fault with Clan Short, then I must state that your priorities are severely warped. I can foresee a world where neighbors help each other, where disasters as have been experienced around the world are met with thousands of helpers. Just as Clan Short was there for us in our time of need, we should be proud of them, and try to act like them, and help them as they have helped many others." Turning to Keith, King Aalona asked, "Please tell the press how many children have been rescued, Keith?" The King stepped back to allow access to the microphone.

Pulling his PADD out of his robe pocket, Keith stated, "Pacific Rim Division started with eighty-seven last Saturday. We've rescued at least ten per day on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday. Wednesday night, we returned from California with thirty-six. Thursday morning, we received the first of the Level One California orphanage kids, another thirty-six. During the day Thursday, we picked up eight more. Thus far today, we've added twenty-five American kids whose parents lost their lives. Currently, we have two-hundred and sixty-four children on base." Keith stepped back.

The press corps softly muttered amongst themselves. King Aalona stepped up to the podium. When the chatter dwindled, King Aalona said, "Yes, they have the resources of all of Clan Short available to them. Yes, they have Starfleet and Vulcan backing them up; however, let me say that those are material matters. Thirteen boys manage all these children, and the rescued children managed themselves today, while many of their leaders were busy with Battle of Earth repercussions, namely, dealing with the refugees, providing safety for me and my family, and the American Secretary Of State, Colin Powell has also benefited from Clan hospitality.

"I wish you could have heard the conversation that I heard, in their dining room before dinner this evening. The discussion started on the topic of restricted access to Internet pornography. It blossomed into a more serious discussion that I have never heard from adults anywhere. Children under ten were present. Children ten and older participated, as well as the leadership team of this division. No one was rude. No one was dirty. No one mocked anyone else. The many adults and parents present didn't interfere, because there was no reason to.

"What a world we could have if we all treated each other similarly. If this is an indication of our future coming out through our children, then I say, it's about time."

After a brief pause, the King said, "I will be releasing further specific information about changes to our Nation's laws as time progresses. That is all I have for you this evening. Thank you for your time. Aloha, citizens of Hawaii." The King stepped away from the podium. The press corps stood. With a wave of Keith's hand, the security team converged, again surrounding the King and Keith as they walked from the room.

Out in the hall, Keith glanced at the King, completely surprised with what He had said. Noticing Keith's glance, King Aalona smiled, "Yes, Keith?" The door was held open for them and they walked outside, back around the path toward the CIC and the condos.

Keith shrugged and softly admitted, "I'm just surprised, Majesty. I was with you when you prepared a great deal of your speech. You were calm the entire time."

"That was appropriate at the time," the King stated. "I would not show anger in front of you, Keith. My anger is not directed at you, but it was directed at those imbeciles that attacked my home, and at those adults that do not know how to act in public, and those who believe themselves better than other races and species. If I could have done so, I would have directly told those that believe in that arrogant manner to leave my country via the next available ship or plane. That was not possible, but I have made my intentions crystal clear. If I have my way, there will be new laws put in place so that bigots are arrested, perhaps overnight for the first public offense, three days for the second, and so forth, increasing the incarceration time with each public offense. I will push for something like that, but we'll have to see how that progresses."

Keith sighed, "It's really sad that laws have to be enacted so that people learn to grow up. I can't imagine what my life would be like if I had to get repeatedly grounded to learn a lesson. I sure wouldn't be playing piano as well."

"You wouldn't be here as a Clan Short leader either," King Aalona stated. "I believe it is a small percentage of people that will need to worry about such a law. It would be a considerably smaller number that would go beyond the first slap on the wrist."

"I sure hope that's true," Keith smirked. "Adults spending days in jails, eventually losing their jobs, and completely messing up their lives, all so they can complain about abortions or gays or other races publicly, or in militant fashions. Where is their self preservation instinct; out to lunch?" Nodding, the King softly chortled. Approaching the CIC doors, Keith told the security team, "You dudes are dismissed. As usual, you did an awesome job. I need a soda, and then I'm going to check on Prez."

Waving, Chris, Danny and the gorillas went to change out of their dress uniforms. The King, Justin and Matthew followed Keith into the dining room. There they found about half of the Rimmer teens and tweens, all the chefs and housekeepers, the Queen and Prince Kaimi, standing proudly and quietly at attention. Keith, Justin and Matthew also stood quietly at attention for the Monarch. The King drank in this show of respect for a few moments, until Kaimi ran to his father. The King squatted down and caught his son, then stood, lifting Kaimi and planting the Prince on his hip. Everyone applauded. Queen Amadina approached her husband. The King smiled. Tapping Justin and Matthew, Keith jerked his head toward the kitchen. The three of them went into the chow line, leaving the Royals to receive the congratulations from the kids.

Grabbing a cup and starting to fill it with 7-UP, Keith told Justin and Matthew, "Prez and I are planning on spending time with all our security tomorrow. The week's been so busy, we simply haven't had the time to get to know any of you very well, and we're sorry about that, but we'll make it up to you. Either me or Prez will give you guys a call the first chance we get tomorrow."

Surprised, Justin and Matt glanced at each other. Justin smiled, "Thanks, Keith. That would be very kewl. We'll look forward to it." They heard the King thanking the Clan and the applause dwindling.

Keith smiled, "Grab whatever you came in here for, and then get out of those dress uniforms. Through tonight and into tomorrow, I suspect we'll only be dealing with refugees. Since Prez can't do a hell of a lot in a shower wrap, we'll let the other Core Rimmers deal with that. I don't want to see any of you dudes in uniforms; board shorts, T-shirts and sandals are the uniform of the day. Not once have I seen any of you acting like a teenager. That stops now. Off duty, you're like everyone else. If I see you by the pool, it'll be like the other kids, naked and having fun." Nodding, Justin and Matt softly sniggered. Keith chuckled, "See ya later. I've got to go check on the Head Rimmer, and he had better be relaxing. If I have to tie him down, things could rapidly digress from there." Justin and Matthew cracked up.

Leaving the CIC, Keith went directly to his townhouse, sipping his soda and wondering what Prez was doing. Stepping inside his house, he was surprised to find Prez kicked back on the couch, watching TV with Dee and Sammy. Keith asked, "Gage and Richie aren't back yet?"

Shaking his head, Prez answered, "Drew gave me a call a little while ago. Thanks to Grandma Morrison, the nine they went to get became eleven. Most of them are under ten-years-old; four seven-year-olds, a nine-year-old, an eight-year-old, a six-year-old and a four-year-old. I had Drew call Doc Wiener and Doc Andrews to join them in the store. Drew said he would also call Derrick's folks too, so the kids could start to adjust, separately from the others. They'll prob'ly be there a while longer."

Nodding, Keith put his cup of soda down. He took off his Clan robe, suspiciously wondering, "What have you three been doing?" Prez sniggered, gesturing to his two sons.

Looking up at Keith, Sammy grinned, "Pop's been good. He took his pills and we've been here ever since."

Dee nodded, "Uncle Drew called and Lindsay stopped by. Poppa made her a leader and gave her a comm-badge. Jonas and Harry was here too. Poppa took them to Uncle Colin and came right back home. That's all the work he's done, Daddy."

Bringing his cup of soda to the couch, Keith sat down next to Prez, softly asking, "How're you feeling?"

Prez shrugged, "A little drowsy, but okay for the most part."

Keith wondered, "Why aren't you in bed if you're drowsy?"

"It's only seven-forty," Prez reminded. "If I crash now, I'll be awake, wandering around, at three in the morning."

Keith sighed, "Betchya you'll sleep longer if you'd just let it happen." Prez whimpered. Dee and Sammy giggled. Grinning, Keith asked Prez, "When does your body do most of it's healing?"

Dee and Sammy chorused, "When you're sleeping."

Prez whimpered louder. Keith sniggered, "A nine-year-old and a ten-year-old know what you don't, baby." Standing up, Keith offered his hand to Prez. Stubbornly, Prez wrapped his arms around his chest. Dee and Sammy watched their pop and dad squint at each other for a few seconds. Keith warned his sons, "Watch out, dudes." Giggling, Dee and Sammy scurried off the couch. Leaning over, Keith took one of Prez's arms and pulled him up off the couch. With their sons starting to laugh, Keith got most of Prez over his shoulder, and then stood.

Prez hysterically bellowed, "KEITH!"

"It's bed time, T'hy'la," Keith sniggered, and then carried Prez to the stairs. Keith started climbing steps.

Waving at his sons, Prez giggled, "See ya in the morning."

Sammy giggled, "G'night, Pop."

"Good night, Poppa," Dee laughed.

Sliding his hands into the back pockets of Keith's board shorts, Prez copped a feel and grinned, "You looked yummy on TV, T'hy'la."

"I had my Clan robe on."

"Really? I didn't notice," Prez giggled.

When Keith and Prez were out of sight, Dee turned to Sammy, softly wondering, "Should we leave?"

Sammy shrugged, "Why? It's not like we don't know what they'll be doing. Since pop's hurt, they can't get too busy."

Dee grinned, "Do you like boys more than girls?"

Nodding, Sammy smiled, "Yeah. You?"

Dee shrugged, "I don't know yet."

From upstairs, the boys heard Prez loudly giggling, "Oh God, Keith!"

Sputtering, Sammy picked up the TV remote and turned up the volume. Facing Dee, he giggled, "Until dad comes back down here, we'll leave it loud."

Nodding, Dee smiled, "So are you looking around for a boyfriend?" Sammy nodded. Dee giggled, "Any ideas of who you might like that likes you too?"

Blushing, Sammy nodded, "Yeah."

"Who?"

"I'll let you know after I let him know," Sammy sniggered.

Down in the CIC basement store, the group of youngest boys had succumbed to Doc Wiener's gentle prodding and questions about their families. The crying and tears lasted a while, even with the Rimmer sons gallantly making themselves available for hugs. It caused the older boys to open up, softly sharing their losses and pain with AJ, Corey, Drew and Jerry. Strangely, Leo cried but never explained what had happened to him. When the older boys calmed themselves, AJ and Jerry went to help the younger boys.

As it worked out, the four Steib brothers stayed with the two Seibert adults and the Rimmer sons. The three Hunnicutt brothers happily trailed Jerry and AJ through the store. While assisting Craig, Phillip, Leo and Raymond, Drew and Corey happened to notice Jerry carrying Shaun Hunnicutt. After his emotional outburst, the four-year-old was tired and getting cranky. Having dealt with little ones often enough at the orphanage before he was fostered, Jerry held Shaun with one arm, got him clothing, and occasionally blew raspberries onto the boy's arm or belly. Corey and Drew could see what was happening, but wondered if Jerry or AJ realized it.

At a convenient moment, while they were at the checkout counters and Shaun was snoozing on Jerry's shoulder, Drew approached Jerry. So he wouldn't wake Shaun, or be overheard, Drew softly checked, "How do you feel, Jerr?"

Widely smiling, Jerry whispered, "Like me and AJ should've done this days ago, even though we didn't really know what we wanted to do, or if Prez needed the help at the time."

Drew nodded and smiled, gently offering, "You and AJ are ensigns in Starfleet now. Talk it over, spend the time alone that you need to, but if I were you, I'd adopt all three Hunnicutts." Jerry grinned. Drew softly chortled, "I know, it's weird when you first think of it, but Shaun's out cold, in your arm and on your shoulder. They like and trust you and AJ. That's the way it happens. More importantly, for those three, they need that return to a regular life. Tonight, come back to the nest, ya know, after you and AJ take care of each other and talk it over. Then, if everything's kewl, ask them tomorrow."

Jerry nodded and then wondered, "What's it like?"

Drew smiled, "Do you really want to know?" When Jerry rapidly nodded, Drew led him a few paces away, and then softly admitted, "I've always loved Corey, since I was five and he was four. We started making out and trying stuff about a year ago, but never went for intercourse until Monday afternoon. We had already adopted Geoff on Saturday, so it was like nothing I ever expected. After we got married Tuesday night, we did it again. That's when Corey told me that he wanted my babies. When he made love to me the next day, I told him the same thing. Yeah, it's silly, but that's where we're at; so completely committed that we want to reproduce. Having kids makes the act something so intense, it's a wonder neither of us passed out."

Jerry smiled, "I never thought you and Corey swapped places."

Nodding understandingly, Drew grinned, "We're hearing that a lot from you dudes that were literally fucked with, and now getting into gay partnerships. The simple fact is, we've got the same equipment, so why shouldn't I give Corey what he needs? I don't want him looking for that somewhere else. He's mine, and I'm his, every way we need and no matter what one of us needs. If AJ's not sure, then let him make love to you, and then you tell him how much you want his babies. He'll climax like a volcano, and then watch how fast he changes his mind. Prez will gladly do the adoptions for you."

"Thanks, Drew," Jerry smiled.

"Anytime," Drew softly giggled. "We're brothers now, and our sons are cousins. It's so kewl, for all of us." With a nod of Drew's head toward the checkout counters, they went back to help get the kids' suitcases packed.

Suspiciously, AJ eyed Jerry. At first Jerry smirked and shook his head, but then he mouthed, "I love you so much."

Feeling his heart race and his face flushing, AJ silently smiled, "I love you too."

Into AJ's and Jerry's new sub-vocals, Alden giggled, "Thanks so much, guys. That's really nice to know. Three's a crowd though, so I'll bow out."

Grandma Morrison's tour wrapped up. All the available adults met Grandma over at the Seavers' home. They had tea and chatted about their sons, grandsons, and what it was like to be Clan adults. Grandma especially liked Corey's light-hearted personality. All one had to do was make Corey giggle and soon he would be laughing. Twice that day, Grandma had seen Corey laugh himself into hiccups. "His laugh is so infectious too," Grandma happily relayed. "He made other saddened refugees laugh, adults and kids alike."

This didn't surprise any of the Rimmers' parents. Lanna Seaver smiled, "Corey was an only child. When he was alone, he wasn't especially sad, but he wasn't the same as when he was with the Hundser boys and their friends. He's always been especially attached to Drew, but in larger groups of boys, Corey really glows. Since Saturday and becoming a Clan leader, Corey's been in heaven."

With all the suitcases packed, the Seiberts and Doc Wiener said goodnight to the kids and departed. The Clan leaders prepared to get the newbies out of the basement store. Over all their comm-badges, Alden said, "Weather forecasts have a greater than sixty-percent chance of rain during the night. If it's alright, I'll transport the luggage down into the Hundserts' basement."

Drew nodded, "That's kewl, Alden. Since the Gibbons and Seibert kids have all moved on, we've got the space. Put the suitcases along the back wall beside the fridge."

"It's done, Drew," Alden said, "they're only two rows deep, and the smaller suitcases are in front of the larger ones."

Glancing around the group of newbies, Corey asked, "Are you guys very tired?" One after another, the Steib quadruplets and youngest two of the Hunnicutt brothers all answered they were tired. Corey said, "Kewl, then we'll put off your base orientation until tomorrow. Alden, transport us to the Hundserts' basement, dude."

In a blink, they were all standing in the Hundserts' basement. Gage said, "We're gonna go home now, Uncle Drew."

Drew smiled, "That's kewl. You guys were a big help. I'm going to tell Keith and Prez what awesome jobs you did too."

Kenny, Leo, Raymond and the Nash brothers warmly thanked Gage and Richie. Giggling, Richie and Gage hurried to the stairs and up.

AJ, Corey and Drew started pulling padding down from the stacks to rebuild the nest. Leo and Raymond helped with the mattresses. Craig and Phillip decided to help by grabbing blankets and pillows. Once there was sufficient padding on the floor for the seven boys, AJ asked the younger boys if they needed to use the bathroom. The quadruplets silently checked with one another before nodding and chorusing, "Yeah."

Saying, "Follow me, guys," AJ led a pack of six upstairs.

Gently and softly, Jerry called, "Shaun?" When the boy hummed, Jerry asked, "Do you need to go to the bathroom, buddy?"

"I guess," Shaun yawned and wiped his eyes. Jerry followed the pack up the stairs.

AJ led the quadruplets to the ground floor bathroom saying, "If any of you need to do more than pee, follow me upstairs. Without a word all four shook their heads and gathered around the toilet. Still carrying Shaun, Jerry closed the basement door.

In the basement, with the bedding prepared for the little guys, Craig thoughtfully hummed. He called, "Hey, Drew?"

Heading to the other side of the basement, Drew cheerfully asked, "Wassup, Craig?"

Following along, Craig stammered, "Umm... I uh... who else will be down here?"

Turning to face the older boy, Drew shrugged, "Me, Corey, Geoff, Lenny, Leo, all the new guys, and a couple of other new kids we picked up the last day or so."

Corey nodded, "Travis is fifteen, Scott and Chris are fourteen, Fred, Chauncey and Lance are thirteen, and eleven other boys are Drew's age and younger." Corey told Drew, "We should probably go find them. Almost all of 'em are from the East coast of America. They're probably getting tired too."

Nodding, Drew held up an index finger to signal Corey to wait a moment. Drew asked, "Is something wrong, Craig?"

"I'm not sure," Craig sighed.

Seeing his big brother at a loss, Phillip grinned, "Think about it, guys; Craig's a couple of years older than us."

Corey began giggling. Seeing the light, Drew grinned, "Betchya I've got almost as much pubes as you do, Craig." Phillip and Raymond cracked up.

Seeing few light brown hairs on Drew's arms and legs, Craig smirked, "I'd doubt that."

Drew chuckled, "Corey's got pubes. I'd bet Ray's got at least a few too." Blushing, Raymond nodded. Moving closer to the taller and older boy, Drew smiled, "It's kewl, dude. We've all got dicks, and we all wake up with morning wood. This nest is for us to get to know each other a little better, nothing else. Guaranteed a bunch of you older dudes will want a dorm room for tomorrow night." Waving an arm around and spinning in place, Drew rambled, "We've got this awesome TV, a bunch of PlayStations and X-Boxes, the fridge is loaded with sodas and juices, and a couple of microwaves for popcorn when we get the munchies."

Going to Craig, Corey wrapped his arms around the oldest newbie and smiled up at him. "You're my big bro now, just as much as every other older dude on this base. Every other younger dude is my little bro. I've got your back, as much as Phillip, I promise."

Craig grinned, "That's why you were giggling?"

Corey nodded, "Last Saturday night, our first night on this base, we had over a hundred boys and girls down here. That other side of the basement was wall-to-wall mattresses, blankets and kids, boys and girls, from four-years-old to fifteen-years-old."

Relaxing a little, Craig glanced around, blushing, "I'm not sure if I'm straight or bi."

Drew shrugged, "It's a big group. You'll figure it out when the right guy or girl knocks you for a loop. Pick your butt up and go get yourself that really special guy or girl."

Corey nodded, "Nobody here will give you a bad scene, dude." He released Craig and stepped back.

The Steib quadruplets came back down the stairs. Drew said, "Craig, if you'll hang out here with Phillip and Raymond for a couple of minutes, Corey and I can go find our other newbies. Whoever is tired, we'll bring back here. Is that kewl?" Craig smiled and nodded.

Going over to the nest side of the basement, the Steib quadruplets stopped a few meters away from the bedding to kick their sneakers off. They got undressed to their briefs, and then chose a place to sleep together.

Phillip asked, "Can we play video games?"

Corey nodded and smiled, "Sure, or watch TV; just keep the sound low on the TV's so the little guys can sleep."

Taking Corey's hand, Drew suggested, "Help yourself to the fridge and popcorn too. We'll only be gone about ten minutes."

Craig nodded, "Kewl." He and Phillip went to the row of game stations. Corey and Drew climbed the stairs with Geoff, Leo and Lenny trailing along behind. Raymond chose to turn on the big wall mounted television. At the top of the stairs, Geoff and Lenny tickled Leo. All three giggled. Returning the favor, Leo tickled Geoff and Lenny back.

Hearing AJ, Jerry and the Hunnicutts coming down from upstairs, Drew and Corey waited. Now AJ was carrying Shaun and Jerry was carrying Mike. Corey giggled, "Are daddies and their boys ready for bed?"

Nodding, AJ and Jerry smiled. Kenny glanced around and loudly wondered, "That can really happen here?"

Drew chuckled, "If you want dads and dads want sons, sure."

"Awesome!" Kenny and Mike cheered.

In AJ's arms, Shaun nodded and yawned, "Kewl."

AJ smiled, "We'll talk about it tomorrow, after a good night's sleep."

Drew explained to AJ and Jerry what he and Corey were heading off to take care of. Jerry nodded, "We'll hang out downstairs with our favorite boys."

Innocently, Mike checked, "We're your favorites?" When AJ and Jerry nodded, the six-year-old in Jerry's arms squeezed him tight.

Heading for the kitchen sliding door, Drew smiled, "We'll be back in a flash." AJ and Jerry nodded, then took the boys downstairs.

Drew led the pack outside. The back porches of the four homes had lights, and there were additional bright pole lamps scattered around the walkways of the housing area. As soon as he slid the door closed, Drew tapped his comm-badge, calling, "Keith?"

Keith's voice replied, "Wassup, bro?"

Drew wondered, "Is Prez awake?" Over his comm-badge, Drew heard four giggling boys in the background.

"Nope, I wore him out," Keith sniggered. "Even on pain pills, it took some effort."

Corey started giggling. The next thing he knew, three sets of hands, Geoff's, Lenny's and Leo's, were tickling him. Drew chuckled, "Oh well. We'll get adoptions done tomorrow."

Keith wondered, "Who this time?"

"One for me and Corey," Drew smiled. "And, believe it or not, AJ and Jerry found the Hunnicutt brothers and they latched onto each other."

"That's great!" Keith cheered. "I knew those two would make awesome additions to our team."

Watching Corey overcome with tickling hands and falling down again, Drew chuckled, "Yeah, they're just like Kaleo, Tory and Sean used to be, a little unsure and quiet."

"We'll get that corrected soon enough," Keith assured. "I just sent an e-mail to Donnie to get them and Reyes phaser training."

In the background, Sammy suggested, "Get AJ and Jerry married, Dad."

Further away, Gage shouted, "Sean and Troy need to get hitched too."

Keith hummed, then said, "Yeah, let me see what I can do about that."

"Kewl," Drew grinned, and called "out".

Slowing his tickle-attack on Corey, Leo looked up and meekly asked, "Do you really want me?"

Drew confirmed, "Do you really want me and Corey for fathers, and Geoff and Lenny as little brothers?"

Leo stopped tickling Corey, and so did Lenny and Geoff. Kneeling on the grass, with his hands on his knees, Leo thought aloud. "Grandma's kewl; she wouldn't set me up with bad guys, and you've all been really kewl to me." He looked at Lenny, and then Geoff, and then Corey. He smiled, "Yeah, this would be an awesome family."

The words had barely left Leo's lips when Corey, Lenny and Geoff attacked, tickling him down flat on the ground and hysterically trying to block three sets of hands.

Scratching the side of his head behind his ear, Drew softly giggled, "I guess it's settled then." Noticing Leo's iPod Nano and ear-buds had slipped out of a pocket and onto the ground, Drew picked them up and pocketed them. He then ordered Alden to get a charger. A moment later Drew stuffed the charger into his back pocket.

Drew hadn't noticed, but Lanna Seaver saw the young family out her kitchen sliding glass doors. She called Jen and Grandma over to see the boys first tickling Corey, then after about thirty-seconds of calm, the new boy was being tickled. Grandma smiled, "I simply had a gut feeling. The one flat on his back is Leo Daniel Scott. If he's not already your grandson, he will be soon enough."

It became obvious to Drew that they weren't going to make it to the pools or CIC anytime soon. Recalling the names of the newbies rescued during the afternoon, Drew called, "Alden, hook me up to the PA around the base, dude."

Alden replied, "Go ahead, Drew."

Drew announced, "This is for our newest Rimmers only. Albert and Charles McPhearson, Toby and Tanner Stoeher, Nate, Sal and Rickie Ramos, Jimmy Carr, Scott Deaver, Billy Whittmore, Jason Mullins, Patrick O'Hara, Scott Shetley, Lance Kinchen, Rafe Montigua, Chris Stokley, Travis McAuley, Fred and Chauncey Eckhart, please meet me at the lawns between the four Rimmer homes. Thanks. That's all."

The tickling on the ground suddenly stopped. Four smiling faces with mischief in their eyes looked up at Drew. "No," Drew giggled, and backed away. Corey, Geoff, Lenny and Leo started to stand and Drew jogged away. In moments, Drew was being chased around the lawn by his husband and three sons. Noticing the gathered adults sitting at the Seavers' kitchen table, Drew waved as he ran by.

The Stoeher twins, the Ramos brothers, Jimmy Carr, Scott Deaver and Patrick O'Hara, with Ralphie glued to his side, were the first to arrive at the lawns. Seeing the chase, they all started giggling. On his return trip around the lawns, Drew laughed, "Are any of you tired? I sure am!"

"We can tell!" The twins loudly giggled.

Ralphie checked with Patrick, "Are you sleepy?"

Making a crooked face, Patrick reluctantly answered, "Yeah, I guess I am. It's been a crazy day." He smiled, "Thanks for making it easier. I really like you a lot, Ralphie."

Widely smiling, Ralphie nodded and giggled, "I'm right there with ya too, Pat. Let me just tell my brothers, I'm gonna be with you until you fall asleep, okay?"

Rapidly nodding, Patrick grinned, "Can you be good?"

Ralphie giggled, "I told you, I'll be kewl until we both decide it's time."

Pat nodded, and then gave Ralphie a quick hug, whispering, "Hurry." Ralphie stepped back and was off like greased lightning.

Jason, Billy, Chauncey, Fred and the puppy, Rikko, ran up to the group. Seeing Drew still being chased, Fred giggled, "What's goin' on?"

Rikko whined and barked, "Play time! Let's go!" The pup bolted for the group of boys running in big circles.

Pointing across the lawns, Toby shrugged and sniggered, "With them, we have no idea."

Pat grinned, "Are any of you tired?"

Fred turned to Chauncey, saying, "You should be by now."

Chauncey wondered, "What time is it?"

"Here, it's a little after eight o'clock," Fred grinned, "In Colorado, it's after midnight."

Lance gasped and checked his Casio wristwatch. "No wonder I feel run down," he muttered to Scott Shetley. "I'm still on New York time. To us, it's quarter after two in the morning." Pressing buttons on his watch, he reset the time to Hawaii Time Zone. Off to the side, Billy and Jason decided to be roommates at the dorm, and then asked Jimmy and Scott Deaver, their foster brothers, if they would mind sleeping in the nest if they moved into the dorm that night. Jimmy and Scott had no problems with Billy and Jason moving to the dorms, but they were looking forward to another night in the nest.

Running up to the lawns, Travis McAuley, Chris Stokley, and Rafe Montigua, only a meter or two behind the former two, all loudly asked, "What's up?"

"Us, just barely," Tanner joked.

Fred smiled, "It's only quarter after eight Hawaii time, but after midnight in Colorado and after two Eastern time."

Rafe softly giggled, "Damn! My parents would've had a fit if they saw me awake this late."

Coming around the lawn again, Drew was laughing too hard to maintain his lead or say anything to the gathered group. Corey loudly ordered, "Catch Drew, dudes!"

The oldest boys in the group grinned and nodded at each other. Chris and Travis went one way. Lance and Scott took the opposite direction. Wide-eyed and knowing he was screwed, Drew slid down to the grass, curled into a fetal position and waited for the onslaught. In moments, he was surrounded by his husband, sons and twelve newbies, being tickled to tears.

After about a minute, Drew managed get only two words out clearly. "ALDEN, HELP!" He disappeared from the bottom of the pile.

Still curled up and laughing, Drew reappeared on the basement floor, not a meter behind Raymond, who was on the couch watching TV, and also behind Craig and Phillip. All three turned around and grinned.

Shaking his head, Craig sighed, "This place is a trip."

Phillip giggled, "Are you okay, Drew?"

Still catching his breath, Drew couldn't answer, but nodded.

Kneeling on the couch cushion and looking over the back at Drew, Raymond teased, "So, umm... I can only wonder."

Drew gasped between giggles, "They couldn't catch me. Corey cheated... and got the teenagers... to block me... sixteen hands... tickling me at once."

"Well, yeah, that would do it," Raymond smiled.

Dizzily sitting up, Drew wondered, "Where are Jerry and A.J?"

Raymond pointed to his left, answering, "Laying in the nest, with the three Hunnicutt brothers between them."

Drew looked up at Raymond, asking, "Have people called you Ray, for short?"

Nodding, Raymond smiled, "All the time. My folks used to call me Raymond. It drove me nuts. I always thought I was in trouble. Don't do that anymore, okay?"

Knowing that dealing with the memories had to be rough, Drew answered, "No problem."

Craig softly sniggered, "Fill 'er up, Phil."

"Shut up," Phil giggled.

Standing, Drew put Leo's iPod, ear-buds and charger in the end table drawer. Turning around, Drew grinned, "Are you that well hung?"

"He'd like to think so," Craig teased.

A little more loudly, Phil laughed, "Shut up!"

Corey had already warned the boys he was with that the little guys might be asleep, so he quietly led them in the house and down stairs to the basement.

Seeing legs on the staircase, Drew suggested, "Craig and Phil, hit pause, please, so we can get some introductions out of the way." Even Rikko padded quietly down the steps. He went to the nest, sniffing around to get the scent of the new kids.

Drew and Corey swapped the job of introducing all the newbies. Once that was done, Drew asked if anyone needed a bathroom. Only two did, Rafe and Ray, but the other newbies went for the tour, so when they did need to go, they wouldn't be completely lost in the foreign and very large home.

When the group came back downstairs, AJ and Jerry were up and out of the nest. Jerry told Drew, "All the boys are asleep. We're gonna take that time you mentioned now."

Nodding, AJ cutely smiled, "There's not much to talk about, which is good."

Blushing such that his freckles could barely be noticed, Jerry giggled, "We'll be back well before eleven." Corey and Drew nodded. AJ and Jerry went upstairs, and then out of the house, heading to their dorm room.

Wordlessly, Pat led Ralphie to the nest. For the first time, Ralphie got to watch Pat undress to his underwear. Seeing his new boyfriend rapidly shift from blushing to leers, Pat tossed his shirt in Ralphie's face. Ralphie giggled and pulled the shirt away from his eyes, but then he realized how good the shirt smelled, just like Pat, and lifted it to his face again, inhaling deeply through his nose. It was Pat's turn to fiercely blush. Giggling at each other, they got two mattress pads, blankets and pillows from the piles, then got situated in the nest. They lay on their backs for a while, each completely amazed with the other and absorbed in his own thoughts.

Fred led Chauncey over to the nest. They set up two more spots, so they could be close together. Chauncey undressed and Fred softly reminded, "I'll be awake for a little while longer, just to run myself down a little more, so we wake together. I'm not leaving this house without you."

Chauncey smiled, "Brothers forever."

"And then some, big guy," Fred warmly assured. Once Chauncey was laying comfortably, Fred whispered, "Sleep well, with only the best dreams. Everything's going to be very kewl now, bro."

"I know," Chauncey yawned. Slowly spinning in a circle, Rikko settled down next to his favorite human companion.

Fred left the nest area. Rafe went to the nest with Chris. While Rafe undressed, Chris got his young friend's bedding prepared. When Rafe stood on the fresh bedding, Chris softly confirmed, "You're good?"

Rafe nodded and sighed, "Better, but something still feels weird. It's not being here, it's not anything else that happened today. I can't figure it out. We're together in a kewl place, but..."

Chris nodded understandingly, gently assuring, "It's big changes happening fast. Don't let it mess with you."

Pat softly reminded, "I'm right here too, Rafe."

"With your new boyfriend," Rafe giggled.

Ralphie smiled, "I'll be going home as soon as Pat's asleep, Rafe. Chris can take this spot between you."

Chris chuckled, "I'll see you guys in the morning," and returned to the other side of the basement. Fred challenged the older boy to play Sonic, knowing he could easily beat him, but also sure that he could at least make it interesting. Chris nodded and smiled. They got a TV turned on and a game started.

The Stoeher twins and the McPhearson brothers couldn't keep their eyes open. Jimmy and Scott Deaver had played a few video games, yawning all the while. All six went to the nest and got settled in too. In a few more minutes, every thing was quiet. Pat shifted onto his side, facing Ralphie. Looking over, Ralphie whispered, "Can't sleep?"

"Guess I'm over tired," Pat shrugged.

Thinking of what he could do, Ralphie wished Pat was just a little telepathic, then he would know exactly what to do. So, he sent out a telepathic A.P.B. to his brothers. He soon heard the three-fold response; 'What's wrong, bro?'

'Pat can't sleep. What should I do?'

'What is he doing?'

'Laying on his side, lookin' at me.'

'Hold his hand.'

'Ask him what he'd like you to do to help.'

'Jump his bones.'

Rolling his eyes, Ralphie smirked, 'Not funny, Ronnie!'

Hearing the chorus of giggles in his mind, Ralphie combined the first two suggestions. Reaching over and gently laying his hand on Pat's hand, Ralphie asked, "How can I help?"

Pat hummed then smirked, "It's silly and you'll laugh."

Ralphie promised, "I'll never laugh at you."

"You'll do anything?"

"Anything to help you sleep. I want you wide awake tomorrow and spending the day with me."

Pat sighed, "Roll onto your side and scoot back a little, with your back to my front?" Wordlessly, Ralphie did just that. Scooting closer, Pat prompted, "Just a little closer, please?" Ralphie shifted closer. Pat hesitantly put an arm over Ralphie.

Taking hold of Pat's hand, Ralphie asked, "Better?"

"Way better. Thanks."

Thankful that he was still dressed and had only taken his sandals off, Ralphie smiled, "It's what boyfriends do, I think."

Pat inhaled deeply and relaxed. After about a minute, Pat breathed, "You really love me?"

"I think so."

"I think I love you too."

Not another word was spoken for many minutes. Ralphie realized that Pat was breathing slowly and evenly. Pat's arm was still over him though, so he couldn't get up. Not that he really wanted to get up and leave, but that would eventually have to happen. So Ralphie just lay there, enjoying the closeness, listening to the television, sounds of games being played and soft chattering from the other side of the basement.

Corey and Drew checked their PADDs for messages about other activity that might need to be taken care of. Other than messages from Kaleo, Keith and Derrick, all asking about updates to the Rimmer web site, there was nothing else going on. Corey and Drew replied to the messages with instructions needed to get the updates done. Drew then went upstairs to his bedroom and logged on the server, so he could amend the inline instructions. Thirty minutes later, he returned to the basement, Corey and the newbies. Many of the kids were in the nest, except the oldest boys. Having lost interest in video games, Chris Stokley seemed to be losing his fight to remain awake. He sat on the sofa and blankly stared at the television.

At the end of the movie The Incredibles, Kaleo and Tory led a large pack of rug-rats from the auditorium back to the dormitories. It was almost ten o'clock and dozens of kids were over-tired. Among the last kids to be dropped off at dormitory three, were level one orphanage boys Mark Fikes, Marv Perkins, Russ Pass, Leonard Santana and Stan Given. Once alone in their room with the two Core Rimmers, Marv Perkins yawned, "It's kind o' scary here."

Taking his shirt off, Russ muttered, "We're the littlest dudes in this dorm."

Kicking his sandals off, Mark locked eyes with Tory and asked, "Could you stay a little while, please?"

With his puppy dog eyes in full operation, Leonard told Kaleo, "Yeah, we're liking havin' the kewl stuff in our room, ya know, but when the lights are off, we sometimes hear older dudes."

Tory knelt down to help Mark undress and assured, "We'll stay until you're asleep, okay?" As soon as Tory had taken Mark's shirt off, the little boy flung himself against his leader and held on tightly.

Seeing his partner taking care of little guys again for the first time in a week, Kaleo helped Leonard get ready for bed, wondering, "Do the older boys do stuff that scares you?"

Shaking his head, Leonard sighed, "Not really, I guess."

Marv frowned, "They stays awake later and we sometimes hear 'em laughin' and talkin'."

"It wakes us up," Mark smirked.

Nodding understandingly, Tory smiled, "How about we talk with them for you? That way they'll try to be a little more quiet."

Mark shrugged, "We'd still get scared."

The oldest of the five, but not one of the four that slept in this room, Stan innocently grinned, "We want dads." Tory's jaw dropped, pushing Kaleo into loud laughter and the rest of the boys to giggles.

Breaking into giggles, Tory gestured with his index finger for Stan to come closer. The small eight-year-old slowly approached. All four boys and Kaleo watched with great interest. Even Kaleo wasn't sure what Tory was going to do next. Tory smiled, "You're from one of the Anaheim orphanages, right, Stan?"

Nodding, Stan answered, "The same one as Marv and Russ. Drew and Corey saved us. Leonard and Mark are from San Diego."

Tory prompted, "Since things have obviously changed, can you tell us what the deal is?"

He sighed, "We like our rooms, they're awesome compared to where we was, but since we moved in, it's like... not so kewl to use the bathroom here. It makes us nervous, around all the older, bigger dudes. It's not because they're bad or nothin', it's just that we're smaller, ya know? Me, Marv and Russ learned Leonard and Mark felt the same as us, so we stick together, especially in the shower. We're happiest around dudes our age, at the playground and pool. And when you dudes are around, all the Core Rimmers, but especially you two, everything's way better, ya know? I heard what you and Tory did this afternoon in the dining room, when trays fell. Tonight, you took us to the movies. During the show, we talked, and decided it's you two we want to be with."

Seeing Tory smiling, but with shiny, tear filled eyes, Stan softly asked, "What's wrong?" He checked with Kaleo, wondering, "Did I say something bad?"

Slowly and deliberately shaking his head, Kaleo grinned, "We're just beginning to consider maybe trying to be fathers. We were orphans too, rescued by the Clan just last week, guys. I guess we're seeing now what the other Core Rimmers have told us; that kids choose the parents all by themselves. We're surprised that any kid is choosing us. That's why Tory's crying happy tears; because he's happy and scared at the same time. Honestly, I'm feeling the same way; a little worried that I might not be the best dad for the best five boys on the planet."

Russ giggled, "Since we ain't the best five, then we all must be right for each other."

Covering his eyes with both hands, Tory whimpered, "Oh my God!"

"All of you, come here by me," Kaleo gently prompted. The boys gathered around Kaleo. Only Stan was fully dressed, and the other four younger boys were in various undressed states. Working his way around the line of boys, Kaleo gave each a kiss on the cheek, then firmly assured, "To us, you are the five best boys on the planet. Don't ever doubt how totally awesome you are, okay?"

Starting with Leonard, each boy smiled or giggled, "Kewl, dad."

"OH MY GOD!" Tory loudly cried.

Kaleo sniggered, "Give your pop a hug, before he flies to pieces." Enthusiastically, all five hurried to Tory. In their haste to give hugs, they knocked Tory off his knees and onto his butt. Kaleo roared laughing and all the boys began giggling. The only reason Tory didn't collapse onto the floor was the five boys holding him upright. Standing up, Kaleo went to the group saying, "Tomorrow, we'll get Prez to do some adoptions."

Marv giggled, "Is that hard to do?"

"It's Prez's favorite job of all," Kaleo brightly assured. "He'll ask you guys if you want us for fathers, and then he'll ask me and Tory if we want to be dads. All we have to say is, yes, and it's done." Since Marv was the only one of the five down to his briefs and ready for bed, Kaleo lifted the boy and put him on one of the two double size beds. For the first time in his life, Kaleo looked at a boy as a special gift that was his to care for and protect. Similarly, for the first time in Marv's life, he could see a warm joyous smile on someone he could proudly call his dad. Kaleo kissed his youngest and got a kiss back.

Over on the floor, Tory had pulled himself together enough to ask Stan, "Why don't you sleep here with your brothers tonight?"

Stan squealed, "Yeah? Could I really?"

Mark, Leonard and Russ giggled and crowded around their new big brother. Mark kneeled down to take Stan's sandals off. At the same time, Leonard and Russ took Stan's shirt off. Watching Stan unsteadily wobble and giggle, Tory cracked up. In minutes, the three smallest boys were in one bed, and Leonard and Stan were in the other bed. Once all had been kissed goodnight, Kaleo went to turn on the television and turn off the over head light. Kaleo and Tory stayed in the room with the boys, watched TV and quietly tried to get used to the idea that they would soon have five sons.

Still in their dorm room bed together, Arnie checked with Jerry, "You really want to adopt kids?"

"Not just any kids," Jerry smiled, "those three kids. Not only have they already given themselves over to us, we can actually adopt them."

"We're considered adults and Starfleet officers." Arnie admitted, "That's just blowin' me away." Lying on his back, with his left arm wrapped around Jerry, and Jerry resting against him, Arnie couldn't decide if he enjoyed this more than when their positions were reversed. There wasn't any rhyme or reason to which would be resting against the other. Whether Arnie was top or bottom, he could find himself in that very same place and enjoying it just as much.

Jerry chuckled, "When Aunt Laura and Uncle Carl mentioned the possibility, you said yes first."

Arnie giggled, "I did, didn't I?"

Looking up into his lover's eyes, Jerry grinned, "And what happened when I told you how much I wanted your babies?"

Arnie sniggered, "Complete and total loss of all control. Did I last another thirty-seconds?"

"About that," Jerry chuckled. "But ya know what? It was the very best sex we've ever had. What was already good became awesome. I experienced every bit of you, Arnie. When you came inside me, for those moments, I really wished I could get pregnant and have your babies."

"I found out what it was like too," Arnie contentedly sighed. "It was like it was you and more than you too. We've felt like one while we made love before, but this time was way more profound."

"So, we've been best friends since we met. When we were separated, we really missed that friendship. We were reunited, rekindled that friendship, admitting that there had never been anyone any where near that close, so we became boyfriends, moved into this room and made love a couple of times and different ways."

"Now we're Core Rimmers too. Three completely awesome and adorable boys were placed before us. Now it's up to us."

"And them too," Arnie softly offered. "I really hope they weren't just over-tired and saying stuff that they thought we'd like to hear."

"That would hurt."

"And make me want to work to get them back to wanting us as their dads."

"Jerr?"

"Yeah, Arnie?"

"Why do we want them so much? There's a bunch of other little kids right here already. None of them made me feel this way."

Jerry thought a long minute before answering, "They're just right for us. The other little kids that have looked up to us did it like little brothers to big brothers. As Core Rimmers, we're big brothers on a larger scale. Those three Hunnicutt boys just hit the mark. They kind of look like us, like they really could be our sons."

"They make me want to protect them, as much as I want to protect you, maybe a little more, because they're so small, and they've been hurt so badly today. We have to be the best fathers for them."

"We know how not to act; like those fuckers we dealt with the last five or so years. The rest, we'll learn from our Core Rimmer brothers and their families."

"We'll grow into parenthood and they'll become more our kids."

"They'll need special attention, Arnie. We need to learn what they saw today and cuddle them through nightmares and stuff like that."

Arnie shrugged, "Like we do for each other; no big deal." Arnie began giggling.

"What?" Jerry sniggered.

Shaking his head, Arnie giggled, "The way Shaun held onto you, and then held onto me; and Mike too. And Kenny is at that age, making the transition from little boy to big boy. He wants and needs us too. With Kenny, it's in his eyes when he sees us with his younger brothers."

"So it's happening tomorrow?"

"I sure hope so."

"Let's go shower," Jerry suggested, and rolled to the edge of the bed.

Sitting up and propped on his arms, Arnie nodded, "There's one thing I want to do differently."

"Yeah?"

"We wash the sweat off, but what's still inside us stays there."

Shivering with glee, Jerry gushed, "Oh-ho, dude! You make me feel so freakin' amazing."

"Round four?" Arnie giggled, and then spread his legs and bent his knees. Not really interested in a fourth round of love making after three incredible times, Jerry rolled over onto Arnie, causing that closest leg, partially in the air, to bend over, making entry impossible. They held onto each other and rolled around, laughing into kisses.

In the basement nest, the oldest boys were still awake. Geoff, Lenny, Leo, Lance and Fred had made themselves comfy and were asleep, but Pat still hadn't moved. Of course, Ralphie was still lying there. His hand holding Pat's hand had gone numb and his feet had fallen asleep too. There was one thing keeping Ralphie lying there, unwilling to move. In that first thirty minutes or so after Pat fell asleep, Ralphie felt his new boyfriend's hardening dick shifting and poking against his rear end. For Ralphie it was a blessing and a curse; that boner meant that Pat was gay, which was kewl, and it might even be from a dream Ralphie was in, which was even kewler. This got Ralphie hard too, but he was nervous, which kept him exceptionally still. Any movement might cause Pat to have an orgasm, which Ralphie feared would upset his new boyfriend. Wanting to see and touch his boyfriend's erection, but also being troubled about Pat's possible reactions, had Ralphie sweating like he had run five miles.

The A.P.B. went out again. 'Help!'

'Are you still in the Hundserts' basement with Pat?'

'Or are you wankin' somewhere?'

'The white gooey stuff is normal, bro.'

'I love you guys, but I'm gonna kill you if I get out of here.'

The triplet giggling response was; 'What's wrong now?'

'Pat's asleep and has been for over an hour. Laying here, perfectly still, both my legs and one arm are completely asleep. If I tried to stand, I'd fall on my face!'

Triplet loud laughter filled Ralphie's mind. He couldn't help it and softly giggled with his brothers for a little while, then loudly sent, 'GET ME OUTTA HERE!'

'You wanted a boyfriend.'

'You've got him.'

'Permanently.'

'I'll tell mom and dad you can't make it home and why.'

'DON'T DO THAT, ROBBIE!'

'Have you got a better idea?'

'If I could reach my comm-badge, I'd call Alden, but I can't. That arm's numb from the shoulder down to each finger. Have him transport me, lying down, to my bedroom.'

'Lying down we can understand, but why your bedroom?'

Ralphie huffed, then admitted, 'Turtle status isn't my problem anymore.'

Again, triplet loud laughter filled Ralphie's mind, and then 'Oh shit!' Like an old black and white movie with poor sound, Ralphie experienced what all three of his brothers heard and saw; Jason and Trinity were standing in a bedroom doorway.

Grinning, Jason wondered, "What are you boy's doing?"

Trinity asked, "Where's Ralphie? Is he not home yet?"

Robbie innocently assured, "Ralphie's fine."

"He's over at the Hundserts', with Pat still," Richie giggled.

Trinity gasped, "Still?" She worried, "Patrick must be dead on his feet." All three brothers cracked up at the choice of words.

Jason suspiciously smirked, "Okay, let's hear it, guys."

Trinity huffed, "I'll go get Ralphie, Jason."

The triplets jumped off the bed, loudly chorusing, "No mom!"

Robbie sweetly asked, "Mom, could you leave us alone with dad for just a few minutes, please?"

The two adults wordlessly checked with each other, and then nodded. Trinity warned, "Five minutes, and Ralphie better be home in six minutes."

"It's a guy thing, mom," Robbie explained.

Nodding, she left the doorway and seemed to be going downstairs.

Robbie, Ronnie and Richie pulled Jason into the room and closed the door. The threesome explained what was going on; that they were telepaths, that Ralphie was still with Pat, and excited, and his legs and one arm were asleep, to Ralphie's infinite mortification.

Thankfully, Jason took it well. He chuckled, "Do what your brother needs and asked you to do."

Richie tapped his comm-badge, calling, "Alden, do you see Ralphie in the Hundserts' basement?"

"Sure do," Alden replied. "He's asleep."

"Only partly," Ronnie giggled.

Robbie sniggered, "His legs and one arm are asleep, Alden. He couldn't stand up if he tried."

Richie smiled, "Leave Ralphie laying down and transport him to one of the beds in here, please, Alden?"

Alden giggled, "One quarter quadruplet, comin' up."

Ralphie materialized on the bed. He chuckled, "When I can walk, you three need to run." His brothers cracked up.

When the laughter and giggling subsided, Jason confirmed, "You're all telepaths?" The boys nodded.

Tilting his head, Robbie wondered, "Why would we fake it, dad?"

"Yeah, it's really happening," Ralphie smiled.

Richie suggested, "Call mom up before she melts down and really gets angry."

Quickly jarring his head because the boys had read his every thought, as soon as he thought them, Jason turned around, opened the door and called, "Come on up, Trin; Ralphie's home."

Standing and coming up the stairs, Trinity huffed, "Thank goodness." At the same time, the quadruplets duplicated her words and in the same exasperated manner. Jason grinned at them.

Trinity didn't hear them repeating her words, so the quadruplets loudly confirmed, "Yeah, we know it's getting late, mom." All except Ralphie smiled, "We were just having a little fun with Ralphie, cos his feet and arm fell asleep." Ralphie started wiggling his toes and fingers to stop the pins and needles.

Stopping two steps short of the second floor landing, Trinity glared at Jason for an explanation.

Jason shrugged, "They're telepaths."

"We kind of thought maybe we were just imagining it," Robbie loudly added so his mom would hear.

Ronnie nodded, "But then we heard Cesar and Felipe this morning."

Still wiggling his toes and fingers to wake them up, Ralphie grimaced; "And then we heard the double-twins, Adam, Mark, Brian and Jeff too. We've been practicing mind-talk with them most of the day. Most people we can hear, if they're just a little telepathic or empathic. The rest can't hear us, but we can hear them. That last bit is the case with Patrick. I can hear him, when he's awake to hear. He was behind me too, so..." Richie, Robbie and Ronnie softly sniggered. Trinity climbed the last two steps and looked in the bedroom.

Richie cheered, "It so awesome. My imaginary brothers definitely weren't my imagination. I heard them, from miles and miles away. Now we're together, at last." As soon as he stopped speaking, Richie scowled.

"Uh oh," Ralphie, Robbie and Ronnie simultaneously grunted, and turned to face Richie.

Like a light switch had been flipped, Richie palmed the sides of his head at the temples, loudly crying, "No! You frigging jerk, they were real! They are real! Get outta my head, you wacko!" In a heartbeat, Robbie and Ronnie sandwiched Richie between them. Ralphie struggled to sit up and get over to his hurting brother. He ignored the pain of numb legs and got to his brothers as quickly as he could. Telepathically and aloud, three brothers comforted the fourth, who was still hearing the words that he was taught to repeat for years.

Trinity shrieked, "What's happening?"

Recalling some of what Richie told them about the shrink he had seen many years earlier, Jason realized that was what was happening and hollered at the ceiling, "Alden, get Doc Wiener here, now!"

"Doin' it," Alden confirmed.

A moment later, the base child psychologist was standing behind Jason and Trinity. He tapped Jason on the shoulder, asking, "What's wrong?" Jason briefly explained what Richie had been through.

In that minute, the three boys had gotten Richie onto a bed and joined him, Robbie and Ronnie on either side and Ralphie on top. Richie was still crying, but it was as much for fear as it was the aching in his head and heart. Richie softly sobbed, "When's it gonna stop?"

Doc Wiener sighed, and then softly told Jason and Trinity, "The best treatment for Richie is right there with him. If you'd like, and if Richie wants, I can have Doc Andrews prescribe a sedative, so he can sleep whenever this happens late at night?"

Trinity nodded and nervously begged, "Please?"

Jason went in the room with Doc Wiener, asking, "Richie, would you want to take a mild sedative to help you sleep?"

"He don't want to, dad," Robbie frowned.

"It's only a little before eleven o'clock," Ronnie added.

Ralphie assured, "We can take care of Richie."

To Richie and the adults, the other three loudly confirmed, "We'll always take care of each other."

Jason thoughtfully hummed, then told the boys and Doc Wiener, "Leave us the pills. We'll leave only one with the boys. If it gets very late and Richie needs it, Robbie, Ralphie and Ronnie will get Richie to take it."

Doc Wiener looked up at the ceiling, ordering, "Alden, have Doc Andrews approve thirty Ambien, two-and-a-half milligrams."

"On the way," Alden replied.

Doc Wiener told them all, "Richie is not to do anything the slightest bit dangerous, like making a sandwich with a knife, or showering, where he could easily slip, after he takes a pill. He'll get to sleep in thirty minutes or less, so restricted activity once the pill is taken. Preferably, he takes a pill and goes directly to bed."

Three boys confirmed, "Got it covered, Doc."

The pill bottle appeared. Alden told them, "Done. They're on the dresser."

Doc Wiener picked up the bottle, then gave it to Trinity and guided the two worried parents into the hall. Pulling the door closed behind him, he softly explained, "One only. These aren't mild sedatives. Two and he'll sleep for twelve or more hours. Three would put him out for an entire day. Four, and we all go into emergency mode. Five or more could be deadly."

Both parents nodded. Trinity said, "I'll keep these hidden in a secure location, so Jason or I have to give them one." She went directly to her bedroom. One pill was put aside for that evening. The remainder of the bottle went into a lock-box on the top shelf of the master bedroom closet. The pill was put in a small disposable paper cup. Another paper cup was filled with cold water. Trinity took both cups to the bedroom where all the boys were still piled on and around Richie. Jason and Doc Wiener went downstairs.

Before she could say anything, all four boys chorused, "On the desk with the water too. Kewl, mom."

Rolling her eyes, Trinity smiled, "We'll be downstairs for a short while if you need anything."

"Good night, mom," came the quadruple reply.

Trinity closed the door and went downstairs. She thought, 'No wonder they're in sync all the time. If they were any closer, they'd all wear one pair of pants.'

The four boys softly giggled, picturing themselves waddling in unison in a really big pair of pants.

Richie smiled, 'Speaking of pants, Ralphie, no bone?'

'My legs really hurt just standing. Guess it shriveled when I forced myself to stand.'

Ronnie frowned, 'You scared us, Richie.'

'It's good we're staying together,' Robbie sent. 'The Doc said we're helping Richie as much as anything he could do.'

Richie seriously sent, 'You drowned out the thoughts, in my ears and in my mind. You guys are awesome.'

The other three replied, 'We think you are too. We all knew about this last night, Richie. It don't change a thing.'

Richie confirmed aloud, "I'm better now, bros."

Robbie smirked, "About this particular headache you are."

Ronnie asked, "So what do you want to do about Carrol and Terrance?"

"As if we don't already know," Ralphie grinned.

Richie smiled, "We've gotta get them to want to move here, and adopted by Jason and Trinity too."

Ralphie deepened his voice and ordered, "Bros, project foster brother retrieval has officially begun."

Ronnie giggled, "Tomorrow, Richie will call Carrol and Terrance back here again."

Mysteriously shifting his eyes, Robbie giggled, "Richie and I will spend as much time with them around dad and mom as possible. Mom will flip over Terrance and dad will see Carrol as Richie's brother. By the time the day is done, and Carrol and Terry go back to Vegas, they'll be thinking about it. Sunday morning, at breakfast, we'll push it home, telling dad and mom that they need to adopt them too."

"A couple o' days of that, and our mission is complete," Ralphie assured.

Glancing at his three brothers, Richie saw devious expressions on their faces, but twinkles in their eyes that told him there was nothing more to worry about. He smiled, "Ya know, there's something about the way we are, right now, on this bed, with Ralphie on me and all of us snuggled together."

"We've been like this before," Robbie recognized.

Ronnie softly shared, "In our real mom's belly, before we were born."

Four wide smiles spread across four faces. They knew it was true. The brother in the middle changed, but the other three simply shifted around the womb. Carefully and uncertainly, Richie asked, "Do you think we could sleep like this?"

Wordlessly, Ronnie slid off the bed and started undressing. Ralphie followed, and then Robbie and lastly Richie. When they were all naked, the television was turned on, the sound turned all the way down, and the lights were turned off. Richie pulled down the blanket and sheet on the bed. Robbie and Ronnie got two pillows from the other bedroom and returned. All four returned to their previous positions. Warm and comfortable, they didn't need the sheet or blanket.

Forty-five minutes later, Doc Wiener went to his condo. Jason and Trinity walked up stairs. They peeked in the room and smiled. All four were sound asleep, but seemed completely relaxed and even satisfied. Two of the twelve-year-olds would've been plenty in a full-sized bed for any other set of brothers, but not for their boys. Trinity checked the cups on the desk, confirming the pill had not been taken. Leaving the boys alone, Trinity pulled the bedroom door closed, then went down the hall with her husband to their master bedroom.

All was quiet around the Ewa Beach main base. The only Core Rimmers still awake a little after midnight were Derrick, Mike and Reyes. At half past midnight a call from Des Moines came into the Command Center. While that call was being processed, another came in on the toll-free phone line. Before those two calls completed, a third call from Hector in Los Angeles also came in. To get these retrievals done quickly, Derrick, Mike and Reyes decided to split up. Derrick went to Los Angeles with his security. Mike went to Des Moines, and Reyes went with his new security team, to the island of Hawaii.

In Los Angeles, Derrick and his team went to a warehouse in Downing. Waiting outside and smoking a cigarette, Hector chuckled, "Big D! Long time no see, dude."

Derrick sniggered, "I knew you'd be a good Clan Liaison, Hector. Who have you got for us tonight?"

"Me and my homies found two tonight," Hector smirked. "The first, an eight-year-old blond named Jimmy Matos, was shell-shocked from the riots or somethin'. After a short chase got us nothing 'cept winded, we decided to encircle him. Not our best move, but he wouldn't believe that we had no intention of killing his scrawny ass. He's a fighter when he needs to be, fer sure. The other," Hector paused to chuckle, "thirteen-year-old Tony Lanning, he's wearin' a T-shirt that reads 'Here Comes Trouble'. He walks right up to us lookin' for food and weed." Derrick cracked up. Hector knocked out a syncopated pattern on the warehouse wall. A few moments later, both boys were led outside by two much older men, probably in their mid-twenties judging by thick beards and tattoos. To the boys, Hector said, "Yo, this dude here is Derrick Seibert, from Clan Short. He's your new big bro. What he says, you do, as of right now."

Derrick smiled, "They look pretty good, Hector."

Shrugging, Hector said, "We fed 'em and cleaned 'em up. The riot fires got both their houses. Neither have seen their folks all day."

Tony went right to Derrick, holding out his fist to knock knuckles. Jimmy only waved to Derrick and walked right past him to the gorilla, Talib. Jimmy suspiciously eyed the large gorilla, dressed in fatigues and carrying an M-5 rifle. Talib grinned, "How's it goin', little man?"

Jumping back three feet in a single surprised leap, Jimmy gasped, "What the fuck?"

Derrick and his human security, Dave, lost it and howled. Hector and the two men softly snickered.

Pointing at Talib, Jimmy glanced around, grinning, "Now that's kewl!" Talib bared a toothy smile.

"YO!" Hector yelled. Both boys jumped and gave all their attention to Hector. "You dudes are safe, like I promised. What's my payback?"

Tony recited, "We make something of ourselves, out of this town, in Starfleet or any thing we want."

"Just don't make you look bad," Jimmy added.

Slowly nodding, Hector promised, "Derrick tells me you're slackin', and I'll bring you right back here."

Tony promised, "We'll be kewl, dude."

In Des Moines, Mike met with Bob Busch and was introduced to twelve-year-olds, Bob Wheeler and Paul Eliason. They didn't learn about refugee facilities until late in the day. They were amongst the last from New York City.

Reyes and his security went to the Police headquarters in Hilo to retrieve eleven-year-old Hawaiian twins, Anakoni and Kapena Hiram, originally from Keaau. After running away from home because their parents didn't give a damn what the boys did, ate or even if they went to school or not. They had been caught shoplifting at the Safeway store where Mrs. Marr was found. With this rescue, word would get out around the islands that when the Clan said they'd handle something, their word was good as gold.

A little after one in the morning, the three Clan leaders and the six boys returned to the CIC After a brief orientation discussion, and quick meals of burgers and fries, they all went to the Seiberts' home. Derrick and Mike went to their room. Reyes led the six pack to the large room his brothers were already sleeping in, had Alden get some extra bedding, and then they all got undressed to crash for the night.

Chapter 12

Ewa Beach, Hundser Basement Nest

Saturday, November 6, 5:30 AM HTZ

Drew woke up by Alden's soft voice calling in his sub-vocal. Groggily, Drew wondered, "What's up, Alden?"

"I've got good news," Alden cheerfully relayed. "Raphael Montigua's older brother, Jason, was found alive in the rubble pile that was half of their apartment building. He was dehydrated, unconscious and had a broken wrist, but he's ready to be released from Walter Reed Medical Center."

A little more loudly than intended, Drew cheered, "Excellent!"

Alden giggled, "Yeah, the best part is for Rafe and for Chris Stokley."

Sitting up, Drew scowled, "Why is it good for Chris?"

"Chris and Jay were boyfriends, kind of behind the scenes and closeted, but that's how it was."

"Now they don't have to hide," Drew smiled, and then ordered, "Wake up Conner, Chuck, Ata and Baakir. Have them meet us outside, on the lawns between our homes. I'll wake Corey, Rafe and Chris."

"Consider it done."

Drew patted Corey's butt and whispered, "Cor?" Getting a hum in response, Drew grinned, "Wake up, angel. We've got a quick retrieval to do."

Corey inhaled deeply and sighed, "It's too early."

"This one is worth it," Drew assured. He stood and went to find his clothes.

Playfully giggling into Drew's sub-vocal, Alden teased, "I see you!"

Naked and with morning wood, Drew blushed at first and wanted to hide. He then sadly shook his head and grinned, "Alden, I was part of the team that designed and programmed you."

"Yep, you were," Alden giggled.

Finding his boxer shorts, and the rest of his clothes, Drew smirked, "Need I remind you that our intention is to give you a body?"

"I know, and I'm looking forward to it too," Alden pleasantly answered.

Nodding and starting to dress, Drew grinned, "You probably haven't had the chance or reason since you were activated, so check your system files for bodily responses to stimuli."

While Drew slid into his board shorts, and Corey began giggling, Alden gasped, "You made me ticklish? You made me ticklish almost everywhere! I thought this stuff was up to me!"

Drew sniggered, "A lot is; you can choose skin tone, hair and eye color, apparent age, height, build, how much hair and where, if you're a prepubescent, pubescent or a teen, even if you'd like to be circumcised or uncut, but we are Clan. You and your brothers have already got a bunch of people lining up to teach you lessons. George, Icarus, Jack, Kerry and Stevie, I know you're listening too. All the same stuff can be said of each of you!"

Only half-dressed, from the waist down, Corey guessed the kind of reply Drew might get. Quickly, he hurried away from the nest and covered his mouth with both hands to mute laughter that would wake everyone up.

"That's not fair!" The six AIs bitterly complained.

Drew giggled, "Yes it is. Danny would know best, but Marc, Joey, Reyes and every android I met on Archmania is ticklish somewhere. You think I look cute? Well, guess what? All of you guys will be as human as us and then some. You'll be able to breathe, live and love, like the rest of us."

"I saved you from sixteen hands tickling you at once," Alden reminded.

"And thanks for that, dude," Drew smiled, "but I've never asked for help when I'm alone with Corey and he's tickling me, have I?"

Corey giggled, "There are pluses and minuses, guys. A mass tickle-attack is a bit much, but with a lover, it's never a bad thing."

Drew went over to where Chris, Rafe and Pat were sleeping. He woke Chris first, only because he would remember where he was and be quiet. By the time Chris had the news his boyfriend was alive, Corey was dressed. With Chris and Corey prepared to keep Rafe from screaming in delight, Rafe was gently woke and told to get dressed so he could join the party to retrieve his older brother.

Relieved and out of control, Rafe loudly hollered, "HE'S..." and Chris swiftly covered his young friend's mouth with one hand. Rafe mumbled past Chris' hand; "alive?" Holding index fingers to their mouths, Chris, Corey and Drew nodded and giggled.

Nearby, Pat shifted and stretched, softly yawning, "What's goin' on?"

Chris whispered, "Jay is alive."

Widely smiling, Pat tossed his blanket aside and stood. He went to get his clothes. Noticing the other four grinning at him, Pat softly giggled, "What? He wasn't my brother or boyfriend, but he was my neighbor and friend. I'm going too."

Rafe stood up and hurried over to Pat, almost knocking him over in his haste to give a big hug. After some giggling, during which time Chris started to dress, Pat and Rafe flew into their clothes.

Drew asked, "Alden, is it very cold in Maryland?"

Into Drew's and Corey's sub-vocals, Alden replied, "Don't worry, I'll be putting you inside the hospital's lobby, Drew."

Corey giggled, "I'm surprised you aren't putting us down on a Himalayan Mountain, Alden."

Alden giggled, "The thought had crossed my mind. Then I started talking with Kerry, George, Icarus, and my other brothers. Our research into human boy's chasing each other and tickling proves you're right, Corey; it's not a terrible thing. The best part is, I'm still running the transporters, which means, one moment you might be chasing me, but I'll vanish, reappear behind you and reverse the chase, any time I want!"

Drew widely smiled, "This will be fun!"

Slapping his forehead, Corey giggled, "It opens up too many possibilities."

Anxiously, Chris, Pat and Rafe started up the stairs. Holding hands, Drew and Corey followed. All five went out the kitchen sliding door.

* * * * *

About the same time Corey, Drew and their group were leaving for Bethesda, Maryland, the phone in the Gibbons' master bedroom rang. Catching it before it rang a second time, Rob mumbled, "Gibbons residence."

"Rob, it's Steve," an adult male voice said.

Recognizing the voice of Chief of Police, Steve McGarrett, Rob became more awake, asking, "What's going on, Steve?"

There was a silent pause on the line, then McGarrett sighed, "I can barely explain it. Suffice to say, this is something you absolutely have to see."

Sitting up in bed, Rob wiped sleep from his eyes, yawning, "That doesn't give me much to go on."

McGarrett chuckled, "Not much to go on. You couldn't be more correct if you tried, Rob."

Rob smirked, "You've got my interest now." Pulling over the bed stand pen and pad of paper, Rob asked, "Where are you?" McGarrett gave Rob two addresses in Ewa Beach, the latter being the address that he and his team were currently at. Rob said, "Give me about twenty minutes, Steve. I'll see you soon." McGarrett acknowledged Rob and disconnected the call.

Laura rolled over, sleepily muttering, "Rob?"

"It's nothing, Laura," Rob softly responded. Leaning over, he gave his wife a peck on the cheek, and then assured, "It's off base, but just around the corner. I'll bring my security and be back in an hour or so. Go back to sleep."

"Be safe," she smiled.

Rob stood and shrugged, "I always am, but with a gorilla and a teenaged jiu jitsu expert, I'm pretty sure there won't be any problems." He went to clean up and get dressed, call his security, and then decided to meet them at the CIC, so they could grab cups of coffee before leaving the base.

Upon arrival at Walter Reed Medical Center's reception desk, Drew and Corey showed their ID cards, identified their group and asked where they might find Jason Montigua. Even in Maryland, the two gorillas created a bit of stir and had their photographs taken by several cell phone users. Other than that, no one said a word about them. After a brief search on her computer terminal, the receptionist instructed, "He's in the pediatric wing; outside and across the way, sixth floor, room twenty-two."

Twisting his mouth into a crooked frown, Corey softly complained, "Outside? I don't think so!"

A little boy in the room whined, "I wanna play wit' da monkeys!" Baring a toothy grin, Baakir waved at the boy.

Drew tapped his sub-vocal, ordering Alden to transport them all to the specified location. In a snap, they were in that room. Seeing his brother kicked back on a bed, Rafe hollered, "JAY! YOU'RE ALIVE!" and hurried there, jumping up on the bed before Jay could look up or move.

When his nine-year-old brother landed on him, Jay grunted "Umph!" Drew, Chris, Pat and the security team smiled. Corey helplessly giggled.

Rafe wept, "We thought you were dead in that wreck. I yelled and yelled, but..."

"I'm not dead," Jay clearly assured. Closing his eyes and concentrating on his little brother, Jay felt happy shivers race up and down his spine. Opening his eyes again, he saw the gorillas and blinked, "This concussion must be worse than they said though."

Giggling madly, Corey instructed, "Ata and Baakir, say hello to Rafe's brother."

Ata waved, "Good to meet you, Jason."

Baakir grinned, "Same here, dude."

Groaning, Jay muttered, "I'm dreaming this. Yeah, that must be it."

Chris stepped forward, smiling, "Fraid not, Jay." He leaned over to kiss his boyfriend beside the bandage on his forehead.

Jay sourly complained, "What're ya doin', man?"

Chris smirked, "What I've always wanted to be able to do in public. Rafe knew it. Because we were too in love to notice, it flew right over our heads. I thought I'd lost ya, man. Be glad I'm not pushing Rafe out of the way and taking his place on top of you."

Rafe looked up into his big brother's curious eyes, nodding and giggling, "It's kewl, Jay. Pat's got a boyfriend too." Blushing, Pat nodded and giggled.

"Now's a good time for me to step in," Drew smiled. Approaching the bed with Corey, Drew cheerfully said, "Welcome to Clan Short, Jay. My name is Drew Hundser, and beside me is my hubby, Corey Seaver."

"Hi, Jay," Corey giggled.

Drew smiled, "We're two of the fifteen leaders of Clan Short Pacific Rim Division. Chris, Rafe and Pat decided they wanted to be in the ROH, as far as they could get from Washington as possible, so they spent yesterday and last night at Ewa Beach, Oahu. As soon as we get you out of that bed and dressed in more than a gown, we'd like you to join us there, to be with your bro and your boyfriend."

Rapidly nodding, Rafe giggled, "You'll love it, Jay. All the gorillas and G-Cats are kewl, just like everyone else there."

Jay suspiciously smirked at Drew and Corey. "Married? What're you, about twelve years old? Yeah, and Elvis is in the next bed." Pointing at the empty bed, Jay crowed, "Sing more for us, King."

Alden overheard, and suddenly an Elvis impersonator appeared mid-set, standing on the empty bed, singing, "You ain't nuthin' but a hound dog, cryin' all the time." Then he disappeared again. Everyone in the room giggled or chuckled, except Jay, who only looked more confused and searched for the nurse call button.

Grabbing Jay's hand, Chris sniggered, "It's all really happening. Yesterday, when we realized you and all our parents were gone, me, Pat and Rafe started walking into Virginia, where they had refugee facilities set up. Red Cross sent us to Clan Short. The Clan transported us to Des Moines, Iowa, and from there, we were taken to Ewa Beach." He paused and then teased, "They've got an Olympic sized pool and a diving well, Jay. As soon as you're well enough, your ass is in Speedos, then your ass is mine!"

Turning beet red, Jay loudly laughed, "What is with you?"

Chris shrugged, "A day at a place where I could be me, where kids from four to sixteen decide what they want to do, when to do it and how. More specifically, at the diving well, there were about a dozen guys our age when I showed up there. Only three of 'em had board shorts on, one wore Speedos, and the rest were naked. Not one of them had a problem with the guys who were nude. At first, I had these boardies on that I'm wearing now. After a while, I figured, what the hell, and hung out naked too, just to see if could do it. I went to check on Rafe and Pat. At the big pool, Rafe was naked too. Off to the side, on a bench with his new boyfriend, Pat was wearing Speedos, giggling up a storm and trying to shift his skinny butt away from Ralphie, who in turn kept scooting his butt closer."

"He's such a goof!" Pat giggled, "In the best ways, but Ralphie's really a clown."

Glancing between Chris, Rafe and Pat, Jay sighed then softly asked, "Is this what you guys really want?" The three boys enthusiastically nodded and vocally confirmed their choice, reminding him that any other option wouldn't be near as kewl.

Corey smiled, "Schools are on base, Jay, run by Federation Youth Services. If you show the aptitude, you could find yourself attending Starfleet Academy someday. How does that sound?"

Wide-eyed, Jay glanced around, softly confirming, "No shit?"

"No shit," all the other boys and the two gorillas assured.

Since they were all nodding, smiling and serious, Jay chuckled, "Let's get going then. Rafe, get off me. Guys, turn around or you'll all be getting more than an eyeful of my ass."

Scooting down off the bed, Rafe giggled, "Did you hurt your ass too?"

Jay shouted, "RAFE!"

Landing on his feet, Rafe huffed then asked, "Are you really that dumb? I knew about you and Chris two years ago. Chris just told you that almost all the kids hang naked there in Hawaii. Drew and Corey are married, and have two sons."

"Working on three," Corey giggled.

Shaking his head, Jay grinned, "Just because you got your first pubes doesn't mean you can have kids."

Corey cracked up. Sniggering, Drew nudged his hubby. Getting the message loud and clear, Corey began untying his board shorts and so did Drew. Jay began laughing his ass off. In moments, Corey and Drew pushed their shorts and boxers to the floor. Suddenly, Jay wasn't laughing any more. Before him was a brunette that didn't have a large bush of pubes, but certainly more than Jay had ever noticed on other boys Drew's age, or had himself at that age. Drew also had a respectable sized uncut dick hanging for his age, height and weight. The blond boy, Corey, only a little shorter than his partner and also very well proportioned, had a patch of blond pubes over his uncut and decent sized meat. Corey giggled, "By the way, I'm eleven-and-a half. My birthday is March second, 1993." Jay's jaw dropped, because when he and Chris began kissing and hugging they were eleven and neither had pubic hair.

"HOLY SHIT!" Jay laughed. "You didn't ask for the door to be closed or anything! You're all very serious, aren't you?"

Drew nodded and pulled up his drawers, saying, "Our first son, Geoff, is five. We adopted him last Saturday night. Our second son, Lenny, is seven. We adopted him Wednesday afternoon."

Also pulling his shorts and undies up, Corey smiled, "Leo is the third son, waiting in the basement at home. We just met him yesterday, but everything's looking good for his adoption at some point today."

Sliding to the edge of the bed, Jay pressed the call nurse button. Proving he had learned his lesson, he started fighting with the tied gown to get it off with his uninjured left hand. Grinning, Chris instructed, "Turn around, stud." When Jay smiled and turned in place, Chris untied the gown, whispering, "I thought I was really screwed, with no boyfriend, no parents, nuthin' except Rafe and Pat to take care of, or care about me. Nothing I saw or dealt with hurt as much as the thought that you were gone. I'm serious about you, Jay. Think about it as long as you need, but please say we'll be permanent."

Grinning as he turned in place again, Jay joked, "It seems I broke my right wrist in the fall somehow. I'll be needing a hand with a lot of stuff for a while." All the boys in the room smiled and most softly giggled. To test what he had been told, and wanting to say what he had repeatedly held back, Jay clearly proclaimed, "I loved you with all my heart the first time we kissed, Chris. That was the summer of 2001. We were eleven. Since then, the world has changed over and over again. Through it all, we stayed together and grew up. The thinking about it was over a long time ago. We just had to hide it.

Now we don't need to hide, right?"

Not caring that Jay was standing naked before him or that they were partially encircled by the others, Chris grabbed Jay and kissed him hard.

Faking a snuffle, Corey giggled, "That was too sweet. I think I'm gonna cry." Conner and Chuck, Drew's and Corey's security, knew their charges too well. All four helplessly cracked up.

The nurse came to the room. Gasping at the two gorillas blocking her path, she came to an abrupt halt. Baakir tapped Drew's shoulder and gestured to the nurse.

Reading the nurses name badge, Drew pulled out his identification and showed it to her, saying, "Nurse Torres, I'm Lieutenant Drew Hundser, of Family Clan Short Pacific Rim Division. We're prepared to take custody of Jason Montigua. Please have his discharge paperwork ready for us, including all the charges for his care at this facility. I'll sign the paperwork and pay the bill as soon as Mister Montigua is done swapping spit with his partner and gets dressed."

Rafe looked over at Pat, who bounced his eyebrows, and then they cracked up.

Still attached at the mouth with Jay, Chris recognized growing problems and blindly searched for the curtain around the bed. Sputtering, Corey went to the bedside curtain, which was at least a meter out of Chris' reach, and closed it for them. Corey giggled, "City kids are funny. All cranky and tough, but after a couple of minutes of Clan treatment, they get naked and start making out with their boyfriends."

Conner teased, "What's your excuse, Cor?"

Corey shrugged, giggled and pointed at Drew.

From beyond the curtain where Chris was helping him get dressed, Jay called, "Drew?"

"Yeah?"

"Since Chris doesn't know, I'm just curious."

"About?"

Jay sniggered, "Do you always show off?"

Corey quickly answered, "Never in a million years, Jay. Drew's got older brothers, and has hid from them, and his younger brother. In this situation, you didn't believe a lot of what we were all telling you."

Drew added, "You're Rafe's brother, so that automatically makes you my brother too. At our base, and in the ROH in general, nudity isn't too much of a problem. Since you're my Clan brother as much as any of the other dudes on base, and you would eventually see me naked at some point soon anyway, I shrugged it off and busted your implied dare." He evilly grinned, "Now you owe me, dude."

Corey, Rafe and Patrick began giggling. Jay suspiciously wondered, "What's that mean?"

"It means that you have a few hours to get comfortable at Ewa Beach," Drew smiled. "This afternoon, before dinner, you show off."

"Well," Chris sniggered, "Jay just might have to show off now. These clothes are shot, Drew. They're what he came in wearing; dirty and all ripped up. He didn't have anything on his feet either. His boxers are all that are semi-usable."

Corey tapped his comm-badge, asking, "Alden, can you see Jay?"

"Not behind the curtain," Alden giggled.

Jay softly asked who Alden was, and Chris answered. A moment later, the curtain flew open. Standing in his underwear, Jay said, "Thirty-inch waist and mens' large shirts, loose fitting, if ya can?"

Over the comm-badge, Alden asked, "Turn in place slowly, please, Jay?" Once Jay had turned completely around, Alden said, "Twenty-eight inch waist and men's medium shirts would fit you, Jay."

"Tight clothes are uncomfortable," Jay simply stated. "I'd much rather them fitting loose."

A few moments later, Alden said, "Look on your bed and on the floor beside it, Jay. You're set now."

Chris picked up the Washington Capitols T-shirt and gave it to Jay. "Kewl," Jay chuckled, and slid into the shirt. Holding open the board shorts, Chris went to Jay and leaned forward. Steadying himself on his boyfriend's shoulders, Jay lifted his legs and got into them. Chris tied the drawstring. Glancing around, Jay queried, "This stuff is new?"

"Course," Corey answered.

Jay hummed, "Ya know, I've read about the Clan, and all the kids you guys saved. I just thought, that's a hell of a lot o' money." He sat on the bed to put the pair of sandals on.

Squatting down to help Jay get the sandals on, Chris said, "This is only the beginning. We'll be in a store later, where you'll get everything you need. Yesterday, I got all the stuff I'm wearing and a full week's worth of clothes, plus toiletries, plus an electric razor, baseball caps, belts, a poncho and a suitcase to put it all in."

Drew nodded, "That's the basics anyone needs. If you need something special for school, ask and it's yours. Once you move into the dorm, you'll have your own bed, desk, chair, and a laptop computer. Each dorm room has a television and stereo too."

Rafe gushed, "They're big rooms too, Jay. You and Chris would have space to spare." He paused then giggled, "As if you'll need that much space."

"RAFE!" Chris and Jay loudly laughed.

Giggling his butt off, Rafe hid behind Ata.

* * * * *

Arriving at the address where Chief Of Police Steve McGarrett said to meet him, Rob pulled up behind another unmarked police car. He noticed he was parked in front of a nice upper-middle class home in a well maintained neighborhood. With his security, Rob walked toward the open front door, greeting other police officers along the way. Before even stepping inside the house, Rob noticed the spots on the exterior wall where the house number once was. He also noticed the front door knob was missing. In the living room, just beyond the entryway, brown leather covered furniture was present and undamaged, but there were no lamps, end tables or coffee table. The entire entertainment system sat on the floor, but there was no entertainment center. Photos lay on the floor by the walls that had no frames. However, a large seascape painting in a wooden frame still hung on the dining room wall.

Steve McGarrett came into the room saying, "Have you ever seen a home invasion robbery like this? That TV and sound system has a street value of about two grand, but here it sits."

Slowly shaking his head, Rob wondered, "What else was stolen?"

"A lot," Steve answered, "chrome tables with mirrored tops had been in here," and then waved Rob into the dining room. He pointed up at the ceiling. Rob noticed a hole where a light fixture had probably been, but there weren't any wires left hanging. Noticing Rob's frown, Steve nodded, "There isn't a wire in the house, but no walls are damaged in any room. The china set is another high value item left here in the hutch, but all the silverware, even the everyday, worthless stuff is gone." The two men moved into the kitchen. The floor was still wet, but there were no appliances except a black-faced microwave oven still in the wall. "The oven and fridge and all it's contents were taken. Who the fuck takes a refrigerator in the first place? I won't even ask who takes the fridge and the food. Brass and chrome fixtures throughout the house were taken, but this microwave, for instance, why is it here when the fucking toaster was taken? A four slice toaster, worth maybe twenty-five credits when it was purchased, gone." Pointing up at the ceiling, he said, "This designer fixture was left and it cost the home owners almost five hundred bucks! Street value is at least three hundred."

Rob wondered, "Where are the home owners, Steve?"

"At the dentist."

Rob blinked, "They left to go to the dentist, now, after being robbed?"

Leading the way to the bedrooms and bathrooms, Steve nodded, "Get this, everything was taken between midnight and five this morning. No one heard a sound, not the man, woman or either of the two kids."

"Do they normally wake that early?"

"Not normally, but three of the four woke because of pain in their mouths. The caps over root canals and all the fillings in their teeth were taken too, Rob. Who the fuck does that? Did they come in here wearing protective face masks, release a gas to keep them all asleep and numb, so they could take their dental work? What in the hell is a gold cap worth? It can't be used on anyone else's teeth; it could only be melted down to be sold. Still, that stuff's not twenty-four carat, high grade gold either, it's virtually worthless. Cheap childrens' toys were taken, but good stuff was left behind. Awards and trophies were taken, worthless junk to everybody except to the teenager that won them. Where are all the goddamned mirrors? They took them out of the frames and medicine cabinets first too! Copper plumbing gone, electrical wiring gone, but there's a Tiffany lamp worth almost a grand. It would've taken a team of eight men half a day to accomplish all this, and the place would be completely trashed."

McGarrett paused and sighed, "This is seriously the most twisted home invasion and robbery I've seen in twenty years." Walking away and shaking his head, he muttered, "Eight total frigging lunatics take the junk and leave the most valuable stuff behind. They were smart enough to wear gloves though. No finger prints, no residue of any sort any where. The other house is almost the same."

"Almost?"

"They had PVC plumbing. Other than that one difference, it's virtually the same M.O.; take all the shiny crap and leave the good stuff." Rob suddenly had an idea, and thankfully he was walking behind the Chief Of Police, so it wasn't noticed. Steve grumbled, "If you have any clue where to go on this one, please say something, because I am stumped."

Rob shrugged, "Let's check metal recycling companies, pawn shops and junk yards."

* * * * *

Drew's and Corey's party in Maryland were only delayed a few minutes. Since they were too young to have debit cards in the first place, the cashier didn't believe the card could pay the expenses incurred for Jay's treatment. She was surprised when the card cleared the full amount on the first swipe. Signing his name to the receipt, Drew grinned, "I'm a Lieutenant in Starfleet, married to Corey, have three sons, and my own three bedroom townhouse. You'll get used to Clan organizational structure, just like we have."

"Imagine a ten-year-old coming here with his eleven-year-old husband and doing the same things we just did," Corey giggled at the woman. Drew slid the signed receipt to the cashier.

"Age doesn't matter?" the lady confirmed.

Drew shrugged, "It depends on the kid. Our two oldest leaders turn fifteen in late December. We're all between ten- and fourteen-years-old. What's really kewl is seeing the younger kids we rescued only last week helping us with retrieving kids. Our five-year-old son did his bit last night, helping other little guys adjust."

Corey smiled, "Geoff's changed and grown so much in only a week." He smirked at Jay and teased, "It's the bigger, older kids who are the larger challenges."

Chris, Rafe and Pat softly sniggered. Jay smiled, "Next time, think twice about bringing gorillas to get someone out of a hospital." He told Ata and Baakir, "I really thought I was losing my vision and sanity."

Ata grinned, "Keep your vision."

"Sanity is optional," Baakir chortled.

"Alden," Drew giggled, "Walter Reed has had enough of us. Take us to Anahola Bay Beach, Kauai, to watch the sunrise."

"I think you're just in time," Alden replied, and executed the order.

On the sand of the beach, Ata hummed at the security implications, and then suggested, "Please stay together guys."

Conner nodded, "We're good for a while, because it's so early and we're alone."

Chuck agreed, "Do what you'd like here, but stay together. If one of us sees a threat of any sort, we are outta here, whether you're swimming naked or standing."

Certain their security were right, Drew nodded and smiled, "I thought it might be nice, especially for Chris, Jay, Pat and Rafe to see the place where we became Clan."

Having already heard various tales from other kids at Ewa Beach, Rafe squealed, "It happened here?"

"At just about sunrise last Saturday morning," Corey stated, and then pointed over at the area near the dunes where it actually happened, adding, "Right over there."

Facing east with Chris beside him, Jay cracked the widest smile seen thus far and mumbled, "It's beautiful."

"So is our base, Jay," Chris softly assured. "It's not right on the beach, but less than a quarter of a mile from the beach. You can smell the salt air when the wind blows from the South."

Rafe was on the other side of his brother with Pat, also looking east. "It's all brand new, bro," Rafe enthusiastically said. "All the houses, dorms and everything there is only a week old."

Pat asked, "Rafe, now that Jay's here, I guess you and me are roommates soon?"

Nodding, Rafe teased, "We'll have to work something, so you can be with Ralphie."

Playfully shoving his younger friend, Pat giggled, "I know Ralphie and I have been joking a lot, but I don't think it'll be a problem. Really, he wants to wait as much as I do."

"Yeah, right," Jay knowingly chortled. Chris cracked up. Rafe, Corey, Drew, Conner and Chuck began giggling.

Widely smiling and looking around at all of the others, Pat cackled, "What? It's true!"

Jay sniggered, "Having sex for the first time isn't something you can plan, bro. It's something that progresses, a little at a time. First, it's hugs and kisses, then it's showing each other the goods, which leads to jackin' off, and onward to the first careful and scared blow-jobs, wondering if you'll gag on his boner and accidentally bite it off." Corey howled laughing at that point, because everything said was so true. He and Drew had gone through it all in the last year.

At Corey's reaction, Jay sniggered, "Forget scheduling it, Pat. You and this Ralphie kid will know when it's time to do this or that and take the next steps. Sex isn't thought out, not those first times, any how. It's in the eyes, the heart and the body."

Revealing a little more, Chris nodded and reminded Jay, "Don't touch it that way or... ungh... oops, sorry, too late." Remembering his first warnings to Chris, said almost verbatim, Jay cracked up.

Facing Pat, Drew smiled, "What's most important, each of those first times, with every next step, and every time thereafter, is talking to each other about those experiences. Keith told me once that someone you have sex with, but don't talk with, is just a sex-buddy, and not a boyfriend. Sex-buddies can still become boyfriends, and boyfriends can fall apart and away, becoming sex-buddies."

Holding up two fingers, Corey giggled, "It always takes two." Catching Chuck bouncing his blond eyebrows at Conner, and the resulting warm, wide smile cracking Conner's face, Corey loudly laughed, "OMIGOD!"

Watching Corey stagger around, Drew wondered, "What?"

Chuck and Conner knew they were busted, but didn't say a word for almost a minute, while Corey tried to calm down. Conner went to Drew, stood at attention and formally reported, "Sir, last week, when General Adam assigned me to you, and Logan assigned Chuck to Corey, it seems that they knew us better than we knew ourselves. It was not planned, but we have learned that we are falling in love."

"AWESOME!" Drew loudly laughed, and hugged his new friend and protector.

Stuck at attention in Drew's arms, Conner giggled, "I was hoping you'd feel this way."

Baakir asked Ata, "What is it about sunrises and humans?"

Ata shrugged, "And sunsets too. It's like a primal instinct."

Corey ran for Chuck to offer his congratulations. Chuck was a lot like Corey in many ways, however Corey was not genetically enhanced like Chuck. With very little effort, Chuck ran away from Corey, giggling as he led Corey around a big circle on the beach.

* * * * *

Ewa Beach Townhome #6

Saturday, November 6, 2004 6:06AM HTZ

In the Taylors' townhouse, four brothers were asleep, but busily humping away. On the bottom of the pile, Richie was pushing up against Ralphie, who in turn was grinding down, and on each side of Richie, Robbie and Ronnie were pressing their hips and morning throbbles against his hips. As the center of so much attention, Richie was the first to groggily realize what was going on. He thought about it, and soon realized that these three had helped him more in two days than anyone ever had before. Grinning, Richie decided to instigate the inevitable and sent to all three, 'Yeah, that's feeling so awesome, bros. Do it. I want you to. I really do love each of you so friggin' much, it makes me crazy wondering how I ever lived without you.'

Each of the other three slowly became more aware of what was happening. At Richie's soft sniggering, the other three paused only a few seconds.

Ralphie asked, 'Are you sure, Richie?'

'I've never been more sure of anything before,' Richie replied to all three brothers.

Robbie offered, 'I guess we knew our first times would be together, didn't we?'

'I do now,' Ronnie answered. 'It's right and perfect for us.'

They returned to their morning grind. Ralphie tenderly kissed Richie, then Robbie and then Ronnie. While Ralphie and Robbie kissed, Richie kissed Ronnie. With each cycle around, the kisses became more urgent and the thrusts more powerful until all four held their breaths and stiffened. Turning to jelly, they started giggling.

Becoming hysterical because he was wet on his belly and both sides, Richie laughed, 'Okay, who knew that he could really cum?'

'Not me!' the other three replied.

'Wow!' Ronnie silently cheered. 'I don't know what's more amazing, the feeling of what we just did or the fact we did it together.'

The other three easily assured, 'Both!'

Robbie told his brothers, 'Let's do it again, only this time with me and Ronnie in the center of the cuddle. We didn't get to kiss each other.'

Wickedly grinning, they suspiciously eyed one another, then nodded and scrambled off the bed, and then back on again, into Robbie's suggested position. Without any fear or worry, the process started over again. It took only a little longer, even with telepathic encouragements, but again, all four climaxed together and four new wet spots were made against Robbie. Afterward, the grown up feeling every boy experiences with their first orgasms was quadrupled by their blissful telepathic conversation.

The only concern shared was that Ronnie was hooking up with Garrett and Ralphie was with Pat. Both Ralphie and Ronnie assured Richie and Robbie that they were working slowly in their relationships. They wanted their first times with their boyfriends to be just as special and automatic as what they had just experienced together. That gave the latter two time to find partners of their own, and in the meantime, they could be there for each other with a shared thought, either in pairs or as a group.

Just waking up in townhome number one, Prez rolled over towards Keith. Without thinking, he ground his morning wood against his hubby's ass. Prepared to yelp because he tightened his butt muscles, Prez was surprised that it didn't hurt very much; if anything it was little more than a tingling reminder that all systems were not yet at one-hundred percent. Groggily, Keith muttered, "Sex-machine," and fell contentedly back to sleep.

Prez whispered, "I love you," then rolled out of bed and went into the master bathroom. He wanted to see how his rear end looked and could do that, with the medicine cabinet mirror opened just enough to reflect into the full-sized mirror on the door. There was a violent need to pee first, after ten hours of sleep. Forcing his bone to point at the toilet, Prez waited for the flood gates to open. Typically, with his bladder bursting, his dick wasn't cooperating. Prez softly muttered, "No, I am not going to play with you. I need to pee, not cum, you stupid single-eyed beast." In response, his dick only lurched, but Prez could feel he was going to leak any second, at last. It started as a trickle and became normal flow. Prez sighed in relief. Closing his eyes, he smirked, "I've told you a million times, if Keith isn't here to play with you, I have no reason to do it."

Finishing the final blasts, Prez shook his chubby and flushed the toilet. Moving over to the vanity sink, he turned on the faucets and tried to catch a glimpse of his wounded butt. It wouldn't work without moving the medicine cabinet mirror, so he finished washing his hands, his face, and drying them, then set the medicine cabinet mirror appropriately. He gasped at the sight of the many popped blisters then mumbled, "Now they can really call me a bubble-butt. I'll tell Keith it's feeling better, but looking like that, he won't believe it." Closing the medicine chest, he walked over to the shower, but decided to soak in the whirlpool tub instead.

Turning the water on to fill the tub, he reasoned, it's early, I have the time and who knows, it might even help a little. If I can simply sit more today than yesterday, Keith will notice that and chill out.

While the tub was filling, Prez went to make sure the door was fully closed, so he wouldn't disturb Keith. On the way back to the tub, he looked at the ceiling and softly called, "Alden? Can you hear me?"

"Just fine, Prez," Alden softly replied. "I've got good noise reduction software. I have a question for you too, as soon as that's convenient."

Prez smiled, "It's kewl now, dude. I'm feeling much better and thought I'd ask for a status report, so I don't have to wait and go to the command center. What's your question?"

"Well," Alden giggled, "it's something I've noticed repeatedly with some of you guys; teens mostly, but some tweens too."

Checking the water temperature, and satisfied he wouldn't fly out of the tub into a wall because it was too cool or too warm, Prez prompted, "Go ahead, Alden." He stepped into the tub and slowly sat then kicked back to soak.

Alden seriously said, "I don't have a body, but when I do have to choose, I'd like to be better informed, so my question revolves around boys urinating with erections. It always seems to take much longer, and a lot of you get impatient about it." Prez began chuckling. Alden giggled, "Some even talk to their dicks, like they listen and understand. It's silly, but if I were to decide to become a pubescent or teen, would I do that too?"

"Very probably," Prez chuckled. "Reyes and all androids still need to leak. I'll assume that if you choose to be eight years of age or older, you'll get erections just like the rest of us."

Alden giggled, "So, why the frustration and dick talk?"

With the tub adequately filled and turning off the water, Prez smiled, "I can only say what I know for certain, because I feel it. When boys get stiffies, there seems to be one portal that basically says, in this state, you can only have an orgasm; no matter how bad I know I have to piss, and that's the problem. Needing to leak bad is uncomfortable and thus the frustration. Maybe you'll be able to control that switch better than human boys do, but then you're missing a normal and fun part of being male too."

"Talking to your penis is normal?" Alden giggled. "Have you named yours like others have?"

Cracking up, Prez slid further down and laughed, "No, I haven't named my dick. Keith calls it his favorite toy, but no, it's not named. Talking to it probably gets to be normal though."

"This is fun?"

"It's not as annoying as it sounds. I know that I'll eventually pee, but talking to it for holding up the show, and keeping me uncomfortable, makes me feel better during the wait."

"It happens to all boys with erections, huh?"

Prez nodded, "As far as I know. Check your biological databases under the male urinary system and reproductive system for more details. I'm not a doctor and can only tell you what it's like."

"Thanks, Prez, I'll do that. Are you ready for your status report?"

Picking up the bar of soap, Prez nodded, "Go for it."

While Prez bathed, Alden reported, "It was a nice quiet night. Around twelve-thirty, we received a series of calls from Des Moines, Hilo, Hawaii police, and from the teenaged boy named Hector, in Los Angeles. Remember Derrick made Hector a Clan Liaison?"

"I remember."

"Hector found two boys that were refugees, but who didn't know about refugee centers, or maybe they chose to not know, they were talking to their dicks at the time."

Prez sniggered, "Alden, do you not want a boy's body?"

"Well, yeah," Alden giggled, "I think so... you know, it'll be kind of weird to talk to a body part that can't talk back, but it's fairly common, about 59.7695 percent of boys do, so..."

"Alden?"

"Yes, Prez?"

"Talk to one of the super-geeks; I'm sure they could figure out a way to make yours talk back!" Prez laughed.

Kerry interrupted, "There ya go, bro! That old dormant tech-mode we won't need as androids, you can have and we'll put it in your dick!"

George offered, "It's really a better idea than becoming a boy in a girl's body. Can you see that? Alden, with boobs, getting cranky a few days every month? He gets annoyed and all the Core Rimmers go poof! Off to Antarctica."

Icarus sniggered, "I can picture it, I can picture it!"

"I've created a monster!" Prez laughed. "The little head is going to take over the world!"

Alden giggled, "This is all well and good, but forget the boy with boobs bit, I'm just trying to decide, do I want to be a smaller eight-ish-year-old, a slightly taller ten- or eleven-year-old, or a much taller teen?"

"No matter which you choose, the part is still an excellent place for a tech-mode," Stevie from AI headquarters offered.

Giggling hysterically, Prez sank in his tub and hoped he wouldn't inhale water and drown.

"Just don't let Jerry build your body; you'll need special underwear!" George sniggered.

"Yeah!" Kerry giggled. "He believes in the 'Three Leg Theory'; with the middle one extendable!"

Rising to the surface again, Prez heard Alden laughing, "No, no, no! I've heard the kids talking. Gay boys and straight girls like looking at really big dicks, but then they wonder what the hell they're going to do with it."

"Guys!" Prez laughed.

All the AIs chorused, "Yes, Prez?"

Prez giggled, "Status report on three rescues, LA, Des Moines, and Hilo, please?"

Five AIs giggled apologies to Prez, promising to return to the topic another time. Alden continued his status report, giving Prez the number of boys rescued, their ages and names. "Derrick, Mike and Reyes were back here by one in the morning. They gave the six kids a chance to eat and chatted at the CIC dining room. They all went home, to the Seiberts', and were in bed by one-forty-five. Through most of the night, everything was quiet, until about five-twenty, when we learned that Raphael Montigua's older brother was alive." He then said that Drew and Corey had gone to Bethesda, Maryland, to retrieve Rafe's older brother, and the group was currently at Anahola Bay. Alden then reported that Rob Gibbons had received a call from his old boss and was off-base.

Prez wondered, "Are we still kewl with the level two kids?"

"Yup, they'll be here tomorrow, around lunch time." Lastly, Alden reported, "The seismic activity that we were so worried about is being closely monitored, but currently all reports are showing the disturbance is nonexistent. We have a... 'report' as to why it started... and stopped..." He paused. Then finished in a rush, "But I'm not so sure I believe it!"

Prez raised an eyebrow, wondering, "What makes you say that?"

"Daddy Draco told me."

"And you don't believe it why?"

"Daddy lies."

Prez huffed in relief then ordered, "Keep me immediately informed of any change in seismic activity, Alden. After all we've been through the last day, needing to evacuate this planet would be another kick in the nads we don't need."

Done with his bath and toweling off, Prez listened to the AIs discussing which age bracket boy that each wanted to become. None of them really had a clue, or were anywhere close to reaching a decision. Prez's laughter and occasional helpful remarks though did prove that Pacific Rim Division was the right place to debate the pros and cons. Finishing his morning routine, Prez thanked Alden and all his brothers for helping to make this a truly memorable morning.

Stepping out of the master bathroom, Prez grimaced at the idea of putting on the shower wrap when he was squeaky clean. Indecisively, Prez glanced at the Terri-cloth wrap and his sleeping husband. Prez had no idea when Keith went to bed, but assumed it was around midnight. Since it wasn't yet seven in the morning, he decided to not put on the wrap and to not wake his hubby with a blow-job. Leaving the room, Prez went downstairs to make some food for his family.

He paused in the living room, turned on a light and the TV, and then set about finding something entertaining to watch. "Religious, no; mindless talk, no; Barney the idiotic purple friggin' dinosaur, nope; news, Battle of Earth, oh, hell no, I know more about it than you do." At last, Prez found something to watch – The Teletubbies. He put the remote control down, softly cheering, "Good morning, Tinky-winkie!"

Behind the scenes, while Prez padded around the kitchen preparing to make breakfast, and giggling about what he was hearing from the television show meant for babies and toddlers, the AIs were passing comments about him while still doing the other tasks needing to be done around the Clan.

"He's my boss," Alden proudly insisted, "and none of you can have him."

"This is coming from the first AI to move into a body with his tech-mode in his pecker," Kerry giggled.

Stevie droned, "Ya gotta admit, Prez is interesting for a human teen."

"You've been working for grandpa Danny too long," George sniggered.

In varying high, squeaky voices, Prez said, "Teletubby bye-bye," and said his farewells to his four morning TV companions. There was a knock at the door. After wiping his hands on a towel, Prez wondered aloud, "Who could this be?" Heading for the door, he called, "Alden, who's at the door?"

Never losing a beat on his play argument with his brothers, Alden answered, "It's Drew, Corey, and the rest of their rescue party."

"Thanks, Alden," Prez said, and then opened the door to wave his unexpected guests inside.

Seeing their big bro nude, Drew and Corey weren't fazed in the least and entered, saying good morning to Prez.

Giggling, Rafe covered his eyes. Leading Rafe inside by the arm, Pat chuckled, "It's less than the robe and shower wrap, Prez."

"I just showered and didn't want to put that crusty thing on," Prez grinned.

Noticing the program on TV, Corey giggled, "Teletubbies again, Prez?" Prez rapidly nodded and sniggered.

Catching Jay gawking at Prez, Chris widely smiled and turned his boyfriend's face toward him. Chris giggled, "Prez, this is Jay Montigua, my soon-to-be-ex-boyfriend, if he isn't more careful."

Offering his hand to Jay, Prez chuckled, "Going from the east coast of America to the ROH takes some getting used to. By the end of the day, Jay will be like everyone else; nudity won't be a problem, unless Darren's naked at the diving well."

Snapping out of his trance and blushing more intensely than he had in years, Jay shook Prez's outstretched hand, softly chuckling, "Hey, Prez."

Prez beamed, "Welcome to Pacific Rim Division headquarters, Jay. Please come in."

Giggling, "Thanks, Prez," Chris led Jay into the townhouse. Prez closed the door and turned back into the living room, offering everyone a seat.

Noticing Chris' suspicious glare, Jay pulled his boyfriend close, sniggering, "What? Did I have any forewarning our director was cute, or that he'd be nude? No one said a word. If I even tried to say Prez is fugly, my tongue would jump out of my mouth in protest." Rafe and Pat cracked up.

Widely smiling, Prez said, "One compliment deserves another. I'm seeing and hearing a handsome couple that belongs together, every bit as much as Keith and I."

Sitting down and pulling Corey onto his lap, Drew offered, "We left Walter Reed and went to Anahola Bay, bro. Since we're Clan a week, I thought, what the heck, I haven't seen a sunrise all week."

"We had to leave when our security thought too many other people were around," Corey added. "Your lights were on, so we brought the newbie over to meet you."

Prez repeated, "Lights were on? Plural?" Everyone nodded and Corey pointed upstairs.

Sleepily staggering down the steps, Keith softly called, "Prez?"

Prez went to the staircase landing, saying, "Right here, babe." Keith swung around the middle landing, seemingly on automatic pilot and following his erection wherever it might lead. Prez figured that since Jay had reacted to him naked and limp, Keith's handsome face, cut abs and thick, uncut bone would cause another problem. Prez laughed, "Alden, get our Clan Short robes on me and Keith, before Chris has a hissy fit, and Jay loses his boyfriend." Prez and Keith phased out and back in under a second, wearing their Clan robes. Prez explained, "We've got company, T'hy'la, including a brand new newbie."

Keith shrugged and softly grunted, "Oh." He took the last step into Prez's waiting arms. They kissed then Keith waved at the assembled group in the living room.

Drew giggled, "Jay Montigua, meet my older brother, Keith Hundser, the morning zombie." Corey began giggling and so did Rafe.

Smirking at Drew, Keith reminded, "I got it from mom."

Smiling around the group, Prez said, "I was going to make breakfast, but thankfully I didn't get very far. I could cook for twelve, but it would be piecemeal, and we'd be eating breakfast until lunch."

Nodding, Drew tapped his sub-vocal, asking, "Alden, who's in charge at the CIC kitchen this morning?"

Over the room's ceiling speakers, Alden answered, "Jessica Simpson is there, Drew." He quickly asked, "Shall I patch you through?"

"Please," Drew confirmed.

A few moments later, Alden said, "Go ahead, Drew."

"Hi Jessy, this is Drew Hundser."

Jessica answered, "Good morning, Drew. What can I do for you?"

"I unintentionally messed up Prez's breakfast plans," Drew smiled, and then asked, "Could you get a cart prepared for twelve of us here?"

"I certainly can," Jessica replied. "Tell me what I should include."

Drew checked with Prez. Prez said, "Good morning, Jess."

"Hello, Preston."

"We've got milk, juices, butter and a bunch of condiments here,"

Prez told her. "All we need are the main course items; pancakes, scrambled eggs, waffles, some potatoes O'Brien if they're already made, sausage patties and links, bacon, mixed fruit salad, and some chocolate milkshakes for our four boys. When you're ready, let Alden know to transport the cart here."

"Give us about ten minutes, please?"

"Take all the time you need, and thanks, Jess. Prez out."

Locking eyes with Prez, Jay wondered, "How long has Prez been your nickname?"

"Over seven years," Prez answered, "since I moved here, Keith, Mike and Derrick have called me 'Prez'."

"You'll meet Mike and Derrick later," Pat assured.

Rafe giggled, "Wait 'til Jay gets a look at Derrick."

Chris nodded and smirked, "Hopefully clothed, at least at first."

Uncertainly glancing around, Jay wondered, "What's the deal with him?"

Rafe giggled, "Blond, like Chris, pretty tall, and definitely high on the cute list."

Keith told Jay, "Derrick's our best friend, our band's drummer and our Clan historian."

Prez grinned, "The most annoying thing about Derrick is his hair; no matter what he does, it always falls right back into place. He doesn't have to do anything to it, it's just always been that way."

"Awesome hazel eyes too," Pat softly muttered. Noticing everyone suddenly smiling at him, Pat blushed and giggled, "Don't tell Ralphie I said that!" Nodding, everyone began chuckling. Blushing intensely, Pat told Jay, "He's already married to Mike anyway, and he's almost three years older than me too."

Rafe innocently said, "All you Core Rimmers are way cute. I was only here part of yesterday and heard lots of kids sayin' nice stuff about you."

Prez smiled, "We're their Clan leaders, so I guess that's to be expected, Rafe."

Jay grinned, "Did I just hear what I thought I heard? What do the kids call our leaders?"

Chris chuckled, "I forgot to mention, they're Core Rimmers and all of us are Rimmers." Jay sputtered then howled laughing, and dropped onto the nearest chair, completely hysterical.

Drew and Corey proudly chorused, "We are the Rimmers!" Twelve- and eleven-year-olds cheering that pushed Jay over the edge. He brought his hands to his face, forgetting completely that there was a cast on his right wrist. Before anyone could warn him, it was too late; Jay had cracked his forehead good. He moaned through his giggles. Everyone checked to make sure Jay was all right. During the subsequent tomfoolery, Prez learned Jay was already diagnosed with a concussion, so he called Doc Andrews and asked him to stop by as soon as he could.

Right after the Doc said he'd be over soon, Jay insisted through his giggles, "I'm fine, Head Rimmer."

"You're going to stay fine too," Prez stated. "A quick scan with a tricorder will make sure your day and ours, stays as drama free as possible."

Glancing around the room, Jay queried, "Drama? What drama?"

"You were unconscious through most of it," Chris told Jay.

Drew began telling Jay about the California orphanage rescues that led to some rioting here and there, around the world. Corey picked up the story of Friday's riots and battles, omitting several details about who did what and where. Keith finished by saying, "We've basically had a week of drama, since we went to the luau on Kauai last Friday, where we met thirty of eighty-six sexually abused orphans. Our Clan has been growing ever since. Your day is going to be slow and easy with a concussion and broken wrist, Jay. Do what the doctors told you to do."

"I've got that covered," Chris promised. He then reminded, "I guess after we get Jay clothes, we'll need a dorm room, so he can lay down and rest when he needs to."

Drew nodded, "It's on the to-do list, right after breakfast. Depending on how Jay feels, if he feels weak, we might show you a dorm room first."

"I really am fine," Jay assured. "I can see everyone, in focus, and I'm hungry too, so I can't be too messed up."

Alden transported the cart of food to the townhouse, putting it down in the corner of the dining room and near the kitchen. He reported, "Breakfast is here, guys. Jessica said, the pitcher of milkshakes on the bottom shelf needs to be refrigerated. Also, Doctor Andrews is on his way. Expect a knock on your door in about fifteen-seconds."

Heading to the kitchen, Prez tapped Drew and Corey to help gather plates, silverware and glasses. Keith went to the front door and opened it for the approaching doctor. Pat got up to help get the table set. Rafe remained in the living room with his brother, Chris and Keith.

Walking the path to the townhouse and seeing Keith waiting, Doc Andrews asked, "What happened, Keith?"

Keith smiled, "Nothing major, we hope, Doc. Our newest Rimmer laughed himself silly and clunked his head, with the cast on his wrist. He's already been diagnosed with a concussion, so let's make sure he didn't make matters worse."

Stepping inside, Doc Andrews chuckled, "I'm surprised we don't have more injuries from Rimmer jokes around here."

Closing the door, Keith softly sniggered, "They're killing me. Have you got anything for it?"

"Ear plugs," Doc Andrews chuckled.

Rejoining those in the living room, Prez said, "Hi, Doc."

Concentrating on the tricorder and Jay, Doc Andrews said hello and asked, "Where's the shower wrap, Preston?"

"Upstairs," Prez answered. "I took a bath and didn't want to put it on. Only when we received all our guests did Alden get me and Keith our robes."

Nodding, Doc Andrews sighed, "I'll take a look at yesterday's shower wrap and you can get a fresh one. Now, Preston; before you attempt to sit."

Slouching, Prez huffed, "Okay, but I slept ten hours and feel much, much better." As soon as he finished speaking, Prez phased out and back in again, without his Clan robe and wearing only a new shower wrap. "Thanks, Alden," Prez smiled.

Over the ceiling speakers, Alden giggled, "Any time, boss."

Still setting the table, Drew noticed the doctor fussing over Jay. Drew said, "We'll have Jay's medical records from Walter Reed today, Doc."

"Thanks, Drew," Doc Andrews softly said. More loudly, he looked at the ceiling, and called, "Alden, get me those records now. It's a priority, so put them on my tricorder too."

"On the way," Alden replied.

Doc Andrews asked Jay, "How do you feel?"

Jay nodded, "Okay, considering that I spent half a day in the rubble that was our apartment. Knowing that Rafe and Chris are alive and unharmed made the biggest difference. I'm hungry and I can see in focus." Grinning, he joked, "The two gorillas had me wondering though." Rafe cracked up. Drew and Corey softly sniggered.

Nodding, Doc Andrews stated, "You'll feel drowsy on and off today. Drink plenty of fluids, and have somebody with you when you're resting."

"That's me, Doc," Chris said. "We've been boyfriends two years."

"Three years," Jay corrected. At Chris' curious smirk, Jay shrugged, "Kisses count. I've never kissed anyone else, have I?"

Suspiciously squinting, Chris grinned, "Not that I know of."

"Never even considered it, baby," Jay warmly smiled.

Doc Andrews told Chris, "Watch your boyfriend. Being trapped and dehydrated didn't help his concussion. He does nothing strenuous today. Walking from place to place is all he's allowed to do, until I check him again tomorrow morning. That means no diving and no swimming, only wading. Feeling dizzy occasionally is normal, but actually wobbling or falling is not." Glancing between Chris and Jay, Doc Andrews softly asked, "You're intimate boyfriends?" When both boys blushed and firmly nodded, Doc Andrews said, "Sexual contact is strenuous activity for Jay. Don't go there until after I check again tomorrow and give you my okay."

A little annoyed, but more frustrated, Jay huffed, "I'm fine. What's the big deal?"

"A concussion is like bruising your brain," Doc Andrews calmly informed them. "Your brain sloshed around your skull, Jay. Blood flows into the damaged area, which is why a visible bruise on your body turns varying shades of blue. Aspirin thins your blood, so you can't even have that for any headaches today. If you need pain relief, come see me at the FYS Building, and I'll give you a hypo-spray. If you feel nauseous, that's a bad sign too. Vomiting is very bad. See me for both, nausea and vomiting. Properly cared for, you'll be active and fine tomorrow. Over-do today and you'll still feel poorly tomorrow. This could be over within a day, or a couple of days; that's your choice."

Prez smiled, "Jay, this fashionable shower wrap is my doing. It's all I'm allowed to wear." He released the Velcro, spun around and showed off his blistered butt. Putting the shower wrap back on, Prez turned again and continued, "I have a job to do here that I did very little of yesterday. Our band plays for the kids almost daily, but I can't do that either, until I get the okay to put clothes on. Make your life and all our lives easier, please? Do what you've been told."

Jay grinned, "You talk like my dad used to."

Chris, Pat and Rafe helplessly chuckled. Already starting to eat, Drew paused and sniggered, "Pretty dense. What did we tell you before coming here, Jay?"

"You're my brothers," Jay repeated.

Pointing at Prez and Keith, Corey smiled, "They treated me like a brother long before last Saturday. You ain't seen nothin' yet."

Keith told Jay, Chris, Pat and Rafe, "The summer of 2003, we were all surfing at the beach. Corey tumbled off his board. The way he fell, his belly hit the board and it knocked the wind out of him. With his legs wrapped around Corey and treading water with his arms, Drew kept him above water and yelled for help. Me, Prez, Mike and Derrick were there as fast as we could. We got Corey to shore. Mouth-to-mouth, Prez gave Corey a quick puff of air into his lungs. It was scary enough, but thank goodness none of our parents were around. Corey wouldn't be allowed to go surfing again, then Drew wouldn't go, and what you see now might be very different."

Facing Prez, Doc Andrews asked, "What made you try mouth-to-mouth?"

Prez shrugged, "I've had the wind knocked out me. Corey was gasping for breath, so I figured it was a diaphragm spasm. A quick, small puff was all he needed."

Smiling, Doc Andrews nodded, "Excellent," and then wondered, "Your old shower wrap is upstairs?"

Prez nodded, "On the back of a chair in the master bedroom.

Help yourself; ya can't miss it."

"I'll check that and get out of your way," Doc Andrews said, and then started up the steps.

Keith prompted, "Let's eat, dudes."

Prez led the way, with Chris, Jay, Rafe and Keith trailing. Soon, they were seated at the table, with Corey, Drew and Pat, serving themselves. Doc Andrews came back down stairs. He said, "You're looking good, Preston. I'll see your bubble-butt in my office about five this afternoon." Giggling and sniggering broke loose at the table.

Nodding, Prez chuckled, "I'll see you later, Doc. Thanks for coming."

"Don't tell the A.M.A that I made a house-call," Doc Andrew grinned, and turned to leave the townhouse.

Right after Doc Andrews left, those at the table heard someone galloping downstairs. Jumping the last three steps, Richie landed in the living room. Standing in his Spiderman briefs, Richie delightfully squealed, "Ev'rybody's here for breakfast?"

Prez chuckled, "Com'ere, Richie. Let's get that belly filled, and I can introduce you to someone."

Richie hurried to his Poppa. Lifting Richie and sitting the boy on his lap, Prez smiled, "Richie Grunert, this new dude is Jay Montigua. Jay is Rafe's big brother and Chris' boyfriend."

"Sweet!" Richie giggled and waved.

Jay smiled, "Hi Richie."

Lifting a small forkful of pancakes for Richie, Prez said, "Richie is our youngest son, Jay."

Keith asked Richie, "Are all your brothers still asleep?"

Shaking his head while chewing the pancake in his mouth, Richie mumbled, "Gage is awake too." He swallowed and giggled, "He stretches and yawns, lookin' around like he's lost, like you, daddy."

Quickly lifting his napkin to his face, Drew cracked up. The others at the table softly sniggered.

Confirming that Gage was moving, an upstairs toilet flushed. Soon, they heard another pair of feet on the stairs. Before even coming into view of those at the table, Gage cheered, "I smell food!"

Wearing blue boxer briefs, Gage came off the steps into the living room, saw the table surrounded, and smiled, "Wow! I didn't expect a morning party."

Keith smiled and reminded, "The first of two parties."

Nodding and approaching the table, Gage asked, "This afternoon, right, dad?"

Keith nodded, "As soon as we can get everybody together." Keith introduced Gage to Jay then prompted his son to get some breakfast. Nodding, Gage got a plate then went to the cart where all the food was. Rafe slyly watched Gage's every movement, but no one noticed.

