Chapter 1

Republic Of Hawaii, Ewa Beach, Oahu

October 29, 2004 2:20 PM

"Okay boys," Mrs. Diaz loudly snickered, while all four teens giggled hysterically at yet another series of musical flubs. She then reminded, "Michael, follow the piano lead please."

Struggling to keep a straight face, Mike Gibbons complained, "It's boring though, Mrs. Diaz. I'm strummin' these chords forever! What's wrong with doubling the melody, at least some of the time?"

Mrs. Diaz sighed and explained, "There's nothing wrong with that idea but you're taking a serious rock tangent. The song is jazz. This is a jazz ensemble. That means no distortion, no Hendrix acrobatics and no wiggling your buns around to the point of distraction!"

Mike shyly smiled and blushed. Unable to hold it in any longer, Derrick, Keith and Preston roared laughing. As freshmen, the four boys were amongst the most talented musicians at James Campbell High School; they were the rhythm section, the core of the larger jazz ensemble; Derrick Seibert on drums and percussion, Preston O'Brian on upright bass and electric bass guitar, Keith Hundser on keyboards and vocals, and finally Mike Gibbons on acoustic and electric guitars.

Raising his hand, Preston asked, "Can we change tunes real quick, Mrs. Diaz?"

Eying them suspiciously, Mrs. Diaz nodded, "Which song... as if I didn't already know?"

Glancing at each of his friends, Preston replied, "Weird." All four boys rapidly nodded.

"That would get us back on track," Keith promised.

Mrs. Diaz sighed, "Alright," then quickly added, "but before you leave today, I want to hear The 'In' Crowd all the way through." Getting four positive replies, she went over to the PA system and powered it on then went to take a seat behind her desk. Derrick picked up his headset and adjusted it on his head while Preston and Mike moved in front of the one microphone on a floor stand.

Flipping the microphone switch, Keith tapped it to verify it was on. He then checked that the Roland RS-5 synthesizer sitting atop the baby grand piano was working. Quickly, he changed the settings to Hammond Organ and played the opening chord. All four boys then sang the opening chord in perfect four part harmony. Keith nodded at Derrick, signifying he was ready.

Softly, Derrick counted out the tempo then began the opening cymbal swell. Together they began playing the introductory chords. Keith played both the Yamaha baby grand piano and the synthesizer then began sweetly singing.

Isn't it weird? Isn't it strange?

Even though we're just two strangers on this runaway train

We're both trying to find a place in the sun

We've lived in the shadows, but doesn't everyone?

Isn't it strange how we all feel a little bit weird sometimes?

All four boys had harmonized the first bridge beautifully, Mrs. Diaz believed. When they liked the song they were playing, they were amazing. She dutifully listened to the remainder of the song.

Yeah. Ooo. Isn't it hard? Standing in the rain.

Yeah, you're on the verge of going crazy and your heart's in pain

No one can hear but you're screaming so loud

You feel like you're all alone in a faceless crowd

Isn't it strange how we all get a little bit weird sometimes?

Sitting on the side waiting for a sign, hoping that my luck will change.

Reaching for a hand that can understand, someone who feels the same.

When you live in a cookie cutter world being different is a sin.

So you don't stand out. But you don't fit in. Weird.

Woah-oh! Sitting on the side waiting for a sign, hoping that my luck will change.

Reaching for a hand that'll understand, someone who feels the same.

When you live in a cookie cutter world if you're different you can't win.

So you don't stand out but you don't fit in. Weird.

Isn't it strange how we all feel a little bit weird

Strange, how we all get a little bit...

Strange, 'cause we're all just a little bit weird sometimes.

As the last tones faded out, Mrs. Diaz stood and wiped her eyes. Walking around her desk, she smiled, "Very well done, boys."

"See, we can do it," Mike emphatically said.

"I know you can," Mrs. Diaz agreed. Leaning against the piano, she instructed, "As professional musicians, you might not always have the choice to play what you want though. That's what I'm trying to teach you; to play what's written on the pages. When it's time to improvise, the sheet music will tell you so." Holding back any remarks about their rock band, all four boys nodded and she asked, "The 'In' Crowd now please; just as well?"

Preston put his Gibson EB-3 electric bass back on its stand and moved over to the upright bass. Sitting down on the piano bench, Keith turned his microphone off.

From behind the drum kit, Derrick called, "Mike?" and suggested, "Put the Strat down and play the acoustic dude." Sighing, Mike did as his boyfriend asked, knowing they wouldn't get out of school until finishing the song correctly. Preston giggled as Mike put the amp on standby then moved the cable from the Stratocaster to the Martin DC-16RGTE acoustic-electric. Rolling his eyes and shaking his head, Keith silently wondered if they would ever be able to start the weekend. Derrick then called out the count and they began playing. During the first bars of the song, Mike clapped his hands. Then he began strumming chords for the next two refrains. During the next two repeated sections, Mike doubled the piano melody easily. Mrs. Diaz signaled to begin playing softer, so slowly over the next sixteen bars, the band dynamics went from fortissimo to pianissimo. Derrick was playing his snare and cymbals with his fingertips. Preston climbed up onto the upright bass, balancing himself on the instrument to play the deepest notes available as softly as possible. Fearing for Preston's safety, Mrs. Diaz watched him more carefully and prepared to react should the instrument slip. For another twenty-four bars they played as softly as possible. The final bell rang, startling all four boys, but they never lost composure and quietly played on. Then they suddenly went back to fortissimo and played the final section.

More than pleased with near virtuoso performances from all four, Mrs. Diaz clapped and smiled, "Next week we play before the entire student body, and then, over next weekend, in front of your parents. You boys are opening the show."

"YES!" all four boys excitedly cheered.

While the boys began gathering their sheet music, Mrs. Diaz reminded, "The 'In' Crowd first, then Weird, then the rest of the ensemble joins you for In The Mood and the remainder of the show."

"They're gonna be blown away!" Derrick snickered.

Rapidly nodding his agreement, Mike smiled, "This year's band kicks serious ass!"

"Michael!" Mrs. Diaz shouted, causing Mike to momentarily shrink.

"Sorry," Mike sincerely offered.

Staring the boy down for a long few moments, Mrs. Diaz then smirked, "Go on, be on your way. Have a good weekend." She got a chorus of replies while they packed their instruments.

With his bass guitar packed, Prez carried it over to Keith and melodically whispered, "Can't take my eyes off of you."

While packing up his RS-5, Keith softly sang A cappella; "You're just too good to be true, can't take my eyes off of you. You'd be like heaven to touch, I wanna hold you so much. At long last love has arrived, and I thank God I'm alive. You're just too good to be true, can't take my eyes off of you."

Derrick began tapping his sticks together and sang harmony with Mike as they walked out of the classroom. Keith continued singing to Prez; "Pardon the way that I stare, there's nothing else to compare. The sight of you leaves me weak, there are no words left to speak. But if you feel like I feel, please let me know that it's real. You're just too good to be true, can't take my eyes off of you."

Prez joined the harmony vocals then Keith loudly sang down the empty school hallway; "I love you baby, and if it's quite alright, I need you baby to warm a lonely night. I love you baby, trust in me when I say. Oh pretty baby, don't bring me down I pray. Oh pretty baby now that I found you stay. And let me love you baby, let me love you."

Walking out of school and across the fields, the foursome continued singing.

Waiting on the bleachers by the football field like they did every school day, sat Drew and Corey. Interrupting Corey's rambling about Drew's participation in a great touch football play during PE, Drew began snickering.

"What?" Corey wondered.

"Listen, here they come," Drew giggled. As the foursome approached, they all loudly sang to their partners; "I love you baby, and if it's quite alright, I need you baby, to warm a lonely night. I love you baby, trust in me when I say. Oh pretty baby, don't bring me down I pray. Oh pretty baby, now that I found you, stay. Oh pretty baby, don't bring me down I pray. Oh pretty baby, now that I found you, stay. And let me love you baby, let me love you." Bringing up the rear, Drew and Corey followed and sang along as they continued the walk home up Pailani Street.

Approaching Komana Street, Mike said, "We'll see ya in about an hour."

At the corner, Keith nodded, "We'll meet you here."

"Kewl, kewl," Derrick chanted.

Glancing over at Drew, Keith wondered, "Ya coming home or goin' over to Corey's?"

Drew shrugged and Corey happily answered, "Over my house."

Prez asked, "Are you coming to the beach with us?"

After wordlessly checking with each other, Drew then replied, "Sure, we'll meet you here by the park."

Keith reminded, "Remember to tell your folks about the luau, Corey."

Corey gasped then smiled, "Thanks, I did forget." At the corner of Pailani and Ahona Streets, Corey and Drew went left while Keith and Prez went to the right.

After a few silent steps together, Keith looked over at Prez. Like every October for the past two years, Prez was deep in thought again. Remembering that horrible day when the O'Brian's small plane crashed into the Pacific, Keith reached for his boyfriend's hand and squeezed tightly. It took three nightmarish days to recover the plane and their bodies. Thankfully, Prez's parents had made prior arrangements with Keith's parents. But what would it feel like to be orphaned at only twelve-years-old, Keith often asked himself. They walked into the house and went upstairs to their bedroom.

Once their instruments and backpacks were put away, they met at the foot of the bed. Longingly sighing, Prez moved closer to Keith. They hugged then gently kissed and Prez rested his head on Keith's shoulder softly whispering, "I'm sorry, babe."

"Don't be," Keith assured. "I understand."

Prez wondered, "Will I ever be able to deal with Octobers?"

Keith huffed, "I don't know, Prez. Know that I'll be with you each and every one of 'em."

Nodding slightly, Prez softly admitted, "That's the only thing keeping me sane, I'm certain of it."

Keith tenderly explained, "Besides us living together, we're having the second luau tonight so something good did come of it. Now all our neighbors get together to celebrate your parents lives, their own lives and how intertwined we all are. Almost all of us are from the mainland, whether this is the first generation or tenth, we've all made these islands home."

Prez whispered, "I hope everyone doesn't come over to me offering sympathies again."

"If anyone does, we'll just wander off with Mike and Derrick, okay?"

Humming affirmatively, Prez planted a kiss on Keith's cheek, then promised, "Always and forever babe."

Squeezing Prez firmly, Keith repeated, "Always and forever." He then reminded, "You never did tell me what you dreamed last night."

Prez softly recalled, "It was as if we never left Texas. Instead of stuff getting better like it did after we moved here, it got worse. They divorced, but both died anyway. That's when I woke up."

Now understanding why Prez had insisted on never being left alone, Keith repeated his promise from four in the morning; "I will never ever leave you alone, baby. I can barely stand being separated part of a school day; forget days or weeks, it ain't gonna happen."

"There's no one on the mainland I would go to. There's only you, your family and Derrick's and Mike's families. That's it, Keith; I have no one else important to me. It scares me so much sometimes too. Every time your dad has to get in a plane to go over to another island, I'm a nervous wreck." Pausing as a plane flew over head, Prez complained, "All planes freak me out now, even the Air Force jets flying in and out of Hickam."

Feeling Prez quake in his arms, Keith only softly shushed his boyfriend and gently caressed his back for a minute or two. Keith then thought aloud, "Remember how we used to sleep over each other's houses?" Prez nodded, and Keith continued, "We've been friends since you moved here, Prez. Remember how when you moved in here, we had bunk beds, like Drew and John?"

Prez giggled, "Yeah, it was embarrassing for a while there."

"It was. We came of age together, Prez," Keith admitted. "No one knows me better than you. No one knows you better than me. Now the bunk beds are gone, replaced by a nice big bed. We sleep together, shower together, play music together..."

"I love it all, Keith, really I do. I just wish..."

"I know, baby. It's still a struggle; wanting what we have and them back too. But if they had lived, I really think we'd still have eventually fallen in love. It might've taken longer..."

"Because we weren't hearing each other beatin' off at night!" Prez giggled.

"Or me calling your name, or you callin' mine."

"Denying we were gay, but eventually comin' out to each other."

"Then lettin' the 'rents in on our little secret."

"We were so friggin' nervous!" Prez giggled.

"And it was like, a non-event to them. Even Drew and John were like, it's about time! What a waste of two nervous breakdowns!"

"Now Drew's heading down the same path with Corey. I wonder if it's our doing still, even though they both say it's not."

"John's gonna be the big test, but he's only ten."

Prez pulled back and smiled widely, "At ten, how's he gonna figure out his sexuality when we could barely manage at thirteen, and Drew's not too sure why he's doin' what he's doin' with Corey?"

"My point exactly!" Keith chuckled.

Reaching his hands under Keith's T-shirt and purposefully tapping his fingers around his torso, Prez giggled, "Ready for the beach?"

Clenching his teeth briefly, Keith cackled, "It's so unfair you're not ticklish!" then pushed Prez down on the bed, tore his sneakers and socks off and hurried to get his boyfriend undressed.

Many minutes later, while Keith and Prez were walking downstairs, John threw open the front door and screamed, "DREW! KEITH! PREZ!"

Flying down the remaining steps two at a time, Keith and Prez hollered, "What's wrong?"

As John broke down in tears, Keith and Prez circled him looking for some sign of injury and repeatedly asked what had happened.

After being led to the living room sofa, John sobbed nonsensically, "Kai... wasn't... school... went... his... house... no one... there... door... open... place... wrecked... so... much... blo-oo-od... Kai's... dead... know... it!" Keith and Prez put it all together quickly, but then John blubbered, "Nother... sixth... grade... gone... too-ooo! Good... dead... bad... lives... why-hy?"

"Emergency?" Prez asked.

Keith nodded and went to the kitchen to call his mom at work with Prez and John in tow. If something bad did happen to John's friend, he would've likely wound up at her hospital and, being a family trauma counselor, she would know what was going on. But Keith only got her answering machine, which was odd because there was an entire department of counselors, and there was a secretary that usually answered who would forward the call to voice mail. "Mom, John just got home from school and he's freakin'. Some kids at his school never showed up, but John went to one kids house..."

"And two other friends, not just me!" John loudly interrupted.

After a pause, Keith frowned, "Okay, scratch that... John and some friends went to a kid's house and the place was trashed. We figured if a kid was hurt, he'd wind up there and you'd know about it. Can you call us back ASAP? John will wait here for your call. Bye." Hanging up the phone and turning to John, Keith asked, "Better now?"

John shrugged, "Until mom calls back, no it's not better... but it's all you can do, I guess."

Keith scowled and asked, "What's so special about this kid that you went to his house?"

Loudly whining, John tried to explain, "He's just a kid, like any of us but... Kai never wants to go home... Kai never ever says anything about his foster dad... and it's like... Kai has a heart attack if someone like... steps up next to him... he flinches and jumps, ya know? But Kai's the nicest guy, really! If he hears anyone mocking anyone else, he gets all kinds o' nutty and... I just know something is really very wrong, okay?"

Understandingly, Prez and Keith slowly nodded. Prez asked, "What do you want to do, kiddo? You can stay here and wait for mom to call, or you can come to the beach and keep yourself occupied?"

Keith suggested, "Why don't ya come with us, bro? You know the 'rents and everyone will be there by sundown for the luau. It's a small island; any problem, like what you're so scared of, would be common knowledge, and we'll all know about it soon enough."

John groaned indecisively for a few moments. He sighed, "Lemme call Jeff and Tommy real quick. I told 'em I'd meet 'em anyhow." John jumped up onto the counter to reach the phone and sat there while he dialed his friends. Keith and Prez went to the living room to give John some privacy.

"Keith?" Prez softly began, "From what John said, I'm envisioning a real mess at Kai's place."

Keith nodded thoughtfully and wondered, "How wrecked? How much blood? For all we know, it's nothing." Prez nodded, and Keith asked, "How about all of us check it out on the way to the beach?"

"The little tikes need to be kept clear though," Prez recommended.

"Okay," Keith sighed, "Us older dudes will check the place out. If the adults haven't already heard what's happened, our word will carry more weight than exaggerations from younger kids."

Entering the room, John announced, "Jeff and Tommy wanna go to the beach."

"Does Lindsay know about this?" Keith asked.

John nodded, "Course; she didn't look inside, but saw the broken door." As the three boys walked out of the house, John remarked, "It was like... there were huge claw marks in the door, bro; like a bear or a lion knocked the door down... so weird."

Locking the door, Keith chuckled, "Come on, John! A bear or a lion; in Hawaii?"

Becoming hysterical as they began the trip back to the park, Prez rambled, "They escaped from the Honolulu zoo, swam across Pearl Harbor, avoided being seen by anyone and stopped at Kai's house for a snack!" Keith cracked up and then so did Prez. What an imagination John had, they both silently thought.

Shaking his head sadly, John softly insisted, "See for yourselves; no dog made those marks!" As they walked, John explained, "Kai's eleven! He should be in sixth grade, but he's in fourth because he got left back... he's hardly ever in school this year; like half the time... maybe! And does he ever ask any of us over to play? No. Or for homework? No. Some of us think he wears the same clothes over and over again." John then challenged, "So you tell me, is any of that normal?"

Keith sighed, "John, maybe his parents are poor, or maybe they're native Islanders that choose to be more separate. We simply don't know what their situation is."

Prez wondered, "If you never play or study with him, how do you know where he lives?"

"Me, Jeff and Tommy followed him home once," John meekly offered.

Keith glared at his little brother. "That's just wrong; you infringed on his privacy."

John sighed, "You'd have to know Kai."

Meeting Drew and Corey at the corner as arranged, Keith asked, "Do you two know a kid named Kai?"

John corrected, "Kai Makaokalani."

"Oh, yeah he used to be in my class," Corey said. "He's not the kind of kid you can really get to know," Corey offered. "He's very quiet."

"See!" John excitedly said.

"Chill, bro," Keith said, "we'll all take a walk over there and check it out with you."

Jeff and Tommy came racing across the park. John hurried to meet them, and as usual, the threesome did a goofy three hundred sixty degree hands and arms spin before returning to the sidewalk.

"Where are we goin'?" Prez asked.

John pointed east and Jeff answered, "Hanaloa Street, near Hope Chapel..."

"There's a little dead end side street," Tommy explained.

Keith and Prez grinned at each other over John and his friends' synchronized performances.

Corey giggled, "The Three Musketeers!"

Seeing John sandwiched between Philippino Jeff, and African-American Tommy, Drew sniggered, "A walking Oreo cookie!"

"That's us!" Jeff, John and Tommy happily cheered, and wrapped their arms over their shoulders.

"Besides, who doesn't love Oreos?" John smiled.

"I wouldn't know," Keith smiled, "we can't seem to keep them in the house anymore." The three Oreo cookie monsters hummed hungrily, causing Prez to laugh. Near Komana Street and seeing Mike, Derrick and Lindsay at the corner, Prez held his hand high.

Not waiting for Keith and Prez to get closer, Mike shouted, "Did you hear this crap?"

Prez nodded and hollered, "We're gonna take a side trip to the beach."

Soon, Mike and Derrick joined with Keith and Prez. Behind them, Lindsay moved between John and Tommy. Bringing up the rear were Drew and Corey. "Double stuffed Oreo!" Corey giggled.

"You're just jealous!" Lindsay loudly laughed.

Turning and glancing at Keith and Prez, Derrick wondered, "What do you think?"

Keith shrugged and Prez answered, "It's either a bad scene or exaggerations."

In unison, the members of the Double stuffed Oreo loudly insisted, "We didn't exaggerate!"

"We'll soon find out," Mike melodically warned.

John said, "You'll see..."

Lindsay added, "it was horrible..."

Jeff nodded, "the door was broken down..."

Tommy finished. "flat on the ground."

Shaking their heads sadly, the four oldest boys grinned. To prove the little guys weren't so special, Mike then loudly sang Bad Moon Rising. "I see a bad moon rising, I see trouble on the way."

Derrick joined in for the second verse. "I see earthquakes and lightnin', I see bad times today. "

Prez and Keith added; "Don't go around tonight, well it's bound to take your life, there's a bad moon on the rise." All the way down Pailani Street and across the school field the entire gang sang. Emerging at Kaunolu Street, the youngest kids hurried ahead of the pack. Turning left at Hanaloa Street, they waited in front of Kai's house.

Almost simultaneously, Mike and Derrick gasped, "Holy shit!"

Turning to face the four youngest kids, Keith firmly instructed, "You guys stay here."

From outside, they could see the front door off its hinges and lying on the floor; the drapes on the inside of the front window were hanging crooked, as if the curtain rod was only partially knocked down. Having seen enough, Corey and Drew only went as far as the doorway and kept watch for police. Slowly walking on the door and inside the house, Keith, Prez, Mike and Derrick noticed deep and large scrapes in the heavy wooden door. The living room furniture was toppled over and some of it seemed crushed or torn beyond any chance of repair. On the far walls, about five feet off the floor there were streams of dried blood, apparently arterial spray. The four boys checked the other rooms, but found no one. Hurrying back outside again, Prez softly wondered, "Why aren't there any police?"

Keith added, "This is a crime scene; there should be a dozen cops roaming around gathering evidence."

"I told ya so!" John smirked.

Mike pushed past Keith and Prez, quickly heading to the street. Derrick dutifully followed and grabbed the waistband of Mike's shorts when he leaned forward and lost his lunch.

When Mike stood upright again, Derrick rubbed Mike's back and asked, "Better?"

Spitting out the foul taste of bile, Mike nodded then smirked, "I hate it when that happens."

Behind them, Keith said, "We need to find the police."

Derrick nodded, "Nothing like this has ever happened in this town."

"The nearest cop shop is miles away," Mike reminded.

Prez suggested, "We'll start for the beach and flag one down."

"Good one bro," Derrick nodded. "If we don't see one on the way, we'll stop at the beach kiosk."

Keith proudly smiled, "That's my baby," and landed a kiss on Prez's cheek. All the younger kids busted up giggling and laughing. Blushing but smiling, Keith shook head and announced, "Let's get out of here."

"But what about Kai?" John hollered.

Holding his hand up about five feet, Prez said, "The blood was way up here, John."

"That was from an adult, bro," Keith assured. "No eleven year old made that mess."

Suddenly, Corey and Drew shouted "HEY!" and raced over to a tree.

Looking around, Drew nervously queried, "You saw them, right?"

Searching high and low, Corey replied, "Two little boys, about seven-years-old, blond and brunette?"

Drew nodded and wondered, "Where'd they go?"

Corey hummed uncertainly and commented, "Weird."

"Come on, dudes," Keith impatiently hollered, "we don't wanna be here if or when the cops show up."

Hurrying over towards the rest of the group, Drew relayed, "There were two little kids over there."

"We both saw them," Corey agreed.

Prez glanced over where Drew and Corey had been and sighed, "Well, they're not around now, so let's vamoose."

After walking silently down Kehue Street for a few minutes, Mike broke the silence. "This is mega-fucked up. Shouldn't that house already have been taped off by police?"

Keith turned and walked backwards. "John, did you go to Kai's right after school?"

All four of the youngest kids nodded and John answered, "We hurried over there from school. Then we all ran home."

"No side trips?" Keith asked.

"Nope," John replied, "there and then home, no place else."

Turning around again, Keith figured; okay, so around an hour ago John and his friends were there. Checking his watch, Keith said, "It's quarter after four now." Looking around carefully, Keith noticed traffic was very light, but a lot of Ewa Beach residents would be preparing for the luau. They would only be passing one small grocery store, Silva's, down by the beach.

Prez softly realized; "There's really no chance of learning what's going on, until we get down by the beach, is there?" Keith shook his head. Prez then noticed a few band mates down by North Road and shouted; "Liko!" When Prez began jogging down the street to meet them, everyone else in the pack followed.

Liko was a sophomore and one of the trumpet players in the jazz band. With him were Makani, Charlie and Freddie; other musicians from James Campbell High School. Charlie played tenor saxophone and Freddie played alto saxophone. Prez approached them and slowed then he extended his right arm to shake hands and smiled, "How's it going, buds?"

Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike greeted their friends and learned they were heading to the luau too. They all went down North Road and began chatting. Traffic was a bit heavier on North Road, and there were other groups of kids heading down to the beach. None of them had heard of Kai or knew anything about the odd situation, and in fact, didn't believe half of what Prez, Keith, Mike and Derrick were telling them. Remarks from John and his friends didn't really help them understand either. The large group of fourteen teenagers and younger kids walked down Kilaha Street, debating the fact that someone was obviously hurt badly in the house, and that two grade school kids were missing. It was quarter to five when the pack arrived at Ewa Beach Park.

The parking lot was virtually empty, and although the stage was still setup, the PA, lighting system and all the instruments were gone.

Off to one side of the stage stood statues of a menehune (a mythical elf rumored to have inhabited the islands before Polynesians) and two lions. The entourage headed towards the beach, except for Derrick, Keith, Mike and Prez. They stopped at the stage.

Climbing quickly up onto the stage with Derrick, Mike slouched and growled, "Fuck me!"

Prez and Keith glanced at each other and scowled. Looking up on the stage, Prez loudly said, "Dudes, this proves something is going on that we don't know about."

"We were just here yesterday," Keith reminded. "Practically the whole town is coming to this luau, but where is everyone? We're the first band to perform tonight."

"That's not lookin' very possible," Derrick complained.

"How could everything be set for a town luau yesterday, but be so deserted today?" Prez asked.

"We would've heard about it being canceled at school," Keith insisted. "We're all here, ready to jam and party, but not one adult anywhere? There were at least twenty of 'em doing various things yesterday while we did our sound test. At least one person should be here with leis."

"Tell me this makes sense?" Prez challenged.

Derrick turned to Mike and said, "Look down by the beach dude. All the tiki torches are gone; the tables for the food, gone too."

"How could we not have heard it was canceled?" Mike whined.

"None of us heard any such thing bud. Fourteen of us walked here together. There are other kids down by the beach, just no adults. Now, either all of us have taken that final excursion into some demented alternate reality," Prez explained and Keith cracked up, "or something is going on. We just don't know what... yet."

Keith sniggered, "All our parents will be here soon. Might as well hang out at the beach."

"Just once I'd like to know what the hell is going on before it happens," Mike loudly bitched as he started for the stage stairs. Keith and Prez watched them momentarily then all four ran over to where the menhune and lions were just minutes earlier.

"Oooo-kay!" Keith droned.

Pointing at the spot where there had been statues, Derrick shouted, "Where did they go?"

"What in the hell is goin' on?" Prez softly wondered.

From the beach, Drew, Corey and John yelled, "KEITH! PREZ!" Seeing the three of them waving them over to the beach, Keith, Prez, Mike and Derrick ran to see what was wrong.

Mike fussed, "I'm gettin' seriously freaked out!"

Standing with Drew, Corey and John was another boy holding a beach blanket. When Keith, Prez, Mike and Derrick arrived, Drew wrapped an arm around the boy and explained, "Bros, this is Bruce. He spent the whole night here on the beach; his mom and dad never came to pick him up."

"Aww," Prez groaned at the scared little boy. It seemed that every other week all summer long, some poor kid was being left behind on the beach. Mike rescued one whose parents were soon found. Derrick bailed out another whose parents had been arrested for public intoxication. Keith had found two and Prez another two; all four of which had been completely abandoned and placed under the care of Child Protective Services.

Kneeling down in the sand in front of Bruce, Keith smiled, "Hey little guy, my name's Keith."

"Hi," Bruce softly said.

Prez asked, "How old are you, Bruce?"

"Eight," Bruce answered.

Keith asked, "Do you know what happened to your mom and dad?"

Bruce shrugged, "They said they'd come get me before night time," and then he began crying, "but they didn't. I slept here and been here ever since."

John hurried to Bruce and wrapped him in a friendly embrace, promising, "We'll make it better."

Keith nodded, "You're safe now, Bruce. My mommy helps people all the time. We'll help find your folks and get you taken care of."

"When's the last time you ate?" Prez wondered.

Bruce whimpered, "Lunch yesterday."

Turning away, Mike softly groaned, "God! Not another one."

Shaking his head sadly, Derrick whispered, "There ought to be a test to become a parent."

Checking his shorts pockets and pulling out a few dollars and some change, Prez smiled, "How about we get you a little something to munch on right now?"

"Really?" Bruce excitedly squeaked.

Keith chuckled, "Really." Standing up, Keith reached into his pocket and pulled out another few bucks and some coins. He and Prez then started back to the park.

John proudly smiled, "I told ya," and took Bruce's hand. Leading Bruce to the vending machines, John explained, "My bros helped some other kids lost like you."

"You guys are really nice," Bruce beamed. "Nobody else helped me all day."

Shaking his head, Drew softly offered, "Some people are just mean, they don't know better."

"That's not us though," Corey quickly added.

Already at the vending machines, Keith got two cans of Hi-C fruit punch while Prez got two packages of cookies and a bag of potato chips. It wasn't much, but after more than a day without food, Bruce needed something in his belly and soon. As John sat down on the bench with Bruce, Keith popped the first can of Hi-C and handed it over to the boy.

Taking the can and quickly drinking, Bruce noticed Prez. "WOW!" Bruce shouted, "All that's for me?"

Uncontrollably chuckling at the boy's enthusiasm, Prez nodded,

"You bet; just for you," and offered the first opened package of chocolate chip cookies. "Even though you're hungry, try to eat slow," Prez suggested, and then explained, "If you eat too much too fast, you might get a belly ache and you could get sick."

Already chewing the first cookie, Bruce nodded and mumbled, "I'ww twy."

Waiting a few yards away, Mike whispered to Derrick; "I would've shit myself if I was left alone over night like that."

Derrick softly agreed, "I know, dude. Maybe it was something unforeseen though."

"Like what?" Mike excitedly queried.

Derrick shrugged, "A car accident? I dunno."

Mike scowled, "Would your mom leave you alone like that when you were eight?"

Rapidly shaking his head, Derrick giggled, "Around that age, I was only allowed to cross streets in our neighborhood by myself."

Smiling at his boyfriend's candor, Mike playfully suggested, "If we're around when the kid's parents are found, we should slap 'em silly!"

Trying not to crack up, Derrick sniggered, "A well timed 'accidental' fall could knock 'em down?"

"Oops!" Mike squealed. "So sorry!" Then both boys cracked up laughing.

In the distance, approaching from the parking lot was a woman that looked like it could be Keith's mother. Since John, Keith and Prez were busy with Bruce, Derrick pointed and called, "Drew, is that your mom coming?"

Drew looked closely then huffed, "Finally!" before running off with Corey to meet her.

Within twenty feet of his mother, Drew shouted, "Mom, hurry!"

"Drew and John found another kid left on the beach," Corey added.

"You found him too, all three of us found him," Drew argued.

Mrs. Hundser smiled and then, as each of her hands was taken by the two boys, she began laughing.

"Mom!" Drew incredulously hollered, "What's so funny?"

Corey didn't understand why Drew's mom was laughing either, and explained, "Bruce is only eight and was left alone all night!"

As she was being pulled along by Drew and Corey, Mrs. Hundser giggled, "But you boys seem to find other pathetic lost and stranded boys at the drop of a hat! I thought it was over when school started again."

"It's not our fault!" Drew complained, "It's all those stupid parents!"

Raising their eyebrows and attempting to appear innocent, Keith, John and Prez smiled. Keith pointed at the boy stuffing his mouth with cookies and said, "Mom, this is Bruce." Turning to Bruce, Keith introduced his mother. "Bruce, this is our mom, Jennifer Hundser."

"Hello there, sweetie," Mrs. Hundser smiled.

Putting down the can of Hi-C on the bench and swallowing, Bruce looked up and said, "Hi."

Mrs. Hundser leaned over and gently brushed the boy's hair back, asking, "What's your last name, Bruce?"

"It's Downing," Bruce answered, and nibbled on another cookie.

"Where are you originally from?" Mrs. Hundser asked.

Bruce nervously glanced around at everyone surrounding him while he chewed, then softly offered, "Ohio, we was on vacation here, in Honolulu."

Thinking of the dozens of hotel and motels on the other side of the island, Mrs. Hundser nodded then asked, "Do you remember which hotel you were staying at?" Bruce only shook his head and chomped on the final cookie. "That's fine," Mrs. Hundser smiled, "I'm going to talk to the older boys for a few moments, but we aren't leaving you alone again."

Keith gave John the remaining can of Hi-C, and Prez gave him the bag of potato chips. Then the four teenagers gathered around Mrs. Hundser. All at once, they began softly chattering until Mrs. Hundser held up her hands in defeat. Turning to Keith, she got the first part of the story about Kai and the wrecked home. She had not heard of Kai or anyone named Makaokalani needing trauma care at Hawaii Medical Center West. Then the questions about the luau began. Mrs. Hundser answered with the only information she knew. "The luau has been relocated to Kauai; near Kalihiwai Bay. I only know because additional medical facilities are being setup there for emergencies. It's no longer just a Ewa Beach event though; the King, Queen and much of Parliament are attending. Even though road traffic is light, air traffic has tripled. We've got a plane to catch. We'll bring Bruce along with us."

Turning green immediately and squeezing Keith's hand, Prez gasped, "A plane?"

"The only other alternative is by boat, which could take four or five hours at best," Mrs. Hundser explained.

"Or you could all close your eyes, tap your heels together and wish 'I want to go to the luau'," came a giggling voice from near where Bruce was sitting.

Startled at the voice behind him, Drew spun around and shouted, "HEY!"

"No, my name's not 'Hey'. I'm Galli... but you might have heard of my other name," the little ten year old, ginger haired and be-freckled boy giggled. He was dressed in a tee-shirt and board-shorts and twirling a small silver pen like item in his hands.

Mrs. Hundser faced the boy and smiled, "Hello Galli, it's nice to meet you. Which one of my boys rescued you?"

"Rescued me?" Galli incredulously sniggered. "My dear young lady, I've walked the stars and ran through dimensions and swam the rivers of time long before this planet formed. I'm here to bring you to the party... and you may call me The Doctor," Galli smiled as the Tardis thrummed into existence behind him and Bruce.

Stunned beyond words, Mrs. Hundser only stood silently with her jaw on her chest. Prez asked, "It still flies though, doesn't it?"

Galli grinned, "It can fly, but it doesn't usually. It can appear where-ever and whenever it wants; movement without movement.

You'll go inside, then you'll come out at the party..."

{Stop calling me 'It'. I have a name, Doctor.}

"Sorry, T..." Galli rolled his eyes. "Tardises these days."

"Ooo-kay!" Keith chuckled. "First, disappearing kids and statues now phone booths appear out of thin air!"

"If it gets us to the luau quicker than a plane, I'm game," Mike sniggered.

"Dude!" Derrick laughed.

"What?" Mike grinned, "Either the kid's trippin' or he's tellin' the truth. There's only one way to find out. Besides, without Prez, we're a three man band. Sorry, but the bass and Prez's vocals are just a little bit important."

The fact that Galli began to glow as time moved in flux around him sort of sealed the deal on his authenticity. "The statues said they'll meet you there," Galli giggled. "Lil' elf is really looking forward to talking to you, by the way."

Not the least bit frightened, Bruce giggled, "I like him. Can we go with him? Maybe he can help me find my mom and dad?" He grinned and took hold of Galli's glowing hand.

Not exactly certain where, when or how she lost control, Mrs. Hundser absently took hold of Keith's and Preston's hands. First Bruce and John entered Tardis, followed by Corey and Drew, Mike and Derrick and finally, Keith, Prez and Mrs. Hundser.

Galli grinned to himself as the last of them entered the small police box to find the control room inside was bigger than all their living rooms combined. "They will never be the same again after this party," he whispered before entering and closing the door.

Time heard its Lord.

... And Time started to laugh...

John and Bruce hurried around the large space checking out various glowing lights. Glancing around in awe, Mike and Derrick shouted, "KEWL!"

"Is there a place we can sit?" Drew asked.

Prez fretted, "Or seat belts we can put on?"

The Doctor smiled as chairs appeared around the control hub at the center of the room. "Technically, we're there already. However, Time moves in here at a different pace than in the world. If you have questions, you can ask them. You won't miss a thing outside, for Time there will not have moved."

Noticing his mother turning the same green shade that Prez had, Keith sat her down before she fainted and asked, "You okay, mom?"

Rapidly nodding, Mrs. Hundser only whimpered.

Prez sat down beside her and breathed a heavy sigh of relief at not having to get into a plane.

Keith knelt down before Prez and asked, "You okay now, baby?"

Prez nodded and smiled, "Just fine now. Still trying to figure shit out, but since we're not flying, life is good."

Following Galli from station to station, Corey asked, "So this is like a Time Machine?"

Speedily moving to another station, Galli answered, "Not exactly. TARDIS... Time and Relative Dimensions In Space. Time is just a small part of it. Dimensions, parallel universes... Paradox machine... but Tardis is so much more... at least to me."

{Thank you Doctor.}

"You're very welcome, T," Galli giggled.

Derrick asked, "Alternate parallel universes really exist?"

Galli only nodded then scampered over to another display and seemed mesmerized.

"What's that one you're looking at?" Mike wondered.

"A fractal screen saver," Galli laughed, "It's very pretty, don't you think?" Nodding, Mike cracked up laughing.

Keith went over and asked, "If there are alternate universes, are there alternate versions of us."

Galli nodded and rambled, "Consider every decision every one of you has made. For every possible decision, there's an alternate you. Unless of course, the decision has led to you not being born or physical death in that reality, but then again, there isn't an alternate you any longer in that universe, now is there?"

As Galli and the group around him moved nearer, Prez asked, "Is there a reality where my parents didn't die?"

Pausing and turning to face Preston, Galli softly offered, "My dear boy, there are more parallel dimensions than you could possibly imagine. In one, you were never born because they never married. In another, you were born, but your father died before that day. In yet another, you were born, but your parents divorced. You moved with your mum to California. There are universes where you never met Keith, Mike or Derrick, and there are others still where you have met, but weren't friends. Do you understand what I mean by every decision now?"

"The smallest, seemingly insignificant decisions?" Prez pondered.

Galli nodded. "Well, I've simplified Timeline-type stuff for you - what you call an alternate universe? OTHER Universes and Dimensions... well, let's not get into that yet... I don't think this dear lady will cope," he finished as he realized that Mrs. Hundser had not blinked once that he had seen. Galli took her hands in his and softly asked, "Better now?"

She finally blinked and smiled, "I have one question that no one else has asked."

"Yes, dear lady?"

"How old are you... really?"

Squealing with delight and tossing his head back, Galli asked with his gales of laughter, "What do you want to know? My literal chronological age? Or my Lived Time age? Or my Time-Effected age? Or my apparent? As for the latter, I'm ten... as for the former I'm over seven billion years old... don't remember the exact number..."

{I remember, Doctor.}

"Not now, T!" Galli giggled as Mrs. Hundser's face started to go blank again. "The lady has almost returned to normal function! She has a husband and a life, after all. Let's not scramble her brain again!"

He squeezed her hands tightly and kissed them, bringing Mrs. Hundser's eyes back into focus, "Sweetheart, let us just say I'm old and leave it at that."

"Earth dirt, yes," Galli giggled.

Prez was just staring at him. "Seven BILLI... I... No way!"

Galli poked his tongue out and giggled. "I age well!"

Drew shook his head to clear it, then walked over and asked, "Why us? I mean... what makes us so special? For you to come see us, I mean."

Not wanting to divulge more than necessary, Galli took Drew's hand and smiled, "Because you are special." Glancing at each of them, Galli explained, "In a divided world, you and your families stand together. Each of you spend that extra second to make better decisions for one another. When a child is helpless, you help; as in the case of Bruce here. If there's a way to make life better, you each seek that alternative, even though it might not be the easiest choice available. Better versus easier; THAT is special; THAT is real love."

"Doctor Galli?" John called.

Galli smiled and corrected, "John, you may call me Doctor or Galli, however from all of you, please if you will, Galli."

John nodded and asked, "Where's Kai at Galli?"

Galli answered, "He's safe and I believe you will all be seeing him soon."

"Thank goodness!" John huffed.

Keith wondered, "Why was his house trashed, and why was there blood on the walls?"

Looking down for a moment, Galli then looked up at Keith and answered, "Kai was taken away before anything happened at the house. That's all I can tell you now, but by..." After pausing to check a display, Galli finished, "eleven o'clock local time tomorrow morning, you'll have all the answers regarding Kai.. and more... than you probably... would want... to know." After glancing at each person, Galli asked, "Any other questions?" Everyone shook their heads and Galli happily announced, "Then we have a party to attend!" Skipping joyfully towards the Tardis door, Galli flung it open and waved them out. As Prez passed, Galli giggled, "And thank you for flying TARDIS Airlines!"

Letting go of Keith and spinning around, Prez hollered, "You said we weren't flying!"

Leaning over and laughing hysterically, Galli patted his knees with his little hands and admitted, "Technically no, but welcome to Kalihiwai Bay any way. Have a good time at the luau!"

Squinting his eyes impatiently at the boy, Prez growled.

"You're not staying?" Keith asked.

"I'll be back so fast, you'll never miss me," Galli giggled, "I absolutely love poi!" Watching as they all moved away from Tardis, Galli then closed the door and went on his way. Galli had left them in a small clearing between trees facing Kauapea Beach to the northeast side of Kalihiwai Bay. They could faintly hear music and smell barbecuing pig in the distance. They only had to walk forward and follow the smells to the beach.

"I think I'll take a plane to fly back to Oahu," Mrs. Hundser softly said.

Shaking his head violently, Prez promised, "I'll swim back before I ever step foot on a plane!"

Keith reminded, "We never even felt the thing shake or move."

"Thank God!" Prez huffed.

Mike wondered, "What time is it, Keith?"

Glancing at his watch, blinking and then looking again, Keith shuddered, "It's five twelve." From the time Galli appeared to that moment, only about a minute had passed.

John softly asked, "How're you doin', Bruce?"

Still clinging onto the blanket they found him with, Bruce shrugged, "Okay I guess; I'm not alone no more, and Galli was nice... just wondering where my mom and dad are."

Snapping back to reality, Mrs. Hundser fished her cell phone out of her purse, saying, "We'll get that question answered as quickly as we can." She then dialed Honolulu police and asked to speak to Mike's father; Lieutenant Robert Gibbons. In a short time, she had given him the entire story, the boy's name and description and informed him that they were already at Kalihiwai Bay. After a short pause, she grinned, "You'd never believe how we got here so fast. I can barely understand it, never mind explain it!" Finishing her call, she smiled at Bruce and said, "We'll have your parents located soon." She then said, "Michael, your dad and mom will be here in about an hour."

"Thanks Mrs. H.," Mike replied.

Derrick said, "I wonder where the stage is."

"Aren't ya hungry, dude?" Mike excitedly queried, and then admitted, "I'm starving!"

Derrick softly chuckled, "You left half your lunch in the street."

Prez interjected, "First we find the stage and where we're playing, then we find food."

Shaking her head sadly, Mrs. Hundser playfully complained, "What is it with boys and food?"

Keith softly asked, "You're not hungry either, Prez?"

"A little," Prez shrugged, "still got a nervous stomach, thanks to that teasing little brat!"