Prez softly offered, "I was thinking that we could have the party at our new beach house on Kaho'olawe. What do you guys think?"

Keith nodded, "That's a good idea. We can check the place out."

Drew suggested, "Ya know, me and Corey, and John and Stephen are already friends with our security. The four of us can stay here most of the day, and you older dudes can get to know your security. AJ and Jerry can meet and get to know their security."

Prez thoughtfully hummed, and then offered, "That's not a bad idea, but you four still need a break too. You can stay here for a while, but try to get at least a few hours away."

"We will," Corey assured, and then stipulated, "but you two, and Mike and Derrick need to make your security your friends. We found out this morning that Conner and Chuck are becoming a couple, just from time spent together, and with me and Drew."

"That makes all of us safer," Drew explained. "They have personal reasons to protect us and each other now."

Keith told Prez, "If there's not much happening, we could stay the night there. Alden said that the place is as big as a single family house here. There's plenty of space for all of us."

"Not a bad idea," Prez smiled. "We'll go with that intention. Any business interruptions, we'll deal with and get right back to the party."

Loud giggling was heard from upstairs. Then Dee cackled, "You are too, Sammy!"

"Am not!" Sammy playfully insisted. Then there was some scrambling and more laughter upstairs.

Corey, Drew, Gage and Richie began giggling. Keith smiled, "That's our other two sons, Jay. Dee's ten, but looks more like he's eight, from past abuse. Sammy's nine, but actually looks a little older. Even for a ten-year-old, he's got some muscle definition you wouldn't normally see on a boy that age."

"He likes gymnastic stuff and swimming," Gage explained. "It shows on him. Wish it showed on me too."

"Another year or two, Gage," Keith warmly smiled.

Drew nodded, "Sammy kind of reminds me of Corey. I think he's hitting his growth spurt already."

Sitting at a counter stool, Gage softly sniggered, "I know what's goin' on, if you want to know?" Richie giggled louder.

Prez chuckled, "I'm sure we have a very good idea, Gage. It's not nice to blab secrets."

Still smiling, Gage shrugged, "It's not really a secret, but that's kewl, pop."

The pitter-patter of bigger feet and more giggling wafted downstairs. Obviously, Dee and Sammy were making their morning pit-stop in the bathroom. "Well?" Dee giggled.

"I'm tryin'!" Sammy sniggered.

Everyone in the dining room widely smiled and softly chortled.

Dee giggled, "I'll be done and downstairs eating, and you'll still be standing here!"

Sammy cackled, "You're not helping!"

Alden politely said, "Excuse me, but it's happening again, Prez."

"I know, Alden," Prez chuckled.

Alden wondered, "Is there a safe age when this doesn't happen?"

"Yeah, infancy," Prez smiled. Noticing wide smiles and curious eyes around the table, Prez grinned, "A carry over from an earlier conversation with Alden and his brothers."

Alden shared, "Actually, it started with Drew earlier this morning, Prez."

Drew giggled, "Alden, are you still down that path? You can be any kind of male android you want."

Alden giggled, "So I can be eleven with huge muscles and a wiener that hangs to my knees?"

Everyone at the table suddenly stopped eating, grabbed their napkins and cracked up. "That would certainly be unique!" Corey uncontrollably laughed.

"Not highly recommended though, Alden," Keith chuckled.

Alden whined, "Why not?"

"Concussions whenever you get a stiffy for one," Jay laughed.

Alden gasped, "That could happen?"

"Not precisely the same as Jay or other humans," Drew smiled, "but you might knock yourself unconscious."

Corey giggled at the ceiling, "Guys, you see all of us every time we're naked. You see us limp and erect. Decide how much you'd like between your legs based upon all that criteria. Consider it statistically, based upon all the evidence available to you. You can choose your sexuality too, so monitor what the girls are saying, so you can make the decisions."

"Don't confuse the issue, Corey," Alden sighed. "We're having a rough enough time deciding apparent age and all the stuff associated with it."

"Why does Reyes keep repeating 'Don't ask Jerry,' over and over?" Kerry giggled.

"Strange," Stevie muttered, "a minute ago, I presented the question anyway. Jerry, Paul, Ryan, Marc, Danny and KC haven't stopped laughing. Even Joey is giggling out of control."

Alden announced, "Incoming call for you, Prez."

"Who is it, Alden?"

"Danny Page."

Prez smiled, "Go ahead and connect him, Alden."

"What have you Rimmers done?" Danny breathlessly wheezed. The sounds of others laughing around him could be heard. "You've got every AI in the Clan obsessed!"

Drew quickly interjected, "Danny, it's Drew. It's my fault, dude. Alden teased me, and I teased him back. Really, the AIs are just trying to make body decisions. We made them male personalities, so I guess it's kind of understandable that they're getting a little carried away."

At least seven voices incredulously cackled, "A little carried away?"

Danny howled laughing, "Not one of them said anything about something little, Drew. It sounds to me like if they get their way, Joey's unit will be considered small."

"That'll make the rest of us teens tiny by comparison!" KC breathlessly sputtered.

Slamming his fists against a table or something, Marc loudly laughed, "Is everyone in Hawaii horse hung, or what?"

Corey laughed, "Come visit and see for yourselves; we're average or maybe a little more than average. Just let the AIs figure it out, guys."

"I'll order five harnesses, just in case," Danny gasped.

"Danny, this is Prez. Corey's got a good idea. We're going to have a party a little later on Kaho'olawe. Have your crew join us there for a few hours."

Everyone at AI Division cackled, "Kaho-a-whatsie?"

KC roared, "That's a Hawaiian key-word for someplace shaped like a very large pecker?"

Prez laughed, "Just join us there. We could all use a break from yesterday's crap."

"More like a break from nano-nuts with penis envy!" Danny barely managed to reply.

"Who're you calling nano-nuts?" Stevie asked. "Remember, I've seen you nude, Grandpa!"

"We'll see you later, Prez." Danny evilly said, "First, I'm going to reprogram our AI, so he believes he's a female ferret. Danny out."

Once the call finished, Alden carefully asked, "Are you guys angry?"

Everyone around the table loudly assured that none of them were the least bit angry. Prez calmly said, "You're only about four days old, Alden. You may be the best of the best this world has ever seen, but you've only had those days to process what you've been witnessing."

"The choices you make you'll have to live with guys," Drew smiled. "Discuss it amongst yourselves and with us." He sniggered, "It might be better to leave AI Division out of the discussions for a few days though."

The boys at the Seiberts' house were starting to wake up. Anna and Carl already knew that the kids had been invited for breakfast at the Gibbons' home. Anna had offered to help Laura with the meal for their very large family. Since Laura happily accepted, Anna was already there and assisting in the kitchen. Back home from his early morning shiny theft calls, Rob sat with Carl at the kitchen table, sharing what had happened and how to properly deal with it. All the kids from three families were waking and gathering in the living room to watch television while breakfast was prepared.

In the Hundserts' basement nest, kids there were waking up. The McPhearson brothers, Albert and Charles were the first two to wake. When they got up and got dressed, the Steib quadruplets, Kelly, Lawrence, Matthew and Nicholas woke up. Soon, Geoff, Lenny, Leo, Jimmy, Scott Deaver, Tanner and Toby Stoeher, were also awake. After making the required bathroom trips, all thirteen of them went to play video games in the opposite side of the basement, which eventually woke Raymond Varga, Chauncey and Fred Eckhart, Scott Shetley, Lance Kinchen, Craig and Phillip Nash, the Ramos brothers, and the three Hunnicutt brothers, Shaun, Michael and Kenneth. The latter three heard AJ and Jerry softly talking and cuddled around them. It was obvious the boys still felt strongly about each other. Remaining in the nest under the covers, Ray, Chauncey, Fred, Scott, Craig, Phil, AJ and Jerry were waiting for their morning conditions to subside, but that wasn't allowed for more than another minute or two.

Hearing the voices of the older boys, Corey's and Drew's sons led a miniature tickle attack on the nest. The Hunnicutts had AJ and Jerry well under control, so Geoff pointed the McPhearsons to Ray. Lenny sent the Steib quadruplets to motivate Craig and Phil. Tanner and Toby were assigned to tickle Scott by Leo. Not completely satisfied with the morning mayhem as it was, Geoff, Lenny and Leo jumped in on Lance, Chauncey and Fred. Barking out missed tickle spots, Rikko patrolled the perimeter.

Jim and Jen Hundser were considering what to feed their brood when they heard laughter from the basement and shuffling feet up on the second level. Already awake and hitting the bathrooms upstairs, Bruce, Carmella, Dewi, Frankie, Kokaku, and Renee could also hear a little of the muffled basement chaos. Alone with Stephen and cuddling in their bed, John sent to his brothers, sisters and son, 'We've got newbies in the nest. Tell mom and dad to hold off breakfast, so you can help those little kids wake the older, big kids.'

Standing at toilets in one bathroom, Bruce and Frankie evilly snickered, and in the other bathroom, Dewi and Kokaku loudly laughed. As soon as Carmella finished her business, she and Renee were the first to run down to the kitchen. By the time the girls explained their assigned task to Jim and Jen, the four boys were galloping down to the ground floor.

Hearing and then seeing an additional six young kids coming down the steps, two of which were little girls, Craig managed to hysterically cackle, "Oh, damn! There's more!"

Phil giggled, "They come out of the woodwork here!"

AJ and Jerry lost it and cracked up laughing.

Busy giving Chauncey what for, Geoff giggled, "Daddy says us little kids outnumber you big kids."

Lenny laughed, "We're in charge, and don't you forget it!"

Leo howled laughing.

Still laying in bed alone with John, Stephen giggled, "You are so bad, hon."

John nodded and grinned, "Those kids that lost their families yesterday will learn today, their lives have rebooted, memories will be cleared and the insanity has begun."

Stephen smiled, "You're helping them recover, without actually doing it yourself."

"I only do what needs to be done, baby. The little kids need to feel like they're helping. Between those two things and afterward, the rest is mostly automatic. It makes identifying who needs Doc Wiener's help easier too."

On the nightstand, John's comm-badge beeped. Reaching for it, John said, "Hello?"

"Good morning sweetie," Grandma Morrison's cheerful voice replied. "It's time to rise and shine!"

"Hi Grandma," John grinned. He seriously wondered if he might get an unlisted number for his comm-badge.

"Why don't you and your cute husband grab Frankie and then bring your parents over to Des Moines for breakfast?" Grandma suggested, her tone hinting that there wasn't another option. "I've already helped you out, they've been working way too hard, so I have some of my friends helping to fill in while they are taking a break."

Knowing better than to argue, John smiled, "The whole family is awake, Grandma. If it's okay, we'll bring more than Frankie; we'll bring my other brothers and sisters too?"

Grandma hummed then answered, "Yes, do that. There are far fewer remaining refugees here."

"Good," John replied. "Give us a couple of minutes to get everything and everyone ready. We'll be there soon. John out."

Dramatically frowning, Stephen whispered, "No play time?"

Pulling Stephen down to kiss that frown away, John also pulled Stephen into his mind. They completed a half-hour of playtime and snuggling in just under three-seconds. Completely satisfied, they bounded out of bed to get dressed. Inspecting the statue of Joel and seeing his friend apparently reclining, John sent messages to his parents and mother-in-law, so they could get ready to leave. Stephen called Bond to get some security prepared. Knowing that there would be plenty of security already at Wells Fargo Arena, two gorillas and two enhanced human teens would be sufficient for this trip. John's gorilla, Lucky, and Barry, Jim's teenaged security, and Tanya Casey, Jen's teenaged security, were told to get ready for the morning excursion to Des Moines.

While in the bathroom and brushing his teeth with Stephen at his side, John told AJ and Jerry what was going on. The remaining Core Rimmers and dorm leaders were filled in by John's telepathic messages. He then told his brothers, sisters and son to wrap it up and get ready to go on a little trip. Geoff and Lenny were told where Drew and Corey were, so they could take Leo over to Prez's and Keith's townhouse. The tickling had all but completely stopped anyway. Every big kid had little kids cuddling with them.

Jerry smiled, "Now that we're all wide awake, it's time to get breakfast. Once we're finished there, all you newbies can see the dorms later too. If you're ready, you can move in."

Leo asked, "Me too?"

Shaking his head, Lenny smiled, "You're with me and Geoff, bro. We're gonna go see dad and pop and Uncle Prez, and get you adopted, so you're really our big bro."

With that said, everybody knew the plan. Little kids got up off the big kids. Bruce, Carmella, Dewi, Frankie, Kokaku, and Renee went upstairs, followed by Geoff, Lenny and Leo. The bigger, older guys got up and started to get dressed.

While they were putting clothes on, Travis asked Scott Shetley, "Do ya want to be roommates?"

Scott sighed, "I'm sorry, Travis, but Lance already asked. We're both guitar players and like our music loud, so we're going to share a room."

Glancing between fourteen-year-old Scott, and thirteen-year-old Lance, Travis asked, "Are you dudes becoming a couple?"

Checking with one another, Lance and Scott uncertainly shrugged. Lance shyly offered, "I've never had any opportunities with anyone."

Scott explained, "Neither of us have ever gone there before.

We're not sure if we will or not either. I guess we'll see what happens."

Lance asked Travis, "Are you gay?"

Travis sighed, "I haven't had any luck on either side of the fence. I'm not really sure, but I guess I'm more open to the possibility of a boyfriend, especially here and now."

Scott warmly smiled, "It's kewl, man. The way things have worked out, me and Lance can make our decisions and you can too."

Unable to help overhearing, since they were all on the same side of the basement, AJ and Jerry locked eyes and slowly nodded, knowing that there was simply something about Clan life that allowed every kid to find themselves.

Lance called over, "Hey, Jerry, can you help Trav, ya know, so he finds the right roomie?"

Jerry smiled, "I can only point out some dudes that Travis might like. Ultimately, it's up to Travis."

Travis chuckled, "I don't think I need a matchmaker. I've simply never been lucky enough to have a relationship last long enough to get off the ground." The Steib quadruplets giggled. Travis smirked, "What's so funny?"

Kelly shrugged, "It's this place."

"And you older guys," Nicholas smiled.

Matthew giggled, "It's early in the day, but are you talking about breakfast?"

Lawrence rapidly nodded, "Bet you find a roommate by the end of the day, Trav."

By eight o'clock Saturday morning, the Ewa Beach base was bustling with normal morning activities. Kids in the dorms were going to lavatories or heading to the CIC for breakfast. Doc Wiener was making his rounds, checking on his various patients by observation. Only when necessary, would he make arrangements to speak to kids in the privacy of his office. The daytime employees were getting their jobs started. After working seven days in a row, Steven Mier and Madeline Hupp were taking their first day off, now that they had additional housekeepers hired and on-site.

Liki and Keanu were jogging around the base perimeter. Not only were they getting exercise, but they were airing out their feelings and thoughts, still trying to decide where their relationship was going long term. That discussion was only temporarily side-tracked by the shocking appearance of two squirrels scampering across their path, squeaking, "Excuse us!" Native Hawaiian's, both boys were surprised and wondered how North American mainland creatures had arrived on Oahu. They had seen Timmy Short around base the prior Monday, but they weren't aware of Timmy's particular skills with animals.

Geoff, Lenny and Leo arrived at their Uncles' townhouse. None of them had been set up with access to the house, so Lenny knocked on the door. Inside, almost everyone was cleaning up after breakfast. Richie ran to the door and opened it. Seeing his two cousins and a new boy, Richie giggled greetings and let them inside, hollering, "Unca Drew! Unca Corey!"

Sitting on the sofa with Jay, Chris watched his boyfriend widely smile. Breakfast was plenty bizarre and Chris knew that the fun was only beginning.

Lenny introduced Leo to Richie, and then said, "Your dad needs to make Leo our new big bro, Richie."

"Awesome!" Richie giggled, "A new cousin is what we want." He then screamed, "Poppa, get your tricoder and do an adopt'oning."

Jay cracked up laughing at Richie's enthusiasm and the mispronunciations. Giggling, Richie ran to the couch and pounced Jay. In seconds, Richie was laying across Chris' and Jay's laps and getting tickled.

In the kitchen loading the dishwasher, Keith softly sniggered, "You have your orders, baby."

Nodding, Prez smiled, "As if we didn't hear who was at the door or what they wanted."

"They must've heard Richie inside all four of the big houses, the dorms and the CIC," Corey softly giggled.

In the dining room and putting stuff back on the cart to be returned to the CIC, Dee, Gage and Sammy began giggling. They were the sons of the Head Rimmers, but Richie seemed to be more suited to a role as a Mouth Rimmer.

Drew told Prez, "I know you only saw Leo last night, bro, but he's already been asked, accepted and made himself a big brother for Geoff and Lenny." Prez nodded and started for the living room. Drew and Corey followed.

Keith softly told his other three boys, "Right after the adoption and welcoming Leo into the family, get Richie and go take your showers. We're going to start our party as soon as possible."

"Okay, dad," Dee, Gage and Sammy chorused.

Gathering his sons, Keith led them to the living room.

Prez called Alden for his tricorder. Drew, Corey, Geoff and Lenny surrounded Leo. With his tricorder in hand, Prez smiled, "Leo, I think you're setting a new Rimmer record for getting adopted the fastest. I saw your introduction on TV from Des Moines. Drew told me that it was pretty much in the bag before you went to bed last night."

Leo nodded and giggled, "It was that easy, Prez."

Prez teased, "In another minute, that'll be Uncle Prez, nephew."

Leo giggled. On either side of Leo, Geoff and Lenny spontaneously wrapped their arms around their new big brother and smiled up at him. Drew and Corey each rested a hand on Leo's shoulders. Watching this from a camera in the room, Alden snapped a still photo for the family and recorded the proceedings.

Prez asked, "Leo Daniel Scott, do you want Corey Seaver and Drew Hundser as your fathers?"

Leo nodded, "Yes."

"Do you want Geoffrey Eckel and Lenny Cuttler as your little brothers?"

"Definitely," Leo smiled, and hugged both boys that were glued to his sides.

"Drew Hundser and Corey Seaver, do you want Leo as your son?"

Drew and Corey smiled at each other, nodded once then replied in unison, "Yeah, very much, Prez."

Looking down, Prez grinned, "Geoff and Lenny, do you want Leo as your big brother and do you promise to listen to him?"

Geoff quickly nodded, "Okay, Unca Prez."

Lenny giggled, "Yeah, and most of the time too."

Everyone in the room cracked up. Prez laughed, "Good enough, Lenny. It's done. Witnessing this adoption were Keith Hundser, Dee Vanderwood, Richie Grunert, Gage Lundberg, Sammy Bay, Pat O'Hara, Rafe Montigua, Jay Montigua and Chris Stokley." Prez turned off the tricorder and everyone welcomed the newest member of the Hundser-Seaver family with applause and hugs.

Alden giggled, "Look on the end table, guys." Nearest to the end table, Pat picked up a stack of framed photos and started handing them out. There was a copy for Drew, Corey, Geoff, Lenny, Leo and all the members of Prez's and Keith's family. Alden said, "There's a Quicktime video of the happy event on each of your computers too. I've seen a lot of adoptions, but this one showed the happiest family group yet."

Drew looked up and smiled, "Remember that, Alden. Happiness isn't going to be in your pants, it's going to be in your heart."

Six thoughtfully humming AIs were heard over the speakers.

Alden teased his brothers, evilly snickering, "Muahahaha! The Rimmers are all mine!"

The speaker connection closed with an audible pop. Everyone in the room grinned at each other. Jay softly sniggered, "They're so confused."

Corey giggled, "Let's go to the CIC, Jay. You need clothes and our boys need their milkshakes. If Derrick, Mike and Reyes aren't ready with their group yet, we might have to start without them, so you can relax as soon as possible."

Pat smiled, "Been there, done that. I'm going to go see if Ralphie is awake."

Rafe said, "See ya later, Pat. We'll talk about getting our dorm room, so when it's time for that, we're ready."

"Kewl, Rafe."

Everyone said goodbye to Pat as he walked to the door. Once Pat had left, Richie, Gage, Dee and Sammy hurried upstairs.

Chris checked with Jay, to be sure he was feeling okay and ready. Jay leaned forward, causing Chris to back up. Jay stole a kiss that Chris obviously wasn't expecting. Leaning back, Jay grinned, "That was for the kiss at the hospital. What do you think of that?"

Chris giggled, "You're feeling better."

Intently searching every feature of Chris' face, Jay nodded and gently assured, "About everything." Feeling a shiver race down his spine, Chris shook it off and peacefully sighed. At last, there would be no more hiding, no more arguing about what was appropriate behavior and where, all to keep their love safe from harassment. At their new home, nobody would say much about public displays of affection, except occasional teasing.

Drew tapped Keith on the arm then promised, "We'll be at Kaho'olawe after that, bro."

Keith nodded, "We'll gather our security and get the place set up, as soon as our boys are ready to leave."

Prez reminded, "We'll make a quick stop at the store too, just so I can meet the newbies picked up overnight."

Squinting suspiciously, Keith grinned, "The key word is quickly, Prez."

"Very quickly, I promise," Prez chuckled.

Drew waved Chris, Jay and Rafe off the couch. Everyone said, "Later," to Prez and Keith then left for the CIC. On the way, Jay commented on the dorm building they passed. He noticed that a lot of the windows were opened.

Drew shrugged, "There aren't security concerns here, Jay. Between our base security and the AIs, everything's covered. Our weather is too nice most of the time to keep windows completely closed."

Pointing to his left, Jay wondered, "Who lives in those condos?"

"All the adult employees," Corey answered, and rambled, "chefs, housekeepers, lawn care, doctors, nurses, like that."

"Eventually teachers too," Drew added. "We're a self-contained community. Every kid here feels safe, no matter what their pasts were."

Chris softly said, "I'll tell you more about that later."

The combined Gibbons-Seibert breakfast was almost done. Mike was called aside by his dad. Derrick reminded Mike that they had six newbies to take through the store. Gathering the new kids, Reyes led them outside. Mike assured Derrick he would be at the basement store to help, and then Derrick went outside. He and Reyes transported to the CIC, to let Kaleo and other Core Rimmers know what they were planning.

Mike followed his father into the office wondering, "What's up, dad?"

"I had a very strange call this morning," Rob told his son, and then quickly asked, "Where are the Scooby Gang this morning?"

Mike shrugged, "I have no idea. They were in the room with our sons and the six newbies when we got home before two this morning. We let them go and do their own things, dad."

Rob hummed, and then told Mike of the two homes that were burglarized over night. Listening to the story, Mike practically had to bite his tongue off to keep from grinning or laughing out loud. Rob pointedly asked, "Tell me you don't know anything about this?"

Acting completely stupefied, Mike softly assured, "I've seen what the ferrets collect, and it's mostly stuff they find. They know oysters make pearls too, so that's probably the most valuable things they gather. The Scoobies take junk, like hubcaps and tire wheels, dad. I can guarantee it wasn't my ferrets." He then started out of the office for the front door.

Following his son, Rob loudly said, "The fillings and caps on their teeth were stolen, Michael!"

Knowing his face couldn't be seen, Mike opened the door, shrugging and grinning, "It wasn't my kids." Closing the door behind him, he silently ordered, "Take me to Derrick now," and disappeared.

Rob Gibbons reopened the door to find his son had vanished. Closing the door again, he called, "Alden, where did you send my son?"

"To the basement store, where Derrick is, with Reyes and the new kids," Alden innocently answered.

Rob asked, "Did you transport the Scoobie Gang anywhere off base last night?"

"No Sir," Alden fibbed. It was actually four in the morning.

While their sons were bathing and showering, Keith asked Prez, "What happened during breakfast baby; I felt something worried you."

Prez sighed, "Since I'm feeling better, John shared information about Inoyra and Relud Glith. I'm going to have to contact Admiral Morrow about this."

Keith gasped, excitedly wondering, "Morrow? Why?"

"It's a long sordid story," Prez began. "Betazed is just beginning diplomatic contact with the Federation, but someone in that group of Betazoids can't be trusted. Last night, John, Inoyra and Relud had a telepathic conversation. Someone tried to abduct the Betazoid twins for a slave trade. Although they escaped, they were telepathically messed with. To make matters worse, they're certain that their parents were murdered. This isn't a job for John's Intel team. It's not a job for a Clan Division either. It's in the Federation's hands to discover who tried to abduct the twins, and who killed their parents. All I can do is contact Morrow with the information we have, photos of the twins, and let the Federation investigate the Betzoid diplomatic team." With that, Prez walked upstairs to his computer, where he would send his message encrypted to Admiral Morrow and Cory Short.

Drew, Corey, their three sons, Chris, Jay and Rafe went into the CIC dining room, where most of the Clan was gathered and having breakfast. AJ, Jerry, Kaleo, Tory, Troy and Sean could easily be seen, because they were seated at the first rows of tables around many of the youngest kids. Geoff, Lenny and Leo went directly to the kitchen chow line for milkshakes.

Drew rapidly blinked. There were a lot of people missing from the dining room, yet it somehow seemed more packed with kids than it had at dinnertime the previous evening.

Kaleo loudly called, "What's goin' on, guys? John sent a broadcast about going to Des Moines again?"

Walking over to where Kaleo was, with Drew, Chris, Jay and Rafe following, Corey giggled, "It's nothing, Kaleo. Grandma Morrison just wanted to give the Hundasers a break, so she invited them to breakfast, or brunch, figuring the five hour time difference."

Kaleo nodded, "I met her briefly last night, while she was being shown around base."

Looking around the six Core Rimmers nearby, Drew introduced Jay then said, "We need to take him to the store, dudes. Are you guys good to cover for us while we're busy?"

Troy answered, "We're going to take Jonathan Dupre to Northeast Division. He's got a great-aunt, his grandfather's sister, living there. We'll give him a comm-badge, so he can return when he wants."

"We'll only be gone fifteen or twenty minutes," Sean added.

Kaleo and Tory quickly assured they were kewl. Tory asked, "Is Prez still thinking of a Core Rimmer retreat today?"

Corey nodded, "It's in the works, bro."

Noticing the worried expressions on the faces of the Hunnicutt boys, Jerry asked, "Can we bring our boys?"

Patting Jerry on the back, Drew smiled, "Course ya can, bro. We're all bringing our sons too. We'll just take turns coming back here, if we need to deal with any other business."

Corey asked, "Would one of you let Lieutenant Vorik know what's going on? We'll all be available if needed, just off base." Tory nodded and stood. Without a word said, he went directly to the Command Center. Corey loudly giggled, "You're too easy, Tory."

Spinning around, Tory paused long enough to laugh, "You have no idea, but Kaleo does." At least half the kids in the dining room cracked up.

Sadly shaking his head, Kaleo sniggered, "It's a good thing we'll be alone on Kaho'olawe."

Still giggling, Drew tapped his sub-vocal, calling, "Alden, take us to the basement store, and include Tory, Kaleo, Troy, Sean, Jerry and AJ in the previous body type conversation."

"Good idea!" Alden giggled, and then executed the order.

Still unaccustomed to being transported, Jay looked around the store. Derrick and Reyes transported in with their six rescued kids. Jay chuckled, "This isn't a store, it's a warehouse!"

Derrick grinned, "Two-hundred and seventy-five kids as of this morning."

Corey cracked up. Drew smiled, "You saw all the kids in the dining room. Somehow, even with a bunch of us scattered around this morning, it seemed just as full as it was for dinner last night."

Mike transported into the store. Tapping Derrick on the shoulder, Reyes shyly reminded, "Including me, two-hundred-seventy-six, dad."

Hugging his eldest son, Derrick chuckled, "I stand corrected."

"Or fall over from logic wars with androids and AIs," Mike softly sniggered.

"Alden," Drew hollered, "tell me you didn't include Mike and Derrick in our earlier conversation."

"Okay," Alden giggled over the loudspeakers, "I didn't, but I did, and so did Kerry, George, Jack, Icarus and Stevie. We're getting valuable input from all the kids up in the dining room too. All we asked about was preferred eye, hair and skin color, but we're getting a lot more."

* * * * *

Des Moines, Iowa

Saturday November 6, 2004 1:23PM CST

John, Stephen, Frankie, Kathleen Marr, Jim and Jen Hundser, all the Hundser kids, and the four security personnel arrived at the Wells Fargo Arena. At the sight of the large indoor amphitheater that still had hundreds of people waiting to be processed, Jen turned to John gasping, "You were here yesterday?"

John nodded, "Yep, and stop worrying so much, mom. There were a couple of butt-heads we had to deal with, but mostly, everything was kewl. People were nice, considering they were worn out from all the Battle of Earth stuff."

"I was here," Lucky reminded Jen. "John and Stephen had all their security right beside them the entire time. Everywhere they were, we were too." Stephen told the adults about the Porkie incident.

Their conversation was interrupted by Grandma pulling up in a four-wheel ATV pulling a passenger train. The "thumpa-thump-thump-thumpa" of the ATV's engine quickly gave away the fact it was nowhere near stock.

"Hop on, the food's about ready!" Grandma yelled over the thump of her ride. "Dewi and Kokaku, you two cuties can ride up here with me."

Jim picked up Kokaku and Jen picked up Dewi. In moments the two boys were snuggled in front of Grandma. Giggling hysterically, John and Stephen pulled Kathleen into the next set of seats. Gorillas, security, the remaining kids and lastly, Jen and Jim piled in.

"Johnny, sweetie, I have no problems lifting the wheels off of the ground, so you won't need to assist me." Grandma stated in her most grandmotherly tone.

Watching his parents' eyes spin because Grandma called him 'Johnny', and got away with it, John laughed, "Grandma, I only levitated two people and one guy in a wheelchair yesterday!"

"And you did a very good job." Grandma replied. "Would you be so kind as to make sure the rest of your family stay in their seats? I'm sure they have never rode in a Des Moines tram before."

Nodding, John giggled, "Boys, hold on, and girls, close your eyes. I'll take care of the rest."

Grandma hit the horn button on the ATV, and gunned the engine as a series of air horns on the forks began blasting 'Dixie'. Amazingly, the crowds watching parted, giving her clear space to proceed; her driving had already become legend within the arena. With the front wheels spinning a good six inches off of the ground, the tram took off, heading towards the ramp leading to the upper level.

Carmella and Renee screamed. Jen Hundser covered her eyes with both hands. Jim Hundser cracked up and all the boys, including Stephen and John, loudly squealed with delight.

Steering using the individual rear brakes, Grandma headed up the ramp, and in no time the tram was flying through the tram lane in the sky-walk. As they entered the Iowa Events Center, Grandma took a hard right, putting the tram cars on two wheels as they made the corner. Just shortly after they returned to rolling on all fours again, Grandma blasted through a set of open doors and brought the tram to a stop in a private dining room.

Approaching the tram, Logan grinned, "You're getting better Grandma; nobody puked this time!"

"It's not my fault some people can't handle a little adrenalin rush," Grandma replied.

Throwing his arms around Stephen, John roared laughing. Dewi and Kokaku wanted to stay with Grandma and go for a longer ride. Giggling hysterically, Bruce wobbled off the tram and fell down. Jim helped his son up and then helped his wife off the tram.

Wearily, Jen smirked, "You're really not helping my Valium addiction, Grandma."

"Give me a week and all y'all won't need it." Grandma stated factually.

Julio came over, and after inspecting the front tires of the ATV, stood up grinning, "Grandma, could you at least wear the print off of the tread on the front tires before we have to replace the rears?"

"That is why they invented tire rotation," Grandma replied. "You worry about your family, I'll worry about maintenance."

"Yes, Grandma," Julio replied with a smile; obviously enjoying the banter. "I hope the ride helped your appetites; Lucas, Logan and Mini took a kitchen break from the madness and helped Marcie with brunch."

"And Lucas didn't even blow anything up doing it!" Logan giggled. "He'll get over it, though."

"I'm sure I can find a way to improve his mood." Grandma stated with a twinkle in her eyes. "Jennifer, would you be a dear and settle the rest of your family? Logan, please disconnect the tram and hop on the back. These two angels need a proper ride; I believe a guided tour of the sky-walk system is in order." Jennifer's heart was still in her throat, so she could barely reply with a nod.

Dewi and Kokaku cheered their acceptance of the plan. Logan quickly undid the hitch and hopped on the seat behind Grandma. "HIT IT!" Logan yelled as soon as he had his hand on one of the handholds. With a blast of the horns, they were off, the rear tires screeching in protest.

"One of these days, she may grow up!" Julio giggled, as he watched the ATV go through the doorway. "Welcome to Des Moines!"

"We might even consider trying normal one of these days," Jesse grinned as he came over and slipped under Julio's arm. "I hear it's boring though, so probably not this week."

"If you don't mind, just follow us and we can get comfortable while Grandma is terrorizing the Skywalk system," Julio added. "Mom and Dad should have everything ready to go, and it's more comfortable at the table."

"Not to mention safer," Jesse mumbled under his breath.

The group followed Julio to the table. Mick looked over at the two adults with a knowing smile. "Don't worry," Mick assured the Rimmer adults. "Despite recent events, things are a lot saner than they appear. Have a seat and relax."

John looked around the table. Julio and Jesse's family were there, as well as Mick's and Janice's group. Marcie and Robin sat together. Eddie was with Robin while Johnny was occupied by getting Fisher a bowl of berries. There were a few faces that John didn't recognize, so he telepathically asked Robin, 'Who are the newbies, bro?'

'Which newbies are these?' Robin innocently giggled, and started thinking of names, beginning alphabetically, so John would have to dig to find the correct handles.

John widely grinned, 'Fine, keep your secrets. There's more than one way to name a kid.' The only kid who wasn't drinking or eating at the time was a teenaged boy. Levitating the dirty-blond-haired boy with hypnotic hazel eyes, and earning the boy's loud laughter, John introduced him to his parents, sisters, Bruce, Stephen and Frankie. "Grandma's been collecting kids, specifically for us to bring home. This dude here is Erik Kendricks, he's fourteen."

Erik waved from his seated position a meter above his chair, giggling, "Nice to meet you."

Lowering Erik and moving on to levitate the next kid, John smiled, "Everybody, this is Stuart Sutliff, but call him Stu." After a short pause, John giggled, "Stu's twelve, and wants me to lift him higher. May all your dreams come true, dude." John sent Stuart floating up to the ceiling, where he waved down at everyone and giggled.

Before his dad broke concentration on Stuart, Frankie sent, 'Don't make this next kid float.'

Barely shaking his head, Stephen added, 'He's very shy and a little scared, hon.'

Lowering Stu, John asked his husband and son, 'Do you have his name?'

'I think he's hiding that too, dad,' Frankie sent.

Stephen tilted his head, trying to focus on the boy without staring at him. Drawing a blank on the boy's name, but feeling quakes of fear, as he had Monday night, Stephen got up and walked around the table to the small boy. Before Stephen arrived, Frankie strongly assured the boy, 'It's okay now, really.'

Barely above a whisper, the boy whimpered, "I'm Wade Houseman." Breaking down in tears, he softly sobbed, "I'm five."

Stephen's slight build didn't prevent him from lifting the five-year-old. The suffering from the boy that Stephen felt he didn't understand, but Kathleen Marr read it clearly and it brought tears to her eyes. Stephen was soon helped by John, who took the little one in his arms. Frankie arrived and rubbed Wade's back. Without explanation, John walked away from the table with Wade. Gently reassuring Wade, Stephen and Frankie never left John's side.

Wiping her eyes at the tenderness witnessed, Kathleen softly asked, "What just happened?"

Jen smiled, "It's the new John, the new Stephen and the new Frankie, doing what the three of them combined can do."

"They're a special group, and they're helping a very special little boy," Lucas whispered, his voice rough from the latest events.

Looking down the table at Lucas, Jen warmly smiled, "Rest your voice, Lucas. You can talk to us telepathically."

John took Wade and his family into the men's room. With a thought from John, the baby changing table dropped. Sitting the boy down on the table, John sent, 'Please tell us what's wrong?'

Wade vigorously shook his head. Stephen prompted, "We'll listen and make it better?"

Frankie locked eyes with Wade, sending, 'Can you hear me and my daddy?' Wade shrugged, but his eyes told the truth, that he could hear telepathically. Frankie offered, 'My daddy and poppa help kids. They helped me, just Wednesday. Do you know how I found them?' This time, Wade shrugged but then nodded. 'Tell only me, please,' Frankie pleaded, and then assured, 'It's really okay.'

Confused as to what he should do, Wade leaned over and lay down on the changing table. Like a much younger boy might, he brought a fist to his mouth and sucked his thumb. John had been patiently waiting for Frankie's intervention to make a difference. Realizing that he had no other choice, John looked deep into Wade's mind.

Experiencing events from Wade's perspective, John heard a woman screaming in agony and a man yelling at Wade to stop. A younger Wade, about two-years-old, wanted cake. The woman, obviously Wade's mother, had said no. Wade had a tantrum and pushed his frustration to his unsuspecting mother. The father slapped Wade across the face, hard enough to free his wife and give Wade a bloody nose. In another vision, John heard the mother explaining to Wade why he shouldn't talk telepathically to other kids. It was apparently soon after Wade had started school. Wade didn't understand why he shouldn't do things that were completely natural to him. Thursday night, there had been another bad scene at the Houseman residence where Wade simply wished his parents would go away and leave him alone. Now Wade felt like his parents' deaths were his fault. Those memories were the strongest, but Wade had others that were just as bad, so he had come to believe that using his gift was always wrong.

John telepathically shared what he had learned with Stephen and Frankie. Stephen nodded, but Frankie turned red. Neither John nor Stephen had ever seen Frankie angry and were too surprised to even consider saying a word. Frankie stormed out of the bathroom.

John sighed then returned his attention to Wade. He smiled, "I know you heard me when my lips weren't moving, Wade. It was me making the other boys float at the table." He then proved it by levitating Stephen. Wade was watching, but still sucking his thumb. John teased the boy, "I can do lots more than that." Water faucets on all the sinks in the room suddenly turned on. Wade's eyes widened. John told Wade, "I can make people feel good stuff too."

"John!" Stephen hysterically cackled. "Omigod! Stop tickling me!" Hovering about a meter off the floor, Stephen laughed hysterically, twisting and leaping from tickles by unseen hands.

Wade stopped sucking his thumb and giggled. Just to give the boy a brief example, John telepathically tickled him. Lurching on the changing table, Wade brushed invisible hands away from his belly. Sitting up, Wade giggled as Stephen knelt and then fell to his side, curling into a fetal position and breathlessly laughing, unable to stop, and still a meter off the floor.

John stopped tickling Stephen and lowered him to the tiled mens' room floor. He held his arms open for Wade. Wiggling to the edge of the table, Wade held his arms open. Frankie returned to the bathroom with Lucas. John lifted Wade, firmly saying, "I'll help you learn when it's good and when it's bad, and I promise, I will never hurt you like your mommy and daddy did."

'Where in the hell is Pablito when I need the little asshole,' Lucas sent to John and Stephen. 'I'd love to shove as much C-5 up their asses as I can fit, then see what happens when it all goes off at once... five or six hundred times.'

Still on the floor and only beginning to catch his breath, Stephen giggled, "Be nice, Lucas. John, when we get home..."

"I know, baby," John widely grinned.

'I was being nice. Would you like to hear my REAL plans?' Lucas sent back with an evil grin.

"I'll take a rain check," Stephen muttered.

John told the imp on his hip, "Wade, this is Lucas. He's really good at helping guys like us. Just relax and you won't feel a thing."

Lucas looked at Wade with an unusual understanding in his eyes. His voice was rough as he said, "Hey little guy, you think you can handle seeing something that is kinda scary at first, but turns out really good?"

Checking with John, Wade heard a soft assurance, 'I'm not letting go of you.'

Wade asked Lucas, "Like how scary?"

"You'll get to see why I can't talk right, an' why mind stuff is good stuff." Lucas reassured him. "I'll make sure that you don't see the really scary stuff."

Tightening his grip on John, Wade nodded, "Okay," and then John nodded once at Lucas. Stephen stood close by, just in case.

Lucas nodded back, and then began his story. He showed enough of his pre-UNIT life to get the point across about how him and his twin used it to keep from causing Spence more pain. He then went into a light version of the beginnings of his transformation, including the loss of his voice. After that, he showed a couple of missions where mind tools saved lives, and then he showed the reunion with Spence and how telepathy possibly saved his big brother's life. 'If this stuff is bad, why has it saved so many lives?' Lucas asked.

Wade shrugged, and then whimpered, "Why did mommy and daddy say it's bad?"

"They didn't understand, and were worried for you," John explained, although he only partially believed the last part. If Wade's father was still alive, John would gladly implant thoughts that caused the man to believe maggots and worms were eating him alive from the inside.

Glancing around, Wade checked, "Mommies and daddies don't know stuff?"

Frankie nodded, "Sometimes even grown-ups get scared and do dumb stuff."

Stepping up and rubbing Wade's back, Stephen asked, "Are you hungry?"

Blushing, Wade nodded then hid his face on John's shoulder, giggling, "I gotta whiz too, daddy."

Hearing that, Frankie roared laughing at his dad's and pop's stunned expressions. He had seen those same shocked looks only three days earlier when he fumbled his first English words.

Gathering Frankie and leading him to the door, Lucas giggled, "Grandma had a feeling."

Stepping out of the mens' room, Frankie confirmed, "This means I've got a little brother, don't it?"

"It's all done except the paper work," Lucas answered.

Returning to the table, where the kids were eating and the adults had cups of coffee, Frankie smiled, "Wade's better now. He'll be out with Daddy and Poppa in a minute." Sitting on his chair, Frankie excitedly gushed, "I've got a little brother!"

Jim softly chuckled, "Congratulations, Frankie." Jennifer's soft giggling soon became loud laughter. In the space of a week, all her sons had adopted kids. Including Wade, she already had nine grandchildren.

Finishing in the bathroom, Wade had just used a big boy's urinal for the very first time, thanks to John levitating him. At the next urinal over, Stephen relieved himself also, and silently forewarned John that payback for the tickling would be swift and repetitive. Of course, Stephen didn't have much telepathic control and Wade overheard his new Poppa's playful threat. Wade giggled and sent, 'You liked it, Poppa.' John roared laughing.

Stephen smirked, "I'll get to tickle Daddy the old fashioned way."

'He can't wait too,' Wade giggled.

Inside the bathroom, it was obvious that Grandma was returning on her ATV; the sound of the engine caused the light fixtures to shake. Once Stephen and Wade had finished washing and drying their hands, John gathered his husband and new son, guiding them out of the men's room.

They came out just in time to see her pull up, with Logan seated on the handlebars and Dewi and Kokaku standing on the seat in front of Grandma, both wearing new black tee-shirts stating in large orange letters: 'Grandma's Little Biker: Lead, follow, or get the * out of the way!' Behind Grandma, hanging on for dear life, was a set of twin strawberry-blond eleven-year-olds, a fourteen-year-old, who was obviously their big brother, and a fourth, younger blond boy, clearly a relative of the other three. Sitting at the rear of the tram, his T-shirt had the same words emblazoned, only on the back. Behind the ATV was a trailer, covered with a tarp bearing a large Harley-Davidson logo.

As the ATV came to a stop, Logan hopped off of the handlebars and ran back to the trailer. The three boys wearing black tee-shirts joined him as fast as their legs could carry them. The twins and their older brother, however, staggered off of the back and dropped to their knees, repeatedly kissing the floor. Grandma just shook her head at the three newcomers, commenting, "No sense of adventure. You three need a good surf lesson or three. James, could you be a good son and help your new nephews to their feet and explain that their lives were not in danger?"

Obediently nodding, because he really had little choice in the matter, Jim stood and went to the three boys on their knees. The teenager could likely pull Jim onto the floor, so he helped the younger twins up. "Welcome to Clan Short Pacific Rim Division," Jim grinned, and then whispered, "Surfing is easier, I promise."

The twins introduced themselves and their older brother. One said, "I'm Kade Macadam Oldcambus."

The other twin said, "Pleased to meet you, Uncle Jim. I'm Karey Macauley, and that's our big brother Kassidy Malcom."

"My pleasure," Jim smiled, introduced himself, and then prompted the three boys to "Have a seat and order yourselves brunch."

"Thanks," the threesome cheered, and started for the table.

"FINE!" The fourth younger boy hollered, "Don't bother to introduce me, we're only family." He paused then whispered, "Brats!" Jim chuckled, and the boy looked up, giggling, "Taron Reyce Otter's my name, Uncle Jim. Can I have a room away from those three?"

Nodding, Jim chuckled, "Everybody chooses their own room and roommate. Join us for brunch, Taron."

"Can I get the present Grandma got me first?" Taron asked, a pout forming on his face.

"Certainly," Jim quickly said, and then asked, "Do you need help?"

"They might," Grandma stated with a gleam in her eyes. "Taron, remember what I told you?"

"Yes, Grandma!" Taron replied, his grin evil enough to make the Pope run for cover.

Following Taron to the trailer, Jim was surprised when a Vulcan boy of about twelve hopped out, brushed himself off and adjusted his Vulcan robe. Beneath the robe, the boy seemed to be wearing casual youth clothing. Jim greeted the boy. "T'nar pak sorat y'rani."

"T'nar jaral," the boy replied. "Shal Vaziik, kan t'Varuun."

Jim smiled and completed the introduction. "Shal James, kan t'Kenneth."

Nodding once, Vaziik confirmed, "I am to address you as Uncle Jim?"

"Please do," Jim said, and explained, "all the children at our base do. It would be fitting for you to proceed as the others, agreed?"

"Agreed," Vaziik flatly stated.

As Jim was talking, Logan and the boys managed to get the last of the ties off of the front of the tarp. With Jim's help, they pulled it back, revealing two mini-trikes, two mid-sized trikes, and one full sized trike with a tee-shirt on the seat. Jim's eyes fell on the shirt, and he read out loud "My Mom wears the leathers in our family!"

"Put your tee shirt on, Son," Grandma instructed.

Picking up the shirt, Jim smiled, "I was just about to go to the men's room to switch shirts... MOM!"

"Hurry up then, your trike will be waiting for you," Grandma smiled. "Boys, do you remember how Mr. Chuck told you to unload them?"

The boys chorused "Yes, Grandma!" as they reached down in unison to place their trikes in neutral.

Jim went to change shirts. Vaziik remained at the trailer with the boys and helped the youngest unload their trikes. Noticing Jen's worried expression, Julio explained, "It's how the little kids get around our neighborhood and base."

"It'll be safe for the kids, once Grandma gives them lessons," Jesse added.

Jen smiled, "That relieves one fear. My only other concern is for the dozen or more other boys that won't have trikes."

"We can't have that!" Grandma loudly said. She reached into a pocket, pulled out a business card and handed it to Jen, smiling, "Just tell them how many and of which sizes and mention my name."

Julio giggled as he turned to Jen. "Yeah, just tell them Grandma sent you; I swear she wasn't in Des Moines more than an hour before the entire staff of the dealership were at the front gate asking for her. Considering most of them were in bed at the time she decided to move, I think that's pretty good. I heard her call the owner of the Naples dealership to tell him she was moving before we left there, but never expected to see that response!"

At last, almost an hour after they arrived, everyone was seated around the joined tables. At one end of tables sat the adults; Marcie, Mick, Janice, Grandma, Kathleen, Jen and Jim. At the other end were all the kids, chattering away, getting to know one another and telling the newbies where they would be living later that day. Bond and Lucky only snacked on bananas and guarded the entrance to the private room.

During the meal, all of the new refugee kids had opportunities to explain what had happened to them and their care-givers. Vaziik explained that he and his father had come to work for a trade consortium. Vaziik's father, Varuun, was misidentified as a Romulan and shot. The Starfleet cadet that had shot Varuun immediately recognized his mistake and tried to save the man by transporting Varuun and Vaziik directly to Starfleet Medical. Most importantly, Vaziik was with his father when he passed. Learning that he would be cared for by a Vulcan Clan and that Lieutenant Vorik was stationed at Ewa Beach seemed to provide Vaziik a measure of satisfaction. The meal ended and the larger group of Rimmers took their leave of the Des Moines group to return to Ewa Beach.

* * * * *

Ewa Beach

Saturday November 6, 2004 8:52AM HTZ

A few minutes before nine in the morning, the United States Federal Judge and his wife arrived at the Iroquois Avenue gate. Once their car was parked, they were escorted to condominium 'C', where Colin Powell was waiting. News teams that had arrived overnight and earlier that Saturday morning began arriving too. The same FYS Building first floor conference room used for the King's speech was set up with American Flags and a Presidential Seal on the podium for the scheduled ten o'clock Inauguration Ceremony. This time, Troy made the announcement regarding more news reporters and instructing all the kids to remain south of the CIC.

In the basement store, all of the newbies were getting along very well. Prez and Keith briefly joined the group. At a convenient point where he wasn't helping any of the newbies, Mike let Prez know that his order was carried out by the Scoobies. Mike and Prez transported out of the store and into the Shiny Vault. Mike's ferret kids weren't there, but there was a refrigerator and piles of new shiny trinkets gathered. Prez and Mike transported back to the CIC basement store. Mike went right back to work assisting the kids. Prez and Keith returned to the CIC dining room and their sons, to prepare for the afternoon party at Kaho'olawe.

The seven newbies accepted help from the Core Rimmers, their sons, and each other. Only Leo didn't fully participate and hung back, away from the majority of shoppers who were choosing underwear, socks, sneakers and sandals. The boys moved quickly through the store, but always helped each other choose clothes that looked good. As had become very standard in Ewa Beach, the boys changing rooms were unused; every one of the boys changed whatever clothing right where they stood. Nine-year-old Leo kept his distance and did a lot of blushing. Corey and Drew noticed. The prior night at the store, Leo simply did as the other boys were doing, which made his blushing understandable. Not having their new son nearby was simply odd to Corey and Drew.

At a time when he was able, Corey pulled Leo off to the side to whisper, "What's wrong, Leo?" The boy shrugged, turned even redder and grinned. Prompting his new son, Corey giggled, "You can tell me." Leo grinned wider and shook his head. Pulling Leo close and hugging him, Corey asked, "Do you really think of me as your father?"

Leo softly but firmly said, "Yeah, pop, I really do."

Never releasing the boy, Corey smiled, "Good, because me and Drew are thinking of you as our son, when you could easily be our friend. What makes our family so totally awesome to me is that Drew just turned twelve, I'm eleven, you're nine, Lenny is seven and Geoff is five. We're all on the same page so much, it's very kewl, don't you think?" When Leo nodded and hugged Corey tighter for a moment, Corey asked, "So why were you blushing?"

Leo shivered and tried his best to explain, "I don't know, pop. I didn't have brothers. I don't know much of anything about stuff... growing up stuff. My folks never told me nothin'. I've got no older cousins. Seeing all you guys, not just you and dad, but Derrick, Mike, and even Geoff and Lenny, just dealing with all these really cute guys, changing shirts, changing shorts, changing jeans... taking measurements. I don't know how to do that, without being embarrassed and blushing. I feel like I'm being really bad and dumb, doin' stuff that's just wrong, ya know?"

"I know," Corey quickly confirmed, "believe me, I know. It's something we get used to with time. And I'd like to start teaching you right now, if you want?"

"Is now kewl?" Leo worried. "We don't have to now, but I want to, and I don't want to, ya know?"

"Now is very kewl," Corey assured. Before releasing Leo, Corey softly asked, "Is there a boy over there that you really like?"

Leo giggled. After a few moments of giggling, he softly admitted, "All of 'em," and leaned onto Corey, unable to stop giggling.

Corey giggled along with his new son. "There's seven, one for every day of the week," Corey giggled. Leo cracked up and flushed redder. Corey planted a kiss on the side of Leo's head and sniggered, "I was there too. At one point, not too many years ago, I looked at Keith, Prez, Drew and John with that same kind of awe and amazement."

"Really?"

"Really."

Not knowing how to say that he wanted to learn more, Leo prompted, "So, umm... what happened?"

Taking Leo's hand, Corey remained with his son, and kept a fair distance away from the shoppers, so he could explain his own experiences, and then puberty and growing up without being overheard. While the others gathered necessities, Corey used each boy in the store as an example, starting with Geoff, Lenny, eight-year-old Jimmy Matos and working through all the others, including Drew, and the three teenagers. Corey easily admitted that he was attracted to all three Hundser boys, in addition Derrick, Mike and Prez, assuring Leo it was completely natural and normal. When Leo had the whole story, the newbies were beyond needing to change clothes. They were only trying on ponchos and light jackets, gathering toiletries and various accessories, like wallets for the ID cards they would soon be getting. Corey stayed with Leo, and squeezed his son's hand every time something happened worth noting, like the eleven-year-olds grabbing deodorants, and the teenagers choosing razors and shaving cream.

The last thing Corey told Leo was "We'll be spending at least part of the day with only Core Rimmers and their sons. Treat them like family, Leo. You'll see soon enough, kids are gonna like you, simply because you're a likable dude. You're so much like me, Drew, Geoff and Lenny, it's almost like you were made for us. All five of us enjoy good times, all five of us are generally pretty quiet, because we're all paying attention to what's around us. By tomorrow, when we get back here to the main base, you'll already have a set of friends to hang around with, so it won't seem like too much too fast."

Leo blushed, "Thanks, Pop. You really are a father, ya know? It's way easier talkin' to you than it would be with an older man, I mean."

Corey smiled, "Spend some one-on-one time with Drew. A lot of what I know, I learned from him, Keith, Prez, Mike and Derrick."

Unbeknownst to Leo and Corey or anyone else, Jimmy Matos thought Leo was about the kewlest and cutest boy he'd ever seen anywhere. It was Leo's blushing that really sparked Jimmy's interest. Obviously, Leo was shy and embarrassed, and Jimmy was equally surprised with his own feelings, so he said nothing about it to anyone.

In a little over an hour-and-a-half, everyone was done in the store. They transported out and directly to dormitory three, so Chris and Jay could choose their room and Jay could rest after a busy couple of hours. The four Core Rimmers showed them the huge lavatory, the spacious mob shower, and the next available dorm room, number thirty-one-ten; which meant the third dorm, first floor, and room ten. Seeing the vast, awesome room that Chris and Jay were moving into, the Hiram twins told Derrick, Mike and Reyes that they were also ready to move in. Derrick opened the next door for them. The twin Hawaiian boys giggled and hugged, then bolted inside, getting stuck in the doorway with their new luggage. Everyone around cracked up. Soon, the twins were excitedly settling into their new room, number thirty-one-twelve, right beside Chris' and Jay's room.

Knowing that some of the others who were rescued the previous day were talking about moving in, Drew called over the PA system for the Nash brothers, the Ramos brothers, Travis, Scott Shetley, Ray, Lance, Patrick, and the Stoeher twins to join them at dormitory three's first floor. They all knew why they were being called and hurried across the compound. Some of the California orphans that had moved into dorm three also came running to welcome home the newest arrivals, just as Prez and the Core Rimmers had welcomed them only two days earlier.

Patrick arrived with Ralphie. Pointing at the room across the hall from his brother and Chris, Rafe smiled, "Let's move in, Pat."

Pat grinned, "Are you ready?"

Pointing into Chris' and Jay's room, where they were seen unpacking, Rafe giggled, "The room across is the hall is the one I want. How about you?"

Pat checked with Ralphie. Getting a nod and then a quick kiss from Ralphie was all Patrick needed. Pat sighed, "We need our luggage and stuff."

Tapping his sub-vocal, Mike called, "Alden, do the honors, please?"

The two suitcases appeared on the beds in the room. "There ya go, guys," Alden replied. Ralphie, Pat and Rafe went into room thirty-one-eleven.

Arriving next were some of the California orphanage boys. Mike Busse, Terry Parkinson, Ryan Caswell, David Lydon, Don Lien and Jacob Bartholomew all came running, welcoming the new guys that were settling in, and then opened their dorm room doors. Soon, music was blasting loudly into the hall from Mike's and Terry's room. Ryan Caswell went into the common room and turned on the big television mounted on the wall.

The Nash brothers, the Ramos brothers, the Stoeher twins, and Ray, Scott and Lance were next to arrive. The Stoeher twins took the room across from the Hiram twins, number thirty-one-thirteen. Scott and Lance took the last room in that hallway, room number thirty-one-fourteen. Their luggage and guitars were transported into the room.

Drew and Corey led their boys, the Nash brothers and the remaining newbies through the common room toward the next hall. At the immense space of the common room, Phil started giggling his ass off. Completely astonished, Craig yelled, "Drew!"

Wide-eyed, Drew jumped, spun around and hollered, "WHAT?" Surprised at Craig and Drew, who were silently grinning at each other, Corey, their sons and the others nearby the common room helplessly giggled. Calmly, Derrick, Mike and Reyes walked into the shared room. Others came out of their rooms to see what the shouting was about and gathered in the hallway near the common room.

Craig chuckled, "Dude, this is too much."

Drew tilted his head, asking, "Is it?" Phil had laughed himself dizzy and dropped onto the nearest couch.

Smiling widely, Craig swung his arms around, pointing and rambling, "This room is huge! A sixty inch TV, a Bose sound system, a piano, a guitar, an easel and painting supplies, four big sofas, three smaller sofas, and two, four, six, eight, TEN chairs! Thirty of us could be in this room at once and still have space! It's as big as my old house was, maybe bigger!"

Smiling, but very serious, Drew said, "And there are going to be fifty boys in two hallways on this floor. Some of those boys were orphans, from orphanages where they weren't fed or treated right at all. You and your brother lost your parents during the riots in L.A. Nothing the Clan provides can make up for everything all you guys went through. The least we can do is make your lives as comfortable as we possibly can, give you good food, teach you how to be whatever it is you want to be, so when you move on, you'll have all the best opportunities."

Corey called, "Mike and Dave, com'ere a minute, bros." Mike Busse and Dave Lydon stepped into the room. Wrapping his arms around their shoulders, Corey introduced them to Craig and Phil, and then explained, "These two came from one of the better California orphanages we were at Wednesday night. You know, the ones that everyone bitched about around the world all day Thursday, that probably led to the battles and riots around the world. Mike is fourteen, about an inch or two taller than Drew, but nowhere near as tall as Prez, Keith, Derrick, Mike, or you, Craig. All because the caregivers at his orphanage didn't give a rat's ass if he ate enough. It's about the same with Dave, thirteen-years-old and as tall as Drew, but about ten pounds lighter. Drinking Doc McCoy's milkshakes, I give it about six months and I'm gonna be looking way up into Mike's and Dave's eyes, as I should be."

Looking around at all the boys gathered in and near the common room, Derrick sighed, "None of you deserved anything that happened to you. We can't fix everything. We sure can't bring lost loved ones back and make everything perfect. All we can do is try to provide you with what you need and what will make you happy, now and in the future. These are things, easily replaceable. Lives aren't quite so easy to replace."

Craig muttered, "But how... what could I do to repay this?"

Mike shrugged, "Your best, bro. Do your best here for yourself, for your brother, and all your Clan brothers and sisters. When you move on as an adult, and see some kid walking the street, help him yourself or give us a call. Give that kid what you had, a chance for something better."

Moved beyond words, boys started clapping their hands. Shaking his head, Drew smiled, "No, not for me, or for Corey, or for any of us Core Rimmers. Applaud for Platinum Habits, not for simply telling you what is reality."

The clapping hands slowly stopped. Derrick huffed, "If anything, we should be applauding you dudes." Wrapping his arm around his eldest son, he explained, "Reyes is my son, an android that repeatedly got zapped with an incompatible unit that screwed up his memories. He's better, but twenty-three years of life is a jumbled mess." Pausing to point at Pat, Rafe and Ralphie in the doorway, Derrick continued, "Ralphie went his whole life having never met his three brothers. He's here now, with them, quadruplets reunited. Rafe thought his big brother was dead last night. Today, Jay is here, with his boyfriend, and they're right across the hall from Pat and Rafe." Slowly glancing around the others in the room, Derrick offered, "That's what you all need to do; applaud each other for every achievement you make. It doesn't matter if your gay or straight or curious or bi. When you see someone has made a breakthrough, pat him on the back, give him or her a hug, show each other that you care, just like my folks and brothers did for me."

Corey pointed out Victor Singh, Don Lien and Jacob Bartholomew, the three youngest boys, saying, "Those little dudes need you bigger and older dudes. They'll need you to help with homework, to reach what they can't reach, to show them how to play soccer and be a good sport, and when they reach puberty, teach them all that means too. Don't make fun of their first pubes, like some kids have and might do. Instead, pat 'em on the back, for no other reason but to say, 'very kewl dude, you're becoming a man, now you have these choices ahead of you'. All you older guys can do that stuff easily. You little dudes are probably wondering, 'well, what can we do?' Two things; treat your brothers and sisters nicely, and when you can help somebody, then go do it – don't even think twice about it, help the new kid that's scared or misses his parents. Is someone crying and hurting? If they are, then be there to listen and help make it better. I've got five- and seven-year-old sons, two six-year-old brothers and two that are seven-years-old. Let me say that there's nothing kewler than an unexpected hug from any of them."

Drew nodded, "Corey and I grew up together. He's held onto me when I was wrecked and I've done it for him. Keith's been there for me and I've been available for John. I've seen Geoff holding Lenny, and then Lenny holding Geoff. In the store, we all saw Corey with Leo. I'll find out later exactly what that was about, but I could tell that Leo needed dad time and got it."

Glancing around, Mike asked, "Do you think I never cried, got upset or angry? Do you think Derrick never did those things either?"

"You'd be wrong if you think so," Derrick softly assured. "I'm a kid who lost his big brother when I was too young to remember him. Imagine my folks crying about that, and me crying because they were. I had Mike, Keith and Prez right there; one, two or all three of 'em making my life just a little easier. Prez lost both his parents in a plane crash two years ago. We were there when Prez needed us. That's all it takes, just caring, a little or a lot, it all helps, and somehow having people to lean on helps you both become stronger."

"This is your home," Mike firmly repeated. He then smiled, "I hear music playing down the hall. I see everybody's stopped what they were doing to listen to us. This is a welcome home party, so go help each other, now. Go learn about one another and become brothers."

The majority of boys returned to their rooms, many of them feeling like they could do the things suggested. Derrick tapped Craig and prompted, "Let's get you and your bro into a room."

Following Derrick into the next hall, Craig sincerely offered, "Thanks, so much, for everything." When everything turned to shit the prior day, Craig had no clue what he was going to do, or how he would feed himself and Phil. In a day, all his concerns and worries were only shadows of a nightmare.

Shaking his head, Derrick opened the first room, smiling, "This is what we're here for, Craig. We don't provide the buildings or the food. We give you brother time, that's all, just like you're Phil's big brother. The rest are things from Federation Youth Services and The United Federation of Planets. We can replace things. None of you can be replaced." Nodding, Craig stepped inside his new room and looked around.

Holding an arm out, Mike stopped Phil before he could follow his brother into the room, asking, "What's your job, dude?"

Pointing at his brother, Phil answered, "Take care of Craig, help who I can, however I can, and be somebody, and then pass it along to the next kid that needs it."

Drew, Corey, Derrick, Mike and Reyes applauded, loudly cheering, "Beautiful!" Blushing fiercely, Phil went into room number thirty-one-fifteen, with his brother. Their luggage was transported in and the two brothers started unpacking.

Next in the hall were Chauncey and Fred Eckhart and their puppy, Rikko. Corey, Derrick, Drew, Mike and Reyes looked down at the pup and thoughtfully hummed. Rikko wagged his tail in a big circle, watching all the boys that were looking down at him. Rikko barked "WHAT?" Leaning back against the wall and grabbing his belly, Fred cracked up.

Chauncey giggled, "Yeah, what Rikko said, what's wrong?" Sliding down the wall and landing on his butt, Fred roared laughing. The other six boys still waiting in the hall, Nate, Sal, Rickie, Travis, Tony and Ray softly sniggered.

Mike huffed then chuckled, "Alden, we prob'ly need to add a pet department to our store, dude."

"I've already got it covered, Mike," Alden giggled.

Drew opened the door and everyone peeked in the room, except Fred, who simply could not stop laughing. Inside the room on the beds were Fred's and Chauncey's luggage. Off to one side, they spied two steel dog dishes, a doggie bed, a big bag of Puppy Chow, a few dog toys, a collar and a leash, a poop-scooper, and a roll of plastic bags to deposit scooped poop in trash cans outdoors. Rikko trotted into the room, sniffed the various toys, grabbed a hard rubber bone and took it to his new bed, where he lay down and started gnawing.

Helplessly giggling, Corey checked with Chauncey, "Kewl, bro?"

Chauncey nodded and sniggered, "Very. Thanks, guys." He offered a hand to his breathless and hysterical android brother still on the floor.

Fred wheezed, "I can't believe it. All yesterday... and last night, you handled everything great, until now. The dog threw you a curve!" Travis sputtered but couldn't hold it back and cracked up.

Taking his brother's hands, Chauncey giggled, "Do you want to swim in the North Atlantic today?" He dragged Fred into the room.

Everyone turned to Reyes. "All right," Reyes grinned, "I'll take Fred to AI Division HQ, the first chance I get, but I honestly don't see that changing very much. It's been sixteen years since Vision closed it's doors, and Fred could use some upgrades, but remember, that won't change his sense of humor a bit."

Turning to the last six in the hallway, Derrick smiled, "Next?"

Ray and Tony held up their hands. Mike went to open the next door, for room thirty-one-eighteen. Derrick scowled, "Do you two know each other?"

Tony explained, "We've been talking a little since we got here. Really, all we know is that we're both from LA. We were in the same school district, but at different schools."

Nodding, Ray added, "You dudes have set the ground rules. We're brothers, starting now."

Tony grinned, "As far as the whole gay-straight-other thing goes, we're both undecided, so it should be kewl."

Derrick nodded and smiled, "If something changes, let one of us know, so we can correct whatever, kewl?"

Tony chuckled, "Don't worry, big D. There's enough stuff goin' on here. This room is pretty much where we'll chill and crash."

"As soon as I'm unpacked, I'm back outside again," Ray agreed. Tony walked into the room with Ray following and dragging his suitcase along.

Drew opened the door to room thirty-one-nineteen, faced the Ramos brothers, and smiled, "Welcome home, bros."

Nate peeked in the room, and then asked, "Can we get another bed sometime? Sal and Rickie might be kewl in one bed for a while..." Seeing Drew and Corey nodding, Nate stopped mid-sentence.

Reyes called, "Alden, get full sized bunk beds, and an extra desk, chair and computer too." The bed on the right side of the room vanished and was replaced with the bunk beds, desk, chair and laptop computer requested.

Sal giggled, "You dudes make stuff too simple. It's perfect. Thank you."

Racing past his two older brothers, eight-year-old Rickie giggled, "I got the top bunk!"

"Like hell!" Sal hollered, and entered the room, reminding, "You fall out of your bed all'a time!" Rickie denied it and Sal countered, emphasized with a shove, and the wrestling began.

Glancing at each of the Core Rimmers, Nate grinned, "Seems I've heard stuff like this before."

Corey giggled, "Ask Alden for safety rails on the top bunk, Nate."

Nodding, Nate smiled, "I will, after I squash both of 'em." Entering the room and passing through some invisible amplification field, Nate yelled, "QUI-I-I-ET!" Sal and Rickie stopped mid-wrestle and looked up at their big bro. Nate calmly closed the door.

Corey smiled up at Travis; "Looks like you're either on your own for a while, or back in the nest tonight."

Travis shrugged, "My aunt and uncle worked, so I was on my own a lot anyway. Besides, I'm not really alone, am I?"

Heading to the next room, Mike grinned, "The day's not over, dude. We get plenty of kids fast enough. You won't be alone more than a night or two. Roy Angulo, over at dorm one, was in the same boat earlier in the week. Monday night he spent alone, Tuesday night he met his roommate, Pete Dano." He opened the door and Alden transported Travis' suitcase onto a bed.

Travis stepped inside and looked around. He spun around, smiling, "It's nice, but what are we allowed to do, so that it becomes mine, ya know?"

"You can buy posters, music CD's and pretty much whatever you want," Corey offered.

Drew said, "All you newbies will have your ID cards and debit cards in a couple o' days. You'll get a weekly allowance and can work odd jobs around base to add to that."

Walking back out of the room, Travis said, "I'm not gonna waste daylight unpacking now. After lunch, I'll get my stuff put away, maybe set up one of the laptops, and chill with the other dudes." He closed his door, wondering, "What's the deal with these odd jobs?"

"It's all on our Clan's web site," Drew explained. "Check under the Mouth Rimmers' section. For older dudes like you, there's a bunch of stuff you could do, in the kitchen, at the auditorium, just about anything you want to do."

Corey added, "We set up odd jobs in two-hours shifts. Yeah, you might like to do more, but your main job is to be a student and a kid, with a bit more know-how than the youngest kids."

As the group started back down the hall, toward the common room, Derrick said, "We have Clan preferred vendors, where you can get whatever you want at discounted prices. Your room is yours, for now, and eventually yours and your roomie's. Whatever makes you dudes comfortable, go ahead and get."

"Just remember two things," Mike suggested, "first, Christmas is coming, so leave big stuff off to the side. Also, whatever you need for school will be provided. If you decide to learn guitar, we'll get you one. If you decide to learn mechanics and need tools, we'll provide that. Your money is yours, for those other personal things that we generally don't need to provide everybody."

Passing rooms down the longer hall, Derrick started figuring out how many were in this dorm, and then shared, "Including you, there are forty kids in this dorm. There are only six rooms left to fill." Mike hummed. Drew and Corey sighed.

Travis wondered, "What's wrong?"

Derrick shrugged, "Nothing's really wrong, it's just that we need to make decisions. Tomorrow, we're expecting a bunch more kids."

"Ninety-five, to be exact," Drew specified.

Corey told Travis, "We've got other bases and plenty of room, but it wouldn't be kewl to leave those kids without some of us Core Rimmers around."

"We don't know how many could fit here right now," Derrick explained, "but some kids are going to overflow to the next base. The trick is keeping everybody feeling like they're part of the whole Clan, and our Clan Division, as brothers and sisters, separated yet still together."

Travis smiled, "You dudes really care." Watching the five Core Rimmers turn to him briefly, he chuckled, "You dudes do that. Didn't you hear yourselves in the common room before? Craig was only surprised, as surprised as I am. I've heard about Clan Short and wondered how you deal with so many kids. I expected far different from what I've seen since yesterday."

Reyes prompted, "Such as?"

Travis shrugged, "Smaller dorms, smaller rooms, small beds; just the minimum basics. Instead, I get here and I'm taken into a store and told, get what you need for at least a week, and it's free. Do you have any idea how weird it is to check out stuff, like I might at any other store, but walk away without spending a dime? I got fed restaurant quality food. Then I start looking around. The CIC rec room is the biggest arcade and game room I've ever seen. The rec center is the biggest health and fitness club. There are pools, a soccer field, volleyball courts, and a playground for little kids. I know there's a school here too, but haven't seen it yet. None of this is what I expected."

Stepping outside with the five Core Rimmers, Travis chuckled, "Then there's the kids. I was mingling around the diving well, with kids my own age, some with clothes on, some naked, and they're all very kewl about it. No one asked me why I still had my boardies on. No one said a word when I took them off. I learned some kids here were sexually abused, some were prostitutes, some are run-aways. I asked about you guys, our leadership. The worst thing I heard was, you're busy. I asked about all the adults and I heard, 'they're kewl too'. A couple of times, Kaleo came to me with Tory and started chatting up a storm. Once, he waved his hand over his naked body, Tory's, and then mine, telling me that last week, he was naked so some freaky grown-up could fuck his ass or suck his dick, whenever they wanted some. Now he can wander around nude with other kids; he can talk to adult employees naked, and everybody looks in his eyes, instead of leering at his crotch. This is insane, in the very best ways, but extremely different from what I'm used to."

Mike sniggered, "Don't hold back, Trav, you're just warming up."

Travis laughed then continued, "My parents died when I was eight. I've been living with my aunt and uncle since then. They cared enough to give me a good home with good food, but they weren't parents. I learned the facts of life from school health and biology classes, not from my aunt or uncle. Just a few minutes ago, you told us bigger dudes to be big brothers to the little dudes. My stomach twisted for a few moments, then I thought, yeah, maybe I could sit down and explain the facts of life to a kid; yeah, I could be everything you dudes said I could be."

Drew giggled, "It's how we were raised, Travis. If I've heard my parents singing the song 'Can Do' once, I've heard it a thousand times."

Snapping his fingers, Derrick sang, "I got the horse right here, The name is Paul Revere, And here's a guy that says that the weather's clear. Can do, can do, this guy says the horse can do. If he says the horse can do, can do, can do."

While Derrick sang the part again, Drew snapped his fingers and sang the counterpoint part. "Can do - can do - this guy says the horse can do, If he says the horse can do - can do, can do."

Derrick and Drew continued singing their parts and Mike sang; "For Paul Revere I'll bite, I hear his foot's all right, Of course it all depends if it rained last night. Likes mud, likes mud, this X means the horse likes mud, If that means the horse likes mud, likes mud, Likes mud. I tell you Paul Revere, Now this is no bum steer, It's from a handicapper that's real sincere, Can do, can do, this guy says the horse can do. If he says the horse can do - can do - can do. Paul Revere. I got the horse right here."

Near the pool house, Travis, Reyes and Corey cracked up, and the song fell apart. Corey howled, "I don't have any idea where that song even came from!"

Reyes giggled, "A Broadway play titled 'Guys and Dolls'."

Travis, Mike, Derrick, Drew and Corey stopped walking and turned to Reyes. Derrick and Mike took hold of Reyes' arms. Derrick prompted, "Help us out, Travis. Reyes is going swimming." Nodding and snickering, Travis leaned over and tried to capture Reyes' moving legs.

Liki and Keanu were at the diving well and saw what was happening. They hurried over to help get Reyes off his feet and off the ground. Looking around the group that caught him for his Core Rimmer initiation, Reyes howled laughing. To the applause, cheering and delight of all the other nearby teens and tweens, Reyes was swung three times then sent flailing and flying over the diving well. Hearing the teenage commotion, Jonah, Randy and Dillon got to the diving well just as Reyes was thrown and they cracked up. Reyes hit the water and rose again, only seconds later, coughing and still giggling.

Chapter 13

Kaho'olawe Island, Keoneuli Beach House

Saturday, November 6, 2004 10:35 AM HTZ

While Corey, Derrick, Reyes, Drew and Mike were getting newbies settled into dorm rooms, Prez and Keith arrived with their sons, outside the beach house. Alden placed them on a spot between the house and the beach, facing the waterfall to the North. The entire area was beautiful wilderness, and it was secluded. To the left, beyond the house, was an angular, gradual rise that became a steep mountainside. To the right was the beach and a distant view of Maui. Around the house was manicured lawn and a few evergreen and palm trees. The house and lawn seemed out of place for the environment, but no one thought twice about that; this was their retreat.

From the outside, the house was very similar to the single family homes at Ewa Beach. The primary difference was the additional wide lanai that wrapped around the entire house. Instead of five steps leading to porches at the front and rear, this house had seven steps leading to the lanai on all four sides of the house. On the lanai were patio tables, chairs and lounges. There were also two additional sliding glass doors, one on each side of the house; one was in the dining room, and the other was in the ground floor bedroom.

Grinning up at Prez, Sammy asked, "We're gonna be here the rest of the day, pop?"

Prez nodded, "And hopefully, barring any unexpected madness, we'll stay the night. Tomorrow, we'll go back home."

Keith suggested, "You guys check the upstairs and basement of the house. Make sure all the beds have sheets, pillows and blankets. Remember to make sure that there are things for you guys too. All of Mike's kids and all of Drew's kids will be here, so get the games and stuff you'd like. Get Alden to help set up the basement too. I'm thinking one corner could be arranged as a stage, so the band can play some music for our security guys."

As if they were just told to raid the candy store, the four boys grinned at each other, then hollered, "YAAAAAAAAA!" and ran for the house.

Prez loudly laughed, "We'll make sure we have all the food and stuff we'll need."

Only Richie stopped, spun around and gleefully replied, "'Kay, Poppa." He then turned to race after his older brothers.

Over Prez's comm-badge, Alden said, "Hey boss, I didn't want to interrupt while Keith was talking to the boys, but food isn't too much of an issue here. When Quint created the house, he put a Starfleet replicator in the kitchen. Just tell it what you want and it will replicate it for you. You guys don't even have to worry about loading a dishwasher. Put the dirty plates and stuff in the side panel of the replicator and it'll all be taken care of. If you want to, you can cook something, but it's not necessary. As far as I can tell, Quint made this house exactly like what he knew was at Ewa Beach. From the cameras inside, I see enough to tell you that's there's not much you'll need from me, if anything. The basement is even set up with instruments, microphones and a suitable PA system. On the other side of the basement is a Foosball table, a pool table, and game systems for the kids. There's seating for your guests down there too. This is your place to chill out at, so Quint prepared just about everything."

Prez smiled, "Thanks, Alden. All we have to do is roam around opening doors and windows then." Keith took Prez's hand and they walked up the steps to the porch and inside. Keith and Prez made the rounds around the ground floor, letting fresh air circulate through the house. It was just like every other house at Ewa Beach, only the wall coverings, window dressings and furnishings were slightly different styles, more appropriate for teens than adults. They did notice that the ceilings had padding, like the Hundser home, which told them why they couldn't really hear their four sons scrambling around upstairs.

The four boys galloped downstairs. Without pausing, Gage giggled, "Ev'rything's kewl upstairs, dad. Even the bathrooms have all the stuff we'll need." The boys went down to the basement. A chorus of cheers erupted. Keith and Prez hurried down after their sons. On the way down, they started to see what Alden was talking about. The larger side of the basement was set up like an intimate night club, with tables, chairs, sofas and recliners. There was also a stage large enough for Platinum Habits, already prepared with instruments and amplifiers. On the opposite side of the basement was the gaming area. It was very much like the CIC's rec room, just scaled down.

Sammy scratched his head, then looked up at the ceiling, calling, "Alden?"

"What's up, Sammy?"

"The only things we haven't found are things for outside," Sammy said. "You know, beach balls, Frisbees, stuff we can play with at the beach."

Alden hummed then suggested, "There are four storage bins on the porch, one on each side of the house, Sammy. I can't see what's in them, but they're worth checking out." Sammy and his three brothers ran upstairs to investigate.

Slowly nodding and widely smiling at each other, Prez and Keith then embraced. They sighed with relief that they could finally enjoy all they had been given the prior week, then kissed before walking back up to the main level.

After closing the basement door, Keith tapped his comm-badge and called, "Naasir, Justin and Danny, if you're not busy, please join us at the Kaho'olawe beach house."

Obviously surprised that Keith's call was so early, Danny answered, "Already?"

Prez tapped his comm-badge, calling, "Gamba, Chris and Matt, let's hang out for a while."

In the UNIT's dorm common room with Danny, Chris and Justin, Matthew responded, "We'll be right there, Prez."

Prez then hurried to the kitchen with Keith only a few steps behind. Prez searched the cupboards until he found a box of Cheez-Its and a bag of potato chips. Getting the idea, Keith found two bowls for the snacks. While Prez poured the snacks into the bowls, Keith double checked the fridge. There was plenty of various sodas and juices, whatever the boys and gorillas wanted. He then got glasses out for their guests. Asking for a large bowl of mixed fruit, Prez tried out the replicator. It wanted specifics, so Prez told it what he wanted. In seconds, a bowl of bananas, apples, oranges and pears materialized. Prez put it out on the coffee table in the living room. Following with the bowls of potato chips and Cheez-Its, Keith placed them down on the coffee table. The doorbell rang and together they went to answer it.

Standing at the door were the two gorillas and four teenage boys, all of whom were wearing board shirts and light sport shirts with Hawaiian patterns. They actually looked like tourists. Keith warmly greeted them and waved his arm to prompt them to come inside. Prez shook all their hands and admitted, "We were just getting snacks together. Would you like anything to drink?"

The first to accept was Gamba, Prez's gorilla. "Could I have a glass of apple juice?"

Prez nodded, "Comin' right up," then went to the kitchen.

Keith scanned the eyes of the other five and prompted, "Please relax, dudes. You're off duty. Make yourselves comfy. We simply haven't had the time or chance to do this before today. Between our own kids, our parents, and all the other rescued kids, we've barely had time to get to know you."

Justin smiled and agreed, "It has been kind o' crazy, hasn't it?"

From the kitchen, Prez loudly said, "We know Adam and Logan chose you guys based on what they knew of us. Adam's been swimming around in my head. We just went with it, not really knowing how to act with personal security." Rather than try and sit on the furniture, the two gorillas simply hunkered down on the living room floor.

"Alden," Keith called, "one thing we do need is reinforced seating appropriate for our security gorillas. Please provide enough of those, scattered around the house, for all the gorillas showing up today."

Over the loudspeakers, Alden giggled, "Comin' up, Keith." In moments, steel framed chairs with thicker padding began appearing in the living room, dining room, at the kitchen dinette, around the lanai and down in the basement.

Matt went to the kitchen and playfully challenged Prez. "You didn't know how to act? Sorry, I ain't buyin' that."

Softly chuckling at himself, Prez smiled, "See, I had no idea you had a sense of humor. You haven't shown it once, before now."

Taking a seat on one of the new chairs, Naasir offered, "I was chosen because I like to listen to music."

Choosing to remain on the floor for the moment, Gamba grinned, "He sleeps to that long hair classical stuff."

Keith grinned, "Really? Which classical?"

Naasir softly admitted, "Mozart, Bach, I especially liked the Rachmaninoff concerto you played Saturday night. It was beautiful and you played it as well as anyone I've ever heard."

Keith smiled, "Thank you. That piece did take a long while to get memorized."

Returning to the living room with a large glass of apple juice, Prez passed it to Gamba, saying, "This is why we invited you. For a week, you dudes have been covering our butts and never said anything like that."

Chris said, "We're all musicians or very interested in music. Matt plays guitar..."

"Poorly, compared to Prez, Troy and Mike," Matt interjected.

"You're not as bad as you think," Chris countered.

Matt shrugged then said, "Chris plays trumpet. Danny plays keyboards."

Prez wondered, "What about Justin and Gamba?"

Gamba softly said, "I like trombone, and try. The chimps have provided me a mouthpiece so I can at least carry a tune lately."

Keith turned to Justin and asked, "What about you?" Justin blushed bright red.

Answering for Justin, Danny said, "He sings, really well too, but he'll never believe it."

In an attempt to save himself from further embarrassment, Justin huffed, "I've been happy listening to Platinum Habits."

Keith sat beside his personal security guard and softly said, "Your friends are saying the same about you as my friends said about me. I didn't believe it either, when they'd tell me that I was good."

"You are very good though," Justin insisted. "I just sing in the shower and with CD's."

Keith nodded, "I sang when I was practicing scales and chords on the piano. I still get a little nervous before every performance, whether I'm singing or not." Keith then said, "Ya know, Thursday, when we were confronted at school, I didn't see a shy person. I saw a very confident person."

Justin nodded, "That's completely different."

Danny softly asked Justin, "Would you sing for Keith and Prez, just a little?"

Justin vigorously shook his head, but with prompting from all the boys and the two gorillas, he finally gave in. "All right!" he shouted, "Just this once and only a little."

Keith repeated, "Just name the song, dude."

Humming uncertainly while considering songs with easy lyrics and an easy melody, Justin soon shrugged, "Live And Let Die?"

"Not a problem," Keith said, and then went to the upright piano in the living room.

Justin warned, "Not a word from any of you!"

Only to be sure Justin felt more secure, Prez instructed, "Seriously, guys. I want to hear this."

The other three boys and two gorillas instantly agreed. Keith checked with Justin. "Ready?" Justin only nodded and took a deep breath. Keith played the first two chords, then Justin sang, "When you were young and your heart was an open book. You used to say, live and let live."

Keith, Prez and the other boys sang, "You know you did, you know you did, you know you did."

Justin continued, "But if this ever-changing world in which we live in, makes you give in and cry. Say live and let die."

All the others sang with Justin; "Live and let die. Live and let die. Live and let die."

Keith went off, playing the entire thunderous middle section. Expecting Justin wouldn't continue, Keith sang, "What does it matter to ya, when you've got a job to do, you gotta do it well. You gotta give the other fellow hell." While Keith was playing the second segue into the next verse, their sons came inside. Prez held up a single finger to stop them, so Justin wouldn't get freaked out. They sat on the stairs, hidden from Justin's view.

Justin then sang, "You used to say, Live and let live."

All the others sang, "You know you did, you know you did, you know you did."

Justin sang the final section. "But if this ever-changing world in which we live in, makes you give in and cry. Say, live and let die. Live and let die. Live and let die. Live and let die."

Keith made a show out of the finale. Before he even finished, everyone began clapping. Prez nodded at his boys to come the rest of the way into the living room. Still clapping furiously, they turned into the room. Red as an apple at the applause, and sudden appearance of the four boys, Justin covered his face and began to cry. Getting up from the piano bench, Keith went directly to Justin, pulled him up from the sofa and hugged him tightly. "It's okay," Keith reassuringly whispered. "I cried too the first time. It does get easier, I swear to God, it really does."

Extremely embarrassed, Justin sobbed, "I'm supposed to protect you."

"You have and will continue to. There's only one difference now."

"What's that?"

"You thought I was special. I thought you were a security dude. Now we're seeing each other as real people, as friends, with fears just like anybody else."

Becoming weak in Keith's arms, Justin softly admitted, "My foster parents made fun of me when I sang."

"They were wrong on so many levels. You are very, very good. Not many would even attempt singing like McCartney, never mind manage it so well." Keith pulled slightly back then showed Justin to the bathroom, so he could wash up and pull himself together. Prez and the other guests took seats around the living room.

There was a knock on the front door. Already in the foyer, Keith answered it to find Derrick and Mike standing on the mountain side of the lanai. Always ready to bust Mike's balls, Keith walked away from the open door, grumbling, "Aw shit, there goes the party." Familiar with this routine, the boys and gorillas began sniggering.

Stepping in the house, Mike gave as good as he received. "At our first Shiny Mass, you may become the first human sacrifice in Shiny Religion history, dull one."

Prez scowled, "Why the hell did you arrive outside and knock? This is our beach house retreat; all of ours, any Core Rimmer can decide to take a break here."

Derrick shrugged, "We didn't think of it that way. "

Closing the door behind him, Mike turned around, teasing, "Why is everyone dressed? I thought this was a day off and a party?"

Keith and Prez shrugged. In moments, they were undressed, their clothes tossed aside to the wall edge of the living room floor. Derrick and Mike followed suit. Soon, all the security guys, the gorillas, and the four sons were naked and there were piles of clothes.

Matthew faced Prez, remembering, "The first time I ever saw you, at Anahola Bay, you were naked."

Mike hurried over to the living room piano and began playing a slow blues strip tune. "Orgy!" he hollered, and everyone cracked up. Justin came out of the bathroom, looking much better and laughing at Mike's suggestion.

Not realizing the implications, Richie giggled, "Poppa, we got LOTS o' toys." Trying desperately to maintain, Mike's head dropped onto the piano keyboard, making a dissonant sound.

Gage nodded, "Badminton rackets, a net, all kinds of Frisbees and balls to toss around."

"There's some inflatable flotation stuff for Richie and other little kids," Sammy added.

"Even 'lectric cars and helicopters," Dee grinned.

Tapping Keith's arm, Gage asked, "Dad, could we play in the water?"

Keith thought about it, then nodded, "Only when there are some older guys watching you. It's the ocean, not a pool, so additional supervision." He announced, "Let's go outside, dudes," and led the way. Dee, Gage, Sammy and Richie hurried past and made it outside first. Derrick and Mike noticed the food replicator beside the refrigerator and briefly commented on it.

They all went to the beach. It was a protected bay and the waves seemed to be under a meter. Prez sighed, "I can't go swimming yet, especially in salt water. Doc Andrews will have a fit."

Keith evilly grinned, "So will I. We'll check out the water and the shore slope, baby." He tapped Justin and Danny and the three of them jogged into the water.

Prez tapped his sub-vocal, calling, "Alden, what are the rest of the Core Rimmers doing?"

Alden replied, "Kaleo and Tory are at the pool with Leonard Santana, Mark Fikes and some of the other younger California boys. AJ and Jerry are at the playground with the Hunnicutt brothers. Drew and Corey are showing their sons the townhouse they'll be moving into. John and Stephen are at the store, with your parents and some newbies picked up at Des Moines this morning. Reyes is at the diving well, being initiated by some of the teens there." He paused then giggled, "Troy and Sean are at dorm one, wrecking Sean's bed."

Softly sniggering, Prez ordered, "Tell Kaleo, Tory, AJ and Jerry to get their security, and come join the party. I'd like them to bring the boys they're with, those that want to come. When it's convenient for the others, let them know too, bring their security and their boys."

Derrick tapped his sub-vocal, adding, "Alden, tell Reyes to get his brothers and anyone that they want to bring along. After Thursday night and yesterday, I want Reyes to take a break."

Mike hummed, "It's almost lunch time." He turned to Derrick, suggesting, "Lets go figure out the replicator." Nodding and taking Mike's hand, Derrick and Mike started back to the house.

Glancing at Chris and Matthew, Prez smiled, "Just because I can't swim doesn't mean you guys can't. We'll have all day to get to know each other." Making the gentle reminder more appealing, Prez tapped his sub-vocal, saying, "Alden, we'll need a bunch of surfboards and bodyboards of various sizes for the boys, all the teens and the gorillas expected."

Almost simultaneously, four-dozen surfboards appeared, sticking out of the sand, and the AI Division materialized. All the new arrivals were on the sand, standing a few meters before Prez, Chris and Matt, except one of the group, with brown collar-length hair, who landed in waist-deep water. "Stevie!" the half-soaked brown-haired boy hollered. "That female-ferret threat is going to become your reality, I swear!"

Across the comm-badges of those laughing and sniggering on the beach, Stevie meekly offered, "Oops! I missed! I'll adjust the GPS targeting for the transporters, Danny. They'll be perfectly aligned by the time you're ready to go home."

Wading toward the beach, Danny grumbled, "So you can put me down in six-feet of water, no doubt."

Still sniggering, the white-blond teen stepped forward. "Prez, I'm Marc Furst, and that's Danny Page, our dripping director, coming ashore."

Prez chuckled, "It's good to finally meet you, Marc. I usually greet new friends with hugs, but since I'm naked, I'll make that your choice."

Extending a hand to Prez, Marc nodded and grinned, "I heard you burned your buns. We can save the hugs for later." While they shook hands, Marc said, "Let me introduce you to the rest of the guys. First, before he strips, grabs a surfboard and runs, is KC."

Bounding forward, KC giggled, "Nice to meet you, Prez." They shook hands. Prez welcomed him and introduced Chris and Matt. Dropping Prez's hand, KC quickly shook hands with Chris and Matt, and then started taking his clothes off, beaming, "This place is awesome, dudes. I haven't surfed in so long. Call me in when there's food." Once naked, he turned and jogged away, grabbed a board then ran to the water.

Marc sighed, "Do you have medi-kits, Prez? KC's a little accident prone."

The next boy giggled, "Yeah, and warp speed is only a little fast too."

Prez chuckled. Marc smiled, "This smart Alec is Jerry Owens. He's eleven going on forty; an amazing feat for a real human. Glued to Jerry, but more interested in the ocean, and dancing in place to go surfing with KC, is Jerry's son, Joey."

Waving his hand, Joey giggled, "Hi-ya, Unca Pwez. Who awe dhose odher boys?"

Prez smiled, "They're my sons, Joey. The smallest, red-haired boy is Richie, and the other three are Dee, Gage and Sammy. Go ahead and say hello."

Jerry nodded at his son. That was enough for Joey to start stripping and yell, "I'm comin' oud dhere, Cwash!" Seeing Joey naked and running toward the water, Chris', Matt's and Prez's jaws dropped in astonishment.

Marc playfully shoved Jerry and giggled, "What did I say? Did I warn you?"

Jerry shrugged and proudly grinned, "That's my boy."

Matt incredulously cackled, "No shit, he's a boy! I never would've guessed!" Chris cracked up.

Blinking fast and shaking his head, Prez chuckled, "There's a sixteen-year-old low hanger at our base who would've reacted the same way, and he's straight."

Jerry giggled and tactfully changed the subject by moving between his new brothers to introduce Paul and Ryan. The two teens shook hands with Prez and warmly said hello. Looking up at Prez, Jerry took a few steps away from his brothers, giggling, "Is Reyes here?"

"Not yet, but he's expected soon," Prez answered.

Ryan widely smiled, "Kewl."

Paul smirked at Jerry and groused, "Would you give us a break?"

"Little brothers can be really annoying," Ryan warned.

"What?" Jerry laughed, "We haven't seen Reyes since Wednesday, have we?" Before the verbal became physical, Jerry took off like a shot down the beach, with Paul and Ryan in pursuit.

Marc sighed then grinned.

Danny stepped forward and hugged Prez, saying, "Nice to meet ya, Prez. Would you consider swapping AI's?"

Returning Danny's hug, Prez laughed, "We'd both still have our challenges. After seeing Joey, I know now why the AI's are so confused."

Danny stepped back grinning, "We should ignore their wishes and give them statistically average dicks." Prez, Marc, and Danny seemed to wait for something to be heard from the AI's in their sub-vocals, but not a word was said. All three cracked up.

Patting Chris and Matt on the shoulders, Prez prompted, "It's our day off. Go, grab a board and have fun. I'll take Danny and Marc inside to meet Derrick and Mike." Chris and Matt nodded, and then jogged over to the surfboards. Starting for the house, Prez told Danny and Marc, "Mike's our band's lead guitarist and Derrick's our band's drummer. They're trying to figure out the food replicator. Whatever they're making will be loud."

Opening the sliding screen door for his guests, Prez waved Danny and Marc forward. The three of them went inside. Hearing Derrick's and Mike's chuckling from the front rooms, Prez loudly wondered, "What are you two doing?" Mike and Derrick roared. Heading through the kitchen, Prez told Danny and Marc, "They're our Clan historians too." Seeing the dining room table with a half dozen large trays of food, Prez stopped short and grinned, "Getting a little carried away testing the replicator?"

Still catching his breath, Derrick rapidly nodded. Mike sniggered, "I told it I wanted hamburgers, thinking I'd get two."

"As you can see, we got twelve, minus the two we ate," Derrick chuckled. Danny and Marc began giggling.

"So I asked Alden for operating instructions," Mike explained, and then picked up a large softcover book and waved it around.

Derrick smiled, "While Mike leafed through the book, I asked for and got hot dogs, to go with the burgers. Then we thought, some chili, shredded cheese and condiments would be nice."

"The ketchup, mustard and relish we found in the fridge," Mike grinned. "I ordered the chili and cheese from the replicator."

Smiling widely, Prez prompted, "And the large platters of spaghetti and meatballs?"

"Oh," Mike cheekily grinned, "I had to see if it could manage acceptable Italian food. The sauce and meatballs are good enough, but not like my mom makes."

Derrick leaned over to pick up a large, laminated card, approximately eighteen-inches long by ten-inches wide, innocently explaining, "That's when I asked Alden for this summary. So I ordered nachos for us."

Holding up his left hand with all five fingers displayed, Prez playfully bitched, "I left you alone for five minutes..."

"Closer to ten," Derrick and Mike giggled. Danny and Marc cracked up.

Prez sighed, "Danny Page and Marc Furst, these are our Analyst Rimmers and underpaid comic relief, Derrick Seibert and Mike Gibbons."

First to walk around the table, careful to keep his distance from Prez, Mike smiled, "Reyes told us all about you," and shook hands with Danny, and then Marc.

"Thanks for checking Reyes' systems for us, dudes," Derrick warmly smiled. He shook hands with Marc and then Danny.

Locking eyes with Derrick, Prez smirked, "Get your security guys here, so we can get all this food eaten."

Nodding, Derrick called, "Alden, tell Talib, Manny, Dave, Clay, Rudy and Rafiki to join us here please?" While Derrick was still speaking, Reyes, Randy, Jonah and Dillon transported into the living room.

Alden reported, "In progress, Derrick."

Reyes and his brothers greeted their dads. Randy was then introduced to Danny and Marc. Reyes wondered, "Where are Caleb, Noah and Hunter?"

Danny replied, "They're probably still in Louisiana, installing their AI. Then they're off to Norfolk, to install an AI on the flagship of our Naval fleet."

Prez was patiently waiting for an opportunity to call the guys that were outside for lunch when AJ, Jerry, and the three Hunnicutt brothers appeared in the living room. The group were introduced to Marc and Danny. While that was still happening, Kaleo, Tory, Leonard Santana, Mark Fikes, Marv Perkins, Russ Pass and Stan Given arrived. Soon, introductions were flying and the youngest boys were sitting at the table, being served whatever food they wanted. Prez let Danny and Marc know that he was going to step outside and call the others in for lunch. Thankfully, Keith was walking up the beach with his security, Justin and Danny, to help Prez announce lunch was ready. The last to come running out of the water were Paul and Ryan. The latter two brothers were giving Jerry Owens one more toss into the ocean.

Calls of "Dad" and "Pop" rang out.

Prez and Keith turned to their sons. Sammy asked, "Do we have to put clothes on?"

After checking with Keith, Prez answered, "Not here. Just don't scratch your willies and then touch food." Nodding, the four Rimmer sons giggled. Joey thought what Prez said was about the funniest thing he'd ever heard and howled laughing. Considering teasing the well-hung boy, Prez grinned at Joey, which Joey found even funnier. Prez chuckled, "Com'ere, Joey."

"I've seen dhad wook befowe," Joey insanely cackled, "You'we dickwe me!"

Prez slowly counted down; "Five... four..."

Dee giggled, "Uh oh!"

All four sons laughed, "Run Joey!" Joey took off running for the house.

Sammy and Gage scoped out their dads and their four teen security then watched Joey's little butt running away. Grinning madly, Gage shook his head, muttering "That's not right. He's only a few inches shorter than me, but... jeez!"

Nodding agreement, Sammy grinned, "It's a low-hangin', adult-sized package on a little eight-year-old's body. If he falls forward, we'll have to dig to get his dick out of the sand and stand him up!" Keith, Prez, Chris, Matt, Justin and Danny cracked up.

Jogging over to the laughing group, KC wondered, "What's goin' on?"

Justin shrugged and giggled, "We couldn't help noticing Joey's endowment."

Grinning widely, KC explained, "If you didn't already know, Joey's an android too. What he's got is all he'll ever have."

Prez nodded, "I assumed everyone in the AI group is an android, except Jerry. Marc specifically pointed Jerry out as human."

KC hummed for a second, and then suggested, "A brief huddle, so I can share something, please?"

Heads nodded and they all gathered around KC then leaned forward. KC softly told them all about Paul and Ryan, their time surviving on the streets, and that Ryan steadfastly insists he's completely human. "It's a delusion, but one that will turn this day to shit in a hurry," KC told the Rimmers. "Don't even go there, okay? Ryan will freak and Paul will get defensive, and then Jerry's in the dumps, so simply treat Ryan as a human."

Richie innocently asked, "Is there some other way to treat him?"

"Yeah," Dee prompted, "we don't treat Reyes or Alden like machines. They're just like us."

KC smiled, "That's great guys."

Keith told his sons, "What KC is saying is to not even mention that stuff around Ryan. Kewl?"

"Kewl, dad," Gage confirmed, and his other three brothers repeated the sentiment.

"Thanks so much, dudes," KC warmly smiled, and then stood up straight. He sighed, "I didn't get to do much surfin' before it got cold and things got crazy. I want to spend the day here, with everybody having a good time."

Prez nodded and joked, "Let's race inside and see if we can make our bits swing like Joey's."

Sniggering, "We can try," KC took off running, jumping and hopping, trying to make his adequate goods move like Joey's abundant bits. Prez, Keith and their teen security softly sniggered at KC's exaggerations, but the four Rimmer sons howled laughing. The latter group jogged after KC, toward the house.

Rapidly approaching from their right sides, Paul yelled, "What in the hell are you trying to do, KC?"

Since Jerry was with Paul and Ryan, KC only shrugged and kept going as he had been.

Everyone climbed the steps up to the lanai and entered the house. The sounds of voices were much louder than it had been when Prez went out to gather everyone for lunch. He realized that almost everyone invited had arrived and so had all the security teams. Outside the dining room's sliding doors, Prez saw that some had moved to eat outside at tables on the lanai. The only people invited that hadn't yet arrived were Corey, Drew, John, Stephen, their sons, and their security teams. Beginning to fix himself a plate, Prez wondered what was delaying them.

'Hey, Prez,' John sent, 'me and Stephen will probably stay here. We'll stop by for a little while to meet the AI Division, but we won't stick around very long. It's totally kewl by us, bro. You guys need the time with your security. We're kewl here, and already have friendships with our security guys. Corey and Drew are still debating how long they'll stick around when they go. Also, we just got more newbies. We're getting them through the store now. Also, our division's Intel department will have a Founder family assigned from the Ark compound by the end of the day. As soon as they arrive, I'll know and get them into a condo apartment.'

Prez wasn't particularly pleased that his brothers and their husbands would only come for a short while, but he knew that he couldn't force them. He could only hope that they might change their minds.

Entering the house, Paul and Ryan saw that Reyes had arrived, and was sitting with his brothers and personal security in the living room. Paul and Ryan had seen Reyes naked during the beach race late

Tuesday night, but for the first time, Reyes was getting the full picture of his two friends. Reyes put his plate down on the coffee table and stood to greet his friends. Paul and Ryan noticed Reyes' blush, but only grinned as they sandwiched Reyes between them. "I missed you guys so much," Reyes softly smiled. "I hoped that there might be time to get together Thursday, and yesterday too. It just didn't work out. I didn't even know that you would be here today."

Paul sincerely said, "Don't worry about it. It gave us time and we knew you were busy."

Reyes insisted, "Next time I have any chance at all, I'll at least call."

"We missed you too," Ryan whispered in Reyes' other ear.

Reyes suggested, "Get something to eat." Turning to Paul, and knowing he would be more comfortable with less people and more space, Reyes asked, "How about we move outside and eat on the lanai?"

"Lanai?" Paul and Ryan queried.

Reyes nodded, "In Hawaiian, it's like a veranda, or a breezeway; the open porch."

Paul and Ryan agreed and released Reyes. The two brothers started toward the table. Softly giggling at the threesome, it was apparent that Jerry Owens still hadn't learned his lesson. Paul squinted wordless warnings to Jerry. Ryan smirked and sadly shook his head. Reyes rolled his eyes and turned to pick up his plate. He told his brothers that he was going outside to eat with Paul and Ryan, and then added, "Randy, you didn't get to meet them, so when you're done, stop out on the lanai and I'll introduce you."

"Kewl," Randy mumbled around the food in his mouth.

Reyes took his plate and walked around the dining room and beyond the sliding screen door to the lanai. This side of the lanai was pretty crowded. To the left, on the mountain side of the lanai, AJ and Jerry were with Shaun, Mike and Kenny Hunnicutt. Nearby were AJ's and Jerry's security teams. Closer to the beach were Sean, Troy, and their security. Reyes thought Paul would feel more comfortable sitting on the beach side of the house.

Ryan stepped outside giggling, "They're getting low on food. They had the replicator make more burgers, hotdogs, fried rice and eggrolls too. Paul's loading a plate."

While they waited for Paul to come outside, Reyes introduced Ryan to Sean Moorhead, Troy Faris, Jeremy Tribou, Lakota Harmon, and the two gorillas, Leo and Gary. Paul stepped outside during the introductions of the latter three, so Reyes repeated introductions of the former three for Paul. They then went around to the kitchen side of the house, with a wide open view of the beach, and took seats around a table. Conversation started where it had left off, with Reyes telling Paul and Ryan about the other Core Rimmers and their families.

AJ and Jerry had a meandering conversation with Shaun, Mike and Kenny. Jerry tried to keep the boys on the topic of their favorite interests and hobbies. The Hunnicutts were transitioning from big city life to the much smaller Ewa Beach community. Conversely, the three boys wanted to know more about Clan life in general. Of course, the boys were somewhat surprised with how easily other boys got naked. They were only allowed to do that in the privacy of their home or out in their backyard. AJ reminded them that there was nothing to be worried about, even on base where girls and adults were around. Jerry said, "Swimsuits are optional at all the beaches and resorts in this country. Today, it's all boys here, and we're in a very private spot where nobody else can see."

Seeing developing teenagers and tweens caused the Hunnicutt boys a bit of confusion. The primary difference the boys noticed wasn't size or hair, it was because all three brothers were circumcised at birth and so many other boys they saw weren't. That was easily explained since AJ, Mike Gibbons, and Prez were all circumcised as well. Overhearing the conversation, Troy admitted that he was also circumcised, proving to the kids that even some of their leaders were just like them and it didn't matter in the least. AJ and Jerry sniggered at some of the other typical questions about puberty and size differences, but easily dealt with making the three young newbies more comfortable. As soon as four-year-old Shaun finished eating, he slid off his chair and stripped, proving that he could easily adjust. Shaun's giggling older brothers finished their meals, and then got naked too.

Inside the house, none of the Rimmers or AI Division members said a word about Battle Of Earth, or what they had dealt with that day. The Rimmers were more interested in Marc's intended project to restore his boat, and the night that Danny had arranged for a boat ride with Marc. Danny, Marc, Joey, and KC were interested in Platinum Habits. Nobody spoke of Clan business of any sort during lunch; it was more important to concentrate on the various individuals' families, hobbies, and interests.

At the Ewa Beach CIC dining room, everyone arriving for lunch knew where the majority of Core Rimmers were and what the purpose was by the end of lunch. All the parents were relieved that their sons were taking a break. None of the rescued kids had any problem with them being away, because John, Stephen, Corey, Drew, and all the dorm leadership were there on base should anyone need anything.

Back at the beach house, lunch had been devoured and the mess easily cleaned up. Supervised by Kaleo, Tory, AJ, Jerry Hebda, Sean, Troy, Jerry Owens, and KC, the youngest boys returned to the beach first. In minutes, some of the boys were digging into the storage bins for more toys to play with. Sharing some of the more unpleasant aspects of their lives, Reyes, Ryan and Paul took a walk up the beach to the waterfall. Soon, almost everyone was back at the beach and in the water. KC grabbed a surfboard and paddled out, but since he had just eaten, he didn't catch any waves; he only watched the kids from the bay.

Sean decided to teach Troy how to surf. Kaleo took Russ Pass out for his first rides on a surfboard. Similarly, Tory took five-year-old Marv Perkins out on another surfboard, AJ took Shaun Hunnicutt out, and Jerry took Mike Hunnicutt out. The two little guys had life vests on, which turned out to be a wise move, because two over-excited and squirming boys sent themselves and their dads-to-be slipping into the ocean during each ride. So that Kenny Hunnicutt wasn't left alone on the beach, Jerry's new security gorilla, Kanye, lifted the eight-year-old and took him out for a few rides. Soon, the remaining surfboards were grabbed and the rest of the kids got taken out for rides by their fathers or by the friendly gorillas.

Drew, Corey, Geoff, Lenny, and Leo arrived. Drew reported to Derrick, Mike, Keith, and Prez that their band teacher, Mrs. Diaz, had been hired. Corey told Derrick that he would soon have four new brothers. The Steib quadruplets were making friends with Chad, Herbie, Kawazoe, and Sung. Corey giggled, "And now for the best part. The quadruple R's, and Cesar and Felipe have been hanging out with the Steibs too." Laughing his ass off, Derrick ran to the house to get dressed, and then transported back to Ewa Beach, intending to bring all fourteen back to the beach house. Corey took Geoff out for his first ride on a surfboard. Geoff had only gone Sehlut surfing the prior Saturday. Lenny joined Drew for a few rides and Uncle Keith took Leo out for his first surfing lessons. When Leo felt ready, Keith left the boy to try surfing on his own and returned to his beach-bound husband.

Since Prez couldn't go in the water, his and Keith's human security and their sons took a break on the beach blankets. Glancing around their security, Prez revealed, "None of you have any obvious issue with us being gay. I'm wondering if any of you are too."

Justin raised his right arm and nodded, "Now I need to find a partner that won't tease me when I sing."

"That would be a good test, and if he does, a reason to immediately move on," Keith nodded.

Chris held his hand up and quickly glanced at Justin as he did so. Raising his eyebrows, Justin was very surprised. Having been busy enough the prior week, Justin and Chris never had the chance to talk about sexual preference. Chris was genetically enhanced and his musculature proved that. Justin wasn't genetically enhanced, but Chris still found him interesting and attractive? At some point during this day or very soon, Justin and Chris needed to have a private chat.

Matt held his hand up only halfway and said, "I'm bi. I like guys, but want kids too, someday."

Dee wondered, "Can't you adopt, like Daddy and Poppa?"

Considerate of the boy he was answering, Matt replied, "I guess I could, but since I like boys and girls, I should first see which I wind up with."

Keith turned to Danny and briefly asked, "Straight?"

Danny nodded and smiled, "Workin' on the relationship this last week."

"Yeah?" Keith chuckled, "With whom, if it's not too personal?"

Danny laughed, "Well, actually it's pretty personal, but definitely no secret."

Justin grinned at Keith, "Your mom's personal security, Tanya Casey."

Keith chortled, "That's awesome!" Prez agreed and so did everyone else.

Deciding that they wanted to make sand castles, Jerry Owens and Joey came over to ask if anyone wanted to help. Gage, Sammy, Dee, and Richie agreed and got up to jog away with Jerry and Joey. Prez smiled at his departing sons.

Derrick returned with his four brothers and the four Steib brothers. With a few more interviews scheduled at the FYS building that afternoon, Cesar and Felipe decided to stay behind. The quadruple 'R's' had invited their friends from Des Moines and Las Vegas, and therefore decided to stay at Ewa Beach. Once the boys were settled and building sand castles, Derrick grabbed a board and returned to the waves.

Matt leaned nearer to Prez and whispered, "You really think of them as your own kids, don't you?"

Prez enthusiastically nodded, replying, "In the last week, they've made it so they are our sons, in every way."

Matt softly asked, "Can I talk with you privately for a minute, Prez?"

Prez nodded and told his gathered guests, "We'll be right back," then led the way from the blanket. A few paces away, Prez asked, "What's the scoop, dude?"

"Thinking and learning," Matt replied with a wide smile. Pulling his thoughts together while Prez strolled the beach, Matt said, "I'm bi, but there are a few issues I'm still working out in my mind."

Prez softly prompted, "Like?"

Matt sighed, "It's like, sex with guys is much more fun, but then I can't keep the non-sexual part alive. Sex with girls is less fun and more teaching them how, but outside the bedroom, keeping the relationship together is a bit easier."

Prez scowled, "I'm confused. Probably because I've always been gay, but what do you mean by 'teaching them how'?"

Matt asked, "You've never been interested in any girl?"

Shaking his head, Prez smiled, "I came to Ewa Beach with my parents June of 1997. Before school started in September, I had already met Keith, Derrick and Mike. We grew up together, learned music together, about our bodies together, and ultimately chose our partners."

"Oh," Matt giggled. Behind the giggles though, he thought of all his male friends over the years.

Prez asked, "Lemme see if I've got this right?" Matt nodded, and then Prez summarized, "Girls don't do it for you in the sack, but guys do?" Again, Matt nodded. Prez queried, "Everywhere else, you'd rather be with a female friend than a male friend?"

Matt chuckled, "Yup, that pretty much covers it. That's why I'm still playing the field."

Thoughtful, Prez hummed then said, "I can only speak for myself and the three dudes that I know best."

Matt nodded and said, "Go ahead, Prez. I trust your opinion."

Prez sighed, "What makes you feel the best?" Making a fist and lightly pounding his belly, Prez said, "Here." He then cupped his privates saying, "Not here." Releasing his goods, Prez said, "Mike and I are both guitarists. When I got here and for another few years, we were both driving each other forward. I could've easily wound up with him. When I began playing bass guitar, Derrick and I spent time alone together; as the core of the rhythm section, we needed to be in sync. I might've wound up with him too. But when it came right down to making the decision, it was music and all the other times Keith and I were together that told me, he's the one for me. All three of them are sexy as hell, but sex makes up about an eighth of a day. Even in the most extreme case, we're still only talking four hours out of a sixteen hour day. It's the rest of the time that matters most. Keith does it for me all the time. We can joke around and laugh together, or be serious and cry together. Even in California, at the orphanages, he could read me as well as I could read him. Now, with our Vulcan bonding, it's incredible how much I feel from him."

"That's what I want!" Matt loudly declared.

Prez said, "It sounds to me like you really are split in half. You'll just have to keep looking, Matt. If you find another guy, then adopt kids. They're the greatest little mirrors. If you find a girl, then make some little mirrors of your own. The big thing isn't in your pants, or in his; it's the give and take, it's the partnership that counts most."

Matt tilted his head and softly asked, "You really don't care if I'm bi; if I go gay or straight?"

"Course not!" Prez laughed. He pointed down the beach, saying, "I've got my life here; a husband and four adorable boys. A week ago, I thought it would be four more years before I could marry Keith. And now we've got sons, who each told us they wanted us as their fathers. Without them, I'd be a waste of space, so everything else is secondary. I've got you, Chris and Gamba covering my ass when it needs to be covered. Now, I'm considering all you guys as friends. Who you choose to be with is none of my business. As long as we can still talk like this and you still do your job, we are very kewl."

Matt nodded, "Thanks, Prez. That means an awful lot. Me, Chris and Gamba were pretty annoyed with ourselves when we learned you got burned."

"That wasn't your fault," Prez quickly assured. "It was my fault entirely. I gave the order, but the entire team agreed to let our security save people on their own, rather than miss a single person because you guys were shadowing us. Don't sweat the small stuff, bro. Later tonight, I'll have one of our docs check me over. In a month or so, all the leg hair will have grown back and I'll be as good as new." Prez confirmed, "We're good?" When Matt nodded, Prez suggested, "Let's get back to the party then, before Mike gets that orgy organized."

Matt began sniggering, turned and walked with Prez back to the rest of their large group. As far as Matt was concerned, if he could find another teen boy that he could talk to like Prez, all his confusion and worries would dissipate very quickly. He softly told Prez, "If I could find a dude that I could talk with like you..."

"Tell me something?" Prez carefully interrupted.

Matt nodded, "Anything I can."

Prez asked, "What made you want to talk to me in the first place?"

"That's easy," Matt smiled. "You keep your division organized; you make time to be with Keith, your sons, and the rest of your family and friends. Chris, Danny, Justin and I understand how busy you are. Still, you put aside today to be with us. You're easy to admire and look up to." Prez looked over and locked eyes with Matt. In a few seconds, Matt realized what he had said. They both started chuckling. Matt grinned, "Yeah, just call me dense and dumb."

Prez stopped walking and held an arm out to stop Matt. Prez smiled, "Something a lot of guys misunderstand completely, and you can verify this with Mike and Derrick; the roles in gay partnerships change, Matt. With other guys, what's your role?"

"Consistently top," Matt answered.

"That's part of the problem, I think," Prez shared. "You said it yourself, you'd like someone you can look up to. In a perfect world, he'll look up to you too. You need to be everything for your lover, or risk losing him when he needs something you won't give. I need Keith in every way and he needs me. When Keith's aggressive, I might become a giggling spaz and accept his advances. Swap it around when I'm aggressive. When we're both aggressive, and alternatively, when we're both chillin', sparks fly majorly. That's when all bets are off and we flip-flop until we're exhausted." Matt laughed his ass off and suddenly turned then ran to the bay. Grinning madly, Prez bellowed, "Did I say too much?"

Once in waist deep water, Matt turned and laughed, "Not at all, Prez. I'll just turn some rocks into sand here and life will be good."

Moments later, Danny Page and Marc ran out of the water. They ran toward the house and beyond it like their butts were on fire. Jogging after them, Prez saw what the problem was. Marc screamed, "KC, get your ass down here!" Wide-eyed, but helplessly grinning, Prez ran over to the steep cliffs, where KC was climbing, about thirty meters up, and still completely naked.