Keith giggled, "He kind o' reminded me of you when you were ten though." Prez held off and cuffed Keith on the shoulder. "WHAT?" Keith laughed, "Galli's a cute little redhead!" and then took off running for the sand before he got hit again. Prez raced after him with Mike and Derrick in tow. Mrs. Hundser grabbed John and Bruce by the shoulders before they followed the older boys.

About a third of the way down the beach, Derrick pointed up into the sky and hollered, "Look!"

Corey, Drew, Mike, Keith and Prez stopped goofing around and looked north, where Derrick was pointing. Flying in formation, six Starfleet shuttle craft were coming in for landings at Princeville Airport.

Thrilled to the core, John looked up at his mother and squealed, "Starfleet's gonna be here too?"

Having heard nothing about this, Mrs. Hundser nodded and smiled, "It seems that way."

"KEEEWWWWWWWWLLLLLL!" Bruce screamed as the formation passed overhead.

"Starfleet rocks!" John gleefully shouted.

"I know!" Bruce bounced happily. "I hope someday I can join."

"I'd be happy just gettin' to visit a real Starship!" John giggled. "Imagine it, way up in space, traveling from planet to planet at Warp speeds."

"Wouldn't that be the very bestest ever?" Bruce cheered. He then shyly moved closer to John and whispered, "I gotta pee bad!"

John giggled, "Me too," then looked up at his mom and explained, "We gotta go to the bathroom mom."

Scanning the bluffs and finding a row of porta-potties, Mrs. Hundser pointed and said, "Stay together..." but both boys ran off before she could finish the sentence. Rolling her eyes and hurrying after them, she realized that the Tardis trip was too much and she also needed to use the facilities.

Down on the beach, the other boys chased each other into and out of the surf, asking all sorts of questions, like why Starfleet was here? Why the King, Queen and members of Parliament were coming? Did any of this have to do with Kai? Or was it an extension of a really good idea, celebrating the lives of the O'Brians? Everything was so out of control and hectic, they could only hope that they were still going to perform that evening. Seeing a Starfleet security detail pass by, they hoped their special night wouldn't be ruined by a lot of political speeches and other mindless, boring crap.

Taking the opportunity to tease the uniformed Vulcan men and woman, Keith and Prez loudly sang, "Some people call me the space cowboy, some call me the gangster of love. Some people call me Maurice, cause I speak of the pompitous of love." Seeing the security team returning, they stopped singing and giggled.

"Do you boys have any identification?" one of the officers asked.

Keith smirked, "We have high school IDs, but didn't bring 'em with."

Then one woman officer said, "Keith Hundser." Turning the device she was holding at Prez, she then offered, "Preston Albert O'Brian." And then she scanned Mike, Drew, Derrick and Corey, identifying each of them by their full names; "Michael Gibbons; Drew Hundser; Derrick Seibert; Corey Seaver."

The first officer asked, "Where are Mr. James Hundser, Mrs. Jennifer Hundser and John Hundser, please?"

Seeing his foster mom, John and Bruce hurrying over from the porta-potties, Prez pointed and replied, "Behind you."

The first officer and the woman turned around briefly. The woman nodded, "That is Jennifer Hundser and John Hundser. The other boy is... Bruce Downing, native of Cleveland, Ohio."

The first officer then commanded, "You three keep watch over these boys. Make sure nothing happens to them."

All three officers replied, "Aye-aye, Sir." Then the first two officers went to meet Mrs. Hundser.

Eying the Starfleet officers assigned to them suspiciously for a few moments, the six boys stepped away and huddled up.

"What the fuck is going on now?" Mike whispered.

"And why do they have to make sure nothing happens to us?" Prez softly wondered.

Keith made eye contact with Drew and asked, "What are they doin' now, bro?"

Drew's head popped up from the huddle, then he lowered his head again and whispered, "Just standing there, looking up and down the beach, and at us."

Derrick sniggered, "Did ya ever have one of those days?"

"It's all John's fault," Keith smiled, "ever since he came home, everything's gotten really weird." Corey and Drew giggled their butts off.

"You sure, Galli?"

The huddling boys heard a high pitched boy's voice giggle from just behind where the Vulcan Starfleet security team was standing.

"Yeah. They're the ones you're after, Elven Prince!"

"You teasing me?"

"ME? Tease a PRINCE of the ELVES? Never!"

"Ha ha... Come on, I-Cheya! Let's go see if we can make some new friends!"

HUFFF!

Prez and Keith had enough time to glance at each other before the thundering of something running their way became apparent. They had all recognized Galli's voice, of course, but the other voice was a mystery... and that 'huff'... it was deep and guttural and...

"OH MY GOD! A bear?" Keith yelled in shock, as a large silvery colored bear charged around the security team and loped across the sand directly for them. The huddle broke up and all six boys quickly backed away until they were standing knee deep in water.

They had only seen pictures of such a creature in school books - books about alien planets. It was big, had saber teeth, a small beginning of a mane that started at its forehead and ran down the center of its back... and it was carrying the now 'living' statue of that menehune on its back. Only now they could see it wasn't a 'little person' from the ancient tales. It was a Vulcan boy, looking about nine-years-old; buck naked and grinning at them.

"HEY!" Prez yelled, "You Starfleet guys! Is this your idea of protection?"

"Don't worry," the small Vulcan boy giggled, "I-Cheya won't hurt you." The boy slid down off the massive beast and said, "I'm Joel and this is I-Cheya." Joel then asked, "Are you hungry I-Cheya?"

No. Bad Man made good meal. Me full. Me want play... red-haired boy look good to play with. Can I play 'Toss-The-Kid'?

All the boys in the water heard the bear clearly, yet they knew it had not been with their ears.

"Huh?" Corey spluttered.

I-Cheya looked at him, and then batted his front paws in the water, making a sheet of it fly up and over Corey.

Play with Corey-Boy first. Then Red-Haired-Prezzy-Boy later...

More water went flying at and over Corey.

Joel giggled until he fell on his butt in the sand, letting the small waves at the water's edge wash over him. "He's just a baby Sehlat. He likes to play!"

"THAT'S a BABY?" Drew hollered in disbelief, and held on to Corey's hand tighter.

Corey whimpered, "Drew? Toss-The-Kid?"

Keith and Prez moved forward, watching the Sehlat carefully. Mike and Derrick followed with Drew pulling Corey along behind them. Standing before Joel, who was splashing in the surf, they each introduced themselves.

"We already know you," Joel smiled up at them, "and Mike and Derrick and Drew and Corey too. Boy, is my big brother Cory gonna be happy to find another blond Corey to hang out with."

I-Cheya huffed lightly as his paw snaked out and grabbed Prez and pulled him into the circle of his forepaws.

Keith didn't know whether to find an elephant gun to kill the 'bear' or simply try a rescue by hand.

Prez was momentarily struck dumb in shock.

Joel stood up and cuddled close to I-Cheya's side, "He likes you. He won't hurt you. He don't talk to his food."

I-Cheya's eyes were boring into Prez's, and they seemed to peer deep into the red-head's soul.

Leader. Master. Protector. Provider. Soul of Love poured out and Love Received. Blessed of Our Father, I breathe my promise on you.

The Silvery Sehlat then opened his massive mouth and exhaled over Prez, filling his whole being with warmth and comfort.

Prez started to wilt in the Sehlat's embrace as love and more poured through him. The love seemed to go right to his core, and unlocked an old grief; a pain that was healing but not yet fully healed.

"Preston, we are so proud of you," came the clear voice of Preston's father.

"Yes, you make us smile every day you live and every time you embrace all life has to give you," came a woman's voice that he had not heard in two years; his mom.

"We are with you forever. Your Father in Heaven is with you forever. We will wait for you, and we will cheer every moment of your life as you run your race," Prez's Dad said, and Prez felt fingers run through his hair in the way his dad always did when he was alive.

"We love you, son. And Keith is a catch," his mother teased as the voices faded away.

Tears flowing and sobs bubbling forth, Prez flung himself forward onto I-Cheya's body and cried. I-Cheya gently removed Prez' clothes and started to bathe him with his tongue, helping in the way of the Spirit Guardians to heal and comfort.

Joel smiled.

Concerned because Prez was crying, Keith didn't know what to do at first, so he only reached down and caught his partner's clothes in the surf, before the tide left Prez to perform on stage naked. "Prez; what's wrong baby?"

Shaking his head but smiling widely, Prez asked, "Didn't you hear them?"

"Hear who?" Keith, Derrick and Mike wondered.

"My ma and dad," Prez answered. Noticing his three friends curiously glancing at each other, Prez began laughing through his tears. "I'm fine," Prez giggled, "great in fact! It's been so long since I've heard their voices." Cringing for a few moments, Prez then bellowed laughing, "It tickles!"

Keith scowled, "What the fuck! Prez isn't ticklish! For two years I've been searching..."

"It's I-Cheya," Joel smiled, "who knows, you might get lucky and have a ticklish boyfriend from now on."

Gift given. Gift Received. Who next? I-Cheya sent as he looked around at the other five boys.

"Wha... what is going... is this thing safe?" Mrs. Hundser nervously asked, her voice shaky, as she, John and Bruce hurried down the beach to the group at the surf.

"He's safe, Mrs. Hundser," Joel replied as he turned around to see her.

Her eyebrow rose as she beheld the naked little cherub smiling up at her.

"He's my guardian and friend. His name's I-Cheya. I'm Joel... Sa'ren Joel Short, son of Spock, son of Sarek of Vulcan. Nice to meet you!"

"Oh, you're the boy from the news... wait... aren't you...." she paused. Then she moved forwards and knelt down in front of him, "You're thirteen, right? The Admiral on the news said something like that, correct?"

Joel nodded seriously. "Yeah, I'm thirteen. Yesterday! I had a great party, and I got married and everything!"

Mrs. Hundser embraced him tenderly, and then totally missed what happened to Prez.

I-Cheya, not one to wait for an answer to a question he'd asked, decided to take matters into his own... paws.

Prez yelled like a banshee as he sailed through the air and out about fifty yards into the sea, thrown by the powerful arm of the Vulcan bear. Keith, turning around and watching his beloved try and learn to fly was therefore completely unprepared for the machinations of the sneaky Sehlat.

He was stripped, dunked and in the middle of a tongue bath before he realized what had happened. Corey, Drew, Mike and Derrick laughed hysterically at both Keith and Prez. Extremely ticklish, the Sehlat tongue bath had Keith in tears, rapidly trying to protect himself. The next thing Keith knew, his ass was parked in the Sehlat's paw and he was being tossed out over the ocean, at least twenty feet in the air, looking down into the pale blue water.

I-Cheya took hold of Mike and repeated the procedure again. "Mom!" John whined and jumped up and down. "Please! Lemme get tossed too!"

"John, let the older boys take a turn first," Mrs. Hundser nervously replied.

Joel looked up, assuring, "It's totally safe, Auntie Jen. I-Cheya knows just how to Toss-A-Kid, he's had lots of practice."

Partially covering her eyes as Mike howled laughing from high in the air, she watched until he hit the water and rose to the surface. I-Cheya already had a hold of Derrick and was stripping his clothes off. Prez was swimming closer to shore, obviously no worse for wear, she gratefully acknowledged.

It wasn't long before all six of the older boys had been cleaned and thrown into the water, and now they were back and sitting before the Sehlat up to their waists in the gently lapping waves of the Pacific. Joel looked at John and Bruce, and then at the agitated mother who was still cuddling them. "Do you want me to go first, Auntie Jen?" Joel suggested, "Then you'll know it'll be safe for John and Bruce?"

Mrs. Hundser nodded slowly, and so Joel got up and was immediately grabbed by the huffing Sehlat and promptly lofted into the air and out to sea.

John wasted no time. In fact, he had saved the Sehlat some time; he'd already stripped naked and was waiting impatiently at I-Cheya's side.

The bear blinked at him with gentleness radiating from his eyes.

Brave-Boy. I like you. Gentle. You are... Mind-Walker. Special. You shall learn when Time right

John was pushed to the sand, the waves almost reaching him, and was given a tongue bath. His giggles were musical and light, and seemed filled with the wonder that only a child could muster. Then, he was thrown. He didn't fly out quite as far as his older brothers had, but far enough for the water to properly capture his body as he landed with a huge splash. Rising to the surface, John squealed with delight, splashed the water around him and shouted "AGAIN! I WANNA DO IT AGAIN!"

"Oh Jesus, give me patience," Mrs. Hundser softly prayed.

Joel was still out in the water and gestured to the shore, but he himself remained. There was one more child to come, and Joel wanted to be sure Bruce would be okay.

Bruce shyly moved closer. "Mr. Bear? Can you answer a question for me?"

I-Cheya blinked at him and nodded.

"Will I see my mommy and daddy again?" Bruce whispered, a single tear rolling down his face.

I-Cheya closed his eyes and sighed, then reached out and breathed on the boy, filling him with love and warmth that rolled through him as it had with Prez.

Peace. Love. Your heart shall find its home. Your soul shall find its rest. Trust in the ones who came and helped you

Then, he removed Bruce's clothes and washed him. This time, the washing did not cause giggles and laughter, but Bruce seemed to grow more and more relaxed as the Sehlat continued.

It was therefore without warning that I-Cheya picked up and threw the small boy to land next to Joel out in the sea. And the boy howled with laughter the entire way through the air.

Mrs. Hundser looked at the Sehlat, "You didn't have his parent's authority for that boy."

I-Cheya huffed his laughter at her. I have Father's authority! You want go?

"I'm not going naked, you hear me?" Mrs. Hundser said seriously as she hesitantly walked closer.

I-Cheya nodded and breathed on her. She was suddenly wearing her swimwear. Good?

Shocked, she simply nodded.

No be scared. I need be full size

Out in the water and helping Bruce to the shore, Joel smiled as I-Cheya shifted into his full adult size. The gasps from everyone were expected. Joel giggled as he came alongside Corey and Prez, "Now THAT is what a full sized male wild Sehlat looks like!"

I-Cheya huffed deeply then gently scooped up Mrs. Hundser. All ten boys laughed and cheered as an adult screamed with fear, flying high over head and landing further out in the ocean than any of them had.

Happier than ever splashing and playing in the shallow water, the boys joked about each of their experiences with the Sehlat and how light they felt being thrown and flying through the air.

As Mrs. Hundser finally arrived at shore and walked up out of the waves, she squinted and loudly threatened, "NOT ONE WORD FROM YOU BOYS, or you ALL sleep in SEPARATE ROOMS!"

Joel buttoned his mouth immediately. He was still on his honeymoon with his new husband Kevin, after all. Drew dunked Corey under the water so he couldn't laugh. Drew enjoyed this as his smile clearly showed. The four older boys and John simply turned away from the beach and looked out over the Pacific, softly snickering. Holding Joel's hand, Bruce glanced around and smiled widely at everyone.

Walking up to the Sehlat, Mrs. Hundser softly asked, "Can I have my clothes back, please?" Nodding once, I-Cheya breathed over her. Not only had her clothes reappeared but she was completely dry. "Thank you," Mrs. Hundser smiled and gently petted the great beast.

After checking that the naked boys playing in the surf were safe, Mrs. Hundser noticed the Vulcan security entourage had taken positions around them, forming an arc about twenty feet away. Between the armed Vulcans and this Sehlat, she realized she had no need to worry so she began picking up all the clothes scattered around the beach. As if hearing her thoughts, I-Cheya relayed; All are safe. None challenge I-Cheya and live. Noticing the boys were now in ankle deep water walking further down the shore, she heard I-Cheya explain; Come. Boys hungry.

Mrs. Hundser smiled, "Of course they are. When they're not, I know they're sick," and walked alongside I-Cheya. The security team maintained their positions and slowly followed. Off in the distance, a very large group of children ran down the bluff to the beach. There was also a small white puppy gallivanting amongst the children. Most of the kids seemed to be stripping off their clothes; she happily noticed and rolled her eyes. At the water line, the group of kids and teens pointed and laughed heartily at the approaching group as some of them stumbled out of their shorts and fell into the sand.

Joel broke away from the others and ran up the beach. One small boy and the puppy also separated from the mass of children coming down the beach. "Kevvy!" Joel yelled.

"Sa'r!" the other boy hollered.

While the two boys spun around hand-in-hand, the rest of the larger mass of children met Prez, Keith, Mike, Derrick, Corey, Drew, John and Bruce in the shallow surf. Considering the numbers involved, introductions were mostly organized. The youngest kids met each other, the pre-teens said hello and the teens greeted and introduced each other.

Amongst the group of boys were: Reyes Taraschke, Jonah Desak, Brice Glotzbecker, Jerrold Hebda, Thanh Espiridion, Dee Vanderwood, Lupe Jui, Richie Grunert, Dillon Helde, Lenny Cuttler, Tory Burgas, Sung Henjes, Amado Kazanjian, Hank Leve, Sean Moorhead, Horacio Sulin, Geoffrey Eckel, and twin brothers Felipe and Cesar Laurito.

The group of girls included: Christel Robusto, Davina Pinnt, Lu Gurrieri, Melonie Correro, Trish Vesley, Mercy Hellar, Julianne Smolen, Carmella Socia, and sisters Earlene and Noreen Magyar.

The white puppy with black paws trotted ahead of Joel and Kevvy and into the surf. "Blackie!" Kevvy giggled. The pup only glanced back for a moment then went and stuck his nose near Prez's crotch. Keith was next to be inspected by Blackie.

Glancing back towards Joel and Kevvy, Blackie transmitted; Boy! making sure that everyone could hear. *Prez-Boy and Keith-

Boy want mating. Where quiet spot? They want make noisy!*

Mike, Derrick, Drew and Corey roared laughing.

Blushing redder than his hair, Prez groaned, "Oh God!"

"So much for sneaking away for a quickie!" Keith giggled.

Blackie then checked out Mike and Derrick. Mike-Boy and Derrick-Boy already make noisy

Next on Blackie's inspection were Corey and Drew. Tilting his head curiously, Blackie wondered Corey-Boy and Drew-Boy not make noisy yet?

Covering his face with both hands, Drew helplessly giggled, but Corey loudly laughed, "That's none of your business!"

Arriving in the surf near Keith and Prez, Joel giggled, "Blackie's just a pup and hasn't really learned... wolf-control. He was guarding us last night as we... ah... well, you know... our wedding night?" Joel blushed before continuing, "So he likes teasing. He'll check out every boy he meets to find out where their dicks have been." Wrapping an arm around Kevvy, Joel quickly introduced all the boys to his new husband, Kevin Thompson.

"So you guys are married?" Keith smiled. Joel and Kevin nodded and kissed. "That's so cool!"

Prez explained, "Keith and me are hoping we can too, when we turn eighteen."

Mike and Derrick chimed, "Us too!"

"How did you two manage to get married?" Keith asked.

Joel explained, "Under Vulcan law; basically, when two people love each other and already have made the commitment, you're T'hy'la. Loosely translated, that means beloved, soul mate, best friend all rolled into one. The word is used for good friends too." Cautiously, Joel wondered, "If you could get married say... next week, just for the sake of argument, would you?"

Without even thinking, Prez cheered, "Absolutely."

"Definitely!" Keith smiled.

Joel glanced over at Mike and Derrick and got a simultaneous, "Hell yeah!" Joel then looked at Corey and Drew.

Drew smiled at Corey and Corey nodded at Drew. Then Drew shyly explained, "We've got... umm... some 'noisy' mating stuff to kinda figure out still."

Kevin giggled uncontrollably but Joel only smiled and instructed, "I've learned that noisy mating stuff has little to do with real love. What matters is what you feel, in your hearts and in your minds. How you really feel about each other is the only question to answer."

"Then we would, if we could," Drew answered.

That was all Corey needed to hear. He rapidly nodded then threw himself at Drew for a deep, lingering kiss. Corey then sighed, "You're so awesome, Drew."

Drew giggled, "Glad ya think so cos I love you too, Cor."

Kevin and Joel turned to each other, smiled widely and nodded. Through their mind-meld, they confirmed, 'They're the ones!'

Joel then said, "Could you excuse Kev and me for a little while? I just wanna introduce Kevvy to your mom."

"Oh! Yeah!" Keith loudly agreed.

Prez smiled, "Go ahead dudes, there's only about forty of us now, so we're kinda hard to miss."

Breaking away from the pack with Joel, Kevin chuckled, "There's another fifty or so that were too shy or too hungry to join us." He pointed up the bluff, south of the lighthouse and said, "The luau is up there."

"Is the stage there too?" Mike wondered.

"Yup! Ya can't miss it," Kevin answered.

Kaleo Palakiko, one of the older boys at fourteen and walking with Prez, Keith, Mike and Derrick, widely grinned, "Wait till you see it! All the open fields south of Kilauea Wildlife Refuge are ours! Hawaiian TV News trucks are there too!"

Mike and Derrick slowly droned, "Wow!"

"Amazing!" Keith chuckled.

Prez nodded and wondered, "All this can't be just because of my parents."

Kaleo looked over and asked, "What happened to your folks?"

"They were in a plane crash," Prez answered, "two years ago, October nineteenth."

"I'm sorry dude," Kaleo groaned, "I didn't know."

"It's okay," Prez softly assured.

Keith smirked, "What is the hubbub all about then?"

Stunned, Kaleo replied, "You haven't heard?" Prez, Keith, Mike and Derrick all shook their heads. Kaleo then loudly asked, "You've heard of Clan Short though, haven't you?"

Keith nodded, "'Course, they're the group saving all those abandoned and abused kids on the mainland."

Swinging his arms around, Kaleo explained, "See all these kids here? We were all rescued by the Clan today."

"ALL of 'em?" Derrick shouted.

Giggling at Derrick's reaction, Kaleo nodded, "And the other fifty-odd kids too."

Prez glanced over and made eye contact with Kaleo then asked, "You too?"

Losing his smile, Kaleo nodded and softly explained, "I was put up for adoption as a baby. The adults in the orphanage were real creeps. They'd work us like slaves, beat us... used us for sex... prostitution; you name it, they did it."

"I'm really sorry," Prez softly offered.

Kaleo shrugged then said, "Don't be; it wasn't your fault."

"That's horrible though, dude!" Keith grimaced.

"Kids having sex with adults?" Mike shuddered.

"Gross!" Derrick growled.

"You're tellin' me," Kaleo softly said. "It was either do it or starve to death."

Derrick yelled, "They wouldn't feed you unless..." and Kaleo nodded.

"Where were the fucking police?" Keith hollered.

Sternly, Prez grumbled, "I'm gettin' really annoyed now."

Kaleo nodded understandingly and said, "It's gonna be better for all of us now that the Clan got involved. They said we wouldn't have to worry ever again, and I believe them." He then snickered, "That's why this group is here; being kids for the first time ever, walkin' naked on the beach, just like we should."

After a few more steps, Derrick wondered, "What happened to the adults at the orphanage?"

Kaleo shrugged, "Don't know, don't care." He then pointed up the beach at I-Cheya and offered, "See that big bear-like creature?"

Prez nodded and smiled, "He's a Vulcan Sehlat."

Kaleo nodded and chuckled, "Don't make him angry. I seen him pick up a fat man at our orphanage like he was a pineapple and throw him through a wall." Kaleo then loudly laughed, "It was great! Exactly what that overstuffed, tiny-pricked bastard deserved!"

All the older orphanage kids that heard and understood Kaleo's remark busted up in fits of laughter.

From further up the beach, Mrs. Hundser hollered, "All you nudists and partially clad kids, FRONT AND CENTER!"

"Who's that?" Kaleo asked.

Rolling his eyes, Keith giggled, "My mom."

"She's nice?"

Prez nodded and laughed, "She's a mom, what can ya do?"

"Right!" Kaleo snickered and turned around to face the rest of the kids. With a nod from Kaleo, everybody walked out of the water and up the beach.

Mike smiled, "They all listen to you?"

Kaleo shrugged, "Mostly; I'm one of the oldest and have been watching out for them the best I could so..."

Tory piped up and explained, "Kaleo in Hawaiian means 'the voice' and man, does he use it!"

Kaleo chuckled, "Shush!"

"WHAT?" Tory incredulously giggled, "Just cos ya can't ever shut up!" and then ducked away and ran up the beach.

As the mass of children approached, Mrs. Hundser searched her mind for some way to organize and care for the lot of them. "Okay," she smiled, "My Ewa Beach boys and their friends, stand with me and put your clothes on."

Still holding Bruce's hand, John shuffled forward, kicking at the sand and whined, "Mo-om!"

Joel looked up and said, "I have an idea, Auntie Jen."

"Yes, Joel?"

"If it's alright with you," Joel began, "I-Cheya could carry all the little kids up the bluff, with you, Kev and me in the center. You hold onto the kids in the front, and kids in the back hold onto me and Kevvy."

"Sounds like fun to me!" Kevin giggled.

"That's an awful lot of weight. Would he be safe?" Mrs. Hundser fretted. I-Cheya made himself adult size and proved he could handle as many as needed. Shaking her head sadly but grinning, Mrs. Hundser mumbled, "What was I thinking?"

"Okay!" Joel snickered, "Under ten-years-old, get your clothes on and line up here with me and Kev!" About a dozen little kids scurried away then began gathering their clothes and getting dressed.

Mrs. Hundser instructed; "Ten and over, get dressed and stay with the older kids. It's time to eat." With enthusiastic squeals of pleasure and hurrah's, the older kids peeled off. I-Cheya lay down in the sand and Mrs. Hundser carefully climbed up onto his back. Joel followed her up and offered an arm for Kevin to grab hold and climb up.

Kaleo was the first to return with his shorts on and his shirt in his hand. He moved close to Keith and whispered, "Getting down the bluff was simple; getting up again isn't gonna be quite so easy."

Lifting the first of the small kids up, Keith smiled, "Mom?"

"Yes?" she answered, and sat the child on the Sehlat's neck.

Passing the next kid up, Keith said, "The bluff's really kinda steep."

Sitting the next child down behind the first, she simply nodded and hummed affirmatively.

Prez passed up another kid to Joel and Kevin then began snickering. Keith loudly laughed, "Mom! It's like a seventy degree angle and at least twenty feet!" and passed up another kid.

Shaking her head sadly and sitting another child down, Mrs. Hundser smiled, "Is this the same Keith Hundser that shimmied up a palm tree only two years ago?" After passing another kid to Joel and Kevin, Prez roared laughing.

Keith passed up another kid then laughed, "You almost had a heart attack! What about John, Corey and Drew and all these other kids?"

Parking another child, Mrs. Hundser shrugged uncertainly.

"We can do it!" John loudly insisted, and then ran over and started up the bluff. Two other boys about John's size ran over and followed John. But barely half way up, all three came tumbling back down again. Laughing and giggling, they brushed themselves off and tried again.

Prez passed up another kid then had to pause again as he hung his head and became hysterical at his foster mom's obvious teasing. Derrick snickered and pushed Prez aside then offered to lift the next kid. The little girl lifted her arms and Derrick picked her up. "Thank you," she softly said.

"You're welcome," Derrick smiled.

"Hey!" Prez laughed, "How come you got a thanks and I didn't?"

Shrugging, Derrick snickered and picked up the next kid that giggled, "Thanks, dude."

"HEY!" Prez loudly laughed and all the little kids on I-Cheya and on the ground covered their mouths and giggled. Derrick howled laughing. Prez adjusted an imaginary tie around his neck and imitated Rodney Dangerfield. "I tell ya, I don't get any respect!"

"I-Cheya can come back for them," Joel helplessly giggled.

HUFF HUFF HUFF I-Cheya chuckled. Big boys climb small hill

Exasperated, Keith hollered, "Mo-om!"

"Alright!" Mrs. Hundser laughed. Kevin leaned against Joel's back and laughed as hard as he ever had before.

"It's just like home, huh Kevvy?" Joel snickered. Kevin couldn't reply for laughing. Joel grinned down at Prez, "Come on, slow pokes... my other brothers are waiting to meet you. And Brant will want to invite you to dinner!"

"You're evil, Sa'r!" Kevin howled with laughter.

Passing up another little girl, Keith then hollered, "Mike! Get your butt over here and give us some help!"

Prez handed over another kid and so did Derrick. Mike picked up a kid and passed him up to Keith's mom. Prez then wondered, "Who's Brant?"

As I-Cheya began to move now that he was fully loaded, Joel called back, "Oh, just my friend..."

"A vampire..." Kevin added with repressed giggles.

Simultaneously, Keith, Prez, Derrick and Mike screamed; "A VAMPIRE?"

Mrs. Hundser giggled, "Vampires don't exist except in the movies."

"Tell that to him, Auntie Jen," Joel giggled as he looked around her and pointed to the top of the bluff. There, in a pair of board shorts and nothing else, was a pale skinned, glowing-yellow eyed boy.

"You teasing people again, Joel?" he called down to them.

"Yes, Fangie. I am."

"Oh. Okay then. What about this time?"

"Vampires."

Brant rolled his eyes, "You know, that might have worked better after the sun had set. They're never going to believe us now."

"Not until they see your cute little chompers, anyway," Joel giggled.

Brant thought for a moment as the Sehlat made it to the top in only three giant leaps and stopped beside him. "Mmm... yes, that might be convincing," Brant smiled widely and made his very sharp canine teeth drop. Seeing the fangs, Mrs. Hundser's head spun, she became dizzy and slid off I-Cheya, landing on her butt only a foot before Brant.

Offering her a hand up, Brant apologized, "Sorry, Mrs. Hundser. I won't hurt any of you."

"G...good... are you really a..." she muttered as she was helped to her feet.

"Yes, really," Brant finished with a smile as the rest of the group finally made it up the bluff to join them. Those of the rescued kids had already met Brant and so they just grinned at the eight boys who had arrived with the lady who was still staring at Brant. "I'm a vampire. Our ancient name is Moroi, but nowadays, vampire is the term."

"But it's... the sun's still out!" Bruce bubbled, pointing to the setting sun.

"Yeah, well... I'm special," Brant grinned. "The rest of my kin are still asleep right now. You can call me a day-walker, if you want."

Shaking her head in disbelief at what was in front of her, Mrs. Hundser mumbled, "You're not going to bite me are you?"

"Why? Are you tasty?" Brant giggled, and then shook his head, "No. I don't eat friends, or parents of friends. I'm a friendly vampire!"

"Oh, that is good to know," Mrs. Hundser stated. "Well, this just beats all! College definitely did not prepare me for this, but heck, look at all that has happened! I guess I shouldn't be surprised."

Cautiously, John stepped forward and placed a hand on Brant's arm. "You're warm," John said.

Brant nodded, "I've already eaten today," and then asked, "What's your name?" John introduced himself and Bruce. Then Keith, Prez, Mike and Derrick stepped forward and introduced themselves.

Beginning to come to her senses again, Mrs. Hundser wondered, "How did you boys get up here? I thought it was too steep?"

Prez chuckled, "It was before!"

"I-Cheya made some really good steps for us all to climb," Keith finished.

Derrick and Mike went over and petted I-Cheya, thanking him for making large indentations they used as steps.

I big boned I-Cheya sent.

Bounding around the Sehlat, Blackie teased Fatty!

I-Cheya sneezed at the small dog, sending it rolling for about fifteen feet.

Joel was still shaking with laughter, and Kevin had laughed himself so silly that he had rolled down I-Cheya's back and nearly ended up back down on the beach.

"Leave the poor woman alone! My god, I don't know what to do with you little kids," Galli giggled as he approached with nine others behind him. Three were little boys, about seven- or eight-years-old, with bright purple eyes. The remaining six were - slightly different.

"Wow! Caitian! I didn't know we had any Caitians on Earth!" Keith exclaimed loudly.

The two cheetah looking figures looked at each other, then back at Keith. "What's Caitian? We're G-Cats! He's Mercury..." one said, pointing at the other.

"And he's Hermes," Mercury smiled. "That's Mont and Bast," he added pointing at the two Lion like boys behind them, who looked a fair bit older.

"And those are our sisters, Aphrodite," Hermes finished, pointing at a tigress looking girl, "and Artemus," pointing at the lioness.

Confused, Keith mumbled, "But... ain't you from the planet Caitian?"

"Noooo," Mont grinned. "We're from Utah!"

"Well, that's almost a different planet!" Mike chuckled.

"Not quite as far out there as Caitian though," Derrick snickered.

Joel ran over to be picked up by Aphrodite, "They're kinda a human feline hybrid. They're super strong and CUDDLY!"

Kevin ran over as well, and asked Mont, "Did you bring our clothes with you?"

Mont smiled down and passed the small boy a carry-bag. "Here, Kev."

"ARRRRRRGH!" Derrick screamed.

Everyone turned to see him fighting with his underwear, which had inexplicably risen up in a massive wedgie... and there was no-one with him.

Brant sighed and covered his eyes with his hands before laughing softly.

"I did not do that!" Mike roared before Derrick could accuse him.

Spinning around, Derrick saw no one. Squinting his eyes suspiciously, Derrick queried, "Galli?"

"Wasn't me," Galli chuckled.

Sighing impatiently, Derrick then hollered, "Alright! My boxers didn't just fly up the crack of my ass by themselves!"

Prez, Keith, Drew and Corey couldn't stop laughing long enough to even try and appear innocent.

A wicked chuckle was suddenly heard behind Derrick.

Derrick spun around again, but still - no one was there. "Come out where I can see you!"

"Are you sure?" he heard in his ear.

"ARGH!"

Prez nearly wet himself, for Derrick had jumped so badly that he ended up rolling back down the bluff to the sand below.

There was a shimmer in the air and a black robed twelve-year-old boy in a black jumpsuit appeared. He had auburn hair, fairly short cut, and hazel eyes. "Sorry, I couldn't resist," he grinned at the laughing group of kids.

"Vampire," Brant giggled. "You're more evil than me!"

"Thank you, my undead lover," Matthew giggled. He then looked at Mrs. Hundser, who was again looking shocked. "Permit me to introduce myself, dear lady. I am Prince Matthew Parnell of the British Empire, also known as 'Vampire', a Captain in the VSO."

Now knowing better than to ask questions, Mrs. Hundser smiled, "My pleasure Matthew."

Waving his little hand, one of the purple-eyed boys said, "Hi Aunti Jen! I'm Kyle."

"And I'm Tyler," the next boy said.

Tyler nudged the next little boy, who was still chewing a cookie. He quickly swallowed and said, "I'm Levi," then pulled another cookie out of the sack he held.

"He caught my cookie fetish... sorry, Lil'Bear," Joel smiled at Kyle.

"Daddy," Levi said to Kyle and pointed at John, "that one's way cute."

Blushing, John stepped back, but Drew and Corey caught him and roughly pushed him forward again. Shyly, John waved and croaked, "Hi Levi."

Levi giggled. "Don't worry - you're nice. Somebody is gonna be lucky with you as their partner. Right, Daddy?"

Kyle nodded, "I think so, Leev."

"HUNGRY!"

Everyone looked at Joel.

"Wasting away here, guys!" the little Vulcan whined, pointing at his thin tummy. Kevin patted his arm and passed Joel his clothes. "Oh, thanks," he smiled as he slipped into his jeans and tee-shirt, and pulled his Vulcan robe over it all. "It's kinda cool here."

I-Cheya led the way into the first field.

Kyle looked down the bluff where Derrick was climbing back up. "Need a hand?" Kyle grinned. Derrick nodded and appeared just beside Kyle, still hunched over as he had been while climbing. Shifting his eyes then spinning around, Derrick huffed then smiled, "Thanks."

"Anytime, Derrick," Kyle grinned, and then introduced himself as they began following the rest of the group.

"How did you know my name?" Derrick wondered.

Kyle grinned and rambled, "You were born December thirtieth, nineteen-eighty-nine; started playing drums just before you turned seven when you got your first kit for Christmas. Your favorite food is baked ham, dripping in brown sugar and pineapple juice. Your favorite drummers are Neil Peart and Carl Palmer. You and Mike have always been best friends and became boyfriends right after Mike's birthday, June first, two-thousand-two..."

Derrick laughed, "Holy Shit! Is there a book about me somewhere?"

Clapping his hands, Kyle laughed and nodded then pointed at Derrick's head. "You're a walking book... and your fantasy section is really cute!"

"You're freakin' me out, dude," Derrick playfully warned.

Kyle looked up and promised, "You'll get used to it... eventually."

Before them in the first field were at least one hundred tables filled with all sorts of foods. Fruits, salads and vegetables were in one group of tables; another section had meats including sides of beef and barbecued pig; breads and rolls of every type were at another group; cakes and cookies and deserts were at another group of tables and finally, milk, water, soft drinks, beer, wines and hard liquor were served from another area.

If the food wasn't impressive enough there were, scattered around several fields south of the lighthouse, eight huge multi-panel video displays with towers of speakers on each side of the screens. Canned music was already being played through all the speakers and the video displays showed the stage with colored lights shining down on an assortment of instruments.

"Incredible!" Derrick hollered. Nearby, I-Cheya lay down with Blackie and they were sharing two entire barbecued pigs. The Sehlat bit off a rear leg and Blackie cleaned up the mess falling from I-Cheya's mouth.

Kyle smiled, "Don't be shy either; it's all free! Compliments of Clan Short, Starfleet, and The Republic of Hawaii."

"How many people are gonna be here?" Derrick wondered.

Kyle shrugged, "Everyone's invited so anyone that can make it, pretty much. We're expecting about twenty-thousand, but could easily handle fifty-thousand, if we need to."

Softly snickering for a few moments, Derrick noticed Kyle looking up curiously. "Keith's gonna need a change of clothes," Derrick explained, "he's gonna just shit!"

Kyle said, "Stage fright?"

Derrick nodded, "It's not so bad anymore, but none of us have played for an audience like this!"

"Don't worry," Kyle said, "Me, Ty and Levi will get everything sorted out." Derrick was about to ask how, but suddenly decided to leave it alone. "LET'S EAT!" Kyle shouted and ran off for the line where people were already loading down plates and trays. Derrick hurried after him.

After grabbing a plate and a tray, Derrick found Mike, Keith and Prez. "Is this totally awesome or what?" Derrick smiled.

"Oh dude!" Mike shouted, "I was psyched to play for our town! This is gonna be so awesome!"

"Now we're playing for tens of thousands!" Prez excitedly added.

"And even the King and Queen!" Keith laughed, "I feel like The Beatles, before the Royal Variety Performance! For our last number, I'd like to ask for your help. Will the people in the cheaper seats clap your hands? And the rest of you, if you'll just rattle your jewelry..."

Derrick, Mike and Prez roared; "DO IT, DUDE! YOU HAVE GOT TO SAY IT!"

Laughing hysterically and nodding, Keith chortled; "Only if we close with Twist and Shout."

"Hell yeah!" Mike and Derrick shouted.

Prez leaned over to Keith's ear and seductively whispered, "You do this and I guarantee you'll sleep like a baby tonight."

"Is that a dare?" Keith asked.

Shaking his head, Prez smiled, "A promise."

"Done deal!" Keith giggled. "I think I'll have the pork."

Leaning on Keith's shoulder, Prez softly snickered.

Mike and Derrick looked at them and smiled. Mike jeered, "They're at it again."

Derrick teased, "Directly to bed, do not pass go, do not collect two hundred dollars."

"Jealous?" Keith countered.

Sinking deeply into Derrick's beautiful hazel eyes, Mike shook his head. "Not at all."

"Just giving us some ideas for later," Derrick smiled.

"GAWD!" Mike laughed, "Usually we get randy after we play!"

Feeling like he was being watched and not wanting another wedgie, Derrick rapidly spun around. Not far down the food line stood Kyle, Tyler and Levi, looking far too angelic. Turning to his band mates, Derrick said, "Ya know, Kyle and those other two kids seem different somehow. And I mean more than just their purple eyes."

"It's your imagination," Mike offered, "They're just little kids... with colored contact lenses, I guess."

Shaking his head, Derrick began, "I was climbing..." but suddenly stopped. Scowling for a few moments, Derrick then grumbled, "Dammit! I forgot what I was gonna say!"

"I hate that!" Keith snickered.

Prez looked at Derrick closely then assured, "If it was important at all, it'll come back to you, bud."

Behind Prez, the woman serving asked, "May I help you?"

Turning around and smiling, Prez passed her his plate and said, "Yes please, I'll have a little of everything. Some of the beef and a little barbecued pork and a chicken leg." After he was served, Prez waited for his friends then they moved over to the next serving area for salad and veggies. They soon got bread and deserts and sodas then walked across Kauapea Road and found a place to sit near Kaleo and some of the other boys they recently met.

After eating for a while, Kaleo looked over and smiled; "Is this the best food ever, or am I just underprivileged?"

Shaking his head rapidly and swallowing, Prez said, "No, it's all really great, some of the best I've ever eaten."

"You're with friends now, Kaleo," Keith offered.

Mike nodded and assured, "The Clan will live up to their promises, no doubt."

"And we'll put on a show for you all that you'll never forget," Derrick promised.

Looking at each of them, Kaleo queried; "Put on a show?"

Keith nodded, "We're musicians."

Kaleo grinned, "Oh. Are you any good?"

Mike snickered and almost choked. Derrick patted his back a few times before Mike smiled and answered, "We're only freshmen, but beat out lots of upperclassmen for our high school jazz band."

Kaleo nodded, "I don't know any jazz. I don't really know any music; it wasn't allowed at the orphanage."

"Oh man!" Prez loudly said, "My whole life has been a series of songs from country to blues to classical, jazz and rock."

Derrick asked, "Don't you know of any music you liked?"

Kaleo shrugged, "I heard some stuff on the radio whenever I was out of the orphanage, just not enough to know titles or bands."

Shaking his head sadly, Prez softly said, "I can only guess how bad it was for you..." Scanning around the table, he continued, "for all you guys. If you'll let us, we'd like to help push your past's way back, out of the way."

Keith added, "We'll go out of our way to keep in touch after tonight. Music is the center of the best times we've ever had in our lives. We'd like to help make it that way for all of you too."

"Music directly ties to emotions," Mike explained. "A soft classical guitar piece can bring tears of joy, or tears of sadness. Rock and jazz though, they make you wanna move, dance around, either close to someone special or further apart with a whole bunch of friends, just shakin' and groovin'."

Kaleo put his fork down and sighed, "I can feel how happy it makes you dudes but... for us... sometimes we were made to dance... to please someone... sexually."

Becoming very sad, Prez placed his fork down and wiped his eyes. Looking around the table, Prez said, "I can only hope that someday soon you'll all forget the horrible stuff that's happened to you. We just met you guys down on the beach, but I know that's an experience I will never forget, because it was so much fun. None of you have given me a reason to not like you. You're kids, just like us, but with nightmarish pasts. Music shouldn't remind you of something like that. Hearing music or looking at art; paintings, photos or statues shouldn't make you feel bad; it should make you feel good and show you beauty in all its forms." Swallowing hard, Prez paused and wondered, "Am I making any sense or just talking to hear myself talk?"

Keith rubbed his partner's thigh briefly and assured, "Not at all, baby. We all feel the same way." Facing Mike and Derrick, Keith asked, "Don't we?"

Mike and Derrick both nodded and wholeheartedly agreed. Mike pointed and said, "Ya wanna see beauty? Look to the West." All the boys around the table looked and beheld an early autumn sunset. Some of them smiled and some of them gasped as if they had never actually noticed a sunset before.

While the rescued boys continued to watch the sky change, Derrick softly said, "Is that the most gorgeous sunset ever? All the shades of all the colors in the world seem to be right there. That's beauty to signify the end of the first day of your new lives, right there."

Minutes later, when all the boys had turned back to the table again, Keith suggested, "Tomorrow morning, why don't you all try to wake up early and look to the East. Watch the sunrise. The sky will go from pitch black to dark blue, then get lighter and lighter, with more and more colors. Any clouds will just make more pastel colors. You'll love it, I know it. Tonight, you can all sleep deeply without worrying about the next day's abuse. Use tomorrow's sunrise to mark your first full day of freedom." All the boys nodded excitedly and promised they would get up early.

Whistling a catchy tune, Kyle, Tyler and Levi walked by, with their trays piled so high with food it was a wonder the little boys could carry it all.

After they had passed, Derrick said, "Ya know, there's a fine line between genius and insanity..." Pointing over his shoulder at the three boys, Derrick continued sharply; "and that's the line!" Everyone at the table began giggling and laughing then became completely hysterical.

Picking up a small truffle from his plate, Mike laughed, "Catch D!" Opening his mouth wide, Derrick anxiously awaited and playfully wagged his tongue. Mike tossed the truffle and Derrick maneuvered beneath to catch it. All the boys at the table began playing the game. Soon there were baby carrots, corn, peas and other small items of food being tossed in the air. Not to be outdone, nearby tables of rescued boys began playing the game too.

Walking up to the table with John and Bruce smiling widely, Mrs. Hundser scowled disapprovingly. "I hope you're proud of yourselves. Look around; even some of the girls are playing with their food."

Keith chortled, "Sorry, mom," but didn't really mean it. Actually, he was proud of himself, Prez, Derrick and Mike. This was exactly how all these rescued kids should be allowed to act, Keith strongly felt.

Losing his smile, Prez firmly offered, "They've all had more than their fair share of chores, rules and regulations, mom."

Kaleo stood, introduced himself and explained, "I don't know if you know it, but all of us were in an orphanage run by some of the worst people in the world. Not only did they give us chores, we painted walls and ceilings, we mowed and edged the lawns on the property, all the maintenance that should've been done by adults, we did. If we didn't do it to their liking, they cursed at us and beat us." Removing his shirt, Kaleo pointed out two scars, one welt and several bruises on his torso and arms. Tory stood and showed Mrs. Hundser his own signs of abuse before Kaleo continued. "Most of us have been photographed naked and our pictures are on the Internet; even the very little kids. We were prostituted to grown men and women. Did you know any of that?"

Her mouth agape, Mrs. Hundser wiped tears from her eyes and held back her sobs. Behind her, a familiar voice called her by name. Turning around, she recognized the boy, forced a small smile and said, "Hello, Stephen! It's so good to see you again!"

Stephen Wicks, age thirteen, rescued from Ewa beach back in June by Keith and Prez nodded and began sobbing; "It's good to see you too. What Kaleo said is true. I wish I had stayed with you, cos it happened to me too." Beside Stephen was another boy named Aaron Farris, rescued by Mike and Derrick, who also nodded his agreement.

"Child Protection Services did that to both of you!" Mrs. Hundser shrieked. Both boys nodded and Mrs. Hundser immediately dropped to her knees and opened her arms wide. "I'm really so very sorry!" Mrs. Hundser cried. Both boys hurried to her and hugged her tightly, wailing unashamedly.

"Kai can tell you; he had it bad too in the orphanage. And worse when he left," Kaleo said sadly.

John looked up quickly and excitedly shouted, "Kai's here?"

Kaleo pointed to where Joel and Kevin were sitting with a boy about Corey's age. Recognizing his lost friend, John ran in that direction, pulling Bruce along with him and shouting "Kai!" Looking over and smiling, Kai stood up just in time to receive a bear-hug from John.

As a psychologist and sociologist working for the largest and arguably best medical center on Oahu, Mrs. Hundser saw literally dozens of families every month through all sorts of tragedies, ranging from illnesses to car accidents to suicides. On occasion, she and her department had placed children in the care of ROH Child Protection Services. She knew one woman at CPS fairly well, she had thought, but now, Mrs. Hundser was sad and fuming with anger.

John and Bruce returned with Kai while Mrs. Hundser was still on her knees comforting Stephen and Aaron. While Kai relayed his story to Mrs. Hundser's horror, Levi came near, but remained at a distance and listened, quietly munching on cookies. Scanning Mrs. Hundser's mind, Levi learned the name of the woman at ROH CPS. Skipping away seemingly unaffected, Levi shared all he had learned with Joel and Kevin.

The six Starfleet Security personnel assigned to Joel converged on the table where he was sitting. "The poor lady is about to pop her cork," Levi relayed. "She's pretty much decided not to call the CPS lady and yell at her, but instead to tell Mike's daddy."

"That's okay," Joel smiled, "the police already know Clan's here and will keep out of it."

Looking up at the man in charge of his security detail, Joel smiled and said, "Lieutenant Vorik, contact the Endeavour. Get a detail to visit Mrs. Tamara Hekekoa on Oahu. They have to find out if CPS is involved with the problem, or if it is higher up. Let's see if we can follow the trail to this 'Boss' character behind the sex-ring. I want an initial report as soon as is possible."

"I will contact Endeavour immediately and report back to you before twenty-four hours," Lieutenant Vorik replied and stepped back from the table.

Turning back to Levi, Joel smiled, "Can you do me a favor, Leev?"

"Uh huh," Levi rapidly nodded.

"Help Auntie Jen," Joel said, "she's helped us a lot without knowing it, and she's had a surprising day already. Help her to enjoy the luau, okay, Lil'Mouse?"

"That's easy!" Levi giggled, "I'll just be me; adorable and cute!" He then ran over to the table where Mrs. Hundser was now sitting. Squirming his way between the boys surrounding her, Levi innocently asked, "You sad, Auntie Jen?"

Wiping her eyes with a paper napkin, she sighed, "Yes I am, Levi."

Taking a cookie out, Levi said, "Have a cookie." He held out his little hand with a cookie and offered it to her explaining; "They're chocolate chip and always make me feel better." Cracking a slight grin at the boy, Mrs. Hundser took the cookie and had a small bite. "All better now?" Levi wondered.

"Almost," Mrs. Hundser smiled.

Bouncing slightly and putting his other hand on his hip, Levi impatiently reminded, "Well, ya gotta eat the whole cookie!"

Softly chuckling, Mrs. Hundser popped the rest of the cookie in her mouth. While she chewed, Levi weaseled his way onto her lap and hugged her tight. All the Hundser boys, Prez, Mike, Derrick, Corey and Bruce all began sniggering and felt much better, because little Levi had shown up at the perfect time. Holding onto Levi as if he were the most precious thing in the world, Mrs. Hundser smiled and admitted; "Now I feel much better."

"See!" Levi happily squealed, "Chocolate chips and cuddles always work!"

Honolulu, Oahu 7:02 PM

On her way home from work on the H1 freeway, Mrs. Tamara Hekeia had called her husband at his office. She learned that he was just preparing to leave and expected to be home around eight. They chatted about going out to dinner that evening, since neither felt very much like cooking or eating late. Exiting the H1 and driving north-east on Nuuanu Avenue, she told her husband that she was almost home and would meet him there. Then they would go to Bangkok Chef, a nearby restaurant they both enjoyed for dinner. Turning left on Bates Street, she said goodbye, but her husband reminded her of a few errands that needed to be run the next morning. She turned right on Huake Place just as he said goodbye and hung up. Flipping her cell phone closed, she pulled into the driveway of her home. Slipping her phone into her handbag and grabbing her laptop computer case off the passenger seat, she then opened the car door and stepped outside.

What Mrs. Hekeia was not aware of, was that her cell phone transmissions had been monitored from the Endeavour in orbit; pinpointing her exact location. As she fumbled with her keychain to get her house key, four shimmering shafts of light appeared around her.

Startled, she blubbered, "Wha... who..."

"Mrs. Tamara Hekeia?" the Vulcan officer standing before her asked.

"Yes?" she nervously replied, and quickly glanced around at the other three Vulcans.

"I am Lieutenant Ra'Vesti. I have questions for you, regarding minors Stephen Wicks and Aaron Farris."

Recognizing the names, she wondered, "Is there something wrong? Has something happened to the boys?"

Realizing the woman was being cooperative and was concerned, but was obviously surprised, Lieutenant Ra'Vesti suggested, "May we go inside with you? There is a situation we must discuss."

Mrs. Hekeia huffed, "My husband will be home within the hour."

Lieutenant Ra'Vesti said, "There is no reason for fear Mrs. Hekeia, as long as you remain cooperative and provide the information we require for our investigation."

Resigning herself to what would hopefully be a short delay, Mrs. Hekeia nodded and held up her keys. Lieutenant Ra'Vesti stepped aside and she unlocked her front door. Walking inside and turning on the lights, she asked, "How might I help you?" and put her things down on the end table.

Following her inside, Lieutenant Ra'Vesti explained, "There have been multiple cases of child abuse discovered across the Hawaiian Islands today. Some have been at orphanages, some by foster parents. We are investigating these crimes. In the cases of both Stephen Wicks and Aaron Farris, the foster parents are now in custody for violations of the Safe Haven Act."

Realizing the seriousness of the situation, she softly said, "I see."

Raising an eyebrow, Lieutenant Ra'Vesti said, "You do not appear surprised."

Sitting down on a kitchen stool, Mrs. Hekekoa sighed and explained, "It's a very strange world. Most families have two working parents. Children come home to empty houses and fend for themselves. They then come to Hawaii for vacations, but sometimes accidents happen. If I recall correctly, Stephen came to Hawaii with his widower father, but the father had a skiing accident and drowned. There were no other relatives able or willing to take him. There was a similar situation with Aaron; both his parents were killed in a car accident. Efforts to find next of kin to take him in proved fruitless. At ROH CPS, we try to care for far too many children with limited resources. Sometimes, investigations into possible foster homes are... how shall I say... expedited. Background checks are incomplete. Family reviews are not as timely as regulations say they should be. In far too many cases, my management has me fill in and submit forms that I know are inaccurate. But, I've seen too many other highly qualified coworkers dismissed for insubordination, because they were not willing to make those sacrifices." Becoming emotional, she asked, "How can we care for so many with so few? There aren't enough CPS investigators, there aren't enough truly qualified families, there isn't enough money or hours in a day to do all that the regulations require us to do!" Breaking down in tears, she sobbed, "It never ends! I'm sorry! We all do the best we can, what we believe is best for the children, but..."

The Vulcans watched silently as Mrs. Hekekoa cried. The woman did not appear to be acting, but such emotional displays were foreign to them. They waited a minute or two for her to calm down. Finally she rested her head on her hand and softly shuddered, "Too much stress, I'm sorry."

Lieutenant Ra'Vesti said, "Mrs. Hekecia, if you will allow a mind meld I can verify your testimony and you will gain from me a small measure of composure."

"Will it hurt? I've never..."

"It will cause you no additional discomfort," Lieutenant Ra'Vesti assured.

She nodded then Lieutenant Ra'Vesti walked around and behind her then carefully placed his fingers around her face and head. In just over a minute her testimony was verified accurate and Mrs. Hekecia became more relaxed. Releasing his hold on her, Lieutenant Ra'Vesti said, "Tell me the name and location of the manager that had you falsify the documentation."

Pausing briefly to consider her answer, Mrs. Hekecia sighed, "Walter Saunders, 1506 Puolani Street."

Activating his communicator, Lieutenant Ra'Vesti said, "Four to beam up." Four sparkling silver shafts of light enveloped the Vulcans and they vanished from Mrs. Hekecia's home.

Aboard the Endeavour, databases on Walter Saunders and family were reviewed and scans performed on the house on Puolani Street. Since the entire family of four were inside the house, a detail of eight armed Vulcans were transported to the Saunders' home.

Upon materialization, the Vulcan men and women heard angry yelling from inside the house. Lieutenant Ra'Vesti opened his communicator and requested an additional six security personnel be immediately transported to his location. Moments later, when the six had materialized, Lieutenant Ra'Vesti ordered, "Create a perimeter outside the dwelling. Any human attempting to escape is to be stunned." The six sharply nodded then walked off to surround the house.

Lieutenant Ra'Vesti knocked on the front door once, but the yelling inside did not pause. Remembering that humans often used an electromechanical door bell, he quickly found the little white button and pressed it.

A man's voice inside shouted, "God damn it! Who the hell is here now? Someone answer the fucking door!"

Moments later, the door opened and a small female appeared before the security detail.

"We are here to speak with Mr. Walter Saunders," Lieutenant Ra'Vesti announced.

The girl turned and screamed, "Daddy, it's for you!"

"Fuck me!" the man hollered, "All I want to do is sit down, relax and watch TV." He paused at the front door and upon seeing the Vulcans, loudly asked, "Well! What the hell do you want?"

"Are you Mr. Walter Saunders, of Child Protection Services Honolulu?" Lieutenant Ra'Vesti queried.

"Yeah, what do you want?" Mr. Saunders angrily asked.

Lieutenant Ra'Vesti said, "We would like to speak with you regarding..."

"See me at my office!" Mr. Saunders interrupted and pushed the door closed.

Lieutenant Ra'Vesti easily caught the door and said, "Sir, I insist that we speak now."

"This is private property!" Mr. Saunders spat, and pulled his right arm back then landed a punch on Lieutenant Ra'Vesti's jaw. The door slammed closed.

Lieutenant Ra'Vesti softly commented, "Irrational and illogical," then rapidly pushed at the door with both arms and broke it down.

"WHAT THE FUCK!" Mr. Saunders yelled, and spun around. "You're going to pay for that, you muthafucking alien bastard!" he shouted, and hurried over to physically remove the trespassers.

But before he took a second step, Lieutenant Ra'Vesti aimed his phaser and fired. Mr. Saunders crumbled and fell to the floor. Lieutenant Ra'Vesti waved for his detail to pick up the unconscious human. Two lifted the man and Lieutenant Ra'Vesti opened his communicator then said, "Beam up security detail." Mrs. Saunders came to the room just in time to see her husband and several Vulcans disappear before her eyes.

Aboard the Endeavour, Lieutenant Ra'Vesti led the two dragging Walter Saunders to the brig. Laying the suspect down and securely restraining his arms, legs and torso, Lieutenant Ra'Vesti began his interrogation via mind meld. It took many minutes, but Lieutenant Ra'Vesti discovered more information before Saunders regained consciousness. Walking out of the brig holding cell, Lieutenant Ra'Vesti activated the force field, then went to a nearby console and pressed a few buttons to activate communications.

"Vorik," came a voice through the console.

"This is Lieutenant Ra'Vesti. Allow me to speak with Patriarch Short."

Several moments later, Joel's voice was heard, "This is Patriarch Short."

While continuing on the console to search databases Lieutenant Ra'Vesti said, "Patriarch, this is Lieutenant Ra'Vesti reporting."

"Yes, Lieutenant Ra'Vesti?"

"The CPS worker identified was cooperative. She falsified information under orders of her management, one Walter Saunders, who is now held in our brig. Interrogation of Saunders has revealed that he is part of a larger conspiracy. Members of the Republic of Hawaii Ministry of Commerce have been identified. What are your orders, Sir?"

Joel hummed thoughtfully and asked, "Do we know where they are?"

"Yes. One is on Oahu in Honolulu. The other two are on Kauai. They are there at the luau, Sir."

"Understood, Lieutenant," Joel replied, and then said, "I think it would be best if we didn't cause a fuss here. Let's do this quietly and tidy it up later. Transport the two on Kauai directly to the Endeavour, and apprehend the other on Oahu, then continue with the investigation and report back to me. I will talk with the Prime Minister and the King and Queen, as soon as we have more details."

In the background came the harmonized voices of Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike singing; "I've got a lovely bunch of coconuts. There they are all standing in a row. Big ones, small ones, some as big as your head. Give them a twist, a flick of the wrist, That's what the showman said." And Joel howled laughing.

Raising an eyebrow curiously, Lieutenant Ra'Vesti said, "Very well. Ra'Vesti out." Purposefully, Lieutenant Ra'Vesti contacted the transporter room and sent the coordinates for each of the three individuals and holding cells for each. One after another, three men appeared in three separated cells. At first they were confused, but quickly became irate. Ignoring the various rude comments and obscenities, Lieutenant Ra'Vesti waited patiently until they all finished complaining. Then he began explaining where they were, summarized why they were brought to the Endeavour's brig, and finally that he intended to interrogate each of them. "You may choose to cooperate, in which case any judgments against you may be reduced, or you may choose to remain defiant. No matter which you choose, consider your answers carefully, as they will be considered testimony in the case and will be verified via mind meld." Again the men began yelling and screaming, protesting vehemently.

From their various statements, Lieutenant Ra'Vesti postulated that none would be cooperative. Therefore, he simply entered a command and stunned the man in the first cell to the left, and then he went over and inactivated the force field to perform his duty. One after the other, he went through the same process. In less than twenty minutes, he had extracted all the information required, but Mr. Saunders came to and began ranting. Uncharacteristically for a Vulcan officer, Lieutenant Ra'Vesti stunned him silent too, simply to gain a little peace to prepare his report. As he sat at the console, he paused thoughtfully. "I believe I will need to put in for some shore leave on Vulcan - I have been spending too much time around Terrans."

Lieutenant Ra'Vesti's final duty was to transport to the brig the remaining eleven individuals and the Republic of Hawaii's Minister of Commerce that had been identified from the mind melds he recently performed. Making his task infinitely simpler, all twelve were on Kauai at the luau. One by one, shafts of sparkling light appeared around the fields south of the Kilauea Lighthouse, creating new conversations about their disappearance. After calling for assistance to perform interrogations on the dozen new suspects, Lieutenant Ra'Vesti left the noisy brig to contact Patriarch Short.

Chapter 2

Kilauea, Kauai

October 29, 2004 7:45 PM

The stage was setup in the field to the southeast of the Kilauea Wildlife Refuge and it was huge; sixty feet wide by one hundred feet long and ten feet high off the ground. Still, it was barely a spec compared to the width and length of the field. On each of three fields further away from the stage were large six-foot by four-foot video displays raised up two feet off the ground. Surrounding each of those video displays were towers of speakers. Under the video displays were massive subwoofer cabinets. All the instruments were rented from Mozart Music in Honolulu and they also arranged for the stage, the lighting, the PA systems and video systems through contracted vendors across the islands.

Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike reviewed the set list with Drew and Corey and two adults from Mozart Music named Don and Kayla. Drew and Corey were prepared to run the PA and lighting systems on Ewa Beach, but they were now going to need assistance from Don and Kayla to pull off a professional show before an audience of over twenty-thousand. Now Corey had access to a MacBook Pro to provide stage background images in addition to the computerized lighting console. Corey and Kayla worked together to come up with appropriate videos and images for each of the twenty-eight songs. Drew and Don reviewed all the additional abilities of the sound system. Drew knew a lot for a twelve-year-old, Don immediately realized. The twelve-year-old boy understood gain staging, signal flow through the board, compressors and digital effects processors.

Moving over to the rear of the stage, Derrick, Mike, Keith and Prez changed into matching polo shirts. The shirts were made of cotton and colored silvery-gray with large black eighth note symbols on each short sleeve. The only identifying characteristics on the shirts were pictures across the back; one had a drum set, another had a keyboard, the third had a guitar and finally the last had a bass guitar. Since all four boys wore the same medium sized men's polo shirts, they rarely ever wore the correct shirts. For this performance, Keith wore the bass guitar shirt, Derrick wore the one with a guitar, Mike had the drum set and Prez the keyboard. As had become ritual, all four walked between the line-up of parents; fathers on the right to shake their hands and mothers on the left for kisses on the cheek.

The setup was similar to what was expected at the Ewa Beach Luau. Keith would be stage left with a Steinway grand piano, and a stack of electric keyboards facing the audience; Prez would be beside him with the simplest set up, consisting of two Ampeg bass amps, a BOSS GT-6B stereo effects processor, and a Gibson EB-3 bass guitar; Derrick had a nine-piece Ludwig drum set, including four mounted tom-toms and two floor toms with a wide variety of eight different cymbals; at stage right would be Mike, and a selection of guitars including a Fender Stratocaster, a Gibson Les Paul Custom, a cherry Gibson 335, a Gretsch Tennessee Rose, an Ibanez Joe Satriani Signature, and a Martin D-35 acoustic guitar. On the floor in front of Mike's microphone stand was a GT-6 guitar processor. He had several amplifiers; a Marshall stack, a Fender Twin Reverb, and a Fender Acoustasonic. The band would be all lined up in a row, but had so much more extra space, even they couldn't imagine using it all.

Pika Kalani, one of the Hawaiian radio station disk jockeys, took center stage. "Aloha! Good evening ladies and gentlemen," Pika began. "Welcome to Kilauea! We have a wonderful show in store for you tonight. Later this evening, we will hear traditional Hawaiian music from Ho'okena. Before that, we will have a few announcements from Prime Minister Kapule. First on this evening's program, we have another local group of talented high school students from Ewa Beach, performing covers of various hits from the past forty years. Are you ready?" Pika paused as a low cheer traveled around the fields. "Oh! I almost forgot!" Pika continued, "Tonight's performances and announcements will be broadcast live over HBN TV and KHWI Radio, Mix 92.7, the best of yesterday and today." Roars of approval swelled around the fields.

Backstage, Keith laughed, "Oh shit!"

"No one told us they were broadcasting this live!" Prez hollered. Derrick and Mike turned to each other and hugged, laughing hysterically, completely ecstatic.

"Welcome to Clan Short, Prezzy!" Joel loudly laughed.

"It's gonna be great!" Kyle giggled.

"You guys don't need to worry about a thing," Tyler assured.

Hearing this exchange and turning slightly, Pika chuckled, "More surprises are in store for all of us, all night long! Ladies and gentlemen all around the Hawaiian Islands, please give a warm welcome to Old Habits!" The audience applauded and Pika rapidly left the stage while Prez, Keith, Mike and Derrick ran onto the mostly darkened stage.

A low rumble and synthesizer swells blared out of the PA system across the fields. On the stage backdrop, an upside-down image of a forest and a distant mountain appeared then began slowly spinning. Then came the growl of a guitar and a bass, followed by the drums and then Keith's vocals. "Lunatic Fringe, I know you're out there, You're in hiding, And you hold your meetings, I can hear you coming,

We know what you're after, We're wise to you this time (wise to you this time), We won't let you kill the laughter.

"Lunatic Fringe, In the twilight's last gleaming, This is open season, But you won't get too far, Cause you've got to blame someone, For your own confusion, But we're on guard this time (we're on guard this time), Against your final solution."

The band played the middle instrumental break, dramatically leading to the solo. Mike played the guitar solo note-for-note flawlessly.

"We can hear you coming (We can hear you coming), No you're not going to win this time (not going to win), We can hear the footsteps (We can hear the footsteps), Way out along the walkway (out along the walkway). Lunatic Fringe, We all know you're out there, Can you feel the resistance, Can you feel the... thunder?"

The band finished the song abruptly and an overwhelming applause filled the fields. Giggling insanely, Mike walked up to his microphone and cheered, "Good evening, Hawaii!"

Simply because he liked the sound, Keith repeated the final lyric, "Can you feel the... thunder?"

Prez walked up to his microphone with his hand over the top of his eyes, looking around the fields before him and wondered, "How many of you are out there?"

Without prompting, many in the crowd held up a single finger and loudly answered "ONE!"

"Oh good!" Keith snickered. "A small audience!" Picking up the Les Paul, Mike began playing the introduction for Takin' Care Of Business, and the rest of the band joined in, with Mike singing lead vocals. Corey played videos of crowded city streets, freeways, subways, and train stations. When the song finished, Keith reset his synthesizer to imitate the sounds of ticking clocks then a bunch of alarm clocks going off. Derrick began beating the tom-toms and soon the band began playing Time, with Derrick handling the lead vocals. Corey found lots of pictures of various clocks, from the smallest to London's Big Ben and looped them during the song.

At the end of the song, when the applause had died down somewhat, Derrick said, "This next song is for our new friends from Clan Short." Mike began playing a Martin D-35 acoustic guitar and soon the band were joined together for I'd Love To Change The World. Keith used his synthesizer to play the lead guitar solos while Mike sang the lead vocals. The band then proved that they could play more than rock by throwing in the ballad Never My Love, and sang two, three and four part harmonies.

When the crowd began to settle down, Prez said, "Thanks! For our next number, we'd like to play a song for all the kids down in the front rescued by Clan Short today." Derrick began a count-in and the band played Rescue Me. With only short breaks for applause, the band plowed forward with Draggin The Line, the instrumental Sleepwalk, featuring Mike playing the Tennessee Rose, and then As Long As You Love Me.

"This next song," Prez said, "is a little something for all our new friends to hopefully learn they're not alone anymore." Prez and Derrick counted off together then Keith, Derrick and Mike sang; "Billy Shears!" introducing With A Little Help From My Friends. Prez sang the lead vocals with his three friends backing him up. Across the backdrop, Corey played various cartoon images from "Yellow Submarine". They then played Weird, with Keith singing lead, and No Such Thing with Mike handling lead vocals.

Taking another short break for drinks of water, Mike then said, "This next song is for all our friends from Starfleet with us tonight." Hundreds of Starfleet personnel on-duty and off-duty and their families cheered. He then began strumming the Martin D-35 again and sang lead vocals for Starrider.

Switching instruments, with Derrick on bass and Prez on electric guitar, the band then played another ballad; If, with Keith singing lead vocals. Returning to their primary instruments afterwards, they carried on with Separate Ways \(Worlds Apart\).

The show forged ahead with Go All The Way, Time Of The Season, One Thing Leads To Another, \(Everything I Do\) I Do It For You, Cult Of Personality, Precious and Few, Silent Running, Wildest Dreams, Traces and Highway Star.

As the crowd died down again, Keith picked up a Roland AX-Synth, slung the strap over his shoulder and stepped out from behind his keyboards. Stepping up to a microphone, he then said, "This next song is for the Halloween holiday just around the corner, and for two sharp fanged dudes we met earlier tonight." The stage became dark and up on the backdrop was a black and white photo of a creepy medieval castle high atop a mountain. Derrick counted off and the band played another instrumental: Frankenstein.

Brant excitedly hollered, "A song for us?"

"I love these guys!" Matthew loudly laughed.

Turning to Joel, Brant begged, "Can we keep 'em? Pretty please?"

Nodding, Joel giggled, "As humans! You may not turn them!"

Matthew faced Kyle and whispered in his ear.

Kyle shook his head but pointed at Joel. Tyler giggled as Matthew talked quickly to Joel instead. Joel grinned and knelt down. Before him, on the ground, the Shattered Sword Sa'ren appeared. Then Brant and Matthew levitated and flew across the backdrop and twenty-feet above the stage.

The crowd roared at the impromptu 'special effect'. After they had flown with and past each other several times, Brant caught Matthew and gave him a dramatic bite on the neck. Matthew's arms hung limp as if he had really been bitten and turned. The band didn't even know what was happening until the two boys began slowly lowering down to stage level. In the middle of the drum solo, they weren't the slightest bit fazed. Brant picked up Matthew as his newly turned Vampire and then suddenly both boys disappeared completely off the stage. The audience loved it!

As the band members all smiled at each other, they noticed that they each were sporting a set of new fangs; courtesy of Kyle. It only created a dramatic pause in the music. The audience only roared louder and clapped. The boys then shook off the shock and continued on with the synthesizer solo before ending the song.

While the audience cheered, all four boys looked backstage. Kyle, Tyler, Levi and even Joel were rolling around, laughing hysterically. Stepping away from the microphones, Keith, Mike and Prez shouted, "We can'tt ftsing like ftthifts!"

The three purple eyed boys didn't even stop laughing, but instantaneously, Keith, Prez, Mike and Derrick had lost their long canine teeth. Seeing one another with normal teeth again, they each reached for and checked their mouths. Shaking their heads sadly, but returning their attention to the audience, they began laughing at themselves. "Okay!" Mike giggled, "That was fun!"

Prez laughed, "Those two flying around were our new friends."

"Absolutely no fear of crowds or heights there!" Keith chuckled.

"This next song," Derrick humorously began, "is titled Fa Fa, strangely enough! It's originally by a band named Guster that sadly doesn't get near enough airplay. Maybe Pika could help them out a little if you ask."

Mike howled, "We could sing most of it with fangs but not all of it!" and began playing the opening guitar harmonics. Derrick sang; "When you look in the mirror, wish you were somebody else. Just a perfect reflection, you and no one else. Minutes run into hours, hours run into days. You're still waiting for someone who never ever came. Fa Fa-Fa Fa-Fa-Fa-Fa-Fa, Never be the same again, Fa Fa-Fa Fa-Fa-Fa-Fa-Fa, Never be the same again."

The rest of the band joined him for the chorus. "You were always saying something, you swear you'd never say again. You were always saying something, you swear you'd never say again. Fa Fa-Fa Fa-Fa-Fa-Fa-Fa, Never be the same again, Fa Fa-Fa Fa-Fa-Fa-Fa-Fa, Never be the same again."

Picking up the lead vocals again, Derrick sang: "Go and run through the hallways, and find your way to the door. You will end up like always, back where you were before. Can you look in the mirror, wish you were somebody else. But it's still your reflection, you and no one else."

Again, all four boys sang the chorus. "You were always saying something, you swear you'd never say again. You were always saying something, you swear you'd never say again. Fa Fa-Fa Fa-Fa-Fa-Fa-Fa, Never be the same again, Fa Fa-Fa Fa-Fa-Fa-Fa-Fa, Never be the same again."

Derrick sang; "No matter where you go, you'll never find your way home. You'll never find your way home no matter where you go."

All four boys sang; "Ooooooooo. You were always saying something, you swear you'd never say again. You were always saying something, you swear you'd never say again. Fa Fa-Fa Fa-Fa-Fa-Fa-Fa, Never be the same again. Fa Fa-Fa Fa-Fa-Fa-Fa-Fa, Never be the same again."

Keith waited for the audience applause to die down then said, "For this next number, I'd like to ask for your help. Will the people in the cheaper seats please clap along? The rest of you, if you'd just rattle your jewelry." The audience laughed and the band began playing Twist And Shout, with Mike singing lead vocals. As soon as the song was over, the four met in front of the mic stands at center stage, held hands and bowed then hurried off the stage.

Returning to the stage clapping furiously, Pika Kalani stepped up to a microphone and said, "Talk about talented! What do you folks think?" The audience roared their approval. "Let's see if we can get them to come up for another song or two, shall we?"

Still toweling off backstage, but hearing Pika and the audience, all four boys shouted, "Omigod!"

Joel smiled, "What do you say?"

Kevin giggled, "Go on up out there!"

One after another, the boys nodded. As they walked back on stage, Keith said, "My voice needs a break. Let's do an instrumental and then a ballad."

Mike and Derrick nodded, "Cool."

"Sounds like a plan to me," Prez agreed.

They then hurried over to their instruments and waved at the audience. Pika strolled offstage.

"Thank you all very much," Keith said, and the audience began to quiet. "This song's called Moonflower, and features Mike Gibbons on electric guitar." Mike giggled and waved to the audience.

Derrick softly counted; "One, two, three, four, one," and Mike began playing the 335 again. It was a nice, mellow Latin tune, and obviously many couples in the audience appreciated it as they began to dance. Mike played clean at first, but as the song continued, he added more distortion and sustain to make that 335 cry.

Minutes later, when the song ended to another warm round of applause, Keith moved over to the Steinway grand piano. He cleared his throat then began playing the piano introduction to Open Arms. Immediately, Bic lighters began lighting around the fields, and the audience cheered. Keith began singing sweetly. "Lying beside you here in the dark; feeling your heartbeat with mine." More couples began dancing, including Joel and Kevin, Kyle and Tyler and all the parents of the band members backstage. As Keith sang the last verse, the audience became louder and louder until the final piano notes were barely heard.

Again, the band went to front center stage and bowed while the audience cheered and hollered for more. Elated, they turned and jogged off the stage. Pika again went up on stage and said, "We'll all be watching for these boys in the future, I'm sure. What an unbelievable, energetic set! Did any of you see wires holding those two flying boys up? I sure didn't! I'm sure freaked out over that version of Frankenstein! Potty break for the announcer! We're going to change the stage set up, so everyone has the chance to grab something more to eat. The food will be served until midnight. We'll continue on with our show in about twenty or thirty minutes, with an announcement from our Prime Minister." As Pika walked off stage again, he looked up for wires and pulleys but couldn't see anything and wondered how the two boys managed to fly.

Backstage three mothers were surrounding their sons, forcing them to put on hoodies so they wouldn't catch a chill from the night air. Fathers congratulated their sons as did John, Bruce, Galli, Kai, Kaleo, Tory, Joel, Kevin, Kyle, Tyler, Levi, Brant, Matthew, I-Cheya and Blackie. Last to join in, were Drew and Corey, since it took some time to get from the PA and lighting systems near the center of the field, through the crowds and backstage.

Drew asked, "How was the stage monitor mix?"

"Fantastic!" Mike cheered. "I could hear the keyboards at the opposite side of the stage and all our vocals perfectly."

Keith smiled, "It was great bro, good job. How did we sound out in the fields?"

"Oh, dudes!" Drew giggled, "Some of those really low synth and bass notes shook the ground; especially during 'Lunatic Fringe' and 'One Thing Leads To Another'. I wouldn't be surprised if it caused rock slides off the bluff and into the ocean!"

"Imagine if we had been near one of the volcanoes?" Corey snickered. "Brant and Matthew's little bit took everyone by surprise though."

Suspiciously glancing around, Derrick wondered, "Who's idea was it to give us fangs?" Interested in the answer, Prez also scanned the group.

Kyle pointed at Ty and Ty pointed at Levi. Giggling their asses off, they chanted "Wasn't me!"

Noticing little Bruce yawning and John struggling to not catch the yawning infection, Prez then leaned over and whispered in Joel's ear; "The little guys are getting tired. Have any arrangements been made?"

Joel nodded, "Starfleet has a recreation facility near Anahola Bay. It's not too far."

"We should probably start rounding them up," Prez said. He then wondered, "Where are they?"

"The G-Cats have a lot of them," Joel replied. "They're really protective and good with kids."

Placing a hand on Preston's back, Keith asked, "What's goin' on, Prez?"

Standing upright Prez answered, "We're making plans to get some of the little tikes gathered and into a bed somewhere."

"That's an excellent idea," Mrs. Hundser proudly smiled.

Corey's mom gasped, "Where are they?"

"We've got it covered, Mrs. Seaver," Prez replied. "They're safe and being watched. Now we just need to get them together and over to Anahola Bay."

"Lieutenant Vorik," Joel loudly said. The Vulcan officer immediately came over and Joel commanded, "We'll need a bus to transport the youngest kids to Anahola Bay Recreation Area."

"Aye, Sir. I will return when one is available," Lieutenant Vorik said, and walked away again.

"I'm a licensed school bus driver," Mrs. Seibert offered, "Get me wheels and I'll get them there safely."

Mrs. Gibbons whispered to her husband. He nodded then she said, "I'll join you, Anna."

Anna Siebert smiled, "Thanks, Laura."

Keith's dad, Jim Hundser suggested, "If all you ladies will take the first group, the remaining men and boys will gather the other kids. Then Anna can return and shuttle another group, if there aren't any objections?"

Joel said, "Take some of the G-Cats with you. Then everyone can be tucked in safe and sound."

"It's fine by me," Anna Seibert smiled.

"Mom," John whined, "I don't wanna go yet."

"Bruce is practically dead on his feet," Mrs. Hundser admonished.

John asked, "What do you wanna do, Bruce?"

Shuffling his feet uncertainly, Bruce sighed, "I am kinda tired after sleepin' at the beach last night." Bruce then leaned close to John and whispered, "Just don't leave me alone all night, okay?"

John smiled and nodded, "You won't be alone ever again."

Cuddle up with a G-Cat for a little while. I'll be there real soon."

Bruce brightly smiled, "Thanks, pal."

"Mom, just get a room with two double beds," Keith suggested. "Then John can hang out for the next bus and be with Bruce. Prez and I will take the other bed..." Seeing his mother glaring at him with distrusting eyes, Keith laughed, "WHAT?" Wide-eyed, Mike and Derrick smiled, but didn't dare say a word. Turning away, Drew began snickering and Corey leaned against him, trying unsuccessfully to not laugh.

Prez teased, "Drew and Corey want to sleep in the same room as us!"

Drew spun around and squinted; "I don't think so!" Corey lost the battle and cracked up.

Lanna Seaver covered her mouth, but locked eyes with Jennifer Hundser, giggling, "Boys will be boys!"

Jennifer Hundser sighed, "It's so true."

Keith chuckled, "We'll share a room with Bruce and John then."

Noticing that Mike was being too quiet and obviously hoping for a room alone with Derrick, Laura Gibbons smiled, "Mike and Derrick can share a room with two of the younger boys also."

"That sounds like a wonderful idea!" Anna Seibert cheered.

Gritting his teeth, Mike glared at Keith and softly growled, "This is all your fault!" Acting blameless and uncertain, Keith held up both his hands and shrugged, but snickered insanely.

"Drew and Corey can buddy up with two other boys as well,"

Lanna Seaver giggled.

"What a wonderful idea!" Jennifer Hundser smiled.

Clapping his hands once and rubbing them together, Joel smiled, "Sounds like we have a plan. Teens and tweens buddy up with the little kids."

Since misery loves company, Derrick playfully wondered, "Where are you planning on sleeping Joel?"

"With Kevvy and where-ever I-Cheya wants," Joel giggled. "We'll be safe and warm all night!"

Mike grunted, "Like anyone's gonna argue with a Sehlat!"

"Okay men," Jim Hundser chuckled, "Let's gather everyone together."

Bill Seaver nodded, "Drew, Corey and I will search the dining areas."

"Keith, Preston and I will search the audience and around the stage," Jim Hundser said.

Taking hold of Mike and Derrick by the shoulders, Rob Gibbons said, "We'll search the fields south along the bluffs."

"Meet at the end of Mihi Road with the first bus load," Anna Seibert said.

Noticing that Kaleo seemed rather confused, Jennifer Hundser asked, "What's wrong, Kaleo?"

Kaleo shrugged, "Nothing really... I'm used to taking care of the little kids myself. Now I don't have to but..."

"Old habits are hard to break?" Mrs. Hundser smiled. Kaleo nodded. Mrs. Hundser suggested "You could take the night off tonight, or help if you like?"

Kevin called, "Blackie, come here boy." The white puppy with black paws trotted up and Kevin asked, "Help Kaleo find the rest of the kids, okay?"

Spinning around happily, the pup sent Find kids. Easy! then put his nose to the ground and scampered off. Kaleo chuckled and hurried after Blackie.

Lieutenant Vorik returned and said, "Patriarch Short, a vehicle has been located and acquired. It will be available in approximately ten minutes."

"Well done, Lieutenant!" Joel cheered. "Please have it parked at the end of Mihi Road. Then have a detail escort the ladies to the bus."

Before Vorik could reply, Jennifer Hundser said, "We don't really need an escort, Joel."

Lieutenant Vorik insisted, "It would not be an inconvenience."

Joel added, "And I'd like to make sure all of you are safe. Between I-Cheya and a detail of four, Kevvy and me are more than safe."

"Thank you, Joel," Mrs. Hundser smiled.

Mrs. Seaver giggled, "A security detail for us!"

"I'm beginning to feel like royalty," Mrs. Gibbons smirked.

Joel smiled and thought, get used to it, ladies, but said nothing.

Lieutenant Vorik said, "If you will follow me, ladies." The women and Bruce followed Lieutenant Vorik, who assigned two security personnel to lead them to Mihi Road. The mothers began making small talk with the Vulcan man and woman, trying to understand more of Vulcan culture and sharing their own views on similarities and differences. Soon after they walked away, Lieutenant Vorik's communicator chirped. "Vorik," he answered.

"Ra'Vesti. Allow me to speak with Patriarch Short."

At the stage area, Mr. Hundser, Prez and Keith had found eight young boys and girls still sitting in the front rows of chairs. Surrounding the eight youngest were another ten between age twelve and fifteen. Seeing Keith and Prez, they willingly got up and followed.

Ten-year-old Noreen Magyar smiled, "Your band is very good."

Her sister, eleven-year-old Earlene giggled, "And soooo cute!"

While Prez and Keith blushed and softly chuckled, Noreen argued, "Talent outweighs cuteness!"

Earlene shrugged, "But combined they're an awesome group."

Noticing a little girl struggling to keep up, Mr. Hundser asked, "What's your name, sweetie?"

Looking up at the man, she shyly answered, "Carmella Socia," and suspiciously asked, "Who are you?"

Pointing at Keith and Preston, Mr. Hundser answered, "I'm Keith and Preston's daddy. You can call me Uncle Jim, if you like?"

The little girl nodded and Mr. Hundser asked, "Are you very tired?" Again, the little girl only nodded. Mr. Hundser asked, "Would you like a piggy back ride?"

Carmella shrugged and wondered, "You won't hurt me, will you?"

Tightening his jaw slightly, because someone had obviously frightened this beautiful, innocent girl, he softly answered, "I promise to be very careful and only carry you, but only if you'd like me to." Carmella nodded again, so Jim Hundser knelt down. Uncertainly, Carmella wrapped her little arms around the man. Rather than chancing hurting or upsetting the girl, Jim wrapped his arms behind his back and clasped his hands together to create a seat for Carmella then stood.

Hurrying to catch up with the rest of the group, Jim made whinnying horse sounds and Carmella giggled delightfully. Another little girl hurried over to Prez and begged for a piggyback ride too. The smallest boy, five-year-old Geoffrey Eckel asked Keith for piggyback ride. Soon there were three kids aboard their horses giggling and laughing their way to Mihi Road. Imitating them, five of the older teen boys picked up the remaining five of the youngest boys and girls and galloped forward.

At Mihi Road waiting near the Starfleet bus were the four mothers. On the bus already were Bruce, the four G-Cats and sixteen of the youngest kids ranging from four to ten years of age. Prez, Keith and Jim Hundser arrived with their charges and got them settled on the bus. Then Drew, Corey and Bill Seaver loaded another seven of the nineteen kids they found. Kaleo and Blackie were next to show up. Nine of his group of nineteen were under twelve and ready for bed. Prez, Keith, Mike, Derrick, Kaleo, Drew and Corey led the teens and tweens over to the dining area to wait for the next bus and grab something more to eat and drink. Jennifer Hundser stepped off the bus and said, "We have forty on-board and eight seats left."

Jim Hundser nodded, "Rob, Mike and Derrick have the largest area furthest away. Let's give them a few more minutes."