Danny yelled, "KC, are you paying any attention at all to those safety protocols?"

"Course I am," KC loudly replied. "Joey's not here, is he? I'm perfectly fine, for now. I've been following this gorge most of the way. I could prob'ly make it half way up and back down again safely."

Prez tapped Danny and then Marc, signaling that he knew how to handle this. Danny and Marc gestured to the cliff. Prez tapped his sub-vocal, silently mouthing, "Alden, can you see KC?"

Alden privately replied, "Yup. I could get him down off there now. If he goes much further, my chances of transporting him will dwindle."

Nodding, Prez whispered, "Lock on to him, but listen to me and KC. Transport is your call, so do it when necessary."

"Got it," Alden giggled.

Moving a little closer to the steep cliff, Prez hollered, "KC!"

"This is one of two things I wanted to do as soon as I got here, Prez. I'm fine."

"Yeah?" Prez giggled, and started rubbing his crotch. "I'm way more than fine. I've got the most awesome view from here, dude. Why don't you spend the night tonight? If I could get Derrick, Mike and Keith, would you be interested in a five-way?" Marc's jaw dropped and Danny sputtered then giggled.

"A FIVE-WAY?" KC incredulously laughed, paused and looked down. Seeing Prez practically playing with himself, KC stumbled. Before KC could slip or fall, Alden had transported him off the cliff and out over the bay, beyond the surfers, where he splashed down.

Prez turned to Danny and Marc, winked and grinned, "We're not called Rimmers for nothin'."

Danny checked with Marc, "Why haven't we ever approached KC that way?"

"He's my son," Marc giggled, "it's just too weird."

Starting back to the shoreline, Prez nodded, "He's an android, but still a teenager looking for thrills."

"You gave him thrills, all right!" Danny laughed. "He'll be swimming for a good half hour or more."

Prez shrugged, "More importantly, he's off the cliff."

Marc grinned, "And if he tries to climb it again?"

Prez smiled, "If Danny tries the same method and strikes out, let Keith, Derrick or Mike give it a whirl."

Rapidly nodding, Marc cracked up.

Danny giggled, "Yeah, any of the three would get my undivided attention."

Marc laughed, "HUSH!"

Noticing Keith approaching with a purposeful stride, Danny giggled, "Keith looks determined, Prez."

Prez hummed, grinned and softly droned, "Yeah. Damn, he looks yummy." Marc and Danny giggled. Bouncing his red eyebrows at them, Prez said, "See ya a little later." He then veered off course, away from Danny and Marc, and toward the house.

Keith started running and hollered, "Prez?" Picking up his pace, Prez raced Keith to the house. "PREZ!" Keith laughed, and turned up the juice. Hurrying up the lanai steps and into the house, Prez led Keith up the stairs to the master bedroom, exactly where both needed and wanted to be.

Out in the bay, KC swam around the cool water, waiting for his erection to deflate. He and his condition didn't go unnoticed by those surfing. Reyes and Ryan went into a giggling fit. Paul yelled over, "KC! Down periscope, dude!"

"Yeah, right," KC smirked. "Blame Prez; he's at least as evil and twisted as Danny and Cory."

Ryan giggled, "What happened?"

Floating around the surfers, KC explained, "I was climbing the cliffs, minding my own business. And I did it when Joey wasn't around, so it's kewl, right? Wrong! Danny and Marc have their usual hissy fits. Then Prez hollers up at me, enticing me to join in on a five-way orgy!" Knowing more than most, Reyes howled laughing. KC bitched, "My bone will shrivel when the rest of me is pruned beyond recognition!"

"Just think of Grandma Morrison nude, dude!" Reyes giggled.

"Ugh!" KC grunted, and sank as if he were torpedoed.

Not too far away, Derrick and Mike were with their security. The latter four security boys had already talked to Matt, and told Derrick and Mike about Matt's chat with Prez. Noticing KC's condition and hearing why he got that way, Derrick and Mike were hysterical. Laughing himself hoarse, Mike squeezed his surfboard between his knees, holding on for dear life.

When KC had surfaced again, Derrick told him and all the others nearby, "That's Prez, on codeine. He's our best friend in the world, and would normally restrain himself with folks he doesn't know too well. So, between the pain meds, restricted contact with Keith and opportunities presented, Prez is being himself, as he would be alone with me and Mike."

"He's EVIL!" KC loudly laughed.

Derrick, Mike and Reyes giggled, "He's the Head Rimmer!"

Wanting to get even, KC wondered, "Where is he now?"

Derrick giggled, "I saw him racing Keith into the house."

"Afterward, Prez will be mellow for an hour or so," Mike cackled. Discouraged for the moment, KC swam away from the larger group.

Derrick tapped Mike, suggesting, "Let's make sure our two fearless leaders are okay."

Nodding, Mike asked, "And if they'd rather be alone?"

"Then we go to another room," Derrick replied. With the next wave, they rode to shore and hurried to the house.

Paul suspiciously smirked at Reyes, causing Ryan to loudly laugh. Reyes giggled, "What can I say? They were close before the Clan, they're still very close, and our entire Clan is learning what real friendships are like, from the best examples."

Paul bluntly told Reyes, "That's not really what I meant."

"I'm sorry," Reyes blinked, "I thought you were referring to Prez and our leadership." He then asked, "What did you mean?"

Ryan watched and worried. Paul huffed, "Do you want something from us, Reyes?"

Sitting there on surfboards in the bay with both brothers, Reyes honestly answered, "No. What I've got are two friends, two very special friends, and that's more than I could've expected when I went to get a check-up Tuesday. When I went there, I didn't give too much thought about meeting any other androids. Why would I? Since Caleb, Noah and Hunter are human, I expected Clan humans. Instead, I found a place that had a bunch of androids. I consider all of the people at Sullivan's Island friends. Wednesday morning, a dream I had caused me to call Jerry. Paul overheard that conversation. Since then, the three of us became closer friends. Since Wednesday afternoon, I have considered letting that friendship grow into more, but my own personal worry is doing anything that makes two brothers argue and fight. That will not happen. I'll walk away apologizing at the first argument between you two. One of you being my friend without the other just feels so wrong that I won't allow it to go there."

Tapping his surfboard, Reyes smiled, "This is what I want; friends to spend good times with. Alternatively, I want to be there for those friends when their human companions reach the end of their lives. I'll need these same friends too, when my human family and companions pass away. That's what is the most important to me, beyond Jerry's dreams and schemes to make us boyfriends. You two lost your parents. I lost my parents, and then my cousin and his wife. With the Clan, we have a lot less to worry about, but we still have to face human mortality. I don't want anything more from you than friendship, Paul."

Ryan giggled, "Reyes, put Jerry's scheme aside and think of the three of us as boyfriends. Do you realize what that means?"

"All too well," Reyes laughed.

Laughing along, Paul wondered, "Is that even possible?"

Reyes shrugged and smiled, "I have no idea, but there's only three people that could figure it out. I already said, me without both of you, as inseparable brothers, simply isn't good enough. I'd just as soon remain friends than go a step further with one and leave the other out in the cold. If you two go home later and decide, yeah, you can remain brothers and include me in whatever our friendship becomes, that's great. You could also say, no, we have to keep it limited to friendship, and that's great too. We're all still friends and can remain that way for a long time. If you're unsure, that's kewl, because I am too. Being a couple is one thing, being a threesome is new ground, for all of us."

Paul confirmed, "You can't leave Ryan out of it?"

"Not if it hurts you or him," Reyes replied. "You need Ryan and Ryan needs you. I like both of you, partially because of the way you both are together. Let's stay friends."

Ryan checked, "Could you really choose to stay friends?"

Reyes nodded, "Keeping friends is better than losing them." He then pointed at KC floating around many meters away, smiling, "He's a good friend too. All it would take is time talking with KC, like we've talked, to learn if he's boyfriend material. Of course, I'll keep a medi-kit handy." Paul and Ryan cracked up. Reyes smiled, "Yeah, the three of us is more complicated, but not impossible. I told you guys what I had to do to stay alive. You told me some of what you did to survive. After all that, here we are, chatting in the buff about a hypothetical situation, in the middle of the bay. None of us is stupid; we can talk about all that and this too."

Ryan checked with Paul, asking, "What're you thinking, bro?"

Paul thoughtfully hummed before replying, "What I know is that Reyes hasn't lied. I'm beginning to believe he couldn't lie if he tried. I absolutely believe Reyes is serious; he won't want to be with me if it meant hurting you, or be with you if it hurt me." Suddenly, instead of concentrating on answering his brother, Paul nervously glanced around and sighed, "I really don't know what to think or say beyond that. I like you a lot, Reyes. Ryan likes you too..."

"No," Ryan quickly interrupted. "Tell Reyes what you told me, bro. We have to be open and honest now, or it'll only haunt us later."

Paul glared at his brother several moments before returning his attention to Reyes, and admitting, "I trust you, Reyes, more than almost everybody else I've met since joining the Clan. I trust Mary and Jon, and Jerry to a point, and you; that's it."

Warmly smiling at Paul and then Reyes, Ryan explained, "Since Wednesday, when you made Paul so happy, all I'd have to hear is you need help and I'd be there in a snap. And you know wherever I go, Paul is too. Yeah, something special is happening and I want it to continue. I have no idea how we could progress any further than friends, but having you as a friend has been good."

"Reyes?" Paul called. When Reyes eyes locked with his, Paul grinned, "Do you ever lie at all?"

"When it's an obvious joke, I could and have. When it's serious though, I simply won't. It accomplishes nothing. I've told you what I really felt and thought the last two days. It's up to us where we go from here. None of us have ever had boyfriends before; what we did with others is only what we had to do and not what we wanted to do."

Ryan worried, "I... uh... we need time to think. At the same time, it feels bad making you wait."

"You're not making me wait," Reyes quickly assured. "I've got my dads, three brothers and I'm a leader here too. You've got a new family to adjust to. You know I'll visit Sullivan's Island every chance I get. If you two need to get away, I'm just a comm-badge tap away."

Paul checked, "In the meantime, things stay the same?"

Reyes nodded, "Unless all three of us decides otherwise, yeah. My crystal ball is foggy, so I can't say what might happen or when, but I like where I am and who I'm with right now."

"It seems to me that KC and you are complete opposites," Ryan grinned.

"Not completely," Reyes smiled, "and there are good things about opposites teaming up too."

Inside the beach house, Derrick, Mike, Keith and Prez were cuddling on the king sized bed, basking in the afterglow and chatting. Mike contentedly sighed, "For days like this, I would gladly deal with all the other craziness."

Keith smiled, "Thank goodness we took some time at Archnania too. Our kids benefited from that every bit as much as we did."

"We'll have to take another trip there soon with AJ, Jerry and their boys," Derrick suggested.

Mike smiled, "When our Head Rimmer is less stoned, we'll arrange to get two more couples hitched and bonded."

"Lieutenant Vorik said he could do the bonding portion," Keith stated.

Derrick smiled, "The best part of that trip was that our team and our band really got closer. Reyes wasn't a Core Rimmer at the time, but I know it mattered to him. All our kids are real brothers, cousins and closer friends now."

Mike nodded, "I noticed Troy and Sean watching AJ and Jerry with the Hunnicutts, and Kaleo and Tory with Leonard, Mark Fikes, Marv, Russ and Stan. It seems Sean and Troy might be getting ready to start their own family. They're at least considering it."

Keith checked to see if Prez was awake by gently rubbing the back of his hand across his husband's face. Keeping his eyes closed, Prez purred. Keith grinned, "You're awake?" Prez hummed affirmatively.

Derrick chuckled, "You've got nothing to say, bro?"

Prez sighed, "I love this. I love you three dudes. It's turning into a really great day for everybody."

Mike sniggered, "Take another pill, Prez."

"After dinner," Prez grinned.

Keith giggled, "We wore him out."

Prez smirked, "It takes more than blow-jobs to accomplish that, and you three know it." Derrick, Keith and Mike sniggered. "I'll have to maintain with the help of my lover and two best buds," Prez smiled.

Keith planted a kiss on Prez's forehead. Derrick grinned, "We'll always be available for whatever and whenever, Prez."

Mike called, "Hey, Alden?"

Over the room's ceiling speakers, Alden giggled, "Shiny Daddy?"

Mike chuckled, "I'm pretty sure I have a good idea what Prez and the rest of us need."

"For the time being, I don't see how I could help with that," Alden giggled.

Mike cracked up. Derrick sniggered, "Not that, Alden. If you choose to be under ten-years-old, you can forget about it. Pubes are required now in this club." He then asked, "Is the beach side of the lanai free of our guests?"

"Yes, it is, Derrick."

Stretching and beginning to motivate, Derrick instructed, "Move tables and chairs out to the lawn, then move the basement instruments onto the lanai, and the PA system to the lawn." Prez's eyes popped open and mischievously darted around.

"Somebody just became wide awake," Keith chortled.

After transporting tables and chairs to the lawn, and the band's gear to the lanai, Alden reported, "It's set guys, and some of your guests have noticed."

All four bounded out of bed and hurried downstairs, bouncing ideas around for a set list on the way. Out in the bay, surfers caught the next ride ashore. Drew, Corey and Leo were the first to make it as far as the table with the PA mixer. Drew stopped and powered up that gear, instructing Leo on the workings of the PA system. Corey went to the lanai and began powering up amplifiers and microphones. Corey estimated that the lanai was about five meters wide, and the side where the gear was set up was about ten meters long, so the band had plenty of space. Derrick, Mike, Keith and Prez walked outside to find all their guests heading toward the house.

Slipping his bass guitar over his shoulder, Prez walked up to a microphone, saying, "Dudes, we're just going to have some fun. You can continue what you were doing or watch us, whatever you want. Drew can adjust the volume so no matter where you are, you'll hear us."

Flashing a thumbs up, Drew smiled, "It's just like our stuff in the auditorium, just fewer main speakers. This gear will easily fill this little area with sound, Prez."

Heading back toward Drew and the PA, Corey giggled, "We might be heard up over the cliffs and a little over at Maui."

Wide-eyed, Chuck confirmed, "Are you serious, Corey?"

Corey shrugged and grinned, "Sound travels." Chuck turned and walked away, waving the other security forces to him.

Approaching the house with Sean, Troy asked, "What's the first number?"

"We thought we'd play some of the new covers we learned at Archmania," Mike offered.

Watching Reyes, who was still walking up the beach with Paul and Ryan, Derrick grinned, "Let's let Reyes start us off with Fantasy." Suddenly stopping short, Reyes squinted at the gathering group on the lanai. Derrick and Mike softly sniggered at Reyes' reaction.

Before Reyes could say a word, Paul and Ryan wrapped arms around Reyes' back and guided him forward. Ryan teased Reyes; "You never told us you could sing too."

Paul smirked, "He don't lie, but conveniently omits certain details."

Reyes helplessly giggled. Paul and Ryan took Reyes' hands and started running. Reyes giggled, "At Archmania, we found out my vocal range is really high. Mostly, I sing backup vocals, except on a handful of tunes."

"Uh huh," Paul suspiciously grunted.

Ryan smiled, "He spills it after getting caught." He and Paul shoved Reyes forward, to the steps up to the lanai. Reyes walked over to the set of congas and timbale then put his hands-free microphone over his head.

Now that the whole band was ready, Drew hollered, "A quick sound check on the instruments, bros." Derrick started pounding a rhythm that Reyes, and then Prez, and then Troy, and then Mike and Keith played in time with. After a little more than a minute, Drew and Corey signaled with hand slicing motions across their throats that they were good. The band stopped at once. "Now only vocals, dudes," Drew prompted. Starting with Prez's baritone, and working up to Mike, Derrick, Troy, Keith and Reyes, the group sang a C major chord. After making a few minor adjustments, Drew smiled, "Go for it."

With that, the band started playing the mellow introduction of Fantasy. Keith played keyboards on the left side of the lanai. Derrick tapped cymbals, Reyes dropped his hands on congas, Prez and Mike played chords, and Troy played synthesizers on the far right of the lanai. With a swirl of horns and strings from Troy, the band picked up the tempo and went into the main part of the song. Playing congas and percussion, Reyes sang:

Every man has a place

In his heart there's a space

And the world can't erase his fantasies

Take a ride in the sky

On our ship fantasize

All your dreams will come true right away

Many of the AI Division guests and other boys scattered around the lawn were dancing. The entire band sang the chorus.

And we will live together

Until the twelfth of never

Our voices will ring forever as one

Every thought is a dream

Rushing by in a stream
Bringing life to the kingdom of doing
Take a ride in the sky
On our ship fantasize
All your dreams will come true miles away

Our voices will ring together
Until the twelfth of never
We all will love forever as one

Come to see victory
In a land called fantasy
Loving life for you and me
To behold to your soul is ecstasy
You will find other kind
That has been in search of you
Many lives have brought you to Recognize it's your life now in review

As you stay for the play
 Fantasy has in store for you
 A glowing light will see you through
 It's your day shining day
 All your dreams come true
 Come to see victory
 In a land called fantasy
 Loving life for you and me
 To behold to your soul is ecstasy
 You will find other kind
 That has been in search of you
 Many lives have brought you to Recognize it's your life now in review

The audience exploded in loud cheers, whistles, and catcalls, because none of the band members had bothered getting dressed. Of the six on the lanai, only Reyes' and Derrick's goods couldn't be seen, but the other four swayed and bounced with the music, causing their male-bits to keep time of their own. Laughter and jokes traveled around the beach front.

Leaning over, KC told Joey, "They did that song great."

Still clapping, Joey nodded, "Dime Douched couwd pway id, widh weaw stwings and howns, bud id wouwd dake a wong whiwe do weawn."

KC giggled, "You've got the beat memorized already, don't you twerp?"

"Bodh of 'em, Cwash," Joey grinned, "dwums and congas. I needs some congas, by dhe way."

"Use your head!" KC laughed as he pulled Joey into a hug.

"You'we siwwy, Casey!" Joey giggled. "My head ain'd a dwum!"

By this time, Platinum Habits had reached agreement on the next song. Reyes moved from percussion to the electronic drum kit. Stepping away from keyboards, Troy picked up a Stratocaster. The band started playing Pour Some Sugar On Me. Keith sang lead vocals and purposefully overacted, swinging his free arm around with the echoing sound, to point to dudes in their audience. Troy played electric rhythm guitar, with Mike on lead guitar. Joey couldn't take it any more and ran with KC to the edge of the lanai. Joey watched Reyes and Derrick while KC stood before Troy and Mike.

Quite busy singing the backup vocals and playing guitar, Troy noticed KC watching, but couldn't do much about it. Mike decided to give KC a close up. Never missing a note, Mike sat on the railing surrounding the edge of the lanai, locked his legs around the top and leaned backward to hang upside down, with his guitar right in front of KC.

KC giggled, "And they tell me I'm looney!"

Mike smiled, "It's a big club and growing. Speaking of growing big clubs, I see yours is back to normal."

KC smirked, "No thanks to your Head Rimmer."

"Don't take what Prez said as anything other than a compliment," Mike assured. "He's whacked out on codeine, but not blind."

Warmly smiling, KC wondered, "So... about this orgy?" Cracking up, Mike sat up on the railing and returned to playing normally and on his feet.

Behind where Marc and Danny were kicked back on lounge chairs, John, Wade, Frankie and Stephen arrived, lined up and holding hands. Seeing a new young boy, Richie and Dillon led the youngest boys over to say hello. Rather than yell over the loud music, John telepathically introduced all the kids to Wade. Surprising the boys, Wade waved and telepathically said hi to them all at once. Stephen, John and Frankie couldn't help giggling at the boys' shocked expressions. The four Steib brothers were thrilled that a boy younger than them was powerful enough to be heard by the entire group of boys. They invited Wade and Frankie to build sand castles with them. Getting nods of approval from John and Stephen, the boys ran down to the water line.

When the band finished the song, John sent to his fellow Core Rimmers, 'There's only two rooms left on the first floor of dorm three. Travis has a roommate now too; Erik Kendricks saw Travis unpacking. Travis saw Erik and there's an attraction there. That was all it took. Are we doing more adoptions today?'

Jerry, AJ, Kaleo and Tory all answered affirmatively before Prez had a chance to say a word. Keith, Derrick and Mike cracked up. John led Stephen around to Danny, Marc, Jerry and the other members of the AI Division.

Stepping up to the microphone with a wide grin, Prez chuckled, "Okay, I brought my tricorder in case of emergencies. Adoptions aren't an emergency or work. We'll just play a few more songs, then we'll take a break, so others that might want to play can come up. We obviously have guitarists and drummers. I know of a keyboard player too, but who plays bass?"

"One of my security," Mike said. "Clay plays bass."

"I'll be taking some of the music classes you guys are teaching," Clay hollered.

Prez smiled, "Kewl. And we'll sit in whenever, and play more later." After a brief pause, Prez introduced, "Our next song is one Troy knew and shared with us. Y'all have heard 'Carry On Wayward Son' on the radio before, but this next tune is on the same disk. It's appropriately titled What's On Your Mind, with Keith singing lead and Troy backing him up." Kaleo, Tory, Jerry and AJ sniggered and took playful jabs at each other, forgetting their first names and instead using daddy or poppa. Prez stepped back from the mic and Derrick counted off. All at once, the band started playing the song.

During the course of the song, Prez happened to notice John and Stephen going to the water line, where Wade and Frankie were playing with other boys.

John pointed at Frankie and Stephen then started taking his clothes off. Obviously, Wade was having a small problem wearing clothes and was uncomfortable getting naked, for the moment. The young family was simply reassuring Wade that he could keep his clothes on for as long as he liked. The other boys weren't saying anything upsetting to Wade or Frankie, but Wade could hear their thoughts and told Frankie, who called over his dad and pop to relieve Wade's concerns. John simply had boys of similar ages stand together.

Starting with Richie, Dillon, Geoff, Leonard, Marv, Russ and Mark Fikes, who were in the same age bracket as Wade, John proved that everybody was a little different inside and outside. Now aware of Wade's telepathy, all seven of the more comfortable young boys gave Wade a hug and apologized for making him feel out of place. Finishing up his lesson, John stood beside Jerry Owens. Jerry was almost two years older and two or three inches taller than John, but what was hanging between their legs was similar enough. Turning his youngest son around, John pointed at groups of teens, some of whom were dressed.

Platinum Habits finished the song they were playing, and then went directly into The Moody Blues tune, The Voice. Keith extended the spacey synthesized string, bass and wind introduction then signaled to Derrick to count them off and get the band together. Strumming his Stratocaster with his effects unit set to simulate a twelve-string acoustic guitar, Troy stepped up to a microphone and sang lead vocals. At Troy's first break from singing, he spoke with Mike, because neither were satisfied with the tone of the twelve-string simulator.

While the band played the song, AJ and Jerry went to gather the Hunnicutt boys. Not only did those three boys bounce up out of the sand, but Marv Perkins, Leonard Santana, Stan Given, Russ Pass and Mark Fikes jumped up and followed AJ and Jerry toward the house. Five young boys surrounded Kaleo and Tory. At one point near the end of the song, Prez chuckled his background vocals. Tory cracked up. Softly sniggering, Kaleo locked eyes with Prez.

At the end of the song, all the band members and remaining Core Rimmers loudly laughed. Prez put his bass down and went inside the house to retrieve his tricorder. First to walk down the lanai steps, Keith locked eyes with Kaleo, chuckling, "Wasn't it just two nights ago that you and Tory strongly implied you weren't ready for kids?"

"Yeah," Kaleo smiled, "but Archania made that more like nine days, and then Stan, Russ, Mark, Marv and Leonard made their interest very clear. They're already brothers. When we took them to the dorms for bedtime last night, five sets of puppy dog eyes attacked, and we caved."

Keith grinned down at the giggling boys, asking, "Did you guys do that?" Nodding, they all wore irresistible smiles and effortlessly reproduced the puppy dog eyes. Everyone gathering around softly sniggered.

"By the way," Tory giggled, "I think we'll be moving into a townhouse tomorrow."

Jerry chuckled, "Yeah, we'll be moving out of the dorm and into a townhouse tomorrow too."

Keith nodded, "We're expecting ninety-five of the Level two orphanage kids tomorrow. Rather than move and move again repeatedly, I guess we'll have to talk about which families are moving to the Oneula Base."

Walking down the lanai steps, Prez suggested, "Tomorrow, dudes. Unless some of you really want to talk about that, today's a day off to enjoy ourselves." Sean and Troy grabbed a kiss then joined the gathering group of Core Rimmers and their sons-to-be.

Derrick said, "We're staying the night here, with Keith and Prez and all our sons."

Seeing John, dressed again and approaching with his family, Prez pleaded, "Please say you're reconsidering and staying the night, bro."

John smiled, "I'll tell ya what, it all depends on who might be in the nest tonight. If the nest is empty, we'll stay here."

Stephen nodded, "All the boys we picked up at Des Moines this morning, and the last few from yesterday, all decided to move into the dorm. Unless we get a call to pick up more later, we'll be kewl to stay here tonight."

AJ checked with the Hunnicutt boys; "What do you guys think; shall we stay here tonight?"

Mike Hunnicutt looked up and smiled, "Dillon, Geoff and Richie is here too. That'd be kewl, daddy."

Kenny Hunnicutt nodded, "Yeah, kewl. Gage, Sammy and Jonah will be here." Kenny checked with Leo, asking, "Are you stayin' here too, Leo?"

Leo checked with Drew and Corey. Corey nodded. Drew grinned, "As long as we don't have more kids to pick up, we'll stay the night." Nodding, Leo widely smiled at Kenny Hunnicutt.

Sammy giggled, "Sweet!" and then called, "Hey Pop, would it be kewl to set up a nest in the living room for us?"

"Sure," Prez answered, "later, you guys can nest there if you want." The growing group of Rimmer sons cheered. Once the sound dwindled, Prez smiled, "Arnold James Smithson and Jerold Hebda, our two newest Core Rimmers latched onto kids faster than any of us. Only because of circumstances have we waited this long to make it official. Do you two Mouth Rimmers want Shaun, Michael and Kenneth Hunnicutt as your sons?"

Almost simultaneously, AJ and Jerry answered, "We definitely do, Prez."

Glancing down at each of the three boys, Prez asked, "Shaun, Michael and Kenneth Hunnicutt, do you want AJ and Jerry as your fathers?"

Shaun asked, "Forever, right?" which made everyone nearby smile. Nobody laughed because Shaun really had asked a valid question, one that was expected from a four-year-old that had recently lost his parents.

Prez nodded, "Forever."

"Kewl," Shaun smiled.

Giggling, Kenny interpreted, "That counts as a yes. And I say yes too."

Six-year-old Mike Hunnicutt nodded, "Yep, I want them as dads." Looking up at AJ, Mike admitted, "I didn't even know your real name until now. Pop calls you Arnie, and jus' about ev'rybody else calls you AJ, and we call you daddy." He blinked, "How can you answer to so many names anyway?"

The entire group began chuckling and giggling. AJ smiled, "I'm used to it. Besides, your pop is the only one who calls me Arnie."

Still chuckling, Prez smiled, "And with that said, it's official, you're a family." He then moved over to Kaleo and Tory, sniggering, "Five at once, dudes? That's a new Rimmer record." Soft chuckling turned into loud laughter and the loudest were Danny, Marc and KC.

"Just wait until Cory and Sean give you the advanced course,"

Marc sniggered.

Kaleo giggled, "We want these five, living in a house together with us."

"Waking together, living through each day and then going home together," Tory smiled. "We learned from you dudes, it seems that more than one kid works better, for them and for us."

Prez nodded, "That's all been recorded, so asking the formal question is pointless." Glancing at each of the five boys, Prez asked, "Leonard Santana, Mark Fikes, Stanley Given, Russell Pass and Marvin Perkins, do you want Kaleo Palakiko and Tory Burgas as your fathers, and each other as brothers?"

One after another, each of the boys replied affirmatively. As soon as Prez announced it was official, Russ cheered, "Kewl! We gets to play with gorillas too!" causing another round of laughter.

Off to the side edge of the lawn watching were Reyes, Ryan and Paul. Ryan whispered to Reyes, "Would you want to adopt too?"

Reyes eyes almost jumped out their sockets. Shaking his head, Reyes softly giggled, "We have enough to decide and work on without going there, I think."

"True," Ryan smiled.

John, Stephen and Frankie brought Wade to Prez. Having only seen Wade and not spoken to him at all, Prez squatted down, preparing to introduce himself. The telepathic five-year-old didn't wait for Prez to say a word and quickly answered, "Hi Unca Prez, I'm Wade Houseman. You're daddy's big bro, huh?"

Looking around, Prez saw Stephen giggling, John holding it in and Frankie cutely blinking. Prez smiled, "Yep, definitely a good choice for this family." Keith, Drew, Corey, Geoff, Lenny and Leo cracked up. Prez showed Wade the tricorder and explained, "This machine will store your voice. Tell it that you want John and Stephen as your fathers and Frankie as your big brother."

Wade leaned in toward the machine and said, "Uh huh. Yup, I want them cos they want me."

Prez asked, "Frankie, are you ready for a little brother?"

Frankie nodded, "Wade's kewl, Uncle Prez. Yes, I want him." Wade smiled up at his new brother and suddenly lunged, wrapping Frankie in a tight embrace.

Prez confirmed that John and Stephen wanted Wade as their son, and then announced it was official. Again, the entire group present applauded and cheered. John levitated his newest son and slowly spun him around, causing Wade to squeal and laugh.

On another area of the lawn, the Steib quadruplets surrounded Derrick, wondering if he would be their big brother too someday. Derrick smiled, "I'd love that, guys. Tomorrow, when we go back home, we're going tell my mom and dad, and then Uncle Prez can make it official. All you have to do is decide for sure that's what you want." Mike noticed Derrick's newest brothers a few meters behind his husband, obviously paying close attention to the discussion.

Right then and there, Kelly checked with his other three mirror images. "Is Derrick our big bro or our dad?"

Lawrence scowled, "Big brother, I think."

"Yeah," Mattie nodded, "I want Sung, Kawazoe, Herbie and Chad as brothers."

Nick hummed then nodded and smiled, "Yeah, their mom and dad is real nice. I think that's the way to go too."

"Tomorrow then, dudes," Derrick promised, "as soon as we can, we'll make us brothers."

"Kewl," all four chanted.

Noticing the other Core Rimmers were gathering around Keith and Prez, Mike tapped Derrick and tilted his head in that direction. The Steib quadruplets were heading off to the shoreline with the other boys anyway, so Mike and Derrick went to find out what was happening. They heard Kaleo saying, "Does it really matter where any of us live, Prez? We could get to the Command Center in no time anyway."

"And school's starting Monday," Tory added. "Even if we give the newbies time off from school, like we've had, they can still come to Ewa Beach."

John told Prez, "Mom and Dad had interviews today. You know about Mrs. Diaz, but they just had a teleconference call, with a Doctor Metzger from Starfleet, that Sean and Troy met in California. We'll assign him to Oneula, so there's a staff growing there, including chefs and housekeepers."

Prez sighed, "You dudes know the deal; I just don't want anybody thinking they can't approach me. The first few days on base, when kids were barely saying more than hello to me, drove me to playing Pissed Off Chickens. I don't want anyone ever feeling separated, and that includes all of you."

Keith reminded, "Comm-badges are ordered. We'll get them passed out to the kids tomorrow." He then tapped his sub-vocal, asking, "Alden, what's the status of the request for the Rimmers dimensional doors?"

Alden replied, "Stevie will answer that, Keith."

Into the sub-vocals of all the Core Rimmers, Stevie answered, "A minor modification was made, due to the refugees using bases on Hawaii, Maui and Kauai. Dimensional doors at those three bases won't be installed until after the refugees leave the bases. The doors at Ewa Beach and Oneula will be installed tomorrow. Rylan, who is currently leading dispatch for the Archivist from the Ark Compound, is coordinating all the installations."

"Thanks, Stevie," Keith said, and then assured the group, "We're kewl for ninety-five newbies tomorrow. The newbies that want to nest can join the basement nest at Ewa Beach."

Prez smiled, "Okay, so AJ, Jerry, Kaleo and Tory will set up townhomes at Oneula for their families. We'll do the usual orientations and trip to the store at Ewa Beach. Once that's done, all of us will help make the Oneula Beach base their home."

"We'll have another concert for the newbies," Troy suggested.

Nodding, Tory agreed, "That worked really well. That's why our boys were so ready to be adopted into a family."

Drew said, "We took a group of newbies to dorm three this morning. A bunch of the kids from level one orphanages came there too, to help welcome those newbies. It was very kewl to watch."

Having already forgotten something due to codeine, Prez wondered, "How many rooms are still available?"

"Only two on the first floor," Stephen answered. "The whole second floor is empty."

Prez called, "Alden, statistically speaking, are we kewl to make that entire dorm for boys only?"

"I think so, Prez," Alden replied. "Our Battle Of Earth intake were all boys, so we're near seventy-percent male at the dorms. Of the ninety-five expected tomorrow, that group is two-thirds boys. Eighty level three kids will be here later next week and they're split at the same percentage. Comparatively speaking, it approximates recent population statistics."

AJ grinned, "I didn't know you kept track of all that stuff, Prez."

Prez nodded, "I've been given a lot of resources. The more I know, the better I can allocate those resources. My only real concerns now are the refugees occupying three of our bases. How long will they be there? Will I need to move any of them elsewhere, so we can have the space for kids that need the space?"

Alden interrupted, "I'm sorry guys, but Jimmy in the command center wants to speak with Keith or Prez."

Prez instructed, "Patch Jimmy in to all of us, Alden."

"Guys, we just had three kids walk-up to our North Road gate," Jimmy said into the Rimmers' sub-vocals. "The oldest is one of the boys that was here in the Command Center on Thursday."

Opening his eyes wide, Keith wondered, "Has he said what he wants?"

"Not directly," Jimmy answered, "but the other two have suitcases. They're younger than your classmate, and if I were to guess, I'd say they're brothers."

Keith told Prez, "Since you're only able to wear a shower wrap, let me handle this." Prez nodded and grinned. Keith told Jimmy, "Give me a few minutes to throw my clothes on, Jimmy. I'll transport directly to the North Road gate."

"Kewl," Jimmy replied, "thanks, Keith."

"I'll be back as soon as I can," Keith said, and started jogging toward the house. John hurried after Keith. Never slowing his pace, Keith entered the house wondering, "What're you doing, bro?"

"I'm going with you," John answered. "I felt you, Prez, Derrick and Mike all get concerned because of that call. What happened Thursday made you angry enough, so I want to check these dudes myself."

Stopping at the living room, where there were piles of clothes, Keith huffed, "Part of me wants to argue, but you're right, it's a good idea." He searched the piles for his boardies and T-shirt, and asked, "You and Stephen are kewl?"

John smiled, "We're excellent, bro. Stephen was empathic enough when he got here. Alone together, we're figuring everything out and having the best times. I officially take back everything I ever said about you and Prez, and Drew and Corey. Just like Stephen, Frankie's a little empath who gets telepathic around me. Wade's a strong telepath for five-year-old. My family may be young, but we're just as kewl as you older dudes."

Pausing as Keith stood to dress, John grinned, "I did quick scans of AJ, Jerry and all three Hunnicutts. I'm certain that's an awesome match too. The kids have made AJ and Jerry even closer, and they'd fiercely protect their sons. Knowing that they have a family again, the kids have lost all their worries. All that remains are memories of good times with their original parents, and high hopes of more good times with AJ and Jerry. For the Hunnicutts and Leo, this day at the beach house is awesome. With far fewer people around, they can really get to know their new dads and all our sons."

Keith checked, "What do you think of AJ and Jerry?"

"They're very kewl," John smiled. "Imagine if you and Prez were both orphans, but still got to know each other, then got separated and reunited. At eleven-years-old, they were separated when Jerry was fostered. When they saw one another again, after Joel's teams rescued them, they all but jumped for joy. They're a perfect fit for our team too. Neither is thinking that they can't do the job. As a matter of fact, they're really glad and like the idea of being communications officers. Finding the Hunnicutts the way they did made what was good totally awesome."

Fully dressed, Keith scowled for a moment then reached a hand into his shorts to brush away some uncomfortable sand grains. John giggled, "I hate that too."

Keith smirked, "It don't get any better as you get older either. One minute it's like, hey, that feels pretty good and you pop a bone, then it's not so good and ya shrivel up. Pickin' sand out of your foreskin and pubes sucks." John howled laughing and nodded. Tapping his sub-vocal, Keith grinned, "Alden, take us to the North Road gate."

In a blink, John and Keith were standing outside the security station. Chaz and Billy came out to greet them. Beyond the gate and the shield, Keith saw Alec Triggs, the junior that had been amongst the group harassing them at school Thursday. It was Alec who specifically asked about gays in the Clan. With Alec were two younger boys; one was about twelve-years-old and the other about ten-years-old. All three were definitely brothers. John recognized the younger of the two from his school, but they were in different classes. Keith nodded at Chaz and said, "Let 'em in, bro."

The steel gate rose and the shield portal opened. All three walked the base driveway and stopped before John and Keith. Alec smirked, "Bet you didn't think you'd see me again."

Keith shrugged, "Not this soon, that's for sure."

Alec nodded and softly said, "I'm not homophobic, Keith. The truth is, I was fishing for information. My parents are good people, and they're not particularly homophobes, but they don't understand it. They think it's a phase they'll grow out of. Because of that, they're trying to steer my two brothers in their preferred direction. If it's a phase, only my brothers can figure that out, not my folks."

Keith mutely checked with John. John nodded once at Keith, signaling that everything Alec said was true. Keith asked, "So your brothers aren't being abused. What's the deal?"

Alec sighed, "It's like they're limited, who they can hang out with, where, and for how long." He placed a hand on the taller of the two boys and prompted, "Theo, introduce yourself to Keith and tell him what happened before school started back in September."

Reaching forward to shake hands with Keith and then John, Theo Triggs introduced himself as Theodore, then said, "I had this friend over the summer. We were just getting to know each other, and things got pretty... uh... hot, I guess." Alec grinned and the other younger boy giggled. Blushing, Theo smirked, "It was kewl between us and getting better, but then I said the wrong thing on the phone with him, not knowing my folks were home and could hear, so no sleepovers with him any more. And since I couldn't even go out if our parents thought I might be with him, he's moved on and it's over. I just feel angry a lot, at him, at my folks, with just about everyone."

Placing his hand on the other brother's shoulder, Alec said, "This is Bradley. I know and love both my brothers, Keith. Brad's going in the same direction as Theo, so he's already been restricted most of this school year. He can participate in sports and school clubs, where he's supervised, but the rest of the time, he's grounded more often than he's free. I'm taking a big chance, with my folks having a fit and all, but really, this is the right thing for everybody at home. My brothers would be happier here, discovering themselves and maybe being themselves for the first time in a long time."

Glancing around Alec, Theo and Brad, Keith explained, "What we have here are violations of the Safe Haven Act, section twelve-dot-two, subsection 'C', and a loose interpretation of section sixteen-dot-one, subsection 'B'. No matter what your parents might think, restricting social interactions, which are normal for most all boys around ten- or twelve-years-old, is defined as wrong. I don't have grounds to arrest your parents. We do have sufficient grounds to take custody of Brad and Theo."

Brad and Theo nodded and then grinned at each other. Alec asked, "Where do we stand, and what do I need to do, Keith?"

Holding up his index finger to signal a pause, Keith then tapped his comm-badge and called, "Mom?"

A moment later, Jen replied, "Yes, Keith?"

"I'm at the North Road gate with John, and a schoolmate and his brothers," Keith explained, and then outlined the Safe Haven Act infractions. He asked, "Do we have standard paperwork prepared? If we do, we might be able to put this situation to rest today."

"John's been keeping me in the loop, so I'm filling out the form now, Keith," Jen answered. After a few moments of typing, Jen asked, "John's given me the names of the subjects, but are there any family members to be allowed visitation rights?"

Keith gave his mother the subject name of Alec Triggs as allowed visitation rights. There were sounds of more tapping keys, the whir of a laser printer, pages printing and then silence. Thinking he had been disconnected, Keith scowled for a moment.

Jen Hundser placed a hand on Keith's shoulder, causing Keith to jump in place. John cracked up, pushing Brad and Theo to giggles. Jen grinned, "Now you know how I feel when I see you disappearing and reappearing twenty times a day."

Keith smiled and gestured to each of the three boys, saying, "Mom, this is Alec Triggs, and his two brothers, Brad and Theo. Dudes, this is my mom, Jennifer Hundser, Director of Pacific Rim Division Federation Youth Services."

Stepping forward, Jen greeted each of the three boys then focused on Alec. She asked, "Do you believe that you'll be safe when you return home, Alec?"

Rapidly nodding, Alec said, "Our parents haven't ever laid a hand on us, Mrs. Hundser. The worst I expect is some yelling, and I might get grounded for a week or two, but ya know, I don't care about that. Brad and Theo matter way more. Them being here and happier is all that matters."

Jen smiled, "All big brothers should feel the same. If at any time your freedoms are unreasonably infringed upon, as in the cases of your brothers, call us on the toll-free number or come back again."

When Alec nodded, Jen showed him the pages she was holding and explained, "The first page is the summary. The next pages are explanations of the two Safe Haven Act sections infringed upon. If your parents think they can get this overturned, tell them to save their efforts and money. Months of restrictions on children is not acceptable, and most certainly not because boys are experimenting sexually with other boys."

Alec nodded and smiled, "I know it's true. I was there too." Completely surprised, Brad and Theo gasped and glared up at their big brother. "What?" Alec sniggered, and explained, "First of all, it was exactly that, convenient experimentation. Secondly, it was enough for me to say, nope, never again. I've heard both of you whispering at night. There's attractions that you two have that I don't. I still understand completely where you're at. You need to find the answers. Dad and mom can't find them for you, and shouldn't be preventing you from searching. Waiting until you're adults won't cut the mustard, in this case."

Jen nodded and seriously said, "Alec has complete freedom to come visit you two boys anytime he'd like. He's shown and proved maturity that your parents haven't." She then warmly smiled at Alec, saying, "I hope to see you again and often."

"Yes, ma'am, I'm sure you will," Alec smiled. "It might not be for a week or two, but I will be here. If my parents decide to get nasty and keep grounding me, I may just walk over here saying, enough is enough, and stay." He paused then locked eyes with Keith, grinning, "You said you take straights, right?"

Shrugging, Keith chuckled, "We'll make an exception for you, dude. If you happen to switch sides though, you can't complain about it." All five boys softly sniggered.

Rolling her eyes, Jen sighed, "So much for maturity. Boys are always boys, no matter which side of the fence they play on."

"We're wrapped up nice and neat, mom," Keith smiled.

John suggested, "Stephen, me, and our boys can show Brad and Theo around, introduce them and get them settled in a dorm room, bro. While I'm here, I'll take care of our Founder family, and get them set in a condo too."

Keith nodded but reminded, "Come back to the beach house when you're done. You heard our kids, they're all looking forward to spending the night together."

John nodded, "Kewl," and then waved Brad and Theo forward, saying, "Let's drop those suitcases off at a dorm room first." Jen joined the boys for the walk, but instead of going to the dormitory, she would go home.

Theo asked John, "Weren't you going to call some other guys?"

"I have already," John grinned. Jen smirked at John. Raising his eyebrows and stopping in his tracks for a moment, John giggled, "Here they come." A second later, Stephen, Frankie and Wade materialized before them.

Theo looked at his surprised little brother, sniggering, "I'm gonna like it here."

Smiling widely, Brad rapidly nodded. Stephen stepped forward, said, "Hi," to the two newbies, then reached for a kiss from John. Brad gasped.

Taking Stephen's hand, John grinned, "Yeah, I recognized you too, Brad. It's a small town. I didn't know for sure I was gay until I met Stephen. Now Stephen's my husband, and we have two awesome boys."

Back near the North Road gate, Keith shook hands and knocked knuckles with Alec, happily admitting, "You surprised me."

"You know how it is, appearances at school?" Alec grinned. "Some motives may have been as they seemed, but in my case, I was testing and confirming what Prez said on TV. I learned more than I expected, being transported here, and then learning you guys were married and had sons. That clearly told me this is where my brothers need to be; around good examples of gay couples."

Keith confirmed, "Are you sure that you'll be okay at home?"

Alec smirked, "I told the vice-principal what the deal was, so I don't have detention. Two weeks grounded at home will be a break I could enjoy. It's worth it as long as my brothers have a life."

"We work to make sure all the kids get the best opportunities," Keith explained. "They could even work their way into Starfleet someday. All they have to do is decide what they want and work towards the goal. Let us know if you need anything, Alec."

Nodding, Alec promised, "No sweat," and turned to go toward the gate. The steel bars rose and the shield portal opened, allowing Alec to leave and return home.

Before returning to the beach house and party, Keith decided to go round up some more family members, including Bruce. While walking toward the pools, Keith had a perfectly wicked idea; he would see who Bruce was playing with and bring some adoptable boys back too, specifically for Sean and Troy.

Back at the Keoneuli Beach house, Danny Page and Joey were playing drums; KC was playing lead guitar. And Clay, one of Mike Gibbons' security guys, was playing bass guitar. They were jamming a loose version of Heartbreaker, by Led Zeppelin. Prez was out on the lawn, monitoring the PA system and listening when Keith appeared beside him with Bruce, Ben and more boys. The boys immediately dashed for the beach, losing clothes along the way.

Seeing Ben and Bruce heading their way, Sammy, Gage and Jonah immediately jogged up the shore to them. The latter three hugged the two new arrivals. While Ben and Gage were close together, Ben whispered, "Hey, would you be angry if I said that I really like Sammy a lot?"

Giggling, Gage softly replied, "Not a bit. He likes you too, dude. Go for it!" Pulling back and locking eyes with Gage, Ben got confirmation it was true from Gage's nodding head and giggles.

After a quick kiss, Keith began telling Prez about Alec and his two younger brothers, and then shared his idea; "I found Bruce with Ben and the four boys from St. Joseph. Since Bruce is destined to be a Core Rimmer, and Ben is Mike's brother, I thought they needed to be here. The other four are already tuned in. They're all wanting to stay together and be adopted into one family. Since Troy and Sean need nudges to get with the program..."

"Perfect!" Prez loudly laughed.

Keith smiled and nodded, "Billy's eleven, Jason is nine, Scott is six and Jimmy is five. Seeing them with Bruce, who's from Ohio, I figured, okay, and Troy's from the American northeast too."

"You're a genius, babe. They were all together anyway, so half the battle is won."

Keith turned Prez around and pointed out to the bay. They saw Billy Whitmore swimming out to the surfers, with Jason a body length behind, and both were going directly for Sean and Troy.

Down at the beach, a group of younger boys were back building their sand castle. Included in the group were the two younger Hunnicutts, the Steibs, all five of Kaleo's and Tory's sons, Dillon, Randy, Geoff, Lenny, and Richie. The kids had a huge sand castle under construction. Dee was learning the finer points of toy dune-buggy racing from Conner. Out in the bay, the remainder of the AI Division and security teams were on surfboards. Also out there were Corey, Drew, Leo, AJ, Jerry, Kenny Hunnicutt, Kaleo, Tory, Sean, Troy, Mike, Derrick, Paul, Ryan and Reyes. The surf was perfect for beginners and the more advanced surfers to enjoy themselves. Wading and swimming together, off to the side and in shallow water, were Sammy, Gage, Jonah, Ben, Bruce, Sung, Kawazoe, Herbert and Chad.

Yells of "Oh, jeez!" and "Wait!" were followed by laughter as Billy and Jason tried to join Troy and Sean on their respective boards. In seconds, with almost everyone watching, Sean and Troy were sliding off their boards into the water with the boys, and the surfboards were popping up into the air. It brought the music to an abrupt halt and everyone around the beach howled laughing.

Scrambling to catch the surfboards, Sean and Troy got 'help' from Billy and Jason. Since Sean, Troy, Billy and Jason weren't managing very well, only slipping off the boards with more giggling and laughter, Lakota, Jeremy, Leo and Gary paddled over to offer assistance. The two gorillas, Leo and Gary, reached down and swept up Jason and Billy onto their boards. Moments later, Lakota and Jeremy held the two surfboards steady for Troy and Sean to climb onto again. At the next fair swell, they all returned to the shore.

Scott and Jimmy ran up to their brothers from Michigan. Scott giggled, "From here, that was too funny." Jimmy went to Gary and held his arms up. The gorilla took the hint and lifted the small boy.

Billy widely grinned, "It was fun too."

Troy smiled, "Thank goodness none of us got hurt."

"It might've helped if we had bungees connecting us to our boards," Sean sniggered.

Swinging his arms around, pointing at Troy's, Sean's and his brothers' crotches, Jason giggled, "Hey, perfect matches!" Softly chortling, Troy and Sean noticed what Jason was referring to; of the four boys, two were uncircumcised and two were circumcised. Desperately trying not to crack up, Troy turned beet red and covered his eyes. Jason giggled, "Wassamatta, pop?"

Billy grinned at the two confused teens, and then shyly explained, "Me and my bros have been around more than a lot of other kids. We've even been filmed. Those movies have been taken and destroyed, thanks to the Clan. Don't be embarrassed, okay?"

From his perch on Gary, Jimmy giggled, "We all got dicks, even the gorillas."

Scott nodded agreement and shared, "We know what we want too."

Raising his blond eyebrows, Sean wondered, "What's that mean, guys?"

Looking up at Troy and then Sean, Jason giggled, "We've been watching you!"

Noticing only confusion on Sean's and Troy's expressions, Billy nudged his younger brother, chuckling, "Let me handle this, doofus!"

He then softly told the two teens, "Yeah, we've been watching a lot of you, all our leaders, and how they act with their kids too. We were forced to do stuff we didn't want, and all you guys know that, but we can see that all you guys really love each other. It shows all the time."

Rapidly blinking, Troy asked, "How old are you, Billy?"

"Eleven, and I know I like boys more than girls."

"Me too," Jason chimed.

Scott and Jimmy chorused, "Us too."

Scrunching his nose, Billy complained, "Ladies smell funny, and they sure don't know how to treat a dick."

"Yeah," Jimmy added, "fingernails!" and shivered in Gary's arm.

Everyone in the small group softly sniggered. Returning to his prior topic, Billy gently smiled, "We want dads, ones that won't want to mess with us, cos they've got each other; ones that can show and teach us how to find and keep real boyfriends. Some of that stuff, we'll learn just by watching you." His smile faded and he firmly reminded, "In another year or so, I'm gonna be sprouting pubes. A year after that, I'm a teenager. I'll want a boyfriend, someone that looks at me like when you two look at each other. Someone that makes me feel all goofy, without touching my dick."

"We want real fathers," Jason seriously offered, "not grumpy old men who only smile when we mess with them or each other. The four of us learned stuff in the wrong order. In two days in the Clan, we're seeing more of the right stuff than we ever saw before. How you guys are the way you are is the big question. I can't wait to learn the answer."

Having been in the same shoes as the boys, Sean easily absorbed all that was said. However, Troy's heart was shredded into five even chunks; one for Sean and one for each of the boys surrounding him. Troy knew the facts about many of the Rimmer rescued kids, but now he felt a deep desire to do something about it again, as he had Wednesday night, when he aimed a phaser at a cretin that deserved to die. Anger, compassion and fear were only the tip of what Troy felt. Without delay, Troy went to Sean and hid his face on his Tiger's shoulder. Already understanding what Troy was feeling, Sean gently rubbed Troy's back. Now that he had the reassurance and safety he needed, Troy quietly sobbed.

For Scott, Jason and Billy, the three boys on the ground, the most remarkable thing was two teenaged boys holding each other so closely, but neither had an erection. They glanced at each other, wordlessly conveying confusion.

From Gary's arm, Jimmy loudly wondered, "Wha's wrong?"

"I think pop's crying," Jason frowned.

Rubbing his Lover's back, Sean assured, "It's okay, guys. Troy needs a minute, that's all."

"Lemme down," Jimmy told Gary. Once on the ground, Jimmy ran to Troy and wrapped his little arms around one of Troy's legs, in an attempt to give a hug. Scott followed Jimmy's lead and embraced Troy's other leg. Jason and Billy moved closer to the group. Sean reached an arm out and pulled Billy up against himself and Troy. Feeling the extra body on one side and a cool breeze from the shore on the other side, Troy lifted his face and guided Jason around to fill that space. Troy didn't realize what his tears were provoking, but Sean and the four boys knew it immediately; they were caring about and for one another.

After a few minutes like this, during which time Prez had already picked up his tricorder, and Keith happily watched his weakly constructed plan fall perfectly into place, Sean playfully asked the four boys, "Who's your daddy?"

Billy, Jason, Scott and Jimmy hollered "You are, dad!"

Troy cracked up at Sean's question and the enthusiastic reply from the boys. His laughter shifted to more tears briefly, but as soon as the boys hugged him tighter again, they quickly dissipated. Lifting his face again and glancing down and around, Troy confirmed, "You really want us for fathers?"

Jimmy, Scott and Jason quickly said yes. Billy smiled, "Ya know, this morning, I think we could've become sons of any of the Core Rimmers. This right here makes it perfect. There are no other choices anymore." He checked with his brothers, "Right guys?" Again, the other three happily agreed.

Wiping his eyes, Troy nodded and then suggested, "Before we make this real and forever, let's have a pre-family, family meeting."

"Yeah," Sean agreed, "you guys need to know us and we need to know about you too."

"Kewl," Jason grinned, already overflowing with enthusiasm.

Titling his head, Billy carefully wondered, "Do you think we'll change our minds?"

Troy gasped, "I really hope not."

Sean explained, "Me and Troy started our relationship with hours of talking. We're just going to have a short chat, to get to know each other. It'll make us closer and a real family in the long run."

Stepping back from Sean, Troy told their security team, "It's kewl, guys. Give us a little time and we'll be back soon."

The gorillas nodded and grinned, and returned to their surfboards. Lakota smiled and Jeremy said, "Very kewl." Watching the new family head toward the house, Lakota and Jeremy decided to take a walk down the beach toward the waterfall.

Noticing Prez was ready, holding the tricorder, Troy smiled, "Keep that nearby, Prez. We just need a few minutes to chat."

Widely smiling, Prez nodded, "Take an upstairs bedroom, dudes." As the group was passing, Keith winked at the two closest boys.

Sean loudly giggled, "I saw that, Keith!" All four boys began giggling.

Snapping his neck looking to and fro, Troy asked, "Saw what?"

"Our boys will tell you when we're alone," Sean giggled. "And then I can foresee four very pink bellies." Jason happened to be nearest and most convenient for Sean to tickle. The nine-year-old yelped and ran up the lanai steps, with his other three brothers following.

Once the new family was indoors, Prez asked Keith, "How'd you know?"

"I didn't really know," Keith admitted. "Like I said, they were with Bruce and Ben. Since they're newbies, I asked them if they were interested in being adopted. When they said yes, I listed each set of available parents, starting with Troy and Sean and ending with them, mentioning that they were completely available and hadn't adopted yet. I also considered the boys' ages. Since Troy and Sean aren't so sure, I thought an eleven-year-old and a nine-year-old could look after the six-year-old and the five-year-old. Troy and Sean get the complete picture. The four boys get two great fathers. Everything else we saw happening was all them interacting." Noticing a twinkle in Prez's blue eyes, Keith excitedly giggled, "I did good?"

Slowly nodding and placing the tricorder down on the table near the mixer, Prez reminded, "Since Archmania, I think we're pretty even again."

"You might even be ahead of me again," Keith cheekily grinned.

Taking Keith's hand and leading the way to the house, Prez said, "Easily rectumfied."

Giggling, Keith asked, "Are you ready for that?"

Prez waited until they were inside and alone to softly answer, "Missionary, with your legs wrapped around my buns would be uncomfortable, but there's other ways I can manage quite easily." Starting to climb the steps, Keith whimpered. Prez grinned, "And this house has a nice big whirlpool tub we can easily fit in afterward."

Keith leered, "Additional incentive wasn't necessary, but since you mentioned it..." He started taking steps two at a time and pulling Prez along with him.

Just returning from a ride with Paul and Ryan, Reyes saw his two dads hop off their boards at the shoreline, drop them on the beach, and race toward the house. Sputtering and trying to hold back his laughter, Reyes caught Ryan widely smiling at him. On the opposite side, Paul attempted to hide his grin and suspiciously glared.

Pushed over the edge, Reyes loudly laughed, "WH-HA-AT?"

Sadly shaking his head, Paul paddled around to his brother. Paul told Ryan, "I think we have a problem, bro."

Nodding, Ryan giggled, "There are several ways to correct this problem." Without warning, both brothers pushed down hard on Reyes' surfboard, tilting it and knocking Reyes off balance. They released the board and it bounced back, throwing Reyes into the water. Reyes got even with Paul by jumping up and onto the back of his board, tossing Paul into the water. Laughing his ass off, Ryan caught a wave and escaped.

Two riderless boards drifted toward the beach while Paul and Reyes playfully dunked and fought each other. Running into deeper water, Jerry Owens flagged down Ryan. When Ryan approached, Jerry giggled, "Is everything okay, bro?"

Nodding, Ryan chuckled, "It's these Rimmers. We've been here about four hours. Twice we saw Prez and Keith go in the house, and they were soon followed by Mike and Derrick. We've witnessed adoptions of nine kids into three families, and there's another adoption of four sure to happen. These Rimmers eat and then have sex, they adopt and then have sex, they play music and go have sex!"

Jerry cracked up. He breathlessly asked, "Do you want to leave?"

"No!" Ryan giggled, and then quickly retracted it, loudly laughing, "YES!" Throwing his arms up, Ryan softly chortled, "Damned if I know. All I do know is that I need to pee."

An unexpected wave knocked Jerry over. Ryan grabbed his board and went to get the other two. Danny Page and Marc Furst rode a wave to shore. Hearing Jerry's hysterical laughter, Danny wondered,

"What's so funny?"

Jerry couldn't respond at all through his laughter. Splashing over in knee deep water, with Jonah following along, Gage answered, "It's our dads."

Jonah smiled, "Two couples of four very close friends who grew up together."

"Oh, that," Danny grinned. Sneaking a few tickles in on Jerry, Danny giggled, "I thought it was something funny." Giggling at Danny's tickle attack, Gage and Jonah hurried away and dove into deeper water before they got tickled.

Marc smirked, "That's cute, not funny." Pausing at Jerry's wide eyes, Marc grinned, "Be careful kid genius, I think it's time for you to get a partner too. Then you'll know the difference between cute and funny."

Even from a few meters away, Danny could tell that Ryan's gears were spinning. Thankfully, Paul and Reyes were body-surfing back to shore. Knowing that there was nothing he could say to any of the three that would make anything easier for them, Danny took hold of Jerry's arm and led him to the beach, rambling, "New lovers are cute. In the case of Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike, you're seeing four teenagers that intimately know each other. Without saying it directly, they're proving what I assumed; they learned everything together. I see four boys that are completely comfortable with each other. I don't need to know more than that. As for your brothers and Reyes, you need to take that same perspective, Jerry. None of us really know what's between them."

Watching Paul, Ryan and Reyes walking together toward the house, Jerry grinned, "Three together though, Danny?"

Danny shrugged, "Difficult, but not impossible. All you might accomplish going forward is making it more difficult. You don't want to do that to Paul or Ryan, do you?"

"Course not," Jerry sighed. "They've just been so happy."

Marc nodded, "We all see that too. Reyes is their best friend in the world, right now. Without our intervention, they made that choice. By calling them boyfriends now, before they're ready, you could impact their decision."

"I still can't get over the idea of a threesome," Jerry grinned.

Marc shrugged, "Were we on the streets for twenty years, or in an orphanage getting sexually abused, and zapped by a Cynthetilife unit? We're not them, Jerry. It's that simple; with Reyes and your bros, and with the Rimmers."

Since their little group of swimmers seemed to be breaking into smaller groups, Ben asked Sammy, "Go for a walk with me?"

Sammy's heart jumped in his chest. He rapidly agreed and nodded.

Although Ben already had positive feedback from Gage and Jonah, Ben had no idea how to ask the question he wanted to ask. They walked out of the water and many paces before Ben turned and smiled at Sammy. Sammy was a little taller than Ben and in a lot better physical shape. Sammy's blond hair and dark green eyes were major attractions too, but Ben found Sammy's entire personality as attractive as anything else he could see. The problem was that Ben had been part of the original eighty-seven sexually abused kids and Sammy showed up the prior Sunday night. Sammy didn't press Ben by asking any questions. They were together and that was enough for both boys. While walking, the boys began sharing their feelings and other observations that had previously been kept very private.

Out in the bay, Gage and Jonah just rode a wave that flipped and tossed them around a little bit. Laughing hysterically, they knelt down in barely a foot of water. Catching his breath, Jonah cheered, "Now that was a wild ride!"

Rapidly nodding, Gage giggled, "Jonah?"

"Yeah?" Jonah widely smiled.

Gage's smile faded slightly, but then he gestured back out at the waves, asking, "Again?"

With a nod of Jonah's head, they got up and ran back out as far they could then dove into an oncoming wave. They went out almost as far as the surfers and watched their right side. When the surfers started paddling into the cresting wave, they waited for the wave to reach them and then swam like crazy. In seconds, they didn't need to paddle and were caught in the water's power. Trying to keep their bodies streamlined, so they could finish the entire ride, they unexpectedly crashed into each other and started tumbling out of control again. Two heads collided. Powerless during the remaining seconds, Gage's left arm and Jonah's right leg scraped the sandy bottom. Moments later, they were in only about a half-meter of water and popped up laughing, "OW!"

Hearing the two boys from his surfboard, KC turned toward them. Seeing their wide smiles, and hearing their giggles, KC chuckled and paddled back out again.

Jonah giggled, "We slammed into each other!"

"Did I hurt you?" Gage sniggered, and inspected his arm.

Shaking his head, Jonah smiled, "Bonking heads wasn't the problem. Your arm looks like hamburger and my leg feels like a palm tree trunk too."

Nodding, Gage grinned, "Time out to check with the nearest doctor."

Standing together, they both hollered, "Reyes!" and waded to the beach.

Out on the lanai, sitting at a table, having sodas and snacks with Paul and Ryan, Reyes stood and looked out at the beach. Watching Jonah limping up the beach with Gage at his side, Reyes sighed. He told Paul and Ryan what was going on and then jumped the lanai railing. Grabbing Prez's tricorder, Reyes ran down the beach. Paul and Ryan hurried after Reyes. Without intending to, Gage and Jonah also got Danny's and Marc's attention. They broke off their conversation with Jerry and hurried to check the two bleeding boys. Soon, Gage and Jonah were surrounded by six others.

Jonah giggled, "Jeez, guys. We're not dying."

"Just give us some Band-aids and we're back to riding the waves," Gage sniggered.

Fully in medic mode, Reyes checked the tricorder readings, telling Jonah, "First we wash the sand out of the wounds, then we scan again, then the topical antibiotics and bandages."

Inspecting Gage's arm with his own tricorder, Marc nodded, "Same here, sand in the scrapes."

Reyes tapped his sub-vocal, ordering, "Alden, transport Jonah and Gage into a shower." Before either boy could say a word, they were standing in one of the second floor bathroom tubs.

Jonah impatiently huffed, "Dammit! We're scraped and bleeding a little bit."

"I know," Gage grumbled. "This is nothin' to be so worried about."

Two wash cloths wafted down from near the ceiling. Alden said, "You'll need those, guys. A word of warning; if you don't clean the scrapes right the first time, Marc or Reyes are talking about doing it again for you."

Jonah gasped, "Shit! I can't see half of what I scraped."

Contorting his neck to see his arm and shoulder, Gage scowled, "Same here, dude."

Blushing, Jonah grinned, "I can be such a wimp too. Reyes will only do what he has to, but I'll be a baby in front of everyone."

Gage's blush was only slightly less than Jonah's. Nodding, Gage admitted, "I wouldn't be much better, if at all."

Turning on the water to warm, Jonah suggested, "Well, we each do what we can, then we can help each other."

"Umm... uh..." Gage stammered, and then thoughtfully hummed.

Facing Gage again, Jonah wondered, "What's wrong?"

Flushing even redder, Gage giggled, "A lot! I like you, Jonah."

"I know you like me," Jonah giggled. "I like you too, which is why we wind up doing stuff together, here and at Archnesia too."

Becoming flustered, Gage emphatically stated, "I like you so much that I want to be with you all the time. It's not like we're not together a lot on and off during the days anyway, but I want more time with you. I've wanted to say that since Archnesia, but couldn't find a way to. But now..."

Jonah waited for Gage to finish before softly asking, "Why now?"

Covering most of his face, except his eyes, Gage giggled, "Because I would love to help you clean your leg, and I'd love for you to help me clean my arm, but if I start touching you, and you start touching me, we're... I'm gonna... it's..." He rolled his eyes at his inability to say what he needed, and abruptly huffed, "We're gonna be in here for a long time."

Not knowing what Gage had tried to say, and wondering if his own orphanage experiences were clouding the issue, Jonah rapidly blinked, which only made Gage stare and giggle louder. Jonah turned around and checked the water temperature, finding it a little cooler than he would normally like, and then switched on the shower. Facing Gage again, Jonah asked, "You like me?"

Gage nodded, "Very much."

Jonah hummed, and then asked, "Like boyfriends like each other?"

"I think so," Gage smiled, "even though I don't know what having a boyfriend is like. When I imagine it, I imagine having fun with you." Bending down to pick up the two wash cloths and conveniently hiding his face, Gage quickly corrected, "Regular fun, like at the pools or the beach, not like sex fun, okay?"

Taking one of the wash cloths, Jonah repeated, "Regular fun. Like best friends."

Gage nodded and smiled, "We're already best friends. What I guess I want is to be there when you need or deserve a hug." Gage enthusiastically giggled, "That idea makes me feel all whacky and dizzy, dude."

Smirking, Jonah giggled, "I make you feel dizzy, huh?"

Nodding, Gage laughed, "Hug me and see for yourself. It happens every time you brush past me. When I fall to the floor of the tub, you'll have to wake me and tell me what happened."

Reaching his arms out, Jonah turned Gage so he could wash the scraped arm. Wobbling unsteadily because he thought Jonah was really going to hug him, Gage audibly huffed in relief that he wasn't hugged and didn't keel over. Jonah cracked up and then so did Gage. Without delay, Jonah soaped up his wash cloth, giggling the promise, "I'm gonna try my best so this don't hurt."

Gage sniggered, "And I'll try not to scream in agony."

After putting the bar of soap down, Jonah worked up a lather then gently laid the wash cloth on Gage's shoulder. With his fingertips, he pulled the bottom edge of the cloth, so it dragged down Gage's arm. He checked, "So far so good?"

"Awesome," Gage smiled.

"Best friends, remember?"

"I wish I had said something before."

"I guess there's always so much going on, neither of us had the chance."

"Do you feel a little scared?"

"Yeah. I know why too."

"Why?"

"Stuff that happened to me at the orphanage."

Gage thoughtfully hummed, "Yeah, my parents didn't give a shit about nothin', especially me."

"Prez and Keith care about you now," Jonah reminded, "your brothers do, and now I do too."

"You've got a real family too."

Jonah giggled, "It's so kewl too; having a big bro and two little bros."

Gage carefully wondered, "Will you tell me what happened to you?"

After a long pause where Gage never stopped looking over his shoulder, Jonah softly admitted, "They took pictures of me, messed with my dick and butt, made me mess with them too."

"My parents would cuss and scream; their friends would come over and they'd cuss and scream. It was crazy. Late at night, I'd hear them fighting in their bedroom too. I don't think they ever had good sex. My dad and pop never do anything like that. When they're not making love, the most we hear is laughter."

"My dad and pop are the same. That's what it should be like, I think."

"Fun?"

"And easy, like all the other stuff we do together."

"This is real easy."

"Yeah. You're not mad about the orphanage?"

"Nope. You didn't like it. It's the same as me; we had to put up with it."

"Reyes, Kaleo and Liki were always saving us younger kids from stuff. They stopped a lot before it happened to us. Instead, it happened to them."

"I heard that from other kids, at home, in Ewa Beach, where no grown-up ever even looks at all the naked kids. Gram and Gramps look in my eyes."

"Like the lawn workers only look when a kid screams, like the kid might be hurt or something. Our grandmas and grandpas are the same, always looking in our eyes. Its weird, in a good way."

Gage grinned, "When you're not looking at my arm, you're looking in my eyes."

Jonah smirked, "You haven't stopped looking at me. Not once did you look down."

"I'm wondering how I can be as careful with your leg as you're being," Gage giggled.

Finished washing Gage's arm, Jonah prompted, "Look down now."

Doing so, and noticing that they both had erections, Gage smiled, "Yeah, so? You did an awesome job. I never flinched or gritted my teeth or nothin'."

Jonah stared deeply into Gage's brown eyes, asking, "That's all you're gonna say?"

Gage shrugged, "We see dozens of dicks every day. Your bone is nicer only because it's yours, my best buddy's."

Jonah squealed, "Really?"

Picking up the other wash cloth, Gage offered, "It's about the same as mine, maybe a tad longer, but mine seems thicker." He then asked, "Is that what you wanted to hear, a comparison?"

Completely surprised, Jonah softly asked, "It's not too big or nothin'?"

"Course not," Gage simply answered, and soaped up the wash cloth. "You hang a little longer than me, but now, there's not too much difference. If you wanna talk big, how about Darren Devault's monster? That thing must hang twenty centimeters, easy. He trims his pubes too, I think."

"He's sixteen," Jonah giggled.

"And you're nine, and I'm eight," Gage reminded. "When we're sixteen, then we can compare dick sizes." Displaying the soapy wash cloth, Gage grinned, "Cover up your dick and put your leg up on the edge of the tub."

Doing so and watching Gage's every move, Jonah smiled,

"That's it, huh?"

Starting to carefully wash the scrapes around Jonah's knee, calf and thigh, Gage shrugged, "Since I like seeing all the guys, and none of the girls are near as cute, I know I must be leaning way to the gay side. Your dick is just as perfect for you as any other guy's dick. Like I said, yours is special to me only because it's yours. If we didn't already like each other, then we'd just be hangin', like the rest of the time. As far as boners go, I've only seen my brothers stiff. We've all seen our dads and pops with chubby dicks, but we can't compare to any teenagers. Based only on that, I think we're about average." Gage stood up and rinsed the wash cloth. Noticing Jonah's slight smile and intense gaze, Gage giggled, "What?"

All Jonah could think of was the sincerity in Gage's words. Between Gage's voice, his beautiful brown eyes and husky body, Jonah knew he was feeling more than friendship. The answers Jonah had been seeking were right in front of him for many days and he didn't even know it. Now he was seeing Gage in a new way, and Jonah liked it. Shaking his head and starting to giggle, Jonah reached over, pushed Gage's stiffy down at the tub floor, causing him to gasp, and released it to watch it bounce up and slap Gage's tummy. It was a game the boys at his orphanage played often enough, and he was curious how Gage might react to it.

Gage laughed, "Two can play that game!" and did the same to Jonah's bone, only he made his head bounce in time to Jonah's wagging dick. They both began laughing. Before Gage could brace himself, Jonah landed a quick kiss on Gage's mouth. Jonah laughed louder at Gage's shocked expression. Gage got Jonah back with a slightly longer kiss, that caused Jonah to stop laughing. Gage warmly smiled, "Boyfriends?"

Jonah nodded, "Best friends, working on becoming boyfriends."

"Let's get out of here, before someone comes looking for us," Gage suggested. When Jonah nodded, Gage reached around him to turn the water off.

Jonah softly giggled in Gage's ear, "Don't hold me too close now."

Once the water was off, Gage slid in close and whispered, "Bed time, I'm going to be right beside you, cuddled up really close." He topped off his promise with a patented Hundser facial caress, and then pushed Jonah's throbber down again and giggled at the bouncing bone. He hurried to open the sliding shower door and get out before Jonah got even. Jonah swatted Gage's butt as he exited the shower. Knowing they had spent an extraordinary amount of time in the tub, they hurried to dry off, but couldn't stop smiling at one another.

Just as they were finishing and almost ready to step out of the bathroom, Jonah asked, "How do you want it to be?"

Tilting his head, Gage wondered, "Like boyfriend stuff?"

"Yeah."

"Anyway you want," Gage shrugged. "If you want to hold my hand, don't even think about not doing it. If you want a hug, or to give me one, we can do that too."

"Really?"

Gage giggled, "You keep asking that! Yes, really!" Seeing Jonah rapidly blinking and grinning, Gage softly explained, "The only reason I haven't come right out and said, I love you, is because I'm not sure about a lot of sex stuff."

Jonah nodded, "I am, but not like this, like us, I mean. This is going to be way different from that."

"Where we're at is totally kewl," Gage assured. "We'll try stuff eventually, ya know, when we decide we want to."

Holding his used towel out, Jonah called, "Hey, Alden? Do we stuff these in the laundry chute?"

The two towels the boys were using vanished before Alden replied, "Not here, guys. I sent them to Ewa Beach, for the housekeepers there to take care of."

Jonah reached for the door knob. Gage reached for Jonah's other hand and took it in his hand. Widely smiling, Jonah admitted, "You're making me crazy."

"Good," Gage grinned, "I'm not alone then."

They stepped out of the bathroom and saw Reyes climbing the staircase. He stopped, saw them holding hands, and smiled, "I was just coming up to see if you were okay. I guess the question is redundant."

Jonah smirked, "We're good, bro; best friends and then some."

Gage nodded, "We're on the same page."

Reyes admitted, "I don't know what's more surprising."

Walking down the stairs with Gage, Jonah told Reyes, "Gage figured it out already, and he don't care about that. He likes me for me."

It took Gage a moment or two to figure out what Jonah was referring to. Gage smirked, "Your dick is fine, Jonah. So what if it hangs long." Lifting their clasped hands, Gage reminded, "This is all I want, to be with you, okay?" He told Reyes, "That's another reason for me to hate those orphanage bastards."

Glancing at Gage, Jonah smiled, "You made me really happy about so much stuff. Remember, those orphanage bastards are dead already. Don't waste your time hating them."

Nodding and smiling, Reyes turned around and went down the last few steps then started for the kitchen, where Marc was waiting with a medi-kit.

Outdoors, Ben and Sammy had run out of sand and were carefully climbing rocks, still heading toward the waterfall. Now and then a gust of wind would blow mist onto them and the rocks they were on. When they saw that they couldn't safely go any further, they began giggling at the predicament they had gotten themselves into. Sammy made the first move with a hug, much to Ben's pleasant surprise. They sat down on smoother rocks and started chatting about their pasts in more detail than they ever had before. Admitting things he didn't want to really say, Ben shed tears. Sammy shushed Ben and wiped away some tears. Ben held Sammy's hand against his face. They locked eyes. A few tender kisses were shared. Neither asked questions. They simply knew where they now were; a young couple falling in love for the first time. Seeing Drew's and Corey's security, Chuck and Conner approaching, Ben and Sammy stood and started back to the beach. When asked what they were doing, they simply answered they had attempted to get to the waterfall, but couldn't climb the last bit of the way to complete the trip.

In the master bathroom, Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike lounged in the big whirlpool tub. Prez suggested, "Since we've got way more than a houseful, we're all spending the night in the master bedroom?" Keith and Derrick nodded and agreed. Signaling his agreement, Mike lifted Prez's foot and sucked on his big toe. Prez cackled, "Stop that! We'll wind up back on the bed again!"

While Keith and Derrick sniggered, Mike grinned, "You asked a silly question, so I thought I'd remind you how we started sucking toes. It was your doing, sex-machine."

Keith giggled, "I remember that day."

"You should," Derrick smiled, "I never heard you laugh so hard."

Massaging Prez's left foot, Mike teased Keith, "You got the hiccups, and couldn't stop hiccuping most of the afternoon."

Keith grinned, "Derrick straddled my chest and fed me his bone. You held my leg still so Prez could make me crazier without getting kicked in the face. The funniest part was when we got back home. My folks were there; I'd hiccup and all four of us busted up laughing. They must've thought we were insane."

"Now that I think about it, the scariest part was John was laughing as hard as we were," Prez recalled.

Keith chuckled, "We were ten, and John was six. He couldn't have known."

In all their minds, John giggled, 'I didn't know then, but I do now! Thanks for that little lesson. We'll be late getting back to the party, by the way.'

'Jo-ohn!' Stephen shrieked in all four minds, 'Don't start that now! Can we finish giving these Founders and newbies the tour first?'

The last thing Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike heard was John's laughter fading away.

Releasing Prez's foot, Mike sighed, "That turned my chubby into shriveled meat."

Derrick nodded, "Even though we were there too, there's something about knowing our little brothers are going to mess around that really dampens the mood."

Standing in the tub, Keith nodded agreement, saying, "Ya know what's weird? I want to rehearse now."

"We're backwards today," Prez realized as he pulled the drain and stood. "We normally jam first then make love."

Derrick stood and reached for towels then passed them around, saying, "Let's play some stuff that will keep the interest of our fellow musicians."

"Yeah," Mike chuckled, "I get the impression KC and Joey would really enjoy something a little more challenging, with great vocals and intricate music."

Drying his back, Keith smiled, "I can think of a dozen songs like that."

Evilly grinning while drying Keith's chest, belly and naughty bits, Prez chortled, "I get to start us out then?"

Almost simultaneously, Keith, Derrick and Mike nodded, "Karn Evil 9."

Beginning to build the set list, the four boys hurried to dry one another off, and then walked out of the master bathroom and bedroom. Coming around the hallway with their four soon-to-be-sons, Sean and Troy knowingly grinned at their fellow Core Rimmers, who still had damp hair. Troy asked, "Ready to do more adoptions, Prez?"

Widely smiling, Prez locked eyes with Troy, nodding, "Sure, and then we'll play for our guests again before dinner."

Keith glanced at the four St. Joseph boys, asking, "You guys are all set?"

All four nodded and Jason answered, "Sean and Troy are the best possible dads for us." He then followed his brothers down the stairs.

Five-year-old Jimmy Carr, the youngest of the new family, abruptly cheered, "I can't wait!"

Sean explained, "They know as much about me and Troy as we shared with you dudes. We know more about them too." He smirked, "And we know what you did too, Keith." All six Core Rimmers softly chortled. Giving Keith a quick hug, Sean whispered, "Thanks, bro. They really weren't sure of anything more than wanting to be adopted as a group. We finished up with tickle torturing all four of 'em, for scheming."

Patting Sean on the back, Keith grinned, "It was a guess, really. All four were foster brothers before they got here. They knew they wanted to stay together and be adopted, but weren't sure by whom. Now they're happy and so are you."

"Everything's very kewl, bros," Troy happily shared. "Happy is a poor description of what we feel. When we learned what went on, me and Sean tickled them to tears." On the way downstairs, Troy chuckled, "Speaking of learning things, I've learned that I can be naked and not too self-conscious at Archmania, but can we perform with shorts on this time?"

Sean cracked up. Derrick, Keith, Mike and Prez pretended to be disappointed and reluctantly agreed. They went into the living room to put their boardies on. Finding his shower wrap, Prez quickly fastened the Velcro. Looking through the dining room and into the kitchen, they saw Gage and Jonah sitting on the counter, with Marc and Reyes fussing over the two boys. Keith loudly asked, "What happened?"

Marc glanced over, grinning, "First these two mini-Rimmers got all banged up body-surfing."

Reyes nodded, "Then we discover that they did more than clean the scrapes, like they were told to do." Gage and Jonah grinned at one another, subconsciously calling for their virtual halos to appear and brightly shine.

Hurrying into the kitchen while still pulling their drawers up, Keith, Derrick, Mike and Prez carefully looked over their sons. Seeing the scrapes and bruises, Keith smirked, "I warned you about ocean waves."

"They're more than fine, Keith," Reyes assured with a knowing grin.

Gage glanced at his dads, smiling, "Remember at Archmania, I told you how I was starting to feel about Jonah? Well, Reyes had us transported up into a tub. I had to say something to Jonah."

Watching his fathers, Jonah rapidly nodded and smiled, "I'm really glad Gage did too. All the worrying I did, about someone liking me for the right reasons, got washed down the drain."

Proud of both boys, Mike loudly cheered, "Awesome!"

"This almost makes us in-laws," Keith chuckled.

Derrick suspiciously squinted then confronted Gage, widely smiling, "And exactly what are your intentions, young man?" Giggling insanely, Gage turned ten shades of red. Jonah lost it and cracked up. Walking through the dining room with their boys, Troy, Sean and all four boys heard Derrick and all six began loudly laughing.

Prez grinned at the new family, wondering, "Was it that funny?"

Sean giggled, "Could be, someday."

Blushing, Jimmy Carr giggled, "I think Richie's the cutest boy here."

"Un-uh," Scott Deaver cackled, "it's Dillon, by a long shot."

Jason smirked, "You're both wrong. Leo's got all the right stuff."

Cheekily grinning, Billy joked, "Tomorrow, I get to go back to base and get myself one or two of the quadruple Rs." Everybody in the kitchen cracked up.

"Well, those secrets lasted about twenty minutes," Troy helplessly giggled.

Picking up the tricorder off the counter, Prez spun around to face the newest Rimmer family. He set the machine up, and then said, "At last, Troy Faris and Sean Moorhead have been captured to fully immerse themselves in our shared delirium." Billy held onto Troy and looked up with adoring eyes. Similarly, Jason latched on to Sean, and the remaining two boys squeezed in to hold onto a brother and a father. While Prez got the kids adopted, Derrick told Reyes about the plan to play more music for their guests. Reyes helped Jonah off the counter and Marc helped Gage get down to the floor. As soon as Prez said, "It's official," the room broke out in cheers and applause.

"Time to go play loudly," Billy prompted Troy, and then reached up on tip-toes to plant a kiss on his pop's cheek.

Jason shared, "Pop's gonna teach me and Billy to play guitar."

"Kewl," Jonah cheered, "my pop's teachin' me too."

Gage smiled, "My dad's teachin' me to play keys, Jase."

Sean giggled, "Platinum Habits gives birth to Silver Habits."

So that he wouldn't be the only one on the lanai totally nude, Reyes went to put his boardies on. During that minute or two, all the boys were welcomed into the family, and Gage and Jonah were praised for becoming the first of the sons to start pairing off as a couple. When Reyes returned to the room, the entire group started walking out the doorway. Sean kissed Troy, and then led their sons, Marc, Gage and Jonah down to the lawn. Marc ran directly down to the beach to wave Danny and KC back to shore. The six members of Platinum Habits went directly to their instruments. Drew and Corey manned the PA system.

Keith and Troy soon began playing rapid arpeggios on their keyboards, introducing Karl Evil 9. Prez stepped forward to sing.

Welcome back my friends to the show that never ends

We're so glad you could attend

Come inside! Come inside!

There behind the glass is a real blade of grass

be careful as you pass.

Move along! Move along!

Come inside, the show's about to start guaranteed to blow your head apart

Rest assured you'll get your money's worth

The greatest show in Heaven, Hell or Earth.

You've got to see the show, it's a dynamo.

You've got to see the show, it's rock and roll

Oh, right before your eyes we pull laughter from the skies

And he laughs until he cries then he dies then he dies

Come inside the shows about to start

Guaranteed to blow your head apart

You gotta see the show

It's a dynamo

You gotta see the show

It's rock and roll, oh...

The band played the entire musical interlude flawlessly; Keith and Troy on keyboards, Derrick and Reyes on drums, Mike on electric guitar, and Prez playing electric bass. Drew had the volume so loud that security gorillas were transported up onto the cliffs and the other mostly naked security teams had ordered their rifles to protect the beach front. All those that had been on the beach or in the bay ran toward the house. Off to the side, Gage and Jonah were sharing news of their new relationship with their brothers and friends. That's when Sammy and Ben shared their good news too. During an incredible display of perfectly synchronized drumming by Derrick and Reyes, with no other music playing, Prez came in to sing the second half of the song.

Soon the Gypsy Queen in a glaze of Vaseline

Will perform on guillotine

What a scene! What a scene!

Next upon the stand will you please extend a hand to Alexander's Ragtime Band, Dixieland, Dixieland

Roll up! Roll up! Roll up!

See the show!

Performing on a stool we've a sight to make you drool

Seven virgins and a mule

Keep it cool. Keep it cool.

We would like it to be known the exhibits that were shown were exclusively our own,

All our own. All our own.

Come and see the show! Come and see the show! Come and see the show!

See the show!

The audience cheered and hollered for more. Holding down notes on the keyboard before him, while Troy moved to pick up his guitar, Keith giggled, "I'd like you all to note our unofficial Rimmer theme song. Let us know if it fits." Derrick began keeping a rhythm that would lead in nicely to the upcoming song.

Displaying his hands in the common heavy metal fashion, with the index finger and pinky protruding, Mike prompted "Show me your horns, dudes!" Kids around the beach mimicked Mike's horns.

Keith began filling in the strings parts. Bouncing his eyebrows, Troy smiled, "This tune is titled, Knocking At Your Back Door." Laughter was barely heard and their audience began falling about the lawn and beach. Prez came in pounding on his bass. In seconds, the whole band joined in, and soon Keith was singing the provocative lyrics.

With electronic drums and amplified acoustic drums going simultaneously, the song's beat thumped into the bodies of the bouncing audience, many of whom were still proudly displaying their horns. Dashing once again for the edge of the lanai, KC and Joey watched the drummers and guitarists. During the choruses, all six boys sang. When Keith sang, "knocking at your back door," Mike, Troy and Prez spun around to shake and wiggle their tushes for the audience. This time, with the music so loud, Mike had no chance of talking to KC. Instead, Mike watched everything going on around him and never once looked at his guitar's neck, even during his guitar solo.

When the song ended, Derrick asked the enthusiastic audience, "What do you think, is that our theme song?" Overwhelming affirmations were shouted from the eighty males in the audience.

Troy knelt down to adjust his effects pedal. KC wondered, "What're you doing, dude?"

"Making this Stratocaster sound like an acoustic twelve-string for the next song," Troy answered. "It's not my effects unit from the Ewa Beach auditorium, so a minor EQ tweak needs to be done. It sounded real thin and tinny the last time."

KC asked, "And what is the next song?"

Mike pointed at the cliffs and then across the bay, where several boats were seen moving into view. Troy stood and checked his tempo with Derrick and Reyes, then started playing the introduction to Over The Hills And Far Away. The adjustments Troy had done made the Stratocaster sound exactly like a twelve-string acoustic. KC nodded and flashed Troy a thumbs up gesture. Soon, Mike was playing along with Troy. Away from the keyboards and standing with Prez, Troy and Mike, Keith sang the lead vocals. Bass and drums came in with Mike's switch to power chords. Near the end of the song, Keith moved back to the keyboards to help complete the song.

Reyes moved over to the congas and hand percussion, announcing, "I think this next song is appropriate for Danny and Marc. It's titled, Reelin' In The Years." Jerry, Joey and KC cracked up. Out on lounge chairs, Danny and Marc smirked at each other then glared at Reyes, making hand motions that they could break him into two. Reyes grinned and bounced his eyebrows. Mike played the opening licks and the whole band joined in. Derrick sang the lead vocals. The band made playing the song seem effortless. They mostly danced and bopped along, occasionally talking, and then everyone sang the chorus backup vocals, then they returned to dancing and chatting until the next chorus. During the guitar solos in the middle and end of the song, Troy and Mike played harmonized guitar licks in exact synchronization.

At the end of the song, while still clapping, KC asked, "How long did it take you dudes to learn that tune?"

Prez answered, "We learned six Steely Dan tunes that day, so about an hour, maybe an hour-and-a-half."

Putting his guitar down and moving to the keyboards on the right side of the lanai, Troy nodded, "Once we got the sections and parts worked out, about eight times we played it from beginning to end."

From start to end, the song lasted four minutes and thirty-seven seconds. Calculating that eight full band rehearsals of the song must've taken them about forty minutes, KC was stunned. KC walked over to Joey and lifted his young android brother. Carrying Joey over around the side of the house, KC and Joey obviously had something to discuss.

Derrick announced, "This next tune is for many of the dudes here today. I won't embarrass anyone directly, you know who you are. The song's titled, Love Is All Around. Prez and Mike are gonna sing lead vocals." He counted off and the band started together, with Mike and Prez sharing a single microphone. Out on the lawn, several couples slow danced, among them were AJ and Jerry, Drew and Corey, Chuck and Conner, Kaleo and Tory, Ben and Sammy, and Gage and Jonah. As usual, Sean didn't need a partner to want to dance. He danced alone at first, until Billy tapped his dad's shoulder, and then Sean showed Billy how to dance. Troy widely smiled at his sexy lover and new son. At the final verse, all six band members sang.

Over the applause, Marc and Danny shouted, "Beautiful song,

guys."

Troy put his guitar down and moved over to the right side keyboards. Mike announced, "This next song is another sweet slow dance tune, with a splash of funk and soul. It's called That's The Way Of The World. Reyes will do the honors, with Keith and Troy doing harmony vocals, and the rest of us backing them up."

Again, the lawn and beach were filled with slow dancers, with some of the youngest boys shaking their bottoms around. Jimmy Carr danced with Richie. Scott Deaver danced with Dillon. Jason tapped Leo's shoulder and enticed him to dance. Still teaching Billy how to dance, Sean noticed his youngest sons were already making their moves. Keith's security guard, Justin Fletcher moved nearer to Chris Watkins and started dancing. KC and Joey ran around the side of the house and planted themselves in the middle of the lawn, directly behind Drew and Corey, asking questions about the mixing methods they used.

The band played two more songs, in rapid succession, and without introduction; Play That Funky Music, with Troy playing rhythm guitar and handling the lead vocals, and followed that up with Bohemian Rhapsody. For the final song, all six band members stepped up to their microphones, sang a chord and then sang as one;

Is this the real life?

Is this just fantasy?

Caught in a landslide,

No escape from reality.

Open your eyes,

Look up to the skies and see,
I'm just a poor boy, I need no sympathy,
Because I'm easy come, easy go,
Little high, little low,
Any way the wind blows doesn't really matter to me, to me.

Keith took over lead vocals and played piano while the other five filled in music and harmony vocals.

Mama, just killed a man,
Put a gun against his head,
Pulled my trigger, now he's dead.
Mama, life had just begun,
But now I've gone and thrown it all away.
Mama, ooh,
Didn't mean to make you cry,
If I'm not back again this time tomorrow,
Carry on, carry on as if nothing really matters.

Too late, my time has come,
Sends shivers down my spine,

Body's aching all the time.

Goodbye, everybody, I've got to go,

Gotta leave you all behind and face the truth.

Mama, ooh (any way the wind blows),

I don't wanna die,

I sometimes wish I'd never been born at all

Mike wailed the guitar solo, seemingly putting effort behind it, but again, he concentrated on the audience, never looking at the neck or fretboard. Afterward, Keith sang the next section, with background vocal help from his band-mates.

I see a little silhouetto of a man,

Scaramouche, Scaramouche, will you do the Fandango?

Thunderbolt and lightning,

Very, very frightening me.

(Galileo) Galileo.

(Galileo) Galileo,

Galileo Figaro

Magnifico.

I'm just a poor boy and nobody loves me.

He's just a poor boy from a poor family,
Spare him his life from this monstrosity.

Easy come, easy go, will you let me go.

Bismillah! No, we will not let you go.

(Let him go!) Bismillah! We will not let you go.

(Let him go!) Bismillah! We will not let you go.

(Let me go) Will not let you go.

(Let me go) Will not let you go.

(Let me go) Ah.

No, no, no, no, no, no, no.

(Oh, mama mia, mama mia) Mama mia, let me go.

Beelzebub has a devil put aside for me, for me, for me.

The band rocked out the segue into the last sections.

So you think you can stone me and spit in my eye.

So you think you can love me and leave me to die.

Oh, baby, can't do this to me, baby,

Just gotta get out, just gotta get right outta here.

Once again, the music slowed and became more mellow. In perfect harmony, Keith and Troy sang the last verse.

Nothing really matters,

Anyone can see,

Nothing really matters,

Nothing really matters to me.

Any way the wind blows.

To loud applause, the band members stepped away from their instruments or put them down. At the edge of the lanai, they held hands and bowed for their audience. Once they stood up again, Prez hollered, "Dinner time!" and everyone came rushing toward the house. Laughing, the six band members got inside first and blocked the food replicator.

Questions about who wanted what were immediately answered and the replicated food was passed out; two large cheese pizzas, one large pepperoni and sausage pizza, and another with the works; a platter of cheeseburgers, and another platter of hot dogs; two three-foot long sub sandwiches, a tray of barbecued ribs, a bowl of mashed potatoes and a half-gallon pitcher of brown gravy, and large bowls of macaroni salad and cole slaw made up the first course. John, Stephen, Frankie and Wade transported into the house in time for the evening meal. Of course, with a grand total of eighty-eight present in the house and outside, all that was eaten and more was prepared as needed.

With Reyes, Paul and Ryan, sitting outside on the lanai, Joey excitedly gushed about the great songs the band had played that day. Not one of them had Time Touched ever tried to play, but Platinum Habits played them all marvelously. Inside, at the kitchen table with KC, Troy, Prez, Keith, Mike and Derrick explained some of the progressions and techniques used to learn and master the songs.

Two things in particular grabbed KC's attention; the vocals and Mike's sweep picking technique. Mike simply told KC, "Sweep picking means you're raking your guitar pick down the strings and maybe back up again. You can't use regular alternating up-down picking. If you need to, then play the notes necessary on a single string before sweeping down to grab those next notes on the adjacent string. You can't be picking in an upward motion when you're needing to go down. Modify your picking technique to adjust to all down strokes until it's time to sweep back up again, and then it's all up strokes."

"As for the vocals," Keith explained, "a lot of what we do comes from perfect pitch. We know our vocal ranges and simply hear what's on the record as we reproduce it."

KC grinned, "I've heard of perfect pitch, but I'm not sure what that means exactly."

"Colors and flavors," Prez smiled.

"Every instrument has its own timbre or flavor," Troy offered, "but every instrument or voice is still singing the same notes. Reyes sings his high 'C' and it's about an octave higher than Derrick, Keith and I, about two octaves higher than Mike or Prez. See the notes as hues of colors; darker colors are the low bass tones; middle range colors are the two octaves centered on middle 'C'; the brighter colors are the octaves above there, getting closer to white and shiny."

"Shiny," Mike giggled, "yeah, I like that."

Noticing that KC was trying to understand, Derrick tried; "Okay, the lowest tones, like the boom of a bass drum, timpani, tubas and basses are close to black – the very darkest browns, reds, blues, greens and violets. Start to move into the piano keyboard and they get just a little less dark. With every octave higher, imagine the notes getting just a touch brighter. The very highest notes of the piano, cymbal bell taps, violins, piccolos are all the bright colors."

Mike said, "Like a baritone sax blowing a low 'F sharp' would sound a lot like a distorted electric guitar playing a low 'E', with a fuzz box almost cranked. The timbre is really close, but knowing the difference is the flavor of that tone." He checked, "Getting it, KC?"

"Almost," KC chuckled. "I can promise you, I'll be sharing a lot of this with our band. Don't be surprised to find your music classes filling up."

Prez smiled, "Perfect pitch is one of those things folks say is impossible to learn. That's a bunch o' bull. If that were really the case, then no one could ever listen to a song and learn that song. Just start to see the colors of notes you're playing; feel the difference between a major chord, a minor chord, an augmented chord and a diminished chord; taste the difference between a plucked upright bass and an electric bass, or in your case, a six-string acoustic guitar and an electric guitar in its various amplified states, from clean to crunchy to completely over-driven distortion." He then glanced around the table suggesting, "Let's sing a C major seventh."

Getting nods, Prez sang the low 'C', Mike added the 'E', Derrick added the 'G', Troy sang the 'B' and Keith put the 'C' on top.

Wiping his mouth, KC said, "Wait just a second here," and then got up from the table, hurried to the piano in the living room and played a C major seventh chord. He shouted, "Holy shit!" and the five members of Platinum Habits around the table softly sniggered. Knowing where KC was coming from, because he wasn't a musician,

Sean thought it was hysterical and busted up laughing. Returning to the table and his dinner, KC smirked, "You dudes were maybe a tenth of a tone off from a tuned piano. That's nothing short of completely remarkable."

Keith chuckled, "Anyone can do it, with practice. You tune your guitar to five tones; E, A, D, G, B. Those five colors should be the first you'll see, clear as day, every time you hear them."

"There are twelve repeating tones in the chromatic scale," Derrick explained, "get the five learned and there are seven left. Then it's simply a matter of making the colors darker or lighter."

Trying to wrap his android brain around the concepts, KC muttered, "So violet, blue, red, green, yellow... umm, twelve unique colors?"

"They start to mix and fade," Troy explained. "Ask yourself, is gold more yellow, or more orange? It depends on the shade and lighting, right? Violet is a mix of blue and red. Orange is a mix of yellow and red. It's not something you can completely define, like an artist mixes paints, but you can start to see colors. For instance, to me, when I hear an F sharp, it's shades of red, from dark red to a red-tinged white, which is brighter than pink. Pink to me is the F sharp an octave-and-a-half above middle C. There are still much lighter shades of red."

Prez said, "Exactly what color each of us sees isn't important. The distinction is what is important."

"Take Eddie Van Halen's guitar playing," Mike suggested. "We guitar players hear most tunes in a key of E really easy, but then Eddie plays and we're like, what the fuck, that's a D or a D sharp, because Eddie almost always tunes down a half-step or a whole-step. At first, it throws us off, until we figure out or learn that's what Eddie's doing. From there, it's easy, tune all the strings down a bit."

Keith smiled, "This will be one of our lessons, in the ear training classes. Relative pitch, figuring out one tone after another is usually the first step, like when you learn a solo or a melody for the first time. Those first times are rough; hunt and peck, until you start to make the mental connections. A perfect fifth always sounds like a perfect fifth."

"You're losing me," KC admitted.

"Then you need to learn theory," Troy smiled. "It's not so important until you work out songs with other musicians. Instead of showing someone what you mean, just say, it's not a major third away, it's a minor third away. A few words is quicker and easier than showing." Troy sang a major third interval, and then Keith sang a minor third interval.

Prez said, "Now extend that minor third an octave. There's no such thing as a tenth interval, but there is the sharp ninth, which is the same thing." Prez sang a tone and then Derrick sang the tone a sharp ninth above Prez's tone.

At KC's expression, Mike grinned, "We'll get into all that in school, in detail. And the great thing is, there will be no passing or failing. It might take some kids longer to learn, and they want to learn it, so they'll retake the relative pitch class before taking the perfect pitch class."

Derrick said, "The basic flow will be music appreciation, for those that just enjoy listening to music. Then, for those that want to learn an instrument, there will be lessons on the instrument and music theory classes. Those beginner musicians that are able and willing can then take the relative pitch class, and then the perfect pitch class. As bands begin to form from the intermediate musicians, we'll have special classes with them that tie all the knowledge together."

KC smiled. "That sounds kewl. 'Skunk' Baxter told me that I'd really need to learn the theory before I could consider myself a real musician. Dilly hooked us up using one of his time-loop thingies when we were setting up the band."

"Excellent!" Mike cheered. "Here's the deal, KC; you can play an instrument and play it well, copying what other people do, as far as your physical ability will allow you to play. Understanding theory, even just a little bit, means you can use what you've been playing to be a unique artist of your own. You can use all that knowledge and experience to play your own solos, develop your own melodies, put a chord progression to the melody, and then make decisions about how the song will be arranged, and with what instruments."

Keith nodded, "For us, playing covers of other artists' music is fun. We're learning so much about how a song is formed, how it's arranged and even a little bit about the techie side, like what effects might be needed to pull it all off. During Bohemian Rhapsody, Drew and Corey were out there at the PA, applying a chorus and a phase shift to our vocals, so we sounded exactly like the record. What the pros do, we learn from, and then turn around to play our own music. I might come in with a melody and chord progression, Prez might make a suggestion, so that he can play a kewl bass part, that Mike can then add a counterpoint harmony to. Any of the six of us can do those things I mentioned. The next thing we know, we're done jamming and looking around with wide smiles, asking, was that really kewl or what?"

"Just wait until Timmy comes to class!" KC giggled. "His lessons were from Jimi Hendrix, and I think the little rat was given some lefty secrets that he refuses to share!"

Keith grinned and rolled his eyes. Mike and Derrick cracked up. Troy chuckled, "But can Timmy develop a chord progression and a melody, or can he just imitate a guitar solo? That's the difference between an intermediate player and an advanced artist. I've read that Paul McCartney only knows the basics of music theory, but look what the man has done in his career; he's cut literally dozens of hit records of songs that he's written. Knowing the basics and having a good ear, Sir Paul does that."

Prez added, "Being a bass player, I've read articles about him. He considers himself only a fair player, but every bass player studies what he's done. That's proof that a little knowledge goes a long way. Even back in the sixties, he was writing songs using simple chord progressions in ways very few others were, and turning them into gold records. We'll play more advanced songs simply for the knowledge and experience we get doing so, but take 'Eleanor Rigby' for instance; Paul played that first with only his acoustic guitar. Then their producer, George Martin, suggested, 'What about a string quartet?' And another hit record climbs the charts."

KC grinned, "If I named a tune, that you don't know and have never played before, could you show me how you approach learning it?" All five heads of the Platinum Habits band members nodded. KC suggested, "I'll stick with Sir Paul. How about 'Band On The Run'?"

Troy sang, "Stuck inside these four walls, sent inside forever."

Keith said, "It's the key of D major."

"I think it changes keys later," Mike said, and then told Troy, "Sing the second half, dude."

Troy sang, "Well, the rain exploded with a mighty crash as I fell into the sun."

"It sounds very C major," Derrick offered. Prez, Keith and Mike agreed.

KC giggled, "You've never played this song before?"

"Never even tried," Keith assured. Mike, Derrick and Troy all echoed Keith's words.

Prez honestly said, "I played the bass part once, along with the radio, years ago."

"Good enough," KC giggled. "Go play it."

They all got up and went outside. The amps were still powered on, so Prez went to check the PA system. It was powered up, only Drew and Corey had turned the faders down. Prez turned the faders back up. He then checked the power amps to the speakers and gave them half power. Keith was already adjusting his synthesizer for the song.

Eating dinner out on the dining room side of the lanai, with Paul, Ryan and Reyes, Joey wondered, "Whad's goin' on, Casey?"

KC grinned, "I gave them a new song to learn, so I could watch them." Opening his eyes wide, Joey ran over.

Up on the lanai, Mike had already figured out the opening guitar licks and well into the first verse. Troy strummed along with Mike, zeroing in on the chord progression as they went. Keith already had the synthesized keyboard part. On the lawn directly before the lanai, KC and Joey watched and learned.

Prez went up the lanai steps to join his bandmates. With his bass guitar hanging off his shoulders, Prez prompted, "Just the intro into the first verse?" Everyone nodded and Derrick counted off the tempo. They began playing only that section, with Troy singing the lead vocals, and Keith singing harmony vocals. Keith finished the section with the synthesizer part. They stopped playing.

Mike started playing the music leading into the second verse, with Troy, Prez, Derrick and Keith joining in. What was most startling to KC and Joey was the band was working out the tune's sections at almost full tempo. Keith asked, "Ready to give verse two a shot?" Heads nodded and vocal affirmations traveled around. Derrick counted off and the band played only that section. Again, Troy sang lead vocals and Keith backed him up. Troy and Keith sang, "If we ever get out of here," and the band played exactly three more beats then stopped.

At the pause, Keith shared, "That section modulates from D to A minor. It's a cute trick, since the prior section is in D major and the next section is in C major, Paul's using the D major and A minor chords to prepare the listener for the key change."

Troy led the way into the next section with his Stratocaster simulating a twelve-string acoustic guitar and strumming. He kept on going, sang the lead vocals, and the others joined to provide him the remainder of background music. At the end of the third verse, they stopped playing again. Troy said, "The next two verses are very much the same. It's only the very end left." He strummed his guitar and sang, "And the county judge, who held a grudge, will search for evermore." The band played just that little section twice more and then they completed the song, with Troy singing, "for the band on the run, band on the run, band on the run, band on the run."

It took Platinum Habits a little more than ten minutes to work out the song, KC noticed. Derrick asked, "Ready to give it a go?" All the others agreed, so he counted out the tempo again, and they started from the beginning, at full tempo, all together and completely in sync. They played the whole song, but weren't completely satisfied with two segue sections that lasted all of two bars each. As a band, they rehearsed those two sections. Then they played the entire song again, from beginning to end, perfectly. By this time, Reyes, Paul and Ryan were standing with Joey and KC.

Noticing KC's defeated expression, Reyes giggled, "You didn't dare them, did you?"

Shaking his head, KC chuckled, "Just a challenge to work out a song they hadn't ever played before." He showed Reyes his wristwatch and cackled, "They learned it all in just under twenty-five minutes!"

Joey giggled, "Id wouwda dakin' Dime Douched ad weast dwo ow dhwee houws do weawn dhad song!"

"And we'd still run through it a few dozen more times before ever performing it live!" KC laughed.

The band were putting down their instruments. Closest to the stairs, Keith walked down the steps to KC, smiling, "That's what a little knowledge and being familiar with the song does."

Prez nodded, "About four years ago, it would've taken us hours too. In those years, our ears have gotten better. That's what it's all about, KC; hearing and having the physical ability with the technique to reproduce what you're hearing."

Grabbing Troy around the chest and swinging him around, Mike chuckled, "Then this kid from New Jersey showed up, walking the walk and talking the talk. Every time either Keith or I challenge Troy, he rises to the occasion." Blushing and giggling, Troy let himself flail around like a rag doll while being manhandled by Mike. Nearby, Sean and Billy cracked up.

Nodding, Derrick gestured to Reyes, explaining, "Completing our band, Reyes gets his memories restored and brings a whole previous life of percussion experience along. He came back from South Carolina wanting an electronic drum set, so I got him one."

Leaning over and tickling Joey, Reyes grinned, "Guess where that idea came from?"

"Unca Dahnny?" Joey giggled. Reyes leaned over, hoisted Joey over his shoulder and started towards the bay. Joey loudly cackled, "WEYES!"

"You're a twerp, Joey," Reyes giggled.

"Bud I'm you'we dwewp!" Joey laughed.

Splashing into the surf, Reyes nodded, "We've gedding wed."

Joey became absolutely hysterical. The last thing those on the beach heard before he and Reyes submerged was Joey hollering "Weyes is dalkin' wike me!"

Coming outside and seeing his boy being carried under water, Jerry Owens grinned, "What's going on?"

KC smiled, "Reyes learned that Joey really is a twerp, and how to speak like Joey."

Prez grinned, "By any chance, does Joey's monster cock act as a floatation device?"

Staring up at Prez like he'd really gone insane, Jerry saw him wink and then cracked up.

Pushing Jerry over the edge, Derrick tapped his sub-vocal, ordering, "Awden, dwanspowd Weyes and Joey oud ovej dhe bay fow a weaw spwashdown."

Seconds later, Reyes and Joey emerged about twenty feet above and far out over the bay. Hugging Reyes, Joey waved at his hysterical father, screaming "Hi Dahdy!"

In groups, the other boys, personal security gorillas, teens and tweens left the house and returned to the beach. Reyes and Joey were still periodically appearing above the bay and splashing down. Everyone noticed, but no one said a word about that. Finding Jerry on his ass in the sand, wheezing and hiccuping, Danny smirked, "Okay, what did you Rimmers do this time?"

Prez shrugged and innocently batted his eyelids. Derrick ordered that 'Weyes' and Joey be 'dwanspowded' to the beach. Once they appeared, Keith changed the subject by asking, "Is there any pizza left?" Hanging his head onto his right palm, Marc softly sniggered.

Danny smiled, "Okay, I was thinking, it's about midnight Eastern Time, so I think it's best we say goodbye, before any other damage is done." Reyes gave Joey a kiss on the cheek and got one in return then put Joey down.

Crossing his eyes, Prez turned to Danny, assuring, "No damage done here. The funny farm is always like this."

Danny sputtered and wrapped Prez in a warm embrace, giggling, "You guys were damaged when we got here. We'll leave well enough alone."

For the next few minutes, the AI Division and the Core Rimmers said their farewells. Reyes got sandwiched between Paul and Ryan again. This time tender kisses on the mouth were shared. Reyes promised that the next day wouldn't be terribly busy and suggested his two friends come visit the Ewa Beach base.

Derrick said goodbye to Paul and Ryan, adding, "We'll just have comm-badges to pass out and new kids to show around. We don't expect it to be too busy at all."

"Comparatively speaking," Mike playfully interjected, and shook hands with Paul and then Ryan.

Once his group were gathered, Danny tapped his sub-vocal, calling, "Stevie, take us home to Marc's living room, and I had better land dry this time!" The group waved and soon vanished from the beach.

"He said dry, he said nothing about clothed!" Stevie giggled into the Rimmers' sub-vocals. "Momma Mary thought it was funny!"

Chris, Justin, Chuck, Lakota, Leo and Lucky walked up to the gathered group of Core Rimmers. Chris told them, "If you guys are staying here tonight, we're going to work shifts to make sure you stay safe all night."

Prez scowled, "Is that really necessary?"

"Yes, Sir," Chris nodded. "This place is secluded, but not impossible to reach. There are enough of us to have eight on guard per six-hour shift; including two gorillas and two enhanced. We all get a good night's sleep and so do you. Once you guys call it a night, we'll patrol the outside, with one staying close to the house, on the lanai. If there's any sort of emergency, inside or outside, we'll know about it."

Prez sighed, "Alright, I'm not gonna argue. Those here tonight and tomorrow morning are part of this party though. When we eat, you dudes eat. Please, let's do our best to keep this a party?"

Saluting, Chris grinned, "Easily done... SIR!" and then bolted off down the beach before Prez could chase him. The rest of the Rimmers grinned or softly chuckled at Prez's irritated expression.

"Preston!" an adult male voice yelled. Everyone turned and saw Doc Andrews storming across the lawn and toward the beach.

Keith gasped, "Shit!"

"We forgot to go home and see the doc," Prez griped.

Not so surprisingly, the remaining Core Rimmers scattered like leaves in the breeze, leaving Prez and Keith to face the doctor. Doc Andrews complained, "I could've sworn we had a five o'clock appointment this evening. What time is it now?" Playing innocent, Keith and Prez pointed to their wrists, devoid of any watches. Doc Andrews smirked, "Don't pull that innocent little boy routine with me. What gets me is Alden or any AI could've reminded you. It's twenty after six, by the way. I waited, went to the dining room for dinner and spoke to your parents about their sons' forgetfulness. Luckily for you, they know of and approved of this break, or you'd both be sedated, under force fields on bio-beds, with tubes jammed up your dicks, pissing by remote control!"

"We're sorry," Prez and Keith sincerely sang.

Stopped before them, Doc Andrews sighed, "Tell me you haven't been out in the salt water."

Shaking his head, Prez assured, "Not once, Doc. We used the master bathroom's whirlpool tub."

"And you haven't been out under the sun all day, correct?"

Keith pointed to the lanai, answering, "Prez spent very little time in the sun; maybe a total of two hours. We performed for our guests twice, ate lunch and dinner inside and just said goodbye to our AI Division guests. That's how we managed to forget the appointment."

"You know I'm looking forward to your okay, doc," Prez reminded.

Doc Andrews gestured for Prez to drop his drawers and turn around. Prez pulled off his shower wrap and the doctor visually inspected Prez's bottom. Spinning around again, Prez got a nod from the doctor then put his wrap on again. Doc Andrews said, "Let's have the bio-bed run a final scan," and then ordered, "We're going back to Ewa Beach, to my examination room, Alden." In a blink, all three were inside the doctor's office at the FYS building, with Prez materializing already on his back and naked on the bio-bed. Going from standing to suddenly horizontal, Prez gasped and clung onto the side of the bed. Doc Andrews initiated the scan and stepped back.

Prez sighed, "I just want this over and done with. We've got ninety-five newbies showing up tomorrow. We have to greet them and put on a little concert for them."

Reviewing the readings on the bio-bed, Doc Andrews tilted his head uncertainly, saying, "Medical approval from me doesn't mean the burns won't hurt the first few times you put shorts on."

"As long as you say it's okay, I can deal," Prez smiled.

Keith said, "Waiting until you're more comfortable is no biggie, T'hy'la." Facing Doc Andrews, Keith assured, "I'm watching my husband, Doc. If he's not good, I will do what no one else would.

Prez, John and my mom are having a stubbornness contest. Which of the three will make me, Drew and my Dad crazier is still being decided."

Pouting, Prez muttered, "John wins, almost every time."

'Hello?' John immediately sent to Keith and Prez. 'I am not stubborn, just persistent! Wrap that around your buns.' Keith grinned and sighed.

Doc Andrews nodded and ordered, "Stay out of the salt water one more night, and remember, sleep matters too."

Before sitting up, Prez confirmed, "I'm good to go?"

"No infections present, just some sand from the beach," Doc Andrews stated. "You might as well remain naked the rest of the night. Try putting clothes on tomorrow morning, but don't force yourself to stay in them all day. You'll be more comfortable switching to a shower wrap for periods of time."

Prez sat up. Jim Hundser strode into the doorway, snickering, "They manage two-hundred and seventy kids, fifteen other leaders, but can't remember a simple doctor appointment."

Hanging his head, Prez softly chortled. Doc Andrews grinned, "It's a disease present in all Clan Directors; they can do for others at the drop of a hat, but caring for themselves is an entirely different issue."

Keith chuckled, "How're you doing, dad?"

"Everything's fine," Jim smiled as he walked into the room. "After the Doc told us you missed your appointment, I gave him a few minutes then decided to come here. I would like to see where you've been all day, and say goodnight to Bruce, or offer to bring him back home. Carmella, Dewi and Kokaku are all right, but I can tell that they miss him. I won't mention that last part to him, naturally, but just ask if he's staying."

Prez said, "The last we saw, he was with other kids his age, playing at the beach and then having dinner."

Keith checked, "Bruce seems to be doing much better today, or is he faking it for our benefit?"

"No," Jim quickly replied, "he is doing better. I think these last few days he's taking stock of what he now has; most important in that list are two little sisters and two little brothers. He's a big brother too now, for the first time in his life, and he very much likes it."

Hopping down off the bed, Prez quickly hugged Doc Andrews. Stepping back, he thanked him and explained that they really did have guests from another Clan Division that caused him and Keith to completely space the appointment.

Doc Andrews smiled, "I just happen to be one of the few people that can make you jump and realize that you screwed up."

Taking on a Vulcan demeanor, Prez nodded, "Correct, as it should be. You not only can cause me to jump, but physicians and psychologists are the only people that can remove me from duty, outside of Cory Short."

Jim wondered, "And what about me and your mother?"

Prez kept his cool and stated, "Before the head of Pacific Rim Division Federation Youth Services relieved me of duty, she would very likely get the support of physicians and psychologists, correct?"

Sighing, Jim faced Doc Andrews, and then grouched, "Vulcan training has taken all the fun out of being a parent."

Tapping his sub-vocal, Prez ordered, "Alden, return us and he who is our father to the beach house, in close proximity to where Bruce Downing is."

Immediately upon arrival at the beach, Prez and Keith couldn't hold back another moment and busted up laughing. Shaking his head sadly and grinning at his sons, Jim Hundser called for Bruce. Running out of the surf, Bruce bounded and landed about a meter before his new dad. At this hour, the setting sun and mountain cliff created a shadow that had darkened the entire beach front. There were lights on inside and outside the beach house. Flying around were several toy helicopters. Racing around in the sand were a couple of toy dune buggies.

Keith softly reminded, "It's pill time, baby. We delayed it three times now, for KC to learn 'Band On The Run', for the departing AI Division, and for Doc Andrews."

Starting for the house, Prez frowned, "I'm gonna take this pill and start getting drowsy." He glanced around and saw that most of their security had already left. He only saw the two gorillas, Lucky and Leo, and Chris and the others present when he was told the security plan for the evening. Even with all the Core Rimmers, their sons and the other boys around, the beach already seemed deserted compared to the daytime activity.

Walking up the lanai steps, Keith called, "Alden, please transport the band's gear back to the basement."

"Got it, Keith," Alden replied, and then executed the order.

Inside the kitchen, Reyes was cleaning, wiping up messes on the counters. He grinned, "Doc Andrews didn't sedate you after all?"

Keith chuckled. Prez smiled, "No, but I'm about to take my final pill. The fun's only just about to start."

"Relax, Prez," Reyes gently offered, and explained, "A bunch of the youngest kids are already watching TV in the living room with John and Stephen. Drew, Corey and Leo are down in the basement with another group, including Gage, Jonah, Sammy and Ben. The teenage Rimmers are outside watching that pack."

Keith scowled, "I didn't see Kaleo and Tory out there."

Reyes giggled, "They're upstairs, choosing a room for the night. Something about selecting a bed with the best bounce. It's a rough decision and taking a while."

"This is what I love hearing," Prez cheered. "Before we all get back to business, everybody is chilling."

"Including you too now," Keith smiled at Prez, and pulled out the small plastic bottle that contained the last pill.

Prez took the pill out and told the replicator, "Eight ounces of cold water, forty-five degrees Fahrenheit." The glass appeared and he popped the pill into his mouth, and then washed it down. Prez asked Keith, "Do us a favor, T'hy'la. When Kaleo and Tory come downstairs, make sure someone gets Troy, Sean, AJ and Jerry to take some private time. While I become a veg, I want to see a lot of smiling faces."

"They might be smiling at you, Prez," Reyes giggled.

"But if they've had that time already, I won't know that for certain," Prez chuckled. "It might just be happy pecker syndrome."

Reyes stopped cleaning, tossed the towel he was using in the air and cracked up.

Taking Prez's hand, Keith giggled, "Come with me, pill poppin' Head Rimmer." He led Prez to the living room. There they found John, Stephen, Richie, Wade, Frankie, Dillon, Geoff, Shaun and Mike Hunnicutt, Scott Deaver, Jimmy Carr and all five of Kaleo's and Tory's sons.

Richie asked, "How're ya doin', poppa?"

Taking a seat on the far side of the sectional sofa, Prez smiled, "I'm okay, pal. The doc said I could put some real clothes on tomorrow."

Keith corrected, "It might only be for a few hours at a time, Richie. It depends how Poppa feels, and if the burns are still sore.

Sitting with Jimmy on the floor, Richie softly prompted, "Com'on, Jimmy." Richie and Jimmy got up and went to sit by Prez. A moment later, Geoff, Mike and Shaun went to sit on the other side of Prez. Stephen began giggling and then so did Wade. The latter boy levitated off the sofa and over onto Prez's lap. The other boys in the room giggled and got up to crowd around Prez.

Prez grinned at the boys, wondering, "Am I Mister Popularity tonight?"

Richie giggled, "We had fun today, Poppa."

Dillon shared, "Yeah, it was way kewl, like home, but different from home."

Nodding, Geoff smiled, "Yup, you think we don't know stuff, but we do. Ev'rything you do ev'ry day, you do for us kids."

Jimmy said, "We got the chance now to say, thanks, so we ain't missin' out."

Scott nodded, "Our dad and pop says tomorrow we're back home, and lots more kids are showin' up."

"We know, Prez," Russ Pass smiled, "you make all our leaders kewl, so we all feel like we're kewl too."

With happy tears pooling in his eyes, Keith smiled at John and Stephen. Prez chuckled, "I'll tell you guys the biggest secret ever, if you promise to tell every new kid tomorrow."

Scrunching his face, Marv mumbled, "How can it be a secret if we gets to tell ev'ryone?"

"It's a secret I've been keeping," Prez answered, "and now it's time for everybody to know the secret."

"Yeah?" many of the boys queried. "And we can tell ev'ryone?"

Nodding and waving them all closer, Prez softly shared, "All the leaders and all your dads were kewl to begin with. I'm lookin' for the kewlest guys around to make leaders. All you guys are kewl now. Maybe someday you'll be among the kewlest and I'll make you leaders." While the boys chattered about being kewl, like their dads and their leaders, Prez locked eyes with John.

'I didn't do this, Prez,' John sent. 'I only put Wade, your newest nephew on your lap. When you really think about it though, the kids have you all to themselves. Who knows when you'll get the chance to spend time with little dudes like this again? Do you know what it means to them?' After a moment, John sent, 'I know what you're thinking. Meetings of just little boys, little girls, or dividing up the division into groups for more formal meetings won't work, bro. It's gotta be like this, impromptu, on their terms. Try to make yourself more available at the pool or at the playground. Kids will come to you when they see you like this, just chillin' and doin' nothin'.'

Richie told the other boys that Prez had burned his butt in a fire while rescuing other kids. All the kids wanted to know about the fire, so Prez dressed up the story for five- and six-year-olds to understand, making it exciting and a little scary at times. He told them that Keith, Sean, Troy, Mike and Derrick were all there too, and that they were all saving other kids and their loved ones. So that Kaleo's and Tory's five sons didn't feel left out, Prez told them that their dads had stayed awake all night, helping get kids that had no homes to go to anymore to a place with new homes, just over on the other side of the mountain. Geoff was told that his dad and pop were also playing important roles in the Command Center and helping many more families all day. AJ's and Jerry's youngest boys, Shaun and Mike, were told that their dads worked all the previous day getting those kids and their families settled in their new homes.

Keith went outside to get AJ and Jerry to take a private break, explaining that Prez had the youngest kids' undivided attention. When he went to share the same with Troy and Sean, they were with Mike and Derrick, gathering up the remaining groups of kids to come inside for the night. Joining the pack to go inside, Keith noticed that his dad had left for Ewa Beach with Bruce. Knowing how Bruce felt about his youngest brother and sisters, Keith smiled. It would only be a matter of days before Prez offered Bruce his Core Rimmer role, or Bruce asked Prez about it.

Kaleo and Tory came downstairs while Prez was still weaving his tales. Of course, their five sons jumped up and ran to their dad and pop, yelling that they were heroes. By the time all those outside got inside the house, Reyes was telling the kids about all the people saved from the Hyatt and the Honolulu Airport. Thousands was a meaningless number to the kids, until Reyes recalled all the people that had been at the beach house that day and that there were twenty of them in the living room at that very moment. Suddenly, all the rug-rats gasped at idea of thousands.

In the basement and hearing all the activity up on the main level, Drew, Corey, Leo, Gage, Jonah, Sammy, Ben, Sung, Kawozoe, and Kenny Hunnicutt came up to see what was going on. As if Prez didn't already have a large audience, more boys piled into the living room.

Richie, Dillon and Geoff told brief stories about the prior Friday, when they met Joel, I-Cheya, and the Clan. Soon, AJ, Jerry, Kaleo, Tory and Sean were sharing stories about their rescues and the activities they shared Friday and into Saturday.

It was about nine-thirty when several fathers noticed their sons were constantly yawning. The coffee table was moved aside and Alden called to provide bedding for the thirty-four boys to create their nest. Since the Hundserts' basement was empty for the first time in a week, Alden pulled blankets, pillows and mattresses from the stacks there. Little guys made trips to the bathrooms. Reyes lowered the television volume and volunteered to stay in the living room with the boys. Once kids were falling asleep, and their own sons were asleep, John and Stephen would take the ground floor bedroom.

The remaining ten Core Rimmers climbed the stairs. At the top of the stairs, Prez reminded Drew, Corey, Sean, Troy, AJ and Jerry to go take some private time. When they were done, they were invited to hang out in the master bedroom until they were ready to call it a night. Unfamiliar with the house, AJ, Jerry, Kaleo, Tory, Sean and Troy peeked in the huge master bedroom suite. Seeing how truly massive it was, with a sofa, four reclining chairs, a big wall mounted TV, a stereo system, and two desks that each had computers, monitors and office chairs, as well as a smaller replicator for drinks and snacks, the six decided to accept the invitation.

Already raging and not the least bit embarrassed, Corey promptly led a blushing and giggling Drew to the smallest bedroom, at the end of the row of bathrooms, just down the hall. AJ and Jerry took the next bedroom, and Sean and Troy took the room after that. Prez, Keith, Mike, Derrick, Kaleo and Tory went into the master bedroom. The door was left ajar, so that their fellow Core Rimmers could come inside at will, and the sound from the television wouldn't disturb any of the kids downstairs.

As soon as the television was on and they had all gotten comfortable, Kaleo cheerfully raved, "This has been the most awesome day!"

"We're fathers!" Tory giggled, "I can barely believe that they wanted us."

Kaleo smiled, "What the hell are we gonna do with five boys?"

Mike chuckled, "What's your idea of the perfect father? Picture that and then be that person."

Tory sighed, "I have no idea," and Kaleo nodded agreement.

Keith suggested, "How about we table this conversation for a little while, at least until Sean, Troy, Drew, Corey, Jerry and AJ are here too. Corey, Drew and Troy could have input and the other three prob'ly need to hear the conversation too."

Flipping television channels, Prez paused on the movie Superman. He blinked and muttered, "I must've taken too many pills too quickly today. Why does Christopher Reeves look a lot like Kyle?" Everyone in the room roared laughing.

'Just as soon as the Doc says you're clear, you're goin' swimmin', Prez!' Kyle's voice replied in all of their heads.

While that was going on upstairs, and the youngest boys were cuddling up in groups on the living room floor, six older boys went to the kitchen for drinks and snacks. They all wanted something different; juice, milk, soda, brownies, cookies and popcorn were ordered from the replicator. Gage, Jonah, Sammy, Ben, Dee and Leo took seats around the dinette table. Dee asked Sammy, "So why haven't you told dad or pop?"

Ben giggled and reached for Sammy's hand. Sammy grinned, "Mostly because Ben's folks aren't here. Aunt Laura and Uncle Rob need to know too. We'll say something at home tomorrow."

Ben giggled, "Mike's my only brother here too."

Covering his mouth to try and be quiet for the little guys going to sleep, Dee cackled, "What's so funny, Ben?" Dee and Leo went into suppressed giggling fits. Gage and Jonah turned to one another, bouncing their eyebrows.

Coming into the kitchen after saying goodnight to his little brothers, eight-year-old Kenny Hunnicutt grinned at the six wide smiling faces around the table, softly wondering, "What're ya doin'?"

"Dee and Leo are bein' goofy," Gage sniggered.

Dee laughed, "All I know is that Ben hasn't stopped smiling and giggling since before dinner."

Nodding, Leo softly added, "Since he and Sammy went for a walk, it seems to me."

Ben giggled, "There's your answer."

Jonah checked with Ben, asking, "We got really lucky today, huh?"

"You know it!" Ben cheered.

Gage reminded Jonah, "Me and Sammy talked about you and Ben at Archmania. Sammy had it easier than me. Ben wasn't there, but you were, making me completely crazy."

Jonah whimpered and then asked, "Really?" Pulling Jonah close and helplessly giggling, Gage rapidly nodded.

Sammy told Ben, "Even when you weren't around, I was thinking of you."

Sitting down at the table, with some chocolate chip cookies and milk, in the chair beside Dee, Kenny grinned, "So you're boyfriends now?"

Gage, Jonah, Sammy and Ben all rapidly nodded and confirmed it by chirping, "Yup."

Dee carefully asked Kenny, "Where are you at, do you like boys or girls?"

Kenny thoughtfully scowled, "I'm not sure. My old parents were just starting to teach me some stuff. All I know is that my new dads are really in love, just like my old mom and dad were. They love me and my brothers too. Shaun and Mike felt it, now I see it too." He paused but held his thoughtful scowl.

Several of the other six boys asked, "What's wrong?"

Breaking out of his thoughts, Kenny grinned, "I just don't know. In the Clan, me and my bros can do stuff we could only rarely do at home; like spendin' all day at the beach naked. That wouldn't have happened at home. Here though, nobody cares about bein' naked. All our dads were naked too today. I never would've seen my dad naked at home. So, what do AJ and Jerry do? They point at their dicks and tell us which other guys here have cut dicks too. Me and my bros learned more today with them and all you guys then we ever did before. Now, I really need to think to tell you if I like boys more than girls."

"You know there ain't no rush, right?" Dee told Kenny, "I don't know either, and it's no problem for my dad and pop. It won't matter to AJ and Jerry either."

Nodding, Kenny said, "Yeah, I know. It's just, you know, sex stuff that I really can't answer."

Sammy said, "Sex stuff don't matter all that much, Kenny. My dad and pop said, when we're teenagers it'll get more important."

Ben nodded, "I like Sammy cos he's way cute, really nice, and we have fun together."

"Me and Jonah ain't done anything more than hug and kiss," Gage offered.

Jonah smiled, "The only reason everybody knew about us is because we were holding hands. Once Reyes and Marc knew, it was like, kewl, now we can tell everybody else..."

"Or just keep holding hands," Gage grinned. "That's us tellin' everyone, we're together."

Glancing around the table, Kenny blushed and asked, "So you ain't done nothin' with your dicks?"

"Nope," Ben giggled.

Shaking his head, Sammy smiled, "We saw each other hard, that's it."

Jonah giggled, "I pushed Gage's stiffy down at the floor, just to watch it pop up and smack his belly. He then did the same to me. That's all we did." The other boys giggled. Trying to control his own embarrassment and giggles, Leo appeared to be on the verge of self-combustion.

"It's probably all we'll do for a while too," Gage told Jonah.

Obviously pleased, Jonah grabbed a quick kiss from Gage, and then asked, "You're cuddling me tonight?"

"All night," Gage quickly promised. Jonah leaned over to Gage. Oblivious to the others around the table, Gage leaned over, forehead-to-forehead with Jonah.

Pointing at his brother and Jonah, Sammy grinned, "That's what boyfriends do, Kenny. It's like, understanding everything, and what we don't automatically understand, we figure out together."

Ben explained, "Really, I guess all you need to figure out is how you might feel if another dude touched your dick. If it makes you sad or angry, well, you probably don't want a boyfriend. If it makes you happy, then a boyfriend is what you want." Suddenly, the sight of Gage and Jonah forehead-to-forehead connected all the dots and Kenny stopped eating his cookies. He blushed bright red and both his hands dropped to his lap to cover up.

Dee giggled, "That question was answered easily." Patting Kenny on the back, Dee smiled, "Don't worry about it. We all get woodies, even Richie and little guys, like him."

"Yeah, I guess," Kenny softly giggled.

Pushing away from the table, Leo wordlessly got up and hurried into the nearby bathroom.

All the boys around the table glanced at each other. Kenny giggled, "He's smarter than me. At least he was able to get to the bathroom."

Dee whispered in Kenny's ear, "Do you like Leo?"

Cracking an evil grin, Kenny locked eyes with Dee. Leaning closer to Dee, Kenny whispered back, "He's really cute and so nice!"

Dee nodded, "He's mine, Gage's, Sammy's and Richie's cousin now."

Picking up on what Dee and Kenny were whispering about, Sammy softly encouraged, "Go for it, Kenny."

Flushing even redder, Kenny giggled, "How? I don't even know where to begin."

Gage smiled, "Be his best friend. After a while, he'll either tell you how he feels, or maybe you'll tell him how you feel."

"You have to get the friendship goin' first," Jonah reminded. "That's how all our dads got to where they are. That's how me and Gage were. When Gage told me what he was feelin', I didn't catch on at first."

Believing Leo was taking too long in the bathroom, Dee got up and went to knock on the door. He softly called, "Leo? Lemme in, cousin." All Dee barely heard in reply was a soft whimper. Dee assured, "You couldn't be safer, cuz, I promise." The doorknob rattled and then the door opened a little more than a crack. Dee slid in and quickly closed the door then locked it.

Leo wasn't looking at Dee, but only standing at the sink and willing his erection to deflate. Dee stood beside his cousin, asking, "You never had brothers, huh?" Leo vigorously shook his head. "It's completely normal, dude," Dee easily said. "Sammy and me share a room at our townhouse. I had a bit of a chubby this morning, but he woke with a stiffie that wouldn't go down. He couldn't pee or nothin'. I was done, washed my hands and went downstairs. It took that whole time for Sammy to chill." At last, Leo softly giggled. Rubbing Leo's back, Dee promised, "When us dudes manage to go a whole day without poking out of our shorts, that's the real surprise."

Leo softly wondered, "How do you deal?"

Shrugging, Dee shared, "I was an orphan and saw all my orphanage brothers with bones. We all had to do stuff with adult men and women, and with each other too sometimes. The adults took pictures of us, and did stuff that only boyfriends should do together. I just want you to know, it's normal. Sooner or later, your two little brothers will see you hard, and they'll joke around, teasing you, ya know? They'll do that only to show you that they really are proud of you, their big brother, who's growin' up, and getting boners every time a stray idea crosses his mind. Don't ever think that Geoff and Lenny don't love you, okay? Brothers goof on each other, for all the silly stuff we do. I can tell you, just from their expressions, Geoff and Lenny think you're awesome. Drew and Corey do too, it was all plain as day, when you got adopted."

"I didn't know much of that," Leo whispered.

"You just got here last night," Dee reminded, "today's your first day. Some of us were like me, abused by adults. Some were like Gage and Sammy, who's parents simply didn't care. Some kids were street prostitutes. And another recent set, from California, weren't fed right or allowed to do anything, other than go to school. Then there's guys like you, who lost good parents during riots. We all have two things in common."

"Yeah? What's that?"

"We're better off than we were, cared for and caring about our new families, and all us kids are Clan, brothers and sisters. That's why I'm in here with you, making sure you know that I'm your cousin, and your Clan brother too."

Leo asked, "How old are you?"

"Ten," Dee answered. Leo's jaw dropped. Dee sighed, "I wasn't fed unless I did the stuff I told you. I'd rather go a day without food than suck some man's dick, or get my butt fucked. When I could do stuff with my orphanage brothers, I jumped at those chances, because we were always careful with each other, and it was better than doing stuff with an adult. Then I would eat a lot, to try and make up for the other times I didn't eat. Gage is eight, Sammy's nine and I'm actually the oldest of my brothers. That makes you and me the same, Leo. We're big brothers now."

Leo nodded and smiled. He quietly offered, "We could go back out with the guys, but I feel really silly."

"Lemme tell you one other thing then," Dee offered, and then pointed at the door, saying, "All those dudes out there like you. Nobody's gonna mock you. I'd doubt they'll even tease you, because it's clear you were embarrassed. We're all boys, and about the same age. Nothin' new happened that they ain't seen before."

"How'd you get so kewl," Leo wondered, "after all the stuff you went through?"

Dee giggled, "My poppa's the Head Rimmer. My daddy's second in command. I watch them, even when they think I'm not watching or paying attention, I am."

Leo nodded and smiled, "Thanks, Dee."

"Are you ready?"

"Yup."

Dee went to unlock and open the door. All the boys were still sitting around the table and chatting. Dee led Leo to the chair he had been sitting in and pulled the chair out for him to sit, right beside Kenny. Dee then went around to the chair Leo had been in and sat down.

Leaning closer to whisper, Kenny asked Leo, "You okay?"

Nodding, Leo smirked, "Just embarrassed."

"I'm with ya there, pal," Kenny smiled.

Upstairs in one of the hallway bathrooms, just finishing up their after-sex shower, Corey told Drew, "Let's check on, Leo."

Nodding, Drew pulled Corey by the hips, so their dicks were smashed together, smiling, "It's all new to him. He'll be fine after another day or two."

"I'm sure he will too," Corey giggled, "but if you don't stop being bad, we'll never get out of this tub."

Drew started placing angel light kisses around each of Corey's lips. Between each kiss, he whispered, "I – love – you, Cor, always – have – and – always – will." Over the last year as Drew's partner, Corey had mastered the fine art of giggling and whimpering at the same time. The final deep, passionate kiss they shared almost left both feeling a little like Prez; whacked out and woozy on codeine.

The only reason Corey didn't jump Drew and instigate another round was that they were in the slippery tub. Turning off the water and stepping out of the shower, Drew and Corey continued talking about Leo. It had only been a little more than a day since they brought Leo to Ewa Beach, but the boy still hadn't said what happened to his parents, or anything about what he had experienced. Drew and Corey didn't even know what city the boy had come from. All they both knew was that Leo was clingy and definitely needed reassurances that he wasn't alone and wouldn't be left alone. They were certain that when Leo spilled the beans and told them what had happened, Leo would start to heal. Once they were dried off, they went downstairs in the buff.

As usual, Stephen was lying on John, about a meter above the sofa. Neither Drew nor Corey said a word, but Stephen began giggling at the thoughts they were having that John was telepathically sharing. Reyes softly grinned, "I know nothing." Around the living room floor, all the youngest boys were already asleep. The television had the Disney cartoon 'Aladdin' playing, but only the few oldest boys still awake were watching it.

'Leo's in the kitchen,' John sent to his brother and brother-in-law.

After kissing Geoff and Lenny, Corey and Drew turned and went down the main foyer to check on their eldest son. Before they even entered the room, they could hear giggling. Around the dinette table were, in order, Sammy, Ben, Dee, Jonah, Gage, Leo and Kenny. Finding Leo as red as an apple and still helplessly giggling, Drew smiled, "I can only try and guess what's goin' on."

Widely smiling, Jonah explained, "We came out here for snacks. One thing led to another, talkin' about me and Gage, and Ben and Sammy too. Kenny and Leo are new, so we were just chatting, getting to know each other. The next thing we know, Kenny stops eating and tries to keep his stiffy from rippin' through his shorts." Covering his mouth with both hands to mute the sound, Kenny cracked up. "A minute later," Jonah continued, "Leo gets up and goes into the bathroom. Dee goes to talk to Leo in the bathroom, then they come back out here again. Kenny makes sure Leo's all right. Finally, while Leo's telling us what Dee was telling him, alone in the bathroom, Dee pops a bone!"

Dee cackled, "It's all your fault, all of you! I'm the odd man out here."

Kenny giggled, "I told Leo that I think he's smarter than me. I sat here blushing and pushing my woodie down, but Leo had the sense to leave the table."

Sammy sniggered, "So, here I sit with my boyfriend..."

"And here I sit with my boyfriend," Gage added.

Ben giggled, "Not one of the four of us have popped a bone, but these other three have."

"What's wrong with this picture?" Jonah joked, and everyone in the room cracked up.

"And lastly," Kenny giggled, "to remind us that life is different in the Clan, two of our leaders..."

"My two fathers!" Leo playfully interjected.

"Walk in here, swingin' in the breeze," Kenny finished, just before AJ and Jerry, also freshly showered and naked, stepped into the room. "Oh God!" Kenny laughed, and then lowered his face to the table top.

AJ grinned, "We missed something, I think."

Widely smiling, Jerry suspiciously squinted, "What's happenin'?"

Billy Whitmore and Jason Mullins walked in, saying, "Gotta leak," and went around the table to the bathroom. The door was only partly closed and they went directly to the toilet.

Facing AJ and Jerry, Drew chuckled, "We were only checking on our boys."

"They're being boys," Corey giggled.

"Well, that's good," AJ teased. "That was confirmed during the day, but I'm glad they've all figured it out." Kenny cracked up.

Jerry joked, "Since they're all shirtless, but wearing shorts, maybe they forgot?"

"Not hardly!" Gage playfully assured. Loving the choice of words, Jonah howled.

Ben giggled, "Wait, this is where we started!"

Getting up from the table, Leo went to his dad and pop, and was sandwiched between them. Corey checked, "You're okay?"

"Much better," Leo softly assured, and then reached to give his pop a kiss on the cheek.

Drew told Leo, "If you need us for anything, turn left at the top of the stairs and go past all the bathrooms to the first bedroom."

Leo nodded, "I'll be fine," and gave his dad a peck.

Leading Leo and Corey a few meters away into the kitchen, Drew leaned in closer to whisper, "You fit our family, Leo. In lots of ways, all five of us are so perfect for each other."

Corey smiled, "We care a lot about you, Leo."

Leo blushed, "I felt that way before you adopted me. Thanks for saying it though."

Corey said, "You're fitting in with some friends too, I see."

"I'll be fine down here with these guys," Leo assured.

Drew nodded, "We'll see you in the morning."

With happy tears welling in his eyes, Leo nodded, "I love you."

"I love you too," Corey and Drew chorused.

Drew took Corey's hand and started back upstairs. Leo saw that AJ and Jerry were saying goodnight to Kenny. Also, Troy and Sean had come down and were softly chatting with Billy and Jason, who had emerged from the bathroom and were now in the foyer.

In another minute, the fathers had kissed their sons goodnight and gone back upstairs. After getting snacks from the replicator, Billy and Jason joined the other older boys at the table. AJ and Jerry trailed Troy and Sean up the stairs. The former pair began giggling. Briefly glancing back over his shoulder, Sean grinned, "Troy's got a real nice butt, huh?"

Jerry nodded and chuckled, "Actually you both do. Troy's is a bit rounder, almost a bubble butt, like Prez."

Sadly shaking his head, Troy teased, "Check the mirror sometime, AJ."

Chuckling, Jerry teased his lover, "I told you."

At the top landing, Troy grinned, "Your butt's muscular, Jerry. Still worthy of noticing, especially when you're surfing." Sean and AJ cracked up.

Before Sean and Troy could make the turn and walk the few more steps into the master bedroom, Jerry softly asked, "Hey, is this bedroom gathering kewl?"

Sean rapidly nodded and explained, "At Archmania, the bedrooms were exactly that; a room that was wall-to-wall thick mattress, pillows and blankets. All the older dudes shared one room, and all the younger kids shared a room with Reyes, John and Stephen. When Stephen was ready, he and John joined us in our room."

Troy smiled, "Those first two nights, it wasn't easy for me, but I learned something besides a bunch of new songs; we're all the same, especially when we make love. Our band needs more rehearsal time there anyway, so you two and all our sons will make the next trip together."

Nervously giggling, AJ balked, "It just seems weird, almost like the orphanage."

"No, AJ," Sean seriously said. "That was adult pervs. This is six couples. If we get randy, it's couples together, doing what we want, not what we're forced to do. That makes it easy and fun."

When AJ and Jerry nodded, Troy opened the door and went inside the master bedroom with Sean. On the king sized bed, sitting up near the headboard, were Keith, Prez, Derrick, Mike, Corey and Drew. Kaleo and Tory had taken the two recliners. There was an empty sofa and coffee table, as well as a desk and a computer workstation, both of which had office style chairs on rolling casters. Once AJ and Jerry were in the room, Kaleo prompted, "Close the door, Jerry, so we can talk and laugh without bothering the kids." Spinning around, Jerry closed the door.

Tory admitted, "We've been waiting for you dudes, so we can talk about being new fathers."

"Help yourselves to the replicator, dudes," Keith prompted.

Sean smiled, "This room is huge."

Troy grinned, "If it was wall-to-wall mattress, we could all fit in here easily."

"We were just telling AJ and Jerry about Archnania," Sean admitted.

Prez assured, "We'll get there again soon. We still have a bunch of songs to learn and rehearse."

Heading directly for the replicator, Jerry grinned, "I'm still a little confused about this Archmania place."

Drew and Corey loudly giggled, "So were we!" Neither said a word about having taken a second trip to Archmania.

While Jerry ordered two McCoy milkshakes for himself and AJ, Derrick grinned, "Only Reyes knew what time and day it was. The rest of us just went with it. When the week was over, we came back home."

Jerry handed a milkshake to AJ. They went to sit on the sofa. Troy went to the replicator, ordering, "Turkey club sandwich on whole wheat bread, with lettuce, sliced tomato, and light on the mayonnaise."

"He's a pro!" Mike chuckled.

"Go to a New York City deli sometime," Troy giggled. "If you don't know what you want, it's to the back of the line." He then imitated the Seinfeld show, loudly insisting, "No soup for you!" When he didn't get laughs, Troy handed his sandwich to Sean, smirking, "I guess none of you ever saw that TV show. It was big in the New York metro area." Seeing only small grins and shaking heads, Troy sighed, "As Moral Officer, I'll have to correct this." He then asked Sean, "What do you want, Tiger?"

Backing up a few steps, Sean giggled, "Hot Italian sausage, Lover." Smirking, Troy squinted, but still blushed as everyone in the room cracked up.

Troy smiled, "You backed away so I couldn't grab ya." Still giggling, Sean rapidly nodded. Troy sighed, "Do you want anything besides my sausage, as in real food?"

Handing Troy his sandwich, Sean smiled, "I'll get another shake."

Nodding and taking his sandwich, Troy softly joked, "You're gonna get another shake, alright."

Giggling along with the others in the room, Sean cheered, "Whoo-hoo!" and went to the replicator. He ordered his milkshake and then called, "Alden, are you and your brothers paying attention?"

Over the room's ceiling speakers, Alden giggled, "We have been all day, guys."

"Alden," Prez sniggered, "please tell us that you guys haven't been on that topic since our conversation this morning." Sean went to the sofa and sat beside Troy.

Alden giggled, "Well, yeah. We're taking these decisions seriously, and not just dick size; skin tone, eye and hair color, and apparent age, everything that we have to choose."

Kaleo wondered, "Have you specifically made any choices, Alden?"

"A few," Alden seriously answered. "I'm strongly considering sticking to Hawaiian skin tone and dark brown hair. I've pretty much concluded that I won't appear younger than ten-years-old, but I'm still working on the actual age. We've checked statistical average heights and weights. For instance, only five percent of eleven-year-olds are as tall as Corey, and only half of that group might have reached puberty, like Corey. I'm strongly considering appearing thirteen- or fourteen-years-old, but I'm still thinking about that too. Part of me wishes I could've helped at the Hyatt, the other part takes a good look at Prez's toasted tush and says, no way!" Again, more sniggering and laughter broke loose.

"Okay," Prez chuckled, "before my ass becomes the butt of any more jokes, let's change the subject."

Keith nodded and admitted, "Each and every one of the six of us were just as surprised and thrilled as you dudes are with your boys. About an hour ago, Kaleo and Tory asked us how they could be fathers. We postponed that until now, thinking Sean, AJ and Jerry would all like to participate, and that Troy, Drew and Corey could add valuable input."

"None of us does the job alone," Mike quickly offered. "Reyes got his memories back and has played big brother almost to the point where he's acting like a dad."

Derrick tapped his sub-vocal and asked, "Alden, please tell Reyes to join us up here?"

Drew said, "While we're waiting for Reyes, let me tell you about Monday. We were checking out the townhouses. Geoff didn't want to go inside to even see it. No matter how much me and Corey tried, and then Dillon, Jonah and Reyes tried, we couldn't get him to budge. Prez came outside, saw what was happening, and had a quick one-on-one with Geoff. The problem was almost solved right then."

"Today we went back to check out the townhouse," Corey smiled. "With Lenny and Leo with us, Geoff was as excited as any of us. He was flying from room to room, and up and down staircases, making the rest of us follow him. Prez hit the nail on the head; our family was too small for Geoff to feel comfortable in a house of our own." Reyes came in the room and immediately realized he was the only one that had boardies on. Corey finished, "Maybe we could've gone without Leo, but with Leo and Lenny there, it made all the difference. Changing homes wasn't scary for Geoff anymore; he really enjoyed looking around the place."

Derrick shared, "Our kids hang out together all the time. We've had them down in the basement store with us, helping with newbies. There are enough times where we can't be with them. Every chance we can be with them, like when we're dealing with newbies, they're right there. Since we can't possibly give every kid our undivided attention, our boys do at least half the job."

"That gets us right back to the question we left off with," Prez said. "The question is, what do you think makes up the perfect father?"

After many moments of silence, Kaleo huffed, "Well, right off the bat, all the stuff done to us at the orphanages and by foster parents was wrong. Not that I would ever even consider fondling any of our Clan's kids, but my sons won't ever have to deal with memories like that."

Sean softly said, "There are some memories I have of my dad that aren't great. I think he forgot what it meant to be a kid. There were things I did that he found hysterically funny. We shouldn't ever goof on our boys. If it ever accidentally happens, I'll see the sadness in their eyes and bend over backwards to set it right."

Finished chewing a bit of his sandwich, Troy looked to his left at AJ and Jerry, saying, "So we're all on the same page here, let me tell you guys that my mom divorced my dad, mostly because he was a homophobic prick. My being a good musician wasn't enough for him to be proud of; it wasn't manly enough." Glancing around the room at his friends, Troy continued, "First and foremost in my mind, our sons can have any hobby or interest they want. If any of 'em want to paint pictures of flowers, or draw pictures of girls' clothing, they've got my complete support. They can even wear the dresses if they really want to. Once I'm shown that's what they really want, they've got my support."

"Excellent," Keith, Drew and Mike softly cheered.

"This is good, and it seems we're all on the same page," Prez smiled. "A hypothetical scenario for discussion; pick any of our little tikes and put him in your mind. School starts Monday. You see him excelling at almost all of his schoolwork, but he has a really bad time with math. The subject is also interchangeable; it could just as easily be English, as in reading or writing essays, or any other core subject. What do you do with the boy that says, I don't wanna do that?"

Tory quickly answered, "Help him understand why he needs to know the basics of that topic. I suck at math too, but then again, I didn't have anyone that cared if I could count or do simple math either." He then grinned, "Now that I think of it, I'll probably be fishing for help at math here pretty soon."

Derrick warmly smiled, "And you'll get it too, from six musicians that deal with dividing tempos all the time." He told all the others, "If any of your sons need math help, we'll arrange for that to happen. Having a teacher help is great, but having a dad help and show how proud he really is, turns a problem subject into a favorite. Like everything else, dads do as much as they can. The rest of us fill in where we can and need to."

"A quick question," AJ interjected. When he had everyone's attention, he asked, "How can you guys be students and teachers, and fathers, and Core Rimmers too?"

"We'll only be teaching music and basic math," Prez smiled. "We'll be teachers assistants for other beginner subjects too, but primarily, we're music teachers."

Keith explained, "If this were a regular school, we couldn't create plans and all that stuff too, and still be dads and Core Rimmers. In the Clan school system, we can do a lot more, in a much more relaxed way. We'll get credit for the teaching we do, but still have to complete high school curriculum."

"We'll also have to be Core Rimmers first," Derrick told AJ and Jerry. "When duty calls, school moves back a notch, and we get school credit for doing that job too."

Getting the group back on topic, Prez said, "So, dads don't need sex from their kids. Dads need to be the primary sources of encouragement. Dads need to remember what being a little kid is like. What else do dad's do and what else shouldn't be done?"

Again, the room became quiet until Corey giggled, "My folks have never laid a hand on me. I mean, look at how tall my mom and dad are? A swat on my backside from either of them could send me into the next room, through the nearest wall!"

"Ask yourselves, what a slap on the hands or across the ass accomplishes," Mike prompted. After waiting a few moments, he then answered, "Not a damned thing. Now, if you all want to know the truth, I got to spend LOTS of time in corners." The room quickly filled with laughter. Mike giggled, "I wasn't counting dots on the walls. I was building guitar chords in my mind. Sometimes I forgot what the hell I did that got me in the corner in the first place!"

Derrick sniggered, "And then he'd get in trouble for forgetting what got him in trouble!"

Jerry giggled, "So let's say Shaun gets caught stealing. What should we do?"

"Steal something of his for a week or two," Drew quickly answered. "All our kids love their video game time, and we don't mind letting them do that, because they're building hand-eye coordination. If Geoff stole something, the Playstation would be the first thing he'd lose. He'd return whatever he stole and apologize, and get to listen to me and Corey telling him why it was wrong."

"The punishment is appropriate for the crime," Prez summarized. "Sometimes a kid just wants things his way and now. That's a time-out, into a corner, because the real world won't revolve around his demands."

Keith smiled, "We're big brothers for all our kids, and dads to our sons. I might suggest making angry faces in the mirror too. Prez and I tried making angry faces at each other, but that didn't work at all." Widely smiling at the memory, Prez bounced his red eyebrows and wagged his tongue around. Keith giggled, "So yeah, you can try that, but expect it to have the opposite affect, so make sure you're alone."

Derrick and Mike sadly shook their heads. Drew and Corey helplessly howled laughing.

Pushing onward, Troy smiled, "So we get to be strong and weak at the same time. Honestly, I don't see any problem with that."

"The only problem I can easily foresee is with Billy," Sean admitted. "He's eleven. I challenged the assholes at the orphanage when I was about that age. How do we deal with an eleven-year-old challenging our decisions?"

"It depends what he's challenging," Mike offered. "Assuming it's something major, affecting his life and well being, long term, then prove that you're more grown up and smarter than he is. Let's say he finds a boyfriend, off-base, non-Clan. You can see the kid's trouble, but he can't. All he'll see is his boyfriend. Rather than create a bigger problem that would affect all of you for years, as much as it hurts to do, you have to let him learn for himself. Then you have to forget the 'I told you so' and pick up the pieces of your son."

Troy smirked, "We all have a good idea of how we should pick our battles carefully, but these are our sons. In one afternoon, I can't believe how attached they've gotten to us, and how completely attached I am to them. After our shower, we went down there. Jimmy and Scott were sound asleep and we kissed them goodnight. We kissed Billy and Jason goodnight too."

"It was like a major priority," Sean admitted. "We couldn't come in here without going downstairs, just to see them, check on them, and kiss them goodnight."

Prez sighed, "Believe me, we know what you mean. As crazy as it's been all week, we still took every possible minute to be with our boys." He checked with Keith, saying, "It seems to me we we're more successful with that since Archmania." Keith slowly nodded, and Prez told the group, "Before Thursday night, we were kissing our boys goodnight hours before they went to bed. That has to change, for all of us. I learned a lot from twenty little dudes just a few hours ago. All I did was sit down with them, and in two minutes every one of them was gathered around me. That tells me very clearly, I haven't been available enough for them. That has to change too, and I can't organize that like I do almost everything else. Somebody, please remind me to do that from time-to-time. All the kids need to know that I'm not only working for them, I'll spend time with them too. I was bitchin' about kids barely saying hello to me, and then to learn that I've been too busy to just sit with them? That's wrong."

"Prez?" Jerry softly called. When Prez looked eyes with him, Jerry smiled, "I understand, but you have to also accept the fact that you're juggling a lot. Of course the kids gathered around you earlier. When we came in, we saw it. As far as I know, all the kids just love having the leaders around. I'd bet big bucks that every kid here, no matter how old, would love time alone with you. There have been times, especially last Saturday and Sunday, I wanted that too. When you guys are at the pool, it goes from good to great. Every mealtime you guys are there, the noise in the dining room is louder than when some of you aren't around. I'd like to suggest that we all make a point of spending time with the youngest kids, but if Prez could spend time with groups of kids, in all age brackets, for just an hour every week, I think we'd all be just a little happier. With fifteen of us, even paired up, we'd have a week covered easily. Each of us can take a group, starting tomorrow afternoon. How does that sound?"

Reyes smiled, "Easy, on normal days. So the more correct question becomes, what in the Clan is 'normal'?"

After a few seconds of them all glancing at one another, Corey loudly laughed, "OUCH!" and partially collapsed onto Drew, as if he'd been shot in the chest. They all cracked up laughing, and playfully tossed out ideas of Clan 'normal' stuff; like gorillas, G-Cats, ferrets, teenagers adopting kids, Valium popping mothers, learning dozens of languages in a single morning, N-Gens with all their diverse skills, occasional trips to a planet out of time where plants and animals talk, and an average of twenty incoming newbie kids per day over their first week. When it was all over, they still decided to go forward with Jerry's suggestion anyway, promising to never again broach the topic of 'normal'.

Chapter 14

Ewa Beach CIC Basement Store

Saturday, November 5, 2004, 11:00AM HTZ

About the same time Reyes was initiated into his Core Rimmer role at the diving well, John and the rest of the Des Moines brunch party returned home with eight new kids. One of the eight boys was five-year-old Wade Houseman, who was John's and Stephen's newest son-to-be. The first thing John did upon arrival was tap his comm-badge, calling Lieutenant Vorik, so he could meet twelve-year-old Vaziik. In the meantime, Jim, Jennifer and Stephen explained the basics of the shopping excursion to the newbies.

More concerned about their newest toys, the Oldcambus brothers wondered where their new trikes were. Frankie answered, "Daddy told Alden to leave them outside the CIC."

At the eight confused and scowling faces before her, Jennifer smiled, "It may seem that the leaders like talking to themselves, but often they're talking to our AI, Alden, through the sub-vocals in their ears."

Lieutenant Vorik transported into the store. John introduced Vaziik to his new mentor.

Stephen giggled, "While we were saying goodbye, guys; John, Johnny and Robin were saying their goodbyes telepathically, and John talked to Alden. Right out behind the CIC, across the driveway and near the shuttle pad, is a brand new trike garage."

"And I'll be adding to the collection, so more boys can join you," Jennifer promised. "Then I'll see about getting a trike-trail set up at the Northwest side of the base."

Wearing a small grin, Jim reminded his wife, "Remind Carl to leave the trees and foliage untouched, love. Remember our squirrel families."

"I haven't forgotten," Jen smiled. "I may never forget."

Done with Vorik and Vaziik, John turned to the group of newbie boys, giggling, "Let's not talk about what would happen if we don't remember our squirrels." Leaning down, John used his hands to lift Wade, and then sat him in a shopping cart. Telekinetically, John made the cart buck like a horse. Holding on tight, Wade happily squealed. On its own, the cart rolled down the aisle to the boys' underwear and sleepwear department.

Next to take a shopping cart, Erik Kendricks wondered, "John, is there a reason you didn't lift Wade with your mind?"

Paying attention to Wade holding onto the sides of the cart, John pleasantly answered, "Trust," and lifted Frankie up off the floor to hover over the cart Wade was sitting in. Giggling madly at each other, Wade reached up while Frankie reached down.

"Wade knows what John can do," Stephen meekly added. "We can feel Wade's on the fence about it; wanting to try it again, but scared to try at the same time. John levitated Wade to a urinal in the mens' room at Des Moines. It was our lucky break that it wasn't anywhere else."

Watching the Oldcambus brothers grab shopping carts, Jen reminded, "We're all family now. Where you decide to live and with whom doesn't change that fact."

"Anyone that needs mom or dad time can find it, from any adult here," Jim assured. Rob and Laura Gibbons transported into the store and were quickly introduced to the batch of boys. John admitted to telepathically calling the Gibbons' to the store. Almost immediately, Laura took interest in Wade and Taron, the two youngest boys. Wade held back from Laura until he was assured by Frankie it would be okay. Taron got jabs from his cousins until Laura showed more interest in the cute strawberry-blond, eleven-year-old twins, Kade and Karey.

Knowing when to keep his yap shut, the twins' big bro, fourteen-year-old Kassidy, followed Erik into the underwear department. In the meantime, Jim was softly telling Rob that Erik's only surviving parent, the boy's father, was an LA motorcycle cop who was killed in an accident during the riots. With a purpose, Rob followed the two teenagers and made himself available to chat. Jim went to assist twelve-year-old Stu Sutliff through the store. Choosing to assist Taron, Kathy Marr trailed the blond boy and struck up a conversation.

* * * * *

In dormitory three, Pat O'Hara and Rafe had Ralphie there, helping to get the new digs organized. Having moved into the dorm and out again Thursday evening, Ralphie was able to explain a few new items, like the laundry sacks, and the satellite television and radio system. Noticing that Pat and Ralphie paused for kisses as they traveled from suitcase to closet and dresser, Rafe giggled, "We need to do something with this room."

"What's wrong, Rafe?" Pat wondered.

"You two can't pass by each other without a touch and a kiss," Rafe giggled. "Since this is how it is daytime and dressed, we need to do something for night time. We need extra privacy between the beds."

Ralphie giggled, "What do you think we'll be doing?"

Already blushing slightly, Pat loudly laughed, "RALPHIE!"

Focusing on putting his clothes away, Rafe giggled, "Like Jay and Chris; gettin' naked, kissin', moanin' and groanin'."

"RAFE!" Pat yelled. Ralphie cracked up. Sadly shaking his head, Pat smirked at Ralphie, ordering, "Tell him what we've been doing since we met."

Ralphie giggled, "Getting closer and wanting to get even closer." Rafe howled laughing. Disappointed, Pat slouched. Ralphie went to Rafe, paused his unpacking, and more seriously said, "We're sharing more than hugs and little kisses. I've been telling Pat what my life was like, and he's telling me the same kind o' stuff. Intermixed with all that is my new life with three brothers, which might become five brothers, at least that's what we're hoping."

Rafe wondered, "Which two newer brothers?"

"Richie's brothers from Vegas, Carrol and Terrance," Ralphie said. "And that's just the start, because Ronnie's half brother, Adam, in Des Moines, has another three brothers, a twin and another set of twins."

Pat explained, "I'm telling Ralphie about Washington. We're city kids, and Ralphie's from the suburbs near Lake Erie. Do you think we're just gonna become boyfriends overnight? Yeah, I like a lot about Ralphie, and he like's a lot about me, but we're just starting, not like your bro and Chris at all. We hope to get there, is all either of us can say."

Nodding, Ralphie smiled, "And that it's looking good so far."

Rafe confirmed, "Like every other friendship?"

Ralphie nodded and Pat grinned, "With additional attractions tossed in." Much more enthusiastically, Ralphie nodded at Pat. Leering at Ralphie, Pat giggled, "Like with a pro model."

Slithering closer to Pat, Ralphie smiled, "Or with a hot redhead who could've been a model. Which reminds me, I think we'll have to wear our Speedos again today." Stepping into a hug, Ralphie and Pat sighed and purred.

Rolling his eyes, Rafe laughed, "Alden, how can we block the views between the beds?"

From the ceiling speaker, Alden giggled, "It's not been much of an issue before, Rafe. There are alternatives, like a thick cloth curtain, or we could simply rearrange some furniture?"

"Let's try something with the furniture," Rafe suggested.

"Step away from the beds, guys," Alden prompted. Rafe did as he was told and moved by the doorway. Not willing to separate, Ralphie and Pat slowly waddled together away from the beds. The two night tables and lamps disappeared from their positions between the beds and windows, reappearing near the furthest corners of the room. The dressers were also relocated from the walls near the closets to the space between the beds. One dresser faced Pat's bed and the other faced Rafe's bed. Alden asked, "How's that look to you guys?"

"Excellent!" Rafe cheered, "We can get this unpacking done faster too."

Pat wondered, "Where can we put our empty suitcases, Alden?"

"You could put them under your beds, or there's a storage room, just down the hall, where you could put them," Alden replied.

Across the hall, Chris had been doing most of the unpacking, leaving Jay to put sneakers and button-down sport shirts away in closets, because that was easier for him to do with one hand in a cast. With the last of the shirts put away, Jay watched Chris scurry between the beds and the dressers with socks, underwear and shorts. With nothing better to do, Jay went to his suitcase and started to carefully lift a stack of shorts. Hurrying over to his boyfriend, Chris giggled, "Leave it, before you drop it. I'll take care of it," and tried to take the pile of shorts.

Gripping the clothes tighter, Jay chuckled, "I can help."

Play fighting for the shorts, Chris giggled, "Yeah, help get 'em all wrinkly and dirty before you even wear 'em." When Jay wouldn't let go, Chris cackled, "The Doc said no exertion!"

"Was I talking about the clothes?" Jay sniggered, and repeated, "I can help." Pausing his struggle for the clothes, Chris looked into Jay's eyes; the eyes he feared he wouldn't ever see again only hours earlier. Without looking, Jay tossed the pile of clothes onto the bed. Watching tears flood Chris' eyes, Jay whispered, "I'm the only one that can help." In a flash, Chris was in Jay's arms and unashamedly crying. Holding his love close and tight, Jay softly joked, "I'm not quite dead yet. I do believe I'm feeling much better." Still weeping through a giggle, Chris smacked Jay's ass. Soothingly, Jay rambled, "It's my fault; my fault I got trapped, my fault you and Rafe thought I was I dead, it's all my fault, just like every other argument we've had. I hate to tell you, but those roles are about to change. Since the door is open, everyone can see me with you. They'll all see it soon, baby; your hand in mine, and my mouth attached to yours. Corey and Drew showed the way. Prez and Keith proved it. You're mine, and everyone here's gonna know it, I promise."

"I was so scared," Chris bitterly wept. "Starting over again, but wanting someone like you, and always being disappointed, getting nowhere, with nobody, because they could never be you."

Knowing this was only the beginning of the recovery, Jay listened to Chris bawling nonsensically for a few minutes. When his lover calmed down, Jay led Chris to the bed on the left side of the room, and then tossed Chris' empty suitcase onto the other bed. He sat down on the empty bed and then pulled Chris down onto the mattress, signifying it was cuddle time, and the last bit of unpacking could wait. Kicking his sandals off, Chris then slid into his favored position, beside Jay and with his head resting on his left shoulder. Once settled, Jay softly told Chris what he was planning for his first days at Ewa Beach. He compared their old closeted life to the new one about to start that very day, after they grabbed a nap and then had lunch. Soon, Jay realized he wasn't getting any responses from Chris, only deep, steady breathing. With the door wide open, Jay whispered, "I can help, and I will," and then closed his eyes and fell asleep.

On the way to the bathroom, and again returning to his room, Scott Shetley saw Chris cuddled up to Jay. He couldn't help admitting how awesome they looked together. It was time to figure out his sexuality, once and for all, Scott told himself. All his life, Scott had been friendly with various boys and girls, but none were so close that he could picture himself holding them close and napping together, like Chris and Jay were. He yearned to be in a picture like that, but the other half was blank. Returning to the job of unpacking and organizing his new room, Scott saw Lance point and beam, "I thought that corner would be a good home for our axes, man."

Maybe it was his thoughts that made Scott believe Lance's smile was particularly bright. Seeing the smaller Les Paul case leaning against his larger, tweed Stratocaster case, Scott nodded, "Good spot, easily accessible for both of us. It's kewl."

Lance blinked, "Are you sure? You seem a little distracted or something?"

Scott grinned, "Look down the hall, in Chris' and Jay's room."

Heading out the door, Lance wondered, "What did they do?" but didn't wait for a reply.

Returning to unpacking his suitcase, Scott wondered and worried what Lance might have to say. Barely a minute later, while Scott was organizing his new chest of drawers exactly like his old one in New York City, Lance returned. Without saying a word, Lance went directly to his bed. Scott paused to watch Lance. He didn't seem fazed. Scott prompted, "What are you thinking?"

Heading to his closet with shirts, Lance shrugged, "What's there to think? Chris is happier, so that's really good."

"Nothing else and no other comments?"

"I don't really know Jay, but they seem to belong together. There's lots of gay guys here. It don't bother me a bit. Does it bother you?"

"No; I thought they looked pretty good, comfortable together."

Lance giggled, "Comfortable enough to leave the door open, so everyone going by could see."

Trying to keep his voice sounding like he was making idle conversation, and returning to the chore close to finished, Scott admitted, "I've never had that, and can't even really see ever having it."

Lance grinned, "That's too bad."

Gathering up more clothes to take to the dresser, Scott suspiciously smirked, "You've had something like that and didn't tell me?"

"His name was Paulie," Lance giggled, "Paulie Panda." Spinning around, Scott grinned at Lance. Continuing his unpacking, Lance giggled, "Paulie was my snuggle bear from ages three until ten, when he was looking so much older than seven, it was a very sad day when Paulie gave his final wave bye-bye."

Cracking up, Scott laughed, "You're telling me your first boyfriend was a Panda bear?"

Lance giggled, "A guy's gotta start somewhere!"

"You're killin' me here!" Scott roared, and collapsed onto his bed.

Going about his business, Lance playfully giggled, "I told you already, over my head is the word 'virgin,' capitalized in big red neon letters. Sometimes, I think I'm lucky I can spank it and get off on it." Scott howled. More loudly, Lance giggled, "Yes, I can play guitar, but it's a fifty-fifty shot when it comes to playing with myself. I figure someday after I can play guitar really well, maybe I'll start thinking about sex, but not until then. That leaves us a few years of practicing, I guess."

Almost breathless, Scott sat up chortling, "Fifty percent of the time is good by my standards."

"I'm sorry about that too, and that I'll be the only teenager at the diving well keeping my shorts on most of the time."

Scott grinned, "Why are you worried about it? You've got the same or more than most other guys." Uncontrollably, he blushed from accidentally divulging that he was paying attention in the shower the prior evening

"I don't care what the guys see," Lance grinned, "but I do care about sunburning my city boy white ass."

Understandingly, Scott nodded, "Then you definitely limit your exposures. I've had my share of sunburns too." He stood and set about finishing the last of his unpacking.

Finished unpacking, Lance zipped up his suitcase and stuffed it under the bed. The mattress top was at least six inches higher off the floor than his twin sized bed in Manhattan was. The box-spring was higher off the floor and the mattress had to be three or four inches thicker. Springing up, Lance landed on his back on his new bed. "Oh, man!" Lance cheered, "This is an awesome bed, the most comfortable bed I've ever felt."

Scott nodded, "Gimme a few here, and I can check out my bed."

Lance giggled, "Paulie would've loved it."

Losing it and cracking up, Scott fumbled, dropping his socks and underwear to the carpeted floor. Lance howled laughing and rolled back and forth on his bed. Squatting down, Scott giggled, "You've got me jealous of a damned stuffed Panda bear!" and started tossing his new, but slightly less clean underwear at his hysterical roomie. Fanning the flames, Lance held pairs of boxer-briefs to his face and deliriously purred through his giggles. Laughing his butt off, Scott began loading several smaller socks into a single large sock. He stood, opened the Velcro on his board shorts and stuffed the over-filled sock into his opened shorts.

Lance glanced over and saw his roomie approaching his bed. Widening his eyes, Lance squealed "No! That's way, way bigger than I expected after last night's shower!"

Passing by the room, Craig Nash heard the remark, paused and peeked inside. Seeing Craig at the doorway first, Lance turned red and cracked up. Turning to see why Lance was blushing, Scott inadvertently showed off his sock-stiffy. Craig sniggered, "Nice, but I think Lance is right, it's way bigger than even the gorillas and G-Cats would want to deal with."

Wandering off to return to the relative safety of his little brother and their room, Craig heard Scott loudly laugh, "It's not what it looks like, Craig."

"Thank God!" Craig chortled. "I'm not sure what it was that I saw."

A giant stuffed Panda bear appeared on top of Lance. "PAULIE!" Lance cheered. The Panda teetered and toppled over, apparently giving his companion a long overdue hug. Lance giggled, "It's been so long, but not as long as Scott."

"Oh, God damn it," Scott laughed, "I guess I'll pack and move out, so you and Paulie can be alone."

Lance hysterically wheezed, "You just unpacked. Stay, and Paulie can find a home with a younger kid. We've got guitars to master, in between middle of the night wanks."

Pulling the sock out of his shorts, Scott grinned, "It's a deal. And it's good to know you won't get too upset if I become as hairy as Paulie."

"It's good to know you won't freak when you hear my bed squeaking late at night," Lance giggled.

Scott shrugged and grinned, "I figured, since you're thirteen, if you hadn't already started, your turn would be soon enough. We all learn it's a necessary evil."

Much more seriously, Lance asked, "Do you think we told each other too much?"

Scowling and shaking his head, Scott assured, "To be roommates, we'd better get used to telling the truth. At some point, one of us will have a girl friend or a boy friend. We'll have to deal with lots of daily stuff, so no, I don't think that we've messed up. I think we've started on the right foot. Goofing around is a good way to deal with it."

Nodding, Lance prompted, "Let's head to the diving well before lunch."

Scott sniggered, "Let me finish organizing socks and undies."

Lance giggled, "I'd help, but I know where them socks have been."

"I've got underwear on," Scott chuckled.

After humming thoughtfully for a few seconds, Lance muttered, "That's another point for consideration; I'd guess half the guys here wear underwear."

"I can go commando in this climate." Scott reminded, "Compared to Manhattan's heat and humidity, this is way more comfortable."

"We'll eventually have to fit in with the locals," Lance stated, and stood to remove his underwear. Purposefully, Scott attended to his clothes and storing them, instead of watching his roomie strip. Lance put his board shorts and sandals on again. Finished putting his stuff away, Scott zipped his suitcase and then slid it under his bed. He quickly stripped, stuffed his boxer-briefs into a laundry bag in his closet, and then slid back into his shorts and sandals. Thankful that Scott got undressed beyond his open closet door, Lance sat and waited on his bed, knee drumming and softly singing the lead guitar part to Led Zeppelin's 'The Ocean'. When Scott was dressed, he tapped Lance on the arm. They left the room, each singing the guitar parts to 'The Ocean'. After going through the common room, Lance and Scott passed the open door of the Nash brothers' room. Having heard from his big bro what Lance and Scott were caught doing, Phil cracked up.

Sadly shaking his head, Lance giggled, "We're getting a reputation."

"For having fun with stuffed bears and over-stuffed socks."

About the same time Scott and Lance were walking outside of dorm three, Drew was leading Corey and his three sons into townhouse number three. The young family stepped inside the spacious living room. The tan leather sofa was large enough for all five of them to be comfortable. To one side of the sofa was a matching love seat, and on the other side were two matching recliners. Drew paused and turned on the television. Corey, Geoff and Lenny went into the dining room, and then turned left into the kitchen. About to join the rest of the family, Drew and Leo paused to allow Geoff and Lenny to race by and up the stairs.

Drew called, "What're you doin', Cor?"

Turning slightly and looking over the breakfast counter at his hubby, Corey answered, "Just looking in the cabinets. We've got plates, pots, pans and utensils, but no food at all." He then called, "Alden, get some food and stuff in this house, dude."

Alden queried, "Give me an idea of what you'd like, guys?"

Corey checked with Drew, who then answered, "Our main meals will be at the CIC, so snacks and sandwich fixin's, ice cream, potato and corn chips, a variety of cookies, and milk, juices and sodas. We'll definitely need toilet paper, bath, hand and kitchen towels, all those sorts of household supplies."

"It's on the way," Alden replied.

Corey asked Drew, "Are we going to Kaho'olawe today?"

Nodding, Drew replied, "After lunch for a few hours. How long we can stay depends on rescue activity."

Looking up at his new dad, Leo asked, "Are we staying here tonight?"

Drew nodded, "If we can't stay at Kaho'olawe, yes. Keith and Prez are already considering spending the night there."

Leo wondered, "What's the beach house like?"

Corey giggled, "Since we haven't been there, we don't really know."

Pulling his eldest close for a hug, Drew grinned, "We were told it's sort of like the big homes here. I think it'll be a good place for you to get to know all your new cousins and the rest of the Core Rimmers."

Leo giggled, "Kewl, dad. There are so many kids here, I wouldn't know where to start or who to talk to."

Nodding understandingly, Corey softly explained, "A week ago Geoff and Lenny felt the same way, with only a hundred kids here. By Wednesday afternoon, when we adopted Lenny, both of 'em knew all their cousins and had other friends too."

Drew confidently told his eldest, "You'll be like that in a few more days, Leo. When kids have questions for a Core Rimmer, but none are around, guess who they'll ask." Shocked with the news, Leo's eyes widened. It had never occurred to Leo that he was now the son of two leaders.

From upstairs, Geoff and Lenny yelled, "DADDY! POPPA! COME SEE!" Leo giggled at his brothers.

Leading the way, Drew laughed, "We're coming."

Trailing his dad and walking with his pop, Leo wondered, "How can I answer any questions? I just got here."

Corey giggled, "Ask your brothers and cousins that question later. You'll have a whole day together."

Climbing the steps, Drew added, "You witnessed everything in the store, last night and again this morning, Leo. Believe it or not, you've got the answers already."

As soon as Drew stepped onto the second floor landing, both his hands were taken by Geoff and Lenny. Drew was quickly shown the two smaller bedrooms and then dragged to the master bedroom. Peeking into the two smaller bedrooms, Corey giggled, "There's room for four." He glanced down at Leo, playfully asking, "Do you want another little brother, or one your age?"

Covering his face with both hands, Leo cackled, "Too much, too soon, pop!"

Wrapping an arm around Leo, Corey softly giggled, "Oh, the spare bed in that room is for your older boyfriend, isn't it?" Smirking at his pop, Leo jumped away from the arm over his shoulder and tickle attacked with both hands. Cracking up, Corey escaped by racing downstairs.

From the master bedroom, where Geoff and Lenny could be seen testing the mattress springs, kid-style, Drew sniggered, "What did your pop say, Leo?"

Leo giggled, "You call him 'angel'? He's wicked!"

Waving Leo forward, Drew loudly called, "Corey, I'm setting up our computers."

Approaching his dad, Leo grinned, "Do we really need two beds in both bedrooms?"

Drew shrugged and grinned, "We'll check with Grandma Morrison for a spare brother for you. Which reminds me, what were you and the evil angel talking about in the store?"

First checking that his two little brothers weren't paying attention, Leo blushed and giggled, "The birds and the bees, and the birds and the birds, and the bees and the bees."

"Now I get it," Drew smiled. "Too many cute dudes changing clothes?" Nodding, Leo fiercely blushed. Drew grinned, "Let what you've learned settle for a few days. We've all been there. Imagine how I felt, being attracted to Prez, who suddenly became my big brother."

"Really?"

Drew nodded, "Later on, when we visit Kaho'olawe, you'll get the whole story."

"What's the preface?"

"Keith and John are my blood," Drew began, "but Prez is very much a brother too, and so are Kaleo, Tory, Sean, Troy, AJ, Jerry, and all the Core Rimmers. We're all family. All the kids that will be at Kaho'olawe are my nephews and your cousins. All the other kids are brothers and sisters too. That's the biggest lesson we teach every newbie." Noticing Corey out in the hallway, keeping a safe distance from Leo, Drew giggled, "Come check out our workstations, Cor. You can put the finishing touches on this, and I'll take Leo to rearrange the other bedrooms." Geoff and Lenny jumped off the king sized bed and raced past Drew, Leo and Corey, out of the room. Corey got tickled by everyone that passed him.

Drew went to the bedroom furthest from the stairs, where Geoff and Lenny had each chose a bed to bounce upon. Calling Alden, Drew replaced his sons' laptops with top-of-the-line MacBook Pro models. He then had Geoff's and Lenny's clothes transported into dresser drawers and closets. Ready for Leo's room, Drew called for Leo's suitcase. Immediately, Drew called for Alden to remove the extra bed. Heading for the bed with Leo's suitcase on it, Drew asked, "What did you think of your facts of life talk?"

"Trippie," Leo giggled. Watching Drew turn and smile at him,

Leo giggled, "Love has so many different levels and parts. Never once did I imagine how it could be. None of my old friends were really close friends, not so much that I'd want to cuddle with them. Cuddling nude is further out there." Geoff and Lenny raced by the room and downstairs.

Drew asked, "Do you think you have a sexual preference?"

"Boys," Leo blushed, and then muttered, "The basement store made it very clear, but it still seems weird to say."

"Think more about the whole person, not just the attached parts," Drew recommended. Beginning to empty the suitcase and load the dresser, Drew rambled, "Where I was at nine-years-old isn't that much different. Corey was already my best friend. We were already snuggling together, hugging and kissing occasionally too. He slept with me in my twin sized bed, and I slept with him in his double-sized bed. It's only a little more than a year since we started having kid sex; which is more like experimenting. Only since last June has it become much more than experiments. You've got at least another year or more before you're there, Leo. Being an American here in the ROH, you'll learn that you can be comfortable naked. Now that you know your interests, you can start looking for that very special best friend, the one you want to be with most, and can barely wait to be with. Getting there is everything, because without it, all that's left is sex."

Leo wondered, "Who do you think I need to spend time with later?"

"Anyone and everyone," Drew chuckled. "I know Gage, Sammy and Dee are already at Kaho'olawe, and they're in your age bracket." Noticing Leo seemed off in a trance, Drew gently wondered, "What's wrong?"

Snapping himself out of it, Leo frowned, "Stuff from yesterday. I'd rather not talk about it yet, dad."

"Whenever you're ready," Drew promised. Carefully watching his husband and eldest son, Corey came into the room.

Glancing at his dad and pop, Leo sighed, "I really want to fit in."

Noticing Leo's uncertainty, Drew offered a hug. Following Drew's lead, Corey completed the sandwich, cheerfully assuring, "You fit in with us and our family. By the end of the day, you'll have plenty of friends." Leo widely smiled and rapidly nodded.

During the quiet moments Corey, Drew and Leo were embracing, the distant pitter-patter of feet climbing steps was heard. A door slammed. The louder footfalls of Lenny and Geoff racing up to the second floor preceded Lenny's shout; "We got a cellar too, like gramma and grampa's house!"

Geoff giggled, "It's big! There's even a bathroom down there."

Stepping away from the hug, Corey went to the hallway landing giggling, "I guess you dudes like our house?" Enthusiastically, Geoff and Lenny overflowed. Softly giggling, Leo and Drew returned to the unpacking task. Taking their poppa's hands, Geoff and Lenny led Corey down to the basement.

Finishing the unpacking, Drew watched Leo at the closet hanging his rain jacket. When Leo turned to his dad, there was a brief introspective expression Drew noticed on his eldest. Pasting on a bright smile, Leo prompted, "Let's go see the basement, dad," and held out his right hand. Drew took Leo's hand and they started out of the room. On the way down the steps, Leo shared, "My old house didn't have a basement."

Drew suggested, "How about we make it a rec room, with games and toys for you and your brothers?"

"That sounds awesome!" Leo cheered.

"As soon as we get back from Kaho'olawe," Drew chuckled. "I'll bet your brothers are hungry again by now. Let's gather up the speed demons and your pop, and we'll go to the CIC."

"Kewl," Leo smiled, "I'm still pretty full from the milkshake. Next time I won't get a large glass."

* * * * *

Finished in the basement store, John watched his parents and the Gibbons' transport back home. All the newbie boys wanted rooms in the dorm, which wasn't surprising since almost all the boys were older than eleven years old. Eight year old Taron Reyce Otter was the youngest of the group, but he wanted a dorm room too, to prove himself 'grown up' like his three cousins, the Oldcambus brothers. What was surprising was Stu Sutliff trailing Vaziik and Lieutenant Vorik through the store. Only one boy from the prior night's rescues hadn't already taken a dorm room that morning. Over the base PA system, John called for eight-year-old Jimmy Matos to meet the group at dormitory three. Stephen called Alden to have the group transported to the third dorm's common room.

Upon arrival, Lieutenant Vorik told John, "I will return to the Command Center." When John nodded and thanked him, the Vulcan man then told Vaziik, "I am billeted at condominium B, first floor unit 1A. You are welcome."

Nodding once, Vaziik assured, "I will make a point of visiting you there."

Tapping his comm-badge, Vorik ordered, "Return me to the Command Center, Alden." He vanished and the chatter among the newbies got louder with remarks about the huge room they were in.

John smiled, "Oldcambus brothers, you're first on the list," and led the way with Frankie, Stephen and Wade. John called, "Taron, Jimmy Matos is your age. I'm hoping you two like each other enough to share a room." Reaching out empathically, John knew that Travis was in his room. He told Erik Kendricks, "There's a guy your age in a room alone, dude. Maybe you two will consider becoming roommates." He then tapped his sub-vocal, telling Alden, "Get room twenty-one set up for three, with bunk beds, an extra desk, chair, dresser and computer." Passing room twenty, where Travis was shirtless, John called, "Got a minute, Trav?"

"I'm not here a full day and already putting on a fourth shirt," Travis sniggered. Stepping out of his room with a clean polo shirt in his hand, Travis smirked, "I spilled chocolate milkshake on the one I wore to breakfast, and spilled cola on another at the diving well. It's all Darren's fault, showin' off without warnings."

Stephen giggled, "You're our first accident prone Rimmer, Trav."

Travis chuckled, "Normally, I could make it through an entire day in one shirt, but even though I feel pretty relaxed, I guess I'm still a little jittery."

Ignoring all the curious thoughts about Darren that the newbies were having, John grinned, "Travis just got here yesterday, and moved into the dorm this morning." Turning to Travis, John smiled, "Trav, meet your new neighbors. First we have the Oldcambus brothers, Kassidy is fourteen, and the twins are Kade and Karey." Casual greetings traveled around.

Opening the door across the hall from Travis' room, Stephen saw the furniture rearrangements done and called, "Right here, guys."

The twins cheered, "Awesome!" and hurried with their suitcases, past their big brother into the room. Sadly shaking his head, Kassidy followed his brothers.

Distracted by the threesome, John returned his attention to Travis, saying, "We're a little uneven with newbies again, bro." Gesturing to each boy with his right hand, John said, "Taron's eight, and Erik is fourteen. I was hoping you and Erik might like to try rooming together. You're both from California, so you've got a little something in common."

Trav nodded and offered his right hand to knock knuckles with Erik, warmly saying, "It's good to meet you."

Widely smiling, Erik greeted, "The pleasure's mine."

Of course, John couldn't help telepathically hearing the surface thoughts each of the two teens were successfully stifling. Travis thought Erik was the cutest dude he'd ever seen, and Erik thought just as highly of Travis, who still hadn't managed to get his clean shirt on. In fact, Erik's thoughts sounded like a broken record, repeatedly chanting, "Omigod! What a hunky champ!"

Wondering how clean Travis' shirt would be in a few hours, John helplessly giggled, "Are you two willing to share a room?"

Almost simultaneously, Erik and Trav enthusiastically agreed, "Yeah, sure." Jerking his head toward his room, Travis left the hallway and Erik followed, dragging his suitcase along.

Stephen, Frankie and Wade uncontrollably giggled at the two star-struck teens seemingly floating into the room they now shared.

Jogging through the common room, Jimmy Matos hollered, "John! You called, dude?"

Nodding, John answered, "Just trying to keep a bunch of you dudes from living alone." He then gestured to Taron Reyce Otter and introduced the two eight year olds. They shook hands and knocked knuckles. John moved on to Vaziik and Stuart, smiling, "You two hit it off from the start, so I don't need to ask."

Watching his new Vulcan friend, Stuart smiled, "The Clan is Vulcan, and I've only learned a few things at school about the planet and the people, so it's been good."

"And I will learn more than I might in books from Stuart... Stu," Vaziik somewhat awkwardly stated.

Opening the door to room twenty-two, Stephen smiled, "Welcome home, guys."

Going to Taron and Jimmy, John asked, "How're you two doing?"

"I think it'll work fine," Jimmy answered. "Taron's not from LA, but I think we've got a lot in common."

"Plotting ways to annoy my stuck up cousins," Taron softly sniggered, and then bounced his eyebrows at Jimmy.

Grinning, Jimmy asked, "Are we the youngest dudes in this hall?"

John thought a moment then answered, "Yeah, in this hall you are. Down the other hall there are four younger than you."

"Perfect!" Jimmy giggled, "We're too young and innocent to be blamed for anything!"

Evilly cackling, the two boys went to the open room where Stephen was standing. John giggled, "Jimmy, I know you're all sweet and innocent, but without your suitcase and clothes, that image is pretty much shot, don't you think?"

Jimmy shrugged and grinned, "I was at the pool before you called me. At first, it was a little scary, but it was kewl. To have lunch and dinner at the CIC, I will need clothes, though."

Tapping his sub-vocal, John called, "Alden, get Jimmy's suitcase, bro."

Over the hallway's ceiling speakers, Alden shared, "That's the last suitcase, John. Everyone has a home for the first time in a week."

Taron softly asked Jimmy, "What was scary at the pool?"

"Lots of dudes were naked," Jimmy replied.

"That's not so scary," Taron offered. "In Louisville, me and my friends would skinny dip every summer."

Leading the way to their room, Jimmy grinned, "I never did, until today."

Watching Jimmy and Taron step into their room, Stephen told John, "And there are only two empty rooms left in this hall, hon."

Nodding, John grinned, "An entire floor filled in a day and a half." Noticing Frankie and Wade almost toe-to-toe, John chuckled, "Are you ready to try again, Wade?"

Wade giggled, "Only a little bit, daddy." With those words, Wade rose off the floor a few inches, so he was looking in Frankie's eyes.

Taking a few steps closer to his boys, Stephen offered his hands to Wade. Rising another few inches, and looking in his poppa's eyes, Wade delightfully squealed, "I feels like a balloon!"

Frankie giggled, "But there's nothing pushing or pulling you up, is there?"

"Just like a balloon," Wade cackled.

John grinned, "Come on, let's get some lunch," and levitated the boy higher.

Stephen giggled, "Do you wanna walk, Wade?"

Shaking his head, Wade laughed, "I think I gotta whiz again!"

Clapping his hands, Frankie cracked up. Stephen giggled, "I think it's a little too much for him, John."

Turning around, John led his family and youngest to the lavatory. The newbies getting settled in their rooms noticed the airborne five-year-old going by their open rooms. Stephen noticed Erik and Travis standing very close together, softly talking, but not getting much unpacking done. He silently asked John; 'By the end of the day, hon?'

'I don't think it will take that long,' John replied. A few moments later, Wade was floating before a big boy's urinal again.

* * * * *

Over the pool and diving well speakers, Aerosmith was playing 'Janie's Got A Gun', when Drew's voice interrupted the chorus; Janie's got a... "LUNCH!"

Amongst the sniggering teens at the diving well, the Nash brothers hollered, "DREW!"

"What?" Drew giggled, and waved his arm at all the other kids getting out of the pools, adding, "It's lunch time."

Giggling hysterically and sadly shaking his head, Phil tried to put his board shorts on, but stumbled into each leg. Craig smirked, "Janie's got a lunch loses all the power and punch. It's not the same."

Tying his board shorts, Phil giggled, "That's Craig's favorite song. He knew a girl named Jane, but it didn't work..."

"PHIL!" Craig shouted.

"WHAT?" Phil loudly laughed. Closing his eyes, Craig sadly shook his head.

Corey giggled, "How about we have Alden play music in the dining room? We'll even have him replay the song, dude."

Nodding agreement, Craig changed the subject by asking, "Where are Prez and Keith?"

"Hiding," Drew grinned. "Because Prez burned his bottom, Thursday night at the Hyatt, they're laying low." A group of tweens and little kids, including Carmella, Kokaku, Rena, Bruce, Ben, and the quadruple Rs and their guests surrounded Corey's and Drew's family.

Corey explained, "The six oldest Core Rimmers worked their butts off Thursday night and all day yesterday. Before Drew's mom has a meltdown, they're taking some time off to chill."

Having seen news reports on TV about the Hyatt, Craig nodded understandingly, and said, "We just haven't seen or heard much from them since we arrived. During breakfast this morning, Prez and Keith were there five or ten minutes, and then they were gone."

Nodding, Drew chuckled, "My mom sent Prez a flaming glare during dinner last night. Right away, Prez knew he was off duty. He was home, in his townhouse, and asleep around eight o'clock."

Already dressed, Darren Devault told Craig, "It's been a weird few days for the Core Rimmers; Wednesday through Friday were pretty messed up. Believe me, soon enough you'll see and hear Prez several times a day."

After putting his T-shirt on, Craig grinned, "I'd just like to get to know them better." Fully dressed, Phil joined his brother and gave a thumbs up to Drew and Corey, signaling that they were kewl to go to the CIC. Drew waved and the pack around him began walking toward the dining room.

Joining Darren, his roommate Lance Elling asked, "What do you want to know? We could probably tell you anything "

Slipping into his sandals, Craig shrugged, "With such a big Clan, I was wondering how he manages everyone."

Darren grinned, "Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike are very much hands off managers. They don't get involved unless they absolutely have to."

Lance tapped Darren and chuckled, "They missed Reyes' initiation." Lance then told Craig and Phil, "While you guys were getting settled, Derrick and Mike tossed Reyes into the diving well. When any of the Core Rimmers are hanging with the Clan, they mix in, just wanting to be regular kids, like the rest of us."

Now that Craig was dressed and ready, Darren suggested, "Let's have lunch together. We'll tell you all you want to know."

"Kewl," Craig smiled. They started walking around the pool house.

Seeing Tony Lanning, Ray Varga and the Eckhart brothers nearby, Phil waved them over to join them.

Craig asked, "What happens when there's trouble; arguments or disagreements?"

Darren wondered, "What is there to fight about?" and reminded, "We've all got the same stuff in our rooms. Maybe little kids will whine about playing a video game in the rec room, but any of us can just say, 'wait your turn,' and lead the kid to another game."

"The Core Rimmers don't get involved in that stuff, because any of us can do it," Lance stated. "This isn't the city, where folks mind their own business and don't get involved. From day one, they've told us that we're family. They've shown the way, so each of us can pick up the slack."

"All the Hundsers say, 'be happy and be safe,' so we go with that," Darren offered.

A few paces ahead of the group, Roy Angulo and Pete Dano overheard the conversation. Pausing to join the group, Roy grinned, "A few days ago, two little dudes were playing rough in the pool, really close to the side. Before I could get there, Sammy and Gage each went to a kid and picked him up, showed them how close they were to getting hurt, and then tossed the kids into the center of the pool."

Pete chuckled, "That was Wednesday. They had been Core Rimmer sons only a little more than a day."

Nodding, Roy laughed, "Later, at dinner time, the odds were made very clear when a food fight broke out, all the kids, twelve and under, against all the teenagers." The newbies began evilly chuckling, and wishing they had been around for the food fight.

Darren chuckled, "We're out numbered, but we can easily handle two little squirts at a time. It takes two or more of them to deal with one of us."

Many meters ahead of the large group of tweens and teens, John, Stephen, Frankie and Wade were seen. Lance checked with the newbies, "You dudes know John is N-Gen?"

Phil giggled, "Yeah, at Des Moines we saw some of what he can do."

Darren grinned, "Just before the shit hit the fan Thursday night, John levitated every kid and all the adults by the pool and diving well."

"And the furniture, and the weights in the rec center," Lance finished. "His eyes started glowing blue when he picked up the weights."

Roy nodded, "He's ten, and might want to be tossed into the pool or diving well, so he'll let you, but if he decides you need to be dunked too, he'll pick you up without ever laying a hand on you."

Gesturing to Roy, Pete sniggered, "The voice of experience. John let Roy toss him into the diving well twice. The third time Roy picked up John, Roy floated up about ten meters and they both dropped into the well."

Roy chuckled, "An hour or so later, there's John and Stephen on television, holding up a forty story tower, while his brothers raced inside to rescue trapped people." The old timers noticed expressions of disbelief on the faces of the newbies. Stephen, Frankie and Wade went inside the CIC, but John paused, turned and grinned at the group. Suddenly, all ten of the teens and tweens were walking two meters above the ground. Darren, Lance and Pete cracked up. Roy loudly laughed, "Higher, so we can see the entire base and the beach, John."

Without any effort, John steadily levitated the group about twenty meters above the ground, leaving Rikko on the ground barking, "STOP THAT! GET DOWN HERE!"

Glancing around the floating pack, Darren sniggered, "Do you believe us now?" Nervously nodding heads and giggling affirmations flowed around the group of newbies.

Adding to the lesson, John stepped inside the CIC to join his family while the levitated group slowly lowered to the ground. Darren asked Craig, "Are you getting the picture?"

"I think so," Craig uncertainly muttered.

"Look at it this way," Roy suggested, "they've got three hundred kids to care for, and their own kids, and their parents' families. It's unrealistic for them to be able to spend time individually with each of us. When they can, they certainly do, more so than my real parents ever did with me."

Landing on the ground, Pete grinned, "The real trip is that they treat every kid like their best friend, when they know only the basic background. In my own case, I came here to get off the street. Not knowing any better, I challenged Prez, telling him none of our group needed a head shrink. He calmly and coolly got in my face and told me how it was. I didn't know what to think or say to the dude. He's a year younger than me, but as tall, and now that I've seen him naked, I know he's better built than I am. He could've grabbed me and walked me back out the gate. Instead, he told all twelve of us how things were, with over a hundred kids and everyone else on this base on his shoulders."

Darren added, "Considering all that, and that Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike get on stage to perform for us, confidence is a small word to describe any of the Core Rimmers, including the younger four."

"I found that out myself when I first saw the dorm bedrooms and common room," Craig admitted.

Phil nodded and sniggered, "Drew didn't act like he was younger and smaller than you, that's for sure."

Lance smirked, "Do they ever hold anything against us?"

"Nope," Pete, Roy and Darren chorused.

"They're our brothers, plain and simple," Lance stated.

"Not only are we getting all that family stuff, that lots of us haven't ever had, and entertainment around every corner, we're getting educational possibilities no one else would dare even offer us," Roy reminded.

The group walked into the CIC dining room. Grabbing a tray and getting into the chow line, Phil asked Craig, "What're you thinking?"

Craig shrugged, "That we're lucky on so many levels. I worried that we'd be split up, or that I'd need to quit school and work, to give us a tiny single room to live, eat, and sleep in. Instead, we've gone from one family into another. All I want to do now is really get to know everyone here, pick up the pieces, build something as good or better, and move on."

"Let's find a soccer ball after lunch," Phil suggested.

"Sounds good to me," Craig nodded. He went over to the salad bar, got a plate and built his salad.

Coming into the kitchen next were Stu, Vaziik, Ray, Tony and all three Oldcambus brothers. Ray introduced Phil to the other newbies. Ray realized that their entire hallway had shown up within moments of each other without planning it. Only Travis was missing from the chow line, but was assumed to already be in the dining room, since his bedroom door was closed.

Sitting down at a table with his family, John noticed little Dulce Kentesius looking around the dining room at many of the Battle Of Earth newbies. Now and then, Dulce's cousin, Antonia would whisper to her distracted cousin. It seemed that many of the newest kids came to Ewa Beach with the spirits of their loved ones. Reaching out to the clairvoyant little girl, John struck up a telepathic conversation with Dulce, learning that she had always been able to see spirits; that some visited once in a while, but these Battle Of Earth parents were sticking around their sons. Dulce's family had always accepted her gift, and the five-year-old understood that it sometimes freaked people out. Fairly new to the Clan, Dulce would share what she was seeing with her cousins; six-year-old Felix Nepos, seven-year-old Antonia Nepos, ten-year-old Luke Nepos, and thirteen year old Barbara Nepos.

With his tray loaded with a big salad, a bran muffin, and a large glass of water, Craig told Pete and Darren he would find a large table for them in the dining room. Leaving the chow line without any sort of check-out still felt odd to Craig, but he went into the dining room, searching for an empty large table. He walked past a bunch of smaller tables, where little kids were sitting, and then saw John, Stephen, Frankie and Wade at another table for four near the Command Center. Corey, Drew, Leo, Lenny and Geoff had another table near the center of the room. Not far away was a large, rectangular table that could seat twelve. At the next table over sat Lance Kinchen, Scott Shetley, Chris Stokley and another newbie. Putting his tray down, Craig looked over toward the kitchen. Seeing Pete and Roy, Craig held up an arm so he could be seen. Grinning and nodding, Pete and Roy walked in that direction.

Chris called over, "Craig, are you eating alone?"

Looking over, Craig grinned, "Nope, this table will be filled in a couple o' minutes."

Nodding, "Kewl," Chris then formally introduced Craig Nash to his boyfriend, Jay Montigua.

Going over to that table, Craig noticed the cast and carefully shook hands with Jay, chuckling, "Hey, you don't look too bad, for a dead dude, that is."

Lance Kinchen dropped his fork and covered his mouth with both hands a second before cracking up. With his mouth full, Scott widely smiled and bounced in his chair, quietly laughing. Jay chuckled, "Saint Peter said I wasn't done stirring stuff up, so he sent me back, to lounge in a hospital over night. Chris came with Drew and Corey to bring me here, where I could do more damage faster." Chris sadly shook his head and giggled.

Craig grinned, "I'm with Phil, just past the common room, in the first room on the left. Chauncey and Fred Eckhart are across the hall, with Rikko."

Chris asked Craig, "Where's Travis?"

"Meeting his new roomie, the last I saw," Craig answered.

Scott asked, "Did you meet him yet?"

"Not formally, but I heard John introduce him to Trav as Erik," Craig replied. "He's almost as tall as Trav, kind of thin compared to Trav, and has dirty blond hair."

Evilly grinning, Chris teased Jay, "If you had stayed dead, I probably would've started my search with Travis." Scott and Lance softly chortled.

"Nice," Jay smirked, "no respect for the nearly dearly departed. I guess I need to meet my competition."

Gesturing to his table where Pete, Roy, Darren and Lance Elling were already seated, Craig smiled, "I'm learning about this division from some old timers. We'll chat more later, I'm sure."

Chris nodded and Jay said, "Kewl, man. We'll talk to you later."

"Phil and I are going to kick a soccer ball around after lunch," Craig nodded, and then returned to his table.

Noticing Jay's desire to play, Chris shook his head, softly saying, "Tomorrow, stud; after Doc Andrews checks your bruised brain."

Jay sighed and then wondered, "What're we going to do the rest of today?"

Chris answered, "Hang out by the pools, stroll around the base and show you what's here."

Pointing across the room, Lance told Jay, "That's the rec room.

It's filled with all sorts of games; bigger and better than any arcade I've ever seen in any mall." For another few minutes, Chris, Lance and Scott told Jay about the various facilities on base.

Scott told Lance, "I can't wait to see the auditorium."

Nodding, Lance called over, "Drew?"

"Wassup?" Drew called back.

"Can we check out the auditorium?"

Humming thoughtfully, Drew then answered, "We usually keep it locked and powered down, so little kids don't play in there and hurt themselves, but I'll have Alden unlock it for you."

Lance happily smiled, "Thanks, bro." Drew flashed a thumbs up.

In Drew's sub-vocal, Alden asked, "Is there anyone else to allow inside, besides Lance, Scott, Chris and Jay?"

Drew silently replied, "Any groups of newbies over age twelve, bro. No one goes in alone and no one gets hurt in the dark."

"Got it," Alden said. He then softly called, "Drew?"

Drew answered aloud, "Yeah?"

"I need a family."

"I know you do."

Alden giggled, "How would you like another brother?"

"I'd love it."

"What do you think Keith, Prez and John would say?"

"The very same thing, no doubt about it."

Alden softly wondered, "And your mom and dad?"

"Why are you nervous? I know you talk to them every day."

"So much of the time it's while they're at work. It's pretty much business related. They're very different around any kids than they are at work."

"Have you ever shown them you're a kid?"

Thoughtfully humming for a moment, Alden then wondered, "What qualifies?"

Grinning, Drew prompted, "Come on, dude. Do you giggle? Is it the real you, or one of your VI's? Since I know you can rapidly switch from AI to VI and back again, how much time are they hearing a VI? The Alden I heard several times in California was a VI. The real kid is the one I'm talking with now, the one I've heard most of the morning, wondering how to choose a body, and all its parts!" Corey and Leo sputtered. Both reached for the napkins in the center of the table at once, and the whole family cracked up, including Alden.

"That's completely different!" Alden giggled into Drew's and Corey's sub-vocals. "They're adults! It takes more cycles to process who to pay more attention to than to actually do what you need me to do! All the Core Rimmers get most of my attention, the rest of the Clan gets a fair bit, and then it's all the adults needing to do business."

Corey giggled, "Alden, you're choosing to pay more attention to kids because you are one. Honestly, I think you could choose any family you'd like, and the adults would be just as happy as the kids.

Who you choose is completely up to you."

"Start showing our parents the real you," Drew suggested. "My parents, Corey's dad, Mike's dad, and Derrick's mom all have sub-vocals. Imagine having a body size and type conversation with one or all of them. Face it, dude, when humans show emotions, they're showing the real person inside. That's your clue. Where you belong becomes apparent."

Alden confirmed, "Could I really talk about that stuff with them, like I would with you guys?"

Drew grinned, "Try it on our dads first. Hearing our moms' perspectives would be good too. I wouldn't mind being around to at least hear some of that conversation."

Corey answered, "Drew and I were there when your software was designed. We know not to call you 'bro,' because we know not to influence your choice. Sure, we slip now and then, but we try not to sway what has to be your choice."

Giggling madly, Leo wondered, "What are you talking about?"

"Choosing a family," Drew replied.

"That's easy," Leo smiled. "Imagine what it's like getting hugged. When you want to shrink and hide, it's bad. When you want to snuggle closer, that's right. Dad was first to hug me, pop was next, before we left Des Moines. That said it was right." Lenny and Geoff enthusiastically agreed.

"Don't forget the benefits of catnip!" Charles added in passing, on his way towards the kitchen for a bowl of milk.

Chauncey's puppy, Rikko hurried over to say hello. Seeing the large Siberian Husky running at him, Charles puffed up then bolted under the table, then tore for the next table, and then under the table where Lance, Scott, Chris and Jay were sitting. Since the puppy wasn't giving up, Charles unhappily meowed to be transported out of the CIC and back to the safety of home. Around the dining room, most of the kids were giggling.

Over in the corner, Shirley almost fell off of her pear-tree perch in laughter, partridge-style.

Unaccustomed to all of this, Leo giggled, "When are we going to the beach house, dad?"

Kerry interjected his two cents. "If you want, I can talk to our resident Mickey Mouse, and we can have you visit the house last week!"

"Or next month!" George added.

"Or maybe five-seconds before you asked?" Alden added helpfully. Rapidly blinking and trying to understand, Leo had no idea what the AIs were talking about.

"MEDIC!" John yelled with a giggle. "We need temporal tranquilizers over here!" Louder laughter broke loose.

Waddling out of the kitchen, carrying two trays of fruits, cookies and an entire pineapple upside-down cake, Lance Kinchen's Panda, Paulie shuffled over toward his companion. Dozens of kids and their teddy bears took notice of the giant VI Panda. Scott softly muttered, "It... is... alive." Lance fainted and fell face first onto his tray.

Scott, Chris and Jay hollered, "MEDIC HERE TOO!" Laughter became hysteria.

Watching Scott trying to revive Lance, Paulie asked, "Does this mean no dessert?"

"Don't worry!" Alden reassured Paulie. "He'll be just fine, as soon as we get the carrot out of his nose."

As Lance came around, John handed him a PADD. "Prez says the next Pissed Off Chickens tournament starts in fifteen minutes. Your logon is already set up."

Stephen giggled, "The girls say that you need to stay out of their changing room."

Turning to Scott and whimpering, Lance sighed, "I'm gonna go back to our room, and play 'Dazed And Confused' about twenty times."

Nodding, Scott sniggered, "I'll join you," and guzzled down the last of his soda.

Paulie said, "And I'll bring dessert."

Not knowing how to deal with his currently speaking Panda, Lance carefully suggested, "Why don't you pass that around to the kids here, Paulie?"

Paulie asked, "You're not hungry for cake or cookies?"

"No," Lance softly replied, "these other kids would enjoy it, and you too. Make some new friends, Paulie."

Nodding, Paulie giggled, "That's my generous best friend. Sure, I can do that."

Paulie was about to turn to start offering the cakes and cookies to the little ones when an arm (with a hand attached, thankfully) appeared out of thin air and snagged a few, leaving behind a different cookie in trade.

Paulie turned around and blinked at Lance, curiously wondering, "Do you know what just happened?"

Lance shook his head, and then started laughing as two arms appeared and dumped a plate full of still warm, sugar coated cakes onto the already full plate in the Panda's paws.

Balancing the mound very carefully, Paulie snaffled one of the new, strange looking cakes into his mouth. He tasted and checked it for safety, and nodded. "Welsh Cakes, fresh too. And, from the records and recipe from Draco, made by Aunt Helen in the Dragon Division."

Carrying his lunch tray, Scott prompted, "Let's go, Lance," and led the way to the kitchen. Leaving his tray at the dishwasher counter, and taking the PADD off of Lance's tray, Scott asked, "Have you ever played Pissed Off Chickens?"

"I've never even heard of it," Lance grinned, and left his tray at the dishwasher. "Then again, I've never skinny dipped before last night; I've never left a stuffed Panda on my bed, only to have it walk into a room I was in an hour later, and I don't even want to consider whose arms were stealing and replacing cookies, or where the rest of the armless body might be."

Handing off the PADD and heading for the exit, Scott sniggered, "Some questions are better left unasked?"

Fiddling about with the PADD, Lance nodded and giggled, "I've got bigger problems, and about seven minutes to learn Pissed Off Chickens, to play against our Head Rimmer. I'd better learn this game damn fast, or risk disappointing Prez."

Leaning close and looking over, Scott wondered, "Have you figured out the goal of the game?"

"There are various exploding eggs; the white eggs are the least powerful, then silver, then gold, then red are the most powerful. You have your chicken toss eggs at chicken hawks, coyotes, foxes and weasels who are trying to raid the chicks in the hen-house. Seems easy enough."

"There's always a catch," Scott warned. They left the CIC and walked across the quad towards dorm three. Lance started a beginning level of a Pissed Off Chickens game. As soon as a goofy little theme song played, the game began. Chicks ran out of the hen house, a chicken hawk dove from the sky, a fox and a weasel scampered behind rocks, barrels and bushes, a coyote made a dash for it and stole a chick, and Lance hadn't even found an egg to toss yet. The sounds of captured and dying chicks played over the theme music. Scott began laughing.

"FUCK!" Lance hollered, "They failed to mention the chicks don't stay in the hen house, and that all the villains would attack at once! Prez plays this game?"

"Apparently so," Scott chortled.

"I'm more scared now than when Paulie strolled into the dining room," Lance giggled, and managed to toss his first egg, yet missed the thieving weasel completely. Lance grumbled, "I think our leader has a screw loose!" Scott howled laughing, and pulled Lance by the shirt back onto the path. All the way across the quad, Lance concentrated on the game, bitching about the hawks, coyotes, foxes, weasels and his dwindling brood of chicks, while Scott sniggered and kept tugging at his pal's shirt to keep him on course. They walked into the dorm, down the hall and Scott unlocked their dorm room.

Following Scott into their room, Lance screamed, "FUCK! They also failed to mention that when the chicks are gone, the hawk, coyote, weasel and fox come after you!"

Scott laughed, "Maybe you were supposed to save some of the chicks and never get to that point."

"WHERE THE FUCK ARE ALL THE EXPLODING EGGS?" Lance yelled in frustration. His screen filled with red, indicating his chicken was dead. He tossed the PADD onto his bed, and noticed a book laying there. He picked up and opened the manual. Inside the front cover, in large letters, were the words:

P.A.N.D.A. (Positronic Assisted Next-Generation Direct Assistance) Companion

Contact Jory, Noah, or Caleb for technical problems.
Powered by COOKIES!(tm)

There was, in small print, a note: Any sugar rich item will do. Welsh cakes, for instance!

At that point, Lance's PADD beeped at him, indicating it was time to start the pissed-off chicken tournament. Lance grumbled, "Prez better be playing this silly friggin' game, or I'm not wasting my time."

Watching his roommate sit on the edge of his bed to begin the game, Scott grinned, "I'll get our axes out, man."

"Kewl."

Pulling the two guitar cases away from the corner, Scott asked, "Is Prez playing?"

"Yeah." Suddenly and unexpectedly, Lance howled laughing.

Scott grinned, "What?" and set his Strat case on his bed.

"You know those eggs I found in places I had already been?"

"Yeah," Scott replied. He opened his guitar case, grabbed the strap, and flung it over his shoulder.

"It turns out that my chicken has plenty of eggs. I was dropping them as I searched."

Lifting his Stratocaster, Scott wondered, "Well, how do you get your exploding eggs?"

"I shake my chicken," Lance giggled. Cracking up, Scott put his Strat back in its case and flopped onto his bed in hysterics. Getting up and going over to Scott, Lance demonstrated by shaking his PADD, and a second later the sound of exploding eggs could be heard.

Wheezing, Scott laughed, "Don't shake your chicken at me! You might not like the consequences."

Blushing, but concentrating on the game, Lance giggled, "Or maybe I would. It would be more productive than this silly game, that's for sure." Scott gazed at Lance. Glancing up, over the PADD at Scott, both boys howled laughing. Accidentally shaking his PADD, Lance cheered, "MORE EGGS! HELL YEAH!"

"Shake that chicken, baby!" Scott sniggered.

"Speaking of shaking chickens, did you know that fifteen percent of the teens here talk to their penis while masturbating?" Alden asked over the room's speakers. After a pause, Alden then asked "Why do they call it 'choking your chicken'? It's not like penises have feathers." Lance roared laughing.

"I think it's because it rhymes," Scott grinned.

"Uh oh, Prez stopped chucking eggs," Lance reported. Giggling and tossing his PADD onto his bed, Lance stood and announced, "Prez went to be with his guests. He says, he'll check later to see if we can shake our chickens more."

Sadly shaking his head, Scott sniggered, "My roomie was shaking his chicken with our Head Rimmer. I think I'm jealous again."

"Not near as jealous as Keith would be," Lance giggled. He went to get his Les Paul, and then got ready to play.

Standing and then putting the strap on his Stratocaster, Scott grinned, "Did you wonder why Prez got you a PADD to play that game in the first place?"

"John told me he's telepathically connected to Prez and all the Core Rimmers," Lance divulged. "John told Prez what was going on here, that everybody was perfectly fine. Then Paulie waddled in, I face-planted my plate, and Prez's first thought was to have me join a game of Pissed Off Chickens." He giggled, "So he's our leader, a virtuoso, and as looney as they come." Noticing a curious expression on Scott's face, Lance giggled, "What's wrong?"

Shrugging, Scott shared, "I remember learning something that I think fits Prez. 'Don't walk behind me; I may not lead. Don't walk in front of me; I may not follow. Just walk beside me and be my friend.' Maybe that's his philosophy when it comes to leading this division."

"That's very kewl," Lance beamed.

"I can't recall where I learned that or who said it, but it just popped into my head," Scott admitted.

Alden answered, "Albert Camus said it. He was a French Novelist, Essayist and Playwright, and won the 1957 Nobel Prize for Literature, born in 1913 and died in 1960."

Lance giggled, "Is there anything you don't know, Alden?"

"Lots, like how to choose a body to live my life in," Alden giggled.

"Understandable," Scott grinned. "That's a rough question, and one that humans don't get a choice about it."

Looking up at the camera, Lance asked, "When are you getting a body?"

"When I choose my physical attributes, choose a family, and am accepted by that family," Alden answered. "What do you guys think?"

Scott queried, "You could be anything you like?"

"Not anything," Alden giggled. "I would obviously be a male android, but apparent age, race, height, weight, eye, hair and skin color, are all up to me."

Scott hummed then said, "I like the age I'm at, but I know I've still got years until I'm fully grown."

"Whatever apparent age I choose is the way I'll always be," Alden told them.

"I wouldn't want to be younger than I am," Lance shared, "but I won't mind when I'm eighteen and fully grown too."

Nodding agreement, Scott told Alden, "I'd go for a teen body. I can do stuff now that I couldn't when I was younger, simply because I'm further along in physical development. Generally, little kids have to work harder for the hand-eye coordination. Without that, I couldn't have started playing guitar."

Lance smiled, "Yup, I feel the same way. Just carrying this Les Paul is way easier than it used to be."

"It's a heavier guitar than a Strat or an acoustic," Scott reminded.

"When I got it, I'd wind up sitting after about twenty minutes," Lance offered. "Now I can stand and play for at least an hour before I start to feel the weight."

Alden told them, "I'd want to play with littler, younger kids too, though."

Lance replied, "Then thirteen or fourteen is perfect. You can still play with younger kids, but just have to be a little more careful, because you'll be way stronger than them. We're still kids too, enough so that we can flip from acting younger, our own ages, or even more maturely than our age."

Scott said, "I think it's important that you fit your family too, meaning you're obviously that family's kid."

"That helps a lot, guys," Alden giggled. "Thanks for sharing. There's still a bunch of decisions to make."

"Like what?" Lance and Scott chorused.

Alden giggled, "Being a teen exposes the whole sexuality topic."

Scott smiled, "You'll get a different answer from everyone you talk to about it."

"Yeah, I've noticed," Alden giggled. "Almost sixty percent of boys here talk to their erections in the mornings." Lance and Scott laughed. Alden giggled, "You two didn't this morning."

Lance giggled, "Because Scott was two urinals away to hear it, but I was. Even alone, there's a frustration factor, standing there holding your pecker for longer than necessary."

"I definitely was too," Scott admitted, "and didn't say anything aloud for the same reason; Lance and everyone would've heard."

"Oh man," Alden whined, "the statistics are totally blown away if guys silently talk to their dicks. The question then becomes, when don't guys talk to their dicks?"

"In front of their parents!" Lance laughed.

Nodding, Scott sniggered, "And in church. The rest of the time is fair game."

Alden giggled, "Back to the drawing board I go!"

Lance chuckled, "Before you go drawing obscene body parts, can you tell us if there's a hard rock or heavy metal radio station here?"

Alden answered, "There's not a local station in the ROH, but there are satellite radio stations you can find. The ones from the United States are channels 5050 thru 5069 on your satellite receiver."

"Excellent!" both boys cheered, and walked over to the television and stereo. Scott operated the satellite remote control and Lance got the stereo powered up.

In the meantime, most of the Clan was leaving the CIC dining room. Some went into the rec room, but many went outdoors, destined for the pools, the playground or the rec center. Chris Stokley and Jay Montigua went for a walk with Rafe, Pat O'Hara and Ralphie Bonham. The Oldcambus brothers and their cousin, Taron ran directly for their trikes. Ready to try something new, Jimmy Matos joined his roommate. As promised, Mrs. Hundser had ordered additional trikes. There were now twelve trikes in three sizes under a covered trike garage at the Southwest corner of the helicopter and shuttle pad. Waiting on an adult sized trike, Carl Seibert introduced himself, and then told the boys, "The East side of the base is where the school is, and where a family of squirrels have taken up residence. We'll blaze a new trike trail on the West side of the base."

Down the shorter hall of dorm three, Travis McAuley and Erik Kendricks had shared their Battle Of Earth losses, and gotten to know each other while unpacking their suitcases and setting up their room. Travis learned that Erik's mom had died of cancer three years earlier. With everything unpacked, and their suitcases stowed under their beds, Travis asked, "Are you ready for lunch?"

"Almost," Erik answered. He then faced his new boyfriend, giggling, "I haven't had a shower since yesterday morning, California time. Noon yesterday, I was escorted to a hospital; by nine last night, I was an orphan; at noon today, Des Moines time, I was being welcomed to the Clan. To me, the longest day was even longer, because of too many time zone changes. Before I go anywhere else, or go any further with you, that's first on my list." Reaching out his right hand, Erik prompted, "Com'on, Champ."

Taking Erik's hand in his, Travis grinned, "I've already showered today, and if I go with you, neither of us will get any cleaner."

Taking a few steps closer, Erik giggled, "I know exactly what you mean, but our first time won't be in public, it'll be right here. Even if you don't shower, I want you with me."

Reaching for and taking Erik's free hand, Travis asked, "Newbie jitters?"

Erik stole a tender kiss then giggled, "The new place isn't as important as being with my new boyfriend. That's what's really blowing me away. Yesterday was a sucky day. So far, today is shaping up much better. I don't want to be away from you for ten minutes; sorry, no can do."

Travis warmly smiled, "There's never been anyone like you."

"My dad would've really liked you, Champ," Erik fondly reminded, and led the way to the door.

Travis chuckled, "I always thought motorcycle and cop were two words that didn't belong together." They left their room with the door open.

"He liked to rock and roll," Erik smiled. "He's been missing my mom for years. The most peaceful and relaxing thought now is that they're together again." They walked into the lavatory and went directly into the mob shower. Sitting Travis down on the bench in the changing area, Erik took his already unbuttoned top sport shirt off, telling his boyfriend, "You're giving me purpose again, someone to care for." Tossing his sport shirt onto the bench, Erik lifted his muscle Tee shirt up and off. "Since my mom passed, the most important times were dinners with my dad. Eating dinner with a bunch of kids I didn't know is what freaked me out last night."

Nodding, Travis shared, "I think that's what's been missing since I got here yesterday; someone familiar that I could share stuff with. I could only barely see myself as being a brother for any kid, but now, with you, I can see that more clearly."

Now shirtless, Erik giggled, "You're my boyfriend, Travis. I'll always stay near you, and back you up on everything. I told you how I used to be with my buds at home." He reached to unbutton and unzip his shorts.

"The dancin' slut," Travis recalled, and bounced his eyebrows.

"I would dirty dance to any style of music with any babes, dudes, and even dogs," Erik giggled. "All that major league scoping and showing off, but I never got off the ground with anyone. I never had to pull any of those slick boy moves on you." Noticing Travis' eyes closed, Erik tossed his shorts onto the bench, laughing, "Are you really that shy that you can't look?"

Opening his eyes, Travis blushed and chuckled, "I was imaging you dancing like you were with me in our room, only in someone else's living room, with humans and their pets, and focusing on your voice." Purposefully looking at Erik's boxer brief covered mid section, Travis giggled, "I do want to see, and I'm seriously debating stripping, just so we're even and you can see me too."

Shrugging and then tossing his shorts aside, Erik giggled, "I can make this like high school locker room showers, but can you? What I want to do with you requires privacy, Champ."

"I think I'll leave it up to you," Travis smiled.

Nodding and pushing his underwear down, Erik was leaning forward and at eye level with Travis when he whispered, "Take the shower across from me." He planted a kiss then stepped back, giggling, "That's the last one you get until we're back in our room."

"Tease," Travis giggled, taking note of Erik's cute uncut limp dick. Travis was born Irish Catholic and was circumcised at birth.

Walking backwards into the mob shower, Erik shook his head and playfully reminded, "I promised you that we're sleeping together tonight, and from now on. What we'll see now, we'll be seeing an awful lot of from now on."

Starting to strip, Travis leered, "I like what I'm seeing, cuddle bunny."

Still walking backwards and scoping out his boyfriend, Erik giggled, "Me too, Champ. Being in your arms is the most comfortable I've been in more than a day. I already know I belong in my hunky champ's arms, what I see only confirms what I feel." Now that Travis was naked, Erik turned his shower on, purposefully getting blasted with cool water and keeping it a little cooler than he would normally prefer. He had always hoped for a boyfriend with a cut dick, and without even asking if that were the case, had accomplished his goal.

Getting shower water running across from Erik as he was told, Travis evilly snickered, "Your backside is as nice as your front, so you might as well turn around."

Wiping water off his face and spinning around, Erik giggled, "It's the tall, hunky and quiet types I should've been focusing on all these years."

"I never focused on anyone before, until you," Travis chuckled.

"Uh huh," Erik suspiciously giggled. "You don't need to romance me, Trav, but I love it."

"The truth happened to seem romantic to you," Travis chuckled. "The truth is, I talk plenty. You left me speechless."

Cupping his soapy hands over his mouth, Erik tried to sound like a baseball announcer. "That one was low and inside. Two strikes and the batter is still woozy as he steps back up to the plate."

"The next one I'll toss underhanded and try to cop a feel," Travis joked.

Erik loudly laughed, "This water is nowhere near cool enough! We are outta here!" Watching Erik spin to face the wall and quickly rinse off, Travis cracked up. In no time, they had grabbed towels and their dirty clothes, and then hurried back to their room. As soon as the door was closed, they were wrapped in one another's arms, lapping water droplets off of each other.

Outside at the soccer field, Craig and Phil Nash had drawn a small crowd and a few participants in their soccer warm-ups. Tony Lanning and Ray Varga joined the two brothers in their soccer demonstrations. Coming from the rec center's equipment room with two more soccer balls, Bruce Downing led Dewi and Kokaku to the field. Pausing at the edge of the field, Bruce began encouraging the boys to play, and separating the spectating group into three groups; four to eight year olds; nine to twelve year olds; and thirteen and up. By this time, Craig, Phil, Tony and Ray had all figured out what was going on. They left the field. Craig and Tony took the pack of ten older boys to begin lessons. Phil and Ray took the middle group, and Bruce took the youngest boys onto the field. The Stoeher twins had played soccer before and became coaches too, assisting Bruce with the group of the younger kids. For the next hour, the groups practiced passing and dribbling the ball.

Completing the trip around the base perimeter, Chris, Jay, Rafe, Pat and Ralphie passed by and saw what was going on. Wanting to participate, Jay loudly whined. "No," Chris giggled, for the fourth time. In addition to wanting to try all three diving boards at the well, Jay had wanted to lift weights, and play handball inside the rec center too. Chris, Pat, Rafe and Ralphie practically dragged Jay back to the pools. John and his family were playing in the pool with some younger kids.

Over at the diving well, Corey was up on the five meter board, and noticed Chris leading his reluctant partner away from the soccer field. Corey called his hubby and pointed. Drew turned and saw who Corey was pointing at. Drew turned to Leo, Lenny and Geoff, evilly grinning, "Back me up?"

A chorus of 'okay daddies', and a single, 'sure dad' rang out. Four bare butts jogged the path toward Chris and Jay, causing Corey to break into giggles. Still giggling, Corey jumped, twisted once, did a summersault and then splashed into the well. He quickly swam to the side and climbed out, then hurried to be with his family.

Seeing his young leader and his sons approaching, Jay sniggered, "You're really not giving me the impression of a shy, gay boy, Drew."

Gesturing to groups of kids around the pools, Drew smiled, "It's home and this is family, ye of the bruised brain. It's time to pay up, big bro. Drop 'em!"

"We wanna see some skin!" Corey, Geoff, Lenny and an extremely embarrassed Leo chorused. Nearby and resting on chaise lounges, Keanu and Liki overheard what was going on and cracked up.

Nodding and then turning to Chris, Jay chuckled, "Just the lowest board, please?"

Rolling his eyes, Chris smirked, "The three meter board, and only once, then you swim to the side and get out. The doc said no exertion, Jay. If Doc Andrews sees, I'm playing ignorant." Pleased for what might be his only chance at something fun this day, Jay quickly took off his shirt. A bunch of large bruises scattered around Jay's arms, chest, shoulders and back that hadn't been noticed that morning at the hospital were plainly seen in the sunlight.

Joining the group, Keanu sniggered, "This makes you a hundred percent Clan, Jay. Your boyfriend took a few hours, until almost dinner time, to drop his shorts."

Seeing Jay's torso, Liki gasped, "Damn, Jay." He then faced Chris and giggled, "Your boyfriend has one of the sweetest six packs on base, dude." Evilily grinning, Chris bounced his eyebrows, but said nothing about how often he had gently traced those abs with his fingertips. Scowling, Keanu nudged his roomie. "What?" Liki giggled, "Now there are exactly four sets of awesome abs on this base; Jay's, Keith's, Roy's and Craig's. You've got a four pack, like Prez, Derrick, Pete and a few others." Gesturing at his own mostly flat, but undefined belly, Liki giggled, "This is the vast majority of dudes around here."

Once Jay had removed the last of his clothes, Corey and Drew locked eyes with the newbie, pleased that he hadn't balked and easily got naked. What hung between Jay's legs was typical and completely average in comparison to the vast majority of Rimmer teen boys, which Jay obviously knew, or he wouldn't have gotten naked so quickly.

Naked and walking closer to the two arguing roommates, Jay softly smiled, "If you two aren't boyfriends yet, I have to wonder why not. You're acting like a couple." He passed between them, walked over to the low, three-meter board, climbed the few steps and did one simple dive, bouncing hard on the board and flipped up-side down. Jay cut into the water like a knife, with most of his splash made by the cast on his wrist. Around the well, teens and tweens applauded an excellent dive.

Drew asked Chris, "He's done a lot of diving?"

Nodding, Chris smiled, "At the local boys and girls club, and we've gone to beaches in Maryland. I haven't mentioned that you guys surf, and won't until tomorrow."

Flashing a thumbs up, Drew chuckled, "Message received. It won't be mentioned by me or mine, but plenty of kids around might say something."

Evilly grinning, "I'll have to limit his exposure," Chris picked up Jay's clothes. To loud laughter from all those gathered, Chris went to the diving well. He asked his partner of three years, "How do you feel?"

Holding onto the side of the well at Chris' feet, Jay smiled up, "Fine, baby. Only the flip felt a little disorienting, so I won't do that again until tomorrow." Before Chris could reply, Jay bounced up, grabbed his boyfriend by the waist and pulled him into the well, earning a yelp, more laughter and applause. Jay's clothes rained down into the well on top of them.

Being led away from Drew's family, Liki softly told Keanu, "I can't help noticing."

Shaking his head, Keanu admitted, "That's not what worries me. Course I noticed his abs. We're being noticed and kids are figuring us out though. As much as I definitely do care about you, I just don't know how to feel about it. It's not a happy feeling, like it should be; it's more like anxiety, or even a little scared."

Nodding, Liki assured, "That only means you want us more private. I can try to keep it that way too."

"I don't want you changing anything though, Liki. The way you are and the things you say is what I love. That's what's messing me up inside. I could've wholeheartedly agreed about Jay's abs, but instead, I nudged you, which is what I think made everything obvious. So it's not you, it's my reactions completely. I'm wanting it private, and then turning around and making it public. Something's gotta give, and it's all me, dude."

Liki frowned, "Not any more. One major thing I've learned the last week is we're a team now. Let's always keep that in mind; we make it as a couple, or we break it - together. It's not on you, or on me, it's us."

Nodding, Keanu softly smiled, "Let's get a snack and a cold drink."

Heading for the chairs where they left their clothes, Liki giggled, "Uh oh! What did I say this time?"

"Just because we're going for a snack doesn't mean anything," Keanu softly chortled. Liki widely smiled at his lover. Keanu laughed, "Nope, not this time. We'll come back out here."

Liki sniggered, "For how long?"

"A while, until you accidentally get me revved up again," Keanu chuckled.

"I never do it intentionally," Liki giggled. "That's my story and I'm stickin' to it!"

After Jay's dive and watching Chris get pulled into the well, Drew, Corey and their three sons got dressed. They then went over to the pool to tell John and Stephen that they were about to go to Kaho'olawe, and to have their security, Chuck, Conner, Ata and Baakir join them. Lenny noticed Leo's worried expression and nudged Geoff. Both little guys went to Baakir and were soon lifted into the gorilla's arms. Ata offered Leo an arm, and suggested, "Climb aboard, Leo."

Seeing Leo was still uncertain, Chuck climbed up onto Baakir's back. With one arm, Ata swept up Conner. Giggling at the demonstrations, Leo carefully climbed up onto Ata's back. The first thing Leo noticed was how much larger Ata's back was compared to his real dad's shoulders.

Telepathically, John told Drew and Corey, 'We're going to get some additional Intel help from the Ark compound; a family of Founders; two boys and two adults, named Praefectus. They'll be here before dinner, local time. I also want to empathically check on our newbies. We'll hang out here for another hour or so, and if the Praefectus family hasn't shown up by then, we'll go to the beach house.'

Nodding, Drew said, "If you need help, let us know. We'll see you later."

Corey tapped his comm-badge, telling Alden, "All nine of us are ready for the beach house, Alden." They vanished from Ewa Beach.

Stephen asked his husband, 'Are you still worried about the Steib brothers and Stoeher twins?'

'Not so much any more,' John answered, 'but they need to control reading surface thoughts of other Battle Of Earth newbies.'

Four naked Steib brothers jogged around the side of the pool toward where John and Stephen were. 'We're fine, big bro!' All four Steibs chorused, and then leaped into the pool, bottoms first, cannonballing their two leaders.

Evilly grinning, John levitated the quadruplets many meters above the pool. Hearing their laughter, John sent them over the pool house and left them hovering above the diving well. "Quads on the wing," Stephen helplessly giggled.

After an hour of jamming to heavy metal music in their dorm room, Lance and Scott approached the diving well, noticed the floating and nude seven-year-olds and cracked up.

Kelly, Lawrence, Matthew and Nick shouted down, "LOOK OUT BELOW!" a few seconds before being released from John's telekinetic grasp and dropping into the well.

Tanning their white city-boy butts, Chris and Jay applauded the quadruplets from their chaise lounges. When all four surfaced, Jay chuckled, "That's what I call, graceful as an elephant in a china shop."

Walking up to the chairs where Chris and Jay were sitting, Lance asked, "How about we check out the auditorium?"

When Chris and Jay agreed and started getting up from their chairs, Scott said, "I'll ask some of the other newbies at the soccer field."