"Some of the little ones are already asleep," Jennifer said. "Those G-Cats are amazing! They'll cuddle up with a kid, start purring and in under two minutes the child is sound asleep!"

Jim snickered, "Wish we could've done that with our boys." He then asked, "Is John on the bus?"

Jennifer shook her head and replied, "He wanted to stay with Joel, Kevin, Kyle, Tyler and Levi. He's still with them backstage, as far as I know."

Rob Gibbons, Mike and Derrick returned only a few minutes later with eight more teenagers, five pre-teens and a crying eleven-year-old girl named Daba Sung. Before anyone could ask, Rob explained, "Daba here saw her mother disappear in what sounds like a transporter beam."

Embracing the girl, Jennifer Hundser comforted her and asked, "How about we call your father?"

"My daddy divorced mommy and don't like me or mommy," Daba hysterically sobbed.

"Okay sweetness," Jennifer sighed, "we'll get you a safe and warm place to sleep tonight then contact your daddy in the morning. How does that sound?"

Daba sniffled and nodded, "Okay."

Leading Daba onto the bus where the girl was quickly picked up and cuddled by Aphrodite, Jennifer turned to her husband and softly huffed, "This is ridiculous!" Shaking her head slightly, she then gave Jim a peck on the cheek and explained, "By the time we get there, get all the kids tucked in and return, it'll take about two hours."

Jim Hundser nodded, "Rob, Bill and I will keep the teenagers together at the dining area. We'll be waiting there when you return."

"How many do you think there are?" Jennifer asked.

Bill Seaver answered, "Twelve were with me."

Rob Gibbons replied, "I had another eight."

"Plus Kaleo's ten and my ten equals forty," Jim Hundser figured.

Placing her hand on her forehead, Jennifer mumbled, "Four to a room plus G-Cats and adults... we'll need about thirty rooms!" Giggling insanely, Jennifer smiled "I love you," and then climbed the steps onto the bus. Jim watched as the bus started down Mihi Road.

Turning and walking up to Rob and Bill, Jim smiled, "I have this funny feeling in my gut." The three men began walking over to the dining field where all their sons and the other kids were.

Bill nodded and smirked, "You too?"

"Me three," Rob added.

"I only wish I could put a finger on the reason why," Jim sighed.

Rob playfully rambled, "Investigation into available evidence implies all our lives have already changed."

"Ya think!" Bill loudly chuckled.

Jim sniggered, "It's time to research Vulcan culture and law."

"I get dibs on the culture books when you're done!" Bill laughed.

Rob accepted defeat, shook his head sadly and chortled, "Pass the legal books to me when you're done, Jim."

The dining field was sparsely occupied when they arrived except for six tables of ravenous teens not far from the field's video displays and audio system. Most of the remaining thousands of luau attendees had finished their meals and were sitting or mulling around nearer to the stage. "Oh shit!" the three men chorused.

"We forgot our own kids!" Jim laughed.

Rob snickered, "Forty plus seven! Standing room only on the next bus."

"The bar is still open," Bill smiled.

"Three beers?" Rob suggested.

Bill shook his head and grinned, "Mai Tai. It's been a long day."

At the table where Prez, Keith, Mike and Derrick were sitting, Reyes Taraschke bubbled over, congratulating Derrick. "Oh man, you were so great tonight. I've got so many favorite drummers and you're now on the list!"

Derrick giggled, "Thanks, dude. Who are your favorites?"

Easily, Reyes listed; "In no particular order, Gene Krupa, Buddy Rich, Vinnie Appice, Nick Mason, Alan White, Alex Van Halen, Steve Smith, Ringo Starr, Bill Bruford, Keith Moon, Ginger Baker, John Bonham, Carl Palmer and Neil Peart."

"WOW!" Derrick laughed, "That pretty much covers the best of the best for the last sixty years."

"And you are on that list too now!" Reyes reminded.

Derrick blushed, "When I feel like I can keep up with Neil Peart, I'll let you know."

"Teach me?" Reyes begged.

"Huh?" Derrick grunted.

"To play drums, I mean," Reyes corrected.

Derrick nodded and smiled, "We'll find a way to make that happen; no matter where you wind up with the Clan."

"I wanna be with you," Reyes frowned.

"And I have to be with Reyes," little Jonah Desak reminded. The boys all looked around in shock as the sound of giggles from an unseen source echoed around them.

To ease their minds, Derrick smiled, "We'll see what we can work out, okay?" Reyes smiled and rapidly nodded. Seeing this, Jonah also nodded and grinned.

Overhearing them, Bill Seaver snickered, "Congratulations! Mike and Derrick have been adopted!"

"It's the other way around though, isn't?" Jim Hundser joked.

Placing four Kona beers on the table before Mike, Derrick,

Keith and Prez, Iokau Ai'la'ausd smiled, "You all look like you need it."

"Thanks, Uncle Iokii!" all four boys cheered.

Joel ran over and cuddled into Iokau's side, "Hey! Whatchya doing... uh..." Joel trailed off as he sniffed the air. "Urgh... umm... seeya..." he whispered before running back off towards I-Cheya and squirreling between the Sehlat's forelegs. Mont and Hermes went over to see what was wrong.

Stage lighting was turned up and Prime Minister Kapule walked over to center stage then began his speech. On televisions and radios across the islands, the Prime Minsiter was seen or heard. "Aloha. Good evening, Hawaii. Before we continue with the entertainment from Ho'okena, I have announcements to make. This has been a very challenging day across our Island Nation..."

Prez turned to Keith and rolled his eyes. "Yawn!"

Keith smiled, "Maybe we can get some more beers and pass out before he finishes."

Derrick giggled, "All pleasure must be paid for with pain."

"Owwie!" Mike laughed, "It hurts too much!"

"Yeah," Keith sarcastically chortled, "we can all tell you like it!"

As the Hawaiian Prime Minister started to recap on the excitement of the day, John quietly moved to where Prez and the others were sipping their beers. Kyle noticed his movement and popped over quickly to hear John say, "Something's wrong, Prez. I... he don't feel good." John hadn't taken his eyes from the speaking Prime Minister.

Kyle narrowed his eyes as he reached out his mind towards the Prime Minister. While Prez put his pint down, he asked, "What do ya mean?" and placed an arm around John's waist to pull him closer.

"Him... he feels... bad. I dunno why, but he jus' does," John mumbled.

Joel's head popped up from where I-Cheya had been cuddling and huffing softly to him. "Lil' Bear?" he called to Kyle.

"Working on it..." Kyle replied.

Joel trotted over with I-Cheya ambling along behind him.

"It's him, Elf," Kyle grated as his eyes focused on the little Vulcan. "He's the 'Boss'. He's behind it all!"

Joel's eyes seemed to fill with flame, and as he turned to look up at the still talking Prime Minister, Prez and Keith shared an uneasy glance at the rage now portrayed in the Vulcan's eyes. "Get the kids safe, Preston," Joel ordered, his voice serious and icy cold. Joel had not used Prez's full first name once and Prez immediately knew something was seriously wrong.

"I-Cheya, Mont and Hermes? You're with me," Joel ordered. "Lieutenant Vorik, contact the Endeavour. I want a detail surrounding that stage immediately." Climbing onto I-Cheya, Joel said, "Get me over to the King and Queen as fast as you can Bo-bo."

Standing and reacting on pure instinct, Prez bellowed, "All you guys and girls, I want you behind the video displays and speakers. MOVE! NOW!"

Keith, Mike and Derrick moved so fast that the table was knocked and what remained of their beers toppled over and spilled. Keith said, "Kaleo, get the youngest kids and run!" Kaleo hurried off in one direction and Keith went in another. Mike and Derrick separated and went to two other tables, gathering everyone and getting them to safety. Three fathers dropped their drinks and scurried around making sure there were no stragglers.

Seeing all the kids running in the direction of the closest video displays and sensing danger, Blackie began growling and growling. Kevin came up to the little wolf-collie hybrid and said, "I think it's time for Awesome Black Feet?"

Blackie, still growling, swelled into his full adult form. Spots and collie-like markings were visible in his fur, but overpowered by the shining silver. *Me Awesome! Me kick butt! Gee-up, Kevvy-Boy!
*

Gathered behind the video displays and getting all the kids to sit down and stay low, Prez and Keith then began counting heads. From the other end of the pack, Jim Hundser also counted. "Including me, I got forty-seven dad," Prez said.

"Same here," Keith offered.

Relieved, Mr. Hundser came up with the same count and nodded, "All present and accounted for."

Shaking like a leaf and holding onto Drew as if his life depended on him, Corey hollered, "What's goin' on, dad?"

Bill Seaver replied, "Clan Short..."

"The prime minister is bad," John interrupted. Not fully understanding his youngest son, Jim Hundser scowled.

Rob Gibbons ordered, "Just stay down low in case things get ugly," then raced from behind the video displays towards the stage.

As Kevin rode over to Brant to tell him about what was now happening, Joel, still seated on I-Cheya's back, was in deep conversation with the King and Queen of Hawaii. "Your Majesties, my brothers have just found out that your Prime Minister has been behind the whole 'Child-Sex trade' that has been plaguing these islands for the last three years or more. He is the 'Boss' behind it all. I'm going to arrest him now, so I just wanted you to know."

King Ekewaka Aalona shook his head and sighed. "There's nothing I can do, young man. If you can, please do. My crown is empty of power."

"Yes, please do all you can. I hate to ask it, as you've done so much already, but please," Queen Adamina begged, "please, help us by dealing with him!"

Kyle and Ty popped in next to the King and Queen as Joel turned away. "Popcorn?" Kyle asked with a grin as he held out a bowl.

"I love a good pig roast... and that guy is definitely a pig!" Ty giggled as he snuggled into the Queen's side and grabbed a fistful of popcorn.

Across the Hawaiian Islands, many tens of thousands of television sets and as many radios were tuned into the program. They had witnessed Old Habits performance, and were now listening to the Prime Minister's speech when a dozen shafts of sparking light appeared across the field immediately in front of the stage. What was not seen on television were the other transporter beams across the rear and sides of the stage.

Acting as if he were unaffected by the appearance of many Vulcan Security officers, the Prime Minister continued his prepared speech about the outrage he personally felt regarding child abuse, pornography and prostitution. On stage left, Mont and Hermes climbed the stairs flexing their claws. Joel and I-Cheya climbed the stairs from stage right. Together the four approached center stage.

Interrupting the speech from atop I-Cheya's back, Joel said, "I think you can stop lying now. From telepathic links, Clan Short has learned that you've allowed this Child sex trade and have profited from it. You are under arrest."

"Pardon me?" the Prime Minister spluttered. "On whose authority?"

"I am Sa'ren, son of Spock, son of Sarek, Acting Patriarch of Clan Short, Prince of Britain and Defender of the Commonwealth Alliance. On my authority! Your guilt has already been established."

The Prime Minister smirked, "I don't think so..." He quickly moved his hand to draw a concealed pistol.

A number of highly interesting, yet shocking things happened at one time.

There were multiple shouts of 'Gun!' from the Vulcans and the two G-Cats on the stage.

The Prime Minister had his eyes focused on Joel's chest, bringing the gun up and into line to fire.

There were multiple sounds of 'thunder' from guns, a crackling of a phasenmorph, a 'swoosh' of a knife being thrown by Rob

Gibbons, and many 'phhhshhhhttt' sounds from phasers.

The Prime Minister screamed even before all the above slammed into him.

The small pistol in the Prime Minister's hand did manage to go off.

I-Cheya started bitching as the bullet from said pistol lodged itself in his nose, but didn't harm him though; he's I-Cheya!

The Prime Minister hit the deck, dead.

Joel looked down from I-Cheya's back at the lifeless body. "You are sentenced to death... in case you didn't know it... but I think you did... okay, that was a total waste of breath. Blow your nose, Bo-Bo."

'Clunk'

I want ointment. Nose feel funny.

"I'll get you a nice cow to eat later."

Mmm... cow...

All in all, the Prime Minister was killed with extreme prejudice. Or, as Brant so eloquently stated: "Now, that's one totally fucked up dude, Dudes!"

Joel slipped down from I-Cheya's back. "Your Majesties. Will you come up here, please?" he called towards the King and Queen.

Hearing Joel call the King and Queen, forty-seven kids and two adult men stood and walked around the towers of speakers to witness what was about to happen. Kaleo grinned, "Music, politics, violence and vaudeville! That's what I call entertainment! What a night!"

Snickering, giggling and laughter broke loose.

Kyle and Tyler were still debating whether or not to let the Royal couple walk up there or transport them, when Galli just giggled and folded himself, the two popcorn munching Mikyvis, and the Royals to the stage.

The King looked down at the serious face Joel was giving him, and his eyes widened as a crown appeared on Joel's brow followed by a complete suit of armor that appeared and covered him. "Yes, your Highness?" the King asked, having heard Joel's self revelation in the exchange with the now ex-Prime Minister.

Joel said, "The Islands and Republic of Hawaii need leadership, and the Government has been found lacking. Are you prepared to regain that which was taken from you?"

"I... I do not know, Highness. I never expected for this to be a possibility," the King answered.

Joel clasped his hands together and said one word, "Sa'ren."

Before the now emotionally numbed King, the Shattered Sword of Surak appeared in the young Vulcan's hands.

/Are you willing to rule with compassion, to guide with wisdom, to be the first in defense and the last to have comfort? Are you willing to be all you can be?/

The King blinked and stared at the light-pulsating Shattered Sword. He nodded slowly, "I will try... but I don't think I'm ready."

/That is why you are the perfect choice. I Crown you King of the Jeweled Isles, Lord of Hawaii and Protector of the Pacific Rim./

The Sword burst out in brilliant light. Around the heads of both the King and Queen beautiful Crowns appeared. On the apex of the brow of each, the Royal standard of Hawaii was clearly visible.

"Welcome back, Your Royal Majesties," Joel grinned as he bowed from the waist.

Meanwhile, Kyle was giving I-Cheya a nice relaxing nose rub to ease the poor Sehlat's irritated nostril.

It took a five hour investigation by the coroner to work out whether it was the knife thrown by Rob Gibbons, one of the twenty-six bullets from Hermes or Mont, the phasenmorph blast by Kevin, the combined impact of ten stun phaser beams, or the complete liquefaction of the poor sod's bones that killed him. The result was - Cause of Death: Stupidity. The autopsy completed, the medical examiner then typed his resignation, signed it and left it on his desk. "Now I've seen it all," he softly muttered as he left the building.

Anahola Bay, Kauai

Saturday, October 30, 2004 5:45 AM

Kyle popped into the dark hotel room beside the bed where Prez and Keith were sleeping. Reaching over and gently placing a hand on Preston's shoulder, Kyle melodically but softly called, "Prez? Hello, Planet Earth calling Preston O'Brian." Prez only hummed, but didn't move. "Come on big guy," Kyle giggled.

Rolling away from Keith, Prez groaned, "What?"

Kyle giggled. "If you don't get your butt outta bed, I'm gonna eat all of the food!

Becoming more aware, Prez asked, "Breakfast already?"

Kyle hummed affirmatively and playfully explained, "With so many already eating, there won't be any sausages left for you or Keith."

"Kyle?" Prez wondered, "How did you get in here?"

"The usual way," Kyle giggled.

Prez opened his eyes and saw the time. "It's not even six in the blessed morning!" Prez grumbled. "You have five-seconds!" Kyle giggled and Prez counted down. Reaching two, Prez turned on the light. He couldn't see Kyle anywhere, but still heard his giggling. "Where are you?" Prez hollered as he got out of bed. "There better be a good reason for this, Kyle!"

"There is!" Kyle laughed, "Sunrise on the beach, remember?"

"That was for the rescued kids!" Prez loudly reminded.

Keith opened his eyes, rubbing them as they burned from the light. "Prez? Who are you arguing with?"

"Kyle," Prez answered, and searched the entire room.

Bruce woke, rubbed his eyes, and seeing Prez naked, looking under beds, tables and in closets, sat up and shook John awake.

Sitting up and seeing his older foster brother racing around, John wondered. "What's goin' on, Prez?" Prez hurried into the bathroom and turned on the light, then checked behind the shower curtain.

Realizing that he could no longer hear Kyle's laughter, Prez left the bathroom and sighed, "I'm cracking up."

Bruce leaned closer to John and whispered, "He's got red hair everywhere... and something's wrong with his wiener."

John began snickering and tried to explain; "When us guys get older we'll all grow hair down there, and our dicks get bigger too."

Hearing John's explanation, Keith laughed then got out of bed and went over to calm his confused boyfriend.

Seeing Keith naked and with a morning erection, Bruce's eyes widened and he gasped, "Wow!"

Placing both hands on his boyfriend's shoulders, Keith softly said, "Prez? It's okay now, baby."

On the bed, John watched a stunned Bruce watching two naked teenagers and laughed his ass off.

Bruce blushed and asked John; "We'll all get like that?" John could only nod and laugh more.

"He was here, Keith," Prez insisted, "I wasn't dreaming it, swear to God. He said there were sausages for breakfast..." John grabbed his belly and rolled into a fetal position laughing, causing Keith to begin laughing. Prez continued; "... and that we had to join everyone down on the beach for sunrise." Prez frowned, "You believe me, don't you, Keith?"

Keith nodded and gave his boyfriend a quick kiss. "I believe you, Prez, and that's not why I was laughing. I'm laughing because Bruce is now more confused than you." Prez only tilted his head curiously and Keith snickered, "I guess Bruce never saw his father or any other older dudes naked before. You runnin' around in your birthday suit is enough to start the whole series of sexuality questions."

"You know, teenagers are goofy!" Tyler giggled as he appeared between John and Bruce.

Startled, Keith jumped and spun around. "See!" Prez hollered.

Keith stammered, "How... where..."

"Don't forget 'when!'" Tyler giggled, and stood on the bed.

Bruce hollered, "How'd you do that?"

"It's just one of the things we can do," Tyler giggled. He pulled French toast sticks seemingly out of thin-air and handed one each to Prez and Keith.

"What about us?" John loudly reminded, and suddenly he and Bruce found French toast sticks in their hands.

"Kyle evolved into an anti-energy being," Tyler explained helpfully. "But because he was the only member of his species, he turned me into one too."

"And the next day, they had me!" Levi said as he popped in next to Bruce, handing him a glass of orange juice.

After taking a sip of juice and absorbing the cryptic answer, Bruce seemed satisfied.

John wasn't quite so easy though and asked, "So you guys can just appear where-ever ya want, when-ever you want to?"

"Pretty much," Tyler grinned. "We can go anywhere in space and time in any dimension, and transform matter into energy or the other way around. There's lotsa stuff we can't do, but there's plenty that we can."

"That's gonna take some getting used to," Keith smirked.

Prez triumphantly grinned, "So Kyle was here in our room."

"Course I was," Kyle snickered as he appeared, and then asked, "Are you always so cranky in the morning?"

"Not always," Prez smirked.

"He's never cranky with me or anyone at home," Keith honestly said.

Prez answered, "What trips my switch is teasing at five-fifty in the BLESSED MORNING!"

"Five forty-eight and thirty-four point six seven two five seconds... more or less!" Kyle giggled before holding out a breakfast sausage. "Wanna nibble of my sausage?"

Uncontrollably everyone in the room started laughing again, even Bruce.

"Okay guys," Kyle giggled, "the sun's gonna rise today at six thirty-nine exactly. If you're gonna shower, you've got less than thirty minutes to get it together and meet us down at the beach. All the kids are getting ready... so are Mike and Derrick... and Drew and Corey. There's more French toast sticks, sausages and juice on the dresser." Prez looked over at the dresser. Lo-and-behold there was a plate overflowing with food, and four glasses of orange juice waiting. One after another, the three Mikyvis waved and disappeared.

Picking up another French toast stick, Keith mumbled, "Gotta admit, they come in handy sometimes," and took a bite. John and Bruce raced over and dug in.

Between bites, Bruce wondered, "So when will my dick get big and hairy too?"

John laughed so hard that partially chewed French toast was spat across the room.

"It depends," Prez grinned, "some guys in my class were already that way when they turned twelve."

Keith added, "I started right after I turned twelve."

John snickered, "Drew's got some pubes and he just turned twelve."

Prez said, "Lots of stuff changes, Bruce; your voice will get deeper, your shoulders will get wider, you'll grow facial hair, start needing to shave and everything."

Awestruck, Bruce gasped, "You guys shave?"

Keith nodded, "About once a month; our mom doesn't like seeing us with mustaches, even though they ain't nothin' but soft hairs."

Bruce smiled, "Still! How cool is that?" Turning to John, Bruce asked, "Are you?"

Shaking his head furiously, John said, "I'm only ten; not much older than you."

"It's not that special, Bruce," Prez said. "Little boys become big boys, who become young men, who then become adult men. That's just natural." He then chugged the last of his juice and smiled at Keith, prompting, "Meet me in the shower."

Keith nodded, up ended his glass of juice and followed Prez into the bathroom.

When the door closed, Bruce asked John; "They take baths together too?"

John nodded, "They stand and take showers. I take showers more than baths too."

"Oh," Bruce scowled thoughtfully. "I only ever take baths. My mommy says the tub is too slippery and I might fall down."

John nodded, "It does get slippery, so ya gotta move real slow and be careful, 'specially if there's no rubber mat in the tub. Drew and me took baths together for a long time. Then Drew wanted to shower alone. When I asked him to show me though, he did." John paused and asked, "You want me to show you?"

"Would you?" Bruce gleefully squealed.

"Sure, dude," John chuckled, "I guess I was about your age and Drew musta been about ten."

Standing upright more proudly, Bruce giggled, "I already feel so much more... bigger... like grewed up. You guys are so cool to me. Thanks, John."

Wrapping an arm around Bruce's shoulders, John smiled, "No problem, bro." Bruce inexplicably began to shed tears, and John asked, "What's wrong?"

Wiping his eyes, Bruce shrugged, "I dunno... I miss my mommy and daddy... and can't wait to see them again, but... I like it here with you... and Keith and Prez and Drew too. I got no brothers, but now I got four! Soon I'll have to go back to Ohio... and... say goodbye."

"Well, you better call me and write me!" John said, "I'm gonna miss you too, Bruce, but don't cry now, cos we're still together, okay?"

After a few moments, Bruce weakly smiled. "You always know the best stuff to say and do for me, don't ya?"

Shrugging, John giggled, "That's just what brothers do! Come on, the shower's off so Prez and Keith are done. It's our turn now." John pushed his boxers down and Bruce stripped out of his shorts and briefs. Together, they hurried into the bathroom, past Keith and Prez and into the shower.

In twenty-five hotel rooms all the kids found brushes, combs, toothbrushes and toothpaste and even new clothes to change into. At six-twenty, doors began opening and the kids all made their way across Aliomanu Road, beyond the trees and onto the beach. The last out of their rooms were Keith, Prez, John, Bruce, Mike and Derrick. Making their presence known, Keith, Prez, Mike and Derrick sang: "Good morning mister sunshine, you brighten up my day. Come sit beside me, in your way. I see you ev'ry morning, outside the restaurant, The music plays, so nonchalant, ahh!"

Silhouetted against the brightening sky, many of the kids were sitting in the sand facing east, but some chose to stand, including Kaleo and Tory. They both turned around, while Tory giggled, Kaleo laughed, "Good morning to you dudes too!"

"How is everyone?" Prez smiled.

"Fed, clean and dressed in new clothes!" Kaleo excitedly answered.

From the northern end of the beach, everyone heard the sound of bongos being beat and turned to see Kyle, Tyler and Levi marching toward them. Suddenly, Derrick had a set of four tenor drums before him and drum sticks in his hands; Mike had a snare drum before him and Keith and Prez found themselves holding pairs of cymbals. Following the tempo and rhythm being set by the three Mikyvis, Derrick and Mike played along. Kyle, Tyler and Levi loudly sang: "Why don't you ask him if he's going to stay? Why don't you ask him if he's going away?"

"Why don't you tell me what's going on? Why don't you tell me who's on the phone? Why don't you ask him what's going on?"

"Why don't you ask him who's the latest on his throne? Don't say that you love me! Just tell me that you want me! Tusk! Just say that you love me! Don't tell me that you... Real savage like! Tusk!"

Finished with their morning performance, Kyle made all the drums and percussion vanish.

Maureen and Earlene ran up the beach to Prez. "Are you stayin'?" Maureen asked hopefully.

Glancing at the four boys, Earlene said, "You can't just go away now; we need all of you."

Walking up and joining in, Kaleo said, "Tell us, what's really going on."

"I really don't know what to say," Prez stammered.

Keith nodded and explained, "We're not Clan Short. We rescued a handful of kids off Ewa Beach, but that's nothin' compared to the Clan."

"I strongly disagree," Galli said.

"So do I," Joel added.

Kevin offered, "You just don't realize what you've done."

"Last night, while we ate, you told us how you'd like us to be," Tory reminded.

Kaleo clarified, "We're here because you suggested it. You made us really notice the sunset; you entertained us, and for lots of us, it was the first time we really listened to music and paid attention to the words. The lunatic fringe you sang about – the low-lives that made us service their perverted wants."

Tory remembered, "Takin care of business? Well, ya have. Time? The time is now."

"You dedicated a song to the Clan last night," Joel said. "I'd love to change the world, but I don't know what to do?"

"Tell me where is sanity?" Kevin asked.

Kaleo recited; "I'm destitute, I'm looking for protection, I want love, And physical asylum, A vagabond, Running from destruction, Cover me, While I seek defection. Rescue me... rescue us."

"Didn't you know what you were singing?" Tory excitedly asked.

Prez was opening and closing his mouth like a fish. Keith still had some control over his vocal faculties, "Uh... you... you're inviting us into the Clan then?"

Joel grinned and exchanged another look with Kevin, Kyle and Tyler. All three nodded at him. Joel turned back to the four boys before him. Rather than speak to them, he raised his voice, "Corey, Drew, John and Bruce! Front and center!"

The four boys came out of the crowd and gathered around Keith, Prez, Derrick and Mike. Joining up with them, they appeared as puzzled as the older four.

"Let it be known that as of 6:54 AM, Hawaii Time, on the 30th of October, Clan Short Pacific Rim Division has been established by the authority of the Acting Patriarch of Clan Short, me! Sa'ren Joel Short, son of Spock, son of Sarek of the House of Surak of Vulcan. Also, by my authority, I now appoint the Division Head - until it can be ratified by Cory Short, when he takes up his responsibilities..."

Joel let his voice trail off as he looked at Prez with what Prez was certain was a wicked, mischievous glint in his eyes.

"YOU'VE GOT TO BE JOKING!" Prez bellowed. He turned to Keith then stammered, "No, not me, a leader?"

Shaking his head, Keith chuckled, "Well it ain't me!"

"Don't look at me!" Derrick and Mike playfully chorused.

"Prez?" Joel called softly.

Prez turned and looked down at the small thirteen-year-old Prince.

"Keith is just as able as you to lead these guys. But he'd jump in before thinking everything through. You... you would think more carefully. With Keith at your side, both traits - which are both good - will guide and guard this Division. And so, you are the Division Director."

Looking up into the morning sky, Prez loudly cried, "MA-AAAAA!"

From the tree line behind him, standing amongst the group of eight adults, Jennifer Hundser answered, "Sorry, hon... I agree with the little elf!"

"TRAITOR!"

"Thank you, hon!" Mrs. Hundser giggled.

"Are you sure, Joel?" Prez asked, his eyes shining with uncertainty.

"Yes," Joel nodded. "But, if you think it'll help, would two others telling you help?"

"What do you mean?" Prez worried.

I-Cheya moved into the center of the group and breathed on Prez, causing him to tremble violently.

"Son, I agree with Joel. You are all I could wish as a son and heir," came the voice of Prez's father - and everyone heard him.

Then came the voice of Prez' mother. "You make me so proud. You will always make me proud. These children need you Preston - more than you know. Be a father to them all. I love you... we love you so much."

Prez fell to his knees as tears poured from his eyes. He reached and pulled Joel into his arms, barely managing to say, "I... I accept, elf," before dissolving into gentle sobs. The other seven boys quickly moved to surround them with hugs, and soon, everyone moved in to close all spaces and gaps. Only I-Cheya and Blackie were outside of this mass circle of kids and adults.

Joel lifted his voice as he looked around at the group surrounding him and Prez and started to sing:

"Well, I know this life is filled with sorrow
And there are days when the pain just lasts and lasts
But I know there will come a day
When all our tears are washed away,
With a break in the clouds
His glory coming down
And in that moment:

"Every knee shall bow, every tongue confess
That God is love and love has come for us all
Every heart set free, every one will see
That God is love and love has come for us all"

Joel lifted Prez' tear stained face and kissed his nose, then sang the next verse as if for Prez alone:

"For anybody who has ever lost a loved one

And you feel like you had to let go too soon

I know it hurts to say goodbye

But don't you know it's just a matter of time,

Till the tears are gonna end

You'll see them once again

And in that moment:

"Every knee shall bow, every tongue confess

That God is love and love has come for us all

Every heart set free, every one will see

That God is love and love has come for us all"

Everyone gathered there easily picked up on the music and words and sang the last line a few times... and a tremor ran through everyone as Joel, the Shaper, confirmed a Destiny that would remain untarnished forever.

"Love has come for us all...

Love has come for us all!"

Prez stood and was quickly embraced by Keith who was hugged by Drew, Corey, John and Bruce. Mike and Derrick joined the group. Overwhelming cheers and applause erupted from the crowd of almost one hundred kids and adults on the beach.

Smiling widely at the enthused mass of kids, Prez silently thought; Clan Short Pacific Rim Division, that's a mouthful. We've got to shorten it somehow. C.S.P.R.D.? P.R.D.? He began snickering insanely.

Keith felt and heard him. "What's so funny, Prez?"

Prez shrugged and softly chuckled, "We are The Rimmers!" Burying his face on Prez's shoulder, Keith cracked up.

"I knew I should have named them something else, Kevvy," Joel giggled as he heard what Prez said.

"I don't know," Kevin mused, "it does have a certain poetic charm to it, don't it?"

Bruce innocently asked, "What's a rimmer?" Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike blushed scarlet.

"It's because of their taste in steakhouses," Drew explained. "Because they like to eat Outback." Corey laughed so hard that he could only stagger around dizzily.

John pointed at Prez and laughed, "You're a real Queen and a leader now!" Drew and Corey howled laughing.

Prez playfully counted down; "Five... four... three..." Giggling, John and Bruce backed off into the pack of kids.

Derrick asked, "What's the first order of business, Prez?"

"Good question!" Prez replied, and glanced around thoughtfully. "What do you think, Keith?"

Keith shrugged, "Everybody's in such a good mood, we should let them be kids first. Then we can get some organization."

Prez shouted, "Let's go swimmin'!" As more hoorays began, Prez then loudly added, "Clothes optional!" Clothing began flying off almost all the kids.

"Prez," Joel said as he touched the older boy's arm, "There's just a few things I need to tell you before you go swimming."

"Oh?" Prez wondered.

Joel said, "First, me and the others need to go soon. You don't know this yet, but since nine in the morning yesterday, me and them have been at two different places on Earth... at the same time. We have to go back to the correct point yesterday, so we can do the rest of... forget it, it's a time thing. Just know that right now, the rest of the Clan don't know about this Division. Once we leave, wait until at least eleven before calling the Clan in Orlando. The Vulcans from the Endeavour will show you how to do that."

Prez hummed thoughtfully for a moment or two then asked, "You can stay for a little while longer, at least go swimming with us?"

"Sure," Joel giggled. "It's only seven! We've got a few more hours!"

Thankful, Prez grinned.

Joel pointed at Iokau, who was talking with Prez' parents. "Talk to him, Prez. That's the next thing. He has a lot to tell you, and a lot of land to give to the Clan to build your Division."

Seeing Prez deep in thought, Keith softly said, "There's a lot of kids here, baby. They need places to eat, sleep and study, not to mention some sort of recreation."

Wide eyed, Prez softly gasped, "Oh dear Lord! So much for so many!"

Locking eyes with his love, Keith said, "Don't worry, Prez. I'll help every way I can; so will Derrick and Mike."

Already seeing the couple in action, Joel smiled, "You've got the resources of Clan Short behind all your decisions. You'll have anything and everything you need; housing, food, clothes, you name it and state a reason why then sit back and watch it happen." Joel then stripped and called I-Cheya; "Come on, Bo-bo!"

Play Time. Toss-The-Kid

I-Cheya grabbed Prez, got him naked in a split second, and then sent him flying far out into the waters that were colored by the rising sun. Hearing screaming, all the kids stopped what they were doing. Watching their new leader soaring high over their heads, they cheered and laughed.

While other kids were still being tossed by I-Cheya, Prez, Keith, Mike and Derrick began bouncing ideas around and wading in deeper water.

"We need a base," Prez offered. "Some place for all of our families to live, and for all the rescued kids to meet with us."

"Those meetings need to be pretty often," Derrick said, "at least at first, until everyone feels comfortable. We don't want them to think they're only slightly better off now than they were before."

Keith considered, "That base needs to be on Oahu. We all have responsibilities beyond the Clan. This coming week, there are school day jazz band concerts Tuesday through Friday. Then two more, Saturday afternoon and night."

"That brings up schools for the kids," Mike said. "Some of 'em would do fine in regular schools. Others are gonna need special attention after what they've been through."

Prez asked, "So should we have everything on Oahu or scattered around the islands?"

"We need to talk with Uncle Iokii, to find out what land he's got for us and where," Keith reminded.

"Each location's gonna need a cafeteria with good food," Derrick said. "Like us, they need to be able to grab a snack or a drink whenever they want, day or night."

Refining that idea further, Mike added, "They shouldn't have to drop coins in machines either. Sodas, juices, milk and water with a wide variety of cakes, candies, chips, cookies and fruits, all available anytime they want."

"We'll need on-site medical facilities too," Prez said. "And evening on-call nurses and doctors, just in case."

Keith grinned, "Okay, so far we've hired special education teachers, chefs and cafeteria support people, pediatricians, general practitioners and nurses too. Can you say mega-bucks?"

"The more locations, the greater the cost," Derrick reminded.

"But how much do we need to consider costs?" Mike wondered. "My mom's an accountant and could keep our books for whoever might care. My dad's a cop and can coordinate security."

"My dad's a lawyer for legal stuff, and mom can handle a lot of psychological issues," Keith reminded.

Derrick offered, "My dad's a construction contractor and could probably coordinate any maintenance stuff for us. Mom's a school bus driver; she could probably handle some transportation, but she can't be doin' that on several islands at once."

Keith suggested, "So let her coordinate transportation and do some driving now and then on Oahu. These guys have probably never seen a museum or zoo in their lives."

Keith almost sank when Tyler appeared on his shoulders. "Stop worrying so much and eat!" Ty giggled as he held out two hands full of perfectly dry cookies. With Keith kicking and paddling like mad to keep afloat enough to breathe, Ty smiled, "We get money from every planet in the Federation, and a few that ain't. You got more money than Fort Knox; use it or you'll get to help Sean collect new friends for Timmy!"

While Keith kicked, paddled and sputtered, Mike and Derrick laughed at him. Prez chuckled, "I'm almost afraid to ask, but who are Sean and Timmy?"

"Sean is my big bro, and Timmy is my nephew... he likes animal and fish friends." Ty giggled. "Timmy's also in charge of making sure everyone showers!"

Mike laughed, "Ah! A bathroom monitor and... what does Sean do?"

"Rooster tails!" Ty giggled as his hands refilled with cookies from nowhere.

Letting that cryptic answer pass, Prez asked, "So what do we need to be thinking of? There's almost a hundred kids to take care of here."

"What you need made available." Ty answered seriously. "Unca Morrow will handle almost everything; he learned not to piss off Cory a while back."

"Uncle Morrow?" all three chorused.

Tyler rolled his eyes and shook his head. "Yeah... you know, the Admiral dude in charge of Starfleet?"

The four glanced at each other and smiled. Keith finally managed to say, "Unlimited resources, Vulcans, Starfleet and the Clan Sho..." His mouth sank below water again.

Prez chortled, "So we only have to talk with Uncle Iokii and find out where we can set up shop?"

"Yep." Tyler giggled. "Now tell your boyfriend to stop playin' fishie and take me surfin'. I ain't never been surfin' before, an' I think his shoulders are just the right size to enjoy it!"

Finally, Prez cracked up laughing. Mike and Derrick shouted, "Stop screwin' around, Keith!"

"Me too, Unca Prez!" Levi giggled as he appeared on Prez's shoulders. Both Keith's and Prez's surfboards appeared in front of them. Just as Prez sank, he grabbed hold of his board and pulled himself and Levi onto it.

Keith climbed onto his surfboard and sat there catching his breath for a few moments. Looking up at Tyler, he complained, "Ya know, having my board nearby might've been a good idea!"

"Sowwy!" Ty smiled and then asked, "How about I make it up to you?"

"Sure," Keith said. The word had barely escaped his lips when a large swell picked the board up and propelled them forward. "Oh crap!" Keith shouted, and he pulled his legs out of the water. Starting to stand, Keith glanced quickly over to his side and saw Prez also standing with Levi on his shoulders. Looking in the other direction, Keith realized this wasn't a normal wave.

Mike and Derrick had the best view of their friends. While most of the waves in the protected bay were two or three feet, Keith and Prez were riding a six-footer! Derrick turned to ask Mike if he thought that might be a Mikyvis wave, when Kyle appeared on his shoulders. "Board!" Derrick yelled, a split second before his face sunk beneath the water.

"Oh! Yeah!" Kyle giggled. Then Derrick's and Mike's surfboards appeared floating in the water before them. Climbing onto his board, Mike cracked up thinking, thank goodness there's only three of 'em! Spitting and sputtering salt water, Derrick climbed up onto his board. "Hurry up!" Kyle whined. "Joel has already caught a few nice waves!"

Derrick looked up and coughed, "Joel? He can surf?"

From atop their wave, Prez looked around in the water before him in shock. He had never expected the strange little Vulcan prince to be able to surf. He nearly lost his balance laughing when he saw what was really going on.

I-Cheya had obviously stopped his game of 'Toss-the-Kid' and was now playing 'Living Aircraft-Carrier'. He was swimming to each wave, and letting himself be the surfboard while Joel and five or six more kids were excitedly giggling and squealing from his back.

Approaching the shallows, Keith and Prez turned around and dropped back down to paddle out again. Levi lay down on Prez's back while Tyler did the same with Keith. Seeing Derrick with Kyle and Mike atop another unnaturally large wave, Keith told Tyler, "We're gonna break through this wave. Hold on tight." Prez said virtually the same to Levi moments before the second wave passed. Atop the wave, Kyle was laughing so loudly that even while Keith and Prez were momentarily under water they could still hear him.

"That was so much fun!" Tyler giggled. "Can you handle a bigger wave?"

Snickering, Keith replied, "No bigger than ten feet, Ty."

"Kewl!" Tyler laughed.

"Let's wait for Mike, Derrick, Joel and I-Cheya," Keith suggested as he reached the area where waves were breaking. Sitting up, Keith noticed that Levi had disappeared from Prez' shoulders.

Nervously looking around for little Levi, Prez loudly asked, "Where'd he go?"

Pointing towards the shore at Joel and I-Cheya, Ty giggled, "He's letting Joel know."

While Mike, Derrick and Kyle approached, at the beach, Joel was unloading some of the smaller kids. Then Joel called Drew, Corey, John and Bruce to join him aboard I-Cheya. Mike, Derrick and Kyle lined up beside Prez, Keith and Tyler. Sitting there waiting for I-Cheya to paddle out, Levi appeared upon Mike's shoulders. Looking up, Mike smiled, "My turn now?"

"Course!" Levi giggled.

"We're equal opportunity Mikyvis!" Tyler snickered. Once I-Cheya had joined the lineup, Ty giggled, "Ev'rybody ready?" and glanced around. Suddenly, the swell from hell arose beneath them, and everyone began paddling.

Standing with Tyler on his shoulders, Keith could tell something was amiss and hollered, "I said ten feet, Ty!"

"This is ten feet!" Ty giggled.

"Oopsie!" Kyle laughed, "Plus my ten feet!"

Almost in unison, Keith, Prez Mike and Derrick screamed; "SHI-I-I-I-I-I-I-IT!" while three Mikyvis giggled hysterically and I-Cheya chuckled.

At the shoreline, Kaleo noticed the shadow of a twenty-foot high wall of water approaching and gasped, "Oh fuck!" then hollered, "EVERYBODY OUT OF THE WATER NOW!" Picking up two little kids, one under each arm, Kaleo hurried to shore. Big kids helped the smaller kids onto the beach and everyone watched the wave crest. Four surfboards and I-Cheya slid down the front of the wave and turned almost parallel to the shore.

The four women on the beach were horrified and buried their faces into their husbands' shoulders.

Prez silently prayed, "Ma, dad – get a few rooms ready. We're all gonna die! Clan Short Pacific Rim Division created and destroyed all within an hour!"

"My dads are both nuts," Levi giggled before the wave gently lowered to a far more manageable level.

"Spoilsport!" Joel whined.

I-Cheya just huff-huffed his laughter.

The wave shrunk down to a normal Anahola Bay two footer and everyone rode it in to shore safely.

"It's alright now," Jim Hundser chuckled. Jennifer's head popped up and she saw all the kids stepping off their boards in shallow water.

While the older boys were happy to have enjoyed the ride and survived, John and Bruce were bouncing and spinning around. "That was awesome!" John loudly laughed.

His heart still beating a mile a minute, Prez carried his board to Kaleo and passed it to him. "I think I've had enough for one morning," Prez smirked.

Kaleo grinned, "I've never surfed before."

Prez nodded, "Two and three footers are perfect to learn on." Prez then smirked, "Just watch out if Kyle or Tyler are around."

Kaleo chuckled, "You dudes looked awesome though."

"I need to have a chat with Uncle Iokii," Prez explained, then asked, "Do you have any island preferences – where you might like to live, I mean."

Shaking his head, Kaleo said, "It doesn't really matter. Tory and I are good friends and would want to be together."

"Good idea," Prez smiled. "Now I have something I'd like for you to think about."

"What's that?" Kaleo wondered.

"I need a communications officer," Prez answered. "You would handle all communications between the Islands and with other Clan Short divisions. You'd have to be on Oahu at our main base though."

"Consider it done, Prez," Kaleo proudly smiled.

Prez shook Kaleo's hand then said, "Your first task is to ask everyone where they would like to be and who they want to be with. Once I'm done talking with Uncle Iokii, I'll know where we'll have our Rimmer camps."

Kaleo softly snickered, "Rimmers!"

Prez chuckled, "It was either that or C.S.P.R.D."

Taking the surfboard, Kaleo grinned, "You realize that makes you head Rimmer?"

Cracking up, Prez laughed, "You'll work out fine... mouth Rimmer!" Kaleo roared laughing.

Dressed in boardies and a T-shirt, Keith walked up smiling, "What did I miss?" and then handed Prez his clothes.