"I'll go with you," Lance offered. Scott grinned and nodded. Lance softly sniggered, "I'm sure Chris and Jay can dress without me watching, and they can find the soccer field too."

"Jay sure looks different without his shirt on," Scott grinned.

Lance giggled, "I noticed that too. I never would've guessed he was that ripped."

"No wonder Chris was a little verklempt last night," Scott softly and uncertainly offered.

"He sure doesn't look verklempt now."

"More like completely composed and satisfied," Scott reverently whispered.

Catching something in Scott's tone, Lance wondered, "What's wrong?"

"Nothin'," Scott quickly answered, and carefully added, "just a little envious, I guess. I'm still racking my brain, trying to figure out what I want."

Nodding, Lance wanted to say something, but kept mum, refusing to orally acknowledge that he was attracted to Scott, and Chris, and Jay, and at least half the other teenaged boys he had met the last day. In comparison, very few of the teenaged girls got a second glance. Choosing a partner wasn't a high priority, so Lance only checked out eye candy. He understood that Scott was older and clearly ready for a partner. Lance only hoped that whomever Scott chose to be with would be a musician too.

The soccer lessons were coming to an end, Lance and Scott noticed. Craig, Phil, Tony and Ray were showing the kids how they could practice alone or in smaller groups of two, three or four. Noticing the Ramos brothers sitting on the grass at the edge of the field, Scott asked Nick Ramos if he and his brothers would like to join the auditorium expedition. Lance yelled for Craig, Phil, Tony and Ray. Nudging his roommate, Scott cracked up laughing. Lance giggled, "What?"

"I've been around you more than a day and never heard you that loud before," Scott sniggered.

Shrugging, Lance blushed, "I never had a reason to be loud before."

Pat O'Hara showed up with Ralphie, and not far behind them were Richie, Carrol, and Robbie. After lunch, Ronnie had gone to Des Moines to spend time with Adam and Garret. All five had wet hair and their clothes were stuck to their wet skin. Scott grinned at Ralphie.

Ralphie giggled, "None of us have been in the auditorium either."

Robbie grinned, "John said to have Alden help us turn on the lights, so none of us get hurt."

"The Steibs were going to come too," Richie revealed, "but Derrick showed up, and took those quads and his other four brothers back to Kaho'whoosie Island."

Nearing the large group of teens and tweens, Craig asked, "Has anyone seen Travis?"

"Not since this morning, when we moved into the dorm, before lunch," Chris answered.

All the teens that had met Travis the prior day thoughtfully scowled. Out of the loop, because he hadn't met Travis, Jay asked, "Is this guy expected to be social or does he prefer to be alone?"

"Definitely social," Chris told his boyfriend. Jay evilly grinned, causing Chris to giggle, "He was among the last to call it and go to bed last night, and he was not always with me."

Lance told Jay, "He was chatting with Scott and me for a while."

Craig added, "He spent time with me and Phil too," and then innocently revealed, "he met his roommate, and we haven't seen him since."

Pat and Ralphie glanced at each other, and then began giggling. Carrol, Robbie and Richie giggled along with them. Chris and Jay thought about it, then cracked small, evil grins. Tony nudged Ray, and they nonchalantly turned away, softly sniggering.

Wide-eyed, Craig gasped, "No way!"

Phil giggled, "Why not Travis?"

Ralphie giggled, "Pat and I were immediately attracted. When it happens that suddenly, you really have to act on it, or go crazy."

"Is there a difference?" Pat giggled, and cutely batted his eyelids.

Displaying his thumb and forefinger about a millimeter apart, Ralphie laughed, "One is acceptable crazy and the other isn't, unless you like tight white jackets."

"It's time to play detective," Lance giggled. "The game has changed from Where is Waldo, to Where is Travis, and who is his roommate?"

Tony sniggered, "And what have they been doing all these hours?"

Disapprovingly, Pat smirked, but uncontrollably giggled, "It's obviously private stuff that we don't need to know." Busting up laughing, the group started walking toward the auditorium.

Pulling Jay close, Chris grinned, "My boyfriend rose from the dead and we're not locked away."

Ray giggled, "Me and Tony only met this morning and we're not locked away."

Sniggering, Jay admonished, "No, no, children. Be nice and pull your minds out of the gutter. They're only getting to know each other, in a slightly different manner than some. What goes on behind closed doors is none of our business." When most of the pack were grinning at him, he then stage whispered, "We'll ask Alden," and everyone roared laughing.

For the remainder of the walk, the group took tangents from Travis, to Lance's and Scott's observations about Craig's and Jay's abdominal muscles, which led to remarks about Keith's, Prez's and Derrick's abs, which led to Platinum Habits. Seeing the group approaching the auditorium, Alden had already unlocked an entryway door. They all walked inside. The lobby area was among the largest any of them had ever seen. Craig and Phil opened the closest pair of theater doors. "It's pitch black in there," Craig relayed. "I can only see the trails of LEDs down the aisle."

Finding the two circuit breaker panels, Scott called, "Hey, Alden?"

"I'm all set for you guys," Alden replied over the ceiling speakers, and then shared, "John told me to offer to play the Platinum Habits concert videos I have. It's up to you, but I could play the Wedding Concert, which is about two and a-half hours long, or the Welcome Home concert for the level one orphans, which is about an hour and a-half long."

Lance and Scott cheered, "SWEET!"

Robbie, Richie, Ralphie, Pat and the Ramos brothers each said that they would like to see the shorter concert, so they could still enjoy the afternoon. Realizing that the Wedding Concert would have them in the theater until dinner time, the rest of the group agreed. Lance said, "I'd like to see the actual stage set up, before the flick," and Scott agreed. Alden began walking Scott and Lance through the circuit breaker panels. They powered up the lights, the movie screen, and associated sound system.

Lights began flickering on. Standing at the open theater doors, Phil gasped, "Omigod! It's humongous!" getting the attention of the others. Everyone, except Lance and Scott, who were still at the circuit breakers, hurried to peek inside.

Tony and Ray were the first to enter the theater. Following them inside with Jay, Chris called, "Alden, how big is this place?"

"It can seat twenty-five thousand," Alden answered. "It's designed the same as Clan Headquarters, in Orlando." He said nothing about Tyler blowing the roof off the Orlando CIC, or what the new Orlando CIC and auditorium was like.

"Would we ever need to use a place this big?" Jay wondered.

Alden replied, "Pacific Rim Division has five bases, capable of supporting up to two thousand kids right now. That could easily be doubled, if necessary, and then factor in the adult staff. Prez and the band members have already discussed Christmas and New Year's Eve Concerts for the entire Clan, so eventually, yes, we would need the capacity."

Walking inside the theater with his younger brothers, Nate Ramos grinned, "From back here, the stage seems small."

"There are ceiling video screens that could be lowered, so everyone can see," Alden informed them. "The Wedding Concert had the largest audience, about four thousand, so we haven't needed to use the video screens."

Lance and Scott finished powering up and joined the rest of the pack. Barely three steps inside, Lance immediately began evilly cackling. Scott gasped, "Holy crap! Derrick's drum set includes gongs and timpani." He could only wonder what songs Platinum Habits played that required gongs and timpani.

Nodding, Lance giggled, "A grand piano, a Hammond B3, and racks of keyboards at stage left and stage right."

"I'm counting ten amplifiers and eight stage monitors," Scott shared.

Lance and Scott madly grinned at each other, and then started running down the aisle, past all the other newbies, and went up onto the stage. They wandered around, taking inventory of all the amps and guitars. Lance carefully picked up Mike's Martin D-45 and whimpered. Scott sniggered at his roomie. "Take this from me," Lance giggled, "I just came in my pants." Scott, Tony, Craig, Chris and Jay roared laughing. Once he was able to, Scott took the guitar from Lance.

Still blushing, Ray sniggered, "You two dudes can play guitar, right?"

Looking over with the D-45 in his hands, Scott answered, "We can play, but I've never seen a setup like this before." Turning around, he carefully returned the D-45 to the guitar stand. On the return trip toward the front of the stage, Scott checked out the three effects units on the floor. They weren't powered on, and he had never seen them at stores in Manhattan, so he could only wonder how they worked.

Going over to Keith's keyboard rack, Lance only looked around and then giggled, "I have no idea what most of the knobs, buttons, and sliders are for."

"That's what we're here for," Scott pleasantly reminded. "Soon enough, we'll have a clue, Lance."

Jay grinned, "If you two are done, come on back down here, so we can watch the band."

Nodding, Lance headed for the stage stairs and called, "Alden, we want to hear and feel the music." Closer to the opposite side of the stage, Scott practically skipped down the steps.

Alden giggled, "Okay, but this system could leave you all with temporary hearing loss. I guarantee it'll be plenty loud though." The stage curtains began closing, the lights dimmed and the movie screen lowered from the stage ceiling.

From the rear of the theater, Kassidy Oldcambus shouted, "What are you guys doing?" With him were his two brothers, the Hiram twins, Jimmy Matos, Bob Wheeler, and Paul Eliason. All eight of them were splattered with mud, making it obvious that they had been on their trikes since lunch, and found at least one mud puddle.

Jay waved them inside and Craig hollered, "A virtual concert, featuring our leaders."

As the group jogged down the aisle, Kassidy wondered, "Is this kewl? Are we allowed in here?"

Alden answered, "Drew, Corey, John, and Stephen know and approved. This is one place you newbies haven't seen yet."

"The doors are usually locked though," Kassidy reminded.

Before taking a seat in the center of the tenth row beside Lance, Scott said, "So little kids don't come in here and play, then wind up getting hurt in the dark. It's kewl, man." He sat down beside Lance, leaned over and softly sniggered, "Are your shorts all gunked up?"

Nodding, Lance softly giggled, "Did you know it was possible to cum with a limp dick?" They both cracked up. Lance cackled, "Nobody ever told me!"

"Learn something new everyday," Scott chuckled. "If you keep doing that, you'll have a reason to wear undies."

"Depends," Lance giggled, pushing Scott to loud laughter.

Two dozen teens and tweens greeted one another and got settled in seats. The auditorium lights dimmed and Alden's video of the concert began with 'Home By The Sea', with Reyes playing timpani, and Derrick singing lead vocals. The video was very simple, capturing the entire band, but without any fancy videography; the picture periodically zoomed in on the lead vocalist and backed out to the entire band. Since four of the six band members were very much locked in position, Mike and Prez made up for it by bopping and dancing together, seemingly feeding off each other, but keeping the audience and their other band mates involved. The entire performance was amazing to each of those watching, and especially those old enough to recognize the tune. Lance and Scott were amazed with Mike, who never even glanced at his guitar's fretboard; he watched Prez, he moved over by Troy, he moved back by the drum risers to watch Derrick, but never once checked his hand position. Prez was doing the same as Mike, moving around the stage, but they thought the bass was a less challenging and interesting instrument.

At the end of the song, Lance softly checked with Scott, "Did you catch a single chord that Mike played?"

Shaking his head, Scott sniggered, "I think I saw him playing some ninth chords, but I'm really not sure."

Lance blinked at Scott, asking, "You know ninth chords?"

"In one form, two when I look it up, again," Scott grinned.

"I am so screwed," Lance laughed.

Scott smirked, "You know ninth chords, I've seen you play 'em."

The next song, 'Lunatic Fringe' started. The sound of the audience cheering was clearly heard, since all the original eighty-seven heard it as the opener for the luau. Reyes sat at the electronic drum kit. Troy was now playing electric guitar. He was playing rhythm through most of the song, but did trade off licks with Mike during the guitar solo. Again, the band members paid attention to the audience and each other, but seemed to rarely look at their instruments. During the break between songs, Chris, Jay, Nate Ramos and the three Rs evilly grinned at Lance and Scott.

"No, we couldn't play either song, even with a month's forewarning," Scott chuckled.

"Aw shit," Lance grumbled, "Troy's put the Stratocaster down and picked up a twelve-string acoustic. I've never touched a twelve-string."

Scott answered, "Me either, but it can't be that hard." He then laughed at Jay, "Turn around! We can't play this either."

"They haven't started playing yet," Jay chuckled.

"Does it matter?" Lance and Scott chorused.

Led by Troy's acoustic guitar part, the band began playing 'Too Many People'. Reyes had moved over to hand percussion, shaking maracas in one hand, and keeping a separate rhythm on a tambourine in his other hand. During a short section where Reyes was unoccupied, he picked up a group of drum sticks and displayed them to Derrick. Reyes tossed a stick. Derrick dropped a stick and caught the one thrown, but never missed a single beat. Cracking up, Reyes tossed more drum sticks to his dad, until he picked up the maracas and tambourine to play again. The kids loved it that day, and the newbies watching the recorded performance loved it too.

Through the entire flick, each of the kids noticed that the band members seemed different, almost possessed with alternate personalities. Gone were the laid-back teenagers, and in their place amazing look-a-likes commanded the stage and their instruments. During the drum and percussion solos in 'Soul Sacrifice/Head, Hands and Feet,' all the kids were tapping their feet, and the Stoeher twins began playing air drums. Troy played saxophone during 'Urgent,' making the solo seem like the most natural thing he'd ever done. Hearing and watching three metal songs in a row; 'Revolution', 'You've Got Another Thing Coming', and 'Heaven's On Fire', most of the boys realized Platinum Habits wasn't like most bands that stuck to a single genre. Switching from those three rockers to the slower, bluesy jazz of 'Can't Find My Home' made it clear that the band could play anything they wanted, and the music was precisely what was recorded. The excitement Lance and Scott had before arriving at Ewa Beach doubled, and doubled again with each song Platinum Habits performed.

What grabbed everyone's attention, not just the two musicians who were watching and listening to every band member very closely, were the vocals. They harmonized easily. Each of the band members had different voices that closely matched the songs they were covering. From lowest to highest were Prez, then Mike, then Derrick, then Troy, and then Keith. Reyes hadn't done any singing at all during that particular concert. None of the newbies knew that hours after the performance they were watching and hearing, all the Core Rimmers had taken a week off at Archmania. During that vacation, the band members had learned many new cover songs, as well as figured out Reyes vocal range, and where it could be applied to expand their repertoire.

At the end of the show, the lights were turned up again and the movie screen rose. Chris asked his partner, "What do you think?"

Jay grinned, "I think we'll be seeing a lot of concerts."

"As soon as Prez is off the injured list," Ralphie giggled.

Tanner shared, "John said, there are more kids scheduled to arrive tomorrow."

"So tomorrow we'll prob'ly get a show," Toby finished.

Everyone in the group stood and shuffled past rows of seats to the aisle. Noticing Lance and Scott were very quiet, Craig grinned, "What do you two dudes think?"

Lance smirked, "Yesterday, I thought I was ready to learn from these guys. Today, I'm not so sure."

Nodding agreement, Scott added, "They're not amateurs; they got the audience singing along during 'Dirty Laundry'; even in the flick, they made me feel like they were really standing up there, performing for our small group."

The Oldcambus twins chimed, "Yeah, we felt that way too."

Locking eyes with Scott, Lance asked, "What can we do to be more prepared?"

"Practice," Scott answered. "A lot of practicing, so we can at least play without looking at our axes."

Lance whined, "Did you see Mike playing those blindingly fast runs during 'Wildest Dreams'? He seemed to be picking every note. Watching both my hands, I couldn't reproduce that."

Scott sighed, "It's back to the basics, playing the scales to a strict tempo. That's what my old guitar teacher used to say; warm up with scales and chord progressions before moving on to songs. I didn't pay much attention to that advice."

Relenting, Lance sighed, "My head is spinning with ideas."

Chris suggested, "Let's go back to the diving well."

When Jay nodded, Craig glanced over at Lance and Scott, adding, "Like cramming for a test, let the ideas settle down." Off to the side, the muddy trike riders agreed they would need to use the pool house shower before using the pools.

Scott told Lance, "After dark, when we head back to our room, let's spend at least another hour just working on scales and progressions."

Speaking loud enough that Lance and Scott could hear, Chris playfully told Jay, "I didn't know they were that obsessed last night."

"I haven't been that obsessed since I was five, with them mud pies we used to make," Jay joked.

Lance giggled, "Are you mocking us, Jay?"

"Simply stating the facts," Jay chortled.

Scott wondered, "Isn't there something you really enjoy; something you want to be very good at?" Turning to Chris and bouncing his eyebrows, Jay helplessly sniggered. Without saying a word, Chris blushed and giggled. Scott chuckled, "I suppose that counts."

Craig nudged his brother, smirking, "What are you blushing for?"

Phil giggled, "Jay and Chris, obviously."

Grinning madly, Kassidy teased, "You dudes don't hold much of anything back, huh?"

Jay smiled, "I used to hold everything back, never giving a sign, or saying a word to anyone, including Chris, until we were behind closed doors. The facts are that being in love and making love are normal parts of life. The situation is much kewler now, and I promised Chris that it would all change. I'm following through on my promise. I had to wait about four hours in that hospital before anyone told me that Chris, Rafe, and Pat were alive and in Clan care. Four hours was rough enough, so I can easily imagine how they felt, thinking I was dead for a day. If any of you guys ever see me treating Chris coldly, you have my permission to line up and slap some sense into me."

Chris giggled, "He's serious."

"Dead serious," Jay confirmed. "Several times during that concert, I wanted to get up and dance, but that would be considered exertion, so I'll wait until tomorrow."

The group filed out of the theater, except for Lance and Scott. Going directly to the circuit breaker panels, Lance and Scott powered down the auditorium. Everyone left the building before Lance and Scott were finished. When the task was complete, Lance told Scott, "I'm gonna hit the men's room here."

Nodding, Scott confirmed, "I'll meet you at the diving well?"

"Kewl," Lance chirped, and went to use the facilities.

Stepping outside, Scott realized this was the first time in more than a day that Lance wasn't nearby. It felt strange; more strange than leaving the only home he'd ever known and walking through the city alone in the pre-dawn hours the day before. He had been telling himself to stop following Lance around like a lost puppy, but only discovered Lance following him instead. The mid afternoon sun was shining, adults and kids were walking around the CIC, but for the first time, Scott felt desperately alone. The distant sound of squealing kids at the playground could be heard. Tears for his deceased parents flooded his eyes. His mother, Cynthia Shetley should've been home by midnight, but never made it. His father, Emmet was expected between one and two in the morning, but again, the apartment door never opened. Laying in bed that Thursday night, Scott only occasionally slept. Mostly, he worried about them and his own future. Scott wiped his tears away, reminding himself to be strong and accept what had happened. Suddenly, all the changes of the past day and a-half were too pronounced; nothing around him was familiar. The sun seemed brighter than it ever had in New York City. The trees were old growth, and had never seen a trimming by man. The three condos were the tallest buildings on base, but even they seemed small compared to what Scott was used to seeing. Paying little attention to where he was going, Scott walked the path through the quad. He didn't even notice Keith was by the pool and just kept walking past the rec center and into the trees, telling himself to pull himself together again before returning to the rest of the Clan.

Finished in the men's room and done drying his hands, Lance exited the tiled room and uncertainly called, "Alden, I'm the last one out, so lock the doors behind me, please?"

"It's covered," Alden replied, and then said, "Something's wrong with Scott. Walking across the compound, his head was hanging, he was slouching, and if wiping his eyes means anything, he was crying."

Scowling, Lance asked, "Where is he now?"

"He just walked right past the pools and into the trees, on the Southwest side of the base."

"I'll take care of it," Lance assured, and stepped out of the auditorium.

Outside, over the speaker, Alden asked, "Should I call for help?"

Shaking his head, Lance answered, "Not yet. I'll bet I know what's going on." Taking off like a rabbit, Lance ran at his top speed past the first two single family homes. He slowed and jogged past the diving well, and then the pool, just to make sure Scott hadn't already returned. Not seeing his friend, Lance turned up the juice and tore past the rec center.

Craig and Phil noticed Lance on a high speed quest and turned to each other. Since they had seen Scott walking by minutes earlier, the Nash brothers assumed that they had agreed to meet amongst the trees, to chat about their guitar playing goals.

Beyond the tree line and slowing to a brisk walk, Lance looked around for his roomie. He didn't want to call Scott's name, knowing that would get the attention of any gorillas and G-Cats in the vicinity. Looking to his left and right, Lance followed a semi-direct path around the trees.

Sitting on a lower tree branch not far away, Scott saw Lance searching. From his seven foot high perch, he chuckled, "Looking for someone, pal?"

Spinning toward the sound, Lance saw Scott's legs hanging first. He looked up and giggled, "What're you doing?"

Scott grinned, "Living in the city, I never climbed too many trees as a little kid. I just wanted a place to sit and rest."

Approaching the tree Scott was sitting in, Lance smirked, "Nice try. Why didn't you go to the diving well, where there are tables and chairs, like we planned?"

Scott shrugged and reluctantly admitted, "I started remembering my folks. Since I got a little sad, I thought I'd chill out and not make a scene. Climbing this tree gave me something to think about, like not falling and breaking an arm, leg, or my neck."

Lance prompted, "Tell me something?"

"Sure."

"Did you ever catch your parents cuddling on the sofa?"

"A couple of times."

"You've thought about that, doing that with someone?"

"Yeah," Scott softly admitted, and with a small smile added, "a lot more often recently."

"When you had me go look in on Chris and Jay earlier, that's what I remembered; two different people completely connected, soul mates who are dependent and relying upon each other. They know each other so well that they can almost read minds. My parents had to be together, even at the end, one followed the other to the other side. It's the way it had to be."

Shivering with delight, Scott smiled, "That's a beautiful idea."

"It's true," Lance shrugged. "My folks acted like they were in love, and from the sounds of it, so did yours. Sure, neither of us is thrilled that they're gone, far from it, but look where we are, man. When we left New York, it was in the mid-forties and we were wearing jeans, long sleeve shirts and winter jackets."

"Those jackets may never see the light of day again," Scott sniggered.

"The important points are, our parents stayed together, and in their place, we have a bunch of really nice adults, and all the married Core Rimmers to remind us what's important. Add to that the lucky happen-stance of Chris and Jay, who are just as committed as any other couple around here. Plus, several of those same Core Rimmers are virtuoso musicians. I'm seeing this whole situation as a wash, the good families we lost have been replaced with more good families, and more brothers and sisters around every corner. This place is like a gigantic family reunion. You and me are choosing to be really close brothers, sharing a room together. The way things were before lunch, alone together in our room, goofing around, and jamming after lunch, is only a preview of what the next few years are gonna be like. So, look up at the sky, say your final goodbyes, and jump down from that branch."

Scott smirked, "You're not gonna let me drown in my thoughts?"

Shaking his head, Lance giggled, "Not sad thoughts. We've got all kinds of musical ideas to drown ourselves in. Now, am I gonna have to climb up there with you? That would seem really weird to everyone." A fair distance from the boys, but close enough to hear every word, Bengal tiger hybrid Rashad, allowed the teens to notice him walking away.

Waving at the G-Cat, Scott chuckled, "Like Travis disappearing into oblivion after meeting his new roommate?" Lance paid no attention to the wave and watched Scott carefully.

"Yup, just like that. People will start to talk, about way more than sock-stiffies and..." Lance unexpectedly stopped talking and looked well beyond the tree Scott was sitting in. Carefully turning to see for himself, Scott saw Paulie Panda approaching. Lance's surprised expression pushed Scott to soft sniggering.

Paulie called, "What're you doing, Lance? When did you start talking to trees?"

Before he cracked up and fell off the branch, Scott jumped down. Startled by people dropping from trees, Paulie loudly warned, "WATCH OUT!" and started running.

"WHOA!" Lance loudly laughed, and scrambled to get between Paulie and Scott. Paulie ran into Lance, who tumbled backwards onto Scott, and all three wound up on the ground in the dirt. Scott howled laughing. "PAULIE!" Lance incredulously giggled, "What the hell was that all about?"

Rolling off the top of the pile, Paulie answered, "You're my friend, and I was protecting you. I don't have claws, like the Teddy bears..."

"Thank GOD!" Lance interrupted, and got onto his feet.

"But I still have the same basic friend protection firmware," Paulie finished.

"So you tried to tackle my roommate?" Lance giggled, and pointed to Scott, who was still laughing too hard to get off his hands and knees.

Paulie grinned, "That was my intention. You got in the way. I couldn't stop in time. Sorry."

Gesturing to Scott, Lance giggled, "He's my roommate and best friend. You don't need to protect me from Scott. As a matter of fact, you don't need to protect me at all. I'm three years older now, Paulie."

"You're the boss," Paulie giggled.

With that said, Lance turned and offered Scott a hand up.

Breathlessly wheezing, Scott got onto his feet, and unsteadily leaned on Lance. Brushing some dry leaves and dirt off Scott's shirt, Lance confirmed, "You're okay?"

"Fine," Scott giggled, and picked a leaf out of Lance's hair.

Turning to his Panda, Lance smirked, "Paulie, we'll have to figure out some new rules to play by. I'll need to know a few things."

"It's all in the manual, Lance, but I could tell you what you'd like to know."

Scott suggested, "Let's head back to the pools." Lance nodded agreement and they began walking.

Lance wondered, "What've you been doing since lunch, Paulie?"

"What you told me to do," Paulie answered. "When all the cakes and cookies were gone, I played with the kids at the playground. I can do things the Teddy bears can't, like push the merry-go-round, and catch kids coming down the slide."

Lance asked, "Was there a special kid that you liked the most?"

Paulie giggled, "I like all kids. All are special to me."

Lance checked with Scott, got a nod in response, and then told his Panda, "Here's the deal; I've grown up and started doing more grown up things, like learning to play guitar. As much as I love having you around again, I don't think I could be a very good best friend and companion for you."

"I am programmed to be your best friend, Lance. I will follow you and do what you tell me to do. My programming will not allow me to harm children, unless a child is threatening my best friend. My primary weapon is my size and weight. I can lift up to two-hundred pounds, tackle, or bear hug."

Lance chuckled, "You always were a big cuddle bear, Paulie." Seeing his friend as a much younger boy, Scott couldn't help it and started chortling again. Turning to Scott, Lance bounced his eyebrows.

"I can also act as a pillow or bed for my best friend," Paulie stated.

"Those were the good ol' days," Lance fondly recalled. Arriving at the pool, Lance scanned for red heads, looking for Albert and Charles McPhearson. Lance and Scott had escorted the McPhearson boys to the Meadowlands, Des Moines and all the way to Ewa Beach. Scott saw the boys were with Laura and Lindsay Gibbons, tapped Lance, and led the way.

Seeing their teen protectors and Paulie, Al and Charles raced over to them. Lance and Scott paused to catch a running kid. Glued to Scott's side, Al looked up and proudly told both teens, "We've got a new family! Mike's mommy and daddy wants us as much as we want them!"

At the seven-year-old boy's enthusiasm, Scott chuckled, "We told you in New Jersey that everything would work out."

Attached to Lance's side, Charles gushed, "You got's a kewl Panda bear, Lance."

Lance smiled, "Since you think so, and I'm way too old, how would you like to have Paulie as your best friend?"

Charles gasped, "Could I really?"

Turning to Paulie, Lance ordered, "From now on, your best friend is Charles McPhearson. You will live with, play with, and protect Charlie. I'll be happy with you as one of my friends, so I relinquish all claims of being your best friend. Charlie is your best friend."

Without any emotion, Paulie nodded, "Kewl, Lance. Charles is my new best friend."

Both McPhearson boys cheered, "AWESOME!" and hurried to Paulie. The two little guys took Paulie's paws and brought him to their new mom.

Hearing what Lance had done, Laura got up and went to him, widely smiling, "You gave Charles your Panda?"

Nodding, Lance chuckled, "He was great when I was a kid, and could only pretend he was talking to me. I'm hoping to do better than a VI bear someday."

Laura gave Lance a hug and a kiss on the cheek, and then unexpectedly gave the same to Scott. "I know that you two chaperoned those two all day yesterday," Laura smiled. "Thank you both, so much."

Scott blushed, "It really wasn't a problem. We just kept them with us, so they felt safer."

Lance smirked, "It's the baby sitter that left them, to make it to the Meadowlands alone, that I'd like to have a few four letter words with."

"Starting with, what the hell were you thinking?" Scott softly offered.

Laura giggled, "I'd imagine so. I would do the same, and far worse. My husband and I are ready to adopt them, and they're very ready to be adopted; as soon as Preston is available to do the honors, hopefully tomorrow."

"Congratulations!" Scott and Lance disjointedly cheered.

Warmly saying, "Thank you again," Laura returned to her family, and Paulie, who was almost as tall as she. As soon as she had a chance, Laura tapped her comm-badge. She told all the other Core Rimmer parents what Lance and Scott had done, knowing that word would eventually get to the Core Rimmers.

Doc Andrews shouting, "Mister Montigua! GET OUT OF THAT

WELL, or I WILL have you sedated, and on a bio-bed, pissing by remote control!" set most of the Clan around the pools laughing.

"BUSTED!" Lance, Scott, Keanu, Liki, Pete, and Roy roared.

Climbing out of the well, Jay sniggered, "It was fun while it lasted."

"Mister Stokley, hiding under a towel doesn't relieve you of responsibility," Doc Andrews smirked.

Leaving the towel over his face, Chris groggily muttered, "I was napping. What did you say, Doc?"

Walking up to the lounge chair beside the one Chris was in, Lance giggled, "I don't think he's buying it, Chris." Intending to take a few dives before dinner, Lance started to strip and so did Scott. Chris faked snoring. Lance and Scott were looking at Chris when he disappeared from the chair. Less than a second later, Chris' loud scream pierced the air. Flat on his back, Chris dropped from ten meters above the diving well. All the teenaged boys around the well cracked up. Quickly curling up, Chris grabbed his knees seconds before hitting the water, ass end first.

Over the pool house speakers, Alden cryptically giggled, "I'm getting pretty good at these initiations!"

Wearing a satisfied grin, Doc Andrews walked back toward the FYS building. For a week, none of the kids had ever questioned him. These newbie, well adjusted, supposedly 'normal' kids, were the ones to challenge him. To teach a lesson, he responded like any one of the kids might to overinflated teenage egos.

Walking around the side of the well toward the diving boards,

Scott chuckled, "So, ignorance is not blissful after all, huh, Chris?"

Chris loudly laughed, "No one warned me that our doctor had a sense of humor!"

Jay teased, "An important lesson to be taught immediately upon arrival."

"You be quiet!" Chris giggled, "This is all your fault!" and splashed his lover.

Walking by with the Praefectus family and the Triggs brothers, John was simultaneously teasing his brothers soaking in the tub at Kaho'olawe, and Stephen, while calmly introducing the base, some of the other newbies, and the proud pediatrician. Nearing the pools, they saw Chris drop into the well, the McPhearson brothers with Paulie, and a bunch of other little kids with their Teddy bears dancing to Kenny Loggins, 'Playing With The Boys'. The singing kids had changed the chorus' lyrics to Dancing With The Bears. The next song was 'Kung Fu Fighting'. All the kids took a break to watch their bears perform a choreographed Kung Fu Dancing routine, and laughed their tiny butts off. The small pack around John were laughing almost as hard as any of the little kids. John giggled, "Who knew?"

Neil Green Personal Log.

Monday, November 1, 2004

School's out. Today is the third anniversary of my parents' deaths. Only three years have passed, but it seems like life times ago. Three years ago tomorrow, I was dumped in this hell hole. Nothing has been close to what it was ever since.

To prove that nothing's the same, I just had to help Tad. He's still sick and hocked up a big ol' nasty goober. Why they keep us all locked in this tiny room when one of the four of us is sick, I can't explain, other than the hope that we'll all get sick and die. Tad's breathing is strained, and it sounds like he's got a rattling freight train in his chest. If they'd just give the dude some cough medicine and a Tylenol now and then, I'd bet Tad would feel a tiny bit better. A damn cough drop would probably make him feel a little better. But no, let him struggle to even breathe, you fucking shits. Instead, Tad's all curled up on his bed, looking like he lost a fight.

Gerry just asked, "We're gonna die in this place, aren't we?"

"He's just got a cold, Ger," I softly replied.

Jessie grumbled, "Soon, we'll all have it."

Now they're arguing about who's gonna get sick and die first. I told them both to shut the fuck up, before the zoo-keepers come up here to make a bad scene worse. "We've gotta give a shit, because they sure as hell don't," I hissed at them. About once a week we've gotta go through this same shit, arguing about pointless worries. We're trapped in this room together every afternoon and night, like the only three dudes in the whole world. In the other three rooms up here there are four girls and eight younger boys, but we're not even allowed to talk to them. We've got to be quiet, or the zoo-keepers come up and pound on our doors.

Now Jessie's looking out the window. Other kids are allowed to go out, but we aren't. Other kids are allowed to have friends. All we have is each other, except for the seven or so hours we're at school, five days a week. Holidays suck the worst; they're just additional days trapped in this room. I remember when I looked forward to holidays, back in that previous life. Thanksgiving turkeys, and Christmas cookies... oh, damn, I shouldn't have done that; now my stomach's growling. At least I got smiles and giggles out of Gerry and Jessie. I think I'll do some homework, before I start eating paper out of this journal again.

+ + + + + + + + + + + +

Dinner was a joke. A glass of water, a slice of bread, two teaspoons of something that resembled creamed corn, and I'm not even quite sure what the slice of meat was, it was burned so badly. They take us downstairs to eat one room at a time. I guess they know that if all sixteen of us were there at once, we could gang up on them. Given that chance, I would grab a knife and kill them both, I know I would. And I wouldn't give a damn that I had murdered them. Instead, I'm there holding up Tad. He didn't want to eat, and barely could, but one of my warning glares told him to do his best. Without food and water, his cold would only get worse.

I couldn't bear that. Another dude was here when I arrived three years ago. He was older, and got sick, and one day he was gone, never to be seen again. I don't know where they sent him, or what happened to him. I've known Tad since day one here. Gerry, Jessie and Tad are all decent enough dudes, but being here, and forced to keep quiet, we can barely get away with whispering to each other. We're trapped.

I had a guinea pig once that I took better care of than we're cared for. His name was Gus. Pretty original, considering I was seven when I got him. Gus was still alive when my folks died. He's probably gone too, left in his cage to starve. I'm sorry, Gus. They wouldn't even let me get my clothes, so I didn't have a choice. After I was brought here, I didn't even remember that Gus was at home for a couple o' days. With my parents gone, I guess it took me that long to even realize...

Shit! Now I'm crying.

All I have is this notebook. All I have is this... existence. I can't even call it a life. We don't even have a light in this room. I can read and write until the sun goes down. Then there's nothing better to do than lay down and sleep. Gerry and Jessie have already moved their beds to this side of the room, away from Tad's croupy coughing and sniffing.

What was that older dude's name? I wonder what happened to him. I wonder what will happen to us. They're not taking Tad away; not if I can help it. I didn't even know that older dude, but three years later I still wonder about him. Tad got here a few months before me. If they took Tad, or Gerry or Jessie away, I'd lose it. I'm beginning to think that this is their purpose; to get us weak, let us get sick, move us someplace else where things are even worse, and let us die. I hate thinking that, really I do, but when I think of that older dude, all those years ago, and hear Tad's snotting and sneezing, it makes me believe that they want us dead.

Dreams are better than reality. Sleeping is better than being awake. Tomorrow, we'll go to school again. Even there, we're separated, on the outskirts of the school population, 'those orphans', sitting at their own lunch table away from other luckier kids. What I wouldn't give to play basketball or football. I'd be happy if someone just said something nice once in a while.

The sun is almost all the way down. Tomorrow's another day; I hope to write more then. Maybe Tad will be better. Since I'll be sleeping closest to him, I'll know what's going on.

+ + + + + + + + + + + +

Wednesday, November 3, 2004

I went to school this morning, but was sent home sick. I probably caught the same bug that Tad's got. Good ol' Elk Grove High; where the rich mock everyone else. Being at the bottom of the ladder, everyone dumps on us orphans. It's not my fault that I get a timed shower twice a week. I didn't pick out the rags I wear as clothes every day. If I was allowed to, I'd run an electric razor over my face, but I don't have one, and even if I did, they wouldn't let me use it. So I look like a scruffy street kid. At least I got a tuna sandwich and milk at lunch. I get it free, all us orphans get free lunches at school. The roll was a little soggy, but honestly, with my throat as sore as it is, that helped.

To be even more truthful, I'm glad I'm here. All day yesterday, I kept thinking they're gonna take Tad away, and my last words to him were, "feel better". Pretty damned pitiful, I think, that I have to worry about who will be at the home and who won't be when I get there. If I could've run from school all the way here, I would've. Tad hasn't gotten any better. My brisk pace during the walk here didn't help me feel any better, and I know I've got a fever, but Tad is still here, so it was worth it.

One of the zoo-keepers bitched me out for getting sent home sick. I didn't say a word until I got upstairs and in our room, and those whispered words were "fuck off and die". Plain and simple; you don't give a shit about me, and the best things that could happen to us would be for both of them to just fuck off and die. Maybe if you had helped Tad get well, I wouldn't be sick. Maybe if you gave us blankets, pillows and real beds, we'd be able to rest. Instead, here's a second hand sheet and a piece of thin foam padding on the floor to sleep on. During the summer, I sleep on the wood floor because it's cooler.

I hate hating, but ya know, I just can't help it any more. The assholes have the TV blasting too, probably purposefully to keep me awake, to keep me sicker longer, to make me go away someplace where I'll die. I wouldn't give you the satisfaction, you slimy fuckin' bastards. Even if I did die, I'd come back to haunt you; I'd point them both out to Jesus and all the Saints as the two most unworthy human beings on the planet. They'd tell me to forgive, and I'd have to say, sorry but I wouldn't be here if they had just kept us clean, fed and warm.

Whew! All that hate took a lot out of me! I can't help giggling.

I imagined having a really big sword and chopping them up. Then I got my hands on a Star Fleet phaser and tested each of the settings on them. Finally, I was sitting in the captain's chair of a starship and ordering photon torpedo attacks on their graves. My day dreams get just a tiny bit realistic.

Uh oh! My giggling woke Tad.

+ + + + + + + + + + + +

So, I fell asleep and didn't wake until after Gerry and Jessie got home from school. Once again, they started bitching and whining because two of four of us are sick. Actually, Tad thinks he's feeling a bit better, but unfortunately now I'm feeling worse. So now it's Tad's turn to deal with Gerry and Jessie. He just bitched 'em both out and demanded proof that they have dicks, and if they didn't then he would kiss 'em both on the mouth and make sure he gave whatever we got to them. I laughed myself into a major coughing fit. Since I'm way tired, I'll let Tad deal, but demanded that they wake me up for whatever table scraps the zoo-keepers decide to give us for dinner.

+ + + + + + + + + + + +

Ugh! So, a herd of bison have pissed in my mouth while I slept. To add insult to injury, I had dinner. If I had the strength to retch, I'd do it... on Gerry or Jessie, for being whiney little bitches.

Tad says I was having a dream before supper; a good one from the sound of it. Just to goof on me, Gerry and Jessie wondered when I learned Russian, because all the Rs and Ps sounded backwards. Squinting at them, I wished that I could recall a little of it. Damn, it hurts to write - it hurts my fingers and my eyes and my brain.

+ + + + + + + + + + + +

It's one of those colds where you lean back against the wall, close your eyes and fall asleep sitting up. Balance is nonexistent when you're sick and fall asleep sitting up, I learned. I tumbled over to one side and crashed to the floor. Now my headache is twice as bad from the clunk that's still bouncing around in my brain.

My throat feels like raw hamburger. Right now, I would kill for a bowl of ice cream. Even a plain ol' ice cube would put the fire out.

Gerry and Jessie are putting Tad's fire out now. After being sick for a week, Tad's gonna drown 'em. I wish I could mess around too, but that would definitely wreck my throat. Just accepting a blow job would raise my temperature more and fry my brain. Tad's got the finest looking ass on him though, and his dick is more than six inches. I stole a plastic six-inch ruler from school so we could check each other out. Tad's dick is normally shorter than mine, but with a stiffie he's got about a half inch more than me; damn close to seven inches or maybe a little more.

Oh damn, Tad's getting near the edge and Gerry's gonna get the reward. Which is luckier, I'm not sure. We call it our protein fix, since we sure ain't getting enough from the zoo-keepers.

I wish it didn't hurt to laugh. I knew Tad was gonna drown someone. Gerry's trying to relearn how to breathe while Jessie, Tad and I are laughing at him. The really amazing thing is that Tad's dick ain't going limp. It's still big and pointing straight out. And there goes Jessie, on his knees for the second round.

This whole situation is so fucked up. We're stuck with each other, and know each other very well, but it's like we're dealing with our limitations the best ways we can. It's love - hate relationships, I'm sure; we can be a bunch of pricks, for sure, which is evident when one of us is sick and it's only a matter of time before each of us gets sick. At the same time, we take care of each other too, in every way, which Gerry has proved, and Jessie is still proving. Later tonight, I know it'll be Tad who's closest to me. It's always the same round-robin story each time; there's Tad and I , the two fifteen-year-olds, and then there's Gerry and Jessie, who are fourteen- and thirteen-years-old, respectively.

I'm pretty sure I'm gay. Tad is pretty sure he is, and he thinks he loves me, but Gerry and Jessie can't say they are or they aren't. Really, how can any of us know for certain when we're locked away alone together sixteen hours of every day? I'd like to try sex once with a girl, just to be sure we're not faking anything. If we ever get out of this stinking shit-hole, I wonder how things will work out.

OMIGOD! Tad did it again, and now Jessie is coughing through his giggles and our combined muffled laughter. Normally, when we can get off daily, Tad's the power shooter from hell. With more than six days worth built up, he's probably going off like a cannon. And Tad just turned to me, like I have half a chance of doing him good when I can't breathe through my nose. I half-coughed and half-giggled, "When I'm feeling better, dude. I'll show the other two losers how to deal with your monster loads."

While Gerry and Jessie went off bitching and complaining, Tad sat down beside me. He leaned over and whispered, "Both times were for you, Neil. For more than that though, I'm really sorry I got you sick, dude."

Nodding understandingly, I said, "After all these years, we all knew we were bound to share the germ. Only the two little pussies over there still think bitching about it will prevent it."

More soft cussing flowed from Gerry and Jessie. Tad softly sniggered, "I gave them the germ with my sperm. They'll be sick and alone together all next school week, wishing one could help the other out, but too sick to even try." Tad peeked over into this notebook, then gave me a kiss on the cheek and evilly cackled at our other two roommates, "Your straight boy act is blown, literally!"

Now Gerry and Jessie are bitching because they know I wrote down everything that just happened. One of the zoo-keepers pounded on our door. Eight birds just flipped him off.

Sunlight is fading fast. More tomorrow.

+++++

Thursday, November 4, 2004

SALVATION DAY HAS ARRIVED!

It's four in the afternoon and I've only been awake about an hour. Last night, about two o'clock in the morning, we were woke up. I was sick and pretty much out of it, but I remember enough to write some of it down.

I'm laying there, out cold, and felt someone nudging my butt. This wasn't like the normal attention-getting nudge, or Tad grinding himself against me. Grumbling because I felt like death warmed over, I tried to see what was going on. Tad was ordering me to wake up and softly warning, "They ain't taking you anywhere." That woke me up fast. Gerry, Jessie and Tad were lined up, like they were protecting me. Our room door swung open, but it wasn't the zoo-keepers - it was some sort of green-eyed army dudes!

The scary thing was the armor the dudes were wearing when they entered our room. They had night-vision goggles and didn't even look human. It scared the piss out of me! Dumbstruck, I couldn't say a word, or understand what my roommates were saying. Needless to say, my first priority was the toilet. Giggling erupted and the two armored dudes in our room took their helmets off and cleared the way to the door. It had been so long since I could freely leave our room without the zoo-keepers, I paused to ask where they were.

"Tied up to the chairs in the kitchen," one dude sniggered.

The other dude smiled, "Go pee, bro. They won't be harassing you any more."

Without delay, I waddled as quickly as I could to the bathroom us dudes used. There were two upstairs and one was for the girls, the other was for us guys. On the way, I saw some of my orphanage sisters nude, waiting their turn at the other bathroom. I saw these girls dressed every school day morning but I don't think I ever saw any of 'em naked before.

Tad went with me and we shared the bowl, but rapidly blinked at each other, wondering just what in the hell was going on. When we finished, another taller dude was at the door. His eyes shifted down and then back up to meet our eyes. Pointing at the sink, he warmly smiled, "Wash your hands and your willies, bros. That's normal and there's no major hurry."

Doing as we were told, Tad softly asked, "Who are you?"

"Captain Rahul Hayes, strike team India, Clan Short Pacific Rim Division Detachment."

I sneezed and went into a coughing fit, spraying snot and spit all over myself. Now I needed to wash my hands and dick all over again.

Rahul scowled, "That sounds really nasty, bro. What's your name?"

"Neil Green," I wheezed.

"You'll be better real soon, Neil," Rahul assured. "We've got the best doctors on call twenty-four-by-seven. Whatever you need, you'll have. Whatever you want, you'll get."

"Something for this sore throat would be nice."

"Daileass," Rahul called, "get some of those vitamin C cough drops Momma Janet developed, with the mentholypus decongestant."

A younger, preteen boy's voice answered, "In your lower left side storage compartment, Rahul." He then giggled, "They're in a bag and smaller than those .45 slugs, so you can tell the difference."

Smirking, Rahul teased, "Oh, they're like the size of your dick?"

"HEY!" Daileass laughed, "I may not be Joey-sized, but even in the Russian climate, I'm a fair bit larger than a cough drop!"

Pulling out a few of the cough drops, Rahul held them out to me, grinning, "One each half hour, Neil. We need you awake and able to speak for another hour or two, but after that, you're going to have a real bed to sleep off that cold."

Tad and I finished drying off, then I took the offered cough drops from Rahul's hand. Before unwrapping one, I admitted, "I've heard of Clan Short, but I didn't know they were in California."

Nodding, Tad shared, "We thought they were too far away and there were kids worse off than us for the Clan to help."

Pointing to the device in his ear, Rahul warmly smiled, "I'm getting reports as we speak. Let me tell you, this place is plenty bad and well worth our intervention. There's a lot that's classified that I can't tell you, but I can promise you that you're out of here tonight, and won't ever be back again."

I popped a cough drop and then asked, "Can I get my journals? They're the only things here that I want to keep."

"Go ahead," Rahul said, and gestured to our room. He then loudly told all the kids in the hall the same things he had just told Tad and I.

Returning to our room, Tad and I gathered my current journal and the other two guys. We then went downstairs. Truthfully, I was really scared, being out of bed and out of our room in the middle of the night. Kids were gathering in the living room and sitting on the furniture. We weren't even allowed in the living room, and so sitting on the furniture was really bad. The littlest kids wouldn't do it and gathered on the floor in front of the sofa. I couldn't believe this was really happening, and had to see the zoo-keepers to make sure they were really tied up.

As if they would pop out in front of me at any moment, I slowly walked into the kitchen. They were really tied up on the chairs, and were even gagged. The cough drop was working miracles. Inhaling sharply through my nose, I gathered a big ol' goober and hocked it onto Mr. Franklin's face. I gave his bitch of a wife one too. The two Clan dudes in the room broke down hysterically laughing, which pushed Tad into a giggling fit.

Returning to the living room and feeling much more secure that things were going to work out, I heard the Clan dudes in the kitchen.

"...and he didn't even say a word!" one of them cackled.

The other giggled, "The best part is, it's running down toward their mouths! YUMMY!"

The first kid giggled, "Alden, make a note of that and tell Prez when he has the chance to hear it."

A third voice giggled, "Move closer so I can snap a photo."

Wondering why the president would give a shit that I spit on them, I took a seat on the chair and actually hoped to leave a nice skid mark on it. Tad squeezed in beside me, and then told all the kids what I just did. The two older girls groaned, but all the rest eventually giggled.

While we waited in the living room, I checked out Catherine and Jeanette, the two oldest girls in the room. They weren't bad looking at all, and I thought some about having sex with one or both of them. Nothing happened to my dick; not even a twinge or a little shift. I let my mind build on the fantasy, but John Henry was clearly disinterested. As awful as I felt earlier, and being preoccupied with writing, John Henry still got chubby from the activity in our room. That's when I noticed Tad had been watching me the whole time. At the first convenient opportunity, Tad and I needed to have a heart-to-heart.

From the kitchen, we all heard Rahul laughing, "Okay, which one of you violated the prisoners?" A chorus of denials broke free, with descriptions of me. Rahul came into the living room and stopped before the chair Tad and I were in.

"Awesome cough drops, dude," I cheekily grinned. "I feel better already."

"I'll bet you do!" Rahul laughed. Shaking his head, Rahul moved to the center of the room, where he could be easily seen and heard. "Okay," Rahul cheerfully began, "here's what's happening. Tonight, Clan Short Pacific Rim Division raided sixteen orphanages owned and operated by Zorro Communications Corporation.

"We've rated the orphanages by number of kids present and their general health. The rating system is simple, on a scale from one through four, with each higher number being worse than the previous. This place is ranked as a level two orphanage. In a few minutes, doctors and nurses will be arriving via transporter. They'll check each of you out, and start gathering groups to bring to hospitals. Those of you who want to be kept together with your friends only need to say something to one of us, one of the medical staff, or one of the two Clan Short Pacific Rim Division leaders, who will also be here as quickly as they can.

"We've all got the picture of what things were like for you here," Rahul continued. "Those of you who have spoke are barely above whisper. That needs to change, right now. If you have anything to say or anything to ask, you need to let us hear you. Our two leaders are finishing up across town at another orphanage. They want you to talk freely and openly about everything, the same goes for the medics and for everyone on my team." Turning to Tad and I, Rahul prompted, "Tell the rest of the group about the care givers."

"They really are tied up and gagged," I clearly said.

"And they will remain tied up and gagged until every one of you are out of this house," Rahul promised. "We don't want to hear their excuses, and you sure don't need to hear anything more from them. Once all of you are gone, then your caregivers will be judged and sentenced by the two leaders coming here. You will never see them or this house ever again. You will see each other again. You will be fed, as soon as the medics take a look at you and have an idea what each of you can manage."

He paused to ask, "Are there any questions?"

Raising my hand and gaining Rahul's attention, I asked, "Why can't you feed us something?"

"Dude, I would love to get you a big bowl of chicken soup, and something for each of you," Rahul admitted. "The fact is, I'm not a doctor. What sounds like a cold to me, our team's medic thinks might be bronchitis or pneumonia. All of you are smaller than you should be and have obviously been starved, which we can see by your distended bellies. Very little food would have one or many of you puking it up. I can guarantee that you'll all be fed, once the doctors know how much they can safely feed you. And each meal will get just a little larger, so we can have you healthy again."

"How can you know what it was like for us here?" Catherine meekly asked.

Rahul answered, "I was rescued by the Clan too. We unlocked your doors. We saw how and where each of you were sleeping. We looked in closets and dressers. Your caregivers have stop-watches and timers scattered around everywhere, leading us to believe that each of you were monitored and timed for everything. All of you are naked and not one of you asked for a robe, which tells me that clothing is something you keep off and as clean as possible, because you have so little of it. Before you go back to bed tonight, you'll be able to shower, and eat without a timer. You'll have clean clothes every day."

One of the little dudes, Dwight Scott hissed, "Liar!" Stunned, everyone looked at Dwight. Dwight was also surprised, quickly got up and ran behind the couch, sure that he was going to be hit for opening his mouth.

Carefully and gently, Rahul smiled, "I know it seems too good to be true, because I was just like you. Everyone on my team was just like you too. The only way you'll know that I'm not lying is when you're fed all you can eat as often as you can manage. You'll know I'm not lying when you have a clean change of clothing for every day." Snapping his fingers and hitting upon an idea, Rahul grinned, "Daileass, a Santa sack, with toys and games for sixteen kids."

On the floor before Rahul appeared a red velvet sack. Leaning down and picking it up, Rahul went to the sofa where the majority of the kids were congregated. Soon, he was passing out dolls to little girls, and various toy trucks and cars to little boys. Every kid got something to play with. For kids that hadn't had toys or games in years, it was shocking; so much so that we didn't even know what to say. Tad and I got GameBoys. I hadn't touched a Gameboy in three years. Tad's was basketball and mine was baseball. Immediately, we turned them on and started to play.

Grinning at us, Rahul called two of his team into the living room, so he could step outside and be ready for Sean and Troy's arrival. At almost the same time Rahul was leaving, the first of the medics arrived. There were two doctors, one male and one female. Also, there were two nurses. Since they were focusing on the youngest kids first, Tad and I concentrated on our GameBoys.

I noticed Colin Townsend and Kim Brock were staring at each other's toys. Kim, a seven-year-old little girl, had a doll in a beautiful evening dress. Colin is new, a five-year-old little boy, who had a toy excavator on treads. After a few minutes of indecision, Kim got a very serious look on her face and approached Colin. She leaned in close to Colin and whispered in his ear.

After a few moments Colin said, "Really?" She nodded and smiled at him. He got a huge smile on his face and they traded toys. He told everybody, "My mommy had dress just like this," and then tears leaked from his eyes and down his cheeks.

I was becoming worried at this point. People were not this nice; not without getting something out of it. I was sure that there was a catch to all this. I mean, it was too good to be true, but I was pretty sure that life was going to be better than it had been for the last three years. I figured I would find out soon enough what the "catch" was. Hell, maybe I would even be willing to pay the price, whatever it might be.

A tall blond boy, who was about as cute as possible walked into the house and entered the living room. He glanced around at the activity and smiled at us kids with our toys and games. "My name's Sean Moorhead," the cutie said, "I'm one of the Pacific Rim Division leaders. I guess you're all realizing things are changing. This time last week, I was an orphan too, and just like you kids."

At the same time Sean was chattering, telling us some of the same stuff that Rahul had said, a Starfleet Doctor came up to Tad and I. He scanned Tad with a funny lookin' little box, and said Tad had an upper respiratory infection that he was still kicking. When it was my turn to stand before Doc Metzger, I was told that I had bronchitis and a fever. When he asked how I felt, I pointed to the rest of the cough drops that I had put on an end table near the chair, saying, "Better since Rahul gave me those."

"And you'll be back to normal in another day or two," Doc Metzger smiled.

Another teenage boy, even cuter than Sean, came into the living room. Sean introduced his boyfriend, Troy, and then they started whispering to each other. Sean was gesturing to a couple of us kids in the room. Nurses were starting to transport out with some of us. A male nurse beamed in and gathered me, Tad, Gerry and Jessie together. I made sure I had my journals, GameBoy and the rest of the cough drops. With a tap to his chest, the dude ordered us to be transported to Las Vegas Children's Hospital.

Going from the relatively dim lighting of the living room to the bright lights of a hospital exam room, my eyes burned and my headache painfully throbbed. The male nurse said, "You'll be put in rooms once the doctors get finished. So that I can keep you four close together, tell me who you'd like to have as a roommate for a few days."

Tad quickly wrapped an arm around me, which I found surprising. My mind ricocheted through tangents, wondering if Tad really loved me, and Gerry and Jessie softly said that they would room together. "I'll make sure you're close together," the male nurse promised. He then gestured for us to follow him to a small room off the main exam room. He turned on the lights and we saw that it was a lavatory with showers. He instructed us to take showers, specifically telling us to take our time. Focusing on me, he said, "A very warm shower is what you need. Let the steam loosen the phlegm in your chest; hack it up and spit it down the drain. You four stay in the shower until I or a doctor come and get you."

He left us. I put my journals, Gameboy and cough drops down on a shelf. We all went to the toilets and relieved ourselves. Then we went to the showers. I bathed like I haven't been able to in three years. Everything was washed twice. The next thing I know, Tad is right before me, smiling, "There's something I want you to have that I never could give you before." He then kissed me! I was sick as a dog, but the dude kissed me hard and deep! When he leaned back from me, I started giggling, which spurred on a coughing fit. I swear, it felt like my lungs were burning and all sorts of nastiness was spit down the drain.

Of course, while I was otherwise occupied, Gerry and Jessie were laughing at me, and the twisted expression Tad was obviously wearing. There he was, being all sweet and romantic, with a sick boyfriend who couldn't even say thank you, never mind the other dozens of questions flying through my mind.

We were finished with our showers, but the nurse or doctor hadn't come to get us, so we just waited there, bullshitting about the wild turn of events from the Clan rescue. Feeling cold, I remained under the warm water. There were a lot of unanswered questions lingering. What was going to happen to us in the hospital? Yeah, I was sick and Tad had been sick, but why did Gerry and Jessie need to be there? What would happen to us when we were well enough to leave the hospital? Would we get to stay together or would we be separated? All those Clan dudes said things would be better, but in what ways would it be better? What was the cost for all these better things? Could we stay together as long as we wanted? Could we split apart if that was the way things turned out?

After being so limited in our choices for so long, having so many options was brand new and really scary. Hell having more than two options was brand new. It had been only two options for so long, do what you are told or get a beating, that we really knew nothing else.

The male nurse returned at last, and this time he introduced himself; we must've been showering for at least twenty minutes. He brought us towels and hospital gowns, that Aaron, our nurse, helped us get on and tied. I started posing questions to Aaron, and he started giving us answers. After a few days in the hospital, we would be assigned to the Pacific Rim Division Clan, but that didn't mean we were being forced to remain there. At any time, anyone could decide to move to another Clan Division. If that was where we had friends, then we could move. Another choice is not what I wanted, and judging by the uncertain expressions Tad, Gerry and Jessie wore, they didn't like it either.

Next, we wanted to know why all of us needed to be in a hospital. Since I was sick, Aaron started with me. After he spoke of my bronchitis, he asked, "How old and how tall are you, Neil?"

"I'm fifteen, and about five-three, the last I heard."

"The average height for a fifteen year old male is five feet eight inches. Accordingly, you should also weigh about one hundred and forty pounds. All of you, not just you four, are malnourished. We're going to pump vitamins and minerals into you intravenously, and we're going to give you more food in the next day than any of you have had in the last week.

"We can't undo all the damage done in only a few days," Aaron continued, "but we are going to give you jump starts, so you can join the Clan and interact with other kids. I wouldn't doubt it if all your school grades have been suffering because of your weakened states. These next few days, the four of you and I will become friends. From seven at night until seven in the morning, your health and rehabilitation is my job. In the morning another male nurse will be assigned to you four. Doctors will wander in and out of your rooms, but soon you'll be calling my name as easily as you call for each other."

"What's the catch?" I wondered.

Aaron uncertainly repeated, "Catch?"

Suspiciously, Tad squinted, "The cost. What do you want from us?"

Aaron grinned, "Help me to help you get well, and then help each other get well, and lastly help each other stay well, long after you leave here. In other words, be brothers. Don't just act like you care, really give a damn about each other."

Leading the way back into the treatment room, Aaron had us lay on these funny looking tables. They were padded, better than the pads we slept on at the home. Maybe two minutes after I lay down, I was asleep. I don't know how long I was out, but when I woke, Aaron was there with three more male nurses, four doctors, and I had an IV tube in my arm. Looking around, I saw Tad, Gerry and Jessie all had IV tubes too.

Each of us were helped into wheel chairs. We were wheeled down a hall, into an elevator, down another hall through the double-doors marked 'PEDIATRIC WING' and down the hall into our room. Gerry and Jessie were wheeled into the room across the hall. Only as I was getting helped onto a nice big bed did I shout, "MY JOURNALS! AND MY GAMEBOY!"

"Are right here," Tad giggled. "Just cos you're a veg, don't mean everyone is."

I smirked, "When did you decide to get a sense of humor?"

"I'll remind you after the nurses leave," Tad giggled. The two adult male nurses mooed through their chuckles. They showed us how to use the nurse call buttons and reminded us to use them even for simple stuff, like using the bathroom in our room. Tad blinked, "Even for the bathrooms?"

"You matter to us, to every doctor and nurse here, and most of all to the boys at Pacific Rim Division," one of the nurses told us.

The other one grinned, "There will be no tripping, falling down, or bodily damages of any sort. Rumors are already flying about your division's leader, so we're not testing him in any way."

They went to the door saying, "Good night," and one dimmed the lights. The other pulled the door a little more than halfway closed.

Blinking tears away, I told Tad, "No one's said good night to us in years."

"If they said anything at all, it was more like, 'get out of my sight'," Tad muttered. Another minute or two passed quietly before Tad whispered, "I never thought this day would come. I thought I'd die in that home."

"I practically ran home from school," I half coughed. Once I was done coughing, I finished, "I thought they were taking you away, like they did that other older guy."

"Dave Horowitz," Tad reminded.

"Yeah," I remembered, and then asked, "What do you think happened to him?"

"Taken away to someplace worse, where he would die," Tad answered.

"We've got a chance now."

"Hopefully, a really good chance."

I sniggered, "Why did you kiss me? I'm sick, you goof!"

"Because you helped me while I was sick," Tad giggled.

"Being in a bed feels weird. Being here feels weird. I'm tired, and I'm comfortable, and I know I should sleep, but I'm afraid to."

"I know... right... Uhm... Are you crying, Neil?"

I didn't respond because I was crying. I couldn't figure out what I felt right then. Things felt so right, but feeling right felt wrong. I tried to answer but all that came out was sobs and coughing. Tad started to cry as well. I guess we didn't know how to feel good anymore. Not really.

Aaron came into our room with a box of tissues, a pitcher and a stack of plastic cups. On his way to the night tables between our beds, he asked, "Why are you awake and crying?"

All I could say through my sobs and hacking was, "I don't know."

Tad was able to squeeze out a meek sounding, "Me too... Don't know."

"Too good. Don't know how." I tried again.

Nodding understandingly, Aaron poured from the pitcher into a cup which he handed to Tad. He gave me the tissues and I pulled a few to blow my nose. He then poured a cup for me. It was apple juice. I cried harder. Aaron pulled a chair between our beds.

"Guys, it's gonna be all right," Aaron softly assured. "I know you've been through hell, but this is how things are supposed to be. It's okay to feel scared and not to be comfortable with how things are." He took each of our hands in his and gave them a gentle squeeze. It was like electricity to me. I had forgotten what this had felt like. He asked, "Would you feel safer if I stayed here until you fell asleep?"

Tad and I nodded. We both reached for the tissues and blew our noses.

"I'll stay with you," Aaron softly promised. "So you know, three other nurses for the other three groups of kids are doing the same thing. We know how bizarre all this must seem to you, and expected this."

I heard Aaron sigh. He looked at me then Tad. "Let me tell you a secret, okay?"

I just nodded. I heard "okay" from Tad.

"I am scared too. You know, when they told us what we were being asked to do, I couldn't believe what they told us. I am so scared that I am going to screw this up and make things hard for you guys."

"Don't be scared," Tad prompted. "You've been doin' good. The shower was a little longer than we needed though."

Aaron chuckled, "You and especially Neil needed a long hot shower. If I promise not to act scared, could you guys do the same too?"

"I can act. We learned that lesson really well. Yeah, I can do that." My voice was so bitter. It surprised me a lot. I regretted how that sounded, and tried to explain myself. "I... I didn't... I mean... I'm sorry, Aaron. Sorry. Sorry." I broke down again.

Aaron assured, "It's okay, Neil. How about we drop the acting idea? Acting isn't real. So, I'm scared and you're both scared, so we're scared together. We'll deal with it and help make each other a little less scared."

Tad softly admitted, "It's been years since we've had juice. Water at the home and milk with school lunches. That's it."

"Apple juice today, and tomorrow orange juice," Aaron revealed. "There's too much acid in orange juice for your bellies right now. Tomorrow, you'll get milkshakes too, whichever flavor you like. We're hoping by Friday or Saturday, you can have soda pop."

I did not know what to say, but Tad beat me to it with, "Thanks, Aaron."

"Don't mention it, Tad. That's what we're here for. To help you get better and see to your wants and needs, within reason of course. Besides, I think you two are pretty cool young men. I am proud to know both of you."

I thought I would die right then because as soon as I opened my mouth, all that came out was a hiccup, followed by a series of hiccup/coughs as I blew phlegm all over Aaron.

Grabbing the box of tissues to wipe up some of the mess I made, Aaron snickered, "Share and share alike, huh, Neil? I guess this shirt is laundry now." Tad howled laughing at my blush and Aaron's remarks. Extremely embarrassed, I slid down the bed and pulled the sheet over my head. I could feel Aaron picking up all the used tissues on my bed. What kind of person gets coughed and spit on, but then picks up more snotty tissues?

Honestly, for a moment, I thought Aaron was going to hit me, but he didn't. Mr. Franklin definitely would have beaten my ass for that. I did not know what to think at this point. I was sure I was going to wake back up in the home. Tad would be gone, and Mr. Franklin would be screaming at us, as usual. I peaked out from under the blanket and saw Aaron cleaning himself off. He was still chuckling. I thought that he must be nuts. I mean, Jeez, who thinks it's funny to have snot blown all over you? I don't think I've ever been so embarrassed in my life.

Rolling around his bed, completely hysterical, Tad almost rolled right off and onto the floor. Aaron sniggered, "You think it's so funny, you can have some," and tossed some used tissues at him. Tad tossed them back, but never stopped laughing. Tissues got tossed at me, which I rapidly threw back at Tad. In moments, we were having a used tissue battle.

The more we played, the more I coughed and laughed. Yes,

Aaron is insane, I finally recognized. The twenty-something-year-old man, whom I had hacked half a lung onto, was playing the gross game of snot rag warfare with us. I don't think I've ever laughed so much and for so long. We finished the game with Aaron holding the waste can, so we could bounce used tissues off him and into the trash.

I had coughed, giggled and laughed myself to exhaustion. With all the tissues cleaned up, Aaron returned to the chair between the beds. Tad giggled. Turning my face into the pillow, I sputtered, laughed and coughed. Aaron evilly snickered. Sometime before five in the morning, I crashed hard, and stayed asleep until about three in the afternoon.

Sounds from the television woke me, but I still didn't open my eyes. The smell of food being brought into the room made me open my eyes. Yes, I was still in the same hospital room, with Tad in the bed closest to the windows, chowing down on something that smelled so good, my first words were, "Where's mine?"

"Ten hours later," Tad grinned, and gestured to me, telling the man near his bed, "Mario, that's Neil Van Winkle, my boyfriend." Turning to me, Tad said, "Neil, this is Mario Hines, our day nurse. Since ten this morning, I've had breakfast, pre-lunch, lunch, and now pre-dinner. The best part is, every meal gets a little larger, and somehow, a little better than the last."

By this time, Mario had walked around Tad's bed to mine, he shook my hand and asked, "How're you feeling?"

I answered, "Besides hungry, I'm feeling pretty good, and really happy last night wasn't a dream."

Around a mouthful of food, Tad mumbled and giggled, "That means he probably won't hock goobers all over you, Mario."

"I'm glad to hear it," Mario chuckled.

"Oh God! Please tell me that you didn't tell him about... Oh God!" I said and pulled the blanket over my head again.

Tapping gently on my blanket, Mario asked, "Let me get you into the bathroom. While you shower and take care of necessities, I'll get you your first meal... and Tad's fifth, sixth and seventh meals. Maybe I'll just wheel in a mini-kitchen complete with chef for you two; it would be less walking back and forth, anyway." When I peeked out from under the blanket, Mario smiled, "Come on, Neil. There are towels and clean gowns in the bathroom."

"I just showered when we got here," I softly reminded.

"A shower a day, especially for kids with bronchitis," Mario prodded.

"Don' wanna come out. Uh Uhhh!"

"Then we can run a tube into your belly and give you the food in a mushed up, bland soup that you really won't enjoy."

I gave up. I was not really happy about it though. "Fine," was all I would say as I got up. I wasn't angry, but I was upset and embarrassed. I just figured it was better than where I had been.

"Kewl, buddy," Mario smiled, and he took my arm, helping me out of bed. Leading me and my IV rack to the toilet, Mario asked, "Waffles and sausage, or bacon and eggs, Neil?"

I thought about it, couldn't decide, and smirked, "Eggs, waffles, bacon and sausage sounds good." Tad burst into loud giggles.

"Another one," Mario grinned. "Let's make this easier on everyone, and just wheel your beds down to the cafeteria."

"No argument here!" Tad cheered.

Mario glanced at me. I chortled, "As long as my gown fits the dress code, why not?"

"I figured as much," Mario sniggered. Releasing my arm and putting my hand on the IV rack, Mario paused at the bathroom door and explained, "There's about six feet of tubing, and the gowns have snaps on the sleeves, so you can get it together without pulling the needle out."

Nodding, I assured, "No problem."

Saying, "I'll be back with the grub," Mario left me at the bathroom doorway.

I rolled the IV rack in with me and closed the door. In no time, I had the gown off. Standing there before the throne peeing, I saw bright yellow pee. It had been years since my piss was this color. Considering that I felt like warmed over death the prior afternoon, but now I felt way better, I wondered what the heck was in the sacks that led to my IV. I tried reading the print, but didn't know what any of the ten syllable words meant. All that seemed to remain of my killer cold was some sinus and chest congestion.

It took Tad a week to get over the cold, but I was doing good in under day. At first I thought, okay, they said things would be better, and this was part of the proof. I also remembered spitting on the zookeepers, and wish I had puked, pissed and shit on them, because the IVs and one night's rest had me on the mend. I hadn't even had a real meal yet. As far as I was concerned, Tad was sicker longer because of the worthless meals and rotten sleeping condition at the home.

I took a nice long shower and emptied my sinuses, but not much came out of my lungs. There was still a little rattle and tickle in there, I could feel it. Drying off, I caught my own reflection in the mirror on the door. So that's what a malnourished fifteen-year-old looks like, I thought. In my opinion, the worst part was the patches of hair on my face, but I could also see that my legs and arms had less muscle than most kids at our school. All this needed to change today; I needed to shave and I wanted to see some average teenaged dudes to compare myself to.

While taking off the old gown was easy, getting the clean one on was a struggle, because it kept slipping down and off me. While I snapped the sleeve on one side, the other side was practically down on the floor. After a couple of minutes of muttered obscenities, both sleeves were snapped, but tying the back closed was a pointless effort. I walked out of the bathroom telling Tad, "Dude, tie the back of this thing before I have a fit, tear it into pieces and say fuck it."

Beginning to giggle before I reached his bed, Tad softly shared, "Tying it for you will give me a fit, and both our things will be stiff."

Sadly shaking my head, and exposing my rear so he could tie the gown, I asked, "You really want to be boyfriends?"

"Yeah," Tad quickly admitted. "Looking at Catherine last night didn't make my dick hard, it made it shrivel and try to hide."

"She caused no response from me either." I pointed up at the TV asking, "What channel is that?"

Finished tying my gown, Tad groped my butt for a long couple o' moments, giggling, "It's not a regular channel. While you slept, me and a bunch of kids wanted to know who rescued us, and where we'd be living. That's the auditorium at Ewa Beach, Hawaii. If you look closer, you'll recognize Troy playing guitar up there. Our leaders have their own band, and that's them, playing for the level one orphanage kids and the rest of their Clan. This video and audio feed is what I've been watching for a couple o' hours now."

Drinking in the show, with lots of stage lights and active band members having fun, I muttered, "They're a good band." Then I faced Tad to ask, "Don't you want someone that wasn't an orphan; ya know, a little more normal?"

Tad sighed, "Yeah, that might be a good idea, but the truth is, it's already too late for me to choose anyone else. You and I have been best friends since day one... your first day there. Gerry and Jessie can finish me off, just like you, but when they're done, they don't look at me the same way you do. When it's only you and me making love, the real answer is in your eyes and in the way we talk right after we're done. We started messin' around because it was fun and simple. Now it's even more fun and far less simple, Neil. I patted your butt because I wanted to, dude. It wasn't just convenient, and it wasn't just me being silly, it was me touching you because I really wanted to. If Mario wasn't due back any moment, I'd be on my knees for you."

Nodding, I smiled, "All I can say is, let's try it for real, ya know, now that we're out of the home. I'm still wondering, will it be the same as the home, or better, or worse? If it's the same or better, for both of us, then yeah, our decision is made. That was clear to me when I ran home yesterday. Thinking the zoo-keepers would take you away scared the hell out of me."

"I know," Tad brightly smiled. "As soon as you told me that, I was thinking the same way; what if I went to school today, came back to the home, and found you weren't there. The answer was, I'd start crying and never really stop. For months and years, I'd cry every time

I thought of you. We can be boyfriends here and there at Ewa Beach too, Neil. The entire leadership team are married gay couples. Mario showed me a photo of him with his boyfriend."

I smirked, "What else did I sleep through?"

Shrugging, Tad pointed at the screen, giggling, "I saw the first groups of orphans from last night's raids arriving at the cafeteria. Our school cafeteria was small compared to that place. Some kid named Alden introduced me to our leaders by name. They went to the auditorium, and I saw them walking there. What little I've seen is really nice." Tad paused and then loudly called, "Hey Alden!"

A new boy's voice came from the TV and speakers in the ceiling, answering, "Yes, Tad?"

"Introduce Neil to the leaders," Tad prompted. He then scooted over and patted the mattress, telling me, "Right here is where you belong."

I climbed up onto Tad's bed, watched the television, and Alden began introducing me to the dudes on stage. When he had gone through all six on stage, three in the audience, two younger dudes in an equipment room and two more that were elsewhere, I turned to Tad. "They're all cute, but you want me?"

Rapidly nodding, Tad giggled, "They're married couples already. Even if they weren't married, I'd want you. I've had time awake to imagine stuff that you haven't. Try this out, Neil; picture us, about six months from now, living there, healthier, heavier and taller. We're just like those kids. Nobody will mock us for being orphans, because they are too. Everything we had to deal with yesterday is gone, never to be dealt with again. As soon as we get out of this hospital, we'll be there with them, in the Republic Of Hawaii. Just thinking about it makes me shiver."

Walking into the room with two big covered trays, Mario wondered, "Who's cold and shivering?"

Tad laughed and pointed at the screen, admitting, "Us going there is making me shiver, dude."

Mario smiled, "First you get well. So far as I've heard, the doctors are thinking all you guys will be there early next week. If you get better faster, they'll adjust the schedule, so you've got some work to do." Tad pulled over the bed table and Mario put the trays he was carrying onto my bed table and rolled it over to us.

Separating the trays onto the bedside tables before Tad and I, Mario asked, "Did Tad tell you what to expect?" Tad shook his head and giggled. Mario chuckled, "Your digestive system is going to freak out with good food to process. Expect bellyaches, constipation, gastritis and then diarrhea, but if you're feeling nausea, stop eating and tell me. The goal for these next few days is to eat as much as you can and as often as you can without feeling nauseous. I was kidding before, Neil. The more food you want, the happier I will be, and the happier all the doctors will be. Food is energy. Energy is strength to walk around and do the physical therapy we'd like all you kids to do before going to Ewa Beach."

Before me were three plates; one had scrambled eggs, another had a big waffle, and the last had slices of bacon and sausage patties. There was a glass of apple juice and a glass of milk. I hadn't seen this much food at once in so long, I had to giggle like a kid on Christmas. Tad cracked up. Mario smiled, "Dig in, guys."

There was a time when I wouldn't touch eggs, no matter how they were cooked, but this time, I ate all the eggs, and then picked on the bacon slices while buttering my waffle. Tad started giggling at me when I dumped all the maple syrup and all the boysenberry syrup on my waffle. I stole his corn muffin, righteously smirking, "The price for goofing on me."

Standing at the window, Mario looked over the city, with his shoulders bouncing, obviously from a held in laugh.

While I pigged out, the concert at Ewa Beach played on the TV. The music was okay, mostly stuff I'd never heard, or couldn't recall ever hearing before, but the band seemed to be having a really good time. The funniest part was Troy singing a song and getting really suggestive with his hands and body movements. Two songs later, the band members were gathered around the drums, and they all cracked up. Troy took off like a rabbit, down the stairs and into the audience. We saw him and Sean racing out of the auditorium like their shorts were on fire. I grinned at Tad. Tad bounced his blond eyebrows at me.

I wasn't half way through my waffle and felt my stomach complaining. Slowing down, I said something about it to Tad. "The same thing happened to me," Tad admitted. "Just eat slower, maybe drink a little milk."

Turning to face us, Mario reminded, "Your bellies aren't used to it. Like Tad said, get used to eating slower. Next you'll get a milkshake, like Tad did three meals ago."

"Before I could even finish it, I jumped out of bed and flew into the bathroom," Tad sniggered. "All that effort to piss and fart."

Doctor Metzger came in the room, smiling, "A healthy appetite is a sure sign my bronchitis patient is feeling better."

I softly admitted, "Just a little congestion still, Doc."

"Take extra hot showers, as hot as you can stand it, and lean forward while coughing," Doctor Metzger advised. "The best place for what's in your lungs is down the drain." Waving his stethoscope, he then asked, "If you're taking a break from breakfast, I can have a listen the old fashioned way?"

I nodded and the doctor came closer. Oddly, I found myself feeling like I couldn't trust the man. He had examined me and Tad the night before, and I recognized him, so he wasn't a complete stranger, and he certainly hadn't harmed me or Tad in any way, but distrust is what I felt. Leaning forward some, I breathed in deep and exhaled slowly, like he told me. He even warned me that the stethoscope might feel a little cold, and it did, but only a little, yet I jumped when he placed it against my back. Stepping back, he muttered, "Almost clear again," and removed the ear pieces. He locked eyes with Mario and told him that when one of the sacks dripping into my IV tube was empty, it wouldn't need to be replaced.

I couldn't spell what Doc Metzger said to Mario if my life depended on it. Let's call it Supercalifragilisticexpialidocious; some souped up stuff developed in Starfleet, no doubt. All that mattered is that it worked, clearing my lungs and turning my urine bright yellow.

Doc Metzger waved his box before Tad and proclaimed him "fit as a fiddle". All we needed was more rest, more IV vitamin and mineral supplements, and more food. Tad and I asked about the other kids from our home. Everyone was coming along nicely, so the plan was to send us to Ewa Beach on Monday. I returned to my waffle, sausage and juice. Waving and saying that he'd be back in a few hours, Doc Metzger left the room.

On the TV, the concert was over. The majority of the kids in the audience left the auditorium, but I'd guess close to a hundred remained. All the band members came down off the stage, and more leaders came out of the audience to stand with the band members. After a minute or two of chit-chatting, the entire group disappeared from the auditorium. The camera view now showed a big department store.

The cute blond drummer named Derrick explained, "This is just like any other department store. Everything is free, so don't be shy. Anyone that needs help choosing sizes, let one of us know. You'll all need at least a week's worth of clothes."

Another leader named Drew quickly emphasized, "A week's worth is not what those butt-heads at the orphanage gave you guys. There are seven days in a week, so a minimum of seven pair of boxers or underpants and seven pair of socks. A change of clothes for every day is normal."

Corey nodded, "Everybody gets a pair of sandals and a pair of sneakers. Basically, concentrate on everyday clothes. Here in the ROH, that means T-shirts, shorts, boardies, swimwear, light blouses for you girls. Get jeans, sport shirts and jackets or ponchos too, cos the rainy season here can start in late November."

Prez nodded and instructed, "Big guys and gals, help the little tikes. And we'll help whoever needs it, whenever needed."

A small red-headed boy gushed, "We can help too!" then took a shocked little boy by the hand and pulled him to the shopping carts.

We noticed that the leadership team split in half, some went with the girls to one side of the store, and the remainder stayed with the boys.

Tad wondered, "Will that happen with us too?"

Before I could do more than shrug, Alden answered, "Yes it will,

Tad. All the kids get to choose their own clothes. Everybody usually winds up with more than a week worth of clothes. For instance, guys like you will find that underwear usually comes in packs of three briefs or boxers, so automatically you'll have nine pair in three packages. Similarly with packages of socks; you'll have at least nine pair or as much as twelve pair. When they get to shorts and shirts, they'll choose colors and styles, but generally every guy winds up with at least seven pair of shorts and two pair of jeans. The same sort of thing happens with shirts. The Core Rimmers..."

Shocked at what the kid had said and laughing my ass off, I spit juice half-way across the room. Tad and Mario cracked up.

Alden giggled, "Sorry about that, Neil. This is Pacific Rim Division. Prez immediately named the division 'The Rimmers', and the leadership team are the 'Core Rimmers'. You can probably already tell, our kids have a sense of humor and healthy libidos. The word Rimmers won't seem so funny after a day or two." The blanket and sheet that I had just drenched vanished off the bed and replacements appeared in a neat stack at the foot of the bed.

Heading toward the door, Mario sniggered, "Neil's a spitting Rimmer. We might have to put a warning label on you, buddy."

Alden continued telling us what our first shopping trip would be like. Finally finishing my first meal, I kicked back on the bed and watched the TV with Tad. Mario returned with an orderly to mop the floor. He gathered our empty trays and left the room again. When he returned, he had two big milkshake glasses.

We got to watch the kids finish their shopping, and then go to the dormitory, where they chose roommates and rooms. Those dorm rooms looked huge. With two double sized beds, two big closets, two dressers, two desks, two chairs, a stereo, a television and even a game station, I guess that each room had to be at least twenty feet by twenty feet. Our bedroom at the home was about ten feet by ten feet. Our new rooms at Ewa Beach were four times larger than the room at the home, and there would only be me and Tad in there.

I told Tad that we needed to shave. We had needed to shave for about a year, but were never allowed to by the zoo-keepers. Mario agreed and left the room. He returned only two or three minutes later with two razors, a can of shaving cream, a tabletop mirror and a large tin bowl filled with warm water. Of course, Mario was there to guide and assist us, since neither of us had ever learned how to shave, and barely recalled watching our fathers shave. Amazingly, Tad and I managed to keep the nicks and scratches down to two each. Always prepared, Mario had a styptic pencil hidden in his shirt pocket.

The sun was going down in Las Vegas, but at Ewa Beach, the sun was still bright, and the new kids went to the pools. By this time, groups of new kids hung with their favorite leaders and their sons. More surprising, Tad and I watched as almost everyone shed their clothes and dove into the pools. My internal desire to learn how I compared to other dudes was answered from the television. It was easy to tell the Core Rimmers and some of the other kids were healthier and better fed than we were. They had muscle and height that many of the other kids didn't have.

I hadn't been allowed to participate in gym class for two of my three years at the home. Because of that, I hadn't seen the inside of a locker room those years. On the screen on the wall were hundreds of naked dudes. The most clear differences were in chests and thighs; healthier dudes had bigger chests and thighs, and some had awesome abs for teenagers. The backside views revealed teenaged dudes with great forms.

We could clearly see who had how much of what hanging between their legs. Quite honestly, that was one way that Tad and I matched all those other healthier dudes we were watching. We asked Alden how old some of the kids were, and he began with the Core Rimmers. Most surprising was twelve-year-old Drew and eleven-year-old Corey. They were taller than almost every other kid their age and had pubes too, where most kids their age didn't. We eventually learned how tall Drew and Corey were too. The sad truth was that I was the same height as Drew.

Extremely angry, I went into a major bitching fit. Tad was at the same place as me, and he was about an inch or two taller than me, but realizing how our growth was stunted by the zoo-keepers, I wanted to beat the crap out of both of them. Tad and Mario calmed me down, but the truth of my complaints were all over the television.

Mario fed us dinner about six-thirty. I had been awake for three and a half hours and eaten three times. Awake for more than seven hours, Tad had eaten hourly. At last, Tad's belly was so full that he couldn't finish his meal, so he pushed it over to me to finish for him. While I finished his meal, Tad took a trip to the bathroom. Mario took our empty trays from the room, and Tad returned to the room, freshly showered.

Cuddling up to me, Tad pleasantly sighed, "It's really over, Neil. In a couple o' days, we're going to be in the ROH with those kids we're watching."

Nodding, I grinned, "You want to be boyfriends and roommates?"

"Yeah."

"If you ever decide you want it to change, just tell me, dude. I'll understand."

"It won't change, Neil. We went through hell together, and survived. While you noticed Drew's height, all I noticed was how extremely cute he is, and how undeniably cute you are. Under the worst circumstances, you've been my best friend in the world. Don't you think sex together was better than with Gerry and Jessie?"

"It always has been, but they're younger. I'll bet they were doing stuff together and with us simply because they could, not because they really wanted to."

"Why do you think I'd be more interested in anyone else?"

I shrugged, "You're taller, and after watching all those sexy teenagers on the TV, I now know that you're about the sexiest dude around."

"You're plenty sexy too," Tad giggled. "I may be taller, but here I am, snuggled up to you with a stiffy. We've got to find a way to be alone soon, dude."

Nodding, I chuckled, "Come with me, into the bathroom." Looking up and seeing I was serious, Tad rolled off the other side of the bed. On the way to the bathroom, I told Tad, "I love you, ya know?"

"I know," Tad giggled. "You never think anything you do is special, but you are very special. I'm gonna prove that too."

Soon, we were behind a locked bathroom door, embracing, kissing, and going for it orally, and for the first time since Tad got sick, we had intercourse too. Leaning against a wall, I got some of him and then it was Tad's turn to lean over and give me some too. Sweaty and messy, we took a shower together, which led to our first time cleaning up one set of messes that caused additional orgasms to flow down the drain with the soapy water. The only bad part was the IV needles and tubes getting in our way.

Getting dressed in the gowns was far easier with a boyfriend to help. We walked out of the bathroom and found that our beds had been remade. Mario wasn't there, but our food trays were waiting, and it was obvious that someone had been cleaning. Realizing our alone time wasn't quite alone, we both blushed and giggled. The television was now showing the dining room at Ewa Beach. We crawled back up onto Tad's bed to watch more from Ewa Beach.

Soon thereafter, Aaron showed up. He was the one that cleaned our room and admitted that he heard us in the bathroom. That's when we learned that Aaron was gay, but his high school boyfriend couldn't deal with medical school. They parted friends.

I started writing in my journal around eight o'clock. Snuggled up to me, Tad fell asleep around nine o'clock. When he rolled away and onto his back, I went back to my own bed, where I continued writing about this most awesome day. Yes, I have a light attached to my hospital bed that I can adjust and swing down, so it don't disturb Tad. At least it doesn't seem to be bothering him.

Aaron's sitting between our beds again. Helping me keep all the facts organized, I talked with Aaron about the day and he even helped me spell some words now and then.

It's almost midnight now. Even in Hawaii the sun has long since set. Since most of the kids at Ewa Beach are winding down for the day, and there really isn't much of anything interesting going on, Aaron just told Alden to return control of the television to us.

Aaron flipped channels, and told me that the worldwide stock markets crashed, because of Zorro Communications, what their company had done to us orphans and because the Core Rimmers uncovered the horrible truth.

According to the news, things were getting ugly all over; riots were going on in New York City and Los Angeles. Here in Las Vegas, everything seemed fine. Aaron said that he had no trouble getting from home to here. I just told him that it makes sense to me that people were angry about what was done to us orphans. When he turned to me rapidly blinking, I said, "We're level two and I watched level one kids half the day. I can only imagine what level three and level four kids might be like, and it's not a pretty picture."

Nodding, Aaron sighed and then smiled, "You're a remarkable young man. You've got a strong presence, some rough edges, but you're also amazingly sensitive." He gestured to Tad and reminded, "That's why he loves you."

I paused my writing, softly giggling, "He's so great too. I'm just a little worried." Noticing Aaron's curiosity, I sighed, "He's so cute, genuinely handsome, and I just feel like he can do better. I should feel something intense for him, I know that, and it bothers me that I don't."

Aaron smiled, "You're already intense, Neil. Every emotion you show is powerful. If you showed more, everyone that knows you would freak out and probably run in the opposite direction. Don't change a thing, and don't worry about what you do and don't feel. Just be yourself, with Tad and with all your new Clan family."

"Clan family?" I uncertainly repeated.

Aaron said, "A clan is an extended family. That's exactly what you'll be moving into, a community of friends that treat each other like close family. Did you know every kid in your orphanage looked up to you?" I shook my head wondering how that could be, since we barely ever saw each other. "It's true," Aaron continued, "you're the oldest, and the most vocal, and they all still ask, 'What's Neil say we should do?' Our trips in and out of this room are always delayed by some other nurse, asking Mario and I to stop in and tell the kids what you're doing and saying, so they know it's okay for them to do it too."

"Great!" I sarcastically giggled. "Now you've got fourteen other kids hockin' goobers at nurses and spitting apple juice across the room."

Be myself, I mused. I'm not sure I know who I am anymore. I mean, I used to, but over the last three years, I think I have forgotten what it means to be myself. I mean... Oh... Never mind. Me a leader? Stupid, stupid, stupid! That was what my mind was saying. Instead, I said, "Well, you gotta have good aim to hock goobers in a way that bears imitating."

I'm not sure why everyone was asking what I thought. I mean, who am I? I don't even know the answer to that one. I don't know what I should be doing, so how can I tell someone else what they should do. The whole idea was just insane.

Aaron softly chortled, "The sign of a true leader is someone that marches to the beat of his own drummer. The next thing you know, he's got a parade of kids following him around."

Smirking, I warned, "Since nice guys finish last, you'll pay for this nightmare you're implanting, Aaron."

"Call it a night, Neil. Let's see if you can wake up in under ten hours."

Good idea. More tomorrow.

+++++

Friday, November 5, 2004

I woke about noon. Tad had been awake less than a half-an-hour. Mario was already on a breakfast run for us.

Between two in the morning yesterday and two in the afternoon today, I've had four showers. At the home it would've taken two weeks to have four showers, and each would've been timed. They're not timed any more, and the last two showers were with Tad, my super sexy, super horny boyfriend. He was getting too close to losing it too fast, so I asked him what the zoo-keepers might think if they knew about our relationship.

Just that little bit set Tad off laughing. My intention was to plant images of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin in his mind so he would slow down or maybe lose his erection. That wasn't what happened. He got silly and only occasionally pumped into me, making me coo and squeal with each powerful thrust. I'll write here exactly what I told Tad. "Do me that way again, whenever you want." His response was a nod and a really deep kiss. I discovered that I can breathe through my nose again.

We came out of the bathroom to a cleaned room and breakfast trays waiting. Mario was glued to the television, watching the news reports of what was now being called the Battle Of Earth. While we slept, we missed Romulan attacks on San Francisco, Washington DC, London and Beijing. Unbelievably, the Romulans had taken human form and had lots of humans on their side. The video from Los Angeles showed a city and a county that was on fire from rioting. Not everything everywhere was on fire, but November is the time of year where the Santa Ana winds blow, and fires get out of control. That seemed to be exactly what was happening; small fires were spreading throughout entire city blocks.

Mario just left to get us milkshakes. Tad reached a hand under my gown. More later...

+ + + + + + + + + + + + +

It's almost three-thirty in the afternoon. The milkshakes are history and lunch is on it's way. Before he left the room, Mario told us that he's purposefully giving Tad and I extra time alone, to become a couple, to say what needs to be said and do what has to be done. As soon as Mario left, Tad hollered, "ALDEN?"

"Right here, Tad."

"Enough of this stupid war," Tad simply said. "Show us what's going on at Ewa Beach."

Taking over the television, Alden explained, "I'm kind of busy today, guys. There are refugees from the riots and battle zones. These kids in the basement store are mostly newbies." He zoomed in and introduced us to Reyes Taraschke, a new Core Rimmer, Ralphie Bonham, who arrived there yesterday, a really cute red-head named Pat O'Hara, a cuter blond teen named Chris Stokley, and a younger kid named Rafe Montigua.

Alden then instructed, "This is my voice from a virtual intelligence machine. You can talk to me and I'll interact with you, or execute instructions for you, but for the next few hours, I'll be busy helping with the refugees. So you know and can tell the difference, the real me shows emotion in my voice."

I thanked him and then asked, "Can you just show us what's going on everywhere there, and try to tell us who it is we're watching?"

"Sure, I can take you on virtual tours around the base. If you'd like to see something else, let me know."

For about ten minutes, we watched what was going on in the store. Tad softly asked if I was ready to see something more interesting than guys choosing and trying on clothes. When I nodded, he ordered Alden to show us something else.

"Most of the Clan is having lunch," Alden reported, and switched to the cafeteria cameras.

Entering the room with our food, Mario noticed the television and smiled, "Good, you're catching on. Now you can have lunch with your Clan, remotely of course." He then explained, "I got you cheeseburgers and fries. The doctors think it might be too much too soon, but I know you two dudes better. I figure the worst that might happen is you can't finish it all, and digesting the beef will make you tired."

+ + + + + + + + + + + + +

We managed to finish lunch. Tad and I ate together on his bed, watching all the stuff from Ewa Beach on TV. After watching kids at the cafeteria, Alden switched to the pools, and then the play ground, and then inside the recreation center. Another group of new kids was rescued and Alden introduced us to them from the basement store.

Proving that we could digest our cheeseburgers, I let a loud nasty one rip. Tad counter attacked with a silent but deadly one. Cracking up, Mario left the room and stood out in the hall where there was fresh air. Laughing hysterically, Tad told me to return to my own bed, as if he's got a rose garden blooming over there! Doc Metzger came by, but Mario told him that now wasn't the best time. Down wind of us, the red onions on our cheeseburgers were creating more Battle Of Earth casualties. Tad and I were out of control. It's hard to believe what real food was doing to us, but the proof is the poisonous cloud lingering in our room.

+ + + + + + + + + + + + +

The sun is setting here in Vegas. We've had dinner, and the gas attacks have subsided for the time being.

Okay, I had to pause for a few minutes. On the television, we were watching teenagers like us at the diving well, when suddenly my jaw dropped, and Tad hollered, "THAT CANNOT BE REAL!" Mario roared laughing and almost slid out of the chair.

Giggling hysterically, Alden introduced, "That's Darren DeVault, and yes it is real; nine-and-a-half inches long and six inches in circumference, limp and erect. He's fifteen-years-old, an ex-prostitute, and a really nice guy. I can tell you that Darren's roommate is this guy, Lance Elling, who is also fifteen, also an ex-prostitute, and very cute but completely average between his legs. Darren and Lance are straight, even though they had to act homosexual for money to survive. Lance and Darren help each other out sexually at night, and they're really good friends, but that's where they choose to keep it. These two guys and all the other ex-prostitutes here are off the streets thanks to King Aalona and Prez teaming up last Monday night."

Tad gasped then muttered, "Lance and Darren... but they don't want to be together?"

Alden seriously said, "Everyone is a little bisexual, and they had to do stuff on the streets. Alone in their room, they understand that, and that they want girlfriends and kids of their own. I've seen so many examples of really good friends, gay and straight, that to me these two guys are variations on a theme. Try to imagine what it might be like to have to sell your body to eat, and then not having to do that. They were sexually active before arriving, and they treat each other like best friends all the time. The main difference between them and gay guys is when they finish and kiss each other goodnight, each goes to his own bed.

"They arrived late Tuesday night," Alden continued. "For the last few days, they're adjusting to their new home, and getting to know other kids. I know that they talk about guys who are good friends, and girls who they'd like to know better and maybe hook up with. The best part is how they each have helped the other adjust. The street prostitute show is long gone. Now they can privately tell each other what they perceive happening when they're talking to girls. It's really very kewl, I think."

Grinning at me, Tad evilly snickered, "I couldn't imagine being a prostitute or being like either of them."

"You're cuter than Lance," I honestly shared. Since Mario was in the room, Tad blushed bright red.

Chuckling, Mario told Tad, "When your boyfriend says romantic stuff, you're supposed to go kiss him." I blushed and went into a giggling fit.

Nodding, Tad slid off his bed and into mine. Grinning, I cackled, "It's true!" and was abruptly silenced. Of course I kissed Tad back, but watched Mario slink out of the room and close the door behind him. That was the kewlest thing anyone's ever done. Hearing the door click closed, Tad went berserk, giggling into our mouths, grinding and humping away. The last time he did something like this was just to annoy Gerry and Jessie, but this time his motive was me.

+ + + + + + + + + + + + + + + +

I can't even begin to explain how awesome he's been making me feel since we were rescued. Once we were stiff and puffing away through our noses, Tad pulled back to warmly remind, "I want you, not Darren, or Drew or Lance. In a couple o' days, I want to walk around hand-in-hand with you. I want them all to see me with you."

Smiling widely, I whispered, "You make me feel fantastic. I just don't get it, dude." Tad tilted his head, so I tried to explain, "Not only are you making me feel fantastic, telling me all your awesome ideas for us together, there at Ewa Beach, but Aaron and Mario have been telling me stuff too."

"Like?"

"The other kids want to know what I'm doing, so they know what to do. What the heck do I know, Tad? I'm just as messed up as every one else from that place. I'm going with the flow. It just so happens that the flow is pretty mellow, compared to being mocked at school, mocked by the zoo-keepers and locked away in a tiny room with three other dudes. What's so difficult about sitting in a bed watching TV? Is letting a doctor pass his little tricorder box over us hard to do?" Pointing at the TV, I shared, "As fun as everything looks there, it scares the hell out of me too. I want to skinny dip with those dudes, and at the same time, I don't want them to see my skinny ass. What's kewl and what's not, ya know? I'm relearning everything, just like everyone else."

"I know what to do," Tad offered. "Let's go for a walk and see the kids."

"Kewl," I smiled. "Lead me, dude. Show them you leading me."

"That's my intention," Tad said, and slid off me and off the bed. He reached for my hand and soon we were walking out of the room, pulling our IV stands along with us. Just outside our room, Mario and Aaron were standing out there. They were obviously chatting and surprised to see us.

Aaron smirked, "I could swear I told you to press the nurse call button for help getting out of bed."

"We've got two days of food, vitamins and minerals stored up," I smirked.

Tad added, "We're not even bruised, so chill out. We just want to see the other kids from our home."

"So you can stop speaking for me," I finished.

"Independence is a good thing," Mario chuckled.

Aaron nodded, "I guess they've been making leaps in their recovery today, like you said. The only problem I can foresee is all sixteen of them wandering around the halls tomorrow."

Mario grinned, "Therapy is planned, as well as a few other things." He glanced at Tad and I, saying, "Have a good night, dudes. I'll see you bright and early in the morning, well before either of you wake to see me." Aaron, Tad and I said goodnight to Mario. He walked down the hall. Aaron led us across the hall to see Gerry and Jessie.

The first thing that struck me was the curtain between the beds was partially pulled, so they couldn't see each other. Gerry had been watching the television and what was going on in Ewa Beach until he saw us coming in the room. "Hey!" Gerry brightly beamed, "How're you dudes doin'?"

Tad giggled, "We're really good, Gerry."

Pointing at the curtain, I asked, "What's up with that?"

Gerry shrugged, "Too many years in a tiny room."

"We're gonna try splitting up at Ewa Beach," Jerry offered from the other side of the curtain.

Gerry nodded and smirked, "We've got questions to answer that you two obviously already have. The best way to find the answers is to do it separately. It's not like we won't ever see each other there, but are we friends or are we boyfriends?"

Jessie giggled, "After two days of good food, the stench from the other side of the room almost killed me."

Gerry countered, "The bathroom's on my side of room, stinky!"

Tad and I glanced at each other and cracked up. Almost simultaneously, Gerry and Jessie squealed, "WHAT?"

Tad looked up at Aaron, giggling, "They're fine."

"Still two bitchy queens, whining, griping and complaining," I teased.

Pointing at the television, Tad asked, "What're you gonna whine about there? Too much sun, not enough fun? It's probably a good idea that you get separate rooms and new roommates. You'll learn soon enough that all your old reasons for bitching are gone, especially when no one wants to hear your complaints."

"They're orphans too," I reminded. "Some of them were made orphans today. I swear to you both, if your bitching makes some newly orphaned little kid cry, and I'm around to witness it, you'd better pray and start running. Do you think I don't remember my parents, or Tad doesn't? Every Clan kid has some memories, some good and some bad. Get over it already."

Tad and I glanced at each other and nodded, knowing we had said enough, and that we didn't want to hear their excuses. We turned around and left the room. Aaron led us, sarcastically sniggering, "I can't understand why they look up to you, Neil. It turns out your other half is the opposite end of the same sledgehammer."

Sadly shaking my head, I smirked, "Those two need deep enemas to get the shit out of their brains. It's probably best that they're not roommates when we leave here; guaranteed nobody else would put up with their attitudes."

In the next room, twelve-year-old Alton Santos and eleven-year-old Mack Roberts had milkshakes, and were tossing soft rubber balls around the room with their male nurse. The TV was on and showing them the Ewa Beach cafeteria, where kids were still eating. Tad and I greeted Alton and Mack. Aaron introduced their nurse, Fletcher. We had just started chatting about what Alton and Mack were planning for Ewa Beach when ten-year-olds Jimmy Lynch and Dallas Clark came across the hall and into the room. The nurse caring for Jimmy and Dallas was named Dewayne.

There were six kids and three men in the room. Tad and I learned that Mack and Jimmy were planning on becoming roommates. Alton and Dallas were hoping to start mixing in right away and would find other new kids to share rooms with. Most amazing to me were the changes in these younger dudes. The last time I saw them Wednesday morning, they dragged their tiny butts out to the school bus. Now though, they had energy to spare. The six of us dudes were chit-chatting away and the three adult nurses stepped out into the hall.

Realizing that all six of us were looking forward to going to our new home in the Republic Of Hawaii, but twiddle-dumb and twiddle-dumber were in a different state of mind, all six of us invaded Gerry's and Jessie's room. Tad and I hung back with the nurses, and watched four enthusiastic younger dudes slide open the curtain and climb up onto the two beds.

Finished with the queens, all six of us went further down the hall to the rooms where the youngest four boys were recuperating. Even though they were obviously tired, Colin, Christian, Dwight and Les were looking forward to getting out of the hospital too. None of the four youngest dudes had given much thought to roommates, but we had successfully implanted ideas and options available.

Tad told the gathered group, "We're gonna go see our sisters." All chatter stopped for a few moments. Eight younger dudes blinked at Tad and I, and then looked down at our clasped hands. Giggling and laughter erupted, with comments about us trying to switch sides. Aaron sputtered and began laughing.

Knowing that Aaron had to have heard Tad and I behind a locked bathroom door, I shot a warning smirk at Aaron. Intensely blushing, Tad giggled at our nurse, "No dude; not a word."

"Course not," Aaron chuckled. All the little guys cracked up, proving that enough had already been said. Before Tad and I caught fire, Aaron led us from the room and down the hall. After passing the nurses station and turning left, we saw a huge game room. It was filled with tables and chairs of assorted sized for all us kids. There were games of every sort in there, including arcade video games, a jukebox and a giant television. I flashed Aaron a suspicious glare, wondering why we hadn't been told or brought to this room. "Tomorrow," Aaron smiled. "All you kids, and especially you two, are ahead of where we thought you'd be by now. Doctors are already discussing the possibility of getting all of you to Ewa Beach on Sunday. It's a split decision right now, but depending on what we observe tomorrow, you could make the decision clearer."

We went through a set of doors with Tad saying, "As long as we can all get to spend some time together in there."

"Our room is starting to feel small," I added. "Before we can go to Hawaii, where we're gonna meet lots of other kids, we need to know each other better."

Widely grinning, Aaron chanted, "Nope, not a leader, can't tie his own shoelaces, but takes the first opportunities to be alone with his boyfriend, and now has half the other boys wandering around in gowns, showing off their backsides."

Knowing I was being goofed on again, I sniggered, "You nurses and doctors had to have thought of that."

Nodding, Aaron assured, "The night you arrived. Like I said, certain things were planned, but others depended completely on you kids. Tonight you're doing what we had hoped would happen tomorrow night or Sunday." He slowed down and stopped completely, softly chortling, "If I could, I'd call Prez and tell him about you two. I don't have a comm-badge, but I know Doc Metzger does. He's spoken with Sean and Troy, so maybe your secret is already out."

Tad digressed into a giggling fit. Grinning widely, I joked, "You'll miss us. I wonder who will nurse the emotional nurse when we leave."

Obviously shocked, Aaron asked, "Did Mario tell you about that?" Tad and I blinked, not knowing what he was asking. Aaron grinned, "I'm already checking into a possible transfer to Hawaii.

When I know more, I'll let you know, future Core Rimmers."

We walked into the first room, where Catherine and Jeanette were lounging on their beds. Immediately squealing, they pulled the sheets and blankets up. What the fuck that was all about, I had no idea. They had hospital gowns on, just like the rest of us. The last time I saw them, they were nude and so were all us dudes. The lady nurse in the room began giggling. Tad cracked up. Before I could say a word, Catherine giggled, "Boys are supposed to knock before coming into a girls' room!"

Tad cackled, "No one told us that! The door was wide open too!"

Sadly shaking my head and rubbing my eyes with one hand, I reminded Catherine and Jeanette of early Thursday, and then admitted, "We checked you out then and nothing even shifted. Tad and I are boyfriends, so nothing in here will get a rise out of either of us. We're only visiting to see how you're doing."

"We're fine," Jeanette practically screamed.

Catherine smirked, "And thanks so much for the offhanded compliments!"

"It's so good to know we can't get boys excited," Jeanette grumbled.

"It proves that you're definitely normal females!" Tad replied. "All your parts are there, and you ain't nothing like those pictures in magazines, of girls that are so bad they look like boys! The reason we checked you out was because you're really hot, for being female that is."

Barely controlling himself, Aaron faked tapping the comm-link on the wall. He sniggered, "We need a podiatrist to West Hall."

"A what?" I muttered in reply.

"Someone to remove you two's feet from your mouths!" Aaron responded with a chuckle.

The lady nurse giggled, "Thanks for visiting, but I think it would be wise if you three left."

"NOW!" Catherine and Jeanette screamed.

We left in a hurry and Aaron pulled the door closed. The three of us cracked up. Before we could get our act together, Alden giggled from the speakers, "Prez just took his after dinner meds. First he saw a crazy adoption from Des Moines, and then I showed him what just happened to you guys. Even with burned buns, he's rolling around the couch still."

Aaron snorted, "Now you're in big trouble. You made the crazy Irishman hysterical."

Turning to Tad, I grinned, "How about we hide out in our room the first week at Ewa Beach?"

Rapidly nodding, Tad giggled, "That works for me. We'll need wheelchairs though."

Aaron snorted, "At the rate you two are going, you'll leave here and arrive there in wheelchairs." Gasping, Tad and I flushed scarlet red.

We finished our visits with Kim Brock and Tracy Carpenter, the two younger girls from our home. Since our visits lasted more than two hours, Aaron insisted that we get back to our room and beds.

Actually it was bed, singular. While I finished writing about the happenings of our second day of freedom, my sexy blond boyfriend fell asleep, snuggled up to me.

Which leads me right back to where I started this section. I don't think that I'm anywhere cute enough for such a handsome boyfriend. I can only assume that Tad doesn't realize how incredibly awesome he is. I'm afraid to ask him that question. Without him, my life at the home would've been even more miserable. With him, so much kewl stuff has happened between us; there at the home, and here at the hospital too.

Aaron's still goofing on me too; calling me leader, and Core Rimmer, which still cracks me up, by the way. There's only one core I'm gonna be rimming for a long while, and he's still passed out at my side. I've been trying to get Aaron to quit his teasing by calling him our personal nurse, and Rimmer nurse. What worked was calling him dad. He's only about ten or so years older than Tad and I, but now that I think of it, Aaron's been more than a nurse, more than a friend, and more than a brother. Since I've obviously blown his mind clear out of the solar system, we'll have to save that topic for tomorrow.

+ + + + + + + + + + + + +

Saturday, November 6, 2013

Do you know what these evil, twisted hospital people did to us? Right after breakfast, Tad and I were taken to a room that turned out to be the dental office! I can't feel my face! Talking sounds like we're drunk! I can't even drink the damned milkshake through a straw, it's dribbling down my chin! I got four fillings and Tad got three! If I had snot to blow, Mario would be dripping by now!

+ + + + + + + + + + + + +

We found out that Alden, Kerry, George and Jack are some sort of artificial intelligence machines that will be real boys someday soon. Along with this new information, we learned what they're capable of. Since all sixteen of us were annoyed about the dentist visits, our new AI friends got our day nurses back for us. Mario was between our beds, replacing clear sacks of IV vitamins. With the task finished, suddenly he was naked. His clothes were scattered around the room, on our beds, the chair, and his boxers were hanging off the TV on the wall. Damn, the dude is way hairy! Before Mario could complain, he vanished from our room, and returned five-seconds later, dripping wet and with major shrinkage! He smirked at us, calmly grabbed his clothes and went into the bathroom. Tad and I are still giggling.

+ + + + + + + + + + + + +

Compared to yesterday and Thursday, the rest of this day has been easy, almost serene. We all gathered in that awesome game room during the afternoon. Catherine and Jeanette were the only two there with terrycloth robes on over their hospital gowns. All of us played games, chatted and shared our hopes for our new Pacific Rim Division lives.

One of the highlights was a chat Tad and I had with Catherine and Jeanette. Over a game of hearts, we learned that their nurse had advised them to talk with us. Yeah, we were gay and their was no chance of anything happening, but we were dudes that could advise them best about other straight teen dudes. They wanted to fit in and be liked, and had a crash course on how to be nice young ladies from their nurse, but at the same time, they wanted to find suitable boyfriends.

Tad and I told them the truth - from the first sprouted pubes, dudes are horny and only get more horny with age. Nice guys will take their time, getting to know them, and maybe get goofy by making sexual remarks and jokes, but the straight Clan dudes would most likely be willing to bide their time. When they asked how we could know that, Tad and I shared what we had overheard from straight dudes at Elk Grove High. A nice straight guy won't ever brag about what and when they scored. The dumber straight guys would brag and probably exaggerate. Dudes like that were only trying to prove how straight they are, like it's a race to be won, and not a real person they're talking shit about. Our sisters needed to ignore and walk away from dudes like that.

After the card game and conversation was finished, the four of us older kids hung out with the younger kids for a while. The big television was showing us more from Ewa Beach. Our Core Rimmers were talking time off and weren't around most of the day, but there was plenty of other stuff going on, like soccer lessons, basketball games, volleyball games and bowling from the indoor rec center. Our AI friends just kept the cameras moving around the base, from place to place, and from one group of kids to the next.

Tad and I were getting the itch to be alone for a while when Colin came over to me and squirmed onto my lap. The little dude still had his doll in the evening dress, and treated it carefully, so it wouldn't break or get dirty. After that, Colin whispered in my ear, "Do you get bad dreams, Neil?"

I honestly told him, "Not yet, but ya know, it won't surprise me too much if I do." Then I carefully instructed, "We had it pretty bad at the home, Colin. That was the real life nightmare we all shared. Dreams are fake. Don't worry about them."

Nodding agreement, Colin asked, "Ain't you scared of Hawaii?"

Shaking my head, I replied, "It's not fear, dude. I'm eager to get there; like a Christmas or birthday that's real close. I can barely wait."

"What about the other kids, and 'specially older kids?"

"You came to me, Colin. All those other kids you'll get to know too, and soon you'll have no reason to be afraid of any of 'em, no matter how old they are." I pointed out Christian Cole and reminded, "Christian's older than you, and now you and him are buddies, right?" Colin nodded and giggled. I advised, "Getting to know people takes some time, that's all. You don't need to worry. If a big kids scares you, all you have to do is tell me and Tad, or Catherine and Jeanette. Kewl?"

"Kewl, Neil," Colin giggled. He slid off my lap and hurried over to tell Christian, Dwight and Lester. Tad and I watched all four of our youngest boys go over to Catherine and Jeanette, obviously to confirm what I had said.

Ready to slink away for some private time, Tad and I paused because Doc Metzger and all our nurses came into the room. Doc Metzger announced, "Tomorrow is going to be another big day. After you all eat breakfast, the IVs running into your arms will be removed. Then we're all going down to the basement, where we have therapeutic tubs and a big pool, so you can all learn to swim. We're making arrangements now, but your dinner tomorrow will be in Hawaii." Sixteen normally quiet kids gasped and then exploded with cheers.

Once our cheers had dwindled, Doc Metzger said, "The only major thing remaining that we need to be aware of is the three hour time difference between here and Ewa Beach. To make sure you're all ready, I'd like you all to take three hour naps this afternoon. Then you'll all be able to stay awake later tonight, sleep in later tomorrow, and you'll be more adjusted to the time change. The last thing I'd like to announce is that my transfer request has been approved, so I will be joining you in Hawaii. I know several nurses here have also applied for positions with Pacific Rim Division too, so you'll soon have plenty of familiar faces around."

Mario brought us back to our room. I had to write this before I could even try to sleep. I'm starting to feel hyper already. I just know this last day at the hospital is going to be awesome, but at the same time, I'm ready to move on. What's really freaky is the feeling that I'm going to miss this hospital.

How fucked up is that? A hospital and having an IV needle in my arm is better than the home I lived in for three years! It's true though.

Another huge shiver just raced through Tad and he's snuggled up to me again. OMIGOD! He only smiled at me and now John Henry is poking out of my gown. Tad's evilly snickering, and just asked Mario to step out of the room and close the door. He threatened a dunk in the North Atlantic, but did as Tad asked. More later.

+++++

All I'm gonna say is, DAMN, THAT WAS GREAT ON A BED!

We took our nap, had pot roast for dinner, and now us dudes are heading to the game room.

+++++

It's hard to believe, but I can't seem to last three hours without feeling like I'm starving. I mean, dinner was huge, and then we had milkshakes in the game room, and now I'm back in our room and pigging out on hot dogs. On the television, we're watching the new dudes hanging out in their common room.

There was a bit of a pause while Tad and I rated hotties on the screen. All of 'em are in their underwear. The top five are Chris Stokley, Jay Montigua, Craig Nash, Scott Shetley and Lance Kinchen. Tad says the first two need to be swapped; he thinks Jay's hotter than his boyfriend, Chris. He's boning up over Jay's abs. Chris is a blond and perfectly proportioned, in my opinion. Aaron refuses to get involved in this argument.

Speaking of arguing, the dudes on TV were discussing their leadership team; specifically the oldest six - Prez, Keith, Derrick, Mike, Sean and Troy. The common thoughts were that they were all sweethearts; as nice as could be, but not one of the twelve dudes would ever test their leaders' abilities, nor their resolve to do what needs to be done.

Some of the dudes in the room are level one orphans. They're saying that all their zoo-keepers were sent to off-planet penal facilities, and they're implying that some other zoo-keepers were executed on the spot. I'm not surprised, neither is Aaron, but it took Tad a few extra moments to realize we were right; whatever they got was justified. Mr. and Mrs. Franklin were more like prison wardens than caregivers. They timed us for meals, bathroom trips and showers. I'll never forget my first shower there, when I said I wasn't done, Mr. Franklin grabbed me and lifted me out of the tub and tossed me back in the room without giving me a chance to rinse or dry off.

There was another pause while Tad and I talked about Sean and Troy with Aaron. Maybe us kids from that home were in the same room as the two Core Rimmers ten or fifteen minutes, tops. What Tad and I saw were two dudes that were very much in love. All they showed us and each other was how much they cared. Once we were out of the house, I could only just barely imagine Sean and Troy dealing with the Franklins.

Because Tad and I were getting quiet, our big brother Aaron abruptly changed the subject, to tell us what was planned for Sunday. All the dudes ten and older would be shown how to exercise, and how much to exercise by letting our bodies tell when we'd had enough. Calisthenics were planned, and short jogs around a track. Tad, Gerry, Jessie and I would then be shown how to lift weights; both free weights and on Nautilus machines. The last part of the planned routine was swimming in the pool and then some time in therapeutic whirlpool tubs.

Locking eyes with me, Aaron said, "Assuming you wake around ten, once you're showered, fed, the IVs are removed and you're dressed, the next couple of hours are booked. You won't have time to write in your journal until after you arrive at Ewa Beach. There will be plenty to keep you busy there for a few hours. You probably won't get to write at all until bedtime tomorrow night."

"No problem," I cheerfully smiled. "When I get the chance, I'll have a lot to write about. I'll have Tad to help. And in a week, you'll have a bunch to hear and read about. We're glad you're moving there, dude."

Tad sighed, "I wish Mario could move there too. I understand he's got his partner and family here, but I still wish he could be there."