"Just the first of thousands of Rimmer jokes!" Prez chuckled, and then began getting dressed.

"Ah jeez," Keith snickered.

Kaleo said, "See ya later, dudes," then walked over to the water line with the surfboard. He stopped and gathered about two dozen kids around him then asked them all to begin considering where they might like to live and who they preferred to stay with.

Once Prez was dressed, he said, "Let's get our core Rimmers and go chat with Uncle Iokii."

"Oh jeez!" Keith laughed, "Core Rimmers?"

Prez smiled, "You, me, Mike, Derrick, Drew and Corey." While they walked together towards Drew and Corey, Prez said, "I'm gonna be the division leader, but you're my second in command, Keith."

"I know, baby," Keith smiled.

"Whenever I'm not around, you act in my place," Prez relayed. "Also, Kaleo is now our communications officer."

"Kewl," Keith nodded, "He's an excellent choice."

"He's already asking all the other kids where they want to live and with who."

"Whom," Keith corrected and grinned.

"Whatever!" Prez giggled, and waved Drew and Corey out of the water. They came running over and Prez said, "You guys are part of my core team. Get dressed and let's talk with Uncle Iokii."

Wandering further up the beach, Drew hummed thoughtfully and asked Corey, "Do you remember where we left our clothes?"

Shaking his head, Corey giggled, "I can't even really remember what I was wearing!"

Seeing Mike and Derrick riding a wave back to shore, Keith waved and hollered, "Come on! Stuff to do!"

Soon everyone was gathered and Prez began; "I'm head Rimmer and all you guys are my core Rimmers. Kaleo's communications officer and is therefore mouth Rimmer!" Everyone began blushing and giggling. Prez continued, "Whenever there's a decision to be made, I want as many opinions from all you guys as possible. Since I'm ultimately responsible and there's only six of us, decisions may not always be by democratic vote, but I'll always try to explain why I've chosen to do something a certain way." Glancing around, Prez asked, "Every one kewl?" and his team nodded. "Our first decision is where on Oahu to have our main base, and if we can have multiple bases, where they should be." Receiving multiple positive replies, Prez said, "Let's go then."

Iokau Ai'la'ausd, also known as Uncle Iokii by all the kids, was one of the nicest adult men on Oahu. He was also one of the wealthiest on all of the islands. A native Hawaiian, Iokau was forty-seven years-old and had long black hair with streaks of gray running from his temples back down his pony-tail. He treated almost everyone with the same kindness and respect, unless you got on his bad side; in which case he would completely ignore that individual as if he or she didn't exist.

Uncle Iokii was near the other adults when Prez and the guys approached. Prez asked, "Can we take a walk and have a chat, Uncle Iokii?"

"Of course," Iokau smiled. "I would always make time for my favorite boys." Turning to the other adults Iokau said, "Excuse us please."

As they started to walk, Prez relayed, "Joel said we needed to talk with you about setting up our new division."

"Yes," Iokau began, "You boys might remember, I was accused of doing bad things not too long ago."

Keith nodded, "Yep, my dad's firm represented you, and all the charges were dropped."

"We all knew it was nothin' but lies," Mike assured.

"It was, yes," Iokau said. "What you don't know is why that happened. I learned of the problems within our government, and tried my best to stop them. But, I was a single voice against many. Over the years, it cost me land and money.

"Since last night, much of my land has been restored to me by the King, with Clan Short assistance. I would donate some of my land to the Clan, as a way of expressing my thanks. The land south of the Kilauea Wildlife Preserve, where the luau was last night, is yours. On Oahu, much of the land north of Ewa Beach Park, from Fort Weaver Road northeast to Iroquois Avenue and bordered by North Road is yours. Also, on Oahu for your use is the land from Essex Road on the east, to Coral Sea Road on the west, and from Eisenhower Road north to San Juacinto Street. The United States Government has been leasing from me the land where Marine Corps Base Hawaii stands. You may use the land on the northern end of that peninsula as it is virtually unoccupied."

The boys' heads were reeling, but Iokau continued; "On the east side of Maui, the land east of Highway 360 to the sea and north of Waikoloa Road to the Waianapanapa Park border is yours. On Hawaii's northeast side, there is approximately two square miles of unused land. It is northwest of Paauhau Park. Kia Manu Road runs through the area.

"I have already arranged to sign over all the stated lands to Clan Short in perpetuity and will sign the legal documents first thing Monday morning."

As he smiled at the amazed looks on the boy's faces, Iokau decided it was time to put the icing on the cake. "Oh, I almost forgot... your parent's houses are paid off too. Call it an 'Aloha Gift' from the owner of the land they were built on."

Prez overflowed, "Uncle Iokii, you are an extremely generous and great man. How can we ever thank you enough?" and offered his hand.

Firmly shaking Preston's hand, Iokau stated simply, "Care for and help the children that need it most. Teach them to care for and help each other."

Keith added, "I think the new Clan division should talk with the Royals and have a street named after you."

"YEAH!" Mike, Derrick, Drew and Corey cheered.

Wiping away a happy tear, Iokau smiled, "I have always loved children, but never had any of my own. Now I feel I've done something that will far outlive me and provide for future generations."

"You've got almost a hundred kids you can call your own now," Derrick reminded, and gave Iokau a firm hug.

After giving Iokau another hug, Drew nodded and smiled, "Please visit us as often as you can."

"We'd love to see you," Corey assured, and gave him a third hug.

Iokau nodded and smiled, "I promise to stop by. If there is ever any way I can help, please let me know. Now, go back to your new Clan and share the good news."

The boys ran back to where the rest of their Clan was playing on the sand and in the surf. On the way, Prez told Keith, "Get all our parents to join us down by the water. Don't tell them what Uncle Iokii said."

Keith laughed, "Just to watch their mouths fall open, but for once, we won't hear a word!"

"The rest of you dudes, gather our new Clan," Prez said. Four positive replies gushed forth. "I'll get Joel and our mainland brothers," Prez chuckled.

In a matter of minutes, all the adults and kids were collected and anxiously waiting. Standing around and beside Prez were his core team, Joel, Kevin and all the others from Clan Short on the U.S. Mainland. Smiling as widely as he ever had in his life, Prez loudly announced; "You've all been told to think about where you'd like to live and friends you'd like to stay with; now I'll explain why. We just had a talk with Uncle Iokii. Clan Short Pacific Rim Division will have bases on four islands. On Hawaii, we'll have about two square miles of land. On Maui, we'll have another large lot of land. On Oahu, we'll have three more large lots of land; one in Ewa Beach for our base of operations and the other two for whatever purposes we decide. Finally, here on Kauai, we have the land south of the wildlife refuge, where we had the luau last night.

"Our goal is to make certain you all have the best possible living arrangements; no more than two to a bedroom, so no one will ever feel alone or cramped; you'll all have recreation facilities and easy access to beaches; and if there's been some hobby or special interest you have, let us know what you need, we'll do our very best to supply it. When I asked Uncle Iokii how we could ever repay his generosity, he only asked that we care for and help each other. We can always try our best to do that, can't we?" A roar of affirmations exploded from all the kids.

Keith leaned over to Prez and said, "Uncle Iokii's gone, baby."

Nodding, Prez waited for everyone to chill then said, "Being the generous and humble man he is, Uncle Iokii has left, but he has promised to visit us often. When we see him again, we're all gonna show our gratitude the best ways we can, won't we?" Everyone nodded and again agreed with Prez, albeit more softly.

When the sounds died down, Prez said, "Soon, more of our Clan brothers and sisters will be visiting us. We're gonna show them the paradise we've always dreamed of, aren't we?" Another enthusiastic cheer burst forth.

Mike chuckled, "You're more of a ham than I am!" and Prez playfully shoved him.

"I only have one more announcement," Prez began and watched the group of adults carefully. "Since all our lives are changing for the better, Uncle Iokii also wanted to make sure our parents could devote their skills and time to the Clan. Towards that end, all their mortgages are paid in full." As expected, eight mouths hung open in amazement. Prez laughed, "Now all you guys have eight real parents that care, and our parents have more kids than they can count!" All of the rescued kids laughed and surrounded their new surrogate parents.

Feeling a tug on his shirt sleeve, Prez turned and faced Joel.

Joel beamed, "You're a natural leader, Prez."

Prez shrugged, "I'm just doin' what I feel needs to be done."

"And you'll do great; I know it now even more. We've got to go real soon though. Is there anything else you need?"

Prez thought for only a moment then said, "You told me to contact the Endeavour after eleven. Exactly how am I supposed to do that and what should I say?"

"All that stuff you just told your clan, Unca Iokii already shared with me and the commander of the Endeavour," Joel smiled. "They know exactly what lands are put aside, down to the nearest centimeter. Everything you need will be provided by the Endeavor or by Clan Short."

Excitedly, Prez rambled, "We need buildings for them, we need schools, the kids need clothes..."

Joel interrupted, "You'll get all that and more. Trust us Prez; we've done this before."

Kevin handed Prez a Starfleet communicator and explained, "Just open this up, tell them who you are and let the Vulcans do their bit."

Joel nodded and smiled at his husband then looked up at Prez. "Soon after that, more Clan will be showing up. Anything you need, just ask and it's yours."

Prez sighed, "It just feels like so much and I really don't feel prepared."

Keith took hold of Prez and repeated, "You will never ever be alone, baby."

Derrick said, "You've got us too, bro," and took hold of Mike's hand.

"And Corey and me too," Drew reminded.

"We're the core Rimmers!" Corey giggled. The group around Joel heartily laughed; even I-Cheya huffed a few more chuckles.

Relieved, Prez finally smiled. "Don't be a stranger, Prince. As hectic and odd as it's been, we're really gonna miss all you guys."

"Prez, we've really gotta go, now," Joel said with a small smile.

Prez's face fell slightly.

"Don't worry, doofus!" Joel giggled, "In a few hours you'll be meeting most of the Clan. You'll either see me later today, or sometime over the next few days - I might be busy making Kevvy squeal!"

"Hey!" Kevin protested as he blushed bright red.

"Oh, okay... Kevvy might be making me squeal!"

"Sa'ren!" Kevin groaned, "You're making it worse!"

"I know... but you still love me, right?"

"Grrrr..." Kevin managed through his giggles.

Joel kissed Prez on the cheek before slipping over to where I-Cheya, Brant, Kyle, Tyler, Kai and the two Lions were. "See ya soon, guys!"

They vanished.

Around Galli, Levi, Kevin, the two Cheetahs, Aphrodite, Blackie, Artemus, and Matthew all waved... and folded away.

Prez turned to Keith with a blank, uncertain expression on his face. Keith grinned, "I've always been proud of you, Prez, since before we became partners; even more so now. You know that, right?"

Nodding, Prez sighed, "It's just... been a busy day. It's not even been a full day. First Bruce then Galli, Vulcans, a Sehlat, a silver wolf-collie... hearing my parent's voices for the first time in over two years. Until yesterday, we've seen two or three Vulcans; now there's six of 'em keeping us safe. I can only wonder what they're protecting us from?"

"You know the answer to that already," Derrick said.

Mike nodded and reminded, "From the same kinda dirt-bags that would hurt any of those kids playing over there."

"It's a good thing I can handle change pretty easily," Prez smirked.

Bruce meekly offered, "You guys found me, got me food... and kept me with you this whole time. Nobody else woulda done what you guys done."

Pointing out at the bay, Drew said, "Look at them, Prez. There's four dudes out there surfen' that've never done it before." Pointing at the beach, Drew smiled, "Me and Corey showed those others how to build a sand castle."

"Most've 'em have never done that, or even knew what a sand castle was," Corey added.

Derrick nodded, "Stuff we've always done and just take for granted, they're clueless about."

Keith then suggested, "Until it's time to call the Endeavour, let's get to know some of them."

"Excellent idea!" Prez smiled, "I only know a little about ten of them."

"How about we split up," Mike offered, "There's more than eighty of them and only eight of us."

"You're including me?" Bruce squealed.

"Why not?" John wondered then explained, "Until we find your folks, what else can ya do?" Bruce shrugged and John snickered, "Come on, let's teach them how to make a real sand castle!" They then hurried down the beach to where another bunch of kids were playing.

Soon, the remaining couples had stripped their shirts off again and were out in the water, mingling amongst their new Clan. Drew and Corey waded out to another group of similar aged kids and began teaching them to body surf. Mike and Derrick joined some others that didn't even know how to swim and began teaching them. Kaleo had taken to surfing easily and was sharing one board with Tory who was having a more difficult time learning.

Keith and Prez mingled around learning about some of the kids and how they wound up needing to be rescued by the Clan. For a short time, Keith went in one direction to talk with Drew and Corey while Prez went in another to talk with Mike and Derrick. Prez also took the opportunity to talk with his core team members once more about how long Joel's team was on the islands; none of them were to mention how long Joel was around. Prez and Keith then shared what they had learned about the kids and came to the conclusion that at least half of their Clan was orphaned visitors from North America or Japan. Of the remainder, many were Hawaiian orphans, but some were abandoned and some were runaways. In every case, the kids were either abused by foster parents or by the orphanages that were supposed to care for them. They had no one to protect them.

Hours flew by until Prez realized it was ten of eleven. Sitting in the sand beside Keith, between the adults and some of the kids, Prez anxiously checked his watch. He looked at the small Starfleet communicator, taking note of the Starfleet symbol and the Clan Short emblem on the casing. He wondered what type of metal the casing was made of; it was too light to be steel, but too strong to be aluminum. Nervously looking at Keith, Prez wondered, "What should I say?"

Keith answered, "Just what Joel said, your name and that you're the leader of the new Clan Short Pacific Rim Division."

"My stomach's twisted into a big knot!" Prez smirked. "What if they ask what I want? Jeez, any question at all is gonna make me wanna puke!"

Wrapping an arm around his lover, Keith grinned, "Just remember they're Vulcans. No jokes, puns or innuendo. They won't laugh, but I prob'ly will!"

Rolling his eyes, Prez huffed, "Oh great!"

Checking his watch, Keith said, "I've got eleven o'clock."

Prez checked his watch and waited for the digital display to read 11:01 AM. He opened the communicator.

A female voice flatly said, "Starship Endeavor. T'Rel."

With as much confidence as he could muster, Prez said, "This is Preston O'Brian, leader of Clan Short Pacific Rim Division."

The Vulcan women said, "Your communication was expected Mister O'Brian. Prepare for transport."

Prez gulped and weakly asked, "Transport?"

"Aboard the Endeavour."

Softly whining, Prez stood and so did Keith. "There will be two of us," Prez said into the device.

"The identity of the second person?"

"Keith Hundser."

"Acknowledged."

Closing his eyes, Prez said, "We're ready."

"Standby."

Keith softly chuckled, "This is so rad!"

Keeping his eyes closed, Prez pocketed the communicator and whimpered then reached for Keith's hand.

With his eyes wide open, Keith watched as the beach before him faded. Then it seemed as if he were seeing gray walls beyond the beach where blue sky had been. The beach faded away and the gray walls began to have a tan color. They were then standing on the Endeavour's transporter pad. "Awesome!" Keith softly cheered, and then turned to his exceptionally pale boyfriend. "It's okay, Prez."

Prez opened his eyes, looked around and took a deep breath. A tall Vulcan man stood before them. "Welcome aboard," the man said, "I am Lieutenant Ra'Vesti."

Since Prez hadn't yet regained his ability to speak, Keith said, "It's our pleasure, Lieutenant. I'm Keith and this is Prez... Preston."

Ra'Vesti nodded and said, "Follow me."

Walking behind the Lieutenant and out of the transporter room, Prez never let go of Keith's hand. He looked around at the walls barren of any art and asked, "Why are we here, Lieutenant?"

"I will be assisting with the development of your facilities," Lieutenant Ra'Vesti answered.

"Thanks," Prez smiled, but then remembered what little he had learned about Vulcans in school and softly explained, "We've not had much exposure to Vulcans. Please pardon us if we seem to act... inappropriately."

The Lieutenant only nodded, but didn't say a word. He led Keith and Prez to another room then sat down at a console. After pressing a few buttons, an image of Kauai appeared on the display then zoomed into the north shore. South of the Kilauea Lighthouse and Wildlife Preserve, the perimeter of their new facility flashed.

"It's huge!" Prez gasped.

"And includes Secret Beach, where we met everyone yesterday," Keith smiled.

Lieutenant Ra'Vesti said, "The Endeavour is prepared to provide structures for all expected needs. Is there anything specific you would like added?"

"We haven't been told what to expect really," Prez stammered.

Keith nodded and offered, "We don't even know what to ask for."

"If you will allow," Lieutenant Ra'Vesti said, "I will program our replicators to reproduce all structures and additional facilities similar to Clan Short Headquarters Orlando? I will then organize all structures for all Pacific Rim Division bases."

Prez said, "We'd like our main headquarters located on Oahu, in Ewa Beach."

"The land bordered by North Road and Fort Weaver Road," Keith recalled.

Lieutenant Ra'Vesti entered more commands and an image of Oahu appeared on the display then zoomed in closer to the south side of the island. He pointed at the flashing perimeter confirming; "This will be Pacific Rim Division headquarters?"

Prez and Keith answered, "Yes."

Moving to the west, Lieutenant Ra'Vesti then suggested; "This would be an adequate area for incoming children requiring special care or quarantine due to disease. It is near an airfield."

After briefly checking with Keith, Prez then said, "Agreed. Thank you, Lieutenant."

"Are there any other considerations?" Lieutenant Ra'Vesti asked.

"So we know what to expect," Prez began, "could you show us what the living quarters will look like?"

Soon, images of the exterior of a building came up on the display. It was two stories and 'L' shaped. Virtual reality images took them in a door and then to the first dorm room. The floor was carpeted dark green, the walls were painted with two tones of blue, darker blue on the bottom third and light sky blue on the top. The room appeared spacious with two beds, two closets, two dressers, two desks and chairs. All-in-all, it seemed bigger than the room Prez and Keith shared and very comfortable.

Satisfied, Prez then explained, "We just want these kids to be as happy as possible. Sure they need medical facilities and schools, and all the usual required stuff, but we'd like them to feel at home."

"We're musicians," Keith began, "every site needs to have access to a variety of recreational activities; soccer fields, basketball and tennis courts, musical instruments, art and painting supplies, video games, TV's and stereos."

"These kids don't have the simplest things; not even clothes, shoes or sneakers," Prez said. "They need everything."

Lieutenant Ra'Vesti nodded and continued entering commands for another minute or two. He then stood and turned to face Prez and Keith asking, "Scanning of the children is in progress. Clothing will be provided for all. Your additional necessities have been noted and will be made available. Will there be anything else you require?"

Prez wondered, "How long will this take?"

Keith added, "There are more than eighty kids down on the beach. They've gotta be getting hungry by now."

"Within six Terran hours all facilities will be ready for utilization," Lieutenant Ra'Vesti said. "There are eighty-seven rescued plus fourteen family and friends, not including you. We will provide sufficient food and beverages for your Clan, gentlemen."

Prez and Keith smiled at each other. Six bases on four islands in six hours was nothing less than amazing to them. Facing Ra'Vesti again, Prez said, "The only other thing I can think of asking is for Clan Short to be notified of our progress and location."

"We're looking forward to meeting them," Keith smiled.

"I will contact Clan Short Headquarters," Ra'Vesti assured.

Standing up straight and attempting to act formally in boardies and a T-shirt, Prez said. "Thank you, Lieutenant, you've been very helpful. I'll certainly make mention of this to my superiors in Clan Short."

"Follow me to the transporter room," Lieutenant Ra'Vesti said, and led the way with Keith and Prez trailing behind.

Frowning, Prez softly told Keith, "I hate this part."

Squeezing his partner's hand, Keith chuckled, "It's fun! Open your eyes this time and watch!"

Prez sighed, "If only I didn't know the basics of how I was being transported."

Keith leaned closer and whispered, "I'll check all your molecules later tonight." Wide-eyed, Prez giggled happily.

While Prez and Keith stepped onto the transporter pads, Lieutenant Ra'Vesti took position behind the control console. Holding up his hand in the familiar Vulcan method, Lieutenant Ra'Vesti said, "Peace and long life to you Preston O'Brian and Keith Hundser."

Keith and Prez easily returned the gesture saying, "Live long and prosper, Lieutenant." Then Prez closed his eyes and held his breath. Seeing an easy opportunity, Keith reached over and tickled Prez just before the transporter beam activated. Frantically brushing Keith's hand away, Prez opened his eyes and laughed. Keith cracked up laughing, thankful that he now had a ticklish boyfriend.

Arriving back on Anahola beach, Prez squinted and mooed then softly counted down. Hysterical, Keith didn't wait for 'three' and took off running down the beach and into the water. While they chased each other into and out of the surf, Derrick and Mike came over.

Mike shouted, "Where the hell did you go?"

Ducking away from Prez, Keith laughed, "Aboard the Endeavor."

"You know what this means?" Derrick queried.

"No, what?" Keith giggled.

Derrick snickered, "Prez was flying!"

Coming to an abrupt halt and realizing the truth, Prez hollered, "OH MY GOD!" Keith, Derrick and Mike roared laughing then raced away. Looking down and kicking at the water, Prez realized that he was so concerned about the transporter beam; he hadn't even considered flying in a spacecraft in orbit. When he looked up again, many of his new Clan was hurrying up the beach to where tables of food now stood. Wondering what kinds of foods had been provided, Prez hurried over.

Noticing Prez only a few yards away at the first of four tables, Keith loudly chuckled, "Check it out, Prez. It's like a buffet restaurant at the beach! There's enough food here for a small army!"

Prez smiled, "Well, we are a small army now." On the table before him were hamburgers, cheeseburgers, hot dogs and assorted condiments. The next table over were sandwiches of every type from peanut butter and jelly on white bread, to heroes with meats on rolls. The third table had large bowls of salad, various fruits and cookies by the score. The last table had milk, sodas and water on top with more large buckets of drinks below it. The Endeavor had even provided trays, paper plates, plastic utensils, napkins and large trash cans.

Jim Hundser walked over and asked, "Why don't you invite our Vulcan security team to join us?"

Prez nodded and smiled, "Good idea!" then wondered, "Where are mom and the other women?"

"The little ones have been asking for bathroom trips back to the hotel," Jim Hundser grinned.

Prez giggled and scanned the dunes until he found Lieutenant Vorik. "Let me invite the Vulcans," Prez said. "I'll be right back." He then hurried over to Lieutenant Vorik, politely asking him and his team to join them for lunch.

Lieutenant Vorik replied, "Our assignment is security."

"Come on," Prez grinned, "you guys must be hungry. At least allow one at a time to come over and join us. Security won't be drastically affected that way."

"Very well," Lieutenant Vorik nodded, "I will inform my personnel."

Blankly staring at the man, Prez then softly asked, "Are we that different? I mean, our two races have known each other for eighty years, according to our school history books. We humans like to get to know each other, at least a little bit. I understand that you're working, but take a break, relax a little."

"Our races are not 'that different', as you say," Lieutenant Vorik admitted. He then explained, "Vulcans are always content. Our race does not understand human emotions, or how they drive individuals. For example; it would be similar to you understanding the language and culture of ancient Egypt. What has occurred here and at other locations on Earth would never happen on Vulcan. It is alien to us."

"It's completely despicable to me too," Prez shared. "Most humans aren't like the ones responsible for all these kids. Did you know that I'm an orphan like most of these kids?"

"I did not."

"I am. The Hundserts are my foster family. They've helped me in so many ways since my parents died; I can't begin to list them all. They treat me the same as any member of their family, so much so that I treat them like my family. It's more than that though. Keith and I have fallen in love. We're boyfriends, partners for life... what's the Vulcan word?"

"T'hy'la"

"Yeah, that's it; T'hy'la. Now you know something more about me and I know more about you and your culture. For me, it makes you more than just a security officer. It makes you an individual, a person; not just a name and a job." Pausing, Prez said, "Anyway, our families would enjoy getting to know each of you. Please join us for lunch."

Lieutenant Vorik nodded and after a brief pause said, "Thank you, Preston O'Brian. It is... my pleasure to know you."

Prez giggled, "Same here. I'll see ya later, okay?"

"Affirmative."

As Prez walked back to the tables for lunch he thought; for a Vulcan, that was almost emotional, and began softly snickering.

Preparing himself a tray with a burger, a hot dog, salad, an apple and two sodas, Prez went over to where the rest of the core Rimmers were sitting with Bruce, John, Kaleo, Jonah, Reyes and Tory.

Keith was telling them about their trip to the Endeavour, and now that Prez was with him, he said, "We asked to see what our dormitory rooms would look like. It was great, like a fly-by of an 'L' shaped, two story building. Then the view moved to ground level and we went inside."

"How big was it," Tory mumbled through his sandwich. Swallowing, he asked, "Like, how many rooms per building."

Keith scowled, "I'm not sure."

Washing down a mouthful of food, Prez said, "There was text on the bottom of the screen, really small, but it said, estimated one hundred rooms per building, so fifty rooms per floor."

"The bedrooms were really large," Keith continued. "Everybody gets their own bed, dresser, closet, desk and chair."

"There are even little refrigerators in each room," Prez added.

Mike figured, "Since there are eighty-seven kids, everyone could fit into one building."

"Or if there are two buildings," Derrick offered, "we could do dudes in one building, girls in another?"

Prez shrugged, "What do you dudes think; co-ed dorms or split the sexes?"

Kaleo said, "I'm gay so it don't make much difference to me."

Tory said, "Leaning towards gay," he then giggled, "but just about everything gives me a woody lately; girls, guys, a strong breeze!" Corey laughed and Drew almost gagged on his food.

Corey quickly patted his back, then Drew giggled, "I know that feeling too well!"

Everyone in the group began laughing except little Bruce. "What's a woody?" he shyly smiled.

John snickered, "Remember Keith and Prez this morning?" Bruce nodded. John explained, "Keith had a woody, a boner, a stiffy..."

"That's enough, John!" Keith loudly laughed.

"Okay!" John howled. He then said, "Prez had a semi... not quite hard, but not soft either, prob'ly because he was mad at Kyle." Prez nodded and blushed.

Scowling thoughtfully, Bruce wondered, "Soft I get; hard... okay; but why do they change?"

John hummed thoughtfully then frowned, "That's not so easy to answer," and glanced at his older brothers.

From behind where Prez was sitting in the circle of boys, a new voice called, "Director Preston O'Brian?"

"Yes," Prez laughed, as he turned his head to see who was calling him so formally. He saw an older teen dressed in highly polished combat boots, blue trousers with gold braids down the side of each leg, a white shirt with a black bow tie, and all topped off with a Black Beret. Beside him were another teen girl and a younger boy similarly dressed.

Most disconcerting, the three had side arms. And behind them were a small armada of gorillas, G-Cats and human kids, also heavily armed.

Putting his tray down in the sand, Prez then hurried to his feet. Noticing the silver Eagle on the teen boy's shoulder, Prez knew he was a Colonel. Unable to hide the concern on his face, or in his voice, Prez asked, "How can I help you, Colonel?"

The teen smiled as all three of them snapped to attention and saluted. "My name is Donnie Williams. I will be heading up the temporary security detail for this Clan Division. With me are Lt. Colonel Emily Larson, my second in command, and Second Lieutenant Nathan Hayes, who will temporarily head up your Intel division, if that is alright with you, Sir." Once he was finished speaking, the three of them dropped their salutes, and went perfectly into a parade rest stature.

Holding out his hand to the superior officer, Prez said, "Nice to meet you, Donnie." They shook hands and Donnie returned to parade rest. Moving on to Emily and then Nathan, Prez greeted them in the same way, as is his usual manner. He then said, "I can only defer to your choice for our intelligence division... but I didn't really know we needed an intelligence division either."

Once the introductions were done, Donnie again spoke, and he gestured towards the group behind Preston. "Are these all of the Clan members, or are their more elsewhere? I also need to know who the leadership of the division are, so that I may assign personal security for them."

"All these kids around the beach are Clan. The adults are our parents, except for the Vulcans, of course." Prez smiled and spun around. "Core Rimmers and Kaleo, come on over here, dudes."

Donnie and Nathan helplessly snickered, however Emily did not.

Prez introduced Keith as his partner and second in command. He then introduced Mike and Derrick as his best friends and explained, "They're advisers right now. I haven't decided what jobs to give them." Prez introduced Drew as his foster brother and Corey as Drew's boyfriend, causing them both to blush while they shook hands with Donnie, Emily and Nathan. Finally, Prez introduced Kaleo. While Kaleo greeted the three officers, Prez explained, "He's one of the rescued kids, but has already proven himself to be a good communications officer. All the kids listen to him."

Donnie nodded and smiled. "The ones who prove themselves early are always the best. Now, I brought one hundred of my guys here, to start, however, General Casey will be here later on, and will decide on what kind of staffing to do on a permanent basis." He turned and made some hand motions to the people behind him. At once, many of them jogged off into different directions, while a small group of humans and hybrids walked up to the main group.

"For right now, my guys will just set up a perimeter, and escort anyone who needs to leave it. Also, until our replacements come, I think it would be prudent for at least one member of the team to be with each of the 'Core Rimmers', as you called them, at all times. If you have any questions, please feel free to ask. And also, unless you really want to," Donnie grinned, "generally we try not to be too formal if we don't have to be."

"Okay," Prez smiled, "start by calling me Prez. If I hear Director O'Brian or any variation of it, I'm gonna immediately assume something's very wrong. As for individual security..."

"PRESTON!" Jennifer Hundser shrieked. Involuntarily, Prez's shoulders tightened up around his ears.

Looking over, Prez saw his foster mom storming down the beach towards him, with a gorilla and an eleven-year-old boy. Prez rolled his eyes and sighed, "As I was going to say, personal security might be a problem."

Without another word, Donnie stepped around Prez, and took a few steps until he was right in front of Mrs. Hundser, making very sure that he was not threatening in any way. "Mrs. Hundser, I'm Colonel Donnie Williams of the Clan Short Special Forces Division, and the current commander of the security detail attached to Clan Short Pacific Rim Division. I understand your hesitancy to have personal security; however, it is justified and needed. If you would prefer, I can assign others to your detail. I must apologize, as I did not have the information as to gender and age of all parties involved."

Stopping in front of the boy blocking her path, Jennifer Hundser said, "Hello Donnie," and then loudly asked, "How is a gorilla and a little boy, both armed to the teeth, supposed to make me feel safe?"

Shaking his head, Keith giggled insanely.

"Oh man!" Drew gasped, "We're all in trouble now!"

It was actually Emily who stepped forward. "Ma'am, I understand your hesitancy to allow and accept personal security, however, please let me explain something. One week ago, our family was attacked, and more than sixty brothers and sisters of mine were killed. Had they had security, things would have been different. I know this is not something a mother wants to hear, but with your children becoming members of the Clan, there are many people who would like to hurt them. Our job is to make sure that does not happen." She paused for a second to take a breath, then pushed forward. "Last week Donnie and I accepted the placement of two young boys as our children. As a mother, I understand that you want to be the one to protect your children, however, think about this. What would be a better way to hurt the Clan members here than to take away their mother? If you were hurt, it would devastate how many kids that have never had a mother before they met you?" She knew she could go on, but she had made her point.

Hearing Emily's explanation, Jennifer Hundser nodded and sighed. Lowering her voice and giving her attention to both Donnie and Emily, she explained her feelings. "I could almost begin to accept security for my boys and even for myself, however, look at these two!" Waving her arms at them she said, "A gorilla and a little boy? And they're carrying small cannons! Can we at least compromise and have one female for myself and the other three mothers down the beach?"

Emily grinned and looked over at Donnie. "I do apologize for that. Colonel Williams never consulted me on the assignments for personal security. Had he done so, I can guarantee that such an oversight would NOT have happened.

"If it would be acceptable to you, Ma'am, I would personally like to lead your security detail, until such time as a replacement can be found. I can guarantee that while General Casey may be a male, he would not over look such details."

"Thank you, Emily. And please, since we're going to be spending time together, call me Jennifer. If I could ask one additional small favor?"

"Yes, of course you may ask. I may not be able to comply, however."

Understanding, Jennifer nodded and begged, "Not a gorilla, please!"

Keith, Mike, Derrick and Prez began snapping their fingers and singing: "We've got a gorilla for sale, Magilla Gorilla for sale. Won't you buy him, Take him home and try him, Gorilla for sale. Don't you want a little gorilla you can call your own, A gorilla who'll be with ya when you're all alone?"

Jennifer Hundser shot flames from her eyes at all four, causing them to turn away and snicker.

Emily smiled and nodded understandingly. She seemed to get very much less formal and started to speak as a normal person again. "I understand completely; they can be a bit much at first, however, they're very good at what they do. I think it would be best to have at least one of the enhanced troops to back me up, so how about..." she looked around for a few seconds before she spotted someone that would work. "Lt. Tanya Casey!" She called out, and a girl of about thirteen jogged over and saluted. "Jennifer here would prefer two females to be her personal security. Please inform your CO, that I am assigning you to this duty."

"Of course, Colonel. I will be back in a few moments." With another salute, the girl turned and jogged away.

Turning to Nathan, Emily then said, "Can you please make the other changes that are needed? The mothers need to have female security, and the fathers should have males that are somewhat older. But as I said, make sure at least one is enhanced."

"Got it." The preteen boy said, but other than that did nothing.

Donnie took this opportunity to try and salvage some of his dignity, by addressing the group, trying to ignore the song they had sung. "If any of you have questions, please feel free to ask."

While Keith, Mike and Derrick snickered, Prez smiled, "We're good for now, I think, Donnie."

Quickly moving forward through the group, John asked, "Can I have a gorilla?"

Prez giggled, "What do ya say, Donnie? John's another foster brother, but a little too young to be a Core Rimmer."

Donnie grinned and tried not to laugh at the statement, but then almost lost it when he had a thought. "Sure, but only if you teach him to surf!"

"Sure!" John excitedly answered. "I can surf... a little bit."

Keith reminded, "A gorilla's gonna need a much bigger board, bro."

Derrick scanned the nearest great ape and estimated; "About fifteen feet long, four feet wide and a foot thick."

Looking up at Prez, Bruce whined, "Can I have a gorilla too?"

"Donnie, this is Bruce," Prez smiled, "John, Drew and Corey rescued him from Ewa beach yesterday. We're still looking for his parents, so we've kept him with us."

Donnie turned to the assembled gorillas along the dune and said in a loud, clear voice, "Okay. You heard the little guys. Which of you wants to belong to which boy?"

The gorillas all turned their eyes in the direction of Bruce and John and looked down. Then they began to eyeball the two boys, causing them to feel very small and vulnerable. They started grinning and baring their teeth.

To John and Bruce, the gorillas looked very angry and they both unconsciously stepped back. John gasped, "Err... umm..."

A pair of young Silver-backs stepped forward and the older of the two began to speak. "Me and my little bro always wanted a boy of our own. We'll take 'em!"

"They speak?" Bruce and John chorused. Glancing at each other, wide grins spread across their faces.

"How totally kewl is that!" John loudly giggled. The next thing John knew he was being swept up by the older, larger Silver-back. Wide-eyed, John laughed; "Who-o-oo!"

Busy laughing at John, Bruce didn't notice the younger Silver-back until a massive arm wrapped around and picked him up. "AHHH-HA-HA-HA-HA-HA-HA-HAAA!"

"Of course, we speak," the older gorilla grinned. "You don't think that those dumb cats get to talk and us hugely intelligent apes don't, do you?"

Turning back to the remaining gorillas, Donnie's smile turned upside-down and he leaned to his right slightly. Seeing a duffel bag mysteriously moving and then a ferret scurrying out, Donnie scowled and shouted, "YOU THERE! HALT!" The ferret spun around, stood upright and pointed at himself, looking around as if it might've been anyone else. Shaking his head sadly, Donnie softly grumbled, "Sonofabitch! Why me?"

"Cos you led us to SHINYs!" the ferret giggled, then sped off and dove into the bushes. The mat of greenery seemed to tremble as if there were many small creatures hidden within it.

Donnie tapped his communicator. "Daileass. How many of the ferrets are in Hawaii, and how did they get here?"

"Well... all of them," Daileass giggled. "Dave thought it would be a nice holiday for his flock. As for how? I sent them. The base is peaceful and quiet right now. Isn't that nice?"

"You bastard," Donnie muttered. Barely ten yards away, Donnie saw High Priest Dave's head pop up from the bush and grin at him.

From the bushes, the group of boys could hear what they believed were sounds as if a religious service were going on followed by high pitched singing. "Onward, Shiny soldiers, marching as to war, With the Shiny Warrior going on before. Dave, the Shiny Master, leads against the foe; Forward into battle see His Shinys go! Onward, Shiny soldiers, marching as to war, With the Shiny Warrior going on before. At the sign of triumph, Hater's host doth flee; On then, Shiny soldiers, on to victory! Dull's foundations quiver at our Shiny praise; Ferrets, lift your voices, high your Shinys raise. Onward then, ye Ferrets, join our happy throng, Blend with ours your voices in this Shiny song. Glory, laud, and honor unto Dave our King, This through countless ages men and Ferrets sing."

A mass of fur broke from the bushes and departed in all directions, muttering comments about needing to find shinys. One paused at the spit-shined boots of one of the gorillas, entranced by the shiny surface, then slowly looked up ... and up ... and up.

The gorilla glared down at him. "No," he said.

Rolling his eyes and slouching, Donnie then turned to Prez and snapped to attention saying; "Director O'Brian?"

"Uh oh!" Prez grunted. Closing his eyes and sighing, Prez opened his eyes again and said, "We have a problem, don't we, Colonel?"

Chapter 3

Anahola Beach, Kauai

Saturday October 30, 2004 12:35 PM

From further up the north end of the beach, a new voice shouted; "WHAT THE FUCK? DAVE! Get your ass over here and bring your entire flock!" Not getting the response he wanted, as the Ferrets kept running, the boy quickly dug into his pants pocket and pulled out a small pouch labeled 'Emergency Ferret Action Kit'. He pulled out a small thing that looked like nothing more than a ball point pen. He quickly pulled the top off of it and slapped the end of it, setting off a small explosive charge that propelled a tiny object high in the air. When it hit twenty-five feet in the air, it exploded in a very bright ball. All the Ferrets skidded to a stop and gazed at the shiny ball hanging in the air.

"NOW! Get your asses over here, or I'll have Daileass transport your Shiny Vault away!" Suddenly, every Ferret around turned and started sprinting towards him.

Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike all spun towards the unknown voice. "Who is that?" Prez exclaimed.

Donnie turned towards the group and softly said, "That would be General Adam Casey, the head of the UNIT; also known as the Clan Short Special Forces, with the rest of his family.

Looking over, everyone saw the group that was rapidly approaching them; it was led by a boy that was their age, with long straight black hair, and slate gray eyes. He was wearing a dress uniform, with many medals and ribbons on it. Next to him was a slightly younger looking boy with long blond hair, and blue eyes. He was not wearing a uniform, but rather, a normal pair of jeans and a light button down shirt. Prez looked at Nathan quickly, then back to the blond. He knew they had to be brothers, as they looked identical except for the new one was older.

Behind them was an oriental boy about twelve wearing a simple oriental robe. The two swords that he wore at his left side most certainly seemed out of place; however, the way he wore them made it clear that they were not out of place on him. With him were five hooded figures with long gray snouts sticking out of the hoods.

Walking next to the oriental kid was another kid with brightly colored red hair, styled in a short spiky fashion wearing a pair of mirrored sunglasses. He was tall and lanky, and had a definite cocky grin on his face. Behind them came a couple of kids that were John's age, one Hispanic and the other was another blond, but this one with obvious Russian features.

Behind the two younger kids, was a woman with sandy blond hair, who was obviously Nathan's mother, and a man being pushed in a wheelchair by the biggest cat person they had ever seen. Tagging along beside the G-Cat was another small ten year old boy. Flanking that group were three triplets that again had to be brothers of Nathan, as they were obviously identical to him, save for their age.

Adam walked right up to Prez and held out his hand. "I assume your Preston O'Brian?" Prez nodded and shook Adam's hand. Adam grinned. "Welcome to the Clan. Uhh.... would you excuse me one second?"

Without waiting for an answer, Adam turned and was faced with all seventy-four ferrets, led by their leader, High Priest Dave; all of them trying to look extremely innocent. "Okay," Adam loudly said, making sure they all heard him. "Here's the rules. You may NOT steal any shinys from the Shiny Haters for at least twenty-four hours. You may however, feel free to take any and all shinys you find out there," he said, and pointed towards the ocean. "If you dive to the floor of the bay, you might find little oysters." Adopting a reverent voice in a much lower tone and volume, Adam instructed, "Inside those oysters are pearls; bright shiny pearls, that can be made into adornments for your belts and hats. However, I must warn you, the oysters should be treated properly, as they are the ones who create such shinys for you to find. Treat them well and they will make more for you."

Adam knew he had their attention simply because almost all their eyes had glazed over, just thinking about pearls. Before he said anything else, the entire flock turned and started to run away, rambling excitedly. Adam's voice cut them off again. "SPIKE!" Adam bellowed, and one of the younger ferrets with spiky fur stopped dead in his tracks and looked back at Adam. Puppies were lodging protests that the ferret was able to make such sad eyes. Adam ordered, "Give him back his guitar pick!"

Mike's right hand dug into his pocket. He softly grumbled, "Dammit!"

"But... but... he has not taken the pledge!" The young ferret whined.

"He is a member of the Clan," Adam reminded. "What have we said about Clan members?"

The boy almost sounded like he was going to cry as he repeated in a small voice, "We can't steal their shinys unless they have been in the Clan for more than a week."

"Right," Adam droned. "So why?" Adam started to ask, but the young ferret quickly ran up to Adam and dropped to his knees.

"But... but... it's so... SHINY! It begged me to liberate it from the dull one. How could I live with my faith had I not done as the shiny had asked?"

The blond haired boy that was next to Adam spoke up in a quiet voice. "I understand. But how would the shiny feel if you took it from someone who would become a shiny lover, and perhaps be able to create wonderful music in the name of shininess, but now he can't because his shiny guitar pick was stolen. Don't you think that would make the shiny sad?"

The kid looked horrified then ran over to Mike, upending a small bag he had tied to his waist. He dropped to his knees and rifled through all the different baubles that fell to the sand. He found the guitar pick and carefully cleaned it off before offering to Mike while still on his knees. "Please mister; can you make shiny music with this?"

"I can now," Mike smiled at the thieving little ferret. Bending down and retrieving his pick, Mike then asked, "Did you know that shiny guitar picks can only make shiny music for a little while before they wear out?" The ferret seemed to gasp in horror and shook his head. "It's true; the music gets less shiny over time. When this one wears out, I'll give it to you, only if you use it as a shiny adornment that I can see. That way, I'll know it's shininess has not been completely used up and worn out. Every now and then you'll get a used shiny pick, then I'll get a new shiny pick to make shiny music with until it wears out. Then you'll get another, and another; soon you'll be wearing so many shiny picks that people will come from far and wide to see your shiny adornments."