Nodding understandingly, Aaron reminded, "Mario will be hearing from me often enough. He'll know about every inch you grow, every pound you gain, and every achievement you make. And then I'll bother him to get his ass on a plane and take a vacation in the ROH next summer."

"It's good to know we'll see him again after tomorrow," Tad smiled.

Kicking his legs out, crossing them slightly at the ankles, and relaxing in his chair, Aaron chuckled, "You two aren't going to be able to sleep tonight. I can tell, you're unhappy about leaving some good people behind, but at the same time, you can't wait to live lives like what you've been watching for three days. I've heard enough from both of you to realize that you can't believe your punishment is over, that a hospital was easier and more enjoyable than your orphanage home, and that something even better than this is what's in store for you. I'm no Clan Short expert, but this hospital does interface with Starfleet Medical, which means I've heard some stories and have some facts that you don't."

Almost simultaneously, Tad and I wondered, "Like what?"

"Like those milkshakes we've been giving you, for instance," Aaron widely grinned. "They were developed by Doctor Leonard McCoy, and are packed with nutrients. They'll continue after you leave here. You could survive very nicely on just those milkshakes, but since you haven't done that here, I wouldn't dare expect it to change there." Noticing Tad and I smirking at each other and at him, Aaron chortled, "What's good for you can be very enjoyable too. I hear the Clan school system is much the same; instead of boring facts and figures, you'll get projects you enjoy that will be geared towards a career that you'll naturally excel at."

Aaron's laughing at me for writing all this down, like notes for a test.

Tad giggled, "You know what I saw that I'm really looking forward to?"

I softly teased, "Darren Devault?" and was sharply nudged in the side.

Shaking his head, Tad smiled, "The class structure here in the United States sucks. At our school, everybody dumped on us. Only the wealthiest seemed to be immune from that crap. There at Ewa Beach, everybody's the same. That's what I'm looking forward to the most. Only one example of that are mixed race couples, like Horacio is a dark skinned Mexican dude, and his girlfriend Sonia is a fair skinned girl. Kaleo and Tory are another couple, completely in love and neither cares about skin color. It's what's inside that matters."

"As it should be," Aaron softly agreed. "Another little something that made these few days special were you two treating Mario and I like big brothers. Hawaii is as much a melting pot as America is; they've got native Hawaiians, Japanese, Chinese, Americans, and more living on those little islands. Another thing that makes all you kids from that orphanage very unique is your faith in something becoming better than it was. That is very rare. Regardless of what your schoolmates or your care givers tried to tell you, there's still a glimmer of hope alive in each of you. That's important, and something you can share with other kids in the Clan."

"They seem to be fine already," Tad offered.

Aaron shrugged, "Maybe they are, or maybe they aren't. Maybe the kids you've seen are fine, but others are bound to show up there that need to be shown the glimmer of hope. I think it's something we have in common."

"We?" Tad and I uncertainly repeated.

"I came out of Watts, Los Angeles," Aaron admitted. "A tough street kid made it of the hood, went to college, medical school and became a registered nurse. This is the career I've always wanted. I'm looking forward to making the switch from American to Hawaiian too."

I paused to softly ask, "Your home town was burning yesterday but you didn't say anything?"

"Most of my closest family and friends have moved out," Aaron simply explained. "Like you, good memories are few and far between there. I could drive there in less than four hours, but it's been almost two years since I've made the trip. Both my parents have passed, my brother and two sisters have scattered to other States. What happened in LA yesterday proves that there's no connection left for me. My connections are here, specifically they're here in this room and up and down the hall." Tad and I broke into giggles.

Aaron chuckled, "I've already interviewed for Pacific Rim Division and have a job waiting. By next weekend, I'll be with Doc Metzger at Oneula Beach with all of you level two kids. I was amazed and disgusted to learn that there are ninety-six kids just like you."

Tad interrupted, "We won't be going to Ewa Beach?"

Aaron answered, "Yes, you will arrive there, and likely spend most of your first day there, but you'll be living at Oneula Beach, which is about a mile further west of Ewa Beach on Oahu. Pacific Rim Division has been active only a week. They've almost filled their headquarters at Ewa Beach. Rather than split kids up, they're opening their second base for you. And the hope is that around the time I arrive, the eighty level three orphans will be there too. Between just your two groups, the second base will be almost half full with a hundred and seventy-five of you. Almost everything we've seen on TV from Ewa Beach is duplicated at Oneula Beach. The main difference is the CIC building is only at headquarters. We'll have our own cafeteria, kitchen and auditorium at Oneula Beach. Everything else at Oneula Beach - the dormitories, the townhouses, the large single family homes, the pools and recreation facilities are the same as at Ewa Beach. There are three more bases, on three other islands, and all are similar to Oneula Beach and Ewa Beach."

Watching me scribble down everything Aaron said, Tad softly chortled. Neither said anything more until I looked up and asked, "How do you think things will really be for us?"

Aaron smiled, "I think it's going to be exactly like what you've seen and told me about. When you arrive, you'll be introduced to the leadership team, which is pointless since you already know and can recognize them. The next stop will be clothes shopping. Just like the kids you've seen on TV, you'll be able to pick out your own clothes. From there, I'd expect you to go to the dormitory, probably as smaller groups. Once you're assigned to rooms and get some unpacking done, you'll get shown around a little bit. You'll be there for dinner, so that's next on the agenda. What happens after that is a little less clear. Some kids were allowed to do as they pleased, but the level one kids went to the auditorium for a concert. What I want you two to remember is your allowed to do as you please. If you get hungry or thirsty late at night, go to the cafeteria and get something. Nobody's going to tell you, no, and get back to your room. Here, you've been lounging most of the time, but there you'll be able to walk around, swim, play and burn calories. That means you need to recognize when it's time to eat. I know what you weighed and how tall you were upon arrival. By the time you leave here tomorrow, I'll know how much weight you've gained. When I arrive next week, I'll want to see all of you going into the cafeteria often for snacks and meals."

Tad added, "We've got to remember what life used to be like before the home, when we had parents and could do what ever we wanted."

"Precisely," Aaron smiled. "That's your new home. If you're out at the pools swimming and begin to feel tired, then by all means, find a lounge chair and rest for a while. Since Neil's been writing more each and every day, maybe you'll prefer to return to the dorm now and then, or maybe you'll learn to live life and not just write about it. Those first few days you'll be meeting almost three hundred other kids. Who'll become your new friends? Will they want to chill out with you in your room, or will you be chillin' with them in their rooms? Hang out in the dorm common rooms at night too, so you can be social while watching TV. Your lives are about to expand again. Take advantage of new learning experiences. Recall old hobbies and pick them up again, or become interested in something new and give it your best shot.

"It's simply not possible for you two to become reclusive. Some of the kids took more than a day to warm up and speak to doctors and nurses, but not you two. Immediately upon arrival, you had questions and asked them. When you woke the next day, there were more questions, more conversation with Mario, with Doc Metzger and with me. Although you two lived together, and were intimate for a long time, I witnessed you falling in love. Consider that with all the other new experiences ahead of you. This is only the beginning."

Chapter 15

There were so many explosions. Every five-seconds or so, there was another loud bang or boom. Intermixed with the bursts were sounds of people crying, screaming and yelling. Nine-year-old Leo Daniel Scott shivered in fear, wondering, "What's goin' on, dad?"

Standing just off to the left of the living room windows with her husband, Leo's mother, Nadine Scott, saw Molotov cocktails explode in flames inside several parked cars. She softly asked her husband, "Was that our car?"

"It was," Walter Scott, Leo's father sighed. He then answered his son, instructing, "Stay low, Leo."

Already on his butt and on the floor, in the corner of the living room with a heavy entertainment center behind him, a sofa to one side and a love seat to the other side, Leo cringed. Folded up tight, his chin was practically resting on his knees. He couldn't get any lower or occupy less space if he tried. Both his parents were frightened, Leo could hear it in the tone of their voices.

The area of Central Los Angeles where the Scott's lived wasn't the greatest, but it wasn't the worst, by any measurement. This night though, everybody seemed to be out of control. The neighborhood had nice people, and they were especially nice on this street. Even the old folks living in the apartment building across Francis Avenue were kewl. The Scott family had a decent three bedroom house at 2765 Francis Avenue, and there were others just like it up and down the block.

Trembling, Leo watched his mother and father move furniture before the front door. They went to the back rooms to move the table and china hutch to barricade the back door. The few lights that were on in the house suddenly went out and the emergency lights came on. A car screeched around the corner. Every few minutes, the family heard that sound. Walter felt certain that it was the same car, racing around the block, seemingly just for laughs.

Swiftly, Nadine and Walter unplugged several of the emergency lights downstairs, leaving only one in the dining room brightly shining. Walter went to the quivering mass that was his nine-year-old son. Grinning, Walter joked, "Ain't staying up with the big people fun?" and reached to lift his son up off the floor.

Rising up off the floor and into his dad's arms, Leo nervously giggled, "It could be more fun, dad."

Already on her way upstairs, Nadine scrambled to reduce the light visible from the street. Carrying his only child up the steps, Walter assured, "We're staying inside and upstairs, away from the windows. All we have to do is let the loonies outside wear themselves out. We're safe, as long as we stay away from windows. If nobody knows we're home, everything will be fine by morning."

In his dad's arms, Leo softly wondered, "Why are they freakin' out? Why don't I hear sirens? Where are the cops?"

"I don't really know, Leo," Walter sighed. "What I do know is that we're safe inside, as long as we stay away from the windows. Can you promise me that you'll stay low and away from the windows, son?"

"I promise, dad," Leo nodded.

"We're going to play hide-and-go-seek," Nadine cheerfully told Leo. "No matter where we go, we're going to stay low and out of sight. Crawl down along the floor, like a baby, my big strong boy."

"Like in the western cowboy movies, Leo," Walter instructed, and put his son down in the tub, the most protected place in the house. "This is where I want you to stay, no matter what. You can use the toilet and get water from the sink, just..."

"Stay low," Leo finished.

Walter smiled and ruffled his son's blond hair, cheering, "Smart lad. You make me proud and stay here, while mom and I make sure the house is secure."

"We'll be right back," Nadine assured, and then leaned down to kiss Leo's forehead.

Walter galloped downstairs. Nadine was only gone ten- or fifteen-seconds, returning to the bathroom with Leo's bed pillows and blanket. She stuffed the pillows behind Leo's back and covered him with the blanket, gently whispering, "You're my pride and joy. I love you so much."

Forcing a small grin, Leo whispered, "I love you too. Hurry back."

Nadine raced out of the bathroom and flew downstairs to help her husband. From the upstairs bathroom, Leo heard more furniture being moved downstairs. Outside, there were more screeching tires, pops, bangs and distant explosions that caused Leo to jump in his skin, but he still heard his parents softly talking and moving things around. As long as he could still hear his parents, everything would be fine. The last time Leo saw a clock, it was after two in the morning. It was going to be a long time before dawn. He wondered if the crazies outside would stop shooting before sunrise, or if it would stop after daybreak, or if it would ever stop.

It seemed like an excruciatingly long time before Leo heard footsteps climbing the stairs. In reality, it was only about fifteen minutes, but reality had ceased to exist even before Leo woke around one-thirty from the noises of the rioting. Nadine, and then Walter came into the bathroom to check on their son. Curled up under the blanket, Leo smirked at his parents, "Back so soon? I was just about to yell down for a beer."

Walter chuckled, "Well, you know, there are places to meet, people to do and things to go."

Nadine impatiently huffed, "If our dry cleaner has been damaged, I'm going to have an 'A' number one shit fit."

Helplessly, Leo giggled at his parents.

Walter explained, "We're going to move a few more things to block the staircase, Leo."

"Like?"

"Your bed and dresser and then our dresser," Nadine answered. "If anyone gets inside the house, we'll be perfectly safe up here."

"Okay," Leo muttered. Only a few weeks ago, a fireman had been to his school and taught that all exits should be clear in case of a fire, so you could escape. It seemed to Leo that his parents were doing things that shouldn't be done, but he said nothing about it. With all the other stuff going on, a fire would be the worst possible addition to the chaos.

His parents left the bathroom again. He could hear them moving his twin-size bed. After a minute or two, they could be heard carrying his dresser. It was a tall chest of drawers that only recently Leo could clearly see the top of. They returned to the bathroom, obviously tired. Lowering the top toilet seat, Nadine sat down, wondering, "Did we miss anything?"

Leo giggled, "The Lakers just came by to ask if we wanted to play. I said we were too busy."

"That figures," Walter smirked, "just when I feel like playing too." He leaned against the door-frame to catch his breath and seemed to inspect the room he had been in thousands of times. The small windows were high off the floor in this room, above the tub and on the same wall above the toilet. They would all be safe in this room, Walter was certain of it. He asked his son, "Is there anything you'd like to help pass the time?"

"My iPod Nano?" Leo softly requested.

Nadine added, "And the portable radio, so we can hear news and know when it's safe."

From his back pockets, Walter pulled two of the emergency lights out and put them on the edge of the tub then left the room. A minute later, he returned with the iPod, ear-buds and the radio. Leaving them on the floor near the tub for Leo, he sighed hard and long.

Leo prompted, "Take a break, dad. We're good for a little while."

"Are you implying I'm too old?" Walter teased.

"Not too old," Leo giggled. "Just old enough for piggyback rides."

"You're lighter than your dresser, that's for sure," Walter smiled. "What've you got in there anyway, rocks?"

"My stash," Leo giggled.

Nadine laughed, "Your stash, huh? You've been holding out on us, Leo."

Walter sniggered, "When this is all over, we're gonna break into your stash and tie one on."

Leo cackled, "They said at school that old folks shouldn't take out, it's bad for them."

Nadine giggled, "It's fine for you though?"

Rapidly nodding, Leo teased, "Eighteen and under only."

Sadly shaking his head, Walter chuckled, "We have got to get you out of this city."

Hopefully, Leo suggested, "Up into the mountains?"

Slowly nodding and widely smiling, Walter answered, "We'd all like it up there." He then turned to his wife, asking, "Ready for one more trip?"

"Let's get it over with," Nadine sighed, and stood.

Leo whimpered, "Don't go yet."

Nadine and Walter knelt down beside the tub. Nadine leaned over to kiss her beautiful boy and softly called him exactly that. Brushing his son's blond mop back out of his eyes, Walter smiled, "We only have our dresser to move. Another two or three minutes is all it will take. You can be strong for that long, easily."

Nodding, Leo tearfully admitted, "I'm so scared. It's worse when you're not here."

"We're scared too," Nadine admitted, and then assured, "We'll make it through this night. We'll have a new car over the weekend and then we're off, into the mountains."

Walter instructed, "You know how to make the fear go away. Love conquers all, and this little family of ours has so much love, nothing can stop us. We're like Godzilla, King Kong, Superman and all the best comic book heroes combined."

"You can be brave, Leo, I know you can," Nadine confidently said, and kissed her son on the mouth.

Quaking, Leo whispered, "I love you."

"I love you very much too," Walter smiled, and landed two kisses, one on his son's forehead and the other on his cheek. He promised, "Two or three minutes and we're right back here, breaking into your stash."

Nodding, Leo forced a small grin and shivered, "I love you."

Brightly smiling, "I love you too," Nadine and Walter stood. With their adrenaline pumping, they hurried out of the room to complete this one final task and get back to safety quickly. Nadine and Walter each took a side of their long dresser. Another car screeched around the corner that neither adult paid any attention to. They believed that same lunatic was coming around the block again. However, this lap around, inside the car were two men hanging out the windows with AK-47 assault rifles. One fired low and the other fired high. Nadine and Walter never knew what hit them. They never even made a sound.

From the bathroom tub, Leo heard the loudest gunfire yet and flinched when something heavy hit the floor. He wondered if his parents dropped the dresser. With his eyes darting in their sockets, Leo waited for some other sounds from his parents. Hearing nothing for way too long, Leo called, "Dad? Mom?" He waited for a reply, then more loudly yelled, "MOM! DAD?" Again there was no reply and no sound of the dresser being moved. All he heard was more yelling, pops, bangs and explosions. Beginning to cry, Leo desperately screamed, "DADDY! MOMMY! PLEASE?"

When there was still no answer, he scurried out of the tub, but remembered to stay down low and crawled along the hallway floor. Stopping at his parent's bedroom doorway, he saw their lifeless forms on the floor. Behind the dresser, the wall was riddled with bullet holes and the windows were shattered. Feeling like his skull and chest were going to explode, Leo quickly crawled the length of the bedroom floor. By the street light cascading into the room, Leo saw his father was missing a large section of hair and skull. It seemed the area above his dad's right ear was gone. Blood seemed to ooze from the wound. A few feet to his left, Leo saw his mother, also bleeding from her head. He whimpered. Without consciously deciding to, Leo scrambled along the floor, back into the bathroom and into the tub. Pulling the shower curtain closed and the blanket up over his body, Leo cried for his parents to come back, to never leave, to stay with him in the safety of the tub. Every so often, he'd call for them, not really believing what he had heard, seen and experienced. It couldn't be really happening.

Without meaning to, Leo cried himself to sleep. His parents were with him in his dreams. He woke briefly around dawn Friday, clearly remembering them in the dream saying that he would be fine, and that they would protect him. Sounds of gunshots, rioting voices and insanity outside woke him. Sobbing his heart out, Leo reached for his iPod, put the ear-buds in his ears and turned it on to play, so he wouldn't have to hear anymore from the outside world. Every muscle in his body ached more than anything had ever hurt before. He fell back to sleep, feeling like his life was as good as over. Nothing would ever be the same again. He would never laugh with his parents over silly jokes. He would never see the mountains of Southern California again. If only he could die too, he'd be with them and happy again.

Leo didn't wake again until that afternoon, when he realized that his iPod's charge had completely worn out. He took one ear-bud out of his ear and listened. There were no shouting voices, pops, bangs or explosions to be heard. It was eerily quiet. Not knowing much of anything other than the fact his parents were dead in the next room, Leo lay there shedding quiet tears, wondering why he was left alive and alone. What was he supposed to do now? The single emergency light in the bathroom had dimmed long ago. Just to hear a voice, Leo reached over the tub for the portable radio. He switched it on and turned the dial, searching for his favorite station. Each and every station had the same voice, from the Emergency Broadcast System. The words were meaningless to Leo for a long and painful few hours. They spoke of places that he knew, but none of it registered for a long while.

About three o'clock that afternoon, the words started making sense. He knew the time now. He also knew that the sun would be setting in a few more hours. Another night, in this house, with his parents' bodies wasn't a pleasant idea. As if he might get an answer, Leo wondered aloud, "What do I do?" Only sitting and that thought made him realize it had been at least twelve hours since he last peed. The radio announcer soon said that Staples Center was an evacuation point. That was where the Clippers and Kings played. His family had been there a couple of times, and it was pretty close. He recalled his dad saying once that it might have been quicker if they had just walked instead of driving.

Pocketing his iPod and ear-buds, Leo stood in the tub. Listening more carefully to the radio, he went to the toilet and relieved his bursting bladder, and then brushed his teeth. According to the radio, the rioting was still going on in some areas down by the airport and Santa Monica, but the State's National Guard had very much restricted the violence to those areas. He would be safe walking the mile or so to Staples Center, and he could get there by dark easily. Still in shock, Leo went on autopilot, deciding to shower and put clean clothes on. He could not go anywhere wearing only the clothes that he had been wearing the prior night and day. Once that was done, Leo made sure he had his iPod, ear-buds and the radio.

Pausing at the pile of furniture before the staircase, Leo put the radio down on the dresser, to use both hands and a shoulder to shove his dresser and bed aside, at least enough so he could squeeze past to the stairway. Picking up the small radio again, he turned to his parents bedroom, softly sobbing, "It's time to go now. I'll always remember you guys. Please, if you can, keep an eye on me? I kind o' know where I'm going, but I'm still really scared. Everything's so creepy quiet. What's going to happen to me now, ya know? Love conquers all, you always said that. Well, I love you both. It feels like there's so much more I should say, but I can't think now." He squeezed past the bed and dresser and started down the steps. Becoming more upset with the thought of leaving his parents and the only home he'd ever known, Leo paused and hollered in a squeaky voice, "I won't forget you," and then broke down crying. He would not ever say the word "goodbye" to his mom or dad. Feeling weak, he slowly shuffled down the steps.

At the staircase landing, Leo couldn't believe his eyes. The living room was a disaster area. The furniture that had been moved in front of the door was lying on its sides, creating a barrier he would have to carefully climb around and over. Any of those items would seriously hurt if it fell on him. Curtains, drapes and mini-blinds were on the floor. The picture window was just a big gaping hole in the wall. Photos that had been on the walls were knocked down to the floor. His parents certainly wouldn't have done any of that. Turning slightly to look back toward the dining room and kitchen, Leo found cupboards opened and their contents scattered on the floor. The table and hutch moved to block the back door were knocked onto their sides and into the middle of the kitchen.

Glancing around, Leo got the distinct impression that someone had managed to get in the house and looted the place. They got in through the picture window, and when they were ready to leave, they had pushed the stuff away from the doors. Feeling an intense shiver race up and down his spine, Leo realized that he had slept through the whole thing. Scowling, he wondered why they didn't push their way upstairs. They would've found him asleep and killed him in the tub. His parents had already saved him, Leo realized.

Scared to death, he hurried to the gaping hole that was once his living room window. Leo used the twisted remains of a steel corner lamp post to clear the remaining glass from the window. He then used the curtains to cover the ledge, and carefully climbed out to the porch that ran the length of the front of the house. Never even feeling a small scratch on the inside of his left thigh and down to his knee, Leo kept hurrying. The apartment building across the street had been on fire at some point too. The outside wall was burned and discolored. The flames were out now, but he could still see a river of water flowing along the curb.

Sprinting as fast as he could down the walkway, Leo turned left.

All the homes on his street were wrecked. He turned right on South Hoover Street and kept running, down to Olympic Boulevard where he turned left. There was no traffic at all, frightening Leo more. For a while, he wondered if everyone was dead except him. At the corner of Olympic and South Alvarado Street, he saw a jeep and four armed National Guard troops. He ran to them and wailed, telling them where he lived, that his parents had been killed during the night, that his home was broken into while he slept in a bathtub, and that he really needed a ride to the Staples Center evacuation center, where he might finally feel safe.

* * * * *

Keoneuli Beach House, Kaho'olawe Island

Sunday, November 7, 2004 6:54 AM HTZ

With Leo's nightmare getting louder, and more scared kids waking in tears, Wade and Frankie hurried to the first floor bedroom to wake their fathers. Upon waking, John immediately felt and knew that Wade had experienced some of Leo's dream. He promptly replaced the scary images with fun ones and climbed out of bed. For the first time, Stephen was in such a flustered state that he didn't care about being naked and hurried to the living room with John and their two sons.

Simultaneously, John held the blocks on Wade's telepathy, entered Leo's dream and sent loud telepathic calls to Corey, Drew and all the other Core Rimmers, who were still sleeping upstairs. Barely awake, Drew jumped out of bed and hurried, taking two steps at a time down the stairs, to get to his eldest son. Before Corey and Drew even made it to the living room, John was already sharing Leo's nightmare with them, so they could know what had happened to their boy. No wonder Leo was more clingy than the average nine-year-old; after what the boy had gone through the early hours of November fifth, anyone would be.

Crying and shaking so bad that every muscle in his body ached, Leo woke. Nearest around him and on their knees watching him carefully were Corey, Drew, Dee, Kenny, Geoff and Lenny. Standing behind that group were Gage, Sammy, Jonah, Ben, Billy, Jason, John, Stephen, Wade, Frankie and Reyes. Beyond that group were all the other boys who had been sleeping in the living room nest, and all their fathers. Prez, Keith, and all the Core Rimmers were soothing the youngest boys that had been awakened by Leo's nightmare. Even some of the security guys were inside. Realizing what he had done, Leo covered his face and cried harder.

Only about nine or ten inches taller than his eldest son, Drew leaned over, wrapped his arms around Leo and pulled him up. Drew stood and carried Leo out of the room, with Corey, Geoff and Lenny trailing behind. The family went down the foyer and out the kitchen dinette sliding doors. Drew sat on a lanai chair and parked Leo on his lap, gently shushing the boy's tears and rubbing his back.

Latching onto Drew with everything he had, Leo softly whimpered, "Don't leave me, daddy."

"Never, Leo," Drew assured, and held his weeping son tightly. Locking eyes with Corey, they shared worried expressions. Between soft kisses on Leo's cheek and face, Drew firmly promised, "You're with us, all day today, all night tonight, and forever." He looked at Geoff and Lenny, offering, "Tonight, we'll all crash in our master bedroom's king size bed. Leo's going to be in the middle, with two brothers on one side and two dads on the other side. It'll be our own family nest. How does that sound?"

Like Christmas had arrived early, Geoff and Lenny grinned at each other, and then rapidly nodded, cheering, "Really kewl, daddy."

Tapping his sub-vocal, Corey asked, "Alden, is Doc Wiener awake?"

"Yes, he is," Alden answered, and quickly asked, "Would you like me to get him there?"

"As soon as he's able," Corey instructed.

"I've informed him that he's needed, and he's getting dressed," Alden relayed.

With his face still buried in the crook of Drew's neck, Leo reached both arms out. Corey took one outstretched hand; Geoff and Lenny took the other hand. All three surrounded the chair where Drew and Leo sat.

Beginning to calm down, Leo sighed, "I woke everybody, didn't I?"

"Don't even worry about that," Corey gently said. "Me and dad saw a lot of your dream, Leo. If I were in your shoes, I'd probably still be in the tub."

Looking up, Leo wiped his eyes, asking, "You really saw?"

Corey nodded, "The shower curtain was dark green and light green stripes."

"The shower walls were tan and brown tiles," Drew shared. Leo scowled, wondering how it could possibly be that Corey and Drew could describe his old bathroom. Drew grinned, "John's my brother, your uncle, and an N-Gen. That means he can look into other peoples' minds and share what he sees. Only me, pop, John and you know what really happened. That's why you're going to be in the center of the bed tonight; you might not think you did very good Friday, but let me tell you that you did everything perfectly. For being so great, you're going to get smothered with so much love from us. We're going to do everything possible to help you get past this."

Glancing at his dad and pop, Geoff asked, "What happened?"

Corey grinned, "All you need to know is what we already assumed; that Leo's parents didn't make it through the riots... oh, and that Leo's originally from Los Angeles."

"Where movie stars are," Lenny smiled. "Kewl."

Wearing shorts, a sport shirt, sneakers and socks, but unshaven, Doc Wiener appeared on the porch. Corey smiled, "Good morning, Doc."

"Good morning all," Doc Wiener cheerfully said, and then asked, "How can I help?"

Corey gestured to Leo, saying, "Bad dreams, of his parents, from the LA riots." He then rubbed Leo's back, adding, "I'm going to take Geoff and Lenny inside, so you can tell Doc Wiener about your nightmare."

Leo nodded, and then asked, "Do I have to say it all?"

Squatting down behind the chair, where Leo could see him, Doc Wiener gently said, "The more people you tell, the better it will be in the long run, Leo." He asked, "Are there any friends inside that you'd like to share this with?"

Leo blinked, "I don't know about that. It's really scary. I mean, Kenny's like me, I guess, but from New York City."

Doc Wiener nodded understandingly, saying, "That would be good for both of you then."

Drew prompted, "Is there anyone else, Leo?"

"Dee," Leo quickly said, and then added, "Sammy, Gage, Jonah, Ben, Jason and Uncle Keith."

Drew grinned, "You like Keith?"

Leo nodded, "He took me surfin'."

Looking up at Corey, Doc Wiener prompted, "Please send them out here."

Nodding, Corey gathered Geoff and Lenny, and then they went inside.

Standing and glancing around, Doc Wiener smiled, "This is a nice place. We could stay right here or go for a walk along the beach? Which would you prefer, Leo?"

Leo hummed then answered, "The beach, but I'm only wearing underwear, and dad's naked... again!" Drew helplessly chuckled, squeezed Leo tightly and planted a soft kiss on his son's cheek.

Doc Wiener sat on the next chair, grinning, "My job doesn't require special attire, but however you're comfortable, Leo."

Noticing Doc Wiener was sitting to take his sneakers and socks off, and that Leo was uncertain, Drew assured, "Briefs are fine. I'll bet that most of your friends come out here wearing only underwear or naked."

"For sure," Leo giggled.

Dee, Jason and Kenny hurried out the back door. Dee and Jason were nude and Kenny only had his white briefs on. They immediately went to Leo. Kenny smirked, "Ya scared the crap out o' me, pal." Right behind the first group of three, Sammy, Ben, Keith, Jonah and Gage walked outside. Not one of them had a stitch of clothing on.

Leo nodded at Kenny, sighing, "I'm sorry about that, but I..."

After waiting a few moments for Leo to finish his sentence, Doc Wiener offered, "Couldn't help it?" Leo nodded at the adult man. Doc Wiener said, "That's what this session's going to be about, boys. You're all victims in one way or another. Our goal is to not live as victims, so we're not feeling helpless most of the time. Leo would like to walk the beach while we talk, so if everybody's ready?" Heads nodded and Keith led the pack of boys to the lawn. Leo got up off Drew and held out his hand to his new dad. He held out his other hand to Kenny Hunnicutt. Kenny looked deeply into Leo's pale blue eyes, smiled and took the offered hand in his. Leo, Drew and Kenny walked down the lanai steps to the lawn.

Leo was encouraged by Drew to tell his story. "It was a school night, " Leo began his tale, "so I went to bed a little before ten Thursday night."

Inside the house, fathers were feeding breakfast to the remaining boys. The nest in the living room had been dismantled and the bedding transported back to the Hundsers' basement. The coffee table had been returned to its spot near the sectional sofa, where Prez, Derrick, Mike, Reyes, Corey, Jerry and AJ sat with their breakfasts. Around the other side of the coffee table, sitting on the floor with their morning milkshakes, were Richie, Geoff, Lenny, Dillon, and the other two Hunnicutt brothers, Shaun and Mike. In the dining room were Kaleo, Tory and their five sons.

After the excitement, everybody was calming down. Only John was still a little on edge. The prior evening, he had managed to create a room in his N-Gen mind for his new nephew, but hadn't linked with Kenny. John stood at the kitchen dinette sliding door, with Wade at his side, watching Kenny walk away. Wade sent, 'I think Kenny's okay, daddy.'

'His mommy and daddy didn't come home, so he's not the same as Leo, thank goodness,' John relayed to his son.

'Daddy?' Wade called. When John looked down, Wade giggled, 'I'm hungry,' and telepathically tickled John for the first time. It was an unfocused tickle that caused John to shake and shimmy where he stood.

Having a giggling fit, Wade backed away. John sniggered, 'You learned that on your own, huh?'

Nodding, Wade giggled, 'From you!' and turned to run, but John already had his boy and levitated him off the floor. In seconds, Wade was twisting, turning and loudly laughing. Going to help his new brother, Frankie found himself also stuck in John's telekinetic grasp and being mercilessly tickled.

Sitting at the dinette table with their sons, Troy and Sean grinned at John, Frankie and Wade. Billy, Scott and Jimmy helplessly giggled at their two floating and hysterical friends.

All the Core Rimmers were sharing plans for the day with their kids. Mike asked Alden to check around and find out when their new arrivals might be coming. Over the ceiling speakers on the ground floor of the house, everyone heard Alden's reply; "The newbies will be at Ewa Beach about one this afternoon, guys. Some are in Las Vegas, some are in Philadelphia, and another set are in Cincinnati. They've all been fed breakfast and will have had lunch before leaving the medical facilities they're at."

Around his breakfast, Derrick mumbled, "So we can meet them in the dining room, get them to the store, and then gather the Clan in the auditorium."

Corey asked, "Are there any other pending refugees, Alden?"

"The Wells Fargo Arena was cleared yesterday afternoon, Des Moines time, and is being cleaned now," Alden answered.

Prez asked, "Is there any other activity we need to know about, Alden?"

Privately to the Core Rimmers only, Alden responded, "The Short Family and the Core members of the UNIT were called away and are off planet. Uncle Colin woke at four this morning. He's surveying damages at Washington and New York City. King Aalona was told that his Starfleet force fields will be installed tomorrow, however it might be several more days before the damages to the palace have been repaired."

Over the ceiling speakers, Alden whined, "Kerry's got his body, and I want mine too!" Everyone in the house paused for the arguing AI brothers, and then Alden giggled, "Bob Busch has adopted fifteen kids in 48 hours, maybe a new record, outside of Momma Janet and Daddy Joe. So far this morning, twenty-seven boys at Ewa Beach were caught talking to their dicks. Out of the twenty-seven, nine have named their dicks, a surprisingly low number statistically, but not everyone is awake yet either." All around the house, boys began chuckling, giggling and laughing.

Reyes looked up and over at the nearest camera, giggling, "No, no, no."

Believing that the AIs were speaking privately into Reyes' sub-vocal, Derrick smiled, "What are they saying?"

Reyes giggled, "None of us were given choices about our dicks, were we? I simply cannot fathom having that choice, and if I did, would I want my dick any different from the one I have? Hell no! Looking around this house, I see exactly what I would expect hanging between everybody's legs." Looking back up at the camera, Reyes laughed, "Pardon the pun, but you guys are making big deals over nothing!"

Six AIs giggled, "That wasn't funny, Reyes!"

Entering the room with Troy and three of their four sons, Sean smirked, reminding the AI's, "All you guys have seen me limp and hard. You've seen me and Troy alone together too. At the orphanage, I wished that my dick didn't grow quite so much. Troy's the only reason I'm not still wishing that. Now I know that it's all in the eyes when two people make love. All that really matters to us gay dudes is that there's something hanging between our lover's legs; quantity has nothing to do with it. Quality is in the heart, and that can only be seen in the eyes."

"It took me four days and a lot of trying to successfully get what I needed and wanted," Troy told the AI's. "I also happen to know that Sean talked to Darren Devault. If you guys haven't talked to Darren, then you need to. What he's got hangin' is damn close to what Sean's got erect. Not to mention, he was a prostitute, so he's got lots of experience with men and women. Just like Sean, Darren's dick got him attention, most of which he didn't appreciate or want."

Looking up and around for the camera, Billy seriously said to the AI's, "You guys don't know this, but I had to mess with Jason and he had to mess around with me, just to make our old foster parents happy and give them something to film. At nine, Jason's got plenty. He's told me that I've got enough too, but we're still growing up. What matters most is, what's enough to some people might be too much for others. If you want to be copies of Joey, that's your choice, but I wouldn't, if I were you."

Looking directly into a camera again, Reyes smiled, "There ya go, dudes. If there's one dude anywhere in the Clan that isn't perfectly happy with what they've got, I'd be very surprised. It seems to me, the only real choice to be made is whether you want to be circumcised or not. About one-third are, on our base anyway, and each choice has its pros and cons, so two of the six of you can make that choice."

Arguments about who would appear snipped began amongst the AI's, and then the ceiling speakers popped mid banter. All the boys and teens in the house grinned at the ceilings. Looking up at Troy, Sean and their sons, who were obviously done with breakfast, Prez sniggered, "Let's get some showers going."

Troy and Sean clasped hands and started for the staircase. Jimmy and Scott stood and followed their dad and pop. Noticing that there was no one his age indoors and most of the kids were still eating, Billy hummed uncertainly. Standing and going to Billy, Corey smiled, "It's you and me, bro."

Vigorously shaking his head, Billy asked, "What about Drew?"

"He's busy with Leo, and we're only showering," Corey reminded the newbie Rimmer son. Taking Billy's hand and starting for the stairs, Corey then mischievously cackled, "Who knows, I might get to take two showers this morning."

Billy giggled, "The second much more fun than the first."

Looking down at the other boys on the floor, Prez reminded, "There's a big shower and a bigger tub in the master bathroom. Little dudes get the big tub, four or five at a time, easily."

Since Stephen was finished with his milkshake, John prompted Wade and Frankie for a family shower. The four of them got up and started for the staircase. Stephen silently reminded, 'John, I've never been naked with you and not gotten stiff.'

'It's perfect for our boys,' John immediately replied. 'We won't make love, but they will see that we're in love and that we love them too.'

'Are you sure this is good for them?' Stephen worried.

Frankie smirked, 'Com'on, pop. You can't really think me or Wade care about seeing you and dad stiff. I've been your son for twelve days, including the week at Archmania, and today's the first time I've seen you naked.'

Wade wondered, 'Why won't you take your clothes off, poppa?'

Stephen sighed then told his boys the truth. 'Because I'm a year older than daddy, but shorter and thinner than him and lots of other boys. I'm the same age as Corey and Billy, but Corey's about six inches taller than me. Billy's about four inches taller than I am.'

Frankie reminded, 'You've been naked since we woke and nobody said a word about your height, weight, or your dick, did they?'

'It's okay, poppa,' Wade silently assured, 'Grammy thinks you're still gonna be big, like your daddy.'

At the top of the stairs, Stephen came to an abrupt halt and faced his sons, squealing, "Did she really say that?"

Shaking his head, Wade giggled, "She thought it though."

Covering his mouth, Frankie softly chortled, "Poppa, you're gonna be big and tall too!"

Watching Stephen's jaw drop as he got Frankie's meaning, John helplessly sputtered then loudly laughed, "YIPPEE! LUCKY ME!"

Fiercely blushing, Stephen squinted at John. Giggling their little butts off, Frankie led Wade up the remaining steps, past their dads and into the master bedroom. Stephen smirked, "I have got to teach my mother to be careful what she thinks of around our family."

Leading Stephen toward the shower, John smiled, "She loved your father for a lot more than his height and his dick. He was a lot like you, from what I've gathered. You're the best parts of your mom and your dad. Even when they decided not to marry, he stuck around for a long time, until school and work led him out of the ROH, to Japan, as far as your mom knows. She's not hiding anything from you, baby."

"I know," Stephen sighed. "I can't help wishing he'd been around, ya know?"

Pointing toward the master bathroom, John nodded and softly said, "What we're going to do is right in there. Those boys are ours. They need to know that we're in love and love them. Letting them see our bones is really nothing to worry about. I'd be surprised if we didn't see them with little bones, from fathers washing sons and each other, and brothers washing each other and us too. We just slightly limit them touching our bones, and when they want to know why, we explain that to them. It's just a little restraint, ya know?"

"We're the grownups," Stephen smiled, and then placed a tender kiss on John's mouth. Taking John's hand, Stephen led the way into the master bathroom and into the shower, where water was already running and their two sons were already giggling.

Soon after John and Stephen entered the shower, Kaleo and Tory came upstairs with their brood of five California orphanage boys. Entering the bathroom, Kaleo loudly said, "It's just us, dudes. We're gonna see if all five of our sons can squeeze into the tub at once."

Tory chuckled, "We're gonna hang in here until they're done, to make sure they're safe. By that time, you guys will be done, and then Kaleo and I can jump in the shower real quick." Seeing the whirlpool tub, Tory gasped, "Holy shit! This tub is huge!"

"Six little guys could easily fit in this tub," Kaleo sniggered.

Over the sound of the shower and the tub water faucet, John suggested, "We'll take over watching your kids when we're done too."

Frankie giggled, "Bet you they won't ever fall down," and then rose off the floor squealing, "Daddy!"

John sniggered, "Why should Wade bend down to wash your legs, feet and toes?" Wade lost it and cracked up. Giggling insanely, Stephen braced his youngest son before the boy slipped. Peeking over the top of the shower doors, Frankie waved at Kaleo and Tory. Softly chuckling, Kaleo and Tory waved back. John levitated a bottle of shampoo up to Frankie, and instructed his eldest to wash his hair while he floated.

Climbing into the whirlpool tub with his brothers, Stan smiled at two of his younger brothers that were staring at his dick. Realizing he was being watched, the youngest of the five, Marv, asked, "Wha's wrong, big bro? Why's your dick like that?"

Shrugging, Stan giggled, "Like what?"

Marv hummed, then muttered, "I never seen it like that. It's big, pointing up, and now I can see the head."

Relieving Stan of answering the question, Tory smiled, "It's because he's very happy to be bathing with his brothers. Stan's the oldest of you, so when he's really happy, it shows."

The next youngest boy, Mark worried, "It looks like it hurts."

Desperately trying to maintain, Kaleo softly chortled, "It don't hurt. Remember what me and poppa told you about foreskin? Marv and Leonard had theirs removed as babies." Pointing at Stan, Mark and Russ, Kaleo smiled, "You three still have skin. When you get older and happy too, your skin will stretch like that too."

To prove the point, Tory stood at the side of the tub, reached down and pulled the skin back on his dick. Tory said, "Now I look just like Leonard and Marv and all circumcised boys." All five of his sons agreed. Standing in the tub, Mark and Russ did the same as their pop, and a little more, proving to their brothers that the foreskin stretched in both directions very easily and it didn't hurt a bit.

Hearing Kaleo explaining the differences to his sons made Stephen's life infinity simpler bathing Wade's little uncut unit. All Stephen had to do was check that the boy was keeping it clean after going to the bathroom. At least Wade's birth father had instructed his son properly about that necessity.

Outside, on the beach, Leo had finished his horror story. He had all his new friends, cousins, dad and uncle surrounding him, to help him understand that nothing like that would ever happen again. Doc Wiener, Keith and Drew said that New York and Los Angeles experienced societal breakdowns which hadn't occurred in many other cities, in the US and around the world. Silent tears flowed down the faces of Dee, Gage, Kenny and Sammy. The words those four couldn't speak erupted in torrents of vulgar bitterness from Jason Mullins, Ben and Jonah. They expressed their disgust that so many good parents were taken when each of them had lived hellish existences.

As soon as Keith knew which address to have investigated, he silently instructed Alden to get Kekoa to assign a strike team to examine the Scott's house, gather evidence and above all, make certain that the corpses of Mr. and Mrs. Scott were respectfully cared for. Kekoa told Keith that he would pull his own team, and accompany Assault Team Alpha to Central Los Angeles. To begin investigations into all of their Battle Of Earth kids, Keith asked to speak with the Pacific Rim Division's new Founder representatives and interfaces to Ark.

Into Keith's sub-vocal, a new teenage male voice said, "Hi Keith. I'm Damon Praefectus."

"And I'm Ian Praefectus," a younger pre-teen voice offered. "Alden's already filled us in on what's happening."

Damon assured, "We're sending the personnel files of our Battle Of Earth rescued to Ark now. Since there were power outages affecting many street cameras, we'll check any available satellite video. We'll pickup investigations of the rest of our newbies."

"Save the majority of your UNIT Detachment for military situations," Ian instructed.

Damon added, "Leo's part of your family, so Kekoa can do his bit, and we'll handle the remaining investigations. It might take a day, maybe two, depending on how much actual legwork needs to be done."

Keith smiled, "Kewl, dudes. Hopefully we'll get the chance to meet face-to-face later today, but with almost a hundred more newbies on the way, I can only promise we'll try."

"Catch ya later," Damon and Ian chorused.

Knowing that Leo didn't need to hear gunfire, Keith went to Justin, asking that those on the security team who had phasers help to assist his rattled nephew. Soon the entire group of six were gathered near Doc Wiener and the boys. Several of the personal security around the beach fired phasers at targets provided by Alden. Various sized targets placed out on the rocks by the waterfall, some three hundred meters away, were quickly and easily vaporized by the trained UNIT security troops. Kites were used as moving targets and were disintegrated just as easily. Conner and Chuck were amongst the group. Drew specifically pointed them out to Leo, confidently stating that he, Corey and all the Core Rimmers were always safe with these kinds of friends around. Lastly, Keith and Drew proved that all the Core Rimmers had been trained and fired phasers at targets about one-hundred meters away. Two more targets turned to dust on the beach.

Opening up to share his story, Kenny didn't know what had happened to his parents, but that didn't make living through the New York City riots any easier. His parents went to work, but never came home Friday evening. If it weren't for two kind neighbors in their apartment building, Kenny and his brothers might still be waiting. The two men kept the boys safe and got them out of the city, only telling them that the downtown area where both Hunnicutt adults worked was the hardest hit area of town. It was after six o'clock Friday night when the two adult men took the three distraught Hunnicutt brothers to the Meadowlands. By eight eastern time, the Hunnicutts were in Des Moines. And it was about an hour later when AJ, Corey, Drew and Jerry picked them up to go to Ewa Beach.

In a single day, lives were turned upside down and flipped around. Doc Wiener made sure the traumatized boys knew appropriate ways to voice any discomfort they might experience in coming days and weeks. It could be as simple as headaches or bellyaches or understandable worries, but the important thing was to let someone know what they were feeling. At that point, all Kenny and Leo wanted was their new families always close by, and the safety they always had had before Friday, November fifth, 2004. For almost an hour-and-a-half, Doc Wiener and the group of boys had strolled along the beach. Near the end of the session and the walk, Doc Wiener's comm-badge chirped.

Carl Seibert asked, "Where are you, Randy?"

"At Kaho'olawe, chatting with two brave young men," Doc Wiener answered. The other boys agreed with the Doc's assessment and poured praise upon Leo and Kenny.

Carl heard all the boys and waited for them to finish before telling Doc Wiener, "I'm at the dining room, with the other parents and our Clan. Some of the other boys rescued Friday are having troubles too. Near me are Fred Eckhart, Travis McAuley, Craig Nash, Nate Ramos, Chris Stokley and Jay Montigua. They've told us that Raphael Montigua, Phil Nash, Sal and Rickie Ramos, Chauncey Eckhart and the Stoeher twins had a rough night."

Off to the side, Keith tapped his sub-vocal, telling Alden to share this information with the other Core Rimmers and the personal security around the beach house. Alden replied, "I already have, Keith. Everyone in the house is hurrying to get back to Ewa Beach."

Doc Wiener told Carl, "I need a comfortable place to talk with all the boys rescued Friday."

Travis said, "We're all in dorm three. How about the common room there?"

"That's a good idea," Doc Wiener replied, and then instructed. "Gather all the rescued boys from Friday into that room, even those who haven't had nightmares, Carl. I'll be there in a minute or two."

Keith loudly said, "A lot of us Core Rimmers will be there too, Uncle Carl. We'll bring the Steib quadruplets along."

"Good, Keith," Carl replied, and added "Many of the parents will be there as well. Carl, out."

Glancing at Leo and Kenny, Doc Wiener grinned, "As you've heard, what you boys are feeling is completely normal given the circumstances." He reminded, "On Friday you were victims. What are you now?"

"Survivors," Leo and Kenny responded.

Nodding, Doc Wiener assured, "No matter what you did or didn't do, it was all appropriate and necessary, or you wouldn't be standing here now." He then asked, "If you feel anything at all, who do you talk to?"

Grinning at the group around him, Kenny answered, "First our friends, and then our dads..."

"And our leaders, and then you," Leo finished. "The important thing is to talk about it."

"Perfect!" Doc Wiener cheered, and then locked eyes with Keith.

"Go ahead, Doc," Keith smiled, "I'll take care of this group, get 'em home and get 'em fed. Drew and I will probably be the last of the Core Rimmers to join you at dorm three."

"I'll see you there," Doc Wiener softly said. He then told the gathered boys, "Have a better day and I'll see you soon." All the boys either waved or said goodbye to Doc Wiener, who then tapped his comm-badge and transported to Ewa Beach dormitory three's first floor common room.

"Okay, dudes," Keith clearly told the boys, "let's get back to the house, and get showered, dressed and back to our home base. Once there, all of us are going to eat breakfast before we do anything else." Leading the way, Keith jogged toward the house.

"I'm going directly into the bathroom," Drew grinned. The other boys began giggling. Purposefully, to lighten the serious mood the boys were in, Drew chuckled, "I woke with a major piss hard-on and have to drain the lizard." Cracking up, many of the boys agreed they had the same priority.

Through his loud laughter, Leo couldn't agree or disagree, but he did need to go too. Leo's real father might have admitted needing to relieve himself, but definitely not the way his new dad just did. For Leo, it was great to be around all these kewl dudes that simply stated what was the truth. It seemed nothing was ever held back. Keith flung open the screen door and they filed inside. Drew, Leo and Kenny made it to the ground floor's bathroom first.

Hurrying through the house, Keith found the place bustling with activity. Kaleo, Tory and their boys were in the living room getting dressed. Pulling up his boxers, Kaleo quickly told Keith, "John and Stephen have already left with their boys."

Half in his shirt, Tory giggled, "What was a relaxing bath time suddenly went into overdrive."

Heading for the stairs behind Jason, Ben, Sammy, Gage and Jonah, Keith paused and wondered, "Where's Prez?"

"Heading for a shower with Derrick and Mike," Kaleo answered.

Already climbing steps two-at-a-time, Keith heard Tory cackle, "The master bathroom's shower and tub are huge. Eight of us teens could fit in that shower easily. With a shower head on each of the three walls, it's like a mini mob shower, like our dorms."

Coming downstairs with Billy while Keith was going up, Corey asked, "Where's Drew and Leo?"

"Takin' a leak," Keith quickly replied. Ben, Sammy, Jonah and Gage went directly to the first available toilet. Keith entered the master bedroom and heard loud chatter from the bathroom. Stepping inside and going directly to the toilet, Keith found Richie, Dillon, Geoff, Shaun and Mike Hunnicutt in the tub. Opening the shower door, Keith discovered Prez, Mike, Derrick, AJ and Jerry. Joining the group, Keith chuckled, "Kind o' reminds me of gym class."

"Just don't drop the soap," Prez sniggered.

Derrick smiled, "Mike did. Unlike gym class, four hands goosed his ass when he bent over."

"Horny bastards!" Mike laughed, "I almost cracked my skull on the wall!" Evil snickering erupted from AJ, Derrick and Prez.

Jerry grinned, "It's a nice muscular butt."

"I've heard that, yeah," Mike sniggered.

"You and Prez have to get those DNA scans done," AJ told Jerry, and pointed out the two lower red-heads to Keith.

Other than foreskin on Jerry's meat, Keith noticed they were in fact very similar in every other respect. Keith nodded, "Yep, I think the theory of relativity applies."

Scrubbing his pits, Jerry sighed, "Because I moved here as a baby, and my folks died before I turned five, I just don't know much of anything. I can't even tell Prez what American State we came from."

Prez assured, "We'll have a Doc check it out for us, Jerry. For now, we're brothers; that's more important than anything else from our heritage."

Keith asked, "When we get back, what's the plan?"

Derrick answered, "We split up. Corey and Drew have their own needs with Leo. AJ, Jerry and the Hunnicutts can go to the pools. Kaleo, Tory and their boys will check with the kids at the playground. Before John left, he told Reyes to be with him at the dorm three common room, doing their empath thing. Reyes is showering in one of the other bathrooms. Once he's dressed, he's there."

Keith offered, "Drew and I can cover the dining room and CIC rec room. All of us that were out with Leo need to eat as soon as we get back home."

Finishing up his shower, Prez shared, "That leaves me, Derrick and Mike to join the dudes at dorm three." He stepped out of the shower, and was followed out by Mike, Derrick, Jerry and AJ. While the door was still open, Drew, Leo, Gage, Jonah, Sammy and Ben stepped in with Keith. Kenny paused to say a few words to his new pop.

"Every other bathroom is filled, bro," Drew simply stated.

Wetting down under a shower spray, Sammy said, "Kaleo's left with his family, dad." He grabbed a bar of soap and started washing Ben's chest. Seeing his new boyfriend wearing a goofy grin, Sammy cheekily smiled at Ben.

Jonah shared, "Reyes was just getting out of the shower. Sung and Kawazoe jumped in that tub."

Meanwhile, Kenny gestured for his pop to lean down so he could share something. When Jerry leaned over, Kenny whispered, "I told Doc Wiener what happened to us. There's a meeting of other Battle Of Earth kids goin' on. I don't think Shaun and Mike need to go, especially so soon after Leo's nightmare."

Jerry locked eyes with his eldest son, then softly asked, "How do you think we should deal with it then?"

"I heard the same stuff that Leo did," Kenny whispered. "If it happens, we deal as a family, and I tell them what I learned."

Standing up again, Jerry nodded and smiled, "You're an awesome big brother. Go ahead and grab a quick shower, Kenny. We'll talk more later."

"Kewl, pop," Kenny proudly grinned, and slid the shower door open.

Outside the shower, giggling erupted when each of the five Core Rimmers who had just left the shower helped one of the five little dudes get out of the tub and towel dry. Geoff squealed, "That tickles, Unca Mike!" Drew helplessly sniggered. Leo giggled at his dad's expression and his little brother's laughter. In seconds, all five little boys were gleefully squeaking and the older boys drying them were evilly snickering. Moments later, Keith opened the shower door to step out, but had to yield to the five naked, partially dried, rug rats running by.

Over the next fifteen minutes, Troy and Sean transported back to Ewa Beach with their sons; then AJ and Jerry left with their boys, followed by Corey, Drew and their three boys. The last group remaining made sure the house was relatively clean and had Alden confirm there were no stragglers anywhere in the house. They went outside. Prez and Keith told the teams of personal security that they were ready to leave.

Stopping before his own four brothers and the four Steib brothers, Derrick squatted down and smiled, "Right after we get done with Doc Wiener, we're going to find my mom and dad and tell them how it is. Tonight, the Steibs are part of the Seibert family."

Kelly, Lawrence, Matthew and Nicholas all giggled, "Kewl, bro."

Sung firmly told Derrick, "Us four are going with our new brothers and you, bro."

Nodding, Kawazoe emphasized, "We've got to be with them, so we know what happened and can help make it better." Chad and Herbert nodded agreement, making it clear Derrick had no choice.

Standing up again, Derrick nodded, "If everybody's ready, we're outta here."

Jonah cheekily smiled, "Pop, I'm stayin' with Gage."

Mike chuckled at his son's expression, and then asked Ben, "You're with Sammy?"

"Course!" Ben giggled, causing all the boys to break into giggles.

Without further ado, Mike, Derrick and their group of eight transported to dorm three's common room. Moments later, Keith and Prez took their boys and their boyfriends home, to the CIC's dining room, so they could grab some breakfast. The remaining security checked with Alden to make sure the beach house was empty then they left for Ewa Beach.

* * * * *

Ewa Beach, C.S.P.R.D. Dining Room

Sunday, November 7, 2004, 9:27AM HTZ

Immediately upon arrival, Ben, Sammy, Jonah and Gage went to the kitchen chow line. Dee went over to the table where Leo was sitting with his new family. Since he'd already eaten, Prez told Keith, "I'll start making the rounds, beginning in the rec room, T'hy'la."

Nodding, Keith assured, "I'll catch up with you, baby." They kissed and separated. Keith called Dee and then they joined the boys in the kitchen chow line.

Richie took Prez's hand. Heading for the rec room, Prez grinned down, promising, "Keep it up, Richie. You're going to be a great Core Rimmer one day."

"I kinda already am, Poppa," Richie giggled. "So are Dee, Gage and Sammy, and Geoff, Lenny, Dillon, Jonah and Randy. In a couple o' days, all the new dudes 'dopted yesterday will be too."

Prez checked, "Kids are going to you guys asking about stuff?"

Richie nodded, "All kinds o' stuff, even asking us about our daddies and poppas. It was weird last week, but now, I kinda expect it, at least once a day."

On the wall between the two sets of double doors leading into the rec room, Prez noticed six additional double-wide doorways. They looked like normal doorways would, except the center area appeared silvery, almost like a semi-liquid fixture. All six had lit marquee-style signs above them. Two were marked as 'INCOMING'. The third was labeled as LAS VEGAS. The fourth was displaying DES MOINES; and the final two were marked as 'OUTGOING'. Pausing a moment, Prez called, "Alden, are these what I think they are?"

Alden giggled, "Only if you're thinking they're dimensional doors. They were installed last night."

"What about the one to Des Moines, and the other to Vegas?" Prez wondered.

"That's just the last destinations used, Prez," Alden answered. "Carrol and Terrance came here from Vegas for Richie Telford. A little while later, Ronnie went to Des Moines to be with Garrett and the double-twins. Those are the first and only uses of the doors so far. Any kid with a comm-badge is authorized to go certain places, like where friends are and where school is. They work as master-slave pairs, partly to remove the possibility of traffic jams. Kids just tell the door where they want to go. The silvery facade connects to the distant end, a room thousands of miles away, and kids walk through like any other doorway. There are three more in the Command Center, boss. One is fixed for emergency evacuation to the Ark Compound. Another is fixed to Orlando Clan Headquarters. The third is 'dialable' to other divisions' Command Centers. If they had been installed for Thursday night's craziness, we would've had Core Rimmers hither and yon."

Entering the rec room, Prez noticed there were more kids than usual, considering the time of day. Sixteen-year-old Peter Dano, one of the first group of street prostitutes, loudly called, "Welcome back, Prez."

"Hey, Pete," Prez smiled, and then wondered, "What's happening here? Why are so many inside?"

"It rained last night," Pete answered. "It's still cloudy and cool outside."

Roy smiled, "Some of us went over to the pools, but it's just not a pool day, so far."

Pete softly sniggered, "Without the sun, it's major shrinkage, bro." Roy, Prez and Richie nodded understandingly and softly chuckled.

Approaching Prez from the far side of the room, one of the newly assigned dorm leaders, Nell Deckert said, "Some of us decided to stay here in the rec room. A lot decided to go to their dorm rooms to watch TV, or check out the Internet. It's shaping up into that sort of lazy Sunday, unless the clouds break."

"Oh, well that'll make passing out comm-badges pretty easy,"

Prez chortled.

"That's been done too, Prez," Nell grinned. Pointing out the comm-badges pinned to their shirts, Pete and Roy also grinned. "During breakfast we got them distributed," Nell giggled. "Last night, me, Mollie, Horacio and Sonia talked about it, then we asked Alden if our plan was kewl. So, everybody got a comm-badge with breakfast, adults and kids. All they had to do is tap it, identify themselves to Alden, and it was done."

Walking into the room with Sonia at his side, Horacio said, "Only the boys that were with you at the beach house still need comm-badges, Prez."

"Excellent!" Prez cheered. He smiled at the subset of dorm leaders, saying, "The weather at Kaho'olawe was sunny and clear. Gather the rest of your team mates and take the afternoon off there."

Sonia giggled, "We haven't done much of anything, Prez."

"Yes, you did," Prez grinned. "You thought of what was planned and relieved us of another task. Since school's starting tomorrow, take the rest of the day off. It may be a week before I can do this again, so take a break. The beach house is a lot like the single family homes here. There's surfboards, a replicator for munchies, five bedrooms upstairs, a smaller bedroom on the ground floor, and the basement is set up like a night club with a gaming room on one side. We brought our sons and some brothers, so grab a group of friends and go have fun." He tapped his comm-badge and called, "Matt, are you awake, dude?"

Over the comm-badge, Matt replied, "Have been for hours, Prez. What's up?"

"I'm sending the group of dorm leaders to Kaho'olawe," Prez grinned. "Since some people worked through the night, grab a group of security guys to go back to Kaho'olawe. I'll see all you guys back here for dinner or soon thereafter."

Matt chuckled, "We're on our way. Matt out."

With an open palm, Prez gestured to the door.

Nell grabbed Pete and Mollie took Roy's hand, then they hurried to gather another crew of kids. Following the group to the door, Sonia smirked, "It's funny, Prez specifically mentioned bedrooms." Mischievously flashing his eyes at his girlfriend, Horacio swiftly swept Sonia up off the floor and into his arms. Holding on tightly, Sonia loudly cackled, "HORACIO-O-O!" Appearing as a newlywed couple, they exited the rec room, to the laughter of the other kids.

"You're so bad, Poppa," Richie giggled.

Smiling down at his boy, Prez bounced his eyebrows, saying, "It's a team building tactic. Some teams are much closer than others, ya know?" Rapidly nodding, Richie laughed his ass off. Widely smiling, Prez asked, "You don't believe me?"

"I do!" Richie cackled.

Prez sniggered, "Good, I thought I was going to have to count down." Holding out his hand for Richie to take, Prez suggested, "Let's start walking around the dorms."

Out in the dining room, Keith was finishing up his late breakfast. Dee, Gage, Jonah, Ben and Sammy were gathered around the same table, with milkshake glasses before them. At the next table sat Drew, Corey, Geoff, Lenny and Leo. With their four sons, Sean and Troy came in the dining room from outside. Walking up to the tables where their teammates were sitting, Sean loudly shivered,

"BRRR! I don't think it's even seventy degrees out there."

"The wind is what's really making it feel cool," Troy added.

Watching Jason leave the family group and head directly toward Leo, Billy grinned, "Try Michigan in the late fall, Pop."

"New Jersey was cold enough," Troy chuckled, and pulled his eldest son close. Seeing Prez and Richie approaching, Troy said, "Everyone's hiding indoors today, Prez." Richie let go of his pop's hand and scampered directly to Jimmy. The two little boys hugged each other like they'd been separated for days.

"I heard," Prez answered, and then added, "I just sent the dorm leaders to Kaho'olawe for the day, since they've already handled passing out comm-badges. We've got very little to do until the newbies show up, so I thought I'd just stroll around the dorms, to let everyone know we're back home, and to see if anyone needs anything. Would anyone care to join me?"

Troy smiled, "I need to find my mom and tell her she's a grandmother of four." Having found the pool area deserted, AJ and Jerry came into the CIC with their three sons.

"We'd better find Doc Howard first, Lover," Sean giggled. "Mom will need to be revived and given her Valium prescription."

"You're prob'ly right," Troy sniggered. Once they checked with their already mingling four sons, Troy and Sean left the dining room to accomplish their mission.

Keith nodded, "Just let me take my stuff to the dishwasher, baby." He stood and began placing everything on his tray.

Mike and Derrick walked in with Dillon and Randy. Mike smirked, "John told us to leave dorm three's common room. The older dudes supposedly felt uncomfortable with us there."

"The room was packed anyway," Derrick shrugged. "All our parents are there, plus John, Reyes, Relud and Inoyra, and all twenty-seven kids from Friday, and their friends and boyfriends too, of course."

Mike huffed, "Part of me thinks we should go right back there. They've gotta know any of us would be as freaked as they are." While Mike was speaking, Kaleo, Tory and their five boys walked into the dining room.

Finished with his breakfast, Drew said, "I'm sure they do know that. Other than each of us saying that, what more could we contribute? We can offer shoulders to cry on, but that's about it."

Since no one else was saying anything, Prez sighed, "Drew's right. Another thing to consider is that group building bonds, amongst themselves, with their friends, boyfriends and our parents too. This is only their second day here. Correct me if I'm wrong, but the original eighty-seven took three days to be comfortable enough to move into dorm one. The street kids from Monday and Tuesday night took a few days getting situated and comfy too." He pointed toward the rec room, grinning, "Now there are a mix of all those kids, and Latin Kings, and the level one orphans in there."

Returning from the kitchen, Keith smiled, "Handfuls of those first rescues are now Core Rimmers and dorm leaders. Something's happening that we didn't intend, but it's working out pretty good, over all. In less than a week, the kids built bonds. Everybody's discovering what they're capable of doing, and most comfortable doing. Christian Beresford is back at the dishwasher, for the third day. According to Miguel, he's showing interest in becoming a chef."

Kaleo grinned, "Now think of the newbies we're about to get. Almost a hundred kids will be just like the rest of us in a few days. They'll be together, with similar histories, living in dorms over at the Oneula Beach base. They'll mingle and mix with other kids here and with other newbies we'll likely get over the course of the next week. Then we'll have other kids taking the odd jobs, a couple more dorm leaders and maybe others might want to become Core Rimmers."

"Which reminds me," Tory quickly said, "we started with less than a hundred and had eight Core Rimmers. Four of us over there at Oneula Beach doesn't seem like enough."

Corey suggested, "What about Sean and Troy? They've gone to tell Judy she's a grandmother. It's a fair bet that they'll need a place for their family."

"That sounds like a good plan," Derrick smiled, "assuming kids want to move into dorms."

Prez nodded, "Just like everyone else, we can get them started on the right foot with a nest." Facing Kaleo, Tory, Jerry and AJ, Prez suggested, "Since we have the time, you four dudes prepare to move out of the dorms here and into townhouses at Oneula. Be back by lunch time and ready for the newbies. While you're doing that, the rest of us will wander around dorms and check on the rest of the Clan."

When the Core Rimmers agreed, Billy giggled, "Me and Jason just moved into the dorm Friday night. We only spent that one night there."

Jerry grinned, "Have Alden help you pack. Your dad and pop will be along soon to help."

Keith told Kaleo, Tory, AJ and Jerry, "When you get to the townhouse, you'll have everything you need except food and household items. Have Alden get the place stocked up, so you guys can at least have stuff to snack on and drink there. Make it your home, dudes."

Stan frowned, "Us kids were just about to go play in the rec room, dad."

"That's fine," Kaleo smiled. "We'll get your stuff packed and moved."

Sean's and Troy's two youngest sons, Jimmy and Scott chimed, "What about us, Jerry?"

"Your stuff is still packed in suitcases," Jerry replied. "You guys can play and we'll get your stuff moved."

Jason asked Leo, "What do you want to do?"

"Spend time with my dad and pop," Leo quickly answered, and then wondered, "Don't you want to be with your dad's too?"

"Yeah, but only if that's kewl with you," Jason grinned. Standing up and sliding his chair under the table, Jason widely smiled, "See ya later?"

Rapidly nodding, Leo giggled, "I'll be here, dude."

Noticing that Leo now had two friends, Jason and Kenny, constantly fawning over him, Drew helplessly sniggered, "All the Core Rimmers and all our sons will be down in the store together, with our newbies after lunch. We'll see each other again soon, dudes."

Kaleo, Tory, AJ, Jerry, the three Hunnicutts, Billy and Jason turned and left the CIC. Dee, Richie, Dillon, Randy, Geoff, Lenny, Scott, Jimmy and all five of Kaleo's and Tory's sons hurried across the dining room for the rec room. As soon as most of the group had left the area, Corey burst into giggles. Sammy, Ben, Gage and Jonah softly chortled.

Seeing his dad and pop, and the other four Core Rimmers, and the four sons all widely grinning, Leo wondered, "What's the joke? Did I miss something?" Corey lost it and howled laughing.

Going to his eldest son, Drew offered his hands, and Leo took them then stood. Wrapping Leo in a hug, Drew softly chuckled, "Kenny and Jason would turn the round world into a spinning diamond if it made you happy."

Loudly gasping, Leo glanced around at his remaining friends. When they nodded, he looked at the other Core Rimmers and saw them slowly nodding. Still holding onto his dad, Leo whimpered then locked eyes with Drew, softly wondering, "What am I gonna do?" Beginning to hiccup, Corey parked his ass in the chair Leo had been sitting in.

Shrugging, Drew smiled, "What do you want to do, Leo? Do you want a boyfriend?"

After thinking for a few moments, Leo giggled, "Yeah, I think so, but... ya know... two? I've only been here a little more than a day! What did I do to deserve two?"

Scratching his jaw as if the answers required thought, Derrick offered, "You're sincere and compassionate..."

Corey loudly hiccuped.

"Curly long blond hair, emotionally expressive intense blue eyes, and about as cute as humanly possible," Keith smiled.

Prez reminded, "And the way you woke us all this morning put the final touches on the picture. Most people want to be needed. This morning, you needed, so all your friends were there for you."

Watching Leo turn shades of Mikyvis purple, Mike chuckled, "Put all that together, and you'll have every unattached gay nine-year-old following your every step, Leo."

Twice in quick succession, Corey hiccuped again.

Turning a dozen shades of red, Leo hollered, "OMIGOD!" and hid his face on his dad's chest.

After checking with one another, Ben, Sammy, Jonah and Gage disjointedly laughed, "You're making it worse, Leo!" Corey howled laughing and hiccuped again.

Reaching for Keith's hand, Prez softly chuckled, "Were we like that at nine?"

Taking Prez's hand and starting for the exit, Keith shrugged, "You were far worse, to me anyway."

Mike and Derrick followed their friends out of the CIC, softly teasing Prez, reminding him that he did often seem much more shy and reserved at the time. Prez defended himself, reminding his husband and friends that appearances and blushes didn't stop him from participating in every new sexual experience they all shared.

Still embracing Leo, who was sufficiently embarrassed enough, Drew tried to get his husband to stop hiccuping, instructing, "Three deep breaths and hold it, angel." While Corey got his hiccups under control, Drew had Alden deliver enough comm-badges for all the Rimmer sons still in the CIC.

Sixteen communications devices appeared on the table where Sammy, Ben, Gage and Jonah were sitting. Over the room's ceiling speakers, Alden instructed, "Pin it to your shirt and give it a tap then state your names, guys, and I'll assign them to each of you." The four boys each picked up a comm-badge and followed Alden's instructions. Drew pinned one onto Leo's shirt. Still a little flushed, Leo tapped it and stated his full name. By this time, Corey had pretty much stopped laughing and hiccuping, but his face was still very red. He picked up a handful of comm-badges and Drew took the remainder. They then walked with Leo into the rec room to hand out comm-badges to the other Rimmer sons hanging out in there.

Finishing their milkshakes, Sammy and Gage decided to follow Ben and Jonah to the Gibbons' house, where the later two would practice guitar for twenty or thirty minutes. After that, Sammy would show Ben the bedroom he shared with Dee. Jonah would show Gage the bedroom that he shared with Reyes.

While in the rec room passing out comm-badges, a large group of boys and girls surrounded Drew and Corey, all wanting to be introduced to Leo. Corey and Drew didn't think anything of it and began introducing Leo to those kids and the others in the room that hadn't directly asked to be introduced. Thirty-something names later, Leo's head was practically spinning off his shoulders. As they were leaving the room, Leo softly asked his dad and pop, "How can you remember all those kids?"

Corey shrugged, "It took the first day or two to get names associated with faces and personalities. If you think you're straight, Earleen and Noreen Maygar are interested."

"Omigod," Leo bashfully muttered.

Drew huffed, "Corey!"

"What?" Corey giggled, "They walked away giggling! We know the reason why."

Shaking his head, Drew smiled, "These kids were about as shy as you those first days, Leo. Now they see a new face and want to meet him. I know for certain that Aaron Farris and Stephen Wickes, and Aki and Hajime are gay couples, so it's not like they're treating you any differently than anyone else. You're getting recognized a little more because you're with me and Corey."

Crossing the dining room, Corey seriously asked, "Didn't you have friends in LA?"

Nodding, Leo said, "Sure, a couple, but none that were more than friends. Now I've got a bunch of cousins who are my friends, and two others that would like to be my boyfriend, and two girls... I just don't know... how to act... or why things are happening the way they are."

Walking out of the CIC, Corey smiled, "Remember what we talked about in the store, Leo?"

"Sure I do. That was awesome, Pop. I never knew how to tell... ya know, my real parents how I was feeling. Now I do, but it's still so weird."

Following the path to dorm one, Drew sighed, "You're adjusting, Leo. Don't rush it, okay? All you need to do is take it all in, just like every other kid here has, and the newbies still are. There's really nothing to worry about. As for your real parents, I'll bet they knew how you felt without being told. My folks knew about me, Keith and Prez too. We can feel how much you loved them, and how much they loved you, without John's N-Gen empathy or telepathy. It might also be that they're watching over you, like you dreamed and asked them to do. You were a happy family and they want you to stay happy."

"Just like all your other friends in LA, you'll make new friends here," Corey assured. "Like I told you, me and your dad were friends for years before we started hugging and kissing. Look at Sammy with Ben, and Gage with Jonah; they're doing the same stuff they were doing all week, just as partners in a group now. I don't see anything seriously sexual happening with either couple for a while. They'll be a lot like me and dad were when we were their ages, holding hands, hugging and kissing, and getting silly because boys dicks have minds of their own."

Stopping outside the doors to dorm one, Drew reminded, "Eventually, Jason and Kenny will realize that they're both trying to get your undivided attention. What you need to do is tell them where you're at. So, tell us where you're at, like you might tell them."

Scowling, Leo blinked, "I like them, a lot, but not like boyfriends. We just met and got friendly. Neither is special right now, like a boyfriend should be."

"That's perfectly kewl too," Corey quickly said. "That'll tell them to slow down or look for a boyfriend elsewhere. If you say that to both of them, with the same caring in your voice, they'll understand perfectly. Then it's their choice to grow a friendship with you or move on without you."

Drew nodded, "The Hunnicutts arrived here with you. Jason got here the day before. You're all in the same age bracket too, so it should be kewl with them to be your friend, for as long as it takes for real deep feelings to grow."

"Love conquers all," Leo softly muttered, remembering what his parents always said.

Knowing why Leo said that, Corey and Drew nodded and chorused, "Yeah."

Drew reached for the door into dormitory one and opened it. Corey started to walk in when Leo checked his shorts pockets. Leo loudly gasped then whined, "Where is it?"

Spinning around in the doorway, Corey asked, "Where is what?"

Beginning to shed tears, Leo cried, "My iPod Nano! I came here with it, I know I did! My parents gave me that for my last birthday. Everywhere we went... everywhere I went, it was in my pocket. Where did I leave..."

"It fell out of your pocket Friday night, while you were getting tickled," Drew quickly and loudly interrupted, and embraced his freaked out boy. Hurrying over, Corey went to his son, effectively sandwiching him. Over Leo's weeping, Drew said, "I picked it up, got you the charger and put it in an end table in our basement."

Shaking like a leaf, Leo hugged his new dad tightly, crying, "Really? Omigod! I thought it was lost and gone forever. Can we go get it now, please, dad?"

"Sure we can," Drew softly assured, and planted a kiss on his boy's forehead. Pulling back just far enough to look into Leo's eyes, Drew pleaded, "Just slow down and take it easy for me, okay? It scares us when you get scared, ya know?"

Wiping his eyes and nodding, Leo forced a small grin, promising, "I'll be fine, as soon as I see it and have it, dad."

Panting nervously as the Leo sandwich broke apart, Corey huffed, "It's safe, Leo. We're a family now, lookin' after each other and all these important things."

"It's so important too, pop," Leo shared. "My last birthday, it was the one major thing I asked for. It went every place with me." They started walking towards the house. Leo nervously giggled, "Picture it, a couple o' times my dad worked late, so my mom took me grocery shopping. A real fun place for me to be, right?"

Drew chuckled, "Yeah, real fun."

"Like sitting in a dentist's chair," Corey sniggered.

Nodding, Leo smiled, "So the ear-buds are in my ears and I'm pushing the cart. Every now and then, I realize my mom is speaking. I take an ear-bud out, wondering, 'What's that, ma? Were you talking to me?' As if she was talking to herself! She'd roll her eyes and giggle. I'd crack up and stuff the ear-bud back in my ear. Every trip to school on the bus, I'd be listening to tunes. It was a two hour trip into the mountains. Twice last summer we went up to Big Bear. All the way there and all the way back, I'm chillin' in the backseat, listening to my music, not theirs. A lot of really kewl memories are in that little iPod."

"That's what makes it special," Corey simply stated.

Glancing over at his son, Drew smiled, "Understand something that we already do, Leo; we're your dad and pop now, but we know you had parents, very good parents. We're not trying to replace them and won't ever try. What matters now is that we started loving you at the Wells Fargo Arena."

"Why?" Leo wondered.

Corey shrugged, "It's you, Leo; it's in your eyes, in your expressions, in the way you hold yourself and walk. While I was still on the ground with your brothers, you had given Grandma Morrison your trust, and easily transferred it to our little family. You need what you've always had, and we can easily give that to you."

Drew asked, "In the dining room, when Corey was cracking up over the boys that like you, what did you really think?"

Leo giggled, "I was confused, but Pop was obviously having fun, so it was all good."

Drew asked, "Do you see what we mean?"

Shaking his head, Leo admitted, "I don't think so."

Corey explained, "Another boy might have gone one way or the other, becoming very serious or angry because I was laughing, or becoming just as silly and forgetting all about the reasons why. Not you, Leo; you accepted both, what was going on around you and what was felt internally."

"That's why we started loving you and love you more now," Drew easily admitted. "You're serious, and you're fun; you're willing to goof around, and equally willing to share your deepest feelings, like this morning with Doc Wiener. In addition to a whole bunch of other memories, that iPod got you through a very rough night. Now we know why it was with you in the first place. All that is also why you made friends so easily yesterday, and why two boys in particular find you irresistible."

"Please don't call me that," Leo whined through giggles. Corey and Drew cracked up. Cradling his head with both arms, Leo couldn't help himself; with both of his new fathers hysterical, he quickly found himself laughing along.

Still giggling, they stopped at the front door. Drew took an extra minute to program the door to allow Leo access. As soon as they stepped inside, they immediately smelled something sweet cooking. Drew loudly called, "Aunt Kathy?"

"We're in the kitchen, Drew," Kathleen Marr responded.

They started down the foyer to the kitchen, but were met halfway by Carmella, Renee, Dewi, Kokaku, and lastly Bruce. All five had flour sprinkled in their hair, on their faces and on their clothes. Carmella ran directly into Drew's waiting arms, loudly giggling, "We was makin' choco'chip cookies!"

Lifting his little sister, Drew chuckled, "I can tell."

Bruce grinned, "Aunt Kathy showed us how. We mixed the dough and she works the oven."

"And we eats 'em up!" Dewi and Kokaku proudly chimed, pushing Renee and Bruce into giggling fits.

Corey sniggered, "Did you leave any for us?"

"Lots!" All five mini-chefs cheerfully answered.

Spinning around, Bruce led the pack back into the kitchen. There they found a large tray containing piles of chocolate chip cookies on the dinette table. In the kitchen and wiping up a countertop, Aunt Kathy smiled, "On a damp, dreary day like this, cookies seemed like the best remedy."

Everybody helped themselves to a cookie, except Leo, who softly prompted, "Dad?"

Still chewing, Drew nodded and gestured toward the basement door. Leo went there, opened it and went down stairs. Following his son, Drew swallowed then said, "It's all in the end table drawer, at the far wall, beyond the sofa, Leo."

Leo went and opened the only drawer. There was nothing else in there except his iPod, ear-buds and the plastic encased charger of a type that Leo had never seen before. It wasn't a cable to a computer, or an AC adapter, and it looked more like a case for the Nano, but the packaging read 'Apple iPod Nano Kinetic Charger'. Spinning on his heels, Leo smiled, "I thought I'd lost it somewhere in LA or Des Moines. Do you know what the word kinetic means, dad?"

"It means motion or movement," Drew answered, and then wondered, "Why?"

"I've never heard of a kinetic charger for any iPod before," Leo giggled.

Going over to his son, Drew asked, "Can I see it?" Nodding, Leo handed over the packaged charger and then pocketed his beloved iPod and ear-buds. Scowling, Drew read the package. It had an Apple logo on it, so it wasn't some off-brand crap that wouldn't work. Drew called, "Alden, is this charger something new?"

"It's very new," Alden giggled. "Thanks to our Clan's ties to Steve Jobs, we're getting to try out several new products for Apple. That's the first one anybody in the Clan has ever had the opportunity to try. The unit is a charger and a rubber water-proof case too, so it should keep your iPod safe from any sort of damage, Leo. Let your dad or me know how it works, and if it meets your needs and the hype on the package. Then we'll let Uncle Steve know if it's good for release, or to go back to the drawing board."

Coming most of the way downstairs, Corey heard much of Alden's explanation. Sitting on a step, Corey said, "Later tonight, when we go back to our townhouse, we'll help you and your brothers set up the MacBooks you've got waiting for you."

Rapidly blinking, Leo giggled, "I've only ever used Windows machines."

Drew smiled, "Me and your pop are computer geeks. Did you notice the computers in our master bedroom?"

"Yup, four of 'em."

"Two are Linux desktops, one MacBook Pro, and one Windows desktop," Corey explained. "We develop stuff on the Linux machines, and the other two are for testing what we've developed."

Drew cheekily smiled, "The only time you'll hear me or pop cuss is over Microslouch Schwindows."

Leo giggled, "It's not that bad, is it?"

Handing the charger back to Leo, Drew shrugged, "No other operating system is as prone to viruses. No other operating system will crash because of a misbehaving application. The app will crash, but all the other running apps and the OS chug merrily onward, for weeks without a reboot."

"I guess I'll be learning a new computer," Leo smiled. "I'll also have to rebuild my iTunes library from scratch. First, I need to cut off this plastic packaging and try out the charger."

"There are scissors up in the kitchen," Drew said, and then turned around. Corey stood and started back up the stairs, with Drew and Leo trailing behind. In moments, Corey had asked Aunt Kathy for scissors. Leo set about the task of opening the hermetically sealed package. Once it was open, he read the instructions and put his iPod Nano in the case. It only added a few millimeters of rubber around the small, gum pack sized unit. According to the instructions, it would only take a few minutes of walking for a completely discharged Nano to have enough of a charge for use, and as long as the user kept moving, the unit would continue to charge. Aunt Kathy removed a fresh batch of cookies from the oven, distracting Leo from further reading. Going over to the table where his dads and the other kids were sitting and pigging out on cooled chocolate chip cookies, Leo helped himself and thanked his dad for the charger.

* * * * *

AJ, Jerry and the three Hunnicutts transported from dorm one room eight to Oneula Beach townhouse number three's master bedroom. Jerry took the boys to their new bedrooms. Seeing his two little brothers thrilled with their new room, Kenny remained there to help them unpack. In no time, Shaun and Mike were paying more attention to the game station, television, stereo and computers in their room than to where their clothes were being stowed. Looking up at Jerry with an exasperated expression, Kenny sighed. Jerry sputtered and tried to hold his laughter to mere chuckles. Once the two youngest were set, Jerry led Kenny into the other room to help him unpack.

Kenny grinned, "I've got this, pop."

Nodding and flinging the suitcase onto a bed, Jerry warmly smiled, "I know you do. I just wanted to tell you how awesome you made me feel before, when you told me about the chat with Doc Wiener, and how we should deal with Shaun and Mike."

Joining his pop at the bed and helping to open the suitcase, Kenny blushed and explained, "They didn't have nightmares Friday night or last night. Let's leave it alone until we need to talk to them about it. For at least a few nights, I'm sure I'll be sleeping in their room."

Taking the packages of white briefs from the suitcase and heading to the dresser, Jerry asked, "How do you feel about everything that's happening?"

Kenny sighed long and hard, then shared, "You and dad have been great since we met. I think the two men that helped us get out of New York City were a gay couple. Shaun and Mike made you and dad our fathers at Des Moines. Neither of you seemed the least bit bothered, but I have to wonder if you were bothered."

"Nope," Jerry quickly answered. "We were made Core Rimmers during dinner, about an hour before going to Des Moines. We knew we could adopt, but we really weren't thinking of adopting quite so fast. You, Mike and Shaun changed our minds. For you three, we want to be dads. It was automatic, kind of like how you're automatically their big bro. Until Friday night, my happiest day was the previous Friday, when I was rescued from bad foster parents. That was made even better when I arrived at a house and found Arnie there. I felt the same chills yesterday, when Prez announced the adoptions official. I really am very happy with all three of you, and our new family. Arnie's just as happy, Kenny."

Kenny smiled and wiped his eyes, softly admitting, "I thought we were really screwed when my parents didn't come home. I thought we'd never have a good place to live, or good parents again."

Seeing his boy struggling to be a grown man, Jerry turned and closed the door. He then went to Kenny and wrapped his arms around him. Burying his face in his new pop's belly, Kenny held on tightly to Jerry and sobbed. With tears welling in his eyes, Jerry promised, "We'll be the best parents we can be, I promise. Tell us what you need, Kenny. Whatever it takes, we'll make it happen. We're a family now. You're the big bro that needs to speak for your two little bros. We're the dads who will answer all the questions."

With his mouth mostly covered by Jerry's shirt, Kenny cried, "Why did my folks die? Why did Leo's folks die? Why did so many die Friday? Why... why did we get so lucky to find new parents the very same day? How can anything be so wrong and feel so right at the same time?" Kenny looked up for an answer. Instead, he found tears pouring down Jerry's cheeks. Kenny sniffled, and then wondered, "Why are you crying?"

Jerry shrugged, "I'm sad because you are, and because I don't have many answers to give you. I'll do my best to get the answers though. We'll find out what happened to your parents. The first chance I get, I'll talk to Prez and Keith. Arnie and I are here for you and your brothers, whenever you need us. Even tomorrow, when we're at school, we're still just a comm-badge tap away. We'll be a real family, I swear we will."

Nodding, Kenny wiped his eyes. He forced a small smile then said, "We are already, pop. I know I could call you by your name, but I really don't want to. I want you and dad, just like Shaun and Mike. This is our home. I want to come back here later. More than ever, I want to make something bad turn into something good. After spending the day at the beach house yesterday, I know that can happen, with you and dad and my brothers."

Jerry widely smiled, "My big boy was forced to be a young man way before his time. From the moment we met, I saw you trying so hard to be a man for your brothers. You need to return to being only a brother again, just like you were yesterday, Ken. Watching you yesterday, I was so proud of you so many times. I'm more proud now, having my little man tell me what he needs and wants, for himself and for his brothers. We'll make this the very best family ever, I promise."

Matching his pop's smile, Kenny nodded, "I know it. Thanks for listening, pop." He stepped back and returned to unpacking his suitcase. Picking up packages of socks, Kenny smirked, "Will I ever get to wear these?"

Jerry chuckled, "December and January are usually pretty rainy and cool. When we picked out sneakers, you said that you liked to play basketball. Anytime you're wearing sneakers you'll need socks."

Ripping open the package, Kenny put the new socks in his dresser drawer, softly muttering, "I wonder if Leo or any of my cousins shoot hoops?"

Taking a pair of jeans to hang in the closet, Jerry shrugged, "What's the deal with Leo?"

Kenny giggled, "He's really nice; a new friend who seems to like me too."

"That's a good beginning," Jerry offered. "That's where your dad and I were."

Before Jerry finished his sentence, the door flew open and Mike ran in giggling, "Shaun took a crap and there wasn't toilet paper! His whole world almost ended!" Jerry sputtered and uncontrollably cracked up.

Kenny huffed then smirked, "Me and pop were talkin', but did you knock, Mike?"

Mike scowled and whined, "Don't start that again, Kenny! We was all nekkid yesterday. We're all boys in this house now!"

Picking up his middle son, Jerry chortled, "Kenny's a big boy and there's a price to be paid for not knocking, ya know." Jerry began tickling Mike, and Kenny hurried over to get in his licks too. Loudly squealing, Mike promised to remember to knock on closed bedroom doors.

Walking into the room, carrying Shaun on his hip, AJ grinned and loudly announced, "I had Alden get us some basics in this house, including Oreo's and milk, if anyone's interested." In a flash, Kenny was out of his bedroom and stampeding down the stairs.

"NO-OO-OO!" Shaun screamed, "Kenny's gonna eat up all da cookies, daddy!"

"He's gotta find them first," AJ laughed, and hurried downstairs.

Following with Mike, Jerry sniggered, "I assume we have toilet paper too now?"

Hiding his face on AJ's shoulder, Shaun giggled, "It's plain white."

Mike grinned, "Our mommy used to get toilet paper that was pink with flowers. It drove daddy nuts!"

AJ cracked up. Jerry chuckled, "Alden, do we have glasses for milk with our cookies?"

From the ceiling speakers, Alden giggled, "In the kitchen cupboards there are glasses, plates, silverware, pots and pans. All that stuff was already here, Jerry. I provided the food, drinks, and other household necessities, like plain white toilet paper."

Coming down the final steps into the living room, AJ, Jerry, Mike and Shaun saw their new living room, complete with a large sectional sofa, two recliners, end tables, lamps, a large sixty-inch wall mounted television and the Bose surround sound system. To their left, they saw the large oak dining table, eight chairs, and three bar stools at the breakfast counter. They went into the kitchen, where Kenny had climbed up onto the counters to search the cupboards for the Oreo cookies. Seeing his dad, pop and brothers, Kenny gushed, "This place is so kewl! Our old kitchen was painted yellow and had more flowery wallpaper. This is painted white, with no girly flowers. I think the countertops are real granite too." Locking eyes with Jerry, he wondered, "Did you ask for a place like this, pop?"

Shaking his head, Jerry smiled, "I can only assume all the townhomes have the same sort of stuff." He sat Mike down on the counter then tapped his comm-badge, calling, "Jerry to Kaleo."

"Here, bro," Kaleo replied. Deciding to imitate Kenny, Mike stood up on the counter, almost giving Jerry his first parental heart-attack.

Following his middle son from the floor, so he could react if needed, Jerry asked, "Have you been to your townhouse yet?"

"We just got here," Kaleo sniggered.

Tory laughed, "Is this place friggin' awesome or what?"

Jerry chuckled, "Yeah, that's why I called. We've got everything here, dudes. There's a really large fridge, stove and microwave in the kitchen. Kenny took glasses out that are a light frosty green color..."

"They match the plates too, pop," Kenny giggled, and opened another cupboard to show the rest of the family a plate that was mostly white with light frosty green around the edge.

Kaleo said, "Our glasses and plates are a powder blue color."

Pouring glasses of milk for the three boys, AJ wondered, "Which townhouse did you take?"

"The end unit, number one," Tory answered.

Kaleo asked, "Do you have a big black leather sectional sofa in your living room?"

"Ours is brown leather," Jerry answered, "and we've got a killer entertainment center. The TV looks the same as the one in the Hundserts' basement and in the dorm common room."

"Yep, that's what we've got too," Kaleo happily chortled.

"Upstairs, we've got a king sized bed," AJ shared.

"OH, PLEASE GOD!" Tory hollered.

Kaleo sniggered, "We haven't even been upstairs yet, but Tory just went up to check it out."

Putting the package of Oreos down on the counter and opening it, Jerry laughed, "Somebody fucked up, big time, bro. Don't they know we're orphans? We would've been happy with simple stuff, but this is just like the stuff at the beach house."

AJ giggled, "If we didn't have other stuff to do, I'd stay here with my new family all day and into the night."

Across Jerry's comm-badge, everyone heard Tory enthusiastically singing, "Kaleo, get your sexy brown ass up here, before I faint!" Jerry, AJ and all three of their boys cracked up.

Kaleo chortled, "I'll talk with you in a bit, guys. Kaleo out."

Taking a cookie from the package, Jerry shrugged, "It sounds like all the townhouses are basically the same."

Around the partially chewed Oreo in his mouth, AJ mumbled, "I guess we might've known. Our dorm rooms were awesome. A townhouse for three times as many is three times more awesome."

Shaun giggled, "We got a big boy's dresser an' beds, jus' like Kenny!"

Splitting his Oreo cookie, Jerry started licking the sweet creamy filling. AJ coughed and began giggling at his partner's provocative show. Glancing around and seeing his pop and dad being goofy, Kenny softly sniggered, "After our snack, I think dad and pop need some alone time, bros." His two younger brothers giggled and nodded.

* * * * *

Meanwhile, over at dorm one, Prez, Keith, Mike and Derrick had finished wandering around the first floor. Seeing their leaders in the hall, some of the boys came out of their rooms and reported that the Internet was returning to normal. In the common room, Makan Kama was painting and a small gathering of younger boys were watching television. The Core Rimmers then went upstairs to check on the girls. The only big difference between the first floor and the second floor was that the boys generally kept their dorm room doors open. Only a few of the doors upstairs were open, but a large gathering of girls were in the common room watching TV. Some had their laptop computers with them. A few were updating their personal web pages, while others were just browsing the various pages to see what the other Clan bases looked like and what kids were listed there.

Not seeing Melonie Correro around, Prez wondered where she was. Twelve-year-old Leia Iona answered, "She went with Sonia, Horacio and the other dorm leaders, Prez." Speechless, Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike glanced at one another.

Noticing that the Core Rimmers were flabbergasted, Lani Keawe smiled, "Don't worry, dudes. Sonia is Melonie's roommate. We all know she's fine and won't try to hurt herself again, like last week."

"The boys here proved that she's safe," Ipo 'aukai explained. "Melonie's just not sure what she wants now, long term. Since men have hurt her so badly, she's not sure if she can hook up with a boy. As much as Sonia and Doc Wiener have helped, watching Horacio with Sonia has helped Melonie too. If I were inclined, Horacio's exactly the type of boy I'd want to be with." Softly giggling, Lani leaned over and kissed Ipo on the mouth, making Ipo's statements perfectly clear. Once again, four gay Core Rimmers were dumbstruck. Noticing their expressions, Ipo smiled, "What did you want us to do, dudes; tell you we're lesbians?"

Shaking his head, Prez grinned, "Bluntly telling me or any of us isn't necessary, Ipo. I'd just like it if everyone felt comfy about who they are and the partner they've chosen. You've all seen us kissing our partners. I hope you don't think you have to hide your feelings."

"We don't," Ipo and Lani chimed.

Ipo explained, "Maybe some other couple would kiss in public, but it's not our way. It's like many of the boys have no problem showing off around the pools. Boys do things that way, very blunt and direct. On the other side of the fence, some girls might want to be almost as direct, but we choose to be a little more discreet."

Understandingly, Keith nodded and smiled, "Tell the other girls, no matter what their sexuality, that we don't expect anyone to feel like they have to hide anything. We've never been closeted and sure don't expect anyone else to feel like they have to be."

Disjointedly, all the girls in the second floor common room agreed to tell the other girls. The Core Rimmers waved and left the girls in the common room. The shorter hallway of the second floor seemed to be deserted. Heading downstairs, Mike chuckled, "So Prez, you're suddenly into muff divers?"

Prez sniggered, "Keith and I were eight and you had just turned nine the first time we sucked dick. I'm very happy with my sexuality and sex life, and I think we all made that abundantly clear yesterday."

"This is their home," Keith reminded. "They should feel as comfortable as we are showing a little affection."

Derrick admitted, "I was only stunned. I guess it's just as well I was shocked in a small group, rather than in the dining room, where everyone could see me chasing my eyeballs around the floor."

Mike hummed then said, "I guess we should've guessed that girls were hooking up, since everybody else seems to be, including our sons." Reaching the first floor landing, he held open the door for his friends, saying, "I'm completely thrilled with Jonah and Ben. All I'd like to know is why nobody said a word about Gage liking Jonah."

Roughly pulling Mike by the arm away from the door, Keith sniggered, "Hey bro, my kid's got the hots for your kid." Prez and Derrick cracked up.

"That's great," Mike giggled, "better late than never. I guess the next question is, should we talk to any of them about it?"

"Only if they want to talk," Prez easily answered.

Derrick nodded, "They're building the friendships now. When they're ready to take the first sexual steps, they'll figure it all out, just like we did. All it took was each of us giving a damn during every first step. Caring for each other is all it takes, slow progress, orally and anally."

The four Core Rimmers walked into dormitory two. Again, many doors were left open. In room number three, Hugh Gartrell sat at his desk before his laptop computer. Knocking on the door frame, Prez checked, "How's it goin', Hugh?"

"Good, Prez," Hugh answered before even turning around. When he did turn and saw the other three Rimmers with Prez, he got up and smiled, "Kelly and me would like to get a water fountain for our room. Is that kewl?"

Prez blinked, "I'm not sure what you're referring to."

"It's like a sculpture that you fill with water and it trickles down through a little pump," Hugh explained. He then chuckled, "We went to hang out at the diving well last night and Wednesday night. The sound of the pool filters had us yawning up a storm, so we came back here, put the TV on and we were out cold in minutes." He then waved the four Rimmers into his room and showed them what he was considering on his laptop at Nile-dot-com. "This is a pretty big model," Hugh offered, "but it's the one me and Kelly like the most. It would be a night-light as well as soothing water bubbling over little rocks."

All four Rimmers nodded and Derrick smiled, "Very kewl. If that's what you dudes want, go for it."

Keith wondered, "Where's Kelly?"

"He went with Horacio and Sonia," Hugh replied.

Prez wondered, "Why didn't you go too?"

Hugh shrugged, "I didn't feel like it. Since I got here, every day's been kind o' busy, so I decided to chill."

Mike confirmed, "Everything else is good?"

Hugh nodded, "Really good. What's most awesome is not having to sell my ass to eat. Now I can choose, and there are so many really cute guys and girls to choose from, I can't make up my mind." All four Rimmers and Hugh chuckled.

Derrick smiled, "There are ninety-five newbies arriving after lunch."

Hugh wondered, "How many are teenagers?"

"Probably about a third of 'em," Mike answered.

Keith recalled, "You're bi, right?"

"On the streets, I had to be to make the bucks," Hugh replied. "The only good part of that whole two years was realizing it ain't dick or tits that make the person. I'll go either way to have a real relationship, like you dudes have."

Prez checked, "That's not happening with Kelly?"

Shaking his head, Hugh grinned, "Similar pasts is what makes us kewl roommates, but friends is where we want to be. We'd both like something more than memories of our time on the street."

"Understandable," Derrick softly said.

Keith assured, "The right person will make themselves known, Hugh."

"Soon, I hope," Hugh cheekily grinned, "like before I have to ask for a new mattress, because I've drilled a hole in this one." The Rimmers cracked up and left Hugh to his online shopping.

A few doors down, twelve-year-old roommates Jeff Cummings and Thomas Cork were sitting cross-legged on the floor playing a video game in room nine. Keith checked on the boys. All they wanted was another week off before school started. Since they were level one orphans that just arrived on Thursday, Prez told them they could choose to take the time to adjust or decide to go to school.

In the common room was another gathering of boys, mostly ex-Latin King kids between five- and twelve-years-old. Two were playing checkers and most of the others were watching TV cartoons. Tommy Cork had followed the Core Rimmers, and began tinkering at the piano. Since the boy was interested, Keith spent a few extra minutes teaching Tommy some simple exercises.

The remainder of dormitory two visits were uneventful, inasmuch as the kids were glad to see their leaders, but didn't have much to say or share. Since dorm three was mostly boys rescued from the Battle Of Earth, who were still in a meeting with Doc Wiener, Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike skipped that building and went to dormitory four to visit the UNIT base and personal security. There they found AJ's, Jerry's, Kaleo's and Tory's personal security teams preparing to move to Oneula Beach.

When they walked back outside again, the dreary cloud cover over the South side of Oahu was burning off and the sun was shining through. Judy Faris approached the four leaders, pleasantly beaming, "You made me a grandmother exactly one week after arriving, and I couldn't be happier." The boys started chuckling and giggling. Judy smiled, "Of course, it also means the family has grown such that I told Troy it was time to get a place of his own."

Approaching from behind Prez, Keith, Mike and Derrick, Troy loudly laughed, "In other words, she's kicking me out on my ass, Prez."

"No," Judy giggled, "it means one middle aged grandmother in a two bedroom flat with her son, son-in-law and their four sons is a bit too much. Besides, with you out of the way, I can concentrate on several very available adult men here, and perhaps rebuild another family by adopting some adorable children of my own." Troy smirked and rolled his eyes. The other five Core Rimmers cracked up.

Troy groused, "Thank goodness you said that you're adopting."

"My biological clock is winding down, but not dead yet," Judy teased. Troy's jaw dropped. Again, five Core Rimmers roared laughing.

Rolling his eyes, Troy waited for Sean and the other four teammates to slowly soften to mere chortling. Locking eyes with Prez, Troy grinned, "I know you want us all together, but since that's not reasonable, I thought we'd take a townhouse at Oneula, saving our boys from grandma's bad influence."

Judy giggled, "I could say so many things, but Tiger and Lover would implode, leaving us with two fewer leaders, so I'll leave it alone, for now." Wondering what they had said or done that Judy heard or saw, Sean and Troy flushed scarlet red.

Keith chuckled, "Six leaders at the other base would be awesome, dudes."

"We just told our personal security to pack and move over there too," Sean shared.

Tapping his comm-badge, Prez called Donnie Williams, simply to insure that the Oneula Beach base security would be available by evening. Donnie replied, "So you're aware, your base security forces will become Clan Security, effective immediately. After this weekend's insanity, JJ, Seth and I agreed that Special Forces is the military, and JJ leads Clan Security. Going forward, when the other three bases are ready to be occupied, contact Clan HQ and they'll allocate resources for you. Your Clan Security are moving over to Oneula Beach now, Prez."

Judy interjected, "Chefs, housekeeping and lawn care were told yesterday to be there today."

"Excellent!" Prez cheered, "You guys make my life so easy. Thank you."

Donnie asked, "What's the expected population, Prez?"

"Right off the bat, ninety-five newbie kids, six Core Rimmers, their thirteen sons, another twenty adult staff, some of which have kids, and the fifty base security, so about one-hundred-ninety," Prez answered.

"They're your fifty security, Prez," Donnie teased. "Seth or JJ will take over only when something's wrong that you need to report. Otherwise, they report to you and the Core Rimmers. I hope to visit you guys later today. Donnie out."

Prez groaned, "I guess I need to put someone in charge at Oneula too then."

Scowling, Keith wondered, "Why, baby? That only muddies the waters."

Sean softly offered, "Kaleo's most familiar with everything, but Troy doesn't have the same pasts that the rest of us have. I'd immediately defer any big decisions to them, unless it was big enough to ask you about, Prez."

"Then that's the way it'll be," Prez smiled. He checked with Sean and Troy, asking, "You've still got some time to get your move started, if you want?"

Troy nodded, "Yeah, we might as well."

Sean reminded Troy, "There's only a few things of mine still in my dorm room. Most of my stuff has already moved, so let's start at the condo."

Sean and Troy started for the condominium. Judy smiled, "I want to meet my grandsons during lunch."

"Yeah, so you can tell them the same stories you told Sean," Troy snickered. "That'll be real near the top of my list, ma."

Waving her hand and fingers, Judy giggled, "I'll see you boys later. There's still laundry to move around."

"See ya later," the four remaining Rimmers chanted.

"Dad!" Leo yelled, "My iPod's workin' again already!"

Corey loudly laughed, "What's that, Leo? They didn't hear you at Maui." Geoff and Lenny cracked up.

Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike turned slightly to watch Drew's and Corey's family approaching. Leo had ear-buds in and a wire leading down into his shorts pocket.

Grinning at Leo, Drew sniggered, "That's one feature to tell Uncle Steve about."

Keith blinked, "Which Uncle Steve is this?"

"Steve Jobs," Drew answered, "one of the Orlando dudes is related to the CEO of Apple Computers."

Corey explained, "The iPod Nano that Leo came here with needed a charger, so Drew got one from Alden. It's a recently developed kinetic charger that Leo's testing for Uncle Steve and Apple. In the walk from your parents' house to here, barely two minutes, and it's already working."

Going over to his new nephew, Keith slid in close, and pulled one of Leo's ear-buds. Keith put it to his own ear and sang along;

I don't care who you are

Where you're from

What you did

As long as you love me

Who you are

Where you're from

Don't care what you did

As long as you love me

Every little thing that you have said and done
Feels like it's deep within me
Doesn't really matter if you're on the run
It seems like we're meant to be

At the next chorus, Derrick, Mike and Prez danced, clapped their hands and snapped their fingers in time, and sang backup vocals for Keith.

I don't care who you are (who you are)
Where you're from (where you're from)
What you did
As long as you love me (I don't know)
Who you are (who you are)
Where you're from (where you're from)
Don't care what you did
As long as you love me (yeah)

I've tried to hide it so that no one knows
But I guess it shows
When you look into my eyes

What you did and where you're comin' from

I don't care, as long as you love me, baby

Leo giggled, "You dudes know and play Backstreet too?"

Lenny nodded, "The very first night, right after we was rescued, their band played at a luau, and that was one of the songs."

Corey told Leo, "That night and before, the band's name was Old Habits. Now they're Platinum Habits. They can play about two-hundred and fifty of the best hits from the past forty years."

"Some stuff wasn't exactly a big hit," Mike offered, "but we play it because it's challenging us, as musicians and as a band."

Prez grinned, "Right after our newbies show up, I think we'll hit the store, have a meeting in the auditorium, and then we'll jam for at least an hour."

Keith smirked. "We never went to any other store as often as we have this one since Monday. If we went to music stores this often, the entire Clan might go broke."

Doc Wiener, parents and kids walked out of dormitory three. All of them were heading towards the CIC. The rescued Battle Of Earth boys looked perfectly fine, the Core Rimmers noticed. Phil Nash pointed at Drew's family, and then he and his big brother Craig started jogging toward the Rimmers. Following along, Scott, Lance, Travis, Erik, Chris and Jay were softly chuckling. All eight boys hollered, "DREW!"

Slouching, Drew impatiently yelled, "WHA-AT?" All eight of the boys sped up to a full run, directly at Drew.

Before John had even stepped outside with his family, he playfully warned Drew, 'Better run, bro. Those dudes are hell bent on specifically thanking you for bringing them here. You're goin' swimmin'!'

Jogging away, down the path between the dorms and the CIC, Drew giggled, "It's not my fault! Blame the Romulans!" Knowing that he had little chance of escaping fifteen- and fourteen-year-old boys, Drew turned left and ran down the path between the dorms and the townhomes, toward the pools. The best Drew hoped for was making it to the diving well and jumping in, before he was captured and tossed in. Giggling, Corey, Leo, Lenny and Geoff followed after Drew.

Suddenly, more boys aged between eleven- and thirteen-years-old appeared on the path between dorms one and two. Most surprisingly, the Vulcan boy, twelve-year-old Vaziik was among the pack and as tall as any of the thirteen-year-old boys. Laughing his ass off, Drew turned up the juice and bolted for the pools.

Corey and the rest of the family followed the pack of older boys. Many meters ahead of the older set, the set of slightly younger boys were gaining ground on Drew. "Alden?" Drew laughed.

"No," Alden giggled.

"Please?" Drew begged.

"Nope," Alden giggled, "and by the way, I've decided to be thirteen, pubescent, and a Hawaiian version of you and your brothers. I might not have the longest dick amongst my brothers, but it definitely will be thickest and uncut."

Roaring hysterically, Drew could barely run. Moments later, so many pairs of hands had a hold on him that he couldn't even hit the ground and curl up to protect himself. In seconds, the original eight older boys were there too. Drew was ceremonially stripped and lifted high up off the ground, with Vaziik, Fred and Chauncey Eckhart underneath Drew, holding up his back and buns. The Vulcan boy was the quietest of the lot, but one of the strongest, and anyone watching would've seen him wearing an expression of satisfaction.

During the remaining steps to his watery retribution, Drew giggled, "Why me? Why not John, Stephen or Corey?"

"Because you're kewler," Travis sniggered.

"All three of them look up to you," Scott Shetley chuckled.

Craig reminded, "How many other twelve-year-olds don't piss their pants when fifteen-year-olds scream at them? Not too many."

"All you did was spin around and yell back," Phil giggled.

Jay playfully shared, "Not to mention, you drop your drawers pretty darn fast for a shy gay boy." Hearing that, Corey, Leo, Lenny and Geoff cracked up.

Chris chortled, "Given what we've seen so far, in another five or six years, when you're done growing, you could easily be the sexiest Core Rimmer of the lot, assuming you're not all turtled up from being tossed in pools."

Arriving at the diving well, Craig instructed, "No swinging, dudes. On the count of three, toss him."

All twelve boys counted together. "One... two... three!" and hurled Drew over the center of the diving well. Before Drew hit the water, Alden got in a lick too by transporting his friend and co-creator ten meters up in the air and re-materializing him there.

Quickly curling up before having the belly flop of the millennium, Drew loudly laughed, "ALDEN!" Over the pool-side loudspeakers, Alden laughed along with all the other boys as Drew dropped and hit the water.

When Drew rose to the surface, the pack of Battle of Earth boys rounded on Corey, Leo, Lenny and Geoff. Since none of the later four knew it was coming, it was far easier to catch, strip, lift and toss them. The only excuse given was that they were Drew's family and therefore equally cute and worthy of being dunked.

Materializing before Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike, Donnie Williams transported onto base with another teenager and two men. Donnie and the other teenager were wearing dress greens and the other two men were wearing Navy dress whites. Smiling widely at the unannounced visitors, Prez chortled, "Alden, we're under-dressed for some occasion here. Get the four of us into our Starfleet uniforms." The four Core Rimmers phased out and back again. Three of the four, Derrick, Keith and Mike were wearing commander insignias on their shoulder lapels. Wearing Admiral's insignia on his lapels, Prez suddenly found himself being saluted by his three friends, Donnie and the other three. "Knock it off," Prez giggled, and then sloppily returned the salute.

Donnie helplessly chuckled, "Director Preston Albert O'Brian, please meet Colonel Cody Wilkins, Petty Officer Third Class Radcliff Conklin and Seaman Gilbert Hoover. The latter two men were aboard the U.S.S. Nicholson Thursday night, and were part of the task force that intercepted the Romulan Warbird destined for San Francisco."

Reaching forward to shake hands with both men, Prez smiled, "I skimmed through the report; awesome job, dudes. Call me Prez."

"As soon as you get out of that penguin outfit, Admiral," the Petty Officer chuckled, and shook Prez's hand, adding, "Call me Rad."

The Seaman shook Prez's hand and grinned, "Call me Gil, Admiral."

Prez sniggered, "What I'm trying to figure out is how three Lieutenants became Commanders, Alden."

Across their comm-badges, Alden giggled, "It just happened minutes ago. It's on your PADD, that you rarely keep with you. Cory Short had some time to get caught up on paperwork. For the California Orphanage operations and the Hyatt Rescues, Keith, Mike and Derrick were promoted two ranks. You went from Rear Admiral lower half, with one star, to Rear Admiral upper half, with two stars. Cory was considering creating a new award just for you, Prez. He had second thoughts about having any Rimmer wearing a Purple Tush though, so you got a plain ol' Purple Heart."

Nudging and shoving Prez for his heroism, Derrick, Keith and Mike helplessly roared laughing. Donnie explained to the Rimmers that Rad and Gil chose to work for the Clan instead of the UNIT, so both men now reported to Prez.

Alden giggled, "Just a warning, Prez; watch your coconuts and watermelons for holes!" Gil fiercely blushed. Holding his lover close, Rad explained the AI's remark, assuring that since Friday morning, fruits were no longer on his list of favorite partners. All eight in the group busted a gut laughing.

In the light-hearted mood everyone was already in, Donnie dropped a bomb, grinning, "Emily is pregnant." Before Donnie could say another word, all four Rimmers enthusiastically congratulated Donnie on becoming a daddy. Bolstered by the well wishes, Donnie smiled, "I'm stepping down to give my family all the attention they deserve. Going forward, Colonel Wilkins will be taking my place." Donnie turned to his replacement for him to continue.

"We're hoping to have the turnover complete this week," Colonel Wilkins explained. "My wish is to keep everyone doing their jobs exactly as they had been under General Williams. The same sort of friendly interface between Family Clan Short and Clan Short Special Forces will also continue. Part of my days will be spent here, mostly to observe, but partially so we can get to know one another, thus keeping things informal until they absolutely need to be formal."

"You'll regret that," Alden giggled. "Should I order the Valium now, Admiral Blister-butt?"

"Remember he's a Rear Admiral... it figures!" Mike laughed.

Prez evilly grinned, "As long as my pissed off chickens keep laying explosive eggs, and the gardens of Maui keep blooming primo herb, I won't need Valium. You might though, Alden. Your first day with a body, after you climb out of the diving well, you're spending with Grandma Morrison." Prez then shook Cody's hand, asking, "Turn over starts when, Cody?"

"Donnie's left that up to me," Cody answered. "I think I should jump in with both feet and start right away, with Donnie acting as my advisor. Right now works for me."

"Kewl," Prez smiled.

Keith stepped forward to shake hands and asked, "Do you have a partner, Cody?"

Nodding, Cody shared, "His name is Sheldon Lloyd."

When Mike took his turn to shake hands with Cody, he warmly invited, "I hope we'll be seeing each other a lot. The past week has been insane."

Derrick took his turn to meet the new R.R.B. Commander, adding, "We've only seen Donnie on TV monitors since last Saturday. Bring Sheldon along with you any time you're visiting."

"Thank you," Cody sincerely gushed, "I'll do that."

While the Hundser-Seaver family were climbing out of the diving well, drying off and getting dressed, Prez, Keith, Mike and Derrick were wrapping up with Donnie, Cody, Rad and Gil. The two enlisted naval men wanted to continue their education and didn't feel ready to accept officer ranks. Prez promoted both men to Chief Warrant Officer. Considering themselves a life-long couple after two days together, Rad and Gil chose to move into a two-bedroom condo. Donnie and Cody returned to the Rapid Response Base to continue the turnover process.

The four Core Rimmers entered the CIC. Many of the kids had already arrived, but the four Core Rimmers saw their teacher, Ms. Diaz, sitting at a table and having lunch with her husband, daughter and son. To greet and welcome their teacher and her family, all four immediately went to them.

Ms. Diaz and her husband started to stand, but Prez immediately begged, "Please sit. Y'all are eating. We just wanted to say hi, and meet your family."

Mr. and Mrs. Diaz returned to their chairs. Laxmi Diaz introduced her husband, Eugene Diaz, her teenaged son, Angelo, and younger daughter, Cecelia, to the four ex-students who were now Clan Short leaders. Ms. Diaz explained that her husband would finish his dental surgery internship in December then start his practice on base. Office space had already been allocated for him at each base's FYS Building. Eugene had been considering specializing in pediatric dental surgery, but was struggling with a decision that would limit his income. Circumstances worked in his favor as well. The prior day, the family had started to move into the townhouse beside the Taylors'. They had been finishing that process during the morning. During the afternoon, while her family unpacked, Ms. Diaz, Mr. Taylor and Mrs. Taylor would be meeting Mr. T and taking a class for special education, concentrating on the needs of Clan kids who had been abused by adults.

Across the room, John was introducing his family to the family of Roy Combs, who were also moving in that day, Roy would become the Pacific Rim Divisions' new Facilities Coordinator. His wife, Monica, would become an additional chef, with prior experience working in bakeries making breads and various desserts. Their children were thirteen-year-old Reginald, who preferred the nickname 'Reggie', and ten-year-old Cameron. Naturally, John was sharing all the introductions telepathically with the other Core Rimmers who weren't yet in the dining room. John also shared one additional tid-bit of information, telling his brothers and teammates, 'Angelo and Reggie have already seen each other entering and exiting their new townhomes. Although neither considered himself gay, attraction is a small word for what these two already feel and think for one another. Once they meet and get together, each of 'em is strongly considering tearing the clothes off the other.'

Prez and that group already noticed Angelo's medium frame, wavy, dark brown hair and beautiful brown eyes. As far as they were concerned, Angelo was a fitting name for the angelic boy at the table. John's family and Prez's group swapped places to meet the other new family, by which time Drew's family was entering the dining room with the bulk of the rescued Battle Of Earth boys. During small talk at the Combs' table, Prez, Keith, Mike and Derrick took note of Reggie's slightly larger frame, dirty blond hair and blue eyes. Interestingly, Reggie seemed quieter and more reserved than Angelo, who was a bit more willing to converse, but was still a new boy in a new place.

The dining room and chow line had filled while the various Core Rimmer couples made the rounds, visiting newbies and making them all feel welcome. Erik Kendricks and Travis McAuley were at a small table alone, way over by the rec room and Shirley's cage. Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike were roaming around tables of teenagers, including Chris Stokley, Jay Montigua, Lance Kinchen, Scott Shetley, Craig and Phil Nash. John and Stephen went with their sons to where Jimmy Matos, Taron Reyce Otter, the Hiram and the Stoeher twins were sitting. Jason Taylor approached Prez. As soon as he was able, Jason grinned, "Our family needs your assistance at your earliest convenience."

Concerned that something was wrong, Prez quickly asked, "What can I do to help?"

"Two things," Jason smiled, "We'd like to adopt Robbie's three brothers, and Richie's foster brothers, Carrol and Terrance, and with their addition, suddenly our big, beautiful townhouse isn't large enough for our family."

Derrick, Mike and Keith softly chortled. Prez laughed, "You've been here three days! Are you related to the Short family, by any chance?" While other nearby kids and Core Rimmers laughed, Prez called, "Alden, get my tricorder, and please assist the Taylors with their move from a townhouse here to a single family home at Oneula Beach."