"Oh! Thank you mister!" Spike squealed in delight. Looking between Mike and Adam, Spike asked, "Uhh... can I go look for other shinys now?" Adam nodded his head and the little boy was off like a shot. Adam then turned to the group and grinned, "Okay, crisis over. Now, where were we?"

Kaleo, Keith and Derrick were laughing hysterically over Mike and Spike. Prez snickered, "We were just getting to know each other, oh leader of the Shiny Tribe!" The rest of the Core Rimmers, Donnie and Nathan lost it and howled.

Adam couldn't help but laugh as well. "First off, I am not responsible for them; I just know how to make it so that they don't do anything too bad. Anyways, let me introduce you to what I call the Core of the UNIT. Just so you know, the UNIT actually stands for the Universal Next-Generation Infiltration Team."

He paused as he looked at the Blond next to him. "Okay, this guy here, is Logan. He's the head of the Intel team and also my partner. He's not physically enhanced like the rest of us, but he's smarter than anyone I have ever met. Next to him is Chang, my second in command, chief medical officer, and martial arts master."

Chang stepped forward and bowed. "It is an honor to meet all of you. As of yet, I have only heard some of what you have done, and I must say I am impressed with how well you have handled yourselves in very trying times." When he stood up straight again, the Rimmers could now see that he actually had very soft Klingon ridges on his forehead.

"Next to him is Will." Adam said pointing out the red head. "He is our Flight Team Commander. If it flies, he can fly it. Next to him is Jory, our demolitions and explosives expert, then Juan, our sniper and heavy weapons expert. Behind them are Logan's youngest clones;

Alvin, Simon, and Theodore. The big guy pushing the wheelchair, is Amur Khan, commanding officer of the Hybrids. The boy with his hand on top of Khan's is his partner; he doesn't like his real name, so everyone just calls him Runt. Finally we have Mom, Janet Hayes, and Dad, Joe Casey.

Mike looked at the seven foot six inch tiger hybrid and the small boy. "How does that work?" he asked.

"Oh, I don't let him get out of line," Runt said cheekily. "Isn't that right, Puss-Puss?"

Prez spent the next few minutes introducing the Core Rimmers to the core UNIT, then Adam spoke up again. "I can only imagine all the questions you guys have, so why don't we do this..." he looked over at his group. "Logan, Chang, Khan, Mom and Dad, why don't we stay here and answer all their questions. The rest of you guys, why not go mingle. Remember, we're on vacation here. Juan, that means you can't kill anyone unless I say it's okay. Jory, no blowing anything up unless Mom okays it. Will, no stealing the Vulcan's shuttles and going for joy rides. Okay?" Many laughed, but some grumbled as they all walked away.

Seeing no other place to sit, Adam sat down in the sand. Logan moved between his spread legs and made himself comfortable, leaning back against Adam.

Prez turned briefly and focused on Reyes, Tory and Jonah saying, "Guys, excuse us for a little while please? We're just gonna have a little pow-wow here." The three boys nodded understandingly and moved back down the beach to gather their lunch trays, and then began the trek back to the food tables.

"What about me, Prez?" Kaleo wondered.

Prez grinned, "You're being promoted to Core Rimmer. Since you were rescued by the Clan, there may be something you could ask or offer that none of the rest of us can." Turning back again, Prez sat cross-legged in the sand and noticed that Donnie had remained with the rest of Adam's group and was also sitting in the sand.

While his team sat down, Prez began, "Since we got out of school yesterday, everything's been so frenzied, let me try and explain our perspective a little. Me and my friends have rescued a few kids over the summer that were left at Ewa Beach, Oahu, where we all live. My foster mom, Keith and Drew's mother works in a hospital, helping all sorts of folks deal with lots of different kinds of traumas. So, with her assistance, we try and get the kids we found help. That's all we've ever done before. Now we've been made part of Clan Short, and let me just say, we're all a little overwhelmed. We know the basics of organizing groups and teams from our band and from school, but that's it. Clan Short has made the news! We haven't even made local news. We only know a very little bit of what the Clan has done. While we all think it's fantastic, we're not at that level."

"Not yet," Adam smiled understandingly. "Cory, Sean and Teri Short started the same way; a kid here, a kid there. The only difference I'm hearing is you guys worked within the system. You didn't know the system here was broke or how badly."

Keith nodded, "We do now though. So what do we do and how?"

"You continue rescuing kids," Adam stated simply. "You'll have plenty to do. And we'll teach you how to do it. It'll all be done so quick, you'll not even realize what you've learned until you've used those skills. Be yourselves; if you ever need help, just ask."

Prez reflected, "Like with the Vulcans; they already seemed to know what we needed before we arrived on the Endeavour." Adam only smiled and nodded. Prez laughed, "We're musicians! We're good, our parents and teachers consider us virtuosos, but we're not..."

Holding his hand up, Adam asked, "How did you get to be virtuosos?"

Mike replied, "We learned our instruments quickly and easily then began applying what we learned to the songs we want to play."

"So you learn fast, hear it and play it," Adam confirmed. "It takes dexterity to play any instrument, but you guys tore through that easily. What you hear, you remember; developing relative pitch along the way. What you guys consider easy, thousands want and struggle with. It's gonna be the same with the Clan. You were chosen for your good deeds. Again, it's something you don't consider all that special, but it is. If everyone tried as hard as you guys, the Clan wouldn't need to exist."

"So what do we need to do?" Prez bluntly asked.

"Let's get organized," Adam said. "Prez you're the division's director..."

"Head Rimmer," Corey softly giggled.

"Right," Adam chuckled. "Keith, your Prez's partner and conscience; that's a full time job. You can have another job, but a relatively easy one and only if you want it. The reason I say it like that is because Sean's the same for Cory, but Sean's also the Clan Short Historian. They're not here now because they're taking a much needed vacation. You'll likely be first on their list of things to do and people to meet Monday. So you'll need an historian; someone who'll know everything about every kid here. Who wants the job?"

Keith sighed, "From the sounds of it, I think I'd better not take it. Prez is most important to me and to our Clan."

Derrick said, "I'll take it then. I already know about half the kids and a good part of their stories."

Mike asked, "Can I back up Derrick?"

Keith snickered, "You already back up to Derrick, you dog!"

While everyone began chuckling and giggling, Mike shoved Keith then loudly laughed, "As historian, I mean!"

Adam chuckled and nodded, "Backups are always good to have. Kaleo, you've managed to impress Prez enough where he's made you communication's officer." Adam paused and smiled, "Mouth Rimmer, I think I heard."

Nodding, Kaleo softly sniggered, "Yep. In Hawaiian, Kaleo means 'the voice'."

Adam said, "So some kids in the orphanage looked up to you and listened to you. Now more are listening to you. In Clan Short, you'll be communicating with all our divisions. Orlando is six hours ahead of us here in Hawaii. It's already dinner time there. Des Moines is five hours ahead. Eight in the morning in Iowa is three in the morning here. Calls will be coming in at all hours of the day and night. You've got to have a team that can help you get that task done and have them approved by Prez." Pausing, Adam asked, "Are you okay with the job?"

"Definitely," Kaleo nodded. "I'll just have to ask around and get two more people for round-the-clock availability."

"Get three more," Adam grinned, "someone as a backup, remember?"

Slapping his own forehead, Kaleo laughed, "Doh! 'Course!"

Logan interjected, "We use a lot of technologies. One of the primary computers will be using Vulcan software. It's very secure and manages data logically, as you would expect however, it's not very user-friendly."

"Do you guys use computer systems?" Adam asked.

Prez nodded, "Windows PC's and an Xbox."

"We use Macs and PlayStations," Mike offered.

"I have a Linux system," Drew blushed. "None of the other dudes like it, but I think it's totally awesome. And when I get it configured to record the band, they'll all begin to love it."

"Sounds like we have a computer geek," Logan smiled, "that's totally kewl though. What else do you... umm... fool around with?"

"Corey!" Keith, Mike and Derrick shouted, then began snickering.

"Shut up!" Drew complained. Covering his mouth with one hand, Corey leaned against Drew and held him close with his other arm. "I can do a little programming," Drew admitted, "I've learned the shell, Pearl and C languages; enough to get stuff done."

Prez giggled, "Drew's our sound man; he connects all our PA gear, which includes about eight different kinds of cables. He makes our band sound good."

Logan smiled, "That's engineering, Drew. We'll get you up to speed on some of our technologies and you can become... Rimmer Engineer?"

"P.C. Rimmer!" Keith snickered.

"But he does more than PCs," Prez reminded, and then suggested, "How about Toy Rimmer?"

"I like it!" Keith cheered. "Toy Rimmer he is!"

"I'll back up Drew," Corey widely grinned.

Mike grinned, "Corey backs up to Drew. I knew it!"

Derrick snickered, "Corey backs up for Drew, ya mean."

"You guys are just being anal!" Drew grouched. On the verge of self-combustion, Drew softly warned, "Sleep with one eye open tonight, bros."

While Prez and Keith mooed, everyone else in both groups laughed.

Janet rolled her eyes and said, "I think I'll leave this serious intellectual conversation and go talk with the other adults."

"Okay, mom," Adam said.

Joe nodded, "We'll join you, Janet."

Adam waved, "See ya later, dad." Then Janet, Joe and Amur Khan started across the beach.

Looking up at Adam, Prez asked, "You guys seem to do more than security. What does the UNIT do exactly?"

"We kick ass, take names and cap fools," Juan shouted from the shoreline where he was bathing his tootsies in the water.

"You forgot making big booms!" Jory giggled from where Donna and Trist were burying him in the sand.

Smirking, Donnie shook his head. Adam smiled, "That's basically correct though. To give you more details, let me explain some of our history. First, you have to understand our terminology. My 'brothers' include Chang, Jory, Juan and Will. We were actually designed to be a single strike team, and the leaders of a much larger group. I was actually born fully human; however, when I was very young, I was taken and genetically altered to turn me into what we call a class A-10 engineered soldier. 'A' meaning I was enhanced after I was born, and the 10 means I am roughly ten times stronger, and faster, and heal ten times as quick as a normal person my age. You with me so far?"

Amazed, the wide-eyed Rimmers could only nod. Adam didn't seem that different from any of them, and it was difficult to believe he was genetically engineered, but they took him at his word.

Adam continued. "My brothers were engineered, and built from the genetic level up, then genetically aged so that they appear as old as they are now. From birth, they were all fully immersed in their field of study, and after taking some tests, all four of them have at least two doctorate degrees, as well as being enhanced. I managed to escape the military hospital that housed me, with Mom's help, and then we went and rescued the rest. Now, I know you guys have met some of the hybrids, but I guess no one ever explained what they were. They were another experiment at creating human animal hybrids, to work in the military. Obviously the experiment worked.

"So now, after we met up with the Clan in the Montana battle last week, we became the Clan Short Special Forces. Since then, we have rescued in the neighborhood of ten thousand kids, with about eight thousand living at the UNIT base in Utah."

"Eight thousand!" The Rimmers chorused.

"Oh man!" Prez groaned. "The Vulcans are providing dorms that house a hundred. Across six Hawaiian bases, that's only six hundred kids!"

Donnie said, "They showed you 'L' shaped buildings, right?" Prez nodded and Donnie explained, "Expect those buildings to be setup so there are four of them at each base, forming a quad. You'll be able to house two thousand four hundred, right off the bat."

"We'll get more when we need to," Logan added.

"Not to mention," Adam interjected, "we are housing the largest number of rescued kids. No one expects you guys to even come close to that."

Derrick mumbled, "How the hell do ya feed 'em all?"

Logan grinned as he picked up a data pad out of his pack. "This is how." He punched a few buttons on the thing, then looked back at Prez. "I had Daileass set this up as we were leaving. One thing you guys will never have to worry about is money." He then handed the pad to Prez. "This is what is currently in the Rimmers bank accounts."

Prez and Keith looked at the pad. Their jaws dropped and they passed the pad to Mike and Derrick. Mike looked at it and almost screamed; "FUCK ME!"

"We've got hundreds of millions U.S. dollars?" Prez wondered in disbelief.

Logan grinned, "Yup. Now understand that is the Rimmers personal account; that is not the Clan account that Cory will have setup for you when he gets here."

Drew smiled, "So now we can get that PA system we've been wanting?"

Donnie said, "You'll have six PA's, one at an auditorium at each base. You'll also have communications systems in each room and between houses and the dormitories."

"After everything Joel told us about Cory, we can't wait to meet him," Derrick giggled.

Mike grinned, "Sean too. What did he call them again? Blondie and... what was it?"

"Big Ted," Keith chortled. "I miss that little guy already, and he's only been gone four hours. Oops! Should we even mention that time stuff?"

"I think it's okay now," Prez said, smiling at his boyfriend. He looked at Adam, "Do you know when Joel and Kevin will be back to visit?"

All smiles vanished as that question was asked. Adam looked down for a brief moment to collect his thoughts. "What?" Prez asked, noticing the quick shift in emotions.

Adam explained; "Obviously you would not have known this, but this morning... well... Joel was attacked and hurt... badly."

"WHAT?" All the boys shouted.

"But I saw him take on the Prime Minister! Where were his guards? His friends? Where were you all?" Prez wept bitterly as tears started to pour down his face. The rest of the new core group shed tears and mumbled, wondering how anything could have happened to Joel so quickly.

Adam quickly held up his hand to quiet them. "I know you guys like Joel as much as the rest of us. All I can say right now is this; Joel is fine physically, and spending time with his family. I am sure that as soon as he is able, either you can go see him, or he will come here. However, if you wish, you guys can join in with many of the kids in the UNIT base that are making get well cards for him. Daileass is handling getting them all to Orlando, while Juan handles making sure people get whatever they need to make their cards."

"Absolutely," Keith sniffled, "we'll get him one from all of us and I'm sure each kid here is gonna want to offer their own personal note too."

Prez nodded and wiped his eyes then asked, "Do you know who hurt Joel? I mean, have they been found and are they being dealt with? I ask because there are so many here protecting us. Priorities, ya know?"

Adam's eyes hardened as he met Prez's eyes. "The ones who hurt him have been dealt with... with extreme prejudice."

"That's all we needed to hear," Prez said firmly.

Mike wanted to be sure he understood correctly and asked, "Extreme as in dead?"

"Exactly," Derrick nodded. "He's about one of the nicest guys we've ever met and didn't deserve whatever happened. He just married Kevin, after all."

Adam only nodded, but didn't bother to elaborate.

Drew's voice wavered; "Please send Joel our best."

Keith noticed two gorillas carrying John and Bruce rapidly approaching. "Shit!" Keith grumbled. Looking back over his shoulder, Keith said, "Okay, everybody chill out now. Let's not get John upset, he won't let it go and would want to see Joel immediately."

The gorillas stopped beside the group sitting in the sand. John began climbing down his gorilla's arm, loudly asking, "What's wrong?" Bruce was still working his way down off his gorilla's back.

"Nothing's wrong, bro," Keith said convincingly. "We were just talking about some of the bad stuff that happened to our kids and others in the Clan. It's upsetting."

"Adam, this is our youngest brother, John," Prez quickly added. "And the other little dude is Bruce, the boy we rescued on Ewa Beach yesterday. John and Bruce, this General Adam Casey." Prez believed that by emphasizing the rank of General, John and Bruce would both be impressed.

"It's good to meet you, John and Bruce," Adam pleasantly said. "Are you having fun with the gorillas?"

"Yeah, they're so kewl!" Bruce cheered.

But John only looked around at everyone suspiciously. John impatiently huffed, "It makes me crazy when you do this! You treat me like I'm littler and younger than Bruce!" He then threw a temper tantrum and reminded; "Who knew something bad was goin' on with Kai? ME! Who trusted Galli at first? ME AND BRUCE! Who knew the Prime Minister was bad? ME! Something's goin' on now too! I KNOW IT!" Pounding his fist into his belly, John screamed, "I FELT

IT! RIGHT HERE IN MY GUT! BUT DON'T TELL JOHN! HE'S TOO LITTLE! FINE!" Spinning around, John stormed off and told his gorilla, "Let's get away from here."

Bruce was speechless for a few moments, but then hurried after John.

Keith sighed, "Sorry about that, dudes."

Adam nodded, "It's alright," but then asked, "Is what John said about Kai, Galli and the Prime Minister true?"

After a moment's thought, Prez said, "Yeah, pretty much."

Logan hummed and nodded. He then asked, "Have any of you ever met an empath?" All the Core Rimmers replied negatively. "I have," Logan said. "You guys got upset over Joel and John showed up as soon as he could. Between that and the three other incidents, I think you have an empathic little brother."

Keith grinned, "You're kidding, right? John's always..."

Logan waited a moment for Keith to finish then chuckled, "You were going to say he's always done stuff like that, weren't you?" Keith slowly nodded.

Prez and Keith turned to each other and mumbled, "Oh my God!" Also stunned but somewhat less so, Mike and Derrick began softly snickering.

"Hey!" Drew excitedly said, "Remember when Mom's lung collapsed a few years ago? It was John that found her and called everybody for help. When Dad tripped and broke his ankle, it was John yelling for help then too. How many other times has John known stuff was going on and we all just figured it was coincidence? And look how he's been with Bruce since we found him. You'd think Bruce would be a wreck wondering about his parents. But John stays with him and Bruce is doin' pretty good, considering."

"If I might make a suggestion?" Adam softly requested. Prez and Keith nodded. "Invite John into the core team. He would be another piece of the puzzle you guys definitely need. You need an Intel division to help you find out who's lying. He's not as good as a telepath, but it would make him feel better and you guys would feel better too."

Prez sighed and turned to Keith. "Adam's right, ya know?"

Keith nodded and honestly relayed, "It's always been our job to watch out for our little brothers."

Prez shrugged, "What better way is there to watch him? He'll be around us more of the time this way."

Shaking his head, Keith snickered, "Mom's gonna have a fit!"

Prez joked, "She'll be good or find herself with a gorilla for a shadow!" Standing up while everyone else giggled, Prez bellowed; "JOHN!" The gorilla carrying John turned around. Prez waved for them to return. Then the gorilla shook its head and started back across the beach. The other gorilla carrying Bruce also turned around and hurried back.

Remaining on his gorilla's back, John looked down and grumbled, "Well? What do you want now?"

Prez grinned, "I want you, bro; here, with the rest of us, as part of Clan Short Pacific Rim Division's Core Team."

Looking way up, Keith added, "Come on down, John. We all want you here with us."

John glanced around at all the nodding heads. "Bruce has to be with me too," John defiantly reminded.

Nodding, Prez said, "That's fine. Bruce can be part of your team for as long as he's with us."

"Really?" John squealed.

"Really," Prez affirmed, "we even have a job that only you can do."

Tilting his head back and forth uncertainly, John asked, "You'll tell me what's going on?"

Keith assured, "We'll tell you later on tonight when we get back home, I promise."

John looked over at Bruce and nodded then both boys climbed down off of their gorillas. Landing in the sand, John wondered, "What job do you want me to do?" Both gorillas turned and took only a few steps away then sat down in the sand.

Drew said, "It's an easy one, bro. You've been doing it forever, we just didn't know it."

Logan introduced himself then asked, "Why did you come over here before, John?"

John shrugged, "My belly hurt; not like I was gonna be sick, but still, it made me want to cry. I felt like everyone was sad, so I wanted to find out why."

"It wasn't that everyone was sad and you know it, John," Logan challenged.

Reluctantly, John sighed, "It was Keith, Drew and Prez that were sad."

"I rest my case," Logan grinned.

"Good job, bro," Keith proudly smiled.

Prez nodded, "Just like with the Prime Minister; you hit the nail right on the head." Walking behind John, Prez smiled; "Gentlemen, please meet the newest Core Rimmer; John Hundser, the Soul Rimmer!"

"Oh Dear Lord, please help us now!" Keith and Drew laughed. Prez picked up John and parked him atop his shoulders. Jumping up and down happily, Bruce was the first to begin cheering and soon everyone in both groups joined in.

Once everyone calmed down, Adam said, "Now I have an announcement. It's kinda sad, but there is a silver lining."

Concerned, Prez asked, "What's goin' on, Adam?"

"We can't secure your homes," Adam told them. "Your new homes are on the main Rimmer base. We'll have all your personal belongings packed up and delivered to you on base. When we leave here, we're going directly there."

Kaleo piped up. "That leaves me an opening."

"Is there a problem, dude?" Keith wondered.

Uncertainly, Kaleo said, "Well, most of the kids I've talked to don't want to be separated." Kaleo grinned, "We all want to stay together and near our leaders, at least for a little while."

Kneeling down to let John off of his shoulders, Prez began chuckling. And he kept on chuckling while he leaned forward and John stepped into the sand. Looking up again, Prez laughed, "From the sounds of it, there will be plenty of dorm rooms; about four hundred at each base! Even if there were only one hundred rooms, everyone could've still stayed on Oahu. It gives us all time to get to know each other too. Let 'em know it's cool, Kaleo."

"Thanks, Prez," Kaleo widely smiled and breathed a heavy sigh of relief.

"There was no chance of us saying no," Keith reminded, and gently rubbed Kaleo's back.

Wiping away a stray happy tear, Kaleo said, "When we're done here, I'll let everyone know."

Prez asked, "Are we done, Adam?"

Adam nodded, "We've made a good start. If any of you dudes have other questions, just let me, Donnie or Logan know."

Keith remembered, "It's gotta be near dinner time for you guys. Why don't you get something to eat? When you're done, we'll introduce you to our parents."

Logan got up to allow Adam to get up then went to Prez. "Stop worrying, Prez," Logan softly said. "You're right, the Vulcans are good, really good in fact. They've provided security, all this food, and they will provide you and the kids with everything all you guys could ever need or want. All you have to do is be a big brother for them; that's a big enough job."

"The last things you asked for from the Vulcans was food and clothing. Food's been provided, soon they'll have clothes by the suitcase full!"

Prez smirked at Logan's telepathy and wondered, "How can so many buildings be built in only six hours?"

"Replicators and transporters," Logan smiled. "The technologies you're used to is nothin' dude. In the next few days, you'll be doing things without even thinking about it, pretty much; unless it actually requires that you make a decision."

Everyone returned to the food tables and loaded their trays. They then gathered near where Reyes, Tory and Jonah were still sitting. Conversation revolved mostly around music. Adam and Mike talked about guitars and favorite songs; Reyes and Derrick were talking about drums, drumming and their favorite songs; Runt and Keith were talking about keyboards and their favorite songs, while Kaleo told Adam and Logan about the concert. The remaining kids tossed in their own remarks. After about thirty minutes, everyone was done eating and the trash was deposited in the garbage cans.

It was then that Jory, Juan, Will, Runt, along with Koth and Korris, who just showed up, ran to the Rimmers grabbing them each by the arm, pleading to teach them how to surf. It was Keith that got everyone quiet for a moment, and then told all of them, "We'd love to guys, but the waves aren't big enough right now. We need to wait till the tide starts to come in before we can teach people."

"The waves ain't big enough?" Jory asked with a hopeful voice, and got nods in return. "Well, we'll have to fix that then, won't we?" Before anyone could ask, the young blond boy ran off.

"What's he doing?" Prez asked in a very worried voice.

In a very excited manner, Juan replied; "Oh, nothing much. Where do I get my wet suit? You guys wear wet suits, don't you? Or should I just have Daileass send mine?"

"I don't think you'll need the suit," Mike responded. "But for some strange reason, I don't think you'll be able to surf well with those army pants on."

Juan looked down as if noticing what he was wearing for the first time. "Oh yeah, you're right. Be right back!" All the guys, including Chang, Adam and Logan ran off to get changed.

Glancing at the other Core Rimmers, Prez said, "I guess that means we're going surfing." They all grinned, nodded and stripped.

"So why didn't you tell them they didn't need suits?" Mike wondered.

Prez chuckled, "'Cause it's funnier this way."

Five minutes later, Adam led his group back to the Rimmers, and frowned as he saw all of the Core Rimmers were simply naked. Juan however, just shrugged and dropped the long shorts that mom had insisted they wear. Shrugging, the rest of them dropped their shorts, all except for Runt, who would not drop his. None of the UNIT said a word to Runt, as all of them knew he was still very self conscious.

Adam sent a thought into all the Rimmers head's. "Just a heads up, Runt is not comfortable being naked around people he doesn't know. He's actually fourteen, but hasn't grown to his age yet due to past abuse. Please don't bring it up."

Prez scowled and grunted. Keith looked around nervously. Derrick whimpered and Mike whispered; "What the hell?" Drew shook his head vigorously and Corey stuck his pinkies in his ears. They all heard Adam clearly, but didn't know how.

Adam went to them and spoke softly. "Sorry guys, I thought by now someone would have explained telepathy to you. When we get a few moments, I will let you guys in on all the mental shit that we have running around. Take John for example. I am willing to bet that John has a lot more to him than just being an empath, but I can't guarantee that. However, eventually you will all have to know what the different people with mental stuff can do. We have a few minutes until Jory gets back, so why don't I explain some now. That work?"

Everyone nodded, and Adam went on. "Okay. I know this will come as a surprise to many of you, but humans have always been telepaths, empaths, things like that for a very long time. Recently, there have been a lot more of us around then in the past. For some reason, we seem to be gathering them to us." Adam said, and then grinned at John.

"Now, the next thing you need to know is this. There is something that we are calling the Next Generation, or N-Gen. These are people who have pushed their mental abilities well above what they should be able to, and actually changed the way their mind works. I don't think I need to really get into the specifics right now, at least not yet anyways, but that's the general idea. Any questions?"

"Why do we need to know about N-Gens?" Prez asked.

Juan did not wait for Adam to respond; he jumped in grinning; "Cause John's gonna be one; at least I'm pretty sure he will be."

"He's WHAT!" Prez and Keith responded in unison.

Adam sighed and looked at Juan. "Way to go Mr. Subtlety!"

"What?" Juan whined with an impish grin.

Adam just shook his head and turned to the group. "Guys, calm down; it's nothing bad. All it will mean is this." Adam showed his maturity, as he stepped in front of John, crouched down, put his hands on John's shoulders and spoke directly to him. "All it means is that everything you already know how to do will get stronger. At some point, you will use your abilities more than you ever have in the past and it will cause you to change in here." Adam said as he tapped John's forehead. "When that happens, your mind will grow much stronger, and you will be able to learn to do things that you had never known you could have."

Adam stood back up and looked at the group. "If you all want, I can show you what I mean. What I'll do is show you what a normal mind looks like from the inside, and then show you what my mind looks like. It will not show you anything personal, or memories or anything like that, it'll just show you how a normal mind is set up."

"I'm ready," Prez nodded.

Keith replied, "Me too," then turned to the rest of the Core Rimmers and asked, "Is any one not willing to try this?" Everyone shook their heads except Corey, who appeared uncertain.

"I'm just a little worried," Corey offered. "Like monster movies and horror; I'll do it and will prob'ly like it but... you know?"

"It's cool, Cor," Drew assured.

"We're ready, Adam," Prez said.

"Okay, who wants to volunteer to let us run around in your mind?" Adam playfully grinned at them all. At the looks of concern from some of them, Adam laughed. "Just kidding. We'll use someone who I know won't mind. Adam looked at Will who just shrugged. Suddenly, everyone was sitting in a room, around a big table. The room they were in looked to be surrounded entirely by glass, and outside the glass, they could see a whole bunch of different things happening. In one area, a helicopter was flying through a canyon, in another there was a helicopter being built. Another area had Will surfing, and a whole bunch of other things. Adam looked at the group and started to explain. "As you can see, Will's thinking about a whole bunch of different things right now, however, they are all happening at the same time, and none of them are taking his full concentration, meaning that none of them are getting as much attention as they would if he was concentrating. Does this make sense?"

Again everyone nodded, so Adam went on. "Now, let's move over to my mind." Suddenly they found themselves in a similar room, only this time there was nothing going on outside.

"It's empty?" John asked in shock.

Adam giggled, "Not really. See an N-Gen's mind has their mind separated into rooms. With this, I can put something into a room, and not really think about it. However, inside that room, I am using most of my concentration on whatever I am thinking about. Later on, I come back and I have figured out whatever I had been working on. Does that make sense?"

Logan added his own description with a grin. "For you geeks, it's parallel processing."

"Oh!" Drew excitedly chuckled, "How sweet is that?" Keith turned around and grimaced. Drew sighed then explained, "Imagine learning one song to play while you're actually playing another different song."

Logan tilted his head. "You mean other people can't do that?"

Keith, Prez, Mike and Derrick loudly laughed; "No!"

Drew grinned, "Why not?" then remembered, "Oh, wait; that's right, you're OLD!"

Keith, Prez, Mike and Derrick smiled. They surrounded Drew and Corey scurried away. Nearby, a small pool appeared, approximately twelve feet long by ten feet wide and six feet deep. The four boys took hold of Drew's arms and legs. Seeing the pool was filled with water and ice cubes, Drew stopped giggling and began struggling. "No! Wait! Ple-e-e-ease!"

Prez teased, "Can you say 'shrinkage', little bro?" The four older boys began swinging Drew by his arms and legs, counting down; "three... two... one..."

"NO-O-O-O-O!" Drew screamed as he flew up over the center of the pool. John, Bruce and Corey were hysterical as were Juan, Jory, Adam and Logan. Splashing into the pool and rising to the surface, Drew spluttered; "Fuckin' cold!" and practically flew out of the small pool.

They were suddenly back on the beach together, and they realized there was never really a pool on the beach. Drew was dry, but still feeling terribly cold and it showed. Everyone snickered evilly and Drew raced down the beach into the warmer water of the bay to hide himself. "You bastards!" Drew hollered. "Sleep with BOTH eyes open tonight!"

"Now for the really funny part; to you guys that felt like almost five minutes. Right?" Adam asked.

When they nodded Adam snickered; "It was actually 2.3

seconds."

Keith giggled, "Dare I say, that was actually pretty cool!"

Bruce grinned, "Drew thought it was way cold!"

Adam grinned evilly. "You wanna see cool? You wanna see what an N-Gen can do?"

Seeing all of them nodding and Drew walking back up from the water, Adam turned to Jimmy, grinned and nodded. Jimmy, naked as the day he was born, backed off a couple of feet, assuming a very feminine tone while crying "FLAME ON! BITCH!" Suddenly his entire body was wreathed in flame. He lifted a few feet off the ground, riding the thermals he was producing, then turned towards the water. Raising his arm, he snapped his fingers in the direction of the water. Suddenly a large portion of the bay, where there were no kids swimming, was on fire. Steam bellowed up into the sky.

Juan softly growled, "I hate it when he does that."

"Now there's something I've never seen before," Prez grinned.

Derrick shook his head sadly, "I don't know that I ever want to again either."

Mike softly sang, "Smoke on the water, and fire in the sky."

John hollered, "I could someday do that?"

"Showing off again?" a fourteen-year-old with shaggy blond hair yelled out at Jimmy. With him were four others: a middle-aged woman, a tall muscular twenty-year-old with crew cut brown hair, and two boys of eight and ten. Runt spotted the last of them and delightedly yelled; "Brandon!"

Runt ran over to the group yelling, "Bobby! Skipper!" He would have said more, but he slammed into the older of the young men, wrapping him up in a huge hug. Jimmy for his part, simply let the flames die out and snickered at the fact that there was now a cloud forming over the bay from all the water he evaporated with his fire. "Hey guys," Will said. "Prez, these are our friends Skipper Hamilton and Bobby Martin from Maine, their kids Brandon and Andy Jessup, and Bobby's mother Grace Martin."

Jory ran up to the group holding a small box in his hand. "You guys ready yet?"

Adam nodded then frowned. "I think we need boards."

Suddenly in front of them twenty surfboards appeared sticking out from the sand. Four of them were nothing short of massive. Adam took a step back in surprise, then looked at Logan who just laughed.

"Okay, we got the boards. Now what?" Adam said, and looked at Prez

"Umm, we need better waves still," Prez reminded.

"What did I say?" Jory exclaimed, sounding somewhat annoyed. "Just get your butts out there, and let me know when you're ready, and you'll have your waves!"

"Should we be worried?" Prez wondered, not really sure what was going on.

Jory shrieked, "NO!"

"YES!" Juan cried out, almost simultaneously.

Logan just quietly asked, "Are your wills up to date?"

Adam grabbed a board and started running out into the water. "Come on guys, you wanna live forever?"

Suddenly, the only people standing on the beach were the Rimmers.

They each shrugged then took a short board, but looked at the four boards that were sticking up out of the sand about fifteen feet and could only wonder what they were for. They hurried into the water and hopped onto their boards then began paddling out.

John whined, "There's no good boards here for me or Bruce."

"Don't worry little dudes, we got you!" Turning around, the two boys saw their two gorillas, both wearing leis and board shorts. The gorillas picked up huge eighteen foot long boards, tucked them under their arms and then picked up their boys. John and Bruce crawled onto their gorillas backs.

Once the group all assembled about seventy yards from the shore, Prez and Keith began to explain everything that was needed. When he was sure the guys had the basics down, Prez looked to Jory and hollered; "Well mister magic maker, let's see where these waves are?"

Jory just grinned, picked up the little box that was now dangling from his neck and shouted, "READY?"

Everyone nodded and the six core Rimmers held up an arm each. Then Jory cried his four favorite words: "FIRE IN THE HOLE!" Then he pushed one of his buttons.

Behind them about thirty yards, the world exploded. Keith, Mike, Prez and Derrick all screamed at the loud underwater explosion and then started paddling their arms off as the resulting waves started to race towards them. "WHAT THE FUCK ARE YOU THINKING?" Mike bellowed excitedly as he jumped up on his board and rode a wave that swelled to twelve feet high.

Tumbling about in the water around the boards were seventy-four ferrets. About half of them managed to scurry onto boards. "WAHOOOOO!" John loudly laughed from atop his gorilla. Keith quickly glanced over at his little brother and shook his head sadly. Six ferrets climbed onto John's gorilla and were peering down from his outstretched arms. Another four ferrets were aboard Bruce's gorilla, in awe at the shiny water before them. On each of the other surfboards were two or three ferrets, standing upright and balancing themselves.

On the beach, Juan and Jory started singing: "In Hawaii there's a place known as Anahola Bay, where the best surfers in the world come to stay, and ride the wild surf, they come to try, to conquer those waves some twenty feet high."

As they approached the beach and rode the white water, dozens of ferrets were chanting praises to the shiny water bubbles popping around them. Eighteen surfers and their boards turned around, paddled back out and prepared for the next wave. Two more gorillas jogged down from the dunes and grabbed the remaining two long boards then hurried out into the water.

After whispered consultation, Keith, Mike, and Derrick broke into close Beach Boys-style three-part harmony. "Little ferret, little one; take my shynys, one by one; do you love me, do you surfer gorilla; surfer gorilla, my little surfer gorilla."

Once they were lined up far out in the bay, twenty arms went up to signal they were ready. Jory shouted; "FIRE IN THE HOLE!" Again the entire beach trembled and a tremendous swell pushed the boards forward. Everyone stood and gained their balance as the wave lifted them higher and higher. Prez noticed that on the beach six mothers were marching in line towards Jory. As the surfers approached the shore once again, all six women stood with their arms crossed behind Juan and Jory.

Noticing a looming shadow, Jory turned and saw them. "WHAT?" Jory squealed. "I made sure they were floating off the sea bed and shaped properly so they didn't hurt nothin'... and... and... no one got hurt... and... well... umm..." Suddenly his eyes dropped to the sand. "Sorry mom," he said in his best sad puppy dog voice.

Holding her hand out, Janet simply said, "Now Jory."

"But... but... mo-o-om!" Jory whined. Janet only glared angrily. Jory sighed, "Oh, alright," and handed his mom the detonator box.

Adam tried hard not to laugh and finally decided to take pity on his little brother. Arriving on the beach, Adam smirked, "Jory, she's got a bit of a point though. There's really a lot to go over with the Rimmers. Why don't you take some of the younger ones and do some swimming or whatever. We'll take care of business." Jory sighed and nodded sadly then turned and ran towards where a lot of the little kids were playing. Jimmy, Juan and most of the others followed.

Adam turned to John and asked, "Hey dude, could you gather all the Core Rimmers together while I go talk to our mothers?"

John nodded and ran off while Adam spent a few minutes talking to Janet and Mrs. Hundser. Once all the Rimmers were there, Adam walked over with Chang and Logan and Nathan joining in. "Okay guys. I just cleared it with our moms. We got lots of security stuff to go over, and I thought it might be best to do it back in Utah. Don't worry that we're not dressed, no one will really know we're there. Sound okay to you guys?"

Prez frowned, "How are we gonna get all the way to Utah? Transporter? I don't like to fly at all. That's how my parents died."

Adam's eyes softened and he gently said, "We don't use transporters like you know them; however, your time of ever having to worry about flying is over. Before we leave the base, I will make sure you have communications access to Daileass, and any time you wanna move from island to island, he'll move you. Just like this; Daileass, conference room 4-A, if you please."

For all the Rimmers, it really felt like they simply blinked and were in another place. This room was set up just like many of the conference rooms they had seen in the past, only this one was way high tech, with nice plushy chairs and a twelve foot long Formica table.

As soon as they appeared, Adam spoke while looking up a bit to the ceiling. "Daileass, could you do me a favor and raise the temperature in this room to a nice round eighty degrees and ask Ray Ray to send up some refreshments."

"Sure thing, Boss-O!" Came the giggling reply from all over the room, of a boy who sounded like he was twelve or thirteen. "And I gotta say, these guys are cute. I'll make sure to keep Melinda away from here!"

Logan giggled, "I think all the ones old enough to interest her are already spoken for, by each other."

Adam just chuckled as he motioned for everyone to sit around the table.

Drew and Corey blushed while everyone else giggled. John smiled, "Who's Daileass?"

"Well, John," The voice said from all over again. But this time, on the screen in front of John's chair, a face appeared. He looked just like Logan and Nathan, only a bit younger. "I am. But I guess you want more of an explanation. Let's just say that I'm the AI the runs this base and a lot of other things around here. See about four years ago, some bad doctors took images of me and my brother's brains, took them out of our heads, and put them in a positronic matrix. They came out of it okay, but I was the first, and they screwed up with me. So when Logan found my brain sitting in a box, he figured out how to hook me up to the server farm that he installed downstairs and basically gave me a body again, only my body is this base."

Saddened, John frowned, "I'm sorry, dude."

"Why? I'm not. See John, if there's one thing I learned while working with these guys it's this; a lot of bad shit happens all over the place. It's up to us to decide if we're gonna get wrapped up in what happened to us in the past, or use what we learned with what we had to go through to help try and make sure others don't have to deal with it." All around the table Daileass's face appeared on all the screens. "You guys have got a great chance here to really get out there and help." It was like he was talking to each of the new boys individually. "Being part of the Clan is not really all that difficult, not if you look at it in pieces. Sure, you have a lot more that you can do, but that's only because you would want to in the first place. You can give lots of people the kind of power that the Clan gives them, and they'll use it to make their own lives better, and forget about everyone else. But I really doubt that's you guys."

His face moved from being on all the screens to just being on the big one that hung on the wall. He looked right at John and spoke again. "John, you said you were sorry that I had to go through what I did, and I know you mean it. I appreciate that, however, there is a lot more that I can do now than I could ever before do. I mean yes, I can spy real well on everyone, but that's just a perk." Everyone laughed at his joke, then his face got serious again.

"You can ask Nathan if you want, he's one of my brothers, and because of that we are always talking in our minds. Since I came online here, they have always been there floating around my thoughts, and knowing what I know. That means we've all heard just about everything that has been said on this base by anyone. I know you heard how many kids we got running around in here, and almost every single one of them have said the same thing in one way or another. Many of their lives have been bad for one reason or another, but every single one of them has learned how to survive. They are now learning how to take what happened to them and turn it around into something good, and in the process helping others that are going through the same things." He laughed for a second then spoke again. "I'll end my sermon with one last thing. One of the founding Clan members once said something that has turned into almost a motto for the Clan, even if most don't realize it. Sometimes it takes something bad to happen, so that something good can."

There was a small knock on the door and then it opened. Entering with a tray were two young boys; one who was seven, the other was eight. While everyone was thinking about what Daileass had to say, the two younger boys passed out drinks and some snacks to everyone in the room. The older one took a position behind Adam. The younger of the two boys walked out, shutting the door behind him.

Adam spoke softly so as not to break the mood. "Just so you guys know, the young one that just left is Ray. He's Donnie and Emily's adopted son, and the rug rat behind me is my personal assistant Aiden. But Prez, I saw you were about to say something.

Please go ahead."

Prez nodded to Adam, then smiled at the boy on the screen and said, "Thanks Daileass." Turning to John, Prez said, "That's our job now bro. Just like your family picked up my pieces after my parents died, all of us are going to help the rescued kids in Hawaii pick up the pieces of their shattered lives. Think about what their lives were like for a minute. Kaleo's fourteen, just like me and Keith, but had never surfed until today. Lots of these kids don't know how to play soccer. We can teach them. Lots of them slept four or more to a single bed. Imagine if you, Drew, Keith and I all had to sleep in one bed. Now they'll have their own beds and a certain amount of privacy, maybe for the first time in their lives."

"Talk about dealing with changes," Keith added. "Yeah, our lives are changing, but imagine how lonely some of them will feel in a nice big bedroom with only one other person. Imagine having so many after school chores that all you could do was finish them and then go to bed. That's what some of the kids told us their lives were like. We're gonna change them back into kids, John."

"I can do that," John happily assured. "We'll get a soccer lesson in as soon as possible."

"Now you guys got it." Logan beamed, but then got serious. "One thing to watch out for though; many of the kids won't be able to handle having privacy. You'll find your beds filling up at night. You'll find yourselves having less and less privacy for yourselves. You'll have to work as a team to make sure that none of you get overwhelmed by it, and can have some time to yourselves."

Nathan jumped in right behind his big brother. "One thing I think you'll find quickly is that nesting is great. If you don't know what that means, it's simple. Take a whole bunch of blankets and pillows and spread them out. Then people sleep where ever they want to. It's great for forming bonds between people, and it really reinforces to those kids that never had anyone before, that they are actually wanted. Now, of course, don't force it, but make it available."

Turning to Kaleo, Prez wondered, "What do you think, dude?"

Kaleo thought for a few moments then said, "I'm sure most of the younger kids would like the nesting idea more than being in a dorm room. Me and Tory though, we're looking forward to sharing a room already."

Keith asked, "Are you and Tory becoming a couple?"

"He knows I like him," Kaleo shrugged, "and he likes me too. It's just the fucked up shit we had to deal with before that kept it from moving further than friendship. Maybe we will become a couple, but I don't really know if or when that might happen."

"Maybe we can setup a couple of nests," Drew offered. "Like maybe one for the younger boys with John and Bruce, and another for the eleven and twelve-year-olds with me and Corey. Some of the younger girls might want to stay with Lindsay..."

Turning to Derrick, Mike interrupted, "I'm sleeping at your place then tonight! All I need is a bunch of cackling little girls!" Grinning, Derrick took Mike's hand and nodded understandingly.

"Kids are flexible," Chang said, "They can adjust and cope with almost anything, if they have support. They need someone who loves them that they know they can count on; remember that. It's not what you provide them, so much as it is who you provide them, to love and be trusted."

Adam nodded, "Just remember one thing; many of the kids you have now have probably had more exposure to sex than any of you. To many of them, that was the only love they ever felt. It will really fuck with them if you guys were to see what they were doing and freak out on them." Adam chuckled, "I'm sure many of you know how addictive sex can be, and you don't have to be older to have that addiction. All I would advise is to talk to them about it if you see it."

Adam made sure he got nods from them before he went on. "Okay, now for the next thing; security. I'm pretty sure you guys haven't really thought about what this all means in your day to day lives. I'm just going to assume that you guys want to continue going to the school you go to now?"

"Course we do," Prez quickly said. "Keith, Mike, Derrick and me want to be in our school's jazz band. We have commitments and responsibilities to that band." Keith, Mike and Derrick nodded.

Drew and Corey checked with each other. Corey said, "We just started middle school in September. It don't matter much to me where we go to school."

"As long as we're together," Drew assured.

"I only got one more year of grade school," John thought aloud. "It would be better if I could at least finish off this year."

Adam nodded, "I kinda figured that, however, there might be problems with things." He raised a hand to cut off protests then explained, "You have to understand, you just shut down a very profitable ring of child pornography and child sex. I'm sure most of those involved have been caught, but it has pissed off a lot of people, even some of the kids you go to school with. They probably don't understand what really happened, all they know is that shit that you were involved with made it so their mom or dad no longer has a job, or their uncle was arrested, or anything else."

He took a deep breath then went on. "Obviously you know that you're part of the Clan, but there are people out there who don't like the Clan. Just look at what happened last week in Montana. I think you get the point." Met with nods, he stood up and started to pace.

"I'm hoping what I have set up will allow you guys to finish school without having any big problems, but you must understand that you and your family's security is most important. So here's what I have in mind, also anything can be revisited at any time. Each of you will have two security personnel assigned to your person. What that means, is that one of them will be with you any time you are not inside a secured building. When you are out and about, I expect you to listen to what they say when it comes to your safety. Logan has handpicked them, so that they are your age, with as many similar interests as we could make. They will go to school with you, be in the same classes, and even go to the bathrooms with you. They will be as unobtrusive as possible, but they will be there."

He saw that some of them were about to protest, and honestly he couldn't blame them, but he cut them off anyway. "You see all the pictures on that wall. There are sixty-one kids there that died to protect their family one week ago. You're family now and it security's job to protect you. If you allow them to, I doubt you will ever have a problem. Your lives have changed, and I'm sorry for that. But now you have to realize that you guys are targets and it's my job to make sure that nothing happens to you.

"One other thing to know; if something happens at school, if the school bully comes up and tries to start a fight, my guys will not step in. If any of you start a fight, you will have to deal with it; however, if it starts to get out of hand, or if others jump in, then my guys will too. And understand something that's very serious; if anyone were to ever draw a weapon on any of you, that person will die quickly. This isn't a game, okay?"

No one said a word, but Keith groaned. Noticing everyone looking at him, Keith explained, "That could be bad. The Board of Education would have something to say if a handful of students were considered more important than every other kid and adult in the building."

Prez looked deep into Keith's eyes and softly asked, "Do you really think it will be that bad?" Keith only shrugged.

Adam said, "Just a scenario here. What if someone were to learn four Clan Short leaders went to your school and decided to send a bomb in the mail? Their intention is to hurt or kill you and they don't care who else gets hurt or dies to accomplish that goal."

"That would be extremely bad!" Prez loudly said. He then sighed, rested his head in his hand and said, "How can the four of us expect everyone in the entire school to become targets?"

Derrick wondered, "What if we continued most of our schooling on base, but went over to James Campbell only for jazz band in the afternoons? It's the last class of the day anyway. That way we're not there most of the day, reducing the risks."

"That'll work," Adam smiled. "You'll still need the two security personnel for each of you but it would only be for an hour or so."

"We'd better plan on that then," Prez agreed.

Sitting down again, Adam said, "We talked it over while we were here and have come up with this, if you guys approve." Adam looked at John. "Now, one last thing; John, you're going to be the head of the Intel team for the Rimmers. If you would like, Nathan here has volunteered to come over and stay with you guys, and help get you trained in what you need to do, and help out how ever you guys need it."

John smiled, "Yeah, let's do that."

Seeing only nodding heads from the remaining core team, Prez confirmed, "Okay then; John, you'll be the only one going to the same school Monday morning, but with two security guys. All the rest of us will be attending school on one of our bases. Keith, Derrick, Mike and I will only be attending our jazz band class in the afternoons. Hopefully we've come up with a plan that everyone, including adults at the Board of Education can deal with. We'll find out Monday when our parents begin transferring us to Clan Short operated schools."

Adam waited for a few moments to make sure that they were done discussing things, then he spoke up. "Okay guys, just a few more things to go over. First off; Daileass, can you get me eight sub-vocals and comm-badges?" Suddenly there were eight small boxes sitting in front of each of the Core Rimmers. Adam had them open the boxes and then instructed them on how to fit and use the sub-vocals. Once they all knew what they were doing, Adam explained what they were for. "The sub-vocal will let you communicate with Daileass at any time, no matter where you are. You can arrange for transport, or anything else like that. You don't really need to talk, just activate it, and mouth the words. Any questions on that?" No one had any so Adam sat back down. "The comm-badges pin to your shirts. Just tap to activate it. They'll let you communicate with each other or anyone else that has one in the Clan, the UNIT or in Starfleet."

"There is one other thing," Adam paused then took a deep breath before continuing. "I am reluctant to bring it up. I totally understand how your mothers will take this, but I will strongly suggest that all of you get firearms training; whether it's a normal hand gun like we wear, or even a phaser. Either way, I would like for all of you to know how to use one. I will not make this a requirement as none of you are military; however, I would strongly suggest it."

"One more thing," Adam said quickly, so as to not let them dwell on the gun issue. "Mike, I understand your father is a police officer. How do you think he would feel about switching jobs and working for the Clan? It would mean that he would be home a lot more often."

Mike quickly replied, "My mom worries about him every day. I'm sick of her freaking out if he's ten minutes late. I think both my mom and dad would like it." Mike paused and grinned, "Me and Lindsay on the other hand will have to get used to it."

Keith then offered, "I know my mom would freak out over hand guns being around. She wouldn't be too happy about phasers either, but they have variable settings, don't they?"

"Yes, they do," Adam responded quickly. "Phasers are safer for people who don't know what they are doing." Adam paused and laughed, "However, most of my guys like hand guns cause of the boom they make."

Prez cracked up and loudly chuckled, "Let's stick with the hand phasers. All our mom's would be happier but we'd still have to keep them locked up when they're not needed. Safety, ya know? All we need is for someone to accidentally stun themselves and the party's over! When you get the chance to train us, let us know."

"Now, for the last thing I wanted to ask about; there are three bases on Oahu, right?" Prez nodded, so Adam continued. "The third base was formally a Marine Corps base. If my numbers are accurate, it covers about five square miles. If you guys are okay with it, and it's totally up to you, I would like to turn that into a rapid deployment base for The UNIT. It's already set up to handle any type of aircraft to land there. It would be perfect for what the UNIT needs, and if you're willing, I would like to annex it." Prez was about to speak up, when Adam once again, pushed on. "Basically, what I see its functions being is an emergency relocation facility for you, your families and your Clan. It would also house a Vulcan state of the art medical facility, as well as many different styles of training areas. See, we don't just school the kids here in military strategy and tactics, we let them pick just about anything they want, and somewhere, we have someone that can train them in it."

"I see no problem with that," Prez offered. "It's on a peninsula and would definitely be most secure."

Logan grinned. "Cool! That means we finally have a place to put the Goliath."

Adam also grinned and nodded to Logan. "Okay, I think that about sums it up. Anything else you guys can think of, or want to say?" Adam, still grinning, was looking right at Prez.

"I do have one more thing to say," Prez huffed. "In the little while we've known each other, you've presented me with several questions and chances to say something, but kept on talking so I couldn't answer. Just let me say that I am responsible for this division of Clan Short. All the people stationed on these islands will ultimately report to me because I report to the Clan Short Patriarch, whether that be Joel or Cory Short or whomever. Have I made myself clear, Adam?"

All the other core Rimmers were wide-eyed and completely stunned that Prez had put his foot down so forcefully. Prez and Adam didn't seem to notice anything except each other. Noticing that Adam had never stopped smiling, Prez grinned, "You've been cutting me off on purpose, haven't you?"

Adam's grin widened and he nodded. "Yes, I have, and it was to see how long it took to get this kind of reaction. To be blunt, I needed to make sure, for myself, that the person I was having security put around would not just roll over when presented with someone who has some authority. I had to make sure that you would do what is needed to get your point across. Do you understand what I mean?"

Prez nodded, "That's part of leadership. One thing I learned from my dad, Keith's dad and Mike's dad is to give people a chance, maybe multiple chances, especially when you know you have to work with someone. But I have a responsibility to almost a hundred kids, my friends and their families, not to mention the reputation of Clan Short. What I need to know is where our authority overlaps and where it doesn't."

Adam nodded, "Very sensible. I will bring this up with Cory when he comes to see you, and make sure that what I am about to say is accurate, however, I believe it is. Due to the title you have been given as director of the Pacific Rim, I would assume that your area of influence covers everything from the West Coast of the United States; including the States of California, Oregon, Washington State, and Alaska; as well as the western section of Canada. It would also include any and all of the Pacific Islands north of the equator, including the entire country of Japan, and the coast line country in that part of East Asia. The only exception to that would be any UNIT bases. Simply put, that is because the military does not answer to the local governor, if you will, but only to the president, or Patriarch. Does that help clear things up?"

"I agree with the geographic coverage, however I do not agree with who the UNIT on Hawaii will report to," Prez said. "Basically what you've said is that if the Pacific Rim needs UNIT assistance, only the Patriarch can approve that request. Due to time zones and the possible importance of needing the UNIT, waiting for the Patriarch is not reasonable. I see it more like a U.S. Governor having control over the military reserves and the National Guard in his State. Let's face it Adam, too many cooks spoil the broth; too many leaders in charge creates havoc."

Adam grinned broadly as he sat back. "Damn, you're good at this. Let me see if I can explain it like this. You will have many different security personnel hanging around the base at all times. They are your national guard. If you need for them to effect a rescue, that's what they are there for. The troops on the base are different though. All my base commanders have standing orders to aid and assist all Clan Division leaders no matter what they ask for, as long as it does not detract from ongoing operations. Basically, what that means is this; if for some reason, you need more military support than you have, you call the base on the island. If they have available personnel, you'll get them. However, if they are already all out and about, then you'll have to figure out something else." Adam paused for a second, then he went on. "Let me try it one other way, because I am sure that was somewhat confusing. As a division Director, you can ask my commanders for assistance. One thing I am sure Nathan will assist you on is learning the Military chain of command. However, and I am sure this will annoy you to no end, but you will get saluted."

Prez was about to say something, however, Nathan held up his hand and said, "If I may, Sir?"

"Go ahead, Nathan," Prez said with a nod.

"Adam, I think what Prez is saying is this. He's got personal security, what he doesn't have is the personnel to do an operation if needed. As a division director, he needs to have a squad of troops, I would say maybe a hundred strong, that are at his disposal all the time. If the shit hits the fan, they can be pulled, but that would only be after the Core are completely secured. I think you're seeing the base in Hawaii as a worldwide response, where Prez saw it more as a Pacific Rim response. So what you need to do is make sure he's got the troops to do whatever he may need to. Remember, he will have the largest area to cover of any of the divisions, with a whole shit load of people, in several different countries. He needs troops of his own, more than just his security. Am I right here, Prez?"

"That's exactly right," Prez agreed. "From California to Japan is a huge area; it covers seven time zones and crosses the International Date Line. California alone is the most populated State in the United States. Japan is one of the most densely populated countries in the world. Joel and his team of thirteen, not including Blackie and I-Cheya, took down the Hawaiian government. God forbid I was ever put in a situation like that, but I can't deny the possibility exists. Therefore the Pacific Rim needs dedicated UNIT personnel at all times, regardless of what the remainder of UNIT forces on that base are assigned to do. Because of where I've lived the last seven years of my life, near Pearl Harbor and Hickam Air Force Base, I am already very aware of the military chain of command. Joel made me director of about a third of the planet. I report to the Clan Short Patriarch. There cannot be two commanders in the Pacific Rim division both reporting to the Patriarch."

Adam was nodding as Prez was speaking. "You made good points, and I agree with you. Sorry for not understanding." He actually chuckled. "Sometimes it's annoying that I refuse to allow the telepaths, including myself, to read from people if there is no cause. Had I done that, I would have figured out exactly what you meant. Now, let's see what we can do."

Adam looked behind him to Aiden, who spoke almost immediately. "My suggestion would be Delta Brigade once we do the restructuring. That would give them one hundred and twenty troops, as well as eighty support personnel. You can house the officers at the main Rimmer base, while the rest are housed at the UNIT base." Adam was nodding the entire time, while Logan started to input things into the computer terminal he was sitting at.

Mike wondered, "What exactly are support personnel?"

Keith hung his head and chuckled, "Jeez dude, haven't you watched any war movies at all?"

"Hell no!" Mike laughed. "I'm a lover, not a fighter!"

Prez grinned at Derrick. "Is that true, dude?"

Derrick chuckled and nodded.

"We're talking about cooks, laundry and mechanics; all the people that support what the main troops do," Keith answered.

Adam spoke up at that point. "Not to mention the four troop transport helicopters, the two attack helicopters, and the Harrier jump jet that goes along with it, and of course, their support."

"Well, you won't ever get me in any helicopter or jet!" Prez grinned devilishly. While most of the Rimmers snickered, Prez then asked, "Daileass, is there anywhere you can't get me in the blink of an eye?"

"Hmmmmmm..." The boy's voice came over the speakers. "Well, Mars would be a problem, but other than that...."

Prez snickered, "I'll make a note: no interplanetary travel."

Adam laughed, then stood. "Well, I think that's enough for now. There's a beach with my name on it."

Logan's grin widened as he slapped Adam's arm. "Why don't you bring your guitar? Maybe you and the Rimmers can do some jamming."

"You play?" Mike smiled.

"Sort of, but I ain't that good." Adam said, showing an uncharacteristic lack of self confidence.

Logan laughed out loud, "He plays a lot of things, and the guitar!" The whole room busted up laughing.

Leaning back in his chair, Keith began jabbing; "Jeez, Prez! Could you pick someone other than a genetically enhanced military type to argue with?"

Derrick snickered, "For a while there, I thought it was gonna come to blows!"

"Nah!" Adam said with a grin. "I don't fight people who ain't got a chance."

"I'm not stupid enough to underestimate Adam, any of his brothers or the UNIT," Prez sneered. "At the same time, I am not underestimating my position as director of this division. The welfare of over a hundred people has been dropped in my hands. I don't take it lightly."

Aiden jumped in quickly. "You all gotta see Adam and Khan trying to take on Chang. It's amazing to watch!"

Calmly, without any hint of anger or arrogance, Chang said,

"While that is good exercise, I must agree with your assessment, Adam; I should reserve myself for people who actually have a chance."

All the Rimmers began mooing at the gauntlet being thrown. When most of the giggling and laughing had died down, Keith chuckled, "That might be fun and interesting to watch, but definitely not in front of any of our mothers!"

Adam laughed and suddenly the screen at the end of the room blinked on. What the Rimmers witnessed was something that shocked them. They recognized the huge Khan, but didn't recognize the hugely muscled hybrid that was facing off against him. "Oh shit!" Adam laughed, "That's Khan fighting Logan, one of the Wolverine Hybrids we rescued."

Meanwhile, back on Anahola Bay beach...

Runt was in an animated conversation with Bobby, Brandon, and Andy, as Skipper, Grace, Khan, Joe and Janet looked on bemusedly.

Skipper motioned to Will, who trotted over and listened to his whispered idea. He grinned delightedly and spoke quietly to Daileass; seconds later they vanished.

About five minutes later, two helicopters very suddenly appeared over the bay about two hundred feet from the shore, both of them were UNIT Hueys. The one closest to the beach turned hard, and came in fast and low. It landed a ways up the beach so that there wasn't sand blowing everywhere. The other landed right by it, and Will jumped out of the first one and ran up to the group. "Okay, so who's up for some para-sailing?" he asked with a huge grin.

Bobby came running, followed by Reyes, Tory, and several of the other rescued kids. "You're kidding!" he exclaimed.

"Nope! We've got it all figured out. I got a huge 'chute that we can tether behind one of the Hueys, and drag people across the bay. Hell, if there's someone who has the guts, we can even hook up the tether and let them try and ski."

"If somebody has the guts?" Bobby scoffed. "I know a dare when I hear one. Count me in!" He grinned at Skipper.

"Do you even know how to ski?" Will asked Bobby.

"I grew up in Maine, what do you think?" Bobby gave back as good as he got.

Starting to head back to the helicopter, Will grinned, "Well, what do you want first, the parachute or the skis?" He stopped then turned back saying, "I'll need someone to act as a spotter in the helicopter. Runt, you wanna hang out the side and let me know when the little freak dies?"

"Freak? Why the hell am I freak?" Bobby asked, mocking offense.

"Simple man; you're about to be pulled by a freaking helicopter while you're on water skis! That's fucking dangerous, don't you think?"

"Nah, easy peasy!" Bobby confidently said.

Little Andy was looking like he half expected to see one of his fathers depart this mortal life immediately.

"Well, come on then, dead meat," Will laughed hysterically. "I'll make sure the medics are standing by. Oh, wait a minute! The medic is flying the other helicopter!"

Grace picked up Andy, giving her firstborn a glare that said without words; 'You will be careful.' "He'll do just fine," she said comfortingly to Andy.

Bobby, Will, and Runt hopped into one of the Hueys. Will belted himself in as pilot then took off. They veered out over the water and off to the East. Will descended to about six feet above the water and hovered; Bobby jumped out, and Runt threw him the tether and Ski Rope to hang onto. Bobby tread water, got his skis on, grabbed the tether, and signaled. Will took off.

Bobby shot across the bay behind the helicopter, screaming maniacally. Most of the group on the shore were watching by now. Finally, he dropped the tether and swam back to shore laughing.

"I want to try that!" Tory called out.

Over the next half hour, Tory, Kaleo, Bobby, Brandon, and two of the UNIT security detail took turns hang-gliding-skiing behind the copter. Then Skipper took one of the gorillas up.

The Gorilla got ready to go and gave the signal. Just as the rope was tightened, a ferret leaped out of the water and onto the gorilla's shoulders. Unable to stop what was happening, the Gorilla simply shook his head and adjusted himself for the extra forty pounds of ferret on his shoulder.

Spike meanwhile was looking around mournfully for Mike.

After the gorilla plus ferret run, Will came back in and picked up his next rider; Khan. Once Khan was in the water, he looked up at his new boyfriend and did something that got Runt to reply with fierce negativity. He patted his shoulder inviting the smaller boy to ride with him. Shrugging defeat, Khan simply gave the signal that he was ready. Will started laughing as he hit the accelerator on the helicopter. With Khan's strength and resilience, Will was going to see just how fast he could make the big cat skip across the water of the bay. He did pull it back when he noticed his gauge top the one hundred mile an hour mark. The big cat was barely clipping the wave tops at that speed, roaring and was obviously enjoying himself.

Appearing on the beach was all the Core Rimmers, Adam, Chang, Logan, Nathan and Aiden. Seeing Khan zipping back and forth across Anahola Bay, Adam groaned, "Oh Jesus Christ! I knew it; as soon as I left, Will found an excuse for a joy ride!"

"That looks like so much fun though!" Derrick laughed. Keith agreed and so did John.

Looking down at John, Keith reminded, "Check with mom first, bro."

"Why?" John whined.

Keith giggled, "I'm second in command! I can't get grounded now!" John sighed then tore across the beach to where all the adults were gathered.

Looking up from organizing his shinys, Spike noticed that Mike had returned. Quickly loading his pearls and assorted other trinkets into his waist sack, Spike then scurried over and parked himself immediately before Mike.

Meanwhile, just up-beach and to the west of where the Core Rimmers and UNIT guys had reappeared, another party was beaming in. There was a man in later middle age, two women in their thirties, a man in his late twenties, three teens, a group of ten boys and four girls, a set of red-headed seven-year-old twin boys and finally a nine-year-old towhead who popped back out of existence, then back into it again, giving a hug to Prez.

Prez looked down at the small boy hugging him and immediately noticed purple eyes. "Another Mikyvis?" Prez chuckled.

"Yep!" the small boy giggled, "I'm Peter, by the way! Nice to meet ya, Prez!"

As John ran up to the group of adults, Mrs. Hundser didn't even wait. "NO!" she forcefully hollered.

"But MO-O-O-OM!" John whined in his perfected little boy voice.

"No buts mister! That is way too dangerous," She said, as she planted her hands on her hips.

Skipper thought it was time to interject something. "Mrs. Hundser, there is a reason we brought the second helicopter. It's a chance for some of my guys to practice their water rescues. Basically, in a few minutes we're going to run it so that when the person falls off the ski's, we're asking them to stay there, so that my guys can do a water jump and secure the 'patient' for transport. Not only would John be wearing a flotation device, he would also have someone to him within one minute, probably less."

Brandon was giggling at this. John gave a glance and smile to Skipper that clearly said, 'Thanks'.

Buckling but not quite ready to give in, Jennifer Hundser checked with Janet who only smiled and nodded. Jennifer then sighed, "We'll watch the first water rescue. Then you can have a chance, only if you go out with Keith."

John jumped excitedly and hollered, "Thanks mom!" then ran back across the beach to tell Keith and Prez.

Jennifer turned to Janet and said, "Remember those Valium we were kidding about earlier? I think I may need a few to help me sleep at night."

Janet reached into her purse and pulled out a pill bottle. Handing it to Jennifer, she sighed, "It's not the good stuff, but with all the shit you're about to start seeing, they can help. Not to mention, I write out standing prescriptions for all Clan parents for an almost unlimited supply of Valium."

As Tory came swimming back into shore from his para-surfing run, Peter looked at him, blinked, zeroed in on him, and popped out of Prez's arms and down to the surf line to meet him. "C'mere," he said warmly.

Puzzled, Tory walked over. "Hold still," Peter said, and concentrated. Ever so slowly, the bruises, welts and scars on Tory's skin from how he had been abused faded to faint ghostly vestiges. "There, feel better?" Peter asked.

Tory looked at his arms first then down the front of his body. "Much better!" Tory loudly said, "Thank you!"

Kaleo had jogged over to meet his friend. "How'd you do that?" he asked with wide eyes.

"Time regression; I took his skin back to before he got beat," Peter explained.

"Can you do that for Kaleo too?" Tory pleaded.

"Sure," Peter said, took Kaleo's hand and concentrated. Slowly the livid bruise marks and pale scars on his rich brown skin faded into nearly normal skin tones. "How's your chest feel?" Peter asked.

Kaleo drew a deep breath and smiled. "Much better!" he grinned.

"Couple of bruised ribs," Peter explained, "they didn't show up for the medics, but they were obvious to me. So I regressed them too."

Kaleo warmly smiled, "Thanks!" Peter only nodded and giggled then popped out of existence. He mainly moved around the beach giving random hugs and healing rescued kids as he found them.

Logan caught Prez's eyes, and motioned with his head off to the side. When the two teens walked away a bit, Logan turned towards Prez. "I just wanted to have a few moments to inform you of a few other things that Adam didn't go into."

Prez nodded so Logan continued. He ran his hand through his long blond hair and sighed. "You gotta understand what Adam and his brothers are to really get them. I'm sure by now, you think Adam's an arrogant asshole, and he is, but only when it comes to the military stuff. Get him out of his element, and he's just a scared little boy. All of them are. They were all raised in a lab with no interaction with anyone but doctors. To be honest, I was shocked that Adam got naked on the beach."

"Why?" Prez asked. "I mean, don't take this wrong, but he's got a great body."

Logan smirked but sadly sighed, "It wasn't like that yesterday. See, someone healed his entire body yesterday. Before that, Adam was covered in scars. Think about it for a minute. If you're trying to make it so someone will heal quickly, how do you test your success?"

"Oh shit!" Prez gasped.

"Yeah. He told me a few of the things he had to go through, including intentional cutting with knives, being shot at point blank range, and being burned severely. Adam healed from everything quickly, but of course, he still felt the pain. I mean, I literally watched one time as a cut on his hand healed. I watched it close up and stop bleeding.

"The reason I'm telling you all this, is because I don't want you to get the wrong idea about Adam. He seems so self assured most of the time, but if you take him out of the military situation, he doesn't have a clue what to do."

"Is that why he was reluctant to jam with us?" Prez asked, starting to understand.

"Exactly. I mean, if you look at all the Core UNIT guys, there is something mentally wrong with all of them. I'm sure you've heard the comments about Juan, and for the most part, they ain't jokes. If someone hurts a kid, Juan would rather kill them than look at them. He is the total cold blooded killer. His abuse was a lot worse than many of them, though. Think about it, what would it take to turn a kid into a psychotic killer? I won't go into the details, but his personal 'doctor' thought it would be a great experiment to cut off his balls just to see if they would regenerate."

Prez bent over slightly in sympathetic pain as he started to shed tears. "Did they?" he asked, almost not wanting to know the answer.

"Yeah they did, with some help. They would have anyways, but someone helped move that along quicker. Jory is a bit better off, although he really has no social graces and is a bit obsessive when it comes to his explosives. Will is one hell of a cocky fly boy, but he has a right to be. He's been flying since before he could walk, and with what the docs did to all their intelligence, you can guess that he picked it up very quickly. Chang is actually the worst of the lot, although you would never really guess that. The main reason he is so emotionless at times is because he had to learn to control his temper. I have never personally seen him loose it, but I have heard stories. It wasn't pretty.

"All in all, they are a fantastic set of people, who would do anything they can to help people," Logan said with a sigh, "You just have to understand that they have their problems and learn to let them go. Adam is a damned good guitar player. I'm sure nowhere near Mike's caliber, but he's still damned good. But I will guarantee you that you won't get him on stage without a fight. However, that's a fight I want to have. He needs to get out there more."

Prez nodded thoughtfully then smiled, "I think I can set something up. And thanks for telling me all this. It helps to understand the people we'll be working with more."

The two little redheads from the newcomers had promptly shucked all their clothing and headed for the water. The other kids, ranging from eight to thirteen in age were hanging back nervously. The older man put his arm across the shoulders of one of them, pointing to the Vulcan security forces, and then to the Rimmers' rescued kids group. The kids seemed to take courage from that, and began to strip and head for the water themselves.

Adam saw the group that was standing up the beach and waved them over. Once they got there, Adam started the introductions. He turned towards the Rimmers and said. "Guys, I'd like to introduce you to the core group from the North East United States Division. First we have Jonas," Adam said pointing to the auburn haired teen boy. Then he pointed to the dark haired one, "Harry is the guy hanging onto Jonas." He said with a chuckle. After Jonas and Harry shook hands with the Rimmers, Adam turned to Jonas.

"Jonas, these guys are the Clan Short Pacific Rim Division, or as they're calling themselves, the Rimmers. Why don't you introduce the rest of your group?"

"Okay," Jonas said, pointing to the redheaded woman, "this is my mother, Maureen McConnaghay, and this," pointing to the other woman, "is Harry's mother, Abbie Johnson. Word of warning; never get on her bad side; her tongue could slice cold steel!" He grinned.

Then he gestured at the older man, who looked to be about fifty with salt-and-pepper hair. "And it gives me a lot of pleasure to introduce my brand new father, Judge Josiah Brewster of the Family Court."

"Over here we have State's Attorney George Wentworth and his older adopted son, Philip," indicating the younger man and the husky teen. "Philip's little brothers are those two little redheads down there in the surf, Drew and Randy. And the kids with them are brand new to our family, as of an hour ago."

Prez then quickly introduced his core team, starting with Keith and working his way round through Drew, Corey, John, Mike, Derrick and giving Kaleo special notice as one of the rescued kids.

Finally, after literally dozens of para-surfing passes back and forth across Anahola Bay, Khan noticed Runt signaling down that others were waiting their turn and allowed himself to release the tether.

Mike, Derrick and Keith were all wanting to take a turn para-surfing and were arguing about who would go next while the Huey and Khan returned to the beach. Spike sat in the center of Mike, Derrick and Keith, reverently looking up at Mike.

Off to the side slightly, John was jumping up and down whining; "Keith's gotta go next! Mom's gotta see him do it or she won't ever let me do it!"

Derrick looked down and noticed the way Spike was watching Mike. Realizing that Spike practically worshiped the ground Mike walked on, Derrick grinned and wondered how Spike might react to shiny microphone stands, shiny guitar pickup covers and shiny tuner pegs. It was all too much to fathom and Derrick bowed out of the argument, becoming hysterical. Mike and Keith continued playfully bantering to and fro.

Derrick couldn't hold it back, and he tapped the little ferret boy on the shoulder. Spike looked up with big wide eyes that just radiated innocence. "Yes?"

"I just gotta know," Derrick playfully wondered, "Why do you look at Mike like that?"

"Oh! Cause he's a Shiny maker. He makes Shiny music for us. I already asked Shiny High Priest Dave and he agreed. Shiny Mike will be our first human priest, leading us in worship of the Great Shiny with his shiny music. Such Honor has never been bestowed onto a non ferret before, but with Mike's love of shinys and his great music, it's only right to make him the first Human priest. Dave's getting his Shiny robes now, but he's gotta make them, as we got none that will fit such a big priest."

Derrick snickered, "How long before his Shiny robes will be ready?"

The little Ferret boy excitedly bounced on his feet. "The most Shiny Dave said that they would be ready before the Day-Shiny falls below the water shiny, and the Great Night Shiny rises into the air, and the lesser night shinys are out."

"Huh?" Derrick cocked his head to the side.

Only hearing the final part of the conversation, Mike sighed, "The sun, moon and stars, doofus."

"See?" Spike excitedly shouted. "He's gonna be a GREAT Priest! He knows! HE UNDERSTANDS!"

Mike wrapped his arm around Derrick's shoulders and explained to Spike; "We all understand. Derrick plays shiny drums with shiny rims and shinier cymbals. Derrick just doesn't fully grasp the shiny vocabulary."

Clasping his forepaws together and dropping to his knees, Spike blubbered, "Can I stay with you forever, please? Oh PLEEEASE!"

"Lemme check with our division leader," Mike giggled. Glancing around and finding Prez with Logan, Mike shouted, "Prez! Got a minute, dude?"

"Be right there," Prez loudly replied. Logan and Prez shook hands and together walked over to Mike, Derrick, Keith and Spike. "What's goin' on?" Prez smiled.

Derrick giggled, "Mike's being made the first human Shiny Priest!"

"I'm what?" Mike exclaimed.

Derrick nodded and snickered, "Spike wants to stay here with Mike too."

Prez looked over to Logan and said, "Well I'm not really sure.

Logan, what do you think?"

"Well," Logan began, trying to stop a smile while looking at Mike. "One of the things that being a Clan member means is that you can adopt. I'm sure Spike would love to have you as a Shiny Daddy."

"Oh YES!" Spike pleaded, "Please Shiny Mike, can you be my Shiny Daddy?"

Seeing the warmth and affection already clearly portrayed in Spike's eyes, Mike said, "If Prez says it's okay, I'd like it." Only to butter up Prez and to impress Spike, Mike explained, "Prez plays a shiny bass; it has shiny pickups and shiny tuning pegs."

"He does?" Spike gasped in awe.

"Shiny followers never lie," Mike grinned. "Keith plays shiny keyboards too. We all have our shiny favorites."

"Oh, I have died a shiny death, and now I'm living in the shiny fields," Spike whimpered. His face fell then and it looked like he might actually start to cry.

Mike immediately went to his knees in front of the small boy. "What's wrong?"

"I... I can't stay with you, not without my litter mates. We're the only family we really have," he said trying hard not to cry, and failing.

"How many are there?" Mike asked. "If they're all as cute as you are, I don't see why we can't have a few more." Seeing a more hopeful expression on Spike's face, Mike stood again.

"Really?" Spike cried with excitement. "Well, let's see... there's Xander, my brother, and my two sisters; Willow and Faith. We're the Scooby Gang!"

His heart melting, Prez smiled, "Tell your brother and sisters that the four of you can stay here if you like. We'll even change our band name from Old Habits to Platinum Habits. How does that sound?"

Spike dropped to his knees and grabbed Mike's ankle. "Oh, thank you, Shiny daddy! Thank you!" He blubbered as the tears streamed down his furry face. Quickly he ran off to gather his family. Almost everyone around them had a smile on their face, and tears in their eyes.

"Mike Gibbons, Holy Father of Ferrets," Drew giggled.

"The ferrets are the Shiny Rimmers!" Prez laughed.

Keith snickered, "Yet another rimmer joke! I can't take it!"

Skipper motioned Bobby and Brandon to join him, and then approached Keith. "Sounds like your mother is being protective of John. You heard what I said to her, right?" Keith nodded a little uncertainly. Skipper asked, "Are you a good, strong swimmer?"

"Well, yeah," Keith grinned, "If you're going to surf in the waves around here, you pretty well have to be."

"All right then," Skipper continued, "how would you like to be the 'victim' for a sea rescue? We can use the practice, and it should alleviate your mom's fears about John getting a chance to para-ski."

Keith grinned. "Cool, go for it!"

"Okay, then, start swimming out, and we'll take the other bird up and rescue you," Skipper said. Keith gave Skipper a thumbs-up, told his mother what was in the offing, and then darted down to the shoreline, starting to swim out. Skipper motioned to Little Andy, who hadn't been far away from his big brother and father figures. "Okay, Mister Loadmaster, one sea rescue coming up. Ready for it?"

The eight-year-old nodded his head vigorously, grinning ear to ear.

Skipper, Bobby, Brandon, and Andy hurried over to the other Huey. Brandon hurried forward, then stopped short. "Who's co-piloting?"

"Nobody; the Huey can be flown one-man. You're piloting," Skipper instructed, "The three of us will be needed in the back."

Brandon gulped and belted himself in, running quickly through the pre-flight checklist. "Ready!" he called back in his preteen treble.

"Take her up," Skipper instructed. "Keep her low, twenty-five to thirty feet. Head for where Keith's swimming out to." The ten-year-old did as instructed. Many of the rescued kids were watching with fascination as the small helicopter spun up and lifted off the beach. Prez was watching Keith too but noticed that Nathan was having a private chat with Derrick and Mike.

As he approached, Keith put on a good show of a swimmer panicking and drowning. The Huey came to a hover over where he was; Skipper and Bobby dove from it and easily swam over to him.

Andy dropped the rescue harness out the hatch. As Skipper buoyed up Keith, after telling him to go limp, Bobby belted him into the harness. Skipper wrapped his strong legs around Keith's waist and grabbed the line above Keith's head with both hands. Bobby wrapped himself around the two of them, clinging to Skipper's shorts with one hand and wrapping the other arm around Keith. He signaled Andy, who engaged the winch.

The line came taut, lifting the three of them from the water. Brandon struggled to keep the helicopter level.

As the harness came up level with the bottom of the copter, Skipper grabbed the ski and then a handhold in the hatch, and pulled himself up into the bird. The smaller Bobby followed suit a second later, and together they helped Keith into the Huey's cargo space and out of the harness.

Just then, a commotion arose among the rescued kids on the beach. A nine-year-old girl of apparent Chinese-Hispanic ancestry, Lupe Jui, was animatedly pointing out to sea and screaming, "She's going out too far! She's going out too far!"

Prez, Mike, Adam, Chang, Grace, and Jonas converged on her. Chang laid one hand on her and turned her head to meet his eyes. She looked into them. With a great deal of effort, the twelve-year-old oriental boy, now sporting Klingon brow ridges and a purplish cast to his skin, managed to calm her. "The last thing she said was she wasn't going to be a sex toy to those pointy-eared freaks," the little girl said, gesturing at the Vulcans. "Then she went down to the water and started swimming out."

Adam began to react, caught himself, and glanced at Prez. "May I?" he asked. Prez made a hand gesture that effectively said, 'go ahead.' Adam activated his comm-badge. "Skipper! Bobby! Get to that girl swimming out! This one's for real!"

Inside the helicopter, Skipper called out, "Do it!" Brandon rotated the helicopter and headed across the bay to intercept the girl.

"Not sure what's up," Skipper said. "Be ready for anything." He fiddled with the First Aid kit, drew out a hypo-spray, and slipped it in the pocket of the board shorts he was wearing. Bobby nodded. Over the sounds of the helicopter's engines and rotor blades, Keith couldn't hear what was going on, but looked out the open hatch. He saw the teenage girl in the ocean, further out from shore than he had been.

"Oh no!" Keith nervously complained, "Not today, not ever!"

"Come in low," Skipper called out. Brandon didn't respond, but skewed the copter into a descending trajectory, coming to a hover about twenty feet above the girl. The two paramedics dropped again. They swam over to the Anglo-Portuguese girl, who looked to be about fifteen.

"Get away from me!" she shouted. "I won't be your fuck toy, or anybody else's either."

"Get her!" Skipper told Bobby, moving in and drawing the hypo-spray. He injected her; she went limp, and began to sink. Bobby tread water, trying to support her.

Andy had meanwhile been playing out line. Now he tossed the harness down to them. "Lean against the left wall," Andy instructed Keith. Bemused that the little eight-year-old was giving him orders, Keith did as he was told.

The two paramedics got the girl into the harness and signaled Andy to activate the winch. As the combined weight of girl and two paramedics came out of the sea, the chopper tilted. Brandon fought it. At last the harness came level, and Skipper and Bobby repeated what they had done with Keith, drawing the naked body of the teenage girl on board. Skipper slammed the hatch; Brandon headed the 'copter for shore.

Bobby broke an ampoule of smelling salts under the girl's nose. As she came to, she said, "You should have left me. I won't put up with you two raping me!"

"Neither one of us has the slightest interest in sex with you, whether you are willing or not," Bobby said steadily. Gesturing at Skipper, he added, "He's all I want." Looking from the feisty little blond to the big brunet, Keith's eyes widened.

"You see all those people on the shore?" Skipper said to her. "They're either rescued kids like you, or people committed to ending the kind of stuff you had to go through, with the power to make that happen."

"Or both," Bobby added.

Keith told the girl; "Me and Prez are a couple; so are Derrick and Mike and Drew and Corey! Nobody in this Clan will ever take advantage of you sexually. Tonight we're giving all of you the choice of where you want to sleep and who with."

"And," Bobby continued, "that means 'sleep' as in sleep, not 'sleep with' as in sex. You're welcome to fall in love and have sex with the person you fall in love with, if you want, but you've had sex just because somebody made you for the last time – ever!"

Keith asked, "What's your name?"

"Melonie Correro," she answered.

"My mom's real good at listening to people," Keith began. "Would you talk with her please?" Melonie only shrugged and sighed.

The Huey set down in the sand at the far south end of the beach. All the adults and about two dozen kids, including the other core Rimmers, raced down the beach. Skipper opened the hatch door and jumped out into the sand. Bobby and Keith jumped out next. Skipper and Keith helped Melonie out of the 'copter.

"Mom," Keith called. Jennifer Hundser and Janet ducked down and stepped forward. "Can you have a chat with Melonie please?" Keith asked, and with an intense glare offered, "I think she has a lot to say."

Nodding understandingly, Jennifer took hold of one of Melonie's arms and said, "We'll take care of it." She then began to walk away from the 'copter with Janet and Melonie.

"Oh man!" John loudly whined, "now I won't get to get rescued!"

Jennifer's eyes almost shot from their sockets. She always knew John was special, but over the last day she wondered exactly how special.

"Who said we were done?" Bobby grinned.

Andy giggled, "Practice makes perfect!"

Keith grinned, "Come on, bro. We'll take a surfboard out and I'll dump you off to be rescued."

"YAAA!" John gleefully yelled and ran down to the shoreline. Bobby and Skipper jumped back into the Huey and it soon lifted off.

Keith grabbed a board and hurried back down to the water line. Laying down the board in knee deep water, Keith turned to John and said, "You just..." then began laughing his ass off.

John frowned, "What's wrong?"

After howling himself to tears, Keith leaned forward and softly snickered, "Lookin' forward to this, are ya?"

"Course!" John smiled.

"I can tell!" Keith laughed and pointed at John's crotch, "So can everyone else!"

"Oh! SHIT!" John hollered and quickly covered himself with both hands. Embarrassed beyond his years, John smirked, "Sorry, bro."

"It's okay," Keith giggled. "I was gonna have you lay on my back and hold on. It might be better if you got on the board first though now!"

"Wise guy!" John complained.

"No complaints here," Keith reminded, "I know what it's like." Noticing Prez watching them from the shore, Keith explained, "Think about gross stuff, like mom naked, so that the guys rescuing you don't get the wrong idea."

John grimaced, "Eww!"

Holding the board steady, Keith instructed, "After you!" and John slid onto the surfboard. Keith joined John and they began paddling out. Soon they were far enough out and the Huey piloted by Will with the tether hanging down roared by. Keith grabbed the tether and sat upright, squeezing the board tightly between his knees. The board suddenly jolted as the slack was taken up and John hollered, "YEAH!"

Keith instructed, "Whenever you're ready bro, jump off and the other dudes will rescue you."

"Okay!" John giggled, but remained on the board through the first two turns the Huey made. He then stood and waved his arms before jumping off the swiftly moving board and into deep water. Keith then released the tether so he would be close enough by to help if needed.

Brandon brought the rescue Huey low over John. This time Skipper jumped, but Bobby decided to descend on the rescue harness rope. When ready, he signaled Andy to run the winch backwards and descended smoothly. Skipper meanwhile had swam to John and fitted him with a flotation vest. John was loving being the center of attention.

Bobby brought the harness down, slid easily off it and began harnessing John into it. The body contact had the expected results on John, who blushed deeply. Bobby grinned. "No sweat kid; it happens to me all the time too."

"It's the helicopter ride," John loudly giggled, "it was stiff before I even got on the surfboard!" Bobby cracked up and laughed all the way back into the Huey.

As they helped John in, Andy giggled. Bobby laughed, "Don't embarrass him." Turning to John, Bobby said, "Wanna ride copilot? The copilot seat is open; just don't grab the wrong stick!"

Turning bright pink, John giggled then turned to hurry into the copilot's seat before any more remarks were made. John looked around at all the dials, displays and knobs on the control panel before him.

Intent on his piloting, Brandon didn't say anything as John sat down. He turned the 'copter towards the beach when he spared a minute to look over and then did a double-take.