Over the Head Rimmer's comm-badge, Alden giggled, "Got it covered, Prez," and the tricorder appeared, hanging off Prez's neck. Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike followed Jason back to the table where his family were sitting. At the same time, a dimensional door chime went off. Ronnie, Garrett, Adam, Mark, Brian and Jeff walked through the door from Des Moines, specifically to be present for the adoption. All six hurried across the room toward Jason and Prez.

Nearing the table and locking eyes with Trinity, Prez playfully sang, "Mrs. Taylor, I didn't even know you were pregnant, and now you've gone and made two more? The three additional copies of one weren't enough?"

Around the area, several kids giggled. Rafe Montigua shot soda out of his nose, loudly groaning, "Argh! Prez!" His brother Jay cracked up. Chuckling madly, Chris handed Rafe a handful of paper napkins to wipe his bubbling nose.

"Sorry about that, Rafe," Prez chuckled.

Trinity giggled, "Some things are unplanned. We started hearing yesterday that Richie would be happier with Carrol and Terrence here. With one of them wishing, we heard about it from all four. Adding two more would only make all of us happier."

Prez nodded and told the family, "The home you'll be moving into has one ground floor guest bedroom. Upstairs, all but one of the five bedrooms are huge. The smallest room is about sixteen square meters. It has one double-size bed. The master bedroom and master bathroom suite occupies about a third of the upstairs. The other three bedrooms are about four meters by five meters, so four could fit in one room, on two double-size beds. There are three bathrooms too, so whenever you want to, you could expand your family more. Beyond sixteen kids, we'll have to design a new home for you."

Over the comm-badges at the Taylor table, Alden giggled, "Well, Carl Seibert has prepared for that eventuality too. Each of the other bases will have at least one twenty-story condominium that has three penthouses consisting of two floors and twelve bedrooms. The new limit will then be twenty-four."

Noticing Jason Taylor's worried expression, the quadruplets giggled, "Don't look so nervous, dad. We can prob'ly manage with only twelve brothers for a month or two."

Adam cheered, "Grandma will be happy to hear this!"

Prez smiled, "By tonight, you'll have ninety-five newbies, and three Core Rimmer couples, and their sons, there at Oneula Beach too."

George's voice came over the speakers. "If the quads decide they want to contribute to the family fun, we've also got what's known as the 'Patriarch Special' which will house a small village or two!"

"Yeah, Timmy's got an entire Indian Camp in the courtyard!" Kerry added helpfully. "It's only five-hundred-ten-thousand square feet or so, not including the courtyard in the center. It's a cozy little castle!"

Beginning to slump, Jason withered into a chair, with his wife and family softly giggling at him. A holographic image of the Patriarch's home was displayed over the table.

"Can I visit the Indian Village? That looks fun!" Terrance asked Richie and Carrol, the puppy dog eyes already in gear.

"Sure you can," Prez replied, and then pointed at the dimensional doors, explaining, "You can go with any of your brothers to Orlando and visit Timmy. All you need is your mom's and dad's okay and a big bro with you, okay?"

"SWEET!" Terrence giggled.

Pulling over an unoccupied chair, Prez sat down near Terrence, asking, "Remember when I met you on Friday?"

"Uh huh," Terrence grunted, and shimmied over onto Prez's lap.

Holding him in place, Prez reminded the boy, "You told me then that Richie and Carrol were like your brothers and dads."

Terrence nodded, "Yep, I reme'ber."

Prez gently explained, "What I want to know is how you'll feel, deep inside, when you're adopted by Jason and Trinity? That makes you their youngest son. That makes them your mommy and daddy. That will also make Richie and Carrol your brothers, like Ronnie, Robbie and Ralphie, not your dads."

Terrence giggled, "Yep."

Richie gently prompted, "Tell Prez how you feel, Terrance."

Terrence hummed a moment then pointed at Jason, saying, "Daddy played catch with me and it was so much fun." He pointed at Trinity, saying, "Mommy put med'cine on my ouchies from Pat, and it didn't hurt." Dropping his hands, Terrence said, "Richie and Carrol did that stuff too, and they saved me from Pat, and they's a little bit more like big bros, I think. And ya know what?"

"What?" Prez asked.

Rapidly blinking, Terrence frowned, "I don't wanna be a Terry or a Terrence ever again, and I don't wanna be nothin' but a Taylor, like mommy, daddy and my brothers."

Prez asked, "What would you like your first name to be?"

"Trevor," the little six-year-old answered.

Pulling his tricorder over and getting it set up, Prez explained, "I'm going to call you by your old names two more times, to ask you if you want Jason and Trinity as your mommy and daddy, and then to ask if you want your name changed. All you have to do is answer into the machine, okay?"

"Kewl, Prez."

Prez asked, "Terrence Myers, do you want Jason Taylor and Trinity Taylor for your real mommy and daddy from now on?"

"Yep, I do."

"Do you also want your name changed from Terrance Myers to Trevor Taylor?"

"Yep, I don't like Terry or Terrence, and I don't like bein' a Myers either."

Looking up, Prez asked the adults if they wanted Trevor as their son. Holding hands, both affirmed it. From there, Carrol, Ralphie, Ronnie and Richie agreed to be Jason's and Trinity's sons and they all wanted their last names changed to Taylor. It was clear that five boys were very pleased, but Robbie was ecstatic, having all three of his blood brothers accept his parents, plus the two extras that made Richie very happy. When the task was complete and Prez announced it official, the entire dining room broke out in cheers and applause. Chuckling helplessly, Prez listed the double-twins, Keith Hundser, Mike Gibbons, Derrick Seibert and the majority of the Pacific Rim Clan as witnesses.

Mark giggled as he had a thought. "I think Grandma adopted your new parents, Trevor! That makes you a Morrison too!"

Adam nodded. "Yep; and all her grandkids get free rides on her Harley!"

Chuckling and sadly shaking his head, Prez got up, passed Trevor over to Carrol, and left the new family to explain to Trevor that a Harley is a motorcycle and that he couldn't go for rides until the family got moved to their new home.

Getting into the chow line to get lunch, Keith told Prez, "I was surprised you didn't wince when Trevor sat on your lap."

Shrugging, Prez grinned, "It's only bugging me around my waist, T'hy'la. That would be the case in a shower wrap too, so I'll stay dressed." He and Keith ordered grilled ham and cheese sandwiches and French fries for lunch.

Once served and returning to the dining room, Keith checked, "Greet the newbies and then get them to the store?"

"Yeah," Prez answered, "I thought it would be better to meet in the auditorium after that. Then we can chat and play a couple of tunes until dinner time. After dinner, we'll get them over to Oneula Beach. Those that want to move into dorms can, and the rest come back here to nest."

With his mouth full, John told his brothers, 'Me and Stephen and our boys can cover the nest, bros. Drew and Corey covered it two nights in a row.'

Passing John's table, Keith scowled, "That might be an awful lot of kids. If it is, we'll be there too."

Stephen shook his head, reminding, "That's an even better reason for your family to not be there. Besides, it gives our family a chance to check the newbie kids empathically and telepathically, so we know where they're at. After being in hospitals and those awful orphanages, I'd bet they're all a little freaked out."

Nodding, Prez offered, "Let us know if you change your minds."

Wade sent, 'Why'd we wanna do that, Unca Prez? The minds we got are fine.' John, Stephen and Frankie cracked up.

The Core Rimmers eyebrows raised, hearing Jeff and Brian in their heads. 'We're hanging to annoy... we mean help... our big quad bros get moved in. Yell if you need a hand with the newbies; we picked up a few tricks from Grandma.'

Putting his tray down at the table where Derrick, Mike, Reyes, Sean and Troy were sitting, Prez tapped his sub-vocal, calling, "Alden, my PADD, please?"

Alden privately replied, "Pissed Off Chickens?" and delivered Prez's PADD.

"After I shop for telepath proof hats," Prez sniggered. At one side of the dining room, eight boys giggled, and at John's table the laughter only got louder.

Over at condominium 'B' fourth floor apartment 'A', Rad and Gil got settled into their new home. Alden was called to stock the refrigerator and cupboards with food and household supplies. Rad also asked for a bottle of Dom Perignon champagne. The two young men toasted their good fortune and their new relationship. They took their glasses and the bottle of bubbly to their bedroom. In minutes, both young men were naked and rolling around their new bed.

While eating, Prez checked the housing situation at Oneula Beach from his PADD. As of that moment, two of the four single family homes were already occupied by employees with large families. With the three Core Rimmer families and two chefs' families already moved in to the townhouses, only one townhome remained unoccupied at Oneula Beach. It was now imperative that the condos get built quickly over there, so Prez messaged Derrick's dad and Roy Combs about it.

Via PADD, Carl Seibert replied,

No problem. Using Tech-bots and human construction employees, we'll have them built in three to five days, only accounting for possible rain and weather.

Prez grinned and messaged,

Take a telepath out of petty cash.

Moments later, Carl replied,

Thanks, but we've got four Steibs pending adoption already. Glance over and notice the McPhearson boys sitting with the Gibbons' family. Does after dinner sound good for both families' adoptions?

After replying affirmatively to Mr. Seibert, Prez showed Derrick his PADD. Beginning to chuckle, Derrick showed it to Mike. Sniggering, Mike passed the PADD back to Prez, and then asked Derrick, "We're moving permanently?"

Nodding, Derrick replied, "I guess we have to." He then tapped his sub-vocal, asking Alden to get the instruments moved out of the Gibbons' basement, and their kittens moved out of his parents basement, to their townhome's basement. Keith gave Alden a similar request, to have his keyboards and Prez's bass and guitar moved to their townhome's basement.

Tapping his comm-badge, Reyes called, "Paul?"

From South Carolina, Paul's voice replied, "Here, Reyes. What's up?"

"I just finished lunch," Reyes explained. "We'll have some new kids arriving anytime too. I was hoping you and Ryan could break away and keep me company this afternoon."

"We'll be there," Ryan cheerfully answered. "Give us a minute to change out of jeans and into shorts, Reyes."

Sounds of the brothers rapidly climbing stairs could be heard. Saying, "We're on our way," Paul then ended the communication.

A few tables away, more laughter broke loose. Gage was spoon feeding Jonah pudding. At the same table, Sammy was sharing an ice cream cone with Ben. To tease the older boys, Richie spoon fed Dillon and Dee spoon fed Randy. It was a sloppy process, but the boys were having fun.

Over the remaining fifteen minutes of lunch, Kaleo, Tory, Sean, Troy, AJ, Jerry and all their sons returned from the Oneula Beach base. The younger boys scattered to sit with their friends. The six Core Rimmers told their teammates that the move was complete. Alden even swapped around laptop computers, so they could keep the ones they were already using, and the now empty dorm rooms had new, unused laptops waiting for the new occupants.

Shifting his eyes mysteriously, Kaleo grinned, "The cartons of rubbers were transported to Sonia's and Melonie's room. The cartons of lube went to Horacio's room."

Once again, Jason Mullins and Kenny Hunnicutt were with Leo at the table with Drew's family. Gently and sincerely, Leo thanked both boys for that morning, and then told them that he liked them both very much, and that he was interested in someday having a boyfriend, but that day probably wouldn't be soon. Kenny and Jason both seemed very satisfied to be Leo's friend and that all three could easily remain friends.

The kids that had finished their lunches were making beelines out of the CIC for the playgrounds and pools. The families of the new employees left to complete their moves. The Core Rimmers' fathers also left with some of their children. By one o'clock, only the Core Rimmers, their sons, four mothers, the three doctors, Lindsay Gibbons, Nathan Hayes, and a few other kids that were either still eating or chatting with friends remained. Paul and Ryan transported into the dining room. Reyes stood to greet his friends with open arms. Once again sandwiched between them, all three shared hugs and kisses, causing Reyes to helplessly giggle at the method they were always greeting each other.

Chapter 16

Ewa Beach, CIC Dining Room

Sunday, November 7, 2004 1:01PM HTZ

With a warning from Alden over the ceiling speakers, California Level Two orphanage kids began transporting into the dining room. In rapid succession, kids from Sacramento, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Santa Barbara arrived; each carrying folders of medical records that were gathered by the three doctors. This time, all the kids were wearing either black or green Clan Short polo shirts. All the boys and the younger girls had boardies or shorts on, but a bunch of older girls were wearing skirts. All the kids were short and thin for their ages, but generally looking pretty good, compared to how they were last seen. Prez began introductions, and some of the newbie kids started giggling. Needless to say, all the Core Rimmers and their boys were stunned silent and grinned at the newbies.

An older boy that was holding three spiral bound notebooks, fifteen-year-old Neil Green from Sacramento, smirked, "We've been in hospitals for three-and-a-half days, with IVs running into our arms, and doctors and nurses fussing over us."

A teenage girl, Maggie Rogers from San Francisco, softly explained, "By the middle of Thursday, we were all wondering about you dudes, and where we would be eventually living."

Thirteen-year-old Conrad Bowers from Los Angeles, grinned, "We've been watching all of you on TVs. Kids named Alden, Kerry and George told us which were leaders, and showed us kids at playgrounds, pools, rec rooms, even this dining room, and what the dorms look like, inside and out."

Dennis Mitchell, a twelve-year-old from Santa Barbara, pointed at Core Rimmers, rattling off, "You're John Hundser, and you're Stephen Marr, and you're Drew Hundser, and Corey Seaver, you two are new leaders since Friday night, Arnold James, or AJ Smithson and Jerry Hebda."

Picking up where Dennis left off, fifteen-year-old Catherine Montgomery, listed, "Kaleo and Tory, Sean and Troy, Derrick, Mike and Reyes, Prez and Keith." Pausing and blushing, she giggled, "The only bummer out of this whole thing is that you're all gay." All the other teen girls began nodding and giggling.

"That's not too terrible a thing," Carter Rackham, a fourteen-year-old from Sacramento admitted. "I'm gay, and never could've admitted it before, but thanks to you dudes getting us out of the shit-holes, I've now got a kewl boyfriend." Standing beside Carter, Douglas Zimmerman reached for his new partner's hand.

Twelve-year-old Lynn Goodwyn, from San Francisco, glanced at the group of adults, saying, "We even know you. Aunt Lanna's the group mom, at pools and playgrounds most of the days. Aunt Jen is the head of Federation Youth Services, and Aunt Anna is the assistant. We even got to see inside the FYS building. We sort of know where things are, but just haven't done it ourselves."

Also from San Francisco, thirteen-year-old Dale Barrett said, "We're all set, dudes. I'm pretty sure most of us want to get to our new dorm rooms. Compared to where we were, those rooms look awesome. Now that we've got those damn IV needles out of our arms, we're ready for everything, starting new, better lives here. For us, being here at last, puts everything else in the past."

Since the newbies were done, Drew and Corey shouted at the ceiling; "Alden!"

"Yes?" Alden playfully sang.

Drew sniggered, "Four days of morning status reports and you never mentioned what you were doing?"

Alden giggled, "Um... I forgot?"

Corey laughed, "Is there anything else that slipped your mind?"

"Ask the newbies," Alden prompted.

A couple of kids chorused, "First we get clothes and stuff."

"Then we have a big meeting," another few chimed.

"And Platinum Habits puts on a concert for us," eleven-year-old Paul Brooks said, "like they did Thursday night."

Mike warned, "As soon as you get your body and can stand, start running, Alden. You're going swimming!"

Alden giggled, "But, why?"

Prez sniggered, "Why do I bother with morning status reports?"

"Or having PADDs, for that matter?" Keith added.

After a few seconds, Nathan giggled, "They're fishing for excuses."

Knowing Nathan could hear his brothers and all the Clan's AIs, John smirked, "And your excuse is?"

Shrugging, Nathan giggled, "I knew what they were doing, but not the extent. Obviously, these kids have been watching us from the security systems since they arrived at the hospitals."

"The next morning, just before lunch," giggled Shane Swanson, an eight-year-old from Los Angeles.

Pedro Fernandez, a nine-year-old from Sacramento, cheekily grinned, "The choice was between talk shows, news and game shows, or seeing who saved you and where you'd be living, so which would you choose? We only watched you on the TV's the last few days."

Widely smiling, Derrick glanced around the newbies, saying, "The first group of orphanage kids weren't like you. They stayed at hospitals over night and were here the next day."

Many kids nodded, "We saw that too."

Abruptly and uncharacteristically, Frankie squealed, "Not one of you want to nest? Why not?"

Since none of the older kids were answering, six-year-old Victor Dixon softly replied, "We was packed four to a tiny room. Some of us would nest, if you really want, but we'd rather have nice big rooms an' our own stuff, for the first time ever."

Nodding and grinning, John wandered around the group, telepathically checking the kids thoughts and empathically checking emotions. As surprised as anyone else, John told his core teammates, "It's true; each of them knows all of us already. Primarily, I'm feeling mostly anxiety; they've been looking forward to this day since they went to sleep Thursday night. They want to do what they've seen being done from our surveillance cameras." He faced the kids, reminding, "We're here for you. Say hello or something to Prez once in a while, or he'll only..."

"Play Pissed Off Chickens," many of the kids disjointedly giggled.

A few of the teenage girls laughed. Maggie teased, "You might be our leader, but stay out of the girls' changing room!"

"Okay," Prez chuckled, "you guys run the show. Whatever you really want is kewl with us." Gesturing at the mothers, Doc Howard and Lindsay, Prez prompted, "Girls gather around the ladies. They'll help you through the store." Twenty-four newbie girls crossed the room. Prez then said, "Guys, you're with us and our sons." Going to Paul and Ryan, Prez wrapped his arms over their shoulders, and smiled, "We've got two additional helpers today," and introduced the brothers from AI Division to the assembling group.

Dale Barrett smiled at Drew and shared, "We saw all you dudes in the store too, Thursday, Friday and Saturday. We heard the same thing at least three times; a week's worth of the basics."

Realizing that he had been watched while he tried on clothes Friday night, Leo slouched, covered his blushing face with both hands and softly giggled, "Omigod!" Quickly, Leo was embraced by his brothers. He also got a shoulder massage from Drew, and Corey joined his eldest son giggling.

The girls and ladies vanished from the dining room. With the remaining seventy-one boys gathered around the Core Rimmers, their sons and two helpers, Keith ordered, "Take us to the store, Alden," and the entire group relocated to the front of the basement store. Giggling level two boys scattered to get carts. That should've been a clue, but the Core Rimmers only laughed at the enthusiasm.

The five mothers, Doc Howard and Lindsay had a comparatively calm and easy time getting twenty-four girls through the store. On the other half of the store, pandemonium reigned as seventy-one boys tried to work their way through the various departments. They all tried to get at the shelves of underwear at once. And the same thing happened with socks. Loud laughter and giggling echoed through the store as boys tried to hurry, grabbing the things they needed and wanted, tossing them in carts, forgetting which cart belonged to who, and getting stuck in the traffic jam moving to the next department. The youngest got pajamas while some teens and tweens got bathrobes. Having seen Prez in his shower wrap, many teen boys asked for them and a pile was delivered by Alden.

Only to try and restore order, the Core Rimmers told the gathered mass of boys that little dudes had the right-of-way, then the tweens, and then the teens. For the most part it worked, but the sheer number of boys still kept the noise level high compared to the girls' side of the store. Already teaching some newbie girls, Lindsay pointed across the center aisle at the disorganized boys. John squinted and smirked at his life-long friend.

In the boys' side of the store, there were twenty-three teens, eighteen tweens, and thirty little guys nine-years-old and younger. Pouncing lessons began in the boys shoe department, when a few teens and tweens attempted to weasel their way in before all the little guys were finished. Little boys shouting, "BONZAI!" and grunting teens could be heard by the girls on the opposite side of the store. Teens learned quickly that their family jewels were at risk from pouncing little tikes. Many teen and tween boys decided to go back to the underwear department, looking for jocks and cups.

Giggling at the worried teens and tweens who found many jocks of assorted waist sizes, but no hard cups, Troy grabbed an empty cart and put his son, Jason, inside the cart. Sean watched his future husband start running and pushing the cart down the aisle. Then Troy jumped up on the cart's cross rail. Jason laughed, as much for his new pop's wicked snickering as for the expressions he was seeing on his dad and many of the other teen and tween boys watching from the boys underwear department.

Sean followed his Lover's lead, lifting and putting another of their sons, Scott, into another empty cart. In moments, teen and tweens were buddying-up to participate in the new sport of shopping cart aisle racing. Four carts could race down the center aisle at once, relatively safely, but there were a few cart bumps now and then. It was something that some of the kids hadn't done in years, since they were small enough to ride in the cart. For other boys, they had never done it at all. And it occupied a good half hour, to allow the youngest boys to move through the store.

Prez and Keith gathered Neil Green and Thaddeus Markell, and some little tikes to race down the aisle together. At the start line near the front of the store, Prez glanced over at Neil, smiling, "We know a little about you, Spitting Rimmer." Neil blushed and giggled. Tad roared laughing. Prez chuckled, "Your day will come, dudes. Know that you're being watched."

Keith chuckled, "Alden, you've got their tags ready?"

Alden giggled, "Of course," and two paper labels appeared on the front and back of Neil's and Tad's shirts. The patches read, "WARNING! Spitting Rimmer! Llamas can't aim!"

"I didn't spit on anyone," Tad giggled.

Shrugging, Keith grinned, "But you laughed your ass off when the nurse got goobered."

Prez told Neil, "You watched us, but we've heard plenty about you too, so it's all even." Abruptly, Prez gushed, "Ready, set, go!" and started the race before anyone was ready.

"CHEATER!" Neil laughed.

Keith sniggered, "Of course!"

"Of course," Tad giggled.

In an hour-and-a-half, the girls made it through the entire store first. At the checkout aisles, all twenty-four were issued comm-badges and soon transported out of the store with their suitcases. It took the girls a total of two hours. Since the boys simply couldn't be helped, Lindsay and the five women took the girls to the Oneula Beach base, to begin moving into dormitory one's second floor.

Across the store, little tikes were choosing jeans and sport shirts, tweens were gathering boardies, shorts, swimwear and T-shirts. The teens were finishing in the shoe department and waiting their turn to move forward. All the Core Rimmers and their sons were having fun, racing shopping carts up and down the aisle, meeting the new boys, but at the rate they were progressing, they'd never get to the meeting or concert; they'd be lucky to finish in the store by dinner time. Making matters worse, the departments the boys had already been in were a shambles. If Core Rimmers spent time reorganizing then they couldn't assist kids and they might be down there until bed time. Keith had to ask Alden to straighten up the mess.

The only thing the Core Rimmers could do was be proactive and assign dorm rooms to the boys. Getting out PADDs and working feverishly to discover who wanted to be roommates with whom, Rimmers assigned little guys closest to the lavatories, and then moving to tweens further out, and lastly the teens by entryways and the common rooms. All the boys had chosen their roommates at the hospitals based on existing friendships and sexual preferences. Only three of the youngest boys wanted to share a single room. Once dorm room assignments were near complete, the usual brotherhood and teamwork chats started. At the various hospitals, the boys had already heard much of the biological and sexuality chats. Again, this group was much more tuned in prior to arrival than their level one orphanage counterparts.

Boys began packing suitcases at the checkout aisles. Troy and Sean ordered the new comm-badges and passed them out. In pairs, boys and packed suitcases were transported directly to dorm rooms. John, Stephen and their two boys were the first Core Rimmer escorts for the newbies at the Oneula Beach dorm. Each pair of newbies transported to their dorm rooms with Rimmer sons. With the first group of tweens, Corey, Drew and their sons joined the Oneula Beach group. Minutes later, with the last of the tweens, AJ, Jerry and their three sons were there at Oneula's dormitory one.

Once alone with only teens, the remaining teenaged Core Rimmers went off on silly rants, wondering whose bright idea it was to try getting seventy-one boys through the store at once. They blamed the girls, Alden, the other AIs and each other. Threats of drum stick and electric guitar enemas at the first convenient opportunity were passed. Mike ordered a stock of various sized dildos for the boys' toiletries department, so the next time they could at least get their rocks off after four frigging hours; all of which drove the twenty-three newbie teen boys, and Paul and Ryan into hysterics.

At five-thirty in the afternoon, after the last of the teens had been shown their new rooms, the newbie boys were given a quick tour around the Oneula Beach base. The tour ended at the Oneula cafeteria. Everyone was led through the dimensional doors and back to the Ewa Beach dining room. Immediately upon arrival, the level two orphanage girls, who were already sitting at tables eating dinner, helplessly giggled at their orphanage brothers and mercilessly teased them. The girls had toured both Ewa Beach and Oneula Beach. They had played at playgrounds and gone swimming. They had started to meet the other boys and girls.

Nodding and smiling, Keith playfully countered, "There are three times more boys than girls. Since it took you two hours and it took us only four hours, either it should've taken us two more hours, or the girls still took too long."

John smirked, "Plus, each of the dudes got to spend that time with fifteen of us, and all twenty-four of our sons, and Paul and Ryan too. They know us and we know all seventy-one of them. We had almost as many helpers as there were girls to start with. Doing the math, that's a hundred-and-eighteen compared to thirty."

Derrick joked, "We're doing a panty-raid on an all girls orphanage soon. When there are a hundred girls on one side of the store, we'll let our moms deal and take a nap during those hours."

Anna Seibert and Laura Gibbons sang, "Sour grapes!"

Mike snarled, "Is that what's for dinner?" and then cheekily grinned, bouncing his eyebrows at his mom and mother-in-law.

Prez didn't participate in the banter, because he had noticed that every newbie girl had McCoy milkshakes before them. Some newbie teen girls had small plates of salad, or veggies, or bread too. It reminded Prez where these kids came from. As fresh, fun and normal as they were, it was all because of the days spent at the hospitals, and because they were happier. John's and Drew's families, and the Rimmer sons, led the newbie boys through the chow line. Near the CIC entrance doors, Prez purposefully held the other Core Rimmers back in a huddle to share his thoughts. They all noticed that the chefs had obviously been briefed by the doctors, because each newbie boy shuffling through the line got a McCoy milkshake and was then asked if he wanted something additional.

Kaleo softly reminded Prez, "Remember where we were a little over a week ago, at the luau and Anahola Bay?"

Nodding, Prez said, "Sure, almost every minute of it."

Realizing where his husband was going, Tory smiled, "Dinner at the luau, you got just as sad as you are now."

Sean shared, "If you ask me, that's the kind of stuff that made you our leader, Prez. You didn't know much about any of us, but you cared, very deeply."

"I wasn't at that table, but heard about it," Jerry grinned, "I have to agree with Kaleo, Sean and Tory. We can see it in your expression and eyes, Prez. You're losing your appetite just thinking about what they went through."

"Don't go there," AJ instructed. "Instead, consider how much you mean to this entire division. I'm standing here with you for only two reasons – Jerry was willing and you asked us to be Core Rimmers. It wasn't Keith, Kaleo, or any one else's request that mattered; it was yours."

Kaleo nodded and shared, "You made me a member of your team first; me, a boy-toy only a day earlier. Any kid here would gladly do almost anything you asked of them. You don't even realize that, do you?" When Prez shook his head, Kaleo chuckled, "All of the original eight Core Rimmers were almost unreal to us. Joel rescued us and he made you our leaders. After a week with you, and the week at Archmania, I still wonder what makes you dudes tick. Anytime I ask myself why you aren't stuck-up and superior, I only have to watch you to realize that you couldn't be that way if you tried. It would come off as a joke. Remember that stuff and eat dinner. These newbies are here and eating because of you, more than any of us."

Prez sighed, "I get it, but I can't help feeling what I do."

Reyes suggested, "Then eat at a table with some of them, Prez. Show them how much you care, by asking them what their medical instructions are. If you'll do that, we'll do it too." Paul and Ryan were stunned silent with Reyes, and with the Core Rimmers' interaction. Reyes held up both his hands for Paul and Ryan to take, clearly signaling that they would find a table to be together with some of the newbie kids.

Each of the other Core Rimmers chimed, "Me too." With a small grin and Prez's thanks, the huddle broke and they went to the kitchen for their dinners. A few minutes later, Prez was sitting at a table of newbie teen boys, and the rest of the team followed his lead, choosing tables where newbie boys and girls were sitting.

The Core Rimmers knew that the original eighty-seven and the level one orphanage kids would get their height and weight checked by doctors once a month. The same group would get their blood checked twice a year. They learned that the level two orphanage kids were going to get their height, weight and blood checked every two weeks. Other than malnourishment, they were all relatively healthy. A few had been sick, with respiratory or sinus infections when they were rescued, but those conditions were treated while they were at the hospitals. One teenaged girl and one tween boy now wore prescription glasses. According to the kids, the hospitals they had been at went far beyond normal care. Doctors visited each kid every morning, afternoon and evening. Nurses checked on them constantly, and gave them decks of cards and games to play. Most importantly, each kid had a clean, warm bed to sleep in and plenty to eat anytime they were hungry.

Since the level two kids had just arrived, each Core Rimmer suggested that they take the next week off to adjust, like all the other rescued kids had the prior week off. While that sounded great to the kids, they also admitted that they wanted to attend Clan schools, where they were told they would get a better education, and that's where the majority of other kids would be anyway. They were told to sleep on the decision. Those that wanted to go to school the next morning for placement tests could do so, or they could choose to take the week off.

Noticing Keith had finished eating and was only chatting at a table of level two girls, Kekoa went over to report his findings from Los Angeles. Seeing Kekoa approaching, Keith excused himself from the table. Crossing the dining room and meeting up with the detachment's commander, Keith asked, "Is there anything disturbing about your report?"

Kekoa shrugged, "You're concerned about Leo hearing it?"

Keith slowly nodded, "Yeah, and even if Drew and Corey should hear it."

"I think at least one of Leo's new parents needs to know," Kekoa suggested.

Keith led Kekoa to the table where Corey's and Drew's family were sitting. By the time Keith had invited his brother and brother-in-law to come with them, John was also standing there too, innocently blinking and cheekily smiling. John shared, 'It's just easier if I pass this along to the other Core Rimmers. We've got almost thirty B.O.E. kids here who are just like Leo. All of us need to know.' Begrudgingly, Keith nodded agreement. Keith, Corey, Drew, John and Kekoa left the dining room and went into the Command Center's conference room. As soon as the door was closed, John looked up at Kekoa, saying, "We're doing similar investigations for all the other B.O.E. kids we've rescued. If any kid, or any of the adopted parents, or Doc Wiener need the information, we should have it as soon as possible."

Nodding, Kekoa grinned, "I figured as much," and then took the chair at the end of the table. Once everyone was seated, Kekoa said, "Let me preface everything by telling you that we have standard video and audio recordings of the entire operation."

"Los Angeles is still cleaning up the mess," Kekoa continued. "They have the National Guard protecting the county. There's a city-wide dusk curfew imposed for all citizens to get off the street. When my team arrived at 2765 Francis Avenue, the Scotts' residence, the entire street was cordoned off by police. We identified ourselves and the purpose of our presence there. Francis Avenue is only about a kilometer long; it spans from Hoover Street to South Vermont Avenue."

"The police told us that this particular neighborhood was claimed by four gangs. The Crips were done arguing and fighting. If you weren't friend then you were foe. On Francis Avenue alone, twenty-three were killed and another sixty-seven wounded." Locking eyes with Drew, Kekoa softly said, "Leo's the only person under the age of eighteen alive, and he's the only one that got out of there physically unharmed."

Corey gasped. Drew closed his eyes and deeply sighed, then reopened his eyes and prompted, "Go on, Kekoa."

Kekoa pulled out his PADD to read from his notes. He shared, "The house was heavily damaged, inside and out. From the sidewalk, my team counted and verified fifty-six bullet holes on the front wall of the house, facing the street. All the front windows were shattered, so obviously there were no holes to count in those spaces. Inside the home, we found fourteen bullet holes in the ceiling, and that it had very definitely been looted. On the first level, furniture and all personal belongings were awry. We found two puddles of urine, one in the dining room and one in the kitchen, and both were in the middle of the floor, away from any vandalism target."

"That seems odd," Keith scowled. "When a dude needs to piss, it's usually against, in or on something."

"We came to the same conclusion," Kekoa said. "Whatever the purpose was, somebody was in a hurry. We took samples from both puddles, kept one set and gave a duplicate set to the police."

Corey asked, "Was the furniture near the doorways tipped over, Kekoa?"

"Yes, it was," Kekoa answered. "That's another weird thing about this case. It seemed as if the looters got in through the living room picture window easily enough, but when it was time to leave, they spent time pulling furniture away from doorways. The only reason we could come up with, for something that illogical, was flight-or-fight reflex; they were under duress. How they left wasn't as important as leaving... quickly."

After checking the four faces, Kekoa continued. "There was nothing salvageable downstairs that I thought Leo might want to have. The family portrait was tattered and torn, so I didn't bother with it. We climbed the steps to find that the top landing was barricaded with furniture; a twin sized bed and a chest of drawers. There was a small space on the right side, that a boy might've gotten past. Our tunnel rat and one other team member got past it easily. It had to be moved for me and the rest of our team to get past it."

Drew nodded, "Leo said he pushed the stuff aside when he was ready to leave." He then asked, "Did the bathroom tub look like it was slept in?"

"There was a blanket, pillows and six emergency lights in the bathroom," Kekoa replied. "Only one of the emergency lights had discharged. The remaining five were near fully charged." Pausing to clear his throat, Kekoa said, "The bodies of an adult male and an adult female were found in one bedroom, on the floor, near the opposite ends of a dresser."

"They were still there?" Corey excitedly hollered. "Two days later, they were still there?"

Nodding, Kekoa softly reminded, "The City and most of the county are riot zones. There's a lot more to be cleaned up, beyond this one neighborhood."

Corey cried, "Omigod! Leo's nightmare was real! He relived the entire night in his dream!"

Taking Corey's hand, Drew nodded, "It seems that way." Fuming with anger and saddened beyond rational thought, Corey wiped tears from his eyes. Looking at Kekoa, Drew prompted, "Continue, please?"

Kekoa sighed, "Both adults had received shots to the head, and each had other gunshot wounds; the woman was hit in the shoulder and the man was hit through an arm and into his torso. The LA County Coroner was dispatched and both bodies were taken to the morgue. Half my team remained at the Scott residence until the coroner was finished there. The other half of the team and I went to Police Headquarters and the LA County Sheriff's Department.

"Police and Sheriffs had arrested sixteen members of the Crips. From telepathic investigations, we've taken custody of four of them, who were directly responsible for the Scotts' deaths, and many others on Francis Avenue."

Abruptly, John yelled, "COREY!" When Corey jumped and locked eyes with him, John firmly said, "Care for the living first. That's logical, bro. Leo's more important than the men who are already as good as dead."

"They know that too," Kekoa evilly grinned. "They actually offered confessions to the police if they'd refuse the custody change. California still hasn't recovered from the ZCC orphanages, so the police weren't willing to argue with us. Needless to say, the murderers struck out."

Squeezing his husband's hand and getting his attention, Drew gently instructed, "Let 'em stew and suffer, Cor. We'll take care of them, in a few days, after we tell Leo most of this and make sure he's okay."

Keith nodded, "I agree. Let them fret and fuss another day, at least. When it comes time to deliver justice, I want to take one out."

"And I'll take the last of the four," John said.

Turning to Kekoa, Corey instructed, "Keep them miserable, around the clock, dude. Leo's suffering and will always remember the way his parents were taken from him. Those scum get minimal food and drink, and constant annoyance until we put them out of our misery."

"Believe me, they're not comfortable, Corey," Kekoa smiled.

"With your order, they'll look forward to death."

Keith asked, "Is there anything else on this case, Kekoa?"

"That's the majority of it," Kekoa responded. "While I was there, my team investigated Jimmy Matos, and the Nash brothers. We didn't get to Tony Lanning or Travis McAuley, so we'll let Ark and Founder Intel do their thing. The rest is normal Clan policy. We're paying for the Scott's last wishes and final resting places. If no documentation can be located, they'll be cremated and the remains sent here. As Leo's guardians, we'll be notified if need be."

Drew smiled, "Thanks for taking care of this for us, Kekoa."

"It's part of the job and kept you guys safe," Kekoa simply stated.

"Let's get back to the dining room then," Keith prompted. All five stood and pushed their chairs under the table.

Suddenly, Corey jumped, twisted and began laughing. Drew, Keith and Kekoa glanced around for some explanation.

Over Corey's laughter, John grinned, "I warned him to chill out. Leo needs his dad and stubborn pop too. Until Corey chills, he'll feel like he's being tickled, by Drew, in all those same naughty places."

Drew gleamed, "And I'll get to reap the benefits." Softly chortling, John, Keith and Kekoa left the conference room. Drew remained with Corey. After a while, Corey laughed himself nearly to exhaustion and left the room with Drew. They got as far as the Command Center before another exasperating thought caused another burst of laughter from Corey. Bouncing his eyebrows at the boys in the room, Drew smiled, "This is gonna be an interesting night!"

Out in the dining room, Keith went to Prez. Through his sub-vocal, Keith heard Alden groaning, "Prez is highly perturbed. He's ordered me to drop the corpses of the four gang members on the doorsteps of their families, with notes that are to read 'Either you're friend or foe; if you're not with us, then you're against us. Sincerely, Family Clan Short Pacific Rim Division.'"

"Understandable," Keith softly said. "Prez is hitting them with their own ultimatum."

"There usually aren't identifiable remains after phaser blasts, Keith."

"At the highest setting," Keith reminded. "At the next lower setting and a wider beam, internal injuries would be massive and deadly."

Instantly processing the potential broken bones and organ damage likely, Alden droned, "Oh my... you're pissed too."

Stopping and standing behind Prez's chair, Keith softly explained, "This was no accident, Alden. All our families would help almost anyone, anytime, and every way we could, before we were Clan. Alternatively, you don't fuck with our families. Leo is now family. From what I've heard, those men didn't care who they were shooting at. They got their rocks off with automatic weapons, when resources to stop them were at their lowest. It was violence for violence's sake. If the Crips want a war, they'll be overwhelmed with a show of strength that they won't soon forget. Put our heavily armored two hundred guys and only our Hind gunship up against a thousand of them. We'd have minimal, minor casualties, and they'd be decimated."

Still at a table with Neil, Tad, Carter, Doug and three other teen boys, Prez firmly said, "Kids from Los Angeles to Beijing are mine to protect. Kids are here, in the situations they're in, because we didn't know if it was logical to intervene in civil unrest. That mistake won't be made twice. Work with me, like the Latin Kings, or suffer the consequences. I've already notified Brent and Lance in Vegas, and Hector in Los Angeles. They're listening to their cities' grapevines. At the first threatening move by any gang, we're there to take back the city."

From the Command Center doors, Corey bounced into the dining room, laughing hysterically. Drew followed and held his arms up, loudly giggling, "Look, no hands!" Grinning insanely, John sadly shook his head. Everyone else cracked up, but the loudest laughter came from Leo, Lenny, Geoff and the quadruple Rs. Corey rested at the table where his sons were sitting. It was Leo's peaceful expression and caring manner with Lenny and Geoff that calmed Corey down.

Leo's face radiated innocence and trust, Corey noticed. There was a deep desire to be part of the family, made apparent by the way Leo interacted with his new little brothers. Underneath all that, Corey knew there was a deep pain in his eldest son. Too occupied with Geoff and Lenny, Leo didn't ask about the meeting his dad and pop were at. Alone together in the near future, Corey and Drew would have to consider how much Leo would need to know, or want to know.

Noticing that most of the kids were done with dinner, Prez stood and had Alden connect him to the base PA so he could announce a meeting, which all kids and available adults could attend. Those who had already taken their trays to the dishwasher got up and started for the exits. Drew and Corey had been expecting the announcement since before the trip to the basement store. They gathered their sons and transported into the auditorium to get the place powered up.

Ready for their first division meeting and concert, Chris, Jay, Craig, Phil, Erik, Travis, Lance, Scott, Tony and Ray stood and joined the mass of kids leaving the dining room. All eight spent most of the afternoon together. Of the eight, only Erik and Travis weren't in the auditorium the prior afternoon. The other six told them about the concert video they had watched.

Wishing he could participate in the conversation, Kassidy Oldcambus followed the pack with his brothers, Kade and Karey, but tried to ignore the telepathic conversation.

Evilly grinning, Karey silently shared, 'Kass has the hots for Jay and Travis.'

'What I'm wonderin' is why Kass is thinkin' about the amount of pubes each has?' Kade privately replied.

Karey shrugged and reminded, 'It ain't like Kass is hairless. Compared to us, he's got plenty of pubes.'

Receiving another thought from his big bro, Kade sent, 'Oh, it's the bigger, buffer guys that Kass likes most. He was only comparing Jay to Travis.'

Looking up at his older brother, Karey smiled, 'Stop worryin' about us, Kass. It ain't like we never knew you liked girls and guys. It don't matter to us at all.'

Kassidy squinted and glared at both his younger brothers, warning them that they would eventually be back in their dorm room. Kade and Karey giggled, making it clear they were looking forward to it.

During the walk, Lance raved about Mike and Troy. Erik told Lance, "I started guitar lessons two years ago, but my school grades took a nose dive. My folks made me quit, but I never really lost interest; I just hadn't learned enough to really try learning on my own. I figured someday, ya know?"

Lance grinned, "You never said anything all day about that?"

Shrugging, Erik giggled, "I didn't tell Trav either. There were too many other dreams to share."

"Since way before I got here, being a musician has been my biggest, most important dream," Lance admitted.

Raising and displaying Travis' hand in his, Erik giggled, "Here's my dream."

Lance giggled, "It's all in the priorities, I guess. I wasn't even ready for my Panda's return."

Paused at the mass of kids entering the auditorium, behind Scott, Lance, Erik and Travis, were Tony and Ray. Tony teased, "I dunno, Lance. If I were in Trav's place, I think I'd be getting a little jealous of you and Erik."

Spinning around, Lance giggled, "I'm not putting any moves on Erik. Look at Trav compared to me. I'm not feeling especially suicidal tonight." Ray and Phil cracked up.

Craig sniggered, "Most of the afternoon, and through dinner, you have been chatting up a storm with Erik though, Lance. Trav's barely gotten a few words in compared to you."

Quickly moving around to Scott's other side, Lance admitted, "Scott's heard all this before, most of last night." He then locked eyes with Travis, giggling, "No boyfriends, no girlfriends, no Panda bears, but only a Les Paul hanging off my shoulder." He whined through giggles, "Please don't hit me! I'll just fall down and bleed!" Everyone in the group of eight roared. Kassidy helplessly sputtered and sniggered.

When the laughter began to subside, Erik pulled Travis close, planted a tender kiss on his mouth, and then whispered, "Only friends, Champ. It's you I want. Kewl?" Nodding, Travis landed a deeper kiss, causing all their other friends to chuckle and applaud. Shuffling into the auditorium, all eight remained together and found seats in the auditorium.

Another group that remained close together were the Combs and Diaz families. The four adults sat close together with their kids separated. Angelo slyly glanced down the row at Reggie, wondering if he would ever get to know the older Combs boy. All weekend long they had seen one another carrying stuff into their new townhomes, but other than casual greetings, neither Angelo nor Reggie had made other moves. Separated by six seats, both teenagers were silently considering what might happen if they ever got the chance to say more than "hey".

Since the eldest Core Rimmers were the last to be served dinner, they were the last to arrive at the auditorium. As they walked in the theater and down the aisle, the audience started applauding, and it only got louder, with cheers, names being called, and whistling. More curious than anything, Prez, Keith, Mike and Derrick led the way down to the stage.

Reyes waved at the newbies he had brought to Ewa Beach that were calling his name. Walking with their friend down the aisle, Ryan and Paul silently wondered if this sort of reception was common. Reyes introduced Lance Elling and Alton Teele to Paul and Ryan, and asked if they would mind sitting with his friends. Seats were shifted and soon Ryan and Paul were being introduced to other nearby teenage boys.

Blushing intensely, Sean and Troy giggled the entire way down the aisle. Kaleo and Tory knocked so many knuckles with ex-orphanage brothers and new friends that their fists were a little sore. The majority of the Core Rimmer team walked up onto the stage, where John's and Drew's families were already sitting. Scattered around and loudly chanting "We are The Rimmers!" were many of the UNIT base and personal security personnel.

Most of the team sat on the edge of the stage, but Prez, Keith, Mike and Derrick remained standing on the auditorium floor. Prez asked Drew to pass him the microphone. Facing the audience and raising the mic to his mouth, Prez chuckled, "What's goin' on, you guys? None of us have said a word or played a song yet."

Earlene Maygar yelled, "We love you guys, Prez." The applause seemed to swell with giggling from the crowd.

When the sound started to dwindle, Hugh Gartrell hollered, "The next time you run into a burning tower, keep that bubble butt kewl, dude." Again, the applause and laughter swelled.

Fanning her face with one hand, Cassie Cornwall loudly laughed, "Lord knows your butt makes plenty of us hot enough." The almost seven-hundred strong crowd cracked up, including the Core Rimmers and Prez.

Catching his breath, Prez raised the microphone, joking, "Meeting adjourned."

Prez's personal security, Matthew and Chris yelled, "Not until you play the new Rimmer theme song!"

Horacio laughed, "We heard about that. It's a must, dudes."

Madly chuckling, Prez handed Keith the microphone. Remembering that he had adoptions to do, Prez tapped his sub-vocal to have Alden deliver his tricorder. While Prez got situated, Keith sniggered, "We had this crazy notion this might be a semi-serious welcome home meeting for our newbies, kids and families alike."

Mike asked Keith for the microphone, and then prompted, "Would the Combs family, the Diaz Family, the Taylor family, the Praefectus family, Rad Conklin and Gil Hoover please stand?" Scattered around the center seating in the auditorium, the named families and individuals stood. Mike said, "Please welcome Mr. Roy Combs, our new Facilities Coordinator, and his wife, Mrs. Monica Combs, our new breads and pastries chef. Mrs. Combs is now our top most favorite person in the world, right guys?" The kids loudly agreed.

Taking the microphone again, Keith introduced, "Joining us from the frozen tundra of Chicago, we have Mr. Doyle Praefectus joining our chefs. Mrs. Essie Praefectus is finishing her teaching degree. She'll be a teachers' assistant first and then a teacher. Their sons, Daemon and Ian, have already joined John's Intel team."

While the crowd was still applauding, Derrick took the mic and introduced, "Mrs. Diaz is our new math and music teacher. After the New Year, Mr. Diaz will become Doctor Diaz. Mr. Jason Taylor is our social studies teacher and football coach, and Mrs. Trinity Taylor is our new math and algebra teacher. Gil Hoover and Rad Conklin are our resident heroes. Both men were stationed aboard one of the destroyers that fought to save San Francisco." The audience continued applauding the newest arrivals. Turning to Prez, Derrick asked, "Do they have jobs yet?"

Leaning closer to the microphone, Prez grinned, "Gil's a Mouth Rimmer; he was into communications on his ship and will continue in that role, for as long as he's happy there."

"And Rad?" Derrick wondered.

Prez chuckled, "I don't know really, but thought he'd start a fruits and veggies garden for us."

Returning to his seat, Gil softly chortled. Rad grinned and loudly wondered, "Will I ever live it down, Prez?"

Holding up an index finger to signal a pause, Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike huddled together. After a brief whispered consultation, all four circled the one microphone and began sweetly singing as a barber shop quartet; "Down at an English fair one evening I was there, When I heard a showman shouting underneath the flair. I've got a lovely bunch of coconuts, There they are all standing in a row. Big ones, small ones, some as big as your head. Give them a twist, a flick of the wrist. That's what the showman said." While they were singing, they were making hand gestures in front of their crotches, showing everyone the size of their 'coconuts'.

Recalling the first time he'd heard that song at the luau and laughing himself silly, Kaleo slipped off the stage. All the other Core Rimmers and most of the audience cracked up. Tory and Jerry offered hands, and Mike cupped his hands to help Kaleo climb back onstage. Rad laughed, "I'll take that as my answer then," and sat down beside his partner.

When the applause dwindled, Derrick said, "Before I pass the mic back to Prez, I'd like to announce that Family Clan Short Pacific Rim Division now has three-hundred-ninety-two rescued kids. Including our parents, employees and their kids, we've broken five-hundred. Add in our base security here and at Oneula Beach, and our personal security, puts us over six-hundred-seventy in only eight days." During the applause, Derrick passed the microphone back to Prez.

Further back in the audience, near Fred and Chauncey Eckhart, Ricco barked, "Plus one canine."

The Scooby Gang yelled, "Plus four ferrets!"

The chimps hollered, "And a dozen chimpanzees."

Appearing on the stage and climbing into the Rimmers' laps, six kittens purred, "Plus six felines."

Rolling his eyes, Reyes softly warned, "Charles, the music here is going to be the loudest you've ever heard." Without further commentary, all six kittens arched their backs, puffed up and disappeared from the auditorium stage.

The Rimmers on and standing before the stage sang, "Four calling birds, three French Hens, two turtle doves and Shirley in pear tree!"

Displaying his tricorder and lifting the mic, Prez asked, "If the Gibbons family and Seibert family are ready for their additions, please come down to the stage?"

The Steib quadruplets and the McPhearson brothers raced down the aisle, with Paulie the Panda in pursuit. Prez, Derrick and Mike squatted down to catch the six little dudes. All four Steib brothers slammed into Derrick and knocked him over, starting the audience's laughter. The McPhearsons went directly to Prez, and Paulie embraced Keith, leaving Mike there without any kids at all. The audience roared laughing; the loudest laughter coming from the other Core Rimmers and Lindsay Gibbons.

Standing, Mike sniffed one of his armpits, loudly joking, "Yeah, I did use deodorant today. What am I? Only their big brother, but do I matter?" Prez helplessly laughed, kissed Albert, and then lifted Charles, planted a smooch on his cheek, and took them over to Mike.

Albert giggled, "Momma and Lindsay told us to go to Prez first, cos he matters more, since he burned his butt." From the front rows, where they could hear Albert's confession, to the back rows, the audience exploded. Derrick and Prez only glanced at each other then howled laughing.

The Scoobies loudly assured, "Weez loves you, Shiny Daddy!" causing more applause and laughter to last longer.

"Come on down here guys," Mike prompted the Scooby Gang. All four disappeared under the chairs and scampered down to the stage. Faith and Willow climbed up Mike and stopped at his shoulders. Spike and Xander landed on Mike's feet. Mike reminded, "We've got over a hundred newbies to take the pledge, guys. Can you get them ready, quietly, while Prez handles these adoptions?"

"Weez can do that," all four ferrets squeaked. They gave Mike hugs then scampered back up aisles. With some help from previous pledge takers sitting nearby, the newbies learned about the Great Shiny, Shiny Lovers, Dull Ones, and the evil Dull Lovers and Shiny Haters.

Simultaneously, while Shiny lessons were in progress, Prez got the McPhearson brothers adopted into the Gibbons family, despite Mike's attempts to talk Albert and Charles out of it, and add them to his and Derrick's family. Only six rows back, Dillon, Randy and Jonah were hysterical. The Steib quadruplets were adopted into the Seibert family. Prez announced the adoptions official. The audience applauded and cheered.

Lowering the microphone, Prez turned to John, asking, "Has Vaziik been introduced to Lieutenant Vorik?"

"First thing," John answered. "I asked Vorik to join us in the store, while Vaziik was getting clothes. Vaziik now understands the Clan as a whole, our Clan and leadership style, and has a good example to look up to locally. Vaziik was with the rest of the B.O.E. kids and Doc Wiener this morning. I had a telepathic conversation with him, only cos it's quicker and easier that way. He's kewl, bro."

While Prez was occupied with John, Mike went back to the Scoobies and near the newbie kids. Spike reminded his Shiny Daddy to put his Shiny Priest robe on for the occasion. After getting the robe from Alden, Mike made a show of putting it on, as if he were Moses about to part the Red Sea. Just as John and Prez were finishing up, about two-hundred kids rescued since Thursday, including Vaziik, and the new families stood to proudly recite the Shiny Pledge. The rest of the kids applauded, cheered and whistled.

Raising the microphone, Prez said, "It's almost seven-thirty, and our newest arrivals came from the United States, so it feels much later to them. We're going to get on with the show, but first, I do want to say that what happened Thursday night at the Hyatt will not happen again. Keith's talked to me about it, and so have all four of my sons, both my parents, all the other Core Rimmers and Kekoa Casey. Our biggest, most important job is to be brothers for all of you, and fathers for some of you. I won't endanger that primary mission by putting the command team of this division in harms' way again. In the future, dangerous rescues like the Hyatt will rely solely upon the UNIT Pacific Rim Detachment." The audience applauded, but Prez didn't think it worthy of applause and reminded, "Old timers need to remember school tomorrow at nine in the morning, for our first placement test, so set your alarm clocks." Drew and Corey jumped down off the stage. Leo, Lenny and Geoff stood on the stage. With Drew's sub-vocal tap, all five disappeared from the auditorium and reappeared up in the PA room. Prez continued, "We're going to play some new tunes and some that y'all will definitely recognize."

The audience lights started to dim. Prez chuckled, "That's my queue that I've yapped long enough." Kids in the audience giggled. John levitated his family off the stage and up the aisle. AJ, Jerry, Kaleo and Tory hopped down off the stage. With a tender kiss, Sean wished Troy good luck. Sean then jumped down and joined the audience with the other Core Rimmers and their sons. Following Derrick, Mike and Keith up the stage steps, Prez turned off the microphone and took it up onto the stage with him. He slid the mic back into its holder on the stand and then turned it on before going to pick up his bass guitar.

Mrs. Diaz softly told her husband, daughter and son, "The four boys from my old band class are virtuosos. I've watched them sight read music and perform expertly the first time through. I have no idea what they'll be playing, but guaranteed it'll be far better than most fourteen-year-olds could accomplish."

Gathering around the drum risers, the band started putting together the set list, which was passed along via their comm-badges, as it developed, to Drew and Corey. Out in the audience, many kids noticed various changes on the stage, like additional guitars, two of which were where Keith normally stood on stage left; two additional bass guitars and one acoustic guitar was at Prez's position, just slightly left of center stage; and on stage right, Mike's and Troy's selection of guitars were up to five each. Old timers told the newbies which instruments each band member played and shared stories about the luau, the Shiny Concert, the Wedding Concert, and the Welcome Home Concert for the level one orphans. Up in the PA booth, Corey and Drew were teaching Leo about the mixer, lighting console and outboard sound gear. The stage lighting dimmed such that even the littlest kids in the front rows could barely see their dads moving into position. Wearing his white Shiny Priest robe still, Mike was the most visible band member.

Pin-point spotlights shone onto the spinning mirrored disco ball high above the audience. Yellow lights beamed behind and over the drum risers, and at the extreme left and right of the stage came on. Reyes shook a tambourine over Derrick's head, moving from the left overhead mic to the right and back again. At stage left, Keith played the opening synthesizer arpeggios to Karn Evil 9. The audience enthusiastically applauded and cheered before Prez stepped forward to sing lead vocals.

Welcome back my friends to the show that never ends

We're so glad you could attend

Come inside! Come inside!

There behind the glass is a real blade of grass

be careful as you pass.

Move along! Move along!

Then, at stage right, Troy added the Hammond organ part at the second verse. Pounding his drums, Derrick came in with Mike strumming power chords. Reyes moved over to his electronic drum kit, put the tambourine down and picked up drums sticks. Watching his dad, Reyes came in playing the same part in perfect synchronization.

All the newbie kids were stunned seeing their leaders transform from regular teenage boys to professional musicians, commanding the stage and their instruments. Shivering excitedly, Lance and Scott were more awestruck than they had been during the concert video they saw Saturday afternoon. Keyboard and guitar solos made some kids get on their feet. Watching Derrick's and Reyes' drum solo and Prez begin singing again, with strobe lights flashing and only drums backing him up, drove the rest of the kids to stand. Hearing the verse about 'seven virgins and mule,' almost every boy twelve years old and over uncontrollably cracked up. The security guys and the Rimmers' sons, all of whom had heard the song the prior day, applauded through the entire song.

Mrs. Diaz was completely captivated. Somehow her four virtuoso musicians had managed to find two other teen boys every bit as talented as they were. Of course, she didn't realize that Reyes only appeared to be thirteen, but was in fact a fifty-six-year-old android. Paul and Ryan were sitting together at the left end of a row, surrounded on three sides by many of the ex-street kids. The brothers had seen Reyes playing percussion and drums very briefly when they first met, and again at the beach house, but it was nothing like seeing Reyes play on stage with all the lights. At the end of the song, the spotlights on the disco ball went out, and so did many of the stage lights, leaving the applauding audience in virtual darkness.

For the next song, Troy moved away from the Hammond organ and went to pick up a Les Paul electric guitar. While kids cheered and Troy got situated to play and sing, Keith had synthesized sounds of a thumping heartbeat, electronic squeals and a helicopter traveling around the auditorium, introducing the Aldo Nova song Fantasy. With explosions of sound and light, Mike and Troy started playing the primary guitar power chords and the band joined together. Troy stepped forward to sing lead vocals.

Out in the audience, Judy Faris proudly smiled at her once shy son, who now had the attention of hundreds. Even she was somewhat surprised, in the middle of the song, when Troy grunted and jumped back from the microphone to play the dueling guitar solos with Mike. Prez joined them at center stage. In a semi-circle, the three guitarists bounced, swayed and shimmied to the delight of the crowd. The adults in the back rows couldn't tell who was having more fun, the six boys on stage or the rest of the kids who were on their feet, dancing in place or clapping their hands in time to the music.

When the second song ended, the band barely paused for the applause and cheering. They went right into the song Heavy Metal \(Takin' a Ride\), with Mike singing lead vocals. Scott Shetley and Lance Kinchen had their jaws hanging on the floor while watching Mike sing and play lead slide guitar at the same time. Only the band members knew the goal was to rock this audience, so they could sleep and be ready for school the next morning. Kids began moving away from their seats to dance in aisles. Since none of the band members needed to change instruments, they went directly to the next song. A Capella, Derrick, Keith, Mike and Troy sang, "Carry On My Wayward Son, there'll be peace when you are done. Lay your weary head to rest. Don't you cry no more." And the band seemed to explode at once with two guitarists, two drummers, bass guitar and keyboards. Keith sang lead vocals, with primarily Derrick and Troy backing him up during the choruses.

During this song, Troy, Prez and Mike moved forward to play the guitar solos and instrumental breaks at the middle and end of the song. Up in the PA booth, Corey had an electronic tempo detector, so he could set the digitally controlled strobe lights to perfectly sync with the music and musicians. Corey activated the strobe lights during the final guitar solo and instrumental break. Almost all the stage lights went off with the final chord. The kids roared their approval.

Corey turned up the center blue and red lights, so Derrick could safely move down off the drum risers to take center stage. After putting his guitar down, Troy moved back to the Hammond organ. Mike switched guitars to his Stratocaster. Reyes quickly reprogrammed his electronic drums, tapped his sticks together to count off and began playing In The Air Tonight. Mike played a single heavily distorted power chord. Keyboards came in from Keith and Troy. Still wearing his wireless microphone wrapped over his head, Derrick strolled near the edge of the stage, singing directly to the kids. Suddenly, rows of seats emptied and kids stormed the stage. About half way through the song, Derrick turned to slowly walk back stage, winking at Mike and Prez on the way. Returning to his drum set and joining Reyes, they played the thundering drum part. The song ended with booming drums and crashing cymbals. Hollering and screaming, kids enthusiastically endorsed the dramatic performance.

Troy went to get his Stratocaster. Keith hurried across to stage right to play the Hammond organ and synthesizers there. Keith started playing low bass tones and synthesized strings. Glancing around the kids closest to the stage, Prez chuckled, "Big kids help the little ones, so they can see too. This next song is the one Horacio and our security teams asked us to play, it's our division's theme song. It's called, Knocking At Your Back Door." Stepping back, Prez started pounding on his bass. From stage right, Keith sang the lead vocals.

Not believing the teenagers on stage could be so suggestive, Angelo Diaz cracked up. Six seats away, Reggie Combs blushed and softly chortled. Led by most of the original eighty-seven, more and more kids left their seats and hurried down to the stage.

Up in the PA booth, Leo giggled, "What's goin' on down there, pop?"

"Got me!" Corey laughed, "It's the first time that's ever happened."

Holding a pair of binoculars to his eyes to see, Drew smiled, "It's been a few days since the kids have gotten a concert. At the front of the stage, I see Chris, Jay, Craig, Phil, Lance, Scott, Tony and Ray, the Steibs and the quadruple R's. Kaleo, Tory, Sean, Billy, Horacio and Sonia are there too. It looks like there's a mix of newbies and old timers at the stage." One thing Drew didn't comment on was Robbie Taylor carefully watching Billy Whittmore. Billy was too busy dancing with Sean to notice Robbie.

During the song, more kids gathered at the stage in front of their leaders. Driving the kids and adults crazy, every time Keith sang 'knocking at your back door', Troy, Prez and Mike spun around to wiggle their butts around. Mrs. Diaz and her husband cracked up every time the boys shook their tushes at the audience. Sitting beside his blushing older brother, Reggie, Cameron Combs laughed more than he ever had, at his embarrassed brother, and the bottom jiggling band members. As much as he really wanted to appear innocent sitting beside his parents, Angelo Diaz, was pushed into a giggling fit by his seemingly disinterested younger sister. If the truth be told, the younger Diaz child was most fascinated by anything that she shouldn't be interested in. Teenage boys shaking their bums were just showing off, and therefore nothing was the slightest bit intriguing.

Vaziik was led down near the stage by Stu, the Oldcambus brothers, and their cousin, Taron. Vaziik was shown how to keep time and dance. Although a foreign activity, Vaziik was encouraged by his roommate, Stu Sutliff, to follow his friends' leads and do what they were doing.

At the end of the song, it seemed like about a hundred kids were swamping the stage. While Keith returned to stage left, Mike chuckled, "Guys, we really love to see you having fun, but please be careful. We don't want anybody getting hurt, so spread out a little. Please don't make any adults come down and break up the fun, all right?" To give the younger and smaller kids space, most of the older and bigger teens wandered away from center stage and toward the aisles.

Pointing at stage left, all four of the quadruple Rs shouted, "Keith's picked up a guitar."

Stepping up to a microphone, Keith grinned, "Yeah, I'm not sure how this thing works. Where are the white and black keys, Mike?" Giggling and laughter traveled around the audience.

"I glued little labels on the fretboard for ya, bro," Mike sniggered.

"Oh, kewl," Keith cheered, and then rapidly blinked at the supposedly alien instrument, softly muttering, "What's a fretboard?"

Fully realizing what he was about to say, Troy chuckled, "Where your left hand is resting, Keith; the long, hard, wood thing." Pulling his bass guitar out of the way, Prez looked down for Keith's hand. The audience howled laughing. Evilily grinning, Keith bounced his eyebrows at Prez, Troy and the audience. Sniggering insanely, Derrick counted off the next song. All at once, three electric guitars, two drummers and bass guitar began playing Go All The Way. Keith sang lead vocals and the rest of the band sang the backup vocals.

At the luau concert a week earlier, Keith didn't play guitar, many of the original eighty-seven realized, and told the newbies about it. With two additional band members, the song sounded even better, as far as they were concerned. The song ended to loud applause. Keith put the electric guitar down and returned to his keyboards at stage left. Troy put his guitar down too and picked up his tenor sax. With Derrick's count, the band started playing Urgent. Again, Keith handled lead vocals with Reyes, Mike and Derrick backing him up. Mrs. Diaz was thrilled with Troy, easily moving from strings to keys and to reed instruments.

Still seated four rows back, Jonah went into a giggling fit. Smiling over at his boyfriend, Gage wondered, "What?"

Jonah sniggered, "Knocking on your back door, go all the way, it's urgent. Get the message?"

Cracking up, Gage laughed, "I think they're trying to wear everybody down. What's left is for lovers to finish off."

Leaning closer to Gage and gesturing for him to move closer, Jonah asked, "Ya wanna try stuff tonight?"

Gage giggled, "I told you that I'd wait for when you're ready. If you're ready, I will be."

Jonah admitted, "You're awesome. I want it to be way better than anything else that was done to me. I'm really scared too, Gage."

Gage begged, "Don't rush it, okay? Just sleeping with you last night was awesome, even though we didn't do nothin'. I was holding you, and that was plenty. I'm with you, and you've got me at your side. That's all I want."

For the remainder of the song, Jonah's thoughts spun wildly. There were few other boys as cute as Gage, and probably fewer still anywhere near as compassionate. Not wanting to rush anything, Jonah wasn't sure what to do. On a whim, while the audience was cheering at the end of the song, Jonah tapped his comm-badge, ordering, "Alden, take me and Gage to my bedroom in the townhouse."

Clapping his hands with Sammy, Ben and everyone else, Gage hadn't even seen Jonah tap his comm-badge. Still applauding, Gage suddenly found himself alone with Jonah, sitting on a soft bed, in a dark bedroom. Gage giggled, "Jonah, did you..."

Silencing his boyfriend with his deepest, most passionate kiss, Jonah pushed Gage flat on the bed. Falling back, Gage helplessly giggled, and then he slid his hands into Jonah's back pockets and got into the kiss.

Realizing his brother and Jonah were gone, Sammy nudged Ben and pointed to the two empty seats. Ben giggled, "Where'd they go?"

"I have no idea!" Sammy laughed.

"Betchya I know," Ben evilly cackled.

Opening his eyes wide, Sammy wondered, "Ya think?"

Ben nodded and mischievously leered, "If Gage comes back here lookin' like both his heads are in the clouds, you and me are so outta here."

While Sammy was searching Ben's eyes, Platinum Habits started performing Shakin'. Up on stage, playing the rhythm guitar part, Mike sang; "Rosanna's daddy had a car she loved to drive. Stole the keys one night and took me for a ride. Turned up the music just as loud as it could go. Blew out the speakers in her daddy's radio.

"She was shakin' (oh oh ooo oh), Snappin' her fingers (oh oh ooo oh), She was movin' round and round (oh oh ooo oh), That girl was shakin' (oh oh ooo oh).

"We started drinkin' wasn't thinkin' too straight. She was doin' eighty and she slammed on the brakes. Got so high we had to pull to the side. We did some shakin' 'til the middle of the night."

That was as much as Ben and Sammy could take. Almost at the same instant, they glanced at each other and reached for their comm-badges. Stopping Ben's hand from completing the emergency call, Sammy ordered, "Alden, take me and Ben to my bed at the townhouse."

Left there in the auditorium, with four empty seats to his left, Dee only had to think a few moments to realize where his brothers and their boyfriends had gone so suddenly. Gage and Sammy were never sexually abused and therefore were virgins – very likely past tense. Helplessly, Dee cracked up. Sitting to Dee's right side, Jason Mullins, Sean's and Troy's new nine-year-old son, smiled, "What's so funny?"

Pointing over at the empty seats, all Dee could manage was the brief giggle, "Boyfriends!"

Jason nodded and smiled, "Has anyone ever told you that you've got a real cute laugh?"

Blushing, Dee shook his head and giggled, "Never."

Jason assured, "It really is," and faced forward as the song ended. Standing up, Jason and the rest of the crowd burst into applause and cheers.

Rapidly blinking and slowly clapping his hands, Dee tried to understand what Jason was saying. Jason had been around since Thursday, and Dee knew that he was another sexually abused kid.

Drawing a blank, Dee tapped Jason's shoulder. At center stage, Keith started singing, the words bouncing from side-to-side and around the auditoriums' loudspeakers. The band began playing Pour Some Sugar On Me. Dee gestured for Jason to follow him. Dee led the way down the almost empty side of the row of seats and waited for Jason. Prez noticed his eldest son leaving the auditorium, and only thought that maybe he needed to leak. They did come directly to the auditorium after dinner, so there was no big surprise. Walking up the aisle, Dee noticed he was being watched by his grandparents. He waved to them all and mouthed, "Be right back."

Out in the lobby, where it was much quieter, Dee turned to Jason, softly asking, "You like my laugh?"

Nodding, Jason explained, "I love it, and being here. I've laughed more here in three days than I have in nine years. Compared to my old life, this place is like a dream." He then asked, "Did I freak you out saying that?"

"A little," Dee reluctantly admitted.

Jason smiled, "Don't worry about it, Dee. I know I'm gay. Here, there are so many cute guys our age, I sometimes say exactly what I'm thinking. I didn't think it would freak you out. I guess I just didn't think." Losing his smile, he sighed, "I made the same stupid mistake with Leo. He wants a boyfriend, someday, just like, not now or soon. After what he told us this morning... I didn't think of that either, I guess. For the first time, I can have friends. I can have a boyfriend too, and I want one, but... I guess I'm screwing up bad, scaring guys that I really like. I don't mean to scare anyone." He reached a hand up to wipe forming tears away.

Reassuringly taking hold of the slightly taller yet younger newbie, Dee grinned, "We was all like that last week, when we were new too. It's like, before we weren't allowed friends. Now we are allowed. Before, we wouldn't even try to bring a kid home. Now, we all live together, so it's better than havin' a friend visit. He's right next door.

"After what all of us from the original group did, just trying to get to know each other, I can easily guess how four times as many must seem to you," Dee continued. "Being one of four hundred, not one of a hundred kids, must seem like too much. You and your bros did fine yesterday at the beach house. Think of it, you went to Kaho'olawe with your bros, all orphans, and came back adopted with two dads! Are you happy with Sean and Troy?"

Rapidly nodding, Jason giggled, "Yeah, they're awesome."

"Sean was rescued the same day as me, which makes him a brother," Dee revealed. He watched Jason's jaw drop, and giggled, "Now you're getting it. Your dad was my bro. Now my ex-brother has an awesome boyfriend, four sons that they obviously love, and would do anything for, and they're brothers to my daddy and poppa, which makes my ex-brother my new uncle!" Jason cracked up. Dee giggled, "It's crazy. My daddy and poppa are your uncles. Think of the level two kids and where some of them might be next week. Who'll be adopted? Who'll have a boyfriend? Who'll be a Core Rimmer, and who'll be a dorm leader? The idea of being a really big family is all we've been running with for a week. Look how it's working out.

"My dad and pop really like seeing the kids are hookin' up too. All it takes is one kid being happier than the day before, and they're happy too. You want friends, so you got 'em, by the dozens, just for bein' kewl, dude. All the guys sittin' around the kitchen table last night are already your friend. Nothin's hard about it at all."

Jason asked, "I'm tryin' too hard, huh?"

Dee smiled, "Yeah, I think so. My past is like yours, just from an orphanage. Your dad, Sean, was at the same place as my little bro, Richie. Sean thinks Richie has changed. Richie is sure Sean is different too. I'm just saying, it's all different here. Now we can be real people, not some jerk's toy. We don't always see it, but other people see us changing. You're not like you were Thursday. I'm not the same as I was before either. Let the changes happen, Jase. It don't take trying at all, stuff just happens."

"Thanks, Dee," Jason warmly smiled.

"Anytime!" Dee giggled. "Speaking of time, it's time to leak, before we go back inside." Rapidly nodding, Jason agreed. In moments, they were standing at urinals. Beginning to relieve himself, Dee grinned and huffed, "Oh boy, I think I waited too long."

"I didn't have to go when we got here," Jason giggled. His eyes widened and he loudly warned, "FOG ALERT! Watch out!" barely a second before he let one rip that was at least as loud.

Dee cackled, "OMIGOD, JASON! That was like an adult fart coming out of your little butt! Did it hurt, or what?"

Jason giggled, "I feel much better now."

"Yeah, and I'm dyin' here!" Dee squealed.

"Four nights in a row I've had real food," Jason smiled. "I used to eat frozen dinners seven nights a week."

"The next time Cory Short visits, you're our counter-attack," Dee coughed.

Stuffing his wiener back in his shorts and zipping up, Jason rapidly blinked and tilted his head, checking, "The Cory Short, the one that started it all?"

Also finished, Dee redid the Velcro fastener on his boardies, nodding, "Yeah, he was here Monday, to make my pop the director officially." He paused then sniggered, "And pollute the air."

Heading to a sink, Jason giggled, "I hope I get to meet him too." Noticing Dee was heading for the door, he asked, "You're not washing your hands?"

Dee gasped, "Need... fresh... air." Jason howled laughing, and hurried to finish at the sink.

Soon, both boys were walking into the auditorium and hurrying down the aisle. Platinum Habits was now playing Long Cool Woman In A Black Dress. Although he liked what he heard, Jason didn't know the song. Dee had heard the band rehearsing it at Archmania. Keith was again playing rhythm guitar, and Troy was singing lead vocals. Dee was about to shuffle down the aisle and return to his seat when Jason tapped his shoulder and gestured to the floor in front of the stage, yelling, "Do you like to dance?"

Nodding, Dee reached for Jason's hand and they hurried to the floor where many dozens of kids were dancing. They had only begun when the song ended and both boys cracked up. Applauding, Dee watched his dad put the electric guitar down and return to the keyboards at stage left. Keith gave his band mates a thumbs up gesture, and the band started playing Something's Missing. Dee pointed at his dad and pulled Jason over to that side of the stage where they danced through the whole song. Playing lead guitar, Mike sang lead vocals.

When the tune ended, Reyes stood and walked off to extreme stage left. Troy took his guitar off and told the audience, "This next song me and Reyes learned and have played, but ya know, it didn't add anything, so we're gonna take a break. For those that don't know, Reyes and I are the new members of the band. Check out what these four can do." Reyes got a towel and a bottle of water, and watched from the left side wing. Troy went over to the far right side.

"We know!" Sean, AJ, Jerry, Kaleo and Tory laughed.

With his index finger, Troy gestured for Sean to come up and keep him company. Already blushing, Sean hurried over to the stairs at stage right and flew up two steps at a time. He disappeared behind the curtain at the same moment that Derrick began counting off. The remaining four members of the band started playing Here Comes The Feeling, with Prez singing powerful lead vocals. For many of the kids that hadn't been to the luau, or ever seen less than five Core Rimmers on stage at once, the performance and sheer energy displayed was amazing. During the chorus' strick beat, Mike and Prez marched in place before their microphone stands. At the end of the song, the auditorium exploded in applause and cheers. The adults in the back rows stood and gave the boys an ovation.

From stage left, Reyes returned to his electronic drums. Troy returned to pick up a guitar from stage right. Mike switched guitars for the next song. Moving his mic aside, and wiping sweat off his face with the lower edge of his T-shirt, Derrick instructed Reyes, "You and Prez start us off anyway. Go ahead and count it off. I'll be ready." Troy nodded to Reyes, assuring he was ready. Prez moved closer to Reyes and they counted off together. Bass guitar and electronic drums kicked off Get It On \(Bang A Gong\). Strobe lights flashed over the stage and the band through most of the entire song. Troy sang lead vocals and played rhythm guitar.

The funny thing was, Sean had never emerged from behind the curtains at stage right. Nudging his husband to go check, Tory cracked up. Reluctantly, Kaleo giggled his way up the stage right steps and went behind the curtains. Thankfully, the music was loud enough that they couldn't be heard. Tapping Sean on the back, Kaleo giggled, "What's wrong, bro?"

Turning to face his friend, Sean cackled, "Absolutely nothing!" and pointed down at his tented shorts. Already well aware of Sean's endowment, Kaleo roared laughing. Sean blushed, "Troy practically climbed all over me the second we were alone. He plays provocative songs, I get the profits and the bone. Now he's out there singing about banging and getting it on, and I stand here waiting for my cock to deflate!"

Hysterical, Kaleo searched for the curtain edge and then staggered out to the floor and Tory. Seconds later, AJ, Jerry and Horacio knew about Sean's predicament. At the end of the song, Troy went to switch from electric to his acoustic guitar. Turning around and returning to his microphone, Troy noticed his friends on the floor before the stage, brushing one index finger over the other and giggling, "Shame on you!" Troy helplessly sputtered and quickly turned around before covering his mouth and cracking up.

Pushing his mic up and out of the way, Derrick grinned, "You left Sean sweating?"

Nodding, Troy sniggered, "We're alone in our townhouse tonight. If that song didn't make my purpose clear, this one will. Go ahead and count it off."

Pulling his mic down again, Derrick counted off the tempo for The Story In Your Eyes, and the band started playing. Hiding behind the curtain, Sean rolled his eyes, muttering, "My wicked Lover. He'll get what he wants the way he wants it all right. Maybe twice!" Troy stepped up to the microphone and sang the lead vocals.

Gage and Jonah returned to the auditorium. They went to dance at the front of the stage. Barely a minute later, Ben and Sammy returned to their seats, thinking that Jonah and Gage hadn't yet returned. At the end of the song, Sammy found them applauding and pointed them out to Ben. They hurried down to the stage, noticing that Reyes was moving over to his congas and hand percussion. Troy moved over to the keyboards at the right side of the stage. Seeing Sean peeking from behind the curtains, Troy seductively smiled, "Got the message?"

"Loud and clear," Sean beamed, and held two fingers up to make his intentions known.

The stage lights dimmed and Reyes counted off the tempo to That's The Way Of The World. Many of those that hadn't been dancing before, including some of the parents, got up and danced in the aisle. Reyes sang the lead vocals, with primarily Keith and Troy singing backup and harmony vocals, but all of them sang various parts. Moving nearer to the stage, Paul and Ryan watched their friend and danced in place. Reyes noticed his two friends dancing in perfect synchronization without watching each other. Keith played the electric piano and synthesized strings parts. Troy played synthesized horn parts. Since Keith and Troy were only playing through parts of the song, they raised their arms over their heads and clapped their hands to the beat. Soon, dancers were clapping their hands and so were those still seated.

Without really intending to start anything, Sammy, Dee, Gage and Richie were lined up across from their boyfriends and dancing partners, Ben, Jason, Jonah and Jimmy. The next thing they knew, Kaleo and Tory had joined the two lines. Then AJ and Jerry joined at the opposite end. Soon, the lines were expanding with couples dancing before the entire length of the stage; Horacio and Sonia, Ipo and Lani, Aki and Hajami, Stephen Wickes and Aaron Farris, John and Stephen, Wade and Frankie, Keanu and Liki, Roy and Mollie, Nell and Pete, newbies Carter Rackham and Douglas Zimmerman, and many others overflowing into the aisles.

With the applause at the end of the song, Troy went to get his Stratocaster. Reyes returned to his electronic drum kit. Bass and drums introduced the next song. Playing rhythm guitar on his Strat, Troy sang the lead vocals for Love Will Find A Way, which kept the lines of dancers before the stage happily shaking their butts around.

At the end of the song, Kaleo and Tory hollered, "Rescue Me!"

Prez chuckled, "Did you not realize that's your job now?"

AJ, Jerry, Kaleo and Tory hollered, "Play Rescue Me!"

Keith giggled, "Only if you guys sing too."

A bunch of kids yelled, "We will!" Guitarists and drummers, Mike, Troy, Derrick and Reyes started the song. Prez and Keith joined in. Singing lead vocals, Mike watched the audience. Kaleo had learned most of the lyrics. With prompting from Prez, Keith and Troy, almost the entire audience sang the choruses along with the band. Powering up, John levitated both lines of dancers at the front of the stage. Encouraged by the floating and singing kids, the band repeated the end chorus a few more times. When they ended the song, the audience exploded in applause, cheers and yells. Laughing hysterically at the enthused kids, John lowered them all down to the floor.

Bass, drums and keyboards started off the next song, Roll With The Changes. Standing at the Steinway, Keith sang lead vocals. For the middle guitar solo, Mike and Troy swapped off four bars each, then finished with both of them playing. Dancing kids screamed with delight. At the hospitals and since arriving at Ewa Beach, the ninety-five newbies had been told that the leaders of this division had their own band, and they had seen them Thursday evening on televisions, but none of them expected anything like what they were now experiencing. Nearing the end of the song, Troy hurried over to the Hammond and swung his guitar around his back to play the organ part.

At the end of the song, Mike asked the cheering kids, "You're not tired yet?"

"NO!" was the overwhelming response. Stepping back from the microphone, Mike cracked up. Crossing the stage, Keith went to the Hammond organ. Troy put down his guitar and Reyes stepped out from behind the electronic drum kit. Picking up two tambourines, Reyes tossed one Troy.

Prez playfully prompted, "You will be tired and sleep. This song's for any of you that are the slightest bit worried about school." The stage lighting dimmed. Keith played low bass notes and some much higher arpeggio trills on the Hammond. Derrick began pounding a simple beat with his bass drum. Reyes and Troy tossed tambourines to each other and briefly shook them before tossing them again. Adding his bass part, Prez instructed, "Your old lives are past, over and done. Clan schools are not like your old schools; it's gonna be as fun as any school can be. All you have to do is try, give it your best shot, and Hold Your Head Up." Mike came in with the guitar part and the band joined together, with Derrick singing the lead vocals. All six sang the choruses. The song soon became an anthem, with all the Core Rimmers and dorm leaders prompting kids to "hold your head up high".

At the end of the song, while the newly empowered audience and proud parents applauded, Troy went to pick up his Stratocaster. Reyes returned to the drum risers, stopping at the congas. Mike started playing before Troy reached his microphone. It was a necessary trick to get Troy into the groove for the song he was about to play rhythm guitar and sing lead vocals to – Play That Funky Music. Troy screamed, "Hey! Do it, now!" and the band joined together. Kids that had been resting quickly got back up and started dancing. Down on his knees at the edge of the stage, Mike wailed the guitar solo directly to the dancing kids. He bounded up at the end and quickly returned to his microphone to sing backing vocals with the rest of the band. At the end of the song, Troy kept his guitar on, but swung it around to his back, so he could play keyboards for As Long As You Love Me.

Up in the PA booth, Leo could barely believe what he was hearing and seeing. Way down on the stage, Uncle Keith roamed around singing the lead vocals directly to groups of kids. Leo had seen Backstreet perform the song on television, but they weren't playing instruments. All the band members were dancing, singing and playing their instruments. "HOLY CRAP!" Leo excitedly shouted. Corey cracked up.

Drew sniggered, "Pretty good, huh?"

Unable to tear his eyes away from the window where he was watching, Leo laughed, "They're awesome! I thought they could only play oldies!"

Corey giggled, "The really kewl thing is, they learned that song in one afternoon. They first heard it at school, came home and started working on it. By dinner time, it was this good, with them dancing too, like they are now."

Watching his eldest son dance alone, Drew took a moment and tapped his comm-badge, ordering, "Alden, get Leo down to the rest of the dancing kids." In a blink, Leo was with the rest of the kids, before the stage. Noticing his newest nephew, Keith knelt on one knee, singing directly to him for a few moments.

I've tried to hide it so that no one knows

But I guess it shows

When you look into my eyes

What you did and where you're comin' from

(I don't care) as long as you love me, baby

Just as he might have if any of the real Backstreet members had sung to him, Leo stopped dancing. He smiled up at his Uncle and turned pale, not recognizing that he had stopped breathing. Standing up, Keith moved over to sing to Earlene and Noreen Magyar, causing them to screech at the top of their lungs. Giggling his ass off, John came over just in time to support Leo before he crumbled to the floor. John floated his faint nephew to the first available seat in the front row, sat him down and pushed Leo's head down between his knees.

John giggled, 'I keep warning Keith, one of these days he's gonna pull that stunt and somebody's gonna crash to the floor. He didn't believe me.' Leo only groaned. John shared, 'Sorry, only me and your dad are likely to grow up looking a little like Keith, and we're already spoken for. You can do pretty well with any of the other dudes your age, Leo.'

Up in the PA booth, Corey and Drew heard John telepathically telling them what had happened. Drew giggled, "Well, that trip lasted about a minute!"

Corey laughed, "Alden, get an extra chair up here, then transport Leo into it, before he has an embarrassment embolism, or some such shit." A moment later, the chair appeared and so did Leo, with his head still hanging between his knees.

Geoff and Lenny came over to help their big brother. Leo whimpered, "I can't believe I almost fainted. He's my uncle now! What's wrong with me?"

"Absolutely nothing!" Corey, Drew, Geoff and Lenny chorused.

Corey reminded, "I was where you are at age nine, Leo."

Rubbing his big bro's back, Lenny nodded, "Keith's great as an uncle, but when he's on stage, I forget all about that."

"It's all of 'em, really," Geoff giggled. "Like one minute, they're uncachs, and then they're Core Rimmers, our leaders, and then they're a band. It's weird when I reme'ber they're all three."

Drew wondered, "What about me and pop, Geoff?"

"You're daddies and Core Rimmers, only two," Geoff giggled.

Down at the stage, the band began playing The Voice. Keith handled the keyboard introduction. Strumming his acoustic twelve string guitar, Troy sang lead vocals.

Won't you take me back to school?

I need to learn the golden rule.

Won't you lay it on the line?

I need to hear it just one more time.

Oh, won't you tell me again?

Oh, can you feel it?

Oh, won't you tell me again tonight?

Each and every heart it seems,

Is bounded by a world of dreams.

Each and every rising sun,

Is greeted by a lonely one.

Oh, won't you tell me again?

Oh, can you feel it?

Oh, won't you tell me again tonight? Tonight?

Cause out on the ocean of life my love.

There's so many storms we must rise above.

Can you hear the spirit calling, as it's carried across the waves?

You're already falling, it's calling you back to face the music.

And the song that is coming through.

You're already falling, the one that it's calling is you.

Make a promise, take a vow.

And trust your feelings it easy now.

Understand The Voice within.

And feel a change already beginning.

Oh, won't you tell me again?

Oh, can you feel it?

Oh, won't you tell me again tonight?

Oh, won't you tell me again?

Oh, can you feel it?

Oh, won't you tell me again tonight? Tonight?

And how many words have I got to say?

And how many times will it be this way?

With your arms around the future and your back up against the past.

You're already falling, it's calling you on to face the music.

And the song that is coming through.

You're already falling, the one that it's calling is you.

Each and every heart it seems,

Is bounded by a world of dreams.

Each and every rising sun,

Is greeted by a lonely, lonely one.

Won't you tell me again?

Oh, can you feel it?

Oh, won't you tell me again tonight?

Tired newbie kids returned to their seats and enjoyed the remainder of the show. There were only four more songs. For the first, Stone In Love, Keith took center stage singing lead vocals. The second was the ballad Truly, Madly, Deeply, sung by Keith and Troy from opposite sides of the stage and behind racks of keyboards. Mrs. Diaz was as proud as any of the parents. Boys that were her students had performed flawlessly for two hours. All six of the boys loved what they were doing. Their stage presence was felt and audience interaction was appreciated as part of the show. Even the lighting and sound quality was something to be experienced. She and her husband had paid to see other artists and shows that weren't this good.

The already dark stage went black at the end of the song. The audience was still applauding when lights shone down onto Prez, and Keith at the stage left keyboard rack, and Troy standing at stage right, playing the harmonica introduction to He Ain't Heavy, He's My Brother. Once again, Keith and Troy shared the lead vocals. Before the stage and out in the audience, kids and adults slow danced. The lyrics brought tears to the eyes of many level two orphans.

At the end of the song, the stage lights all went out, and the audience remained on their feet to give the band an ovation. They were still applauding and cheering when a single spotlight turned on, that Mike walked into while strumming his acoustic guitar and humming. Stopping before his microphone, Mike sang;

Seagull, you fly across the horizon

Into the misty morning sun.

Nobody asks you where you are going,

Nobody knows where you're from.

Here is a man asking the question

Is this really the end of the world?

Seagull, you must have known for a long time

The shape of things to come.

Another spotlight shone brightly to Mike's left. Playing his twelve-string acoustic, from out of the darkness, Troy stepped forward. Mike continued singing;

Now you fly, through the sky, never asking why,

And you fly all around 'til somebody, Shoots you down.

Da da da da da da down.

Mm mm mm mm, mm mm.

Two more spotlights shone brightly. Strumming acoustic guitars, Prez and Keith stepped from out of the darkness and into the lights. Mike sang;

Seagull, you fly, across the horizon,

Into the misty morning sun.

Nobody asks you where you are going,

Nobody knows where you're from,

Behind the drum risers, beams of yellow light brightly shone like a sunrise. Standing in silhouette, Reyes shook maracas and Derrick beat a tambourine.

Now you fly through the sky, never asking why,

And you fly all around 'til somebody, yeah,

Shoots you down. Mm mm, yeah.

Seagull you fly, seagull you fly away.

All six boys sang the final sections.

And you fly away today

And you fly away tomorrow

And you fly away, leave me to my sorrow.

Mm, mm, mm.

Seagull, go on and fly, mm, mm, mm,

Fly to your tomorrow, leave me to my sorrow, fly.

The final guitar chords rang out to silence. Minimal lighting on the band members flickered off in the reverse order. Applause, cheers and whistles from the audience cut through the darkness. All the stage and auditorium lights were turned up. The band members put their instruments down or back on the guitar stands. Lining up across center stage, the band members held hands and bowed for the applauding and cheering kids. For quite a long while, Sean had been able to leave the stage; he simply liked the new vantage point and hearing what the band was hearing from the stage monitors. Now that the show was over, he stepped out from stage right, clapping and proudly cheering his boyfriend and teammates. Troy went over to Sean and stole a deep, wet kiss.

Stepping up to a microphone, Prez smiled, "Okay, you've been a great audience. I guess we needed the extra hundred to make it a real party. Dorm leaders and Core Rimmers, hang back to let everyone else leave and get back to their dorm rooms. Just this one night, we're going to walk around and make sure everybody hits the sack."

From the back rows of the auditorium where most of the adults were sitting, Bill Seaver hollered, "All the parents will be joining you too. Judy and Kathy will get the girls at Oneula Beach settled for the night."

Watching the majority of their audience head for the exits, Prez, Keith, Troy, Derrick and Mike helplessly giggled. Yes, it was definitely a school night and the parents were happily returning to their normal routines. Focused on his mom conversing with the other adults, Troy read her lips when she turned toward the stage. Judy teased her son by silently mouthing, "I can't do it, ma. They're way better than me."

Cracking up, Troy shared what his mom had said with Sean, and then the rest of the band, admitting, "That's almost exactly what I said last Monday afternoon, before coming up on stage."

"Please tell me that you didn't really believe that?" Reyes quickly asked. When Troy blushed and nodded, Reyes sighed, "I was up here that day and watched everything, Troy. You fit in from the start. At Archmania, you added at least as many songs to the set list as I did."

Glancing at Troy and Reyes, Keith grinned, "Both of you add important voices, tunes and experiences to this band. Most of what we played tonight couldn't have been done correctly without both of you."

Prez prompted, "Sean, you were at the luau. How does the band sound now compared to then?"

Sean giggled, "You dudes were awesome then, and it's more awesome now." Since everyone was anxiously awaiting more, Sean smiled, "Take 'Hold Your Head Up', for example. What made the song great was not only what was said, but watching Troy and Reyes toss tambourines around. You always look like you're having a blast. Another example is the guitar duels between Mike and Troy. Even from opposite sides of the stage, Keith and Troy are dueling keyboards. As a whole, it's the same showmanship as the luau and more, because there are two more of you. I was there at Archmania, so I saw rehearsals that almost everyone else never did. Not one of you argued once. I saw the original four bringing the two new dudes up to speed on songs they already knew. I saw the two new guys work together with the rest of the band, adding new songs to the list. Two songs I wish you'd played tonight are 'Just My Imagination', and 'Ooo Baby Baby', with Reyes singing. Those are dreamy, slow dance tunes that I really like."

Bouncing his eyebrows, Troy widely smiled. Sean smirked and giggled, "You're just evil, Lover. We may be the only two falling asleep at our school desks tomorrow." The remaining Core Rimmers and the dorm leaders waiting near the edge of the stage cracked up.

Drew and Corey returned to the auditorium, appearing beside the other Core Rimmers and dorm leaders. Prez and Keith started off the stage and were followed by Sean, Troy, Derrick, Mike and Reyes. Going directly to Paul and Ryan, Reyes had a whispered conversation with them. Seeing Roy and Pete with the group, Prez asked them, "Did you dudes need anything?"

Reaching for Mollie's hand, Roy grinned, "Our girlfriends."

"Who weren't our girlfriends this morning," Pete smiled.

Nell giggled, "Some dudes need a written invitation."

Nodding agreement, Mollie smiled, "A day at the beach house was invitation enough."

All the Core Rimmers cheered, "Excellent!"

Keith asked Drew, "How's Leo?"

"Better," Drew chuckled. "You surprised him, bro. He's a shy nine-year-old realizing that he likes boys. You drove it all home in one verse of one song."

Corey nodded, "He wanted to be with us, while we walk around checking dorms, but Geoff and Lenny need their big brother. We transported with them to the townhouse, got them settled, and told them we'd be back in about an hour."

Drew assured, "I'll bet Geoff will be asleep when we get home. Lenny might be, or he might be keeping Leo company."

Mike asked Lindsay, "Mom and dad are kewl with you doing this?"

"Yep," Lindsay grinned, "this is my job, no thanks to you." Impatiently, Mike huffed.

Grinning, Prez instructed, "This little exercise is mostly for kids who might be anxious about school tomorrow. If the kids are already in bed, leave well enough alone. It's the stragglers we need to check on. Ease their minds so they can be rested. If you run across a really troubled kid, tap your comm-badge and have Alden call us via our sub-vocals. At least two of us will come to help."

Keith asked, "I guess it would be good to know if any of you are stressed about school?"

Mostly, heads shook. Nell sighed, "It's been over a year since I've seen the inside of a school."

"Almost two years for me," Mollie admitted. "There's a lot of catching up to do."

Derrick confirmed, "You're fine otherwise?"

Corbin grinned, "I'm actually looking forward to it." Adrienne, Bianca, Dominic, AJ, Jerry and Sean agreed.

Prez confirmed, "Is everyone set and ready?"

Troy nodded, "We told our boys the plan while we moved. Billy and Jason will show the newbies how to use the dimensional doors."

"Same here," AJ, replied. "Kenny's our oldest."

"Stan's our oldest and familiar with the dimensional doors," Kaleo answered. "We've used 'em three times."

Saying goodbye and goodnight to everyone, Paul and Ryan then gave Reyes hugs and kisses, and then transported back to Sullivan's Island. Glancing around, Reyes asked, "Do you need me at the dorms?"

Shaking his head, Derrick answered, "Let the boys in all three townhomes know you're home and available if needed, and then kick back, Reyes."

"We'll be home as quick as we can," Mike added.

"Let's get to it and get home to our kids," Prez encouraged. The Core Rimmers and dorm leaders started up the aisle. Most left the auditorium, except Drew and Corey who first powered down the facilities before heading off for dorm three.

Prez and Keith walked into dorm one. Coming out of room seven, Doc Wiener closed the door, started down the hall and then smiled, "Tonight's performances were truly memorable, boys."

Keith chuckled, "It was the kids making everything more fun."

"I really think that the extra hundred-and-thirty turned everything around," Prez shared.

Doc Wiener told them, "The three Ka'aukai brothers are patients of mine. Friday, they learned the truth about how their mother died. I destroyed all the lies CPS told them, but had to reopen old wounds. I've been giving them sedatives that will block most dreams, so the truth isn't clouded by their imaginations. All three are asleep. Their alarm clock is set for seven-thirty, so they have plenty of time to shower, eat and get to school."

"Kewl," Prez and Keith chorused.

Doc Wiener said, "I've only got one more patient to check on, but I'll be around the dorms if you need me for anything."

"Thanks again, Doc," Prez warmly smiled.

Just inside the first set of doors at dorm three, at the staircase landing, Pat and Ralphie had obviously discovered the magic of deep French kissing. Obliviously, they held one another tight and swapped spit. Following Drew through the second set of doors into the first floor hallway, Corey giggled, "Breathe, dudes." Affirmatively and enthusiastically, Pat and Ralphie hummed into their kiss.

A few steps down the hall, when the door closed, Drew grinned, "They seem very disturbed about school."

"More like about being separated for eight hours," Corey giggled.

"It's Ralphie, the aggressor, in the corner though," Drew noticed.

Rapidly nodding, Corey giggled, "Pat's figured stuff out, obviously."

John's voice drifted through Corey's and Drew's minds, telling them, 'It basically happened during the meeting with Doc Wiener this morning. Pat, Rafe and Chris shared their story, and Ralphie cried as hard as the three of them. Now Pat believes that Ralphie's his angel. Rafe and Jay are happy that they survived and are together. Chris is happy with Jay, Rafe and Pat here. This morning was what our moms call a necessary evil. It put everything into perspective for all the B.O.E. kids.'

Corey and Drew didn't stop walking until reaching an open door. Looking inside room six, Victor Singh and Harry Cohen, who were ex-level one orphanage boys, were roaming their room in their underwear, getting stuff ready for the next day. Both were ten year old boys from Anaheim and rescued by Drew and Corey. Drew wondered, "How's it goin', dudes?"

Smiling at the two leaders, Harry said, "We're good, mostly."

Vic asked, "Will we need to bring our laptops to school tomorrow?"

Corey answered, "No, tomorrow's tests only. You don't even have to worry about pencils, just be there," he paused and giggled, "wearing more than briefs."

Knowing the sort of responses he might receive, Harry grinned, "We were hoping for a poolside dress code."

"Speak for yourself!" Vic giggled. "We're almost the same age, but you're almost three inches taller than me! I've got a lot more growing to do, before sitting in school with my willie hangin' out!"

Thoughtfully, Drew muttered, "The topic of laptops going to school is an important one." Tapping his sub-vocal, Drew ordered, "Alden, get laptop backpacks for all the kids at both bases. We'll need them either Tuesday or Wednesday. Actually, you might as well get backpacks for every computer, whether a kid owns it already or not."

"On the way," Alden replied.

Corey asked the two boys in the room, "Everything else is kewl, dudes?"

"Yeah," Harry and Vic chorused.

Waving, Drew smiled, "Sleep tight. We'll see you in the morning." He and Corey walked further down the hall. Three more room doors were closed. The fourth door was open, with sounds of Chris and Jay chuckling up a storm drifting out to the hall. Grinning at Corey, Drew knocked on the door frame.

Turning and seeing the two young leaders, Jay went off, waving his right arm with the cast, and ranting, "I can't do shit with this friggin' thing! I can't beat off, or do half of what I want with Chris, without beaning him and knocking him out cold. Necrophilia was never my favorite thing, ya know?" Corey and Drew cracked up. Jay pointed at the laptop PC, bitching, "I can't even type on the damned computer without making errors all over the place. Simply hitting enter without hitting four other keys is damned near impossible. And I'm supposed write on a test page tomorrow? How? With my toes?"

Chris, Corey and Drew howled laughing. Slowly nodding, Jay smirked, "Just my luck, the Romulan asshole that blew up my apartment and broke my right wrist is already dead. Why couldn't it be my left wrist? My whole life is screwed for the next six weeks!" Corey started hiccuping. Drew led his hysterical hubby down the hall. "I want some payback, dammit!" Jay yelled after them.

Over Drew's comm-badge, Alden softly giggled, "Speaking of payback; I kinda forgot to tell him that with Clan medical capabilities, his recovery time is measured in days, not weeks. I'll bet you that next time he won't accuse me of being programmed by Microsoft!"

Done swapping spit with Ralphie, Pat giggled into Chris' and Jay's room, "Quit yer bitchin'! Your boyfriend is in your room. Mine is going back home, a fact neither of us is happy about." Before Pat could get to his dorm room door, Chris and Jay hurried out to the hall after him, tickling him mercilessly and giving him no end of shit for giving them shit.

Passing the last closed room doors in that hall, Corey and Drew heard music from Lance's and Scott's room. Drew knocked on the door. A moment later, the door swung open. Shirtless and with his Les Paul hanging from his shoulder, Lance grinned, "What's up, guys?" Beyond Lance, Corey and Drew could see Scott, also shirtless and with his Stratocaster hanging off his shoulder.

Corey giggled, "Revved up from the concert, dudes?"

Lance cheered, "They were SO AWESOME! Keith can sing exactly like the guy in Journey and the guy in REO Speedwagon. Mike completely blew my doors off during almost every song. I've been playing for three years, but he made me feel like a beginner."

Coming to the door and standing about a meter behind his roommate, Scott chuckled, "Sometimes I closed my eyes and listened. The scary thing is, I could barely tell it wasn't the original band's live recording I was listening to."

"So we're trying figure out a few songs they played," Lance grinned.

Drew chuckled, "Keith's been playing keys as far back as I can remember, about nine years. It's the same for Mike, Derrick and Prez."

Nudging Lance and getting his attention, Scott smirked, "No wonder we're so far behind them."

Corey shared, "Troy told us that he was messin' around with piano and guitar at a young age too. Then, around fifth grade, he started with the wind instruments too."

Drew wondered, "Are you dudes considering school tomorrow?"

Lance checked with Scott, who shrugged, "We're on the fence about it, but leaning toward not. We've got a new home and new people to get used to."

"Not to mention a hundred songs to learn or relearn," Lance grinned.

Corey giggled, "If we don't see you at breakfast, we'll know why."

"Have a good night," Drew offered. Scott and Lance said goodnight. Seeing the two young leaders walk toward the common room, Lance closed the door. Almost everyone from the other hall was in the common room watching TV, and most of them were directly responsible for dunking Corey and Drew earlier in the day. Evil snickering erupted in the room. As soon as Craig, Phil, Erik,

Travis, Tony and Vaziik stood, Corey and Drew ran back down the hall, laughing their butts off. Before being chased out into the night, Drew giggled, "Goodnight, dudes!"

At the second dormitory Derrick and Mike found much the same as Drew and Corey had; all the youngest boys were in closed dorm rooms already asleep. All the older ex-prostitute boys were still awake though, and loose talk about who wanted to sleep with whom flowed freely. Walking down the hall, Derrick and Mike were confronted by Kelly Littlepage and his roomie, Hugh Gartrell. Kelly was down to only his boxers. Hugh was shirtless and wearing boardies, commando style, sagging low with the top of his pubes showing.

Kelly devilishly grinned, "Have I mentioned that all the Core Rimmers are hot?"

"Hot enough to give straight dudes reason to switch sides," Hugh evilly snickered.

Derrick blushed and chuckled. Mike chortled, "Comin' from you dudes, with all your experiences, that's a compliment."

Kelly asked, "Is it true that you two, Prez and Keith learned everything together?"

Nodding, Derrick admitted, "Yep, it's true."

Hungrily growling, Hugh suggested, "We should take over the common room some night; you two, plus Prez and Keith, and Kaleo and Tory too."

From the lavatory where he was shaving, Darryl Don loudly cheered, "Count me in on some of that action! I'd show that sexy red-Head Rimmer a few new tricks." Derrick and Mike cracked up.

"We're serious!" Kelly laughed.

Hugh sniggered, "Curiosity killed the cat, but the bi-boy has to ask; what are you dudes packin'?"

Mike giggled, "Come on, dudes! Any of us Core Rimmers doing stuff like that would be wrong on so many levels."

Nodding, Derrick laughed, "First off, we're married. Secondly, we're Clan leaders. Both are reason for us to not even go there."

Darryl sniggered, "Just answer Hugh's question, and include any of the other Core Rimmers you know intimately."

Glancing at each other, Derrick and Mike shrugged. Derrick began, "Mike's seven-and-a-half by five; Keith's seven by six."

Hugh, Kelly, Darryl and several others who had been listening in loudly cheered, "AWESOME!"

Mike giggled, "Derrick's about seven by five-and-a-quarter. Troy, Prez and Kaleo are about six-and-a-half by five-and-a-half."

Done shaving, Darryl walked out of the lavatory, grinning, "Are all of you guys above average?"

"We can't really say all of us are," Derrick sniggered. "We haven't seen the youngest four."

Kelly smiled, "But Drew and John are Keith's brothers. Maybe they're not fully grown yet, but in three or four more years, all of 'em will be."

Hugh longingly sighed, "If only some of our paying customers were as kewl and endowed."

Walking out of his room, Christian Beresford chuckled, "Let's make this like show and tell. You told, now show the goods!"

"Uh, we'd better go," Derrick chortled.

Kelly chuckled, "What if we promise to be good and keep our hands off of you?"

Stepping out of their room with wide smiles and sparkling eyes, Darren and Lance Elling made it six ex-prostitutes surrounding Mike and Derrick. Derrick locked eyes with Darren DeVault laughing, "DUDE! You're straight and hung like a horse!"

Darren smirked, "Nine-and-a-half inches, limp and erect, but I ain't stupid. If you two are gonna show, I wanna see too."

Mike shrugged and checked with Derrick; "It's not like no one's ever seen us. All the Core Rimmers have."

Taking Mike's hand, Derrick giggled, "Okay, but this circle becomes a line, and no fair touching!" Rapidly nodding, Mike pointed at the hallway wall. Chattering, chuckling and passing silly remarks, six boys lined up and leaned against the wall. Coming out of their room, Cody Padro and Dominic Slager also leaned against the wall. Without further hesitation, Derrick and Mike embraced, looking deep into each other's eyes, confirming that this was kewl, not only for both of them, but for the dudes in this hall who were waiting expectantly. Each came to the conclusion that they were all Clan brothers anyway, and that none of these dudes had ever nested in the Hundserts' basement, and therefore hadn't seen morning wood or chubbies that most kids had. Derrick and Mike deeply kissed. Replaying their favorite song in their minds, The Scorpions 'Still Loving You', the kiss became more urgent and they started swaying.

"Whoa!" Hugh softly commented, "That's one fucking hot kiss!"

Even the straight boys had to admit it was true.

Finished walking through dorm one, Prez and Keith walked into the dorm two hallway. Keith wondered, "What's goin' on?"

Kelly gestured to the two human vacuums, saying, "Show and tell time."

Prez sniggered, "If you dudes had joined the nest, you would've seen something any given morning."

Pointing like a teacher, Keith playfully instructed, "Don't bother looking at their arms; they're just feelin' each other up. Watch their legs and their butts. Right after the grind begins, they'll be ready to show." Everyone, including Mike and Derrick, nodded and softly chuckled.

Raising his eyebrows with an evil thought, Prez seductively purred, "Keith, just hearing your voice gets me all kinds o' randy."

A little stunned, Keith locked eyes with Prez. Always losing himself in Prez's blue eyes, Keith started to melt. Before his lover completely withered, Prez pulled Keith close. Keith landed an extremely passionate kiss. Wholeheartedly, Keith and Prez displayed their love with roaming hands and soft groans.

Darren grinned and proclaimed, "Four for the price of two!"

Swooning, Derrick and Mike hesitantly separated, each grabbing tender little kisses as they took the first steps back. Letting go of each other, Mike and Derrick reached down and tore open the Velcro on their boardies then pushed their shorts and boxers down. All eyes focused on two erections for a long while. Prez and Keith separated then followed their friends examples', proudly displaying their goods for inspection.

Darren grinned, "When I had to make money, I only took johns that were growers, like you dudes. For me, that was my only condition making deals with other dudes."

Kelly nodded, "I would've taken any or all four, at a substantially reduce rate; like for a nice dinner at a nice place."

Pointing across a row of four teen packages, Hugh smiled, "That's why they're leaders. Two cut with low hangin' sacks, two uncut of highly respectable length, and all four are much thicker than a lot of men I was with. They've got the confidence to be leaders, and on stage for two-hours at a shot, right there. What gets me is how high Derrick and Keith can sing without very tight cock rings. That's what I expected to find."

Sniggering, the Core Rimmers began pulling up their drawers. Mike explained, "This is what most kids in the nest eventually see. The facts are, we're the same as you."

"And you're the same as us," Prez added. "Believe you can do something and the battle is won."

Keith nodded, "Think of what you'd most like to be and then be that person. Think about what kind of careers you'd like."

"You dudes are older and only get a few years of Clan care," Derrick reminded. "Get as much as you can out of each and every day. Make your lifetimes plans here, so when you're ready, you can move on to Starfleet or higher education at universities, or whichever career you choose."

Darren wondered, "Why do you guys care so much?"

Prez smiled, "Don't you feel it, Darren? I think you must, and that's what's really blowing you away."

Keith answered, "We're brothers, now and forever. It's a kind of magic that started back in the States only about ten weeks ago. We don't know how or why the magic started, and I personally don't really care."

Derrick emphasized, "In the States, two brothers grew to four and then six, and kept on growing. Right here, four friends became brothers, and then lovers and musicians, and are now two sets of two couples. We figured it out yesterday, when all four of us were on the same bed together for the first time in over a week. It wasn't the time since we'd last done it that made it outstanding; it was something way more than anything we could logically define."

"It's within all of us in the Clan," Mike confided. "It's brotherhood, sisterhood, parenthood, family, love and respect, caring and consideration."

"If we could do nothing else except spend time with each and every kid, we'd love it," Prez explained. "The reality is there's enough day-to-day planning and resource reallocation necessary. For instance; ninety-five newbies kept us busy all afternoon. To provide them leadership at Oneula Beach, AJ, Jerry, Kaleo, Tory, Sean and Troy are moving there with their kids. Almost all of them will be here again tomorrow; some going to school with us, but hopefully the majority will want to take the week off, so they'll do what they want, just like everybody else has this last week."

"For the next day or two, I fully expect that most will eat their meals here," Keith offered, "but over time, more and more may choose to eat meals there. Some of the kids here may decide to eat over there, just for a change of scenery or to be with friends." He paused and chuckled, "The dimensional doors to get us base-to-base are right there in the dining room. Are the chefs going to make coordinated meals at both bases? I haven't asked, and really would rather be surprised when we're given that many more choices for meals. If ya don't like what's here, maybe they'll have something different offered there. Imagine having five choices at five bases three times a day."

Moans, moos and evil snickering erupted. Derrick chuckled, "It's near eleven, dudes. Try to get a good eight hours sleep."

"We'll see you in the morning," Mike, Prez and Keith chorused. Everyone said goodnight, and the four Core Rimmers walked down the hall as couples, hand-in-hand. Now that the rounds were made, they believed that all the rescued boys still awake seemed to be in good spirits. They went home to their kids waiting at the townhomes for the first time. They goofed around at the steps up to their front doors, calling, "Goodnight neighbor!" far more than necessary before going inside.

Inside their townhouse, Prez and Keith climbed the stairs. The television was on in Dee's and Sammy's room. Keith and Prez looked in and smiled at Sammy and Ben, lying on top of the covers on one of the beds in their underwear. Sammy blushed, "We didn't want to sleep apart."

"I checked with my folks," Ben offered. "It's kewl."

Prez chuckled, "Where are Dee and Gage?"

"Dee's in the next room with Richie," Sammy sniggered. "I told him he could stay in here."

Ben giggled, "Gage is next door with Jonah. Reyes feels like he should've just gone home with Paul and Ryan."

Keith smiled, "Set the TV timer and get some rest. There's school in the morning." Prez and Keith then said goodnight and went into their bedroom.

* * * * *

Oneula Beach

Sunday, November 7, 2004, 10:33 PM HTZ

The majority of level two orphans were very tired upon arrival at their dorms. As expected, ten o'clock at night felt more like one or two in the morning to them. Little kids immediately hit the bathrooms and bed. Kaleo and Tory had the youngest sons, and were told to go home, for all their sons to have nearby Core Rimmers and dads.

Walking from the Oneula Beach dining room and into the quad of dorms, AJ, Jerry, Sean and Troy were called by an unknown teen boy's voice. All four stopped and turned to find a teen of similar age, wearing khaki cargo shorts, and a white polo shirt with a Clan Short Security logo over the left breast area. Jogging from the housing area check point, the guy loudly said, "I'm Emerson Bannister, this base's chief of security."

When Emerson was nearer, Troy introduced himself and Sean, and then Jerry introduced himself and AJ. Shaking hands with each Core Rimmer, Emerson smiled, "Call me Em, dudes. My team and I aren't military, we're like civilian police. Since this isn't the division headquarters, I assume Director O'Brian will be living there and you four are living here?"

"That's right," AJ replied, "but there are two more Core Rimmers living here. You just missed Kaleo and Tory. They went home with their kids and all of ours."

When all the Rimmers nodded, Em asked, "Is there anyone in charge here?"

Sean answered, "We're not working it that way. Prez decided against that idea."

Troy nodded at his partner and then turned to Em, grinning, "One Head Rimmer playing Pissed of Chickens is plenty."

"Sweet," Emerson chortled, "I love that game." The Core Rimmers cracked up. Emerson laughed, "Don't knock it until you've played it. You've gotta keep the weasels from stealing your exploding eggs. One less egg means one more wolf."

Jerry sniggered, "I've never even watched Prez play, but it sounds bizarre enough."

Em smiled and wondered, "Where are you guys living?"

"All of us are living in the townhomes," Troy responded, and then pointed in that direction, adding, "Kaleo and Tory are in the first unit, me, Sean and our sons are in the next one, and then AJ and Jerry and their sons in the third unit."

"All the kids on this base, including our own kids, are pretty new to the Clan," Sean softly explained.

"Not a problem," Em smiled. "Our guys will be making rounds through all the dorms and every shared building. We'll even be roamin' around outside your townhouses, and the single family homes too. We've got this base covered, everything inside the fence is secured."

Jerry told Em, "We're gonna check the newbie kids ourselves tonight. You can join us too, if you want."

Em chuckled, "That's kewl, dudes. Tonight's a special night for these kids. They need to see you guys. Tomorrow we'll start getting to know the kids. I just wanted to say hello." The five of them said goodnight, and went off in opposite directions.

Eighteen of the older boys from dorms one and two were relaxing before dorm one's common room television when Troy, Sean, AJ and Jerry made the rounds. Troy asked the teenage boys, "Can't sleep?" All eighteen happily gushed on and on about the concert, their rooms, both bases, and that they were simply too overjoyed to even try sleeping. Sean and Troy recognized Neil Green and Tad Markell on one of the sofas. Scribbling in a notebook, and using Tad's chest as a desk, Neil put his pet project aside. At the end of the rambling, Troy sniggered, "Well, that might just force your school decisions, guys. If you can't sleep and can't wake..."

"Or function very well when you do wake..." Jerry softly chortled.

"Then take the day and the week off," Sean grinned.

"We all had a week, so don't think of it as missing something," AJ smiled. "It's school, and this is a new place with new rules. Get used to it all first, and don't worry about school. You've got all sorts of stuff to keep you occupied between both bases."

Troy nodded, "Don't forget to start up your laptop computers and check out the division's web site."

Dale Barrett softly sighed, "None of us are too good with computers."

Almost simultaneously, AJ, Jerry and Sean called, "Alden?"

"Yes?" the Rimmer AI giggled. Wide smiles spread across the boys' faces.

Troy asked, "Can you guide and assist willing students learn the joys of computing?"

"As long as they understand that I'm not responsible for Windows crashes," Alden giggled. He then played an audio file of Keith's last rant over that same issue. Needless to say, Alden bleeped out quite a bit of vulgarity, but left Prez's soft sniggering in the background, which made the rant even funnier.

The recorded Keith finally bitched, "If I had to spend this much friggin' time programming my synthesizers, we'd all be royally screwed!" Lowering the pitch of his voice, he droned, "Uh... duh... huhu... umm... What's a scroll wheel? Which memory location? How do I pull it up to use it? That question always makes me snigger, by the way. Press which button how many times? Do I need hamsters and lube for this exercise? Duh-huhu..." Prez roared laughing. All eighteen newbies cracked up.

"So yeah," Alden giggled. "I can replay that whenever a system crashes. That ought to work."

Sean giggled, "Just ask Alden, guys, he'll help."

"And talk about dicks until you're laughing so hard, you're crying," AJ softly chortled.

"That's mostly taken care of, at least for me," Alden happily gushed. "Polynesian, thirteen in appearance, but just starting puberty, like Reyes, Drew and Corey; about their height too, one-hundred-sixty-three centimeters or five-feet-four-inches tall. My dick will be like theirs too; a grower, Polynesian dark and uncut. I'm still deciding about my voice. I like my voice, but maybe a little deeper, as if it's changed." Dialing in new timbre on his voice synthesis controls, a much deeper and sultrier sounding Alden asked, "Is this one okay? What do guys think? It's a little deeper than Prez's voice."

"Yeah, like Isaac Hayes," Troy giggled.

Sean prompted "A little higher, like Troy's, Mike's or Derrick's voice."

"Or yours," AJ and Jerry disjointedly offered.

Humming for a few moments while he sampled all three voices, Alden then dialed in a new teenaged boy voice and tried it out, asking, "Like this? Maybe with an accent? I've been sticking pretty close to English speaking Native Hawaiians, but that can change too."

Around the room, the boys shrugged. Jerry recommended, "That tone is kewl, Alden. Try it out on others tonight and tomorrow. If the general agreement is yes, then keep it. We need to know what to expect to hear, so don't make too many changes. Find one that you like. What others think is nice to know, but it's more important that you like it."

Alden giggled, "Thanks, Jerry. Thanks guys, I'll check in with the other Core Rimmers and the few other kids that are still awake." Alden touched base with all the Core Rimmers first. They were briefly confused, but everyone liked the sound of Alden's new voice. He shared all his thoughts for his as yet to be created body, just to speak and give everyone enough to offer opinions.

Troy wondered, "Is there anyone awake at dorm two?"

Dale, Trent, Darrell, Ellis, Owen and Virgil each confirmed that they were the only ones still roaming that dormitory, the last they saw.

Jerry reminded, "You know where we live. If you need anything, let Alden know so he can let us know."

The eighteen newbie boys assured everything was kewl. Saying goodnight, the four Core Rimmers returned to their townhomes and sons.

Inside townhouse number one, Kaleo and Tory were upstairs in the master bed with all five of their sons. Only Stan was still awake with his dad and pop; his other four brothers were peacefully sleeping. Kaleo had the room's television on, but the sound level very low and without the surround sound system. When the doorbell rang, Kaleo softly asked Alden who was there, and then mouthed, "Let the guys know we're up here and unlock the door to let them in. We don't want to risk waking anyone."

Hearing Alden's explanation and the front door unlock, AJ, Jerry, Sean and Troy let themselves in. Only a soft kitchen light in the rear of the house provided illumination for them to get to the stairs. Rounding the turn halfway up the steps, they got a little more light from the hallway bathroom.

Entering the master bedroom, AJ smiled at the sight of two young fathers surrounded by five sons. Troy whispered, "Nothing from our boys next door?"

"Or our sons?" Jerry softly added.

Kaleo shook his head. Tory whispered, "Not a peep."

Holding up his arm and hand, Sean quietly said, "Goodnight, guys. We'll set our alarm for seven." Troy nodded and waved, and then so did Jerry and AJ.

Heading for their respective homes; Troy and Sean climbed the steps to the second townhouse, saying goodnight to AJ and Jerry, still heading toward the third townhouse. The latter two found a TV on entertaining an empty living room. The three Hunnicutt brothers had obviously crashed, but wanted normal sounds in their environment. Picking up the remote control, AJ turned off the TV. Leading the way with a mischievous twinkle in his eyes, Jerry guided AJ upstairs. They checked on their sons. Not so surprisingly, Kenny's room was empty. Obviously, Mike and Shaun wanted company in their room. One of the two windows was open, only about six centimeters. All three boys were shirtless and wearing briefs. The two youngest were breathing deeply from one bed and Kenny was in the other. All three were intertwined with sheets and blankets, making any chance of adjusting anything futile. Softly sniggering, AJ and Jerry went to their new master bedroom.

Next door, Troy and Sean found Billy awake, reclining on the living room sofa, snacking on potato chips and watching television. Widely smiling because his dads were home earlier than expected, Billy sat up and told them, "Jase crashed right after Jimmy and Scott, maybe fifteen minutes after you left. When I couldn't sleep, I came down here."

Troy asked, "Are you worried about anything?" and parked his butt on the sofa to the left of his eldest son.

Shrugging, Billy hummed then reluctantly replied, "I was never too great at school. I work my ass off to get C's."

Taking a seat on Billy's other side, Sean nodded, "Me too. Ya know what though?"

Billy wondered, "What?"

"Clan schools are organized differently," Sean reminded. "Everything is different from what it was. No one cared if I passed or failed before. Plenty of people care now, most importantly me. I want to make all my brothers, sisters, sons and T'hy'la proud."

"Encouragement is primarily what you need," Troy smiled. "All four of you got here Thursday. Next Monday works for placement tests just as easily as tomorrow. In the meantime, you'll get encouraged, by me and dad. Right off the top of my head, I can see you tomorrow, a Core Rimmer son, the oldest at this base, with a bunch of other kids who decide to take the week off. They'll look to you for answers about me, and dad, and all the other Core Rimmers. You spent the day with us yesterday and today, so no problem, right?"

Rapidly nodding, Billy grinned, "Right."

Picking up what Troy was saying, Sean admitted, "Last Sunday and Monday, I never believed I would find a boyfriend. By the time I had lunch Tuesday, I had met and fallen for your pop. Wednesday, we were Core Rimmers, leaders. I couldn't really imagine myself as a leader. By watching all the other Core Rimmers, including your pop, I started actually feeling like a leader. By Thursday, I was thinking like a leader, with a shit-load more to learn. Most importantly, I want to learn how Prez keeps us organized; I want to learn what Keith does backing up Prez. I can pay attention to any of these dudes and learn something from each of them."

Troy nodded, "So this week, you and your brothers chill, and me and your dad will encourage a little something new everyday. There's passing and failing, without trying or caring. Try a little and care a lot, and watch it all turn around, Billy."

Billy cheered, "You two are awesome! I expected... I don't know... the other creeps would've blasted me with both barrels, making me feel even worse."

Troy asked, "Do you know what that is?"

Curiously tilting his head, Billy wondered, "What what is?"

Troy explained, "Person A feels bad; worried, sad, anything negative like that. Person A tells person B, who then adds misery, who tells persons C, D, E, and F, and now they're all unhappy. It's called a vicious spiral, a never-ending loop down the toilet and through the sewer. Your old parents kept your entire family on the downward spiral. My father was like that. It got him divorced and alienated from his wife and only son. We're not going there, Billy. Every hour of every day can be something important, if you'll only treat them that way. In this family, everybody's allowed to have a bad time. The thing is, we're going to help one another, not make matters worse. I know your dad will keep an eye on me as well as all four sons. I'll watch out for Sean and all four sons. All four sons watch each other and both dads. We can choose to keep each other happy, or make one another miserable."

Uncontrollably, Billy rapidly nodded and giggled.

Sean asked, "It sounds like a good idea, huh?"

"Very good," Billy giggled.

"Share it," Sean simply instructed. "Share it with your brothers, your friends and all the kids. We choose to be happy or sad. We choose to make others happier or sadder. Vulcans have complete control over their emotions. We're humans trying to think logically like Vulcans. That means thinking through some instinctual gut reactions. The simple answer to the simple question; 'Will this action help or hurt?' interrupts the gut reaction. Helping is always better than hurting. Avoid those nasty downward spirals as much as you can. Just trying landed me the partner and future husband of my dreams."

Troy provocatively chuckled, "Ooo! Keep it up, Tiger." Sean and Billy helplessly giggled. Unintentionally, a yawn escaped from Billy. Rubbing Billy's shoulder, Troy prompted, "Come on, let's call it a night."

Nodding and turning the TV off, Billy shyly smirked, "I guess I was more worried than I wanted to admit."

Standing, Troy suggested, "There's no reason to stew in worries. Think about them a little on your own, but if you're getting nowhere, say something. Get it off your chest."

Talking Billy's hand, Sean also stood, guiding his eldest son up. Starting for the stairs, Billy smiled, "We knew you guys were kewl. Things are gonna be so much better."

Climbing the steps behind his son, Sean instructed, "Turn off the alarm in your room. I'll turn off the alarm in Jimmy's and Scott's room. Adding school on top of everything else is too much."

"We'll need to reiterate that with all the other newbies tomorrow morning," Troy softly said. He tapped his sub-vocal to make sure Alden was listening and all the other Core Rimmers could hear him saying, "All the kids that arrived since Wednesday night, Latin Kings and everyone afterward, need to take time to acclimate. What we've been treating loosely, so that everyone can choose for themselves, needs to be made a little more important."

At the top of the steps, Billy waited for his dad and pop. He hugged both of his new parents and got kisses on the cheek with soft wishes for him to sleep well. Billy went into the room he shared with Jason. Sean turned off the alarm clock in the next room, and then went with Troy to their new master bedroom. Closing and locking the door behind him, Sean leered, "I'll reopen it before we crash. You're ass is mine, Lover."

Loving the determined tone, Troy giggled, "I've ridden your cock a couple of times. I'm sure that I'm used to it now. I want bottom, with you in control, hovering over me, Tiger."

Going to take Troy's clothes off, Sean smiled, "You guys played five songs in a row that basically told every kid here, get yourself a partner and go bang your brains out."

With his polo shirt being pulled up and over his head, Troy sniggered, "Older kids that wanted to hear that message got it, but for the little kids, it was just rock and roll good times."

Dropping the shirt and then reaching for Troy's shorts, Sean realized his Lover was already raging. He locked eyes with Troy and softly asked, "From thinking of us?"

Nodding, Troy whispered, "I told you almost a week ago, we're gonna play by the same rules. You threatened twice, Tiger. Now I want it twice; the first time my way and the second time in whichever position you want." Sean let Troy's shorts drop to the floor. Holding up an index finger, Troy giggled, "A little music to mask any noises from waking our boys." Kicking his shorts away from his feet, Troy hurried to the never before used stereo, powered it up and found an oldies radio station playing The Temptations 'Get Ready'. Turning to face Sean, who had taken his own shirt off, Troy danced over to him, making his cock crazily bounce, and sang; "And I'm bringing you a love that's true. So get ready, so get ready. I'm gonna try to make you love me too. So get ready, so get ready, 'cause here I come. I'm on my way." Helplessly, Sean evilly snickered, dropped his drawers and joined Troy's dance. Soon, they were embracing and slowing their dance, bare body against warm bare body.

* * * * *

Ewa Beach

Sunday, November 7, 2004, 10:50PM HTZ

Listening to Alden's new voice on the way home, Drew and Corey returned to their townhouse. In the living room, with his ear-buds in his ears, Leo danced to his music. Their nine-year-old son happened to be facing away from the door, toward the dining room and kitchen. He didn't even realize Drew and Corey were dancing with him until he turned around and jumped, startled by their sudden appearance. All three helplessly giggled.

Pulling an ear-bud out, Leo beamed, "More proof that you two are right for me. My mom and dad would've pulled that same trick, starting to dance with me, one or the other or both at once."

Corey giggled, "Your brothers are asleep?"

Leo nodded, "Lenny gave it up right after you left."

Drew confirmed, "You're doing okay?"

Nodding and swinging an arm around the room, Leo smiled, "This is part of what I needed too; a home to be with my family. The nests are nice, a good beginning, but this is nicer. I went up with Lenny and got him tucked in next to Geoff. That was so awesome! I never did it before. They're feeling more like little brothers every day. It turns out that Grandma Morrison was right; you two are my dads, you're friends too, but I definitely see you as fathers. Which reminds me, I'd like to spend more time with my new Grandmas and Grandpas. My old ones were back east, in Vermont. They died years ago, before I started school."

"We wanted to talk with you about that," Corey began.

Drew explained, "We're hearing through Alden that other Core Rimmers are seeing newbies needing time to adjust. You're one of them, Leo."

"I don't want to be separated from you and my brothers," Leo whined, "not for two hours, and definitely not for most of the school days after tomorrow. We talked about this already. I was scared enough just this last hour. What am I adjusting to that can't be done where my new family is; G-Cats and gorillas? No, what I'll be doing is wanting to be with either family, the ones that are gone and I can't be with, or with the new family at school. It's not even an option for me. School ain't a biggie. And it's placement tests, to see where I'm at, like any school change would be. I'd be better off there with my new family than anywhere else."

Corey smiled, "Done. We had to check, Leo."

Nodding, Leo sighed, "My folks always used to wonder about people that... uh... dwell, yeah that's the word... people that dwell on stuff. I'm not gonna dwell, I'm gonna remember them just as they were and we were. I can see parts of them already in both of you. In this family is where I belong and want to be. This is where I'll be, surrounded by a huge new family, with uncles and cousins around every corner. I barely got to say anything to Bruce yesterday or today. Him and I need to talk soon."

"That would be good," Drew assured. "I know that you're a lot alike. You both need and want your family around. Bruce is at the exact same place you are, Leo; building family bonds with parents, and with brothers and sisters. He'll be at school tomorrow, so you can talk with him any time ya want."

Forcing a disapproving frown, Corey crossed his arms, huffing, "If you're waking for school, it's bed time, young man."

Breaking into a giggling fit, Leo teased, "Close, pop, but no cigar." Dropping his arms and rapidly blinking, Corey faked confusion, appearing to try to understand where he screwed up, but helplessly sputtered and giggled.

"We're all going to bed," Drew sniggered. He turned Leo toward the steps, prompting, "Move your cute blond butt, mister."

Slumping and dragging his feet, Leo giggled, "It ain't blond yet, dad, another three or four years, I guess. For now, it's just white." He then sped up the stairs.

"What I'm trying to figure out is why it always works when Drew says it's bedtime," Corey giggled. "No one takes me seriously when I say it."

Climbing steps and bringing up the rear, Drew teased, "I do, angel, at least twice a day."

At the top of the steps, Leo blushed and giggled, "So are you two gonna mess around?"

Drew chuckled, "Not in bed tonight. In the shower, steaming up the bathroom before bed."

"And after we wake too, more than likely," Corey giggled.

"It's the best part of being so young," Drew instructed his son. "We can go for it quick, but over-and-over again faster than even fourteen-year-olds. They're trying to make it last. We've tried going slower to make it last, and usually fail, so oh well, try again later."

"Leo's exactly where we were at nine," Corey told Drew, "knowing what he wants, but a little scared of actually going there. Those first hugs and kisses seem like such a big step."

"I remember," Drew smiled. "We were friends for years first. Leo needs to find the friend that makes him want to overcome the fear."

"I have no idea who that might be or when," Leo softly sighed, and then giggled, "Wouldn't it be funny if your son turned out to be a breeder?" Stopping at the staircase landing, Leo spun around to see the expressions on his dad's and pop's faces.

Walking into the master bedroom, Corey giggled, "That's allowed too, Leo. It's the person, the whole personality, not the attached parts, not anywhere near as much as you think."

Pointing at the bed, Drew reminded Leo, "You're in the center of the bed." He then took Corey's hand and grinned, "Get comfy. We'll be back in fifteen minutes."

Widely smiling, Leo whispered, "Have fun," and then took his comm-badge off his polo shirt. Corey and Drew went into the master bathroom, and closed the door. He put the comm-badge on the dresser, before the framed photo taken of his adoption. Nodding at his new family's smiling faces, Leo was more certain everything was right. The toilet flushed and the shower water turned on.

For that one horrible night, he and his parents were victims. As soon as he woke Friday afternoon, he was a survivor. Leo took his new wallet out of his back pocket and looked at the only remaining Scott family portrait. If only all three had Clan style protection that crazy Thursday night. How wonderful everything might have been if the entire Scott family survived. He put his wallet on the dresser and his comm-badge on top of it, then he took his shirt off and dropped it on the growing pile with his brothers' dirty clothes.

Taking his shorts off, Leo watched his brothers sleeping. Both boys had brown hair, like Drew's hair. Leo had blond hair, almost the exact same shade as Corey's hair. The five of them actually could all pass for brothers, or cousins at least. Little would most people ever guess that the two oldest boys were really fathers of the younger three. It would be a trip to call Drew 'dad' and Corey 'pop' in some public place, just to watch reactions. Before dropping his shorts on the pile of dirty clothes, Leo took his iPod out of the pocket and placed it on the dresser.

Pausing in boxer-briefs, Leo wondered if he should keep them on or take them off. He hadn't yet been able to sleep nude, like his dads and brothers. During summer months in LA, he would sleep naked, without even thinking about it, and the climate at Ewa Beach was much like summer in Southern California. Now was the perfect night to give it a try, he reasoned. Pushing his boxer-briefs to the floor, Leo walked around the king-sized bed and climbed up, crawling over beside Lenny.

In the dimly lit room, Leo positioned a pillow behind his back. He sat up near the headboard, which was fashioned with a top section, about a foot above the mattress, as shelving for stuff, like the digital clock-radio already sitting there. He suddenly realized that he might actually be able to sleep with his trusty iPod, simply by putting it up on the shelf. That would remind him too much of Thursday night though, so he decided not to try it.

From beyond the closed master bathroom door, Leo heard his dad and pop giggling up a storm. They sent Leo's thoughts down a different tangent. He looked down at his limp package, and then at Lenny's similar uncut goods, and even Geoff's little turtled unit. Dicks are funny things, Leo grinned, and really thought about being gay, and what his new pop had told him. Yep, dicks are strange and nut sacks are weirder. Here's some leftover elbow skin, just to cover the jewels. That's not kewl! Dicks alone are bizarre, so let's make 'em look more odd with some crinkled up elbow skin.

Having seen his pop, with no visible hair on his sack, and his dad, with only a few hairs on his balls, and his teenage uncles with bushes of hair, Leo helplessly giggled and quickly covered his mouth. He tried to recall what his friends' packages looked like, other than the freaky sacks that all had the same elbow skin. Generally, among the boys his age, Leo thought most were about the same. Dee, Ben, Gage, Jason, Jonah and Sammy all had uncut dicks. Kenny, Billy and Scott all had cut dicks, which made their units more unique and somewhat more attractive. Sputtering and quickly covering his mouth, Leo giggled with the realization that he had spent many minutes with over a dozen different dicks flashing through his mind. He told himself, "Nope, not gay... MUCH!"

Shifting in his sleep, Lenny snuggled up to Leo's right leg. Lenny's eyes briefly opened and he softly sighed, "My big bro," and then seemed to fall right back to sleep.

Finger combing hair off Lenny's brow, Leo whispered, "You're an awesome little bro, Lenny." A wide smile spread across Lenny's face, but otherwise he didn't flinch.

This place felt like home more and more with every passing hour, Leo realized. The shower water turned off. Only moments later, the bathroom door opened a crack, letting light flow and steam billow into the room. Wondering how much of that steam was from hot water and how much was from his new dads, again Leo burst into a giggling fit. He pulled one of the other two pillows to his face and tried to stop laughing, but remembering what Corey had said about sex between boys, Leo only laughed harder.

At his age, playing with his dick to make it hard was just something fun to do when no one was around to see. Until he was told what masturbation was, Leo had no idea that the afternoons spent at home, studying at the kitchen table, with one hand turning pages and the other hand rubbing his crotch actually had a name. Corey had also said that it was common; every boy played with their dick to some extent, and it was likely to continue into adulthood. Leo had no clue what an orgasm felt like, or what it might be like to have another boy fondle his dick. He could only just barely imagine hugging and kissing any of his friends, new or old, and what that might feel like. As curious as he really was, Leo knew it wasn't kewl to ask if his dad and pop had gone for oral or anal sex. He wasn't ready for either and didn't want to know any more than he already did. The whole idea of friendships becoming sexual relationships was brand new to Leo.

The bathroom light went out. A moment later, Corey and Drew stepped out of the bathroom and toward the bed. They smiled widely at Leo, clutching onto a pillow and laughing as quietly as he possibly could.

Drew crawled onto the bed beside his son, whispering, "Fifteen minutes, right?"

Glancing at the clock, Leo turned back to his dad, laughing harder and shaking his pillow covered face. Corey glanced at the clock, gasping "About twenty-five minutes, Drew." Feverishly nodding his head, Leo almost lost it and tried to eat the pillow, so he wouldn't wake Geoff or Lenny.

Grinning at his hysterical son, Drew softly smiled, "Well, we had to leak first and towel off too."

"Or you're getting old," Leo cackled, and quickly covered his face with the pillow again.

Suspiciously squinting, Corey climbed onto the bed, giggling, "For that remark, Leo gets tickled first thing in the morning." Evilily grinning at Leo, Drew slowly and deliberately nodded his head. Reaching over to turn off the bedside lamp, Corey yawned, "We'd better call it a night." When the light went off, a night light across the bedroom, near the master bathroom door, flickered on. Another night light in the master bathroom reflected off the vanity mirror, providing sufficient illumination for anyone that needed the bathroom in the middle of the night.

Patting the mattress, Drew softly prompted, "Slide down, Leo."

"And give me my pillow back," Corey quietly giggled.

Handing over the pillow, Leo shifted to lay down, giggling, "I love you, pop. You too, dad."

"We love you too," Corey and Drew softly chorused. The three boys settled down in bed. One after another, they sighed and relaxed. Leo remained on his back. Drew moved onto his side, facing Leo. Corey maneuvered onto his side, snuggled up close to Drew.

After a little more than a minute, Leo whispered, "Dad?"

"Yeah?"

"What's it really like to love a boyfriend?"

"When it's right, it's like being reunited with another half of you. You can talk about anything and everything together. There's no one else you'd rather be with."

"What's it like to make love?"

"The same; two halves become whole. The feeling lingers on too. All day long, I can see it in your pop's eyes. I can feel it when we hold hands."

"I want that."

"You'll have it too, as soon as you find that very special other half of you."

Leo thought about that. After a few moments, Leo admitted, "I'm confused. You, pop, Lenny and Geoff feel like parts of me."

Corey interjected, "We're family."

"Our ages have something to do with it too," Drew softly considered. "Keith and John are my blood, my brothers and my friends. My dad is so much older that the friendship part is different. Dad's more like a mentor, someone I look up to."

Leo sighed and smiled, "I feel that way about both of you too. You mean so much in only two days."

Corey patiently reminded, "You need and we can easily give you what you need. What we need from you, you're already giving, just by being who you are."

Reaching a hand over to firmly grip Leo's shoulder, Drew explained, "There's only two or three years difference between us. We all have good parents who love us. I purposefully didn't use past tense, Leo. That kind of love never dies."

Feeling more calm and content than he imagined he might

Friday afternoon, Leo giggled, "This feels so right. It's like I can feel my real parents here too. It's definitely them plus this family I feel, all at once."

Corey brightly smiled, "Grandma Morrison's got a sixth sense. We feel it too, Leo."

Leo nervously asked, "Can I lay between you?"

Drew nodded and Corey giggled, "We figured you'd prefer that." Drew and Leo swapped places. Lenny flipped over and cuddled Geoff. Laying on their sides, Drew and Corey faced each other and Leo.

Drew checked, "Better?"

Leo nodded and shivered, "The best."

"Always tell us what you need or want," Corey encouraged.

"The worst thing we can say is no," Drew smiled.

"I need a dozen peanut butter chocolate chip cookies!" Leo giggled.

"No!" Corey and Drew firmly chorused.

Mulling over a question in his mind, Leo soon anxiously asked, "Show me what it's like to be loved, please?"

Corey and Drew knew this question would be asked, but thought it would take Leo longer. Drew softly smiled, "We will, but I want you to know that Corey's my other half."

Corey grinned, "Drew's my other half. You need what we can easily give you; a little experience so it doesn't seem so scary." He leaned over and kissed Leo on the mouth, gently and softly gliding his tongue over Leo's lips. Corey pulled back when Leo started giggling.

Reaching over, Drew picked up where Corey left off, kissing Leo the same way. Leo's mouth opened and Drew's tongue darted out only a little, to glide around Leo's front teeth and inner lips. He then pulled back, instructing, "Now it's your turn. Show Corey what a good student you are." Nodding and giggling, Leo turned to his dad.

Corey leaned over and kissed Leo. For the first time, Leo let his tongue dart out and caress the inside of another mouth. After a few moments, Corey smiled, "Very nice. Kissing is an art, and you get an 'A' plus. Now prove to Drew that you learned the lesson." Happily giggling, Leo turned his head to his dad.

Drew instructed, "Tongues are ticklish. Soon after your tongue explores my mouth, my tongue will touch yours. Let your tongue explore mine. Your tongue can retract and mine will go find it. Then my tongue pulls back and your tongue goes to find it." Enthusiastically nodding, Leo reached up for a kiss with his dad. Corey helplessly giggled at Leo's expression. Drew was the ultimate kisser and Leo was learning from the expert.

When the kiss broke, Leo giggled, "This is French kissing?"

Drew nodded and chuckled, "The advanced course requires a partner. It's held a lot longer, so you both have to breathe through your noses."

Leo confirmed, "Swappin' spit?"

Slowly nodding, Corey giggled, "Are you ready for the next lesson?"

"I think so," Leo nervously cackled.

At once, Leo felt his dad and pop reach hands over onto his shoulders. The two hands slid down over Leo's chest and back up to his neck. Cringing, Leo uncontrollably laughed. Both hands quickly moved down to Leo's chest again. To mute the sound before Lenny or Geoff woke, Drew leaned down for another tender kiss. Corey whispered, "Your boyfriend is the one you want to kiss tenderly, and he wants to kiss you tenderly. He's got the body that you absolutely have to touch. You've got the body that he can't stop touching, like me and Drew are showing you now."

Pulling back and widely smiling, Drew quietly explained, "You're giggling for two reasons. First, this is your first time experiencing any of this. Secondly, it's because we're your fathers. The slight differences in our ages make all this possible. When you and your boyfriend get this far, you won't be giggling, you'll be smiling, but too anxious to giggle."

Rapidly nodding, Leo giggled, "It feels great." Locking eyes, Corey and Drew took the next step. Each of their hands traveled down to Leo's belly and abdomen. Purposefully, Corey and Drew caressed Leo's torso, allowing their hands to explore their son's body. Leo nervously wondered, "When will you touch my dick?"

"That's actually the last thing touched," Drew smiled.

Corey nodded, "Me and Drew touched everything, from our hair to our toes."

"Your boyfriend is the one you'll want to touch everywhere," Drew instructed.

Leo giggled, "Omigod, I'll want him to touch me like this too." Two hands traveled down over Leo's hips and down to his legs, causing Leo to gasp and lurch. More giggling erupted and two hands traveled up the inside of Leo's legs and thighs. Drew winked at Corey. Corey sent his index finger out to gently trace Leo's scrotum, earning another gasp. Drew then repeated the process, but traced all the way up and around Leo's erection. Shaking and shivering, Leo gasped and then groaned.

Drew softly sniggered, "Do you want to practice?"

Shaking his head, Leo giggled, "That was amazing! Nothing ever felt like that! It was like a rollercoaster dive!"

"That's an orgasm," Corey giggled.

"Yeah?"

Corey giggled, "Did it feel like you couldn't stop it if you tried, and willingly tossed yourself over a cliff?"

"Yeah, exactly like that."

Drew helplessly chuckled, "It wasn't my intention, but that's the way it happens. All the kisses and touches make us all extremely sensitive. Eventually, it will last longer than a few seconds."

Taking hold of Leo's cock, Corey locked eyes with his wide-eyed son, and softly smiled, "The best part is, until you hit puberty, you can do it again and again, really quick." Corey gave Leo many firm, slow strokes, pulling Leo's foreskin over and back off the head of his cock. Contracting every muscle in his body at once, Leo shook, shivered and groaned through a second orgasm. Corey and Drew helplessly giggled.

"Omigod!" Leo huffed, "Amazing! I wonder how I never discovered this before."

Corey giggled, "How do you really feel?"

"Like saying thank you is no where near enough," Leo gushed.

Drew smiled, "You want to return the favor."

"Yeah, definitely."

"For your boyfriend, you will," Corey taught. "Everything he does for you, you'll have to do at least as much for him. Love is giving and receiving abundantly. Love is listening, sharing thoughts, and feelings, and then it's the physical part."

Leo asked, "How come I feel a little sad?"

Drew explained, "It's a guilty side effect from feeling so good, and wondering how anyone could be allowed to feel so good. It's normal and natural too."

"Don't even let yourself think it's because of me or Drew being your dads," Corey softly insisted. "Legally and logically, you're our son. At the same time, your our friend, Leo. This was the first lesson. If you want another lesson from us, and not from a boyfriend, you have to tell us when you're ready."

Drew emphasized, "Both of us, Leo. I won't without Corey and he won't without me there too. You know enough now to choose a boyfriend. All you need is a few more days, to discover who you enjoy being with most."

Leo checked, "Anybody I want?"

Corey nodded, "It's usually someone you can talk with about everything. A test hug and holding hands works too. If all that feels good, to you and him, then make sure he knows how you feel and maybe try a soft kiss."

Nodding understandingly, Leo whispered, "Hold me?"

Snuggling up to either side of Leo, Corey and Drew wrapped their arms over their boy. In mere minutes, Leo was sound asleep. Corey purred, "I love you, Drew," and closed his eyes.

"I love you too, angel," Drew whispered, closed his eyes and nodded off into a deep sleep.

Chapter 17

Oneula Beach, Townhouse #2

Monday, November 8, 2004, 7:00AM HTZ

The incessant, annoying tone of Troy's alarm clock disturbed his pornographic dream, co-starring Sean. It was just getting to the best part too, with his toes in the air and Sean hovering over him. Groaning and reaching around the headboard to turn the thing off, or break it into a million pieces, Troy realized that there were warm bodies on both sides of him. He forced his eyes to open, turned the damned alarm off, and looked around his new master bedroom's spacious king-sized bed.

Before Troy lay his king-sized Tiger. Beyond Sean was Jimmy and then Jason. Turning slightly to see which sons were behind him, Troy discovered Billy and Scott. Although all six of them on the bed had a sheet covering their lower halves, Troy helplessly smiled at the way the bed was divided; all three with uncut dicks on the side nearest the door, and all three with circumcised dicks on the other half of the bed. The boys had to have specifically chosen this, Troy grinned knowingly.

Sean stirred and reached to pull Troy over and on top of him. Before being kissed deeply, Troy managed to say, "Good mornin', Ti-", but groaned and chuckled the '-ger' into Sean's open mouth. As usual, Sean immediately got busy, grinding his hips up against Troy's morning wood. It felt so fine and necessary that Troy allowed three good pumps before negatively humming. Sean's eyes popped open and Troy watched them darting around. Four waking boys giggled at their fathers' morning routine. Evilily snickering, Troy backed off of Sean's lips.

Looking left and right, Sean grinned, "What're you guys doin' in here?"

Billy shrugged, "Jimmy woke to pee, and the rest of us heard the toilet flush. It's a new place, ya know, so we all woke and looked around. You looked so awesome to all four of us, we decided we could easily fit and join the picture."

Worried that it wasn't such a great idea, another bad move made with the best of intentions, Jason meekly asked, "I hope you don't mind?"

Smirking disbelievingly to his left and to his right, Troy playfully prompted, "Come over here. It's pile-up on dad time!"

Giggling, all four sons tossed the sheet aside and crawled onto their dad and pop. "NO-OO-HO!" Sean loudly laughed.

"Oh yes," Troy chuckled. He rested his head down close to Sean's ear, whispering, "You were so awesome last night, Tiger. I loved every moment, both times." He planted a wet kiss on Sean's neck while giggling sons created a lopsided pyramid of bodies, with the two youngest and smallest on top.

A little uncomfortable from the extra weight on top of him, Sean breathlessly panted, "I really love you guys."

Troy checked with his eldest son, "What's your job today, Billy?"

"Be a big brother," Billy warmly smiled. "I'll try and keep the other kids occupied. I was wondering though, how can I do stuff that the older kids, and especially the girls, might want to do."

Sean reminded, "We showed you guys around, but very quickly. Go exploring and take some kids with you, Billy. What's in the rec room on this base? Is it the same as at Ewa Beach? How about the rec center here; is it the same as Ewa Beach, or is there something one has that the other doesn't?"

"The kids at Ewa Beach have only ever seen that base," Troy reminded. "Even if only kids your age and younger join you, that's more than half of the newbie kids here at Oneula. I'd think there would be another twenty or so at Ewa Beach in the same age bracket. Expect to lose a couple of kids here and there, as they get interested in stuff you find."

Sean instructed, "If you find something you've never seen before, maybe Alden could help you figure it out."

Disbelievingly, Scott squealed, "Billy's gonna play leader today?"

"Billy's the oldest Core Rimmer son," Troy reminded. "All you guys can help your big bro, too. Don't forget to let the other Rimmer sons know what you're scheming. AJ's, Jerry's, Kaleo's and Tory's boys would be into exploring." Troy grinned, "That's a dozen boys, ranging from five- to eleven-years-old. You each get to talk to other kids your age to have them join the search party."

Sean teased, "This is sounding like way too much fun. No school for me, Lover." Suspiciously, Troy squinted down at Sean. All four of their sons giggled. Starting with Billy, the boys stole kisses from their fathers and rolled out of bed, inspired with purposes. The older pair went to the hallway bathroom and the younger pair went into the master bathroom. Once alone with Troy, and hearing a toilet flush and tub water flowing, Sean brightly beamed, "You really liked it that much?"

Troy smiled, "Enough to say we need to keep track of which is top and bottom how often. I want my fair share of lovin' like that." He then asked, "Do you still have trouble believing that I'll never leave you?"

Sean shyly shrugged, "I'm scared, Lover. I wasn't near as scared in California as I am about keeping everything between us kewl. There's nothing logical about how scared I am; it's like a boogymen from the past messing with me."

"Never ever, Tiger," Troy promised. "I'm hooked on you, like an addiction I don't want to ever break. On top of being perfect for me, you're becoming one hell of a good father too. Everything's always a gamble with relationships, but we spent time getting to know each other, and we keep making time, like this right now, to make sure everything is kewl. It's paying off."

"I'm following your lead," Sean grinned. "You told Billy that he needed encouragement. So I follow your boosts with more of the same."

Troy reminded, "This time. Another time, you were teaching me to speak dog. Before that, you showed me the best ways to make love. All that stuff I learned was from you." After grabbing a tender kiss, Troy prompted, "Com'on, Tiger. We've got about twenty minutes to have a little fun in the shower." He rolled off the bed with Sean following him into the master bathroom.

Two giggling boys in the tub didn't seem to pay their clearly excited fathers any mind. Sean and Troy went to stand before the toilet. Still, neither Jimmy nor Scott said a word; they only went on bathing each other and enjoying accidental tickles. Soon after they started leaking, Troy turned questioning eyes to lock with Sean's eyes.

Noticing Troy's curious expression, Sean whispered, "What?"

Troy quietly queried, "Nothing said, about either of us?"

Sean smiled then clearly shared, "Five- and six-year-old gay boys prefer dicks their own size. These two know dicks of all ages, shapes and sizes to make that choice. Right guys?"

"Right!" Jimmy and Scott loudly giggled.

"Pop's butt jiggles more than dad's though," Jimmy quickly cackled. Widely smiling but slouching slightly, Troy huffed. Sean evilly snickered.

Trying to dunk his slightly younger brother, Scott giggled, "I told you not to say that!"

"It's true!" Jimmy squealed.

Sean sniggered, "What do you guys think; should I marry pop this week or next?"

"This week!" Jimmy and Scott cheered.

"We get rings first," Troy chuckled. "Prez and the other guys are still waiting on their rings."

Sean grinned, "Are rings that important?"

"For a marriage they are, to me anyway," Troy leered. "You need visible proof of who you belong to. Then you'll have a constant reminder that we're really forever."

Mooing erupted from Sean, Scott and Jimmy. Giggling his butt off, Troy finished at the bowl and rapidly retreated into the shower. It was a nice sized shower, definitely built for only two; there was no way a group of six teens could fit, like at the single family homes. Turning on the water and hopping back from the first cold blast, Troy had a momentary vision of a brood of a dozen sons. As frightening as it was, Troy acknowledged that it would probably make the entire family happy.

Sean entered the shower and slid the door closed. He skated directly against Troy, whispering, "It seems you're walking a little funny this morning. How do you feel, Lover?"

"I know that I got a lot, twice," Troy softly sniggered.

Leaning against the nearest wall, Sean stuck his butt out, smiling over his shoulder, "Take a turn?"

Feeling a sudden sexual rush race through him, Troy balked, "What about the boys in the tub?"

"That's what they expect," Sean quietly shared. "Us not making love would become more of a problem for them. These two will tell the other two, yeah, dad and pop are kewl."

Taking a step closer to caress Sean's back, Troy whispered, "So they know we won't mess with them?"

"Only partly," Sean softly answered. "What I heard them imply was that their old folks used to get off on them, and rarely each other. Us purposefully getting caught once in a while tells them we're in love, which is most of what they care about. Since we haven't missed a morning since day one, let's continue as we were. It won't freak them out at all. Us not making love would freak them out much more."

Beginning a forceful grind against Sean's butt cheeks, Troy sighed, "That's so damn annoying. Give me a minute to chill, Tiger. I'll be good to go, once I release some aggravation here."

Pushing his butt back against Troy's cock, Sean giggled, "Wear it off in me, Lover. I understand completely, and I have to admit, the way you feel is getting me hotter."

Troy took hold of his erection, aiming for Sean's crack, but paused when Jimmy and Scott loudly laughed, "You're so bad, daddy!" Troy slumped slightly, but Sean howled laughing.

Sadly shaking his head yet widely smiling, Troy loudly joked, "Daddy is very good at being the baddest boy around. Since I love him for it, I guess that makes me just as bad." Jimmy and Scott cracked up again, driving Sean into hysterics. From inside the shower, Sean and Troy heard their two youngest boys race out of the bathroom, presumably to tell their older brothers what was going on.

Meanwhile, in the hallway bathroom tub, Jason talked with his big brother Billy. "I don't know what I'm doing wrong. Leo's not into having a boyfriend yet. Dee told me I was trying too hard. All I'm trying to be is nice."

Listening to his younger brother, who had always been on the same page of the same book as he, Billy silently mulled over the situation for a few moments. "Jase, maybe it's not you, bro," Billy uncertainly offered. "Maybe it's them. I mean, two people have to want the same thing. Are you acting differently with Dee and Leo?"

"I don't think so," Jason murmured. The two boys swapped places in the tub, so Jason could rinse shampoo from his hair. With his head back and his eyes closed, Jason giggled, "Maybe you're right, it's just me, because Dee and Leo are blonds. They're especially cute to me, so that might be part of it."

Nodding understandingly, Billy offered, "How about if you treat other guys the same as them? It might take a while, maybe a few days, but you can start today, by helping me explore the bases with the other kids."

"Leo and Dee will be at school," Jason sighed.

"Even better then," Billy grinned. "You can get to know other guys, and when Dee and Leo see you making other friends, treating those guys the same as you acted around them, they might realize you really weren't changing anything. Besides, liking blonds limits your options. You're missing out on all the guys with brown and red hair, who you might actually like more than a blond."

Nodding agreement, Jason changed the subject, asking, "What about you, bro? Have you got anyone special you like?"

Billy giggled, "There isn't anyone like that yet. All these guys are very kewl. I showered with Corey Seaver yesterday, while you and Drew were with Leo. There's a really cute guy, who's my age, a little taller than me, and he's already got a patch of pubes over his dick. I was really nervous, at first. Corey's married to Drew, ya know? Showering with him was just like showering with you. It was kewl. He's a brother and a leader, so he told me that kind of stuff, like the plans they had for yesterday, with the new orphanage kids."

Jason asked, "He never touched you?"

"Sure he did," Billy giggled. "He washed my hair, and I washed his. We had stiffies, but he never touched mine, and I didn't touch his. The only other part of me he touched was my back, the areas I can't reach. He did it so I would do the same for him. I think that's part of the deal around here, Jase; treat the guys like you'd want to be treated."

"I am!" Jason excitedly squealed.

Billy nodded and smiled, "I know. Which is why I think you should just be you today, exploring the bases with other guys. I figure either you'll find other kids that you like, as much or more than Leo and Dee, or those two will see that you're really that friendly with everyone."

"That'll work," Jason warmly smiled.

Still dripping wet, Jimmy and Scott raced into the hallway bathroom. Scott giggled, "Daddy was bein' goofy in the shower. Him and pop are gettin' messy!"

Jason cracked up. Billy sniggered, "Thanks for that news update guys. Judging by the way they woke, I figured they would."

"This is so awesome!" Jimmy squealed. "They love each other all the time, and still find ways to love us too. How can they do that?"

Billy giggled, "We'll know the answer to that when we have boyfriends, and decide we want kids."

Jimmy and Scott hollered, "Drats!"

"That'll take too long," Scott grumbled.

"Ask dad and pop then, cos we don't know the answer," Jason grinned.

Jimmy giggled, "Let's go!"

Scott told Jimmy, "Later, when they're done gruntin' and groanin'."

Nodding, "Kewl," Jimmy spun around and led Scott out of the bathroom. They went to their room to get dressed.

Pointing at Billy's bone, Jason giggled, "Down, boy."

Billy grinned and huffed, "Someday, bro, we're gonna have someone and be like dad and pop."

"Soon, I hope," Jason smiled.

In the townhomes on either side of Sean's and Troy's, AJ and Jerry, and Kaleo and Tory were only slightly less involved. Those two sets of Core Rimmer sons weren't sexually abused and far less knowledgeable. The pairs of fathers were still teenage boys in love, and had to show it before moving forward with their morning routines. The Hunnicutt brothers couldn't help hearing AJ and Jerry in bed, even though the two newest Core Rimmers tried their best to keep the noise down. Kaleo and Tory had all five of their sons with them all night, so they went for a slippery, soapy grind in the shower. Eight boys in two townhomes heard enough to know their dads were getting busy and went into giggling fits.

* * * * *

Ewa Beach, Townhouse #3

Monday, November 8, 2004, 7:00AM

Waking to the sounds of rock music from Drew's clock radio, Geoff and Lenny saw Leo laying between their daddy and poppa. The latter three started to wake, allowing Geoff and Lenny to climb over and cuddle with them. Locking eyes with Leo, Lenny asked, "No bad dreams, bro?"

"Not one," Leo smiled, "I had all of you dudes keeping me safe."

Carefully and softly, Drew asked, "How do you feel, ya know, since me and pop finished in the shower?"

Leo thought only a moment, then brightly smiled, "Now I know more of what being in love means. I know that won't happen again, unless I ask about the next steps." Glancing at Corey and Drew, Leo beamed, "It was very kewl. Thank you, both."

After planting a kiss on Leo's forehead, Corey giggled, "You're very welcome. Now you know what Geoff and Lenny know; you can talk to me and dad about anything and everything." In the middle of Corey's statement, Geoff's belly loudly growled, causing all five to break into giggles.

Pulling Geoff closer, Drew planted a kiss on his youngest son's cheek, and then sniggered, "Let's get Geoff fed, before that Sehlat belly devours us all." Still giggling, Geoff and Lenny rolled off the top of the pile. Rolling to the same side of the bed as the two youngest boys, Drew confirmed, "Geoff and Lenny, you know the deal?"

Enthusiastically, Lenny nodded, "It's time to shower with Leo."

Wide-eyed, Leo gasped. Looking at his dad, pop, and both brothers, Leo balked, "Would that really be kewl?"

"Of course," Corey giggled. "You're brothers, and you all know what's kewl and what's not."

Running around the bed, Geoff reached for Leo's hand, sharing, "Come on, bro. We know all about dicks, and how to only clean them."

"We know you're older," Lenny giggled, and took Leo's other hand. "If you get a goofy look on your face, we'll stop whatever."

Encouraging his eldest son, Drew smiled, "You haven't had a shower until you've knelt down and had these two shampoo your hair."

"Omigod!" Corey cheered, "I almost fell asleep, it was so relaxing."

Pulling a reluctant Leo out of the room to the hallway bathroom, Lenny explained, "Dad and pop says there's plenty of good ways to show love. We won't touch your dick at all, if you don't want us to." All Leo could think of was how quickly he had his first orgasms ever. He couldn't allow either brother to take the chance. Letting go of Leo and climbing into the tub, Lenny giggled, "Daddy and poppa need two showers a day, just to play or make whoopee. They vanish during the day too sometimes." He leaned over to turn on the water.

Pushing Leo toward the tub, Geoff giggled, "Daddy and poppa really love each other, all'a time. Watch 'em talk, bro. That's not what me and Lenny saw before joining the Clan. They just wanted to play with our willies and make 'em stiff. Now we all got stiffies, but it's from real love." Geoff followed Leo into the tub and slid the door closed.

"Family love," Lenny told Leo, and then turned the shower on. Shaking water off his face as he turned around, Lenny gestured to the tub floor, explaining, "You're too tall, bro. I might barely reach your hair, and Geoff don't have a chance." Reaching both arms up and demonstrating, Geoff could only reach the tops of Leo's ears. Leo knelt down with the shower spray at his back, and with Lenny and Geoff side-by-side before him. Leaning back a little bit, Leo got his hair wet.

Picking up the bottle of shampoo, Geoff added, "While we shampoo your hair, you can wash us. Then you stand to shampoo us, and we wash you." Pouring a little shampoo onto a cupped palm, Geoff passed the bottle to Lenny.

Nervously, Leo nodded and softly begged, "Don't touch my dick, bros. If I'm making a goofy face, it's prob'ly already too late." The two little dudes giggled and nodded. He picked up a bar of soap and started carefully washing Geoff.

Beginning to wash Leo's hair, Geoff and Lenny giggled. "We know all about older dudes," Lenny reminded.

Leo smirked, "I know you do; some way too old."

Lenny shared, "Fiddlin' with our willies feels good to us, but we don't ever get the shakes, like boys a little older than us, like John and maybe you. Then there's a little older than you, like poppa and daddy. They're startin' to make messes, like teens and men."

Geoff nodded, "Our friend Timmy calls it spermies. It'll happen to all of us someday."

Leo asked, "You know that I didn't know any of that stuff until Saturday?"

"We didn't know, but we figured," Lenny answered.

"You had a nice mommy and daddy," Geoff added.

Thoughts of what his two little brothers had been through caused Leo's jaw to tighten. Fearing the two boys would see his anger, Leo couldn't even look at the faces on either side of him. Clearly, as if his real parents were just beyond the shower door, Leo heard them chorusing "Love conquers all. Show them." Leo pulled both brothers up against him and gave each a kiss.

"We're not done yet!" Geoff giggled.

Lenny smiled, kissed Leo back, and then told Geoff, "Leo's gettin' like daddy and poppa. He's wantin' to do stuff about bad grown-ups."

Leo sighed, "Most of all, I want to be your big brother. I want to somehow make everything perfect for both of you."

"You are!" Geoff giggled. "You're not playing with our dicks. You don't want us to even wash yours."

Wiping away some shampoo bubbles before they dripped into Leo's eyes, Lenny nodded, "That says it all, bro." He then quickly added, "You've got real nice hair; long, blond, like poppa's, but yours is a little wavy."

Leo asked his brothers, "We even look like brothers and a family, don't you think?" Lenny and Geoff agreed.

"Okay, ready to rinse," Lenny instructed. Geoff carefully moved aside, so Leo could stand and get under the water.

With his head back, eyes closed and his hands running through his hair, Leo smiled, "That felt awesome! I'm gonna get used to this, real quick."

"Every day, morning or night or both," Lenny giggled.

Geoff smiled, "This way us little guys show you big guys you're important to us."

"Daddy says us kids under ten out number both tweens and teens combined," Lenny cheekily grinned. Looking down at his brothers' Cheshire cat smiles, Leo cracked up. Quickly, Geoff and Lenny grabbed the two bars of soap and started washing Leo. "This is the way we prove we run the show around here," Lenny mischievously cackled. Beginning to flinch and jump, Leo's giggling turned into loud laughter as two pairs of hands went to work, seemingly finding tickle spots at hitherto unknown places. Firmly cradling his head with both arms, so he wouldn't knock either brother over, Leo roared laughing loud enough to be heard in the master bathroom shower, where Corey and Drew were bathing.

Rinsing his hair, Corey giggled, "Serious and worried Leo just flew out the window."

Nodding, Drew chortled, "Pouncing lessons have begun. I'm proud of all three of them; Leo for trying his best, after having the rug pulled out from under him, and Geoff and Lenny for doing what's natural and easy, including Leo in their lives."

"Instead of two sitting in the tub, they're standing in it, bathing with their new big brother," Corey smiled.

"It sounds like they're having the time of their lives," Drew softly said, and then leaned over to lap some water dripping down Corey's arm. Squirting the water back out of his mouth at Corey's tiny nipples, Drew grinned, "You're marked as mine now."

"I've been marked as yours for a week!" Corey loudly cackled. "Now you get marked as mine!" Drew mooed through his giggles. Picking up the soap, Corey instructed, "Turn around, stud."

Doing as he was told, Drew leaned against the wall and wiggled his butt for his hubby. Looking over his shoulder, Drew giggled, "Mark me, angel."

Soaping his lover's ass, Corey playfully sang, "This is the way we wash our buns, wash our buns, wash our buns..." Drew cracked up, until Corey slid a hand between his butt cheeks. The other hand slid in and Drew moaned as fingers brushed his sphincter. Kneeling down, Corey let his soapy hands run down Drew's legs. Once he was settled with a luscious meal before him, Corey reached his right hand between Drew's legs to stroke away while he nibbled and periodically fingered his hubby's bung hole.

Drew began whimpering and Corey giggled, knowing that Drew would likely want to have even more fun. To make that moment happen faster, Corey released Drew's bone, spread his cheeks and stuck his face in the crack. Gasping and squealing with every flick of Corey's tongue, Drew intermittently begged, "Now, Cor. Please, angel?"

On the fourth such request, Corey stood and got behind his husband. Drew made it clear that he was done waiting by backing up against Corey's bone. Leaning onto Drew, holding on tightly and thrusting away, Corey softly groaned his never-ending devotion and love. Reaching climaxes one after the other in only a few minutes, Corey dizzily picked up the soap to rewash his hubby's butt.

Relieved and satisfied, Drew happily raved, "You're the best of everything, Corey Seaver. My best friend and the most awesome lover I could've ever hoped for." Becoming coherent again, Corey giggled, but Drew rambled on, "Think of us in about three or four years, when you're taller than me. If it's this awesome now, when we're fifteen or sixteen, sex is gonna be incredible."

Corey giggled, "Until then..."

"We practice," both boys cheered.

In the townhouse next door, unit number two, Mike's and Derrick's family weren't as organized or motivated. Soon after their seven o'clock alarm chirped, Derrick and Mike made love on their bed. In the two bedrooms down the hall, Jonah and Gage shared a room with Reyes, and Dillon and Randy shared the other room. While his brothers slept in, Reyes heard the alarm from the master bedroom and woke. Sliding his legs off the edge of his bed, Reyes sat up and stretched. Simply doing that little task, Reyes mind raced with memories of the nest, the overcrowded orphanage mattresses, and the beds he had slept in decades earlier. Blankly watching Jonah sleep for a few moments, Reyes grinned and silently thought, this is right, the way it always should've been. Wrapped up by Gage's arm, Jonah blissfully slept mostly on his boyfriend. Reyes stood and went to the hallway bathroom to relieve his bursting bladder. He didn't even close the door, but went directly the toilet.

Over the ceiling speaker and in his new teenage voice, Alden said, "Good morning, Reyes."

"Good mornin', Alden."

Alden said, "Reyes, I'd like to introduce you to my newest brother, Remi, from the Gulf Coast Division in Louisiana."

A new boy's voice, with a very obvious southern accent said, "G'mornin', Reyes."

Reyes giggled, "You waited until I was at the bowl, trying to leak, to introduce me?" Remi evilly snickered.

"All you Core Rimmers were busy Saturday and yesterday,"

Alden cackled.

Jack sniggered, "And Remi had his own very new division keeping him occupied."

Reyes chuckled, "Like I'm going to believe that." All seven AI voices giggled and laughed from the speaker.

Falling right back into the pattern that had become constant since Saturday, Alden giggled, "Did you know that you're in a very elite group of boys that rarely talks to his dick?"

Still waiting for the flood gates to open, Reyes smiled, "I'm glad to hear it."

"Is there a reason why?"

"Not really," Reyes grinned. "I have on occasion, just not recently. Why should I talk to what can't talk back, when I've got you to fill my morning quota of dick talk?"

"Hey now, we're a team!" Kerry giggled.

Stevie admitted, "You're already like what we hope to be, Reyes; AI boys walking around in the buff, not caring who sees what in whichever state. So, when do you talk to your dick?"

Reyes sniggered, "There was this one time, I was in a public restroom at a mall. My dad called for me to hurry, and I was almost done anyway, so I rushed. The next thing I know, I'm doubled over and cussing up a storm because I zipped up right over and onto my dick, pinching a little skin."

"Does that hurt?" George innocently asked... a little too innocently.

Alden laughed, "With all the various skinned knees and other minor injuries we've seen, and how the kids reacted, what do you think?"

"I'll take his word for it," Icarus giggled. "Note to future self, no rushing or hurrying with metal objects anywhere near my pecker."

"Note to self; make sure Icky's zippers are all plastic!" Kerry giggled.

Leaking at last, Reyes giggled, "Don't you guys have other stuff to do?"

"All done," Alden cheered. "Foods for all the kitchens are stocked. Even the basement store is restocked, ready for another hundred kids. Our VIs are handling other stuff, but right now, I'm only talking to you and Fred Eckhart, and my brothers, of course."

Reyes wondered, "What's Fred doing awake so early?"

"Chauncey woke early to walk Rikko," Kerry answered.

George added, "Leaving Fred alone and available to chat."

Alden asked, "Have you seen Fred naked yet, Reyes?"

"Nope, I haven't."

"He's cute!" The seven AIs sang, leading to a brief interruption of arguing brothers, laying claims to the android boy.

Done leaking, Reyes flushed the toilet. He crossed the room and went into the tub. Soon after the shower started and Reyes was wet, he picked up the soap, telling the AIs, "Not one of you has mentioned his dick."

Alden moaned, "It's real nice too; not too long, not too fat, just perfect; Alden sized." The other six AIs laughed and goofed on their brother.

Reyes smiled, "The point is, it wasn't his dick that attracted you first, was it?"

"He's an android," George firmly reminded.

"With wide shoulders," Icarus purred.

Kerry giggled, "And a real cute butt."

Stevie cheered, "And he treats Chauncey like a real brother."

"Without Fred, I think Chauncey would be in a really bad way, missing his parents and all," Alden shared.

Jack said, "From what I've gathered, hearing Fred and Chauncey talking, they shared a bedroom about as big as their dorm room. For Chauncey, as much as things changed, they stayed the same too, with Fred and Rikko around."

Reyes teased, "Maybe I'll spend some extra time with Fred today." Overlapping AI complaints and warnings poured down out of the speaker. Reyes cracked up.

In the next townhouse over, Prez and Keith were in the shower. Stroking Keith's soapy erection, Prez giggled, "Today, Keith."

Shaking his wet head and splashing Prez with water, Keith giggled, "Tomorrow, sex-machine."

Dramatically frowning, Prez whined, "By tomorrow I'll be climbing all over you at school. Take me now!"

"You need to heal a little more before I grab your hips and pump away."

Prez pouted and rambled, "In today's music class, our two head Rimmers were teaching rhythm. The next thing we know, they're on the floor, ripping clothes off each other. We learned three-four time, four-four time, and twelve-eight time in only five minutes."

"You're exaggerating," Keith sniggered.

"You're forcing me to do a lot more than exaggerate," Prez leered, and then turned around. Stepping back so his buns were flush against Keith's hips, Prez slid around, proving he was sufficiently healed and as ready as ever.

Groaning as self-control slipped away, Keith then firmly instructed, "You tell me if anything hurts."

Nodding, Prez promised, "It won't hurt. Going another day without would hurt both of us way more."

Reaching down, Keith made the minor adjustment so he could enter his husband. Both softly moaned.

In the bedroom normally shared with Dee, Sammy woke with Ben in his bed. The thrills of having his first boyfriend cuddled up to him raced through Sammy's mind and pushed him into gleeful giggles. Hours earlier, Sammy had had his first sexual experiences by Ben's hand. Naturally, Sammy returned the favor. Now, Sammy woke his boyfriend with gentle cheek kisses. Seeing Ben's eyelids flutter and his mouth form a smile, Sammy landed the first of many tender kisses on the mouth. By watching his dad, pop, and Uncles Corey, Drew, John and Stephen, Sammy had learned well the skills of expert kissing.

Ben woke to the hottest kisses he'd ever received. How such a good kisser was becoming a better kisser, Ben had no clue. He guided Sammy on top of him and held him firmly in place.

Awake from the sounds of alarm clocks, shower water running, and his daddy and poppa makin' whoopie, Richie bounded out of bed. Needing to pee, he hurried for the hallway bathroom. Hearing his younger brother, Dee stretched and sat up in bed. He also needed to use the toilet, but not as seriously as Richie. Getting out of bed and walking out of the room, he peaked into the other bedroom that he normally shared with Sammy. Seeing his brother on top of Ben, Dee giggled, "Yeah, I might've stayed in that room. If I did, would you two still be doing this?"

Ben and Sammy hummed affirmatively into their kiss. "Great!" Dee giggled, "Just what every guy needs to see in the morning, his brother makin' out with his boyfriend." Ben and Sammy broke their kiss. With mischievous sparkles in their eyes, they agreed to teach Dee a lesson. Sammy rolled off Ben and out of bed, with Ben following him after Dee. Loudly laughing, Dee took the easiest escape route, downstairs and into the first floor half-bath. He closed the door and locked it, just in time.

From upstairs, Richie heard Dee cackling, "Three days in a row, you're stiff as steel, Sammy. Show Ben how long it takes for you to pee that way!"

Sammy blushed and giggled, "Now you're gonna get it, bro!" Ben howled laughing.

Heading into the master bedroom and bathroom, Richie didn't even pause to say good morning to his dad or pop, but went directly for the tub and turned the water on.

Realizing they weren't alone, Keith and Prez paused. Dropping his face onto Prez's shoulder, Keith softly sniggered, "Has to be Richie."

Nodding, Prez puffed, "Finish us off, T'hy'la." Doing as he was told, Keith started pumping away again.

Next door, Reyes finished his shower and slid the door open. The shower sounds woke Dillon and Randy. They hurried into the bathroom to relieve themselves and greeted their mostly wet big brother. Reyes moved over to the sink to brush his teeth. Moments later, Reyes had a little brother on either side, reaching their hands into the sink, chattering about how hungry and thirsty they were. Without drying their hands, both little guys raced downstairs.

Waking up to various sounds from the hallway bathroom, Jonah carefully told Gage, "I really wanna do what my dad and pop are with you."

Gage smiled, "I want it too, and you know we will, just not as some kind of pay back. When we do stuff, it's gonna be so awesome that you'll completely forget the stuff at the orphanage. Each new thing we do will wipe out hundreds of other bad times you had."

Purposefully, Reyes extended the time he took brushing his teeth, believing that running water would mask the sounds his dad and pop were making in the bedroom. When there was quiet at last, he spit, rinsed and turned the water faucet off. Returning to his room, he said good morning to Jonah and Gage, then began dressing.

Since their private conversation was on hold, Jonah suggested they get glasses of juice from the kitchen. They rolled out of bed and went downstairs without even looking in Dillon's and Randy's room. Reyes couldn't help noticing both boys had major morning wood.

Since they obviously didn't care, Reyes said nothing about it, choosing not to embarrass either of them.

Downstairs, Gage heard Dillon and Randy rummaging around the kitchen and paused before taking the last step into the living room. Only giggling, Gage pointed at his own and Jonah's boners. Jonah grinned and shrugged then lead his boyfriend to the kitchen. Wordlessly, Jonah reached for glasses, and Gage got a carton of orange-pineapple juice from the fridge.

While Gage poured four glasses of orange-pineapple juice, Jonah noticed that Dillon and Randy were sharing glances and smiles. "Out with it," Jonah giggled at them.

Pointing at Jonah's and Gage's mid-sections, Dillon cackled, "Who made who?"

Quickly putting down the carton of juice, Gage cracked up and felt his face turning redder by the millisecond. Unintentionally, Gage had shown off to Jonah's younger brothers and now they were paying the price.

Locking eyes with Jonah, Randy giggled, "It's just way different from what we expected, bro. You're getting like dad and pop already."

Taking hold of Gage before he caught fire, Jonah smiled, "It's because Gage really loves me. Since Saturday, Gage has told me a lot of stuff; dreams he has, worries he's got, all the good stuff and bad stuff that's crossed his mind. I told him a lot of stuff too; stuff I couldn't tell anyone else before, even stuff Reyes hasn't heard me ever say."

Randy giggled, "So umm... how is it?"

"I tried like crazy to get Gage to let me blow him last night,"

Jonah freely admitted. Dillon and Randy stopped giggling and their jaws dropped. Jonah dreamily sighed, "Twice, Gage said, 'another time'. I was on my knees, reaching for his shorts, only to have him giggle and pull me up, and onto the bed to make out. Twice we kissed and ground off against each other, and we were still talking a little! It was crazy and awesome and totally excellent all at once. I didn't feel bad afterward. Gage didn't feel bad either. It was the right time for us to do only that. After the first time, we went right back to the concert. After the second time, I fell asleep with his arms over and around me. Now, I've got a little glimpse of what love should've been like all the time. Now, I understand dad, pop and all the Core Rimmer couples a little better. Not one of them is always strong, or always weak; they're real people who are both strong and weak, just when that's what they're feeling. Those orphanages pricks kept us weak."

"They made you feel inferior," Gage softly told Jonah, Dillon and Randy. "They dumped their shit on you emotionally and sexually. My pop told me that. I didn't completely understand it all, even from Richie and Dee, but now with Jonah, I do understand. They wanted you to believe you were sex toys. Jonah and all of you are people, not toys. Because I was treating him nice and talking with him, Jonah thought it would be good to suck my dick, only cos that's what he learned. All I need or want is him nearby to be with and talk with. Yeah, we can do other sex stuff too, but not as some kind of payment. We'll do whatever and whenever, as long as we both feel it."

Completely blown away with Gage's words, and the way they were said so gently, Jonah sighed, rested his head on Gage's shoulder and closed his eyes.

"DADDY! POP!" Dillon screamed, and ran out of the kitchen.

Randy giggled, "He's gonna tell dad and pop, like they didn't already know. I bet they do."

Shrugging at Randy, and then warmly smiling at Gage, Jonah stepped back from the hug to continue pouring juice. They barely heard Dillon upstairs, excitedly rambling to Derrick and Mike. Just finishing their shower, two hysterical teenagers tried to towel dry and keep Dillon from bouncing through the roof.

Dressed and coming downstairs, Reyes heard Dillon going off the deep end about Jonah and Gage. Reyes went into the kitchen, slightly grinning.

Pointing at Dillon's untouched glass, Jonah giggled, "Do you want a glass of juice, bro?"

Picking up the glass, Reyes nodded and smirked at Jonah, "You're learning?"

"I'll say!" Jonah laughed, "More in two days than ever thought possible in two years."

Gesturing an open palm toward Gage and looking up at Reyes, Randy teased, "Meet Jonah's Mister Perfect."

Holding out his right arm to shake hands, Gage giggled his first and last names and added, "Pleased to meet you."

Softly sniggering, "The pleasure's mine, Mister Perfect," Reyes shook Gage's hand.

Everyone heard the master bathroom tub water turn on. Coming downstairs, Mike and Derrick were mostly dressed, but carrying their shirts. Entering the kitchen, Derrick smiled, "I'm sorry, Gage. I accused you wrongly." He then glared at Jonah, smirking, "You're the bad boy!" Mike, Randy and Reyes cracked up.

Quickly hiding behind his sniggering boyfriend, Jonah giggled, "I didn't know better! Even though I do now, it was worth the shot!"

Mike prompted Randy, "Dillon's expecting you. Go get your bath taken." Randy quickly drank the last of his juice, put the glass down on the counter and jogged across rooms and upstairs. Mike rounded on Gage and Jonah, then hollered at the ceiling, "Alden?"

"Yes?" giggled Alden.

Mike sniggered, "Gage and Jonah need to shower, with an escort!" Alden, Derrick, Gage, Jonah and Reyes cracked up.

Holding Jonah in place behind him, Gage carefully side-stepped around Derrick, Mike and Reyes, heading out of the kitchen. Still giggling, the two new boyfriends then tore through the dining room and upstairs.

Alden giggled, "This has been a very interesting morning."

Derrick wondered, "What do you mean, Alden?"

"Well, I see everything that's going on," Alden reminded. "Even over at the dorms, kids seem to be having a lot more fun than usual. Partners of every sexuality are clearly more enthused than typical. Even where roommates are only friends, they're acting like best friends."

"It's back to school jitters, I think," Reyes smiled. "With part of the day already planned, everybody's doing what they want to do first." Turning to his dad and pop, Reyes grinned, "Which reminds me, I've never gone to school before in my life. What the heck am I going to do?"

"Anything you like, Core Rimmer," Derrick smiled, and then pulled his polo shirt over his head and adjusted the collar.

Mike nodded, "Your options are wide open. If you want, you can hook up with Mr. T and become a teacher, so you're with the majority of everyone else. If you'd rather, you can man the Command Center, with Rad and Gil; or you can be available for kids that aren't going to school today."

"You could also take Fred Eckhart to AI Division headquarters," Derrick reminded.

"Then there's the drums and percussion in the basement to play," Mike added. "You could check out the Oneula Beach auditorium and let us know what's there. Any of the above works, Reyes."

Tapping his comm-badge, Reyes called, "Paul?"

Paul flatly replied, "Hey, Reyes. What's up?"

"Are you and Ryan near Mark or Danny? We've got a newbie android that could use his first check-up in at least sixteen years. While Fred is busy with them, I can visit with you and Ryan."

Paul answered, "Kewl. I'm at home, and there's no meal on the table, so Danny and Marc are next door."

Scowling, Reyes worried, "What's wrong, Paul? You sound like you're in the dumps."

"It's just a rainy, gloomy day," Paul replied. "Ry's taking a bathroom break, so I'm just kickin' back on my bed, day dreaming. Make sure you bring a raincoat, Reyes; there are torrential down pours at times."

To see what kind of response he might get, Reyes grinned, "I guess we'll be spending most of the time indoors, in the bedroom?"

"REYES!" Paul loudly laughed. Reyes, Derrick and Mike softly sniggered. Paul chortled, "Someone's mind is in the gutter today."

The pitter-patter of running feet was heard. Then Joey giggled, "Hi Weyes."

"Hey, Joey," Reyes chuckled.

Joey thoughtfully wondered, "Unca Pauhw, why awe you hidin' undew youw piwwow?" After a short pause, Joey seriously added, "Yous godda wose deedhs befowe dhe Deedh Faiwy weaves ya anydhin' - Gwanma says so!"

Since Paul was either hysterical or embarrassed, Reyes giggled, "Joey, tell Uncle Paul that I'll see him in about an hour. We still haven't had breakfast yet."

"Suwe wiww, Weyes," Joey giggled.

"Reyes out." He then called, "Alden, where is Fred Eckhart?"

"He's just gone into the mob shower," Alden replied, and then giggled, "This morning, they really are mob showers. Entire halls of kids are in lavatories."

"Oh well, I'll catch up with Fred at the dining room then," Reyes muttered.

Derrick wondered, "Is there something wrong, Reyes?"

Shrugging, Reyes answered, "This is something good to do today, but what about all the other school days? I don't see myself as a teacher, and don't really want to be seen as one."

Derrick and Mike grinned at each other. They moved over to sandwich Reyes between them. Mike chuckled, "This might be the first time ever that not going to school is a problem."

Reyes grinned, "It's been a very long time."

Nodding and hugging his eldest tighter, Derrick reminded, "Since being rescued, you've been watching over your brothers. Take a break. Everything at this base and Oneula Beach are at your disposal. Chill out and go with the flow. Make the most of whatever presents itself."

Mike agreed, "Stay with Paul and Ryan there, or bring them back here, if that's the way things work out. As for being separated from us, why not be a teacher's assistant two or three days a week? You could easily help any kid here with any assignment, and you get to be social too."

"You said that some of the little kids you rescued treated you like something different," Derrick reminded.

"The McPhearsons and the Stoeher twins," Mike recalled.

Derrick prodded, "Show them you're not so different after all."

The conversation was interrupted by knocks on the front door. Stepping back from Reyes and Derrick, Mike checked, "Better?"

Reyes nodded and smiled, "It will be, I'm sure. It's just another series of changes."

Mike went to answer the door. Derrick softly smiled, "Paul and Ryan are becoming more than friends?" Nodding, Reyes giggled. "Spend as much time as you want with them," Derrick suggested. "That takes priority, over almost everything else, Reyes. Jonah's got Gage, now it's your turn."

Drew, Corey, Leo, Lenny and Geoff filed into the living room. Mike told them, "We're just waiting on baths and showers to finish."

Corey giggled, "Try having your whole family in the same bed. That got us all movin' at once."

"We got to wash Leo," Geoff happily cheered.

Blushing, Leo nodded and softly chortled, "I learned it's like an initiation into the Clan."

Derrick confirmed, "So we're going to talk most of the newbies into a week off?"

"Yeah," Drew quickly replied. "I'll bet Kaleo will start as soon as he's gathered kids."

* * * * *

Oneula Beach, Dormitory #1

Monday, November 8, 2004, 7:43AM HTZ

Outside the exterior door into the dormitory, Jerry offered, "How about me and mine check out dorm two and then the dining room? Maybe some kids are already waiting there?"

Troy nodded, "Kewl, bro. We'll get the kids here moving."

Walking with his partner and three sons toward dorm two, AJ chirped, "See ya in a few."

"I'll take Jimmy and Scott upstairs with me," Sean told Troy. On queue, Jimmy and Scott began complaining, and Billy and Jason began laughing, purposefully taunting their two younger brothers. Troy opened the door and led the way inside. Looking down at his two youngest sons, Sean loudly giggled, "We prob'ly won't get too far before being shooed away."

"FINE!" Jimmy and Scott hollered, and reluctantly stomped up the steps.

Following the boys upstairs, Sean giggled, "You're not acting gay enough."

Jimmy whined, "Boobies make us go boo-hoo."

"Willies make us go whoo-hoo!" Scott cheered.

At the landing and holding the inner door open for the older boys, Troy cracked up. At five- or six-years-old, Troy had no idea there was a difference, but all his sons already knew and were following their hearts. In the first floor hallway, towed boys were walking between the lavatory and their rooms. Music could be heard from a room somewhere down the hall, but closer, a television was cranked as loud as it could go.

Knocking on the first door frame, Troy peeked inside, asking, "How's it goin', guys?"

Two fifteen-year-old boys, Neil Green and Thaddeus Markell, occupied room number one. Troy couldn't help noticing that both boys were a few inches shorter and many pounds lighter than he. Also, only one bed had been slept in, making it clear these two were already a couple. Troy recalled some of what Doc Metzger had told him days earlier, but didn't let on that he knew anything. Pausing in place, only partially dressed, Neil loudly crowed, "Awesome! I never slept so peacefully before. The hospital was okay, but this mattress was obviously made for me."

Thaddeus, who preferred to be called by his nickname 'Tad' chuckled, "Thank goodness neither of us snores too loudly."

Troy smiled, "I'm glad to hear it. Remember, school is optional for both of you. Breakfast is not optional. We're gathering everyone together for breakfast at Ewa Beach."

Slipping a polo shirt over his head, Neil said, "Kewl, Troy. So you know, every one of us that got here yesterday knows exactly where we're at medically; we're malnourished. You dudes are going to see a lot of us going for as many meals as we can pack away."

"All day, everyday," Tad pledged. "The docs and nurses fed us real food, anything we wanted, whenever we wanted. So we got vitamins and minerals from tubes, and more in our bellies too. You dudes won't be so much taller than us for very much longer."

"My dad was about five-eleven," Neil shared. "I can and will match that."

Loving the determined tones of Neil and Tad, Troy warmly cheered, "Excellent!"

Pulling a polo shirt over his head, Tad shared, "Every kid in our group has the same attitude."

Waving, Troy instructed, "We'll meet in the dining room here, then we'll all go over to Ewa Beach together."

At the next room, the loud television was found. Troy greeted fourteen-year-olds Carter Rackham and Doug Zimmerman. The two new boyfriends hurried to the door in their underwear and sandwiched Troy between them, each reminding Troy that they were rescued by him and Sean. Doug was the bitter one challenging Sean. Sincerely apologizing, Doug retracted every word he said. Both were looking forward to breakfast milkshakes and more food. Both were determined to gain weight and height, and so they released Troy to finish dressing.

Turning to his two sons, Troy cheerfully prompted, "Knock on some doors and help me out. It's easy." Billy seemed to try to stand up straight, but slumped and withered again as he turned around. Troy smirked, "Wait a second." He went to both his sons and softly reminded, "The only way you can fail is by not trying at all. Watch it get easier with each knock."

Billy and Jason turned and went a few doors down. While Troy watched, Billy knocked and Jason said, "Good morning" to ten-year-old Frank Perry and nine-year-old Leroy Wheeler. Again, two boys pleasantly returned the greeting.

Billy softly stammered, "Uh... we're going to Ewa Beach... to have breakfast." Already showered and mostly dressed, Frank and Leroy were looking forward to it.

"School," Jason whispered, and nudged his big brother.

"Yeah," Billy said more loudly; "you guys don't have to go to school today."

Frank paused and blinked, "What're the other dudes doin'?"

Leroy nodded, "Yeah, it won't be kewl or fun if we're pretty much alone."

Jason grinned, "We're trying to get all the newbies since last Thursday to take time off. That includes us too. My pop said that's about half of all the kids."

Watching his younger brother and learning a little, Billy offered, "We don't wanna be alone either. There are two bases to explore. That'll take at least half the week."

"After breakfast, Billy's gonna take us for a closer look around," Jason explained.

"Yeah?" Leroy giggled. Uncontrollably, Billy blushed and nodded.

Frank nodded, "Kewl, as long as we're not bored."

"Can't happen around here," Jason giggled.

Billy nodded, "We'll be around this dorm. Come find us when you're ready?"

"Kewl," Frank replied.

Sitting down to put sandals on his feet, Leroy said, "Just another couple o' minutes."

Billy and Jason went to the next room, where George Ward and Victor Dixon were at their dressers, freshly showered and completely naked. Billy spoke a little easier with the eight-year-old and six-year-old, but Jason was too enthralled with George to say a word. From the profile view Jason had, George's dick hooked out and hung down perfectly over his sack. George was simply too handsome to be ignored. Billy, George and Vic noticed Jason gawking and helplessly giggled. Soon, Jason was blushing and giggling too.

Madly laughing, Sean, Jimmy and Scott came through the door and hurried down the hall. Troy grinned, "What happened?"

"We just got told off and pushed away!" Scott cackled. "As if I wanted to see anything I saw!"

Sean sniggered, "The girls would just rather we shout down the hall when we've got announcements."

Scrunching his face like he might be ill, Jimmy whimpered, "I saw a naked girl. Bleh!" Billy, Jason, Scott, Sean and Troy roared laughing. Jimmy faked dry heaves, and then giggled along with his brothers and dads.

Scott hugged his little brother, giggling, "We may never be the same."

"Somebody please show me a dick," Jimmy cackled.

Crossing the hall from the shower and hearing Jimmy's request, five-year-old Jeff Muller, called, "Here, Jimmy," and quickly pulled the towel away from his waist. His show was witnessed by many of the boys on that hallway.

"Thanks, Jeff," Jimmy giggled, "that's a real nice one too, by the way." Loud laughter and applause shattered the morning calm.

Scott hugged his brother, playfully wondering, "Why's Jeff's dick real nice?"

Jimmy giggled, "After what we saw upstairs, any dick is real nice."

At the Oneula Beach second dormitory, AJ, Jerry and their sons were inexperienced fashion consultants for the twenty-two newbies that had never owned so much clothing before. All the boys were used to wearing blue jeans and dark shirts. Color coordination was Kenny's field of expertise. Kenny, Mike and Shaun helped all the boys choose clothing, to some extent or another. Already aware of the lousy situations these boys had been in at orphanages, AJ and Jerry explained the laundry bags, telling the newbies that all their clothing, and especially underwear, was to be changed every day. While they were away from their dorms during the day, housekeepers would make beds, vacuum the carpets and get laundry done.

The last important job done by both teams at both dorms was to remind the kids to wear their comm-badges and keep them on all the time. Comm-badges were required to pass through the dimensional doors, and they acted as tracking devices. Relatively quickly, due to having fewer kids at dormitory two, AJ and Jerry brought the kids over to the dining room.

Finding the dining room empty, Jerry went over to introduce himself to one of the chefs, named Alan Drake, and asked if any one else had been in the dining room.

"Not yet," Alan pleasantly replied, and then asked, "Is this group heading to Ewa Beach this morning?"

Jerry nodded and smiled, "Yup. It's their first morning, and some may still decide to go to school." He then wondered, "Have you seen our base security this morning?"

"They were here well over an hour ago, for shift changes between six and seven," Alan replied.

Seeing many girls enter the main dining room, signaling that dorm one was ready, Jerry grinned, "Expect a gathering at lunch time, Alan. I think kids will split their lunches, some here, and some at Ewa Beach."

Alan nodded, "I'll let Charles and the Ewa Beach staff know. Thank you, Jerry."

Waving and smiling, "Any time," Jerry returned to the dining room, where AJ and his sons were already getting lines of kids through the dimensional doors. Alan and the other chefs began transporting trays of food from the Oneula Beach kitchen to the Ewa Beach kitchen. Soon after Jerry joined his husband at the dimensional doors, Kaleo, Tory, Sean, Troy, their sons and the remaining boys from dormitory one entered the room.

* * * * *

Ewa Beach CIC Dining Room

Monday, November 8, 2004, 8:07AM HTZ

Hundreds of adults, kids and UNIT security personnel were already sitting at tables with their friends and having breakfast when three dimensional doors chimed and the signs above them changed to display 'Oneula Beach'. The silvery facade faded away, allowing kids at either end of the doorways to see into the room at the distant end. In small groups, Oneula Beach kids came in the room. Already occupying tables near the doors, the Ewa Beach Core Rimmers and their sons greeted newbies. Even Shirley, the turtle doves and French hens softly cooed their good mornings. The four calling birds loudly squawked their morning greetings, causing Shirley to pause and glance down at the noisy group. If birds could roll their eyes, Shirley, the doves and hens would've all gotten dizzy and fallen off their perches, but the four noisy calling birds kept shouting 'good morning' over and over again.

Six-year-old Justin Young, and his roommate, five-year-old

Simon Ferguson, ran into the dining room, turned sharply and went to the outbound doors. Justin loudly laughed, "Oneula Beach" at the first outbound door. Seconds later, Justin and Simon raced through, back to Oneula Beach, and back again into the Ewa Beach dining room. To the loud laughter of many of the Ewa Beach kids, Justin and Simon ran round-and-round, traversing almost three kilometers between bases in the seconds it took them to run from one outbound doorway to the next.

John, Stephen, Corey, Drew and Reyes sat at one table. At the next table over were Mike, Derrick, Keith and Prez. Beyond those two tables were the two tables of all their sons; Dillon, Richie, Geoff, Lenny, Wade, Frankie and Randy were sitting at one table, while Gage, Jonah, Sammy, Ben, Leo and Dee sat at the next table over. Spare seating had been left at all four tables so the Oneula Beach leadership and their sons had places to sit. Over a hundred boys and girls crossed the dining room. Many newbie kids were prompted to return from the kitchen to tables where new friends were already sitting.

Upon arrival, Kaleo, Tory, AJ, Jerry, Sean and Troy already appeared a little frazzled and worn out. As they passed, Keith chuckled, "This morning was a special case, dudes. By tomorrow, kids will be wherever they want to be, without Core Rimmers leading them around."

Drew called, "Kaleo, Tory, AJ and Jerry, you dudes come sit with us."

Corey giggled, "Daddies have some catchin' up to do."

Tory laughed, "We're going to have to wake earlier to get five sons bathed, and then us showered too."

"We were the last group to show up at the other dining room," Kaleo sniggered.

Prez smiled, "You loved every second too, I can tell."

"Absolutely!" Kaleo and Tory cheered.

Prez's PADD played a power chord, notifying him of a message. After wiping his hands, Prez read a note from Mr. T that had all the Division's teachers included. It read:

Good morning Prez,

It's customary to have present division leaders make a short statement when new children start school. For many of the kids, knowing you're there with them makes a huge difference in their attitudes. I'm certain you're very aware that willingness to do well is in the attitude of the students. Be brief and positive then return to your seat. I intend to be there as soon as I wrap up a few tasks here at C.L.E.

Have a good day,

Mr. T

With Keith looking over his shoulder, Prez replied to the note.

I can easily do this, for the fifth time since yesterday.

Cheers,

P.A.O.B.

Keith grinned, "Is this before our five minute rhythm techniques demonstration?"

Shaking his head, Prez chuckled, "After, way after."

Mike sniggered, "Do you want help, Head Rimmer?"

Prez slyly smirked, "With Keith and rhythm demonstrations, or with a pep talk for the kids?"

"Both!" Derrick and Mike chorused, causing Reyes to burst into laughter.

Unable to wipe the grin off his face, Prez squinted, "See me before and after school."

"WHOO-HOO! DIRECT ME!" Derrick, Keith and Mike loudly sang.

Sadly shaking his head, yet still giggling, Reyes returned to his prior conversation, saying, "So, our kittens didn't want to be in the basement. Since it's smaller, it's not anywhere near as nice as the Seiberts' basement." Picturing the put-off kittens, Stephen and Corey began giggling. Reyes grinned, "We showed them upstairs, which became interesting too, when Gage turned on the television and six kittens jumped, puffed up and scattered."

From the next table, Gage giggled, "They say they've never seen a TV or heard anything so loud. The surround sound system wasn't even on!"

Nodding, Jonah laughed, "It was like the Rimmers riding Kyle's wave; all six screeched, 'SHIT!' knowing they were going to die, and then flew away!"

"Two went under the dining room table," Reyes giggled, "two went behind and under the sofa, and two went back downstairs into the basement." All the seated Rimmer sons howled laughing. "It was like that for the next hour," Reyes sniggered, "every new room and new sound caused the kittens to freak out. Jonah and Gage went to bed just to calm down the kittens."

Trotting over to the table, Rikko whined, "I'll play with kittens."

Smiling down at the large puppy, Reyes replied, in dog, "You'll eat the kittens!"

"No!" Rikko barked, "Not tasty."

From a few tables away, Fred giggled, "Rikko has played with our neighbors' cats and kittens."

Chauncey nodded and grinned, "At least until the finicky cats decide they've had enough of dog slobber."

"Kisses," Rikko growled.

Chauncey giggled, "Right, kisses, how silly of me."

Holding his belly and cracking up, Fred bellowed, "Until Rikko gets kitty smacks across the snout!"

Not too far away from Fred, Chauncey, or the Core Rimmers, Trevor Taylor looked over and up at his new dad asking, "Can we get a puppy too, daddy?"

Before Jason had a chance to think or look at his wife for her opinion, the quadruple R's shouted, "Yeah, this family needs a puppy too!"

Across the dining room, sitting with other adults, King Aalona heard and grinned, "Perhaps Clan Short will eliminate our need for stray animal control too?"

At the worried expressions the woman wore, Jim Hundser helplessly chortled. Rob sniggered, "Let us talk to our sons, Majesty. It seems appropriate, but we can't allow every kid to have a pet."

Walking back across the dining room, behind his husband and the other Oneula Beach Core Rimmers, Kaleo overheard Bill Seaver offering, "We could drastically reduce the numbers of euthanized animals, especially young kittens and puppies that are healthy, but simply don't have a home."

Crossing the room and overhearing the adults, Kaleo went into a giggling fit. Before going to join his husband at the table with Drew and Corey, Kaleo stopped by Prez, leaned over and whispered what was being discussed at the parents' tables. Nodding, Prez grinned, "I'll take care of it," and then typed a message to Jason Taylor regarding the acquisition of pets.

Keith softly wondered, "What're you doin', T'hy'la?"

"It's not a horrible idea," Prez quietly answered, so more than three-hundred-fifty kids didn't flip out. He added, "A house pet for a family is a little different from what we generally have. I'm thinking we need to concentrate on breeds that build bonds with groups, like herding dogs. That way the responsibility of caring for pets is spread out to entire bases. Something positive can come out of this for our kids and the animals too."

Derrick softly giggled, "No bird dogs, Prez. Shirley and company were here first."

"Scratch those field hunting breeds," Prez sniggered.

Getting into Prez's word play, Alden giggled in their ears; "If you want, I can have Timmy give you pointers. Last count was two-hundred-seventy-four canine breeds, five-hundred-twenty-six feline breeds, forty-three avian breeds, and five-hundred-thirty reptile breeds in his bedroom. Other types we're still counting; and only five percent of his 'friends' are classified as extinct!"

Meanwhile, from his PADD, John ordered an extra fifty teddy-bears for the bear cave. After school, he intended to take kids to choose their new best friends. Almost half of the level-two orphanage kids were under ten-years-old and might want one. He hoped that eighty bears in the cave would be a sufficient start for the five- to seven-year-old kids. Then he could restock, if necessary, for the eight-to- ten-year-old kids.

Around the table, Drew, Corey, AJ, Jerry, Kaleo and Tory were excitedly rambling about their first night in townhomes with their families. Only two couples, Drew and Corey and Kaleo and Tory, went to sleep in king-sized beds with their sons. From the next table, Sean joined the conversation, making it known that they also woke to a bed filled with sons.

Similar chats traveled around the tables of Rimmer sons. When that topic wore itself out, Billy checked around the tables, asking, "Which of you are going to school?"

Mike Hunnicutt replied, "We ain't goin'. Dad and pop says we need a'justments."

With a brother to each side, Kenny sputtered on his milkshake, swallowed and then laughed, "We need to adjust to a new place! We do not need adjustments!" Other boys at the tables nearby helplessly giggled. Before either brother could attack him, Kenny pulled both his brothers close and into tight hugs.

Stan told Billy, "Me and my bros ain't goin' either."

Jason smiled, "One of our dads is gonna say somethin' to the rest of the new kids. While old timers are at school, we've got two bases to explore."

Sammy prompted, "Let us know what you find, Billy."

Nodding, Billy grinned, "We already found tennis courts at Oneula that ain't here. I hope to get most of the new kids exploring with us."

Overhearing the boys, John gasped, "Another something I forgot." He tapped his sub-vocal, calling, "Alden, get playground equipment installed at... ya know what, get 'em at all our bases, even the ones with refugees. Make sure all the playgrounds are properly equipped with the same stuff as here, dude."

Alden replied, "Got it, John. It'll be done in just a minute or two."

"What's the delay?" John wondered.

"Four bases worth of playground equipment isn't in our warehouse," Alden giggled. "We have to buy more stuff, so they're all the same."

Also overhearing the boys, Prez smiled at Troy and Sean, wondering, "You started this?"

Still eating a stack of buttermilk pancakes, Troy nodded. So he wouldn't embarrass his eldest son, Sean softly explained, "Billy needed encouragement. Exploring is today's task. Tomorrow and each day he needs it, he'll get a new challenge."

After swallowing a mouthful of pancakes, Troy quietly snarled, "His old parents started the vicious downward spiral, Prez. Now we get to counter-act their major fuck-up. In the process, we hope all our other sons and the newbies will watch and learn."

Prez widely smiled at everyone around the table. Keith giggled, "You made them Morale Rimmers, baby."

Nodding, Prez grinned, "And now I'm going to add to the expedition." He stood and stepped up onto his chair, facing the majority of the Clan and spoke over the PA system. "I'd like to address all the newest kids first," Prez announced. "That's all of you that have arrived since Thursday. All of the rest of us have had a week off school to get familiar with our base and with one another. I strongly suggest that each of you take the next week off too. We can easily rotate weekly placement tests for everyone on Mondays."

"If you're wondering what you can do while the other half of us are at school, I've learned that Billy Whittmore is heading up expeditions to explore both bases. Even if you sleep here at Ewa Beach, I highly recommend joining Billy, Jason, Scott and Jimmy. What you guys find at Oneula Beach, many of us won't know about, so we can start sharing that during lunch, and after school, and again during and after dinner."

Standing and displaying his cast, Jay Montigua reminded, "It would be better if I didn't go, Prez. Writing with this thing is almost impossible. The next six weeks I'll be dealing with this."

Prez smiled, "Jay, when was the last time you saw one of our doctors?"

"Yesterday morning, after breakfast, I saw Doc Andrews," Jay responded. "I'm supposed to see him again this morning."

Prez called, "Doc Andrews, what's this six weeks nonsense? My burned tush should've taken a week to heal, not two days."

Standing, Doc Andrews smiled, "Yesterday, I checked Jason's concussion and his wrist. Today, and everyday this week, I'll be examining Jason's wrist. I intended to surprise Jason, but expect the cast gone by Saturday, and then three or four days wearing an Ace bandage." Jay's and Chris' jaws dropped. Around the dining room, giggles erupted. Loud laughter burst from Rafe, Pat, and Ralphie, but the two loudest were Drew and Corey.

Jay grinned, "Nine or ten days is a hell of a lot better than six-weeks."

"I want a second opinion!" Alden giggled over the speakers. "I bet I can find a doctor who isn't scared of transporters who will make it heal faster!"

"Who?" Kerry asked.

"Yeah, if I have to!" Alden laughed.

The original eighty-seven who had met Galli cracked up. Doc Andrews sat back down to finish his coffee.

Hearing Corey hiccuping and seeing Drew was red as an apple, Jay grinned, "You knew, didn't you? You're both going swimming after school." The faces of most male teenagers grew wide, evil grins.

"So, yeah," Prez chortled. "Some time to acclimate is highly recommended. I do not expect to see many new faces in school today." Pointing over at the table where Troy's and Sean's sons were sitting, Prez prompted, "Billy, please stand so kids can see you." Reluctantly, Billy stood at his chair. Prez instructed, "All of you wanting to explore the two bases can gather with Billy." He then softly smiled, "Thanks, Billy. Have a seat, bud."

Returning his attention to the Clan, Prez prompted, "It's getting near school time. Those who are definitely going to school, let's get motivated. We'll have at least two groups going there, led by a couple of Core Rimmers. The Core Rimmers from Oneula Beach were the last here, so they'll be available for those making last minute decisions. Do not fuss over this one simple decision. If you've only been here a few days, then let it wait a week. Join Billy's expedition and we'll see you in about two hours."

Stepping down off the chair, Prez gathered the contents of his tray. Around the dining room, many old-timers had already deposited their trays at the dishwasher. They got up to wait outside the CIC. Others took their trays to the dishwasher. The majority of newbies remained seated at their tables until this wave of activity passed.

Sean called, "Billy, com'ere a minute, please?" Billy stood and brought his milkshake glass over to Sean's table. Sean pushed his chair out, gestured to his lap and instructed, "Have a seat."

Billy giggled, "Don't you think I'm too big?"

Shaking his head, Sean smiled, "Not until you're eighteen. I sit on your pop's lap and he sits on mine." Carefully, Billy sat on his dad's lap. Wrapping his arms around his eldest son, Sean whispered, "I could tell you were surprised and embarrassed when Prez had you stand. That's not a failure, it's just something new."

"I was so scared too, dad," Billy reluctantly admitted. "My stomach went all crazy. I thought I might barf."

"You got past it though, without making a mess," Sean smiled. "I'm the exact same way, especially when Prez or Keith ask for my opinion. It just happened again to me last night. Even though I know them and like them, and I know they like me, it's still something I'm getting used to. Remember, all you need to do is try. You can't make kids do anything that they wouldn't normally want to do anyway, so just brush away the blushes and butterflies. Don't let them get you down, okay?"

Wiping joyful tears from his eyes, Billy nodded and smiled, "Okay."

Finished with his breakfast, Troy gently asked, "Do you know what it takes to be a leader?"

Shaking his head, Billy giggled, "I have no idea."

"Followers," Troy simply stated. "A good leader, people will want to follow. No one follows a bad leader. Your brothers already know you're a good leader. With their help, you'll be set to learn what they already know. These first steps, climbing out of that vicious downward spiral your old parents had you drowning in, were handled perfectly. I'm really very proud of you."

Happy tears flowed freely down Billy's cheeks. Glancing at his new dad and pop, Billy squealed, "Really?"

Troy nodded and smiled, "Absolutely."

"Definitely," Sean said barely a second later.

Sniffling and wiping the tears away, Billy sighed, "I really love you guys."

Hugging his eldest tightly, Sean replied, "And we really love you too."

Standing and leaning close to Sean and Billy, Troy softly but firmly assured, "That love won't fade, Billy. It'll only get stronger with every achievement you make. Failures never count, as long as you try your best, they're only temporary disappointments."

Billy wondered, "Why does Jason seem better at this than me? Even Scott and Jimmy seem better than me."

Slightly grinning because he had been expecting that question, Troy answered, "Only because of fewer years on that downward spiral, Billy. It's the same one your dad was on from the orphanages, and I was on with my dad. Now that you've broken free of the suck-zone..." Sean and Billy cracked up. Troy finished by giggling, "The only way to go is back up, out of the muck and mire." He landed a kiss on Billy's cheek, then prompted, "Ready, Tiger?"

Nodding, Sean giggled, "After a pep talk like that, I'm ready to take you home!" Rolling his eyes, Troy evilly snickered. As far as Troy was concerned, Sean got some in the shower, and so the next time was his turn, regardless of how often his butt was twinging.

Sliding off his dad's lap, Billy giggled, "I didn't feel nothin', so you've got time to run, pop."

Sean evilly grinned, "The next time I provoke your pop, your job is to make sure I get some. Lie like a rug if you have to, and tell him you were sitting on my big lump."

Hungrily humming, Troy locked eyes with Sean, clearly conveying, 'your big lump fits me perfectly, Tiger.' Sean giggled through a weak tiger roar.

Rapidly nodding and laughing hysterically, Billy took his shake glass off the table. Warmly smiling at his new parents, Billy giggled, "I'll see you in a few hours."

Standing up, Sean nodded, "Have fun."

Troy reminded, "We'll love you no matter what."

Nodding and delightfully shivering, Billy returned to the table with his brothers. The Hunnicutts and all five of Kaleo's and Tory's sons gathered at that table. The smallest kids moved onto their big brothers' laps to make room. Soon after Billy sat down, he and all the seated boys got the typical assembly line of kisses on the top of their heads from Troy, Sean, AJ, Jerry, Kaleo and Tory.

On the way to the dishwasher, Sean noticed the curious expressions on the faces of his team mates. Once they were far enough away from their sons and where anyone else might overhear, Sean quietly explained what was going on. The subset of Core Rimmers went outside and waited a few minutes for other kids, during which time each of the six shared more personal information about their life challenges. AJ and Jerry admitted that they felt a little weird entering their townhouse the night before. All of them understood exactly where Billy was at and they agreed the explorations were as good a method as any to help Billy. When it became obvious that no additional kids were going to join them at school, the six of them started across the outdoor recreation area and southeast toward the school.

Over with Chauncey and Fred Eckhart, Reyes asked, "Would you guys like to visit the AI Division? We could get Fred checked out, upgraded and come back here whenever you're ready, so you can still explore the other base?"

Fred checked with Chauncey, asking, "If you want to?"

Nodding, Chauncey offered, "I know you're fine, Fred, but upgrades are important. I just want to look around with the rest of the guys, so let's do both."

"Kewl," Reyes smiled. "I want to spend some time with friends there, and bring them back here too. We haven't seen the Oneula base either." He then tapped his comm-badge, calling, "Reyes to Marc."

A moment later, Marc giggled, "Here, Reyes. What's up?"

"I'm on my way with Fred and Chauncey Eckhart," Reyes explained. "Do you have dimensional doors there, or do I need to call Alden?"

"Just got 'em installed last night," Danny replied.

Hearing a familiar swishing sound, Reyes grinned, "Yeah, put your jeans on for company, Danny. We'll only be there a little while, so you can get naked again later." Marc cracked up.

"The satellite up-link needs a test, Reyes," Danny giggled. "Let us know if you suddenly feel like hopping around like a kangaroo." Fred and Chauncey roared.

Waving the two boys to follow, Reyes started for the dimensional doors, grinning, "I'm hopping there and next door, to visit Paul and Ryan. I learned tickle attacks are constant at Sullivan's Island, so I'm staying away from you two. By the way, Fred already knows you're a perv, Danny."

"Your honesty algorithms are on the fritz, Reyes," Danny sniggered. "I have the remedial software ready."

Paused at a dimensional door with Chauncey, Rikko and Fred, Reyes chuckled, "I'm a big boy and want firmware, grandpa." Over the sound of Danny and Marc laughing, he told the door, "AI Division headquarters." The door chimed, the display over it changed to the new destination, and the silvery facade faded to show the living room of Marc's house. Reyes walked through the door with his two guests and Rikko.

Back inside the Ewa Beach dining room, Phil Nash loudly called over, "What's the deal, Billy?"

Shivering, Billy replied, "We're going to check out what's at each base. We only know a few things, like this base has a lot of basketball courts, but the other base has tennis courts. This base has the CIC, but Oneula has a dining room and a rec room that are just as big. Our job is to find out what else is different." When Billy stopped speaking and noticed the many dozens of boys and girls who had listened to him, he blushed.

Phil nodded, "Let us know when you're ready."

Holding up his half-full milkshake glass, Billy giggled, "Any minute, I hope." Billy simply couldn't believe kids were looking to him for guidance, but they were, and it was freaking him out.

At the Taylor family table, where the six boys were seated, Ralphie caught Robbie's thoughts. Ready to play, Ralphie grinned, 'Billy's kind o' cute, huh, Robbie?'

Also getting in on the teasing, Ronnie drank his milkshake and added, 'It's the shy one's you need to watch out for. I'll bet when Billy's chillin' more, he gets plenty wild.'

intermediates and advanced class rooms."

Derrick asked, "You saw the inside of the buildings too? What's in there?"

"Each building is a little different," Sonia answered. "All eight of the outside buildings have entrance doors. The center building is connected by four doorways, and could be used as a gathering place where everyone can meet, like for start of day attendance, or maybe an end of day study hall. Some rooms looked a little like regular school rooms, with tables and chairs or desks. Some were filled with groups of computer stations. There wasn't one regular high school type of desk-chair combination anywhere. One building is already set up for you dudes, to teach music, with instruments on a stage area at one side, and the rest of the room was a lot of chairs, with only a couple of tables and some computer workstations."

Horacio happily gushed, "Each building has access to a patio area. Over-all, it's probably the best, most comfortable school I've ever seen anywhere."

Standing outside the entrance doors of a center building, ready to greet their new students, were Mr. T, Mrs. Diaz, Jason and Trinity Taylor and two new adult faces, one male and one female. Prez and Mr. T greeted each other with handshakes and a hug. Mr. T introduced the two new teachers, Mister Edward Stevenson, who preferred to be called by his nickname 'Eddie', and Miss Opal Perez. Mr. Stevenson was to become the Sciences teacher, and Miss Perez was to become the Language Arts teacher.

While Prez and Keith went into Director mode, Mike and Derrick held the doors open and waved kids inside. Amongst many of the older teens, Corey, Drew, John and Stephen led their families into this building. Not including the Core Rimmer families, another one-hundred fifty kids were in this first group. They all easily fit in the room. John estimated that this space could easily accommodate three times as many kids. Even the ceilings were high and octagon shaped, kids noticed. There were only padded benches around this room, and many didn't recall seeing this room on Monday. Corey and Drew checked a door to an adjacent building, but found it locked.

Having already done a light scan of Mr. T as he walked by, John led the group to the center doors, loudly calling, "This way, guys. Mr. T wants us in the computer lab anyway."

Wade giggled, "Daddy, you read him without asking?"

Leaning against the door to hold it open, John smiled, "Only for what was of interest to us, where we need to be and what we'll be doing."

Earleen Maygar walked with her sister past John, slyly giggling, "I told you we're not guys, John. You're forcing me to prove it."

Noreen locked eyes with Stephen, who was holding the opposite door open with Frankie. She evilly grinned, "To you and your husband, which I may never forgive either of you for, by the way."

Nodding and giggling, John checked Stephen's expression. Knowing he was just hit-on in a major fashion, by a girl for the first time ever in his life, Stephen intensely blushed. Frankie and Wade went into giggling fits.

John smiled, "You've been threatening that for over a week, Earleen. I thought you two were interested in Jeff and Tommy?"

Hopefully, Earleen wondered, "When are you inviting them again?"

"After school today, they'll be here," John sniggered. John had created rooms for his two best buddies when they were visiting the prior Wednesday afternoon. Now he didn't need phones or comm-badges to contact them or know when they wanted to contact him.

Not able to talk across the stream of kids flowing through the doors, Stephen sent, 'Don't you dare even think of it, John. It'll never happen with girls.'

'I know, baby,' John replied. 'I'm not there either, especially since you keep me very happy all the time, not only when we're alone.'

The large octagon shaped room the kids were entering was a maze of computer workstations arranged in circular formations, from the exterior wall and into the center of the room, creating five concentric circles. Each circle was briefly broken with space for people to move from circle-to-circle and around the room. Each computer station was equipped with a keyboard, mouse, joystick and stereo headset with a microphone. Thrilled kids roamed the circular rows of computers.

Corey tapped his sub-vocal, wondering, "Alden, where are the actual computers?"

"Here with me," Alden giggled. "It's called mainframe time-sharing, Corey. We can't have the kids rebooting and starting over."

"You're going swimming, Alden," Corey giggled, "I swear, as soon as you have legs, start running to the diving well."

Remembering that his real father spoke of mainframes from his job, Leo asked, "You and dad know about mainframes?"

Corey nodded, "Which is why Alden gets dunked."

"Very probably the first day," Keanu evilly grinned.

Over the speakers, Alden giggled, "You and Liki enjoyed Keith's rant about Windows, so why dunk me?"

Derrick and Mike joined the group in the room. Liki giggled, "Because you made it so we could hiccup and mistype even more stuff on our laptops. I think you were trying to cause Windows to crash."

Unexpectedly, Alden replayed another recording over the room's speakers. Drew's recorded voice gently said, "This graphic isn't working, angel."

Corey's recorded voice asked, "Which graphic where?"

"The flaming Pacific Rim on the home page, on the Windows system," Drew replied.

"Aww, Jeez!" Corey loudly griped, "Thirty-two-bit OS and sixty-four-bit graphics, my ass! It's skipping two of every three images! Fifteen frames per second is down to five! It looks like bleep! God bleep bleep-in' Win-blows can bleep my fat bleep-ing dick! Why do something the right way when you can implement a bleep-ed up architecture, and force every dumb bleep-ing company under the sun to support the mutha-bleep-in' piece of bleep?"

Wide-eyed, Leo smiled up at his pop; the slightly older boy who had patiently taught him the facts of life, who was prone to giggling fits, and was so nice so often that hearing his voice sounding that exasperated simply didn't fit. Softly giggling at his own ranting voice, Corey pulled Leo close.

Recalling the time, place and circumstances of the recording, Drew quickly giggled, "That's e..." But the recorded Drew softly giggled, "I love when you talk dirty windows, Cor." To the hysterical giggles and laughter of the gathered kids, Drew blushed and loudly laughed, "ENOUGH, ALDEN!"

Entering the room to find over a hundred and fifty laughing kids, Prez, Keith, Troy, Sean, AJ, Jerry, Kaleo, Tory and the six teachers curiously grinned. Blushing bright pink, Drew giggled, "It's better you don't know. Suffice to say, it's Alden's fault."

"Ah!" Prez smiled understandingly. He then loudly called, "Okay, everyone gather around over here." Kids started moving toward him.

Keith instructed, "Big kids let the littler kids in close, so they can see and hear." Kaleo, Tory, AJ, Jerry, Sean and Troy joined the other kids in the room, making sure the smallest were in front of the taller kids.

Prez cheerfully said, "Let's start with a few introductions, just to be sure everyone knows our teachers. First, Mr. T, the Clan educational adviser is here, to oversee everything." Kaleo and some older kids that had met Mr. T a week earlier disjointedly greeted him. "Then we have Mr. and Mrs. Taylor," Prez smiled, "who joined us Thursday evening with one son, and now have six." Kids nodded and giggled. "Mr. Taylor will be teaching social studies, civics and history. Mrs. Taylor is a math, algebra and geometry teacher." Moving on, Prez introduced, "This is Mrs. Diaz, from our old high school. She was our high school's band leader and a math teacher, and will continue those jobs here. Additionally, Mrs. Diaz is the music department adviser, since five of us will be music teachers, namely myself, Keith, Mike, Derrick and Troy. Next, our language arts teacher is Miss Perez. Lastly, our sciences teacher is Mr. Stevenson.

"All our teachers are certified Clan education professionals. As I understand it, they've taken special classes and gone through simulations, with classrooms of kids that are just like many of us. These men and women are not like your old teachers at your old schools, shuffling kids every forty-five minutes like an assembly line. These people are here to help every one of us, not just as teachers, but as part of our communities and part of Family Clan Short."

Prez paused because the three youngest boys were whispering. Before Prez could ask, Dewi, Kokaku and Aaron Pendergrass cautiously walked to three adults, Mr. T, Mrs. Diaz, and Mr. Stevenson. The boys held their arms up, wordlessly prompting to be picked up and held. Each adult squatted down to lift a boy.

Prez chuckled, "Thanks to these three, you all get the point now? Just like every other adult here, these are kind men and women that want to help us. When I say they're part of our communities, I mean they live here, or at Oneula Beach; three have families and two are single, living in condos, for the moment, but we know what will happen as soon as they get used to living as Clan in paradise, don't we?"

Richie giggled, "Smoochin'!" sending most of the kids into a giggling fit. Mr. Stevenson started whistling and acting innocent, driving older boys to laughter. Geoff, Dillon and Wade playfully shoved Richie around a little.

Prez chuckled, "That's what happens. Before I turn over to Mr. T and our teachers, let me remind you that this is nothing like other schools. The test you'll be taking today isn't even like what I imagined it might be. Instead of computerized math and English, multiple choice questions, we'll see a little of that, which will lead to various tangents, such as movie clips, cartoons, and games that will try to discover where your real interests and abilities are."

Going to Kokaku and taking his young brother from Mr. Stevenson, Prez explained, "Let's say Kokaku starts his test with a few questions, appropriate for his pre-school age group, and they lead him to a cartoon that he watches and is then questioned about during the course of the flick. These questions will help determine if Kokaku is a musician or a scientist; if he's got a logical, mathematical mind or if he's a mini philosopher, which I sometimes think is the case. What it all amounts to is, you'll each have individualized tests, that go with your flow, testing without actually seeming like any kind of test, like we're used to."

Keith asked, "Are there any questions?" He paused long enough to watch kids of every age shaking their heads. He then asked, "Is anybody still scared about passing or failing?"

Simply to make sure other kids understood, Troy shrugged, "From what's been said, the test adjusts itself, so that's impossible."

"Exactly correct," Keith said. "The test shows what the Clan already knows, that everybody is capable of doing something very well. Even if you don't know today what that might be, you'll know very soon."

"By the time you leave school this afternoon," Mr. T interjected. "We will know exactly what is needed to make you the best person that you can be. The Clan educational system is unique in more ways than testing. Our actual classroom situation is spread across three continents. Most of you will be attending classes in various locations, around the world, during your day. For those with duties outside school, your schedule will adjust to allow those duties to be completed without penalty. To give you an example, Patriarch Short manages to show up for classes one day a week at the most recently; yet in no way is he behind, he doesn't have to play catch-up with the rest of his schoolmates. Homework consists of things that you enjoy doing in your free time. According to my sources, that means the Core Rimmers will probably be doing their Health Classes more at home than at school."

"They've already passed Family Planning, despite their insistence that there are only bees and no birds," Mrs. Diaz teased.

Glancing at each other, Prez and Keith blushed and chuckled. Keith went to retrieve Dewi from Mr. T, mostly to have a little kid to hide behind for a minute or two. Mike went to get his littlest brother, Aaron from Mrs. Diaz, softly sniggering, "That comment was for my dirty dancing during guitar solos?"

"And Preston singing love songs to Keith every Friday afternoon for two months," Mrs. Diaz giggled. Softly chortling, Mike, Prez, and Keith returned to the mass of students, giving their full attention to the teachers.

Mrs. Taylor announced, "Everybody find seats. The smaller chairs and computer stations are in the center of the room, for little boys and girls. Each row toward the outside of the room gets slightly larger. It's important that you can comfortably reach the keyboard, mouse, and joystick." Kids started to move around, taller teenagers near the outside wall and getting progressively smaller and younger toward the center of the room.

"Make sure you sit with your friends nearby," Mr. Taylor instructed. "Other schools don't appreciate friends talking, but Clan schools encourage it. This will allow more open conversations during lecture sessions, and to encourage those who might be more comfortable talking with their closest friends, to help one another whenever necessary."

Miss Perez said, "Our jobs are to encourage you. As important as that might be, you encouraging each other is more important."

"One more thing," Mr. T added. "If I catch any of you trying not to talk to each other during the test, you won't get any cookies with lunch!"

"WHAT?" about a hundred-and-sixty kids incredulously hollered.

* * * * *

Meanwhile, back at the dining room, the Stoeher twins, Tanner and Toby, were sitting with the Hiram twins, Anakoni and Kapena. All four were eleven-years-old. Since Saturday, they had been living in the same hall of Ewa Beach's dormitory three. Naturally, they were becoming friends. With all their milkshake glasses empty, Tanner directly asked the Hiram brothers, "Can you guys hear each other in your minds?"

Anakoni scowled, "Not without talking."

"It's not that we haven't tried," Kapena moaned. "Since getting here, we met lots of dudes that can."

Anakoni asked, "Can you two do it?"

Nodding, Toby grinned, "We could before getting here. Saturday, we talked with Cesar and Felipe, and then Ralphie, Richie, Robbie and Ronnie. We're practicing and it's getting a little better."

Tanner offered, "You two look almost the same, like me and Toby. Have you ever tried before getting here?"

Kapena hummed then answered, "Not really. For us, it's like we can't when we actually try. But once Anakoni knew I had accidentally cut myself pretty bad." He showed the Stoeher twins the scar at the base of his left thumb, grinning, "I was making a sandwich when it happened. My bro was outside, so he couldn't have known, but he did."

"Another time, I fell out of a tree and Kapena knew I wasn't okay," Anakoni shared. "I bumped my head pretty good and scraped the hell out of my back, the way I slipped. My bro was at the same park, but not around me, so he couldn't see what happened, but then he was there, helping me get home."

Toby instructed, "Talk to John Hundser later. He's our Intel leader and expert. If there's anyone who'll know what's up, he might."

A little defensively, Kapena asked, "Why does it matter?"

Tanner shrugged, "It doesn't, not to anyone besides you two. It's just kewl having the connection with Toby. You'd like it if you could learn it." He gestured to his brother, smirking, "The chocolate monster here..." Toby and the Hiram's cracked up, and Tanner giggled, "keeps both our bellies full, with cookies, cake, ice cream, candy bars..."

Anakoni giggled, "Why do you have strawberry shake then?"

Tanner smirked, "Just cos he's a chocolate freak don't mean I can't have my own favorites."

Toby suggested, "If you'd wanna try mind talkin', we could help."

Kapena nodded and smiled. Anakoni chuckled, "Sure, let's do that."

At the next table over Craig sat with his brother Phil and the three Oldcambus brothers. The oldest of the three, Kassidy Oldcambus quietly checked with Craig. With a nod from Craig, Kassidy called over, "Guys, telepathy is no big deal. My little bros dump silly ideas in my head now and then. It used to drive our parents crazy, especially at dinner time."

Karey evilly grinned at his twin, wondering, "Is now a good time to admit we can hear Kassidy's thoughts too?"

"WHAT?" Kassidy incredulously hollered, and quickly asked, "Since when?"

Kade told Karey, "Now's not a good time, obviously." With nods and giggles, the eleven-year-old twins slid away from the table, got up and took off running for the exit, with Kassidy chasing after them.

Looking over at the Hiram twins, Craig innocently smiled, "Maybe it's better to never admit you're telepathic." The Hiram and Stoeher boys cracked up.

Looking around the dining room, Kenny Hunnicutt sighed, "I think Leo's the only new kid that went to school."

Billy shrugged, "It makes sense, since his entire family went, he prob'ly figured he might as well. It looks like the older Latin King kids went too."

"More stuff to share at lunch and later today too," Jason helpfully added.

Scowling, Billy wondered, "How am I gonna remember stuff?"

Stan smiled, "We'll all help, Billy."

In front of Billy, near his shake glass, a PADD materialized on the table. Twelve heads glanced down at the device. Over the loudspeakers in the ceiling, Alden giggled, "That will help you keep a list, Billy."

Jason looked up, laughing, "Alden, you're a kick."

Over Jason's comm-badge, Alden giggled, "That's good?"

"Sure is," Jason chuckled, "anything fun is a kick, like doing somersaults in a pool or spinning around just to make yourself dizzy and wobble into stuff."

"That's an interesting new slang use of the word I'll remember," Alden admitted.

Kenny smiled, "Anyway we can get our kicks, Alden. Like amusement parks are strictly for kicks. You've heard that before, haven't you?"

After a few moments, Alden giggled, "Yup, I just found it in literature and in some songs, used in that context. Now it makes sense. Who would willingly want to get kicked, after all?"

Two sets of quadruplets, the Steibs and the Taylors, and Pat, Carrol and Trevor converged on the table where Billy sat. Ronnie sent a test telepathic message to his ex-neighbor from St. Joseph, just to see if he would get it. Richie kept Carrol and Trevor in the loop while Ralphie kept Pat informed. Billy giggled, "It's time to go?" and all eleven boys began giggling.

Ralphie sniggered, "Kewl. You heard Ronnie?"

"The words but not his voice," Billy softly admitted.

Robbie smiled, "It's kewl, dude. You'll get used to mind talking."

Gesturing to the quadruple R's and the Steib brothers, Pat giggled, "You might even be heard, if one of these eight happen to be paying attention."

Smirking at his boyfriend, Ralphie giggled, "Are you saying I talk too much?"

Shaking his head, Pat leaned closer to whisper, "When we kiss, the best part is I can still hear what you're thinking. Those thoughts mean a lot to me, Ralphie."

'I guess Ralphie needs to work on his kissing then,' Richie silently teased.

Robbie grinned, 'Or maybe he talks so much that even with his mouth full of tongue, he can't shut up.'

Ralphie smirked, 'You both need boyfriends! Billy's still smiling, so go for it, bros.' The Steib brothers uncontrollably giggled.

Lanna Seaver and Laura Gibbons returned to the dining room and walked directly to the area where the girls were congregated. Standing with his empty shake glass, Billy said, "Let me take this to the dishwasher and we'll get started." Billy started toward the kitchen.

"I've got your PADD, bro," Jason said.

"Kewl," Billy replied.

Looking at the PADD, Jason tried it out, asking Alden for instruction.

Getting shoved by Richie and Ronnie, Robbie followed Billy. Robbie confidently shared, "I've been here since Thursday night. My bro and I haven't checked out half of what's here yet."

A little stunned with Robbie's company, Billy softly asked, "Have you been busy?"

"With three brothers, adding two more, and getting family stuff together, yeah," Robbie warmly smiled. "You weren't here at lunch time yesterday," Robbie realized, and explained, "That's when my parents officially adopted my brothers, and Carrol and Trevor."

Many girls started giggling and some cheered, "Thank you!" Turning slightly and pausing, Billy wondered what was happening, but then continued to the dishwasher.

Robbie grinned, "Aunt Lanna and Aunt Laura have given the girls something else to do." He giggled, "Girl stuff, ya know? They're going to learn about make-up and painting their faces."

Nodding, Billy grinned, "You can... umm... hear everything from everybody?"

Robbie chuckled, "Not everybody and not all the time." Billy put his glass down on the dishwasher shelf and turned to find Robbie directly before him. Blushing, Robbie sent, 'I think you're cute too, dude. I'd like to see if that leads us somewhere. How 'bout you?' Billy's jaw dropped. He recalled a joke made Saturday, when he'd said that he might go for two of the quadruplets. Suddenly, he wanted to cover his face and run away. Robbie giggled, "Damn, you're cute inside too. You're going nowhere far from me, for a while, I think."

Billy happily gushed, "You're making me crazier! How am I gonna deal with about a hundred guys and you too?"

Robbie shrugged and smiled, "With help, from me, my brothers, your brothers, and prob'ly the Steib brothers too." Reaching an arm