"I can't help it!" John giggled and turned red again. "This is about as much as I've ever had."

Brandon couldn't help it; he burst out laughing. "Just about as much..." he got out and howled laughing.

John blushed even harder. "Just about as much FUN, I meant!" he laughed.

"That's pretty obvious," Bobby giggled.

Brandon meanwhile had gotten control of himself and brought the helicopter in for a landing. "Wanna go for a ride when we take this back up?" he asked John.

"Could I?" John squealed. Brandon nodded and John smiled widely, nodding frantically as if nothing could make him happier.

"Sure," Brandon said. He nervously eyed John's boner. "Ummm..."

John giggled, "It's that way cos I'm in a helicopter... in the copilot's seat!"

Brandon giggled and confided, "I get one whenever I'm piloting or co-piloting too."

"How old are you?" John wondered.

"Ten," Brandon replied.

John thought for a few moments then asked, "How'd you learn to fly? I mean, I'd love to learn, if my mom would let me."

"I learned in the TARDIS. But Bobby 'n' I could teach you, if we can get your mom to let us!"

John grinned devilishly, "Well, I'm here now. What my mom don't know won't hurt her. At least teach me what some of these buttons, dials and knobs do."

"Well, I think you already know what that knob does," Brandon giggled and pointed.

"That's a joystick!" John laughed. "I know a little, got three older gay brothers, after all. You gonna tell me what all of the knobs up here do?"

Laughing, Brandon began an explanation. "Here, grab this stick," he said. Giggling, John did. "That's the cyclic; it controls pitch and roll. This other lever is the collective. It controls the lift. If you're hovering, it makes the 'copter go up or down. If you've set the cyclic to forward pitch, it makes it move forward." He went on with his explanation, with John eating it up.

Mr. Hundser peeked inside the Huey and smiled, "How was the ride, John?"

Remaining seated, John looked back and hollered, "Awesome! Brandon's teaching me about the controls and stuff!"

Looking back, Brandon waved and smiled at John's dad. Jim Hundser smiled and waved at Brandon.

"Dad?" John innocently called. "Can I please stay in here for a while?"

"It would be fine with me," Brandon said. "I did invite John so it's cool. I like having him around."

Jim Hundser grinned and wondered if it would be best to let his son learn, but also considered the possible ramifications from his wife learning about this flight training. Finally, he admitted it would be good for John to have interest in flight since it was a necessary form of transportation across the islands. And the two boys were obviously becoming friends. "Okay," Jim Hundser said, "just for a little while. Pay attention and learn from Brandon."

"Thanks dad," John smiled, "I promise to pay close attention to Brandon."

Brandon giggled. Skipper looked in to say, "Brandon is a good pilot, Sir, and Bobby and I will be here helping coach John."

"Even better," Jim Hundser nodded, "have a good time." He then walked away from the helicopter.

Far away from all the other groups of kids and adults, Jennifer and Janet sat with Melonie.

"My mom and dad divorced when I was a baby," Melonie shared. "My mom died when I was ten."

"Do you know how exactly?" Janet softly asked.

Melonie sighed, "Oh, what does it matter? Since she died everything's gone to shit!"

"It matters because it might affect your health," Jennifer said. "Your life as it was with orphanages and foster parents is over now. We're going to help you, Melonie."

Melonie eyed the two adult women suspiciously. "What do want from me?" she sourly wondered.

"Not a thing," Janet assured. "All any of us wants, adults and kids alike, is to help you in every way necessary."

"The more you tell us, the better we'll be able to help you and the better you will feel from releasing the negativity of the past," Jennifer said.

Melonie slouched and said, "It was so long ago... they said my mom had something like a blood vessel explode in her brain. It happened while she was driving. She caused an accident. Other people were hurt. I was only in the orphanage a while when I was fostered to one family. They didn't like me and after a few months, I was back in the orphanage again. It went like that for a while; a few months in orphanages then a few months with fosters. When I was about thirteen I guess, the Haymons became my foster parents. That's when things got really bad." Hiding her face and weeping, Melonie said, "They used me, both of 'em, him and her and others too... for sex! I knew it was wrong, but when I said no, they beat me, put me to bed without supper and locked me in my room; usually just overnight, but for more than a day sometimes. As far as I'm concerned, sex is bad, always. I got pregnant once and they beat me for that too." She wailed, "I wanted that baby! They gave it no chance; gave me no chance."

"Did they abort the fetus?" Janet asked.

After a few moments of uncontrollable weeping, Melonie nodded, "Is that what an abortion is?"

Janet nodded and took Melonie's hand in hers. She softly asked, "Melonie, have you told anyone else this?" Melonie only rapidly shook her head. Janet looked at Jennifer and said, "She needs to be examined to find out."

"Examined?" Melonie screamed. "I knew it! You're just like the others!"

"No!" Janet loudly said, "No men around; just the three of us women. I'm a doctor and would simply like to know if the abortion was performed properly, so if you ever decide to have a baby, you may."

"What does it matter?" Melonie cried, "No one will ever care."

"That's where you're wrong," Jennifer corrected. "Janet and I care. Preston and Keith and all the boys that rescued you from bad foster parents care. The boys that rescued you from drowning care. They did it without knowing you and would do it again if they knew all your deepest secrets. You and I will talk more about this. We'll talk about your past, the present and your hopes for the future."

Uncertainly, Melonie made eye contact with Jennifer, but only for a moment. "I don't get it," She sighed and looked back down into the sand again. "Why does anyone care? You talk about the future like... there's something there... something worth living to see."

"There is, precious girl," Jennifer said.

"How you were treated was wrong in the worst ways known," Janet assured. "They were illegal acts in every civilized nation. Those that mistreated you and all the other kids on the beach have met justice. You will never see them again. All your fears and worries are past, over and done with."

"You'll be safe from those kinds of evil people from now on," Jennifer said. "My boys will make sure of it. Janet's boys and the rest of the UNIT will protect you for as long as you need or want protection. We'll take care of you; get you the medical care you need and help you release the past so you can live today and look forward to many tomorrows."

"Can you trust us to do that?" Janet asked.

Melonie shrugged and wearily answered; "I guess."

Down the beach, Prez was talking with Keith. Soon after Keith returned to shore after Melonie's rescue, the conversation began about her. Then Mike took a turn para-surfing with Spike. Derrick then took a turn with Xander. But now Mike and Derrick were surfing with their entire ferret family. It was a sight to behold and hysterical to both of Prez and Keith. Which reminded Prez; "When you and John were getting ready to paddle out before, what was so funny?"

"John was a little excited about it," Keith chuckled.

Prez only shrugged and grinned, "No big surprise there."

"No Prez!" Keith howled, "John was excited; as in visibly, hard as a fuckin' rock!"

"No way!" Prez loudly laughed. Keith nodded and laughed harder. Prez wondered, "From what; being rescued or about the helicopter ride?"

"The helicopter," Keith snickered.

"Where is he now?" Prez smiled.

"Dunno," Keith giggled, "I never saw him leave the 'copter, so he must still be in there."

Adam and Logan strolled nearby and Prez called them over. As they came near, Prez asked, "How're you two dudes doin'?"

"Good," Logan grinned. "Wishing it was warm like this in Utah."

"How're you two doing?" Adam asked slyly.

"Between Mike and Derrick and their ferrets, we're really good too," Keith giggled, still unable to shake his youngest brother's condition.

Prez locked eyes with Adam and smiled, "You know I trust and like you, right?"

Adam shrugged, "It was a rough start and I know it was partially my fault."

"It was a good test and when I asked, you answered honestly," Prez nodded. He then said, "Look inside my mind, Adam. Then you'll see what motivates me and why I acted the way I did. Just don't look in the room marked 'Keith - Private - Keep Out'."

Tilting his head uncertainly, Adam asked, "Are you sure, Prez? You really don't have to allow this you know?"

Prez nodded, "I'm sure. We will be working together again someday. I want you to know, without any doubt."

Adam closed his eyes and nodded. He frowned, then he smiled, then his face went blank and his fingers began slightly moving. A short minute or so later, Adam opened his eyes. He chuckled, "I just learned more music theory than I ever knew existed! Now I just need to try and apply it!"

Keith laughed heartily. Prez smiled and asked, "What else did you learn?"

"That you never really wanted command of this Clan or the UNIT."

Prez nodded, "And what else?"

"You took this division to make your parents, Keith and his parents proud."

"Go on," Prez prodded.

"You measure success by what is visible and audible. When these kids seem like they're happy or say nice things, you know you've done a good job. You're worried about Melonie, and don't really understand why she got depressed when most of the others seem to be adjusting alright. Your need of a UNIT brigade was justifiable and I agree about that. You honestly hope you'll never have to make use of them. The next time a life is in danger, I shouldn't wait for any approval from you before acting." Adam then paused and blushed.

Logan could barely believe his eyes and incredulously giggled, "ADAM!"

"WHAT?" Adam laughed at Logan, "It wasn't in the room marked 'Keith – Private – Keep Out!'" Turning to Prez, Adam shyly stammered, "I... umm... won't say a word aloud... ever!"

Prez also blushed and giggled, "If it's what I think you're referring to, Keith and I already talked about your cut abs and tight tushie!" Adam turned beat red while Keith and Logan laughed their asses off. Offering his hand to Adam, Prez smiled, "We're cool now?"

Adam shook hands with Prez and agreed, "Definitely! I'm looking forward to working with you, Prez."

Logan grinned at Keith and wondered, "Do we have to keep our eyes on our boyfriends?"

Shaking his head, Keith giggled, "Nah! Prez and I keep each other very happy. I trust him as much as he trusts me. He wouldn't have admitted his thoughts about Adam otherwise."

Logan nodded and huffed suspiciously, then scanned Keith from head to toe. Adam playfully shoved him and laughed, "You'd better stop!" Grinning, Logan looked up innocently then took off running down the beach to the water.

Adam wagged his eyebrows and giggled, "See ya later!"

Prez heard chirping and wondered, "What's that noise?" Keith shrugged then joined Prez following the foreign sounds. They found themselves standing before a pile of clothing and Prez asked, "What time is it, babe?"

Keith checked his watch and answered, "Quarter of five."

Kneeling down in the sand, Prez began digging through the clothes saying, "It can't be the Endeavour already!" Keith joined Prez in the search for his buried shorts and soon found them then dug the communicator out of the pocket.

Handing it to Prez, Keith grinned, "It's for you."

Squinting playfully, Prez sneered, "Someday!"

"Not today!" Keith giggled.

Prez opened the communicator and said, "This is Preston O'Brian."

"This is Lieutenant T'Rel aboard the Endeavour."

"How can I help you lieutenant?"

"We are about to beam up the food tables, Sir. In the same location we will beam down additional clothing and suitcases for your Clan. Please ask all persons to step back from the tables and notify me when we may proceed."

"Thank you, lieutenant. Give us a moment."

Keith stood and said, "I got this baby." Running over to the tables, Keith got everyone to finish grabbing whatever food they wanted and then step away.

Keith flashed a thumbs-up and Prez said, "We're ready now, lieutenant."

"Stand by."

"Okay," Prez stammered, "I'm sorry, acknowledged." The large food tables disappeared while Prez and everyone watched then a new set of tables appeared, loaded with all kinds of clothes. Barely five-seconds later, a large group of suitcases appeared beneath and around the tables. It seemed that every kid on the beach was racing towards the tables again. The adults, Keith and Kaleo were trying to hold back the rush while they figured out what was available.

"Transport complete," T'Rel said.

"Thank you, lieutenant," Prez smiled. "When should I expect your next call?"

"The next communications will be in approximately forty minutes Sir."

"Thanks again! This is awesome! The kids all appreciate your kindness. Please inform your Captain we couldn't be happier."

"Very well. T'Rel out."

Prez closed the communicator and sighed, "They ain't much for small talk." Looking up again, Prez noticed all the kids were being sorted; one line for boys, another line for girls and from shortest to tallest. Prez pulled his shorts and T-Shirt on, pocketed the communicator then hurried over to Lieutenant Vorik.

Noticing the new Director approaching, Vorik asked, "Is there a problem, Director O'Brian?"

"No," Prez huffed from running, "everything's great! I just have some questions about our new bases." Prez waited for a response, but since he got none and the Lieutenant was waiting, Prez wondered, "What can I expect there? We're all anxious and anything you could offer would be better than not knowing anything."

"I understand that all the children will be billeted at the main base," Vorik confirmed.

Prez nodded, "For at least the first few days, maybe longer."

Lieutenant Vorik tapped a few keys on his pad and turned it so Prez could see then explained, "This is an overhead view of your primary base at Ewa Beach. From the top northwest corner, you will find a helicopter and shuttle pad, a Federation Youth Services office building, and vehicle parking areas and a parking garage. The large ovular building is the Division Command Information Center with an attached auditorium. Below the CIC are housing facilities; from left to right there are town homes adequate for small families; three bedrooms, two baths, one half bath, approximately one thousand seven hundred square feet. Each town home building includes six units of similar size and function. Across and to the right are four dormitory buildings, with sufficient facilities for three hundred eighty-four individuals. To the right of the dormitories are four single family homes. They are approximately three thousand square feet, five bedrooms, five bathrooms and fully finished basements. All dwellings will have been furnished and will be ready for occupation. To the South are recreation facilities including a regulation soccer field, basketball courts, swimming pool, pool house and an indoor recreation facility. Finally, to the Southeast is an outdoor recreation area. As it currently exists, approximately forty-five acres of the seven hundred fifty acre lot are in use. Around the structures, all the previously existing vegetation has been untouched to provide security and privacy."

Wide-eyed and flabbergasted, Prez looked up and smiled, "This is... nothing less than remarkable! I really don't even know what to say except thank you, thanks to the Captain of the Endeavour and the entire crew. My only question is; where are the schools?"

Lieutenant Vorik entered a few more commands then turned the device back to Prez. "There are educational facilities to the southeast of the outdoor recreational area.

"This is the Ewa Beach 'Incoming' base. As you see, it is almost identical to the main base; the only exception being the removal of the CIC and the insertion of medical facilities. All other bases are arranged similarly. As for medical facilities, the main division hospital is at the Oahu UNIT base on the peninsula."

"Amazing!" Prez gasped.

Vorik nodded, "The facilities are adequate and serviceable."

At the understatement, Prez chuckled, "We're going to need maps to get around!"

"I will be leading an orientation tour this evening," Lieutenant Vorik said.

"Is there anything else you know that I prob'ly don't?" Prez grinned.

Raising an eyebrow, Lieutenant Vorik stated, "Tomorrow we will need to arrange education for use of the various Clan Short hardware devices and associated software. The education could take as little as two hours, depending on your team's ability to absorb the information."

Prez thought for a few moments then said, "We're all good students. I need to check with my team, but I believe we could begin that around noon."

"I will make arrangements for that hour and will keep it, unless notified by you that it needs to change," Lieutenant Vorik nodded, and then input the data on his pad.

Standing up straight and attempting to appear more formal and professional, Prez said, "Thank you, Lieutenant. If there is anything more required, let me know."

"Very well, Director O'Brian," Lieutenant Vorik said.

Prez waved and giggled, "See ya later," then raced over to where everyone was gathered around the tables of clothing. When he arrived, most of the youngest kids were being helped with packing their new Clan Short suitcases. Prez noticed that they now seemed to have the basic clothing necessities. Arriving near Mrs. Seaver first, Prez asked, "How's it goin'?"

Mrs. Seaver looked up for only a moment then continued helping and said, "The children have a week's worth of underwear and socks, sneakers to go with the sandals they already have, a few pair of jeans, T-shirts, button down sport shirts and windbreakers too."

"Can you think of anything else they may need?" Prez wondered.

Mrs. Seaver shrugged, "This is fine for everyday wear, but they would eventually need shoes and dress clothes."

"We'll deal with that when we need to," Prez said, and then smiled at the boy. "What do you think, Richie? Do you like your new clothes?"

Richie Grunert looked up and smiled, "It's kewl! I never had new clothes before. John said I'll have my own bed too! Is that for real?"

Laying a hand gently on the boy's shoulder, Prez nodded, "A new bed of your very own, and anything else you want or need, I promise. Ya know what else we're gonna do tonight?"

Richie looked down and softly offered, "Chores?"

Taken aback, Prez acted less shocked than he truly was and shook his head violently. "Nope, we're gonna play video games! And listen to music! And watch TV! And just hang out, so we can get to know each other!"

Richie delightfully squealed, "Really?"

"Really," Prez chuckled, "from now on your main job is to be the very best Richie you can be! All that means is school, which even I still have to do. But you can try all kinds of new stuff, if you want."

"Like what kinds o' stuff?" Richie wondered.

"You can play soccer or basketball or volleyball or tennis, or swimming in our pool. Or maybe you might like to try painting, or playing piano like Keith, guitar like Mike, drums like Derrick or bass guitar like me. Basically anything you want to try that you've always wanted to but never could."

"Won't I have to do any chores?"

Mrs. Seaver smiled at Richie and assured, "All you'll need to do is keep your new bedroom tidy. We'll have a service do all the cleaning and painting and lawn work, so you kids can be kids."

Prez locked his eyes on Mrs. Seaver and asked, "You've been considering all that?"

"Of course!" Mrs. Seaver giggled. "Did you think we weren't making any plans? You can't think of everything Preston; not even with your team helping you. Laura Gibbons, Anna Seibert and I have already resigned from our jobs. Our new jobs are going to be helping all these boys and girls every way we can."

"What about my folks?" Prez asked.

She said, "Your mom and dad will be handing in their notices Monday. Mike's and Derrick's fathers will be doing the same." She paused and closed up the suitcase for Richie, smiling, "There you are; all set. It's even got your name on it so you'll always know it's yours."

"Thank you, Mrs. Seaver," Richie softly grinned.

"The price is one kiss on the cheek!" Mrs. Seaver teased. But Richie giggled, leaned over and gave her a peck anyway.

Before he ran off, Prez took hold of him again and said, "Find your clothes and get dressed Richie. We're going to our new home soon and we can't be naked all the time. Let's at least transport with our clothes on, okay bud?"

"You should talk!" Mrs. Seaver giggled.

Prez blushed and laughed. While Mrs. Seaver began packing the suitcase for the next child in line, Prez bellowed, "CAN I HAVE YOUR ATTENTION PLEASE?" Once most everyone had turned his way, Prez loudly said, "When everyone is packed, we're heading to our new homes! If you're just waiting in line or not otherwise occupied helping some of the little tikes, get dressed. After we get home and get some supper, we'll decide what to do next and whether it requires clothes or not."

"What are we doing for supper?" Mr. Seibert playfully hollered.

Smiling, Prez shrugged and loudly said, "Whatever ya want. Put a plate of food in front of me and I'm happy." While they were helping kids pick clothes, Keith, Derrick and Mike began laughing. Prez noticed both helicopters were nowhere to be seen on the beach or in the sky.

Already dressed again, Nathan, John and Bruce ran over to Prez. John asked, "Can we have pizza for supper, Prez?"

"Let's wait and see what the adults have in mind bro," Prez said. "It might be even better than pizza."

"Nothin's better than pizza," John softly frowned.

Prez giggled, "But pizza for over two hundred? We're talking like a hundred and eighty pizzas!"

"We're good for the local economies," Nathan slyly chuckled. "Whatever you need for tonight and tomorrow, Prez, I'll let Daileass know. You'll learn from me and Daileass how to place similar orders."

"Oh God!" Prez laughed, "You're right! We can't exactly go grocery shopping for a hundred plus, can we?"

Smirking, Nathan shrugged, "If you want to load a three-quarter ton van every other day, you can if you want, but it's better to just order bulk and have it delivered by truck."

Prez playfully rambled, "I'd like twenty dozen eggs, thirty gallons of milk, forty boxes of assorted cereals..."

"You're not too far off the mark!" Nathan laughed. "Daileass will get you hooked up with all our regular suppliers for food, clothes, households and general merchandise. That way you won't have to worry about security clearances, it's all been done already."

"Are you listening to this Daileass?" Prez wondered.

"Heard every word, Prez," Daileass assured via the sub-vocal.

Mr. Hundser walked up and placed a hand on his foster son's shoulder. "What's up, dad?" Prez smiled.

"We've decided on tonight's dinner," Mr. Hundser began. "We'd like to barbecue; maybe some chicken, hot dogs, burgers and sausages for the kids. The parents are leaning more towards salmon and jumbo shrimp. Some assorted salads would be nice too."

"I'll take care of it, Prez," Nathan said.

Mr. Hundser scowled, "How are you going to handle all that? The four fathers were planning on taking two or three cars to the grocery store just for dinner!"

Nathan smiled and held up a finger. "Daileass, we'd like to place our dinner order now."

"Go ahead, Nathan," Daileass responded.

Nathan said, "We're barbecuing tonight. We'll need two hundred hamburgers and buns, two hundred hot dogs and buns, two hundred mild sausages, twenty chickens cut into parts... better make that thirty chickens... twenty salmon steaks and a hundred jumbo shrimp. Now for condiments; twenty bottles of ketchup, another twenty of spicy and mild mustard, relish, pickles, hamburger dill slices, mayonnaise and tartar sauce, and two fifty-five gallon barrels of barbecue sauces. We'll also want twenty gallons of macaroni salad and twenty gallons of potato salad. Course we'll need sodas, juices, water, milk and something nice for the adults, a case of beer and a case of white wine. Don't forget cookies by the case and plenty of fruits for the gorillas. Got all that?"

"I've got it, Nathan," Daileass assured. "I've also placed standard orders for your food for tomorrow and Monday. Eggs, pancakes, waffles or cereals for breakfast. Assorted lunch meats and breads for lunch. Pasta and meatballs with side salads for dinner tomorrow night. And how about London broil and baked potatoes for Monday night?"

"Sounds great!" Prez cheered.

Daileass said, "All this will be delivered to the main Ewa Beach base before six-thirty this evening local time. Please inform Adam that security and quartermasters will need to be in place before then. It's all been paid for out of the account Logan showed you this morning."

"You rock, dude!" Prez smiled.

Daileass giggled, "I aim to please! Anything else, guys?"

"Lemme check, just a moment," Prez said. Then he glanced around asking, "What else do we need?"

"Grills, tables and chairs?" Mr. Hundser grinned.

"OH!" Prez snickered, "Daileass, will we have grills, tables and seating for about three hundred?"

"There are twenty-five gas grills on your base;" Daileass replied, "four near the single family homes, one for each town-home and the others at the north end of the outdoor recreation area. Your CIC should have more than sufficient seating for everyone. There are plates and silverware in the CIC kitchen too."

"Thanks, dude," Prez said. "Catch ya later, okay?"

"You bet! Just give a shout if you need anything," Daileass said.

"We've got lots of grills, tables and chairs for everyone dad," Prez assured and then laughed, "This is nuts! This morning I was wondering how I would feed, clothe and house everyone! In a day it's all been done!"

"These kids are important to all of us, Prez," Nathan reminded. "If you can't do the basic stuff, we're in a lot of trouble!"

Prez nodded and said, "I gotta tell Adam that we need security setup on the new base. The food trucks will arrive by six-thirty."

"Gotcha covered, Prez," Nathan said. He then tapped his comm-badge and called, "Adam?"

"What?" Adam giggled.

Nathan grinned, "Prez is getting everyone ready to move onto the main Oahu base. We've already contacted Daileass for food."

Everything will be rolling in by six-thirty, so we need quartermasters and security."

"We're busy!" Logan interrupted, "Tell Donnie to get his teams over there and in place."

"Yeah," Adam giggled, "That sounds like a plan!"

Nathan snickered, "Where the hell are you both?"

"Wouldn't you like to know!" Logan laughed.

"HEY!" Nathan shouted.

"Adam out!" both Adam and Logan chorused.

Prez grinned, "What happened?"

Nathan frowned, "He shot me a telepathic bird!"

"What're friends for?" Prez chuckled.

Shaking his head sadly, Nathan softly commented, "They'll regret that!" and then tapped his comm-badge again. "Donnie?"

"Yeah Nathan, what's up?" Nathan repeated his message and Donnie replied, "Got it prepped and ready to go; two at the Iroquios Avenue entrance, two at the North Road entrance, another two at the housing area checkpoint, and four gorillas roaming looking for lurkers. Is Prez there with you?"

"Right here Donnie," Prez chimed.

"Just say when Prez."

Prez grinned, "I'm expecting the Endeavour any minute. When is now."

"Done," Donnie answered. "We'll see you guys there. Donnie out."

Prez picked up the rest of the clothes in the pile nearby then stood and grinned, "Lemme get my Core Rimmers dressed."

"Good idea," Nathan agreed.

"Director O'Brian," Lieutenant Vorik called.

Carrying clothes with him to meet with Lieutenant Vorik, Prez answered, "Yes Sir?"

"Now that you have sufficient security, my team and I will be leaving as soon as you depart for Oahu. I will meet you there at twenty-hundred hours to begin familiarizing your Clan with the facilities."

"Excellent!" Prez chirped. "Eight tonight should work fine. Thank you for everything, Lieutenant. I look forward to seeing you later tonight."

The rest of the Core Rimmers had come up to Prez right at the end of the conversation and were just waiting for the transport when Juan and Jory ran up to them. "HEY GUYS!" Jory loudly huffed, obviously slightly out of breath.

Juan grinned, "We'd been looking all over for you guys."

"What's up, dudes?" Prez asked, matching their grins

"We kinda forgot something earlier, and I think you guys and your kids would be the perfect people to test them out on!" Jory rushed out.

Mike held up his hand to try and slow him down. Trying hard not to laugh, Mike chortled, "Wait a minute, what do you mean. Start at the beginning, what did you forget?"

"We forgot about the bears!" Jory said quickly, then Juan slugged him hard in the shoulder. "OWWWW! What?"

"Let me do it asshole, you're confusing them!" Juan said, getting ready to hit his brother again.

"FINE! You do it," Jory exclaimed, while still grinning.

"See it's like this. You guys met Galli right?" Juan asked. When he got affirmative nods from all of them, he continued. "Well, a little while ago, Galli, Jory, Joel and I came up with something to help all the kids that we'd rescued. Right now, we got lots of them at the UNIT base, but to be honest, that's not really a good test of them; so we figured we'd ask if you guys wanna test them out for us."

"Okay, why not first tell us what 'they' are?" Prez chuckled, trying hard not to laugh at the enthusiasm of the confusing younger boys.

Jory punched Juan on the shoulder and jumped in; "See, you ain't doing no better!" He turned toward the group and started up where Juan left off. "See, we were looking to make something that would not only help the kids, but also be able to protect them, so we made teddy bears. We'd like to know if you guys would like to give them out to your group and see if they want them."

"Sure, why not," Mike shrugged. "I can see that; lots of kids would love to have a teddy bear. I mean I had one till I was almost twelve. What harm could they cause?"

"Well, these ain't your normal Teddy bears," Juan said, grinning even wider.

"What do you mean by that?" Keith asked suspiciously.

"Well, see, these ones are actually sort of like android teddy bears," Juan tried to explain. "They're actually only VI which means they aren't actually intelligent, but they have some very complicated programming. They ain't ever going to become sentient, like an AI would."

"Okay, I've heard about AI, but what's VI?" Prez asked.

"Virtual Intelligence!" Juan, Jory and Drew all said at the same time. The Core Rimmers all had eyes on Drew with the same look; explain.

Juan said, "See, AI is like an actual living person; they can learn, they can do things that a normal computer can't. Virtual Intelligence, is different. It cannot learn, at least not anything past it's programming. If a VI is not programmed to do something, it can't learn how to do it."

"Okay, so what do these teddy bears do?" Mike softly wondered.

"It's really simple actually. They make friends with one of the kids," Jory explained, now over his initial excitement. "At that point, the bear acts as a friend for the kid. It will never betray them, never hurt them, never tell any of the kid's secrets, and most important, if someone tries to hurt the kid, the bear will protect the kid no matter what."

"Protect? How?" Drew asked.

"Well, they were programmed in fighting by Chang himself; who, as you know, is the UNIT's bad ass amongst bad asses. Not to mention that they all have retractable four inch claws that extend out of their fingers. Sort of like Wolverine in the X-Men comics," Juan explained, now in his 'teacher' mode. "If someone tried to hurt their friend, the bear would react and protect the child."

"But what if the kids are just wrestling around?" John asked.

"Well, first, they know the difference between someone trying to hurt the kid, and someone just playing. Second, they will always warn the person before they attack. If the person backs off, and the child can escape, the bear will not attack." Jory said. He and Juan were taking turns explaining different bits of the bears.

"Cool!" John exclaimed. "Can I get one; just to see what they're like?"

"SURE!" Juan cried out excitedly at seeing someone actually wanting one of the bears; someone who wasn't in the UNIT base. He pulled out a data pad, and hit a few buttons, then handed it to John. "We got about fifteen different types, different sizes, and colors. Just pick out which one you'd want, and I'll have Daileass transport it over."

John looked over the available options, and finally came up with what he wanted, a brown furred, blue eyed, male bear, that was as big as they were made, which was forty inches tall. As soon as John made his decision, Juan made a few entries then called Daileass for delivery.

Little more than a minute later, a three-foot four-inch Teddy bear materialized next to Juan, looking exactly as John had picked out. The bear looked up at Juan, and all Juan did was point to John. The bear's face broke out in a huge grin and quickly waddled over to John. "Hi!" it said in a very life like, child like voice. "I'm Zed. What's your name?" Some of the kids further down the beach saw the Teddy bear actually walking. Word spread like wild-fire.

John was grinning, as was everyone else. "I'm John."

"Hi John, can I be your friend?" Zed asked, looking up at John with his big blue eyes.

Juan quickly jumped in before John could answer. "That's how it bonds to someone. If you say yes, it will bond with you, until either you decide you don't want him anymore, or until it is destroyed. Just so you know." Juan wanted to make sure that John understood, which he did.

John thought about it for less than a minute, then looked back down at the bear. "Yes, I would love to be your friend."

A human wave of about thirty kids, mostly under ten years old, converged on John and Zed.

Chapter 4

Ewa Beach, Oahu; CSPRD Main Base

Saturday, October 30, 5:45 PM

In only a few minutes, Anahola Bay beach was emptied of all people, ferrets, G-Cats, gorillas and Teddy Bears thanks to Daileass, the Endeavour's transporters and Peter Lambert. Everyone was transported to the north end of the outdoor recreation area, near where fourteen gas barbecue grills had been installed. The first buildings seen were the massive Command Information Center and the attached auditorium.

Donnie had already prepared a quartermaster team to organize the CIC kitchen. Daileass began transporting food directly into the walk-in freezers, refrigerators and pantries as soon as Kenny Butler and Frankie Long were ready and requested the transports.

Donnie, Kaleo, Tory and the group of rescued kids began their tour with the expansive outdoor recreation area and its six sand volleyball courts. Prez, the remaining Core Rimmers and their families were following Emily on a tour of the housing area. They walked across the double-wide base driveway, onto the sidewalk and turned left around the exterior of the first of four homes. In the distance, about five hundred feet away, a row of town-homes were seen.

"Your days of carrying house keys are over," Emily grinned. Leading the families to the first house's door, she explained, "These doors use voice-print analysis and fingerprints for access. We'll program each home for the family members later, but right now, you only need to choose which home will be for which family. They're all very much the same, but once your personal belongings are delivered, they will easily become a home."

"It's easily twice the size of our other home!" Mrs. Seaver excitedly giggled.

Prez said, "According to Lieutenant Vorik, they're about three thousand square feet and have full basements." Pausing while Emily unlocked the door using security voice override, Prez followed everyone else inside the entryway, then continued, "They said there would be some basic furnishings..."

"Basic?" Mr. and Mrs. Seaver laughed. The entryway floor was finished with ceramic tile and the walls were a very pale frost-green color. Above them, inside the entry, hung a beautiful crystal chandelier. Mike, Derrick, Drew, Corey, John and Bruce hurried up the carpeted stairs.

"This is beautiful!" Mrs. Seibert cheered.

Stepping into the living room, Emily smiled, "The Vulcans know that us humans like earth tones and bright cheery spaces. Everything's been based on psychological evaluations, from the carpet and flooring colors to the paints used on the walls and ceilings." The living room walls were sky blue and the thick carpet was grass-green with small brown and tan splotches, making it appear very much like the outdoors. Furnishings included a sectional sofa that could easily fit eight adults comfortably, a teak coffee table and matching lamp tables. There was also a sixty-inch flat screen television, DVD/VHS combo and surround sound speakers. All the adults, Keith and Prez followed Emily through the dining room, furnished with a massive table for twelve, and into the kitchen.

"I love it!" Jennifer Hundser finally said. "Even the window treatments are lovely!"

The eat-in kitchen walls were a soft pastel yellow on the top with a chair rail at thirty inches off the floor, and the bottom third of the walls seemed to be genuine oak paneling. Glancing around at the oversized refrigerator, stove, oven and microwave, Jim Hundser wondered. "All the houses are like this?"

Emily answered, "The town-homes are slightly smaller, but they have the same psychological color schemes, functional furnishings and appliances, just on a scale appropriate for that size home."

Racing down the stairs, the boys were loudly laughing and commenting on what they had seen in the upstairs bedrooms.

Grinning from ear-to-ear as he entered the kitchen, Mike looked into his parents' eyes and chuckled, "Ya know that master bedroom suite you always hoped for? It's upstairs; the room's gotta be thirty-feet by forty-feet! There's a king-sized bed, beautiful dresser and chest of drawers, and the master-bath..." Mike laughed, "You've got a shower, tub and a huge whirlpool tub that could easily fit four adults!"

"There's also two recliners and your own entertainment center!" Derrick giggled.

Drew smiled, "The other four bedrooms and bathrooms up there ain't nothin' to sneeze at either!"

Enthusiastically nodding, Corey added, "There's bookshelves, computers, desks, stereos and TVs in every room."

Drew suggested, "Let's check out the basement," and began looking for the correct door.

While the families continued inspecting their new home, Donnie led the pack of kids to the indoor recreation facility, through it and into the pool house. They were soon surrounding the Olympic-sized pool and fifty foot diameter circular diving well. Kaleo and Tory didn't wait for permission before stripping their clothes off. Tory raced over to the slide and Kaleo climbed the ladder to the five-meter high diving board. Soon, half the kids were naked again and jumping in the pool with their Teddy bears. Most of the others just dove in clothes and all. The remaining twenty or so kids were quite happy watching the others and chatting with their new Teddy bears. What was most amazing was that the Teddy bears were swimming and acting as flotation devices for their new best friends. They were also programmed in first aid, and if necessary, could resuscitate their child.

The adults had finished learning about their new living arrangements and decided they had better get started cooking and feeding the masses. All the adults and the four oldest Rimmers were conscripted to cook and they began the trip back to the outdoor recreation area. Emily notified Kenny and Frankie to get burgers, hot dogs, sausages, chicken and everything else ready to feed the Clan.

Once they reached the grills, they looked over and saw something that made all of them stop. First of all, walking towards them were two kids; one of them was only eight years old, and the other was thirteen. With them was a rather short-furred critter walking upright with extremely long legs and arms. The Rimmers had met the gorillas, ferrets, and G-Cats; now it was time for them to meet their first Chimp.

However, while he was slightly interesting, what came behind the group of three was even more interesting. Lumbering behind them were fifteen vehicles. They were about six feet tall, three feet wide and eight feet long. They looked like bright boxes on top of two independent rubber Caterpillar-style tracks.

When they got close to the grills, the Chimp pointed to the different grills and each of the lumbering boxes went to a grill, with the final one staying with the Chimp. The Chimp then climbed up onto the top of the remaining box and spoke loud enough for everyone to hear. "Okay everyone, these are Smart Shelves. They are all voice-operated so anything you need, just say what it is, and the drawer that it is in will open. Please make sure you put things back where you got them. These are also partially refrigerated, which means some of the compartments, the ones holding the meats, cheeses, and other things to be kept cold, are refrigerated. If you run out of something, it will go back to the kitchens and get it. They also have four slots that are heated so that what you cook will stay warm. If you have any questions, feel free to ask Frankie, Kenny, or myself. By the way, you guys can just call me Chef."

Glancing at Jim Hundser, Rob Gibbons smirked, "Gorillas, G-Cats, ferrets and now chimps!"

"At least he's dressed," Jim Hundser softly chuckled, "not like the chimps at the zoo at all."

"All right folks," Bill Seaver loudly said, "Chicken takes the longest to cook, so let's start with them."

Then all the adults and the four eldest Rimmers moved to man a grill.

Harry's mother, Abbie Johnson, came over to Rob Gibbons and said, "I have many years of experience as a short order cook. I can help."

"Thank you, Abbie. With over three hundred to feed, we'll take all the help we can get," Rob Gibbons smiled.

"I'll take the last two grills then," Abbie offered and started for her stations.

Drew and Corey went to Bill Seaver. Corey asked, "How can we help, dad?"

Bill Seaver thought for a moment then answered, "You guys can just take it easy for a while. Once we start the burgers, hot dogs and sausages, you two can get the buns ready. If kids don't start smelling food and come running, you two can spread the word and get everyone."

Drew nodded and suggested, "I can hear them, let's go find 'em, Cor."

As they started to walk away, Corey softly giggled, "We're the Bun Rimmers!"

Laughing hysterically, Drew playfully shoved Corey and chortled, "Spread 'em!" Corey howled.

Everyone at the grills turned to their automated Smart Shelves and in their own words commanded, 'give me chicken'. Shelves opened with chicken parts and grills were loaded down with breasts, legs, thighs and wings.

Closest to Chef, Prez said, "We're gonna need barbecue sauce." Unexpectedly, a drawer opened loaded with bottles of sauce. Staggering back, Prez chuckled, "Sweet!" and closed the drawer. Keith noticed that Prez was just commanding the Smart Shelves UNIT to see what he had available. Keith turned to his Smart Shelves UNIT and did the same, since he had the time while chicken cooked. Soon all the others were testing their Smart Shelves. They had everything necessary in the drawers: all the meats and fish and barbecue sauce. It would only take time to finish the chicken, then they could move on. Loudly, so everyone could hear, Prez asked, "Hey Chef, when we get food cooked and these UNITs start moving out and replacing themselves, what's the plan?"

Chef answered, "Start getting everyone over to the CIC dining room. Tables will be set with all the condiments and it'll be like any other cafeteria; kids go through the line, get what they want and go find a seat."

"Kewl beans," Prez smiled, "thanks, man."

Chef grinned madly and playfully retorted, "Chef or Chimp, not man. Chimps designed these Smart Shelves, not man."

Prez giggled, "That's awesome! Maybe a couple of you chimps might like to stick around here in paradise?"

"Thank you for the offer," Chef nodded. "I'll ask my team and anyone that wishes may remain here."

At the pool, Drew and Corey found themselves surrounded by all the kids and Teddy bears that chose not to go swimming. The group told Drew and Corey about all the great stuff they had already been shown by Donnie before the pool was discovered. A few of them, including four-year-old Kokaku Kidotai, five-year-old Geoffrey Eckel and ten-year-old Dee Vanderwood, took their new leaders into the indoor recreation facility. The building itself was absolutely beautiful with exterior walls that seemed to be made of a polarized transparent material that neither boy had ever seen before. Drew and Corey were amazed at all the stuff inside. There were handball courts, a sixteen-lane bowling alley, weights and Nautilus equipment, separate showers and latrines for boys and girls as well as sauna rooms and a fully stocked equipment room. In the pool house, they found changing rooms and a jacuzzi that could easily fit ten adults or twenty kids. Everything they saw was as good or better than any health club or YMCA.

Drew and Corey went back to the barbecue grills and shared what they had learned with Keith and Prez. While the head Rimmer and his partner went to check out the other facilities, Drew and Corey manned their grills. When Prez and Keith returned, Mike and Derrick went. By the time Mike and Derrick returned, the first batch of chicken was cooked. Sausages by the dozens were placed on the grills next.

Drew and Corey were feeling very happy with their new homes and shared their enthusiasm while they went from Smart Shelf to Smart Shelf offering to spread buns. The adults were considering which house would be chosen and for which family. Since all the houses were similar, the only choice to be made was based on who needed to be closest to the dorms in the event of an emergency. Based on that criteria, the Hundserts' and Gibbons' homes would be closest to the dorms. The Seiberts' and the Seavers' homes would be closest to the outdoor recreation area. Closest to the pool would be the Gibbons and Seavers.

After Mike had flipped the sausages on his grill, he turned to Derrick and asked, "Have you seen Spike or any of the ferrets?"

Derrick giggled, "Shiny Daddy misses his ferret kiddies?"

Mike laughed, "They're ferrets! Spike got my guitar pick without me even noticing! Since I don't see a single ferret, something's goin' on somewhere, I just know it!"

"Thank goodness Adam laid down the law earlier," Derrick smiled. "The islands would be stripped bare of all shinnies within a day!"

Moving between Mike and Derrick, Prez softly reminded, "We're going to have to lay down some laws of our own. Imagine our mothers taking off their wedding rings to shower and having them disappear? The screams would be heard all over the island!"

Mike nodded, "Good point and very true." Street lamps around the complex began to automatically turn on with the darkening sky.

Adam and Logan walked up to Prez with a PADD. "These are the operating procedures for the CIC," Adam explained. He paused and called over Keith, Drew and Corey then gave each of them a PADD containing the manual. "Okay," Adam began, "everything you need to know about the CIC is in this. It may refer you to the electronic manuals in the CIC for highly technical stuff, like wiring, cabling and software, but the basics are right here in this. Only the Toy Rimmers will probably ever need to see the tech manuals." Flipping quickly through the screens of information, Adam described, "The manual begins with a table of contents and has a really extensive index at the end. You'll never have a problem finding what you need. Then we have a floor plan of the entire CIC. As you'll see on the floor plan, there are several main rooms; the CIC itself, a recreation room, a dining room, conference rooms and kitchen. Also, there are bathrooms, closets, an equipment room and a server room." Looking up and making eye contact with Drew, Adam said, "You've got Mac servers and Linux servers already configured. They're up and running; your CIC is now fully connected to the other Clan divisions.

"Also, in the server room are test beds for both the Mac Platform and Linux platform. If you find out something's not working well or is not already installed, create and test your software updates on the test beds. Do not ever make changes directly to main servers without first notifying CIC Orlando. If we like your upgrades and they test out successfully across all the CIC test platforms, we'll roll 'em out to the main servers and you'll get credit for your work."

Drew nodded and smiled, "Sweet! Can I hook up my own Linux workstation to the test bed? That way I can work from home, if I need to."

"Not a problem on the test bed," Adam assured, "Cory and Sean Short do similar stuff."

Logan sternly repeated and warned, "Always do your work on the test bed. All the CIC's are interconnected. Unknown software will be automatically identified and removed from the primary servers. There goes all your hard work, into the bit bucket."

"Yikes!" Drew softly squealed.

"The CIC uses Mac workstations," Adam continued. "It's all intuitive stuff. There are icons on the desktop to accomplish tasks you'll need to use almost every day, from communications to database searches. Some stuff is voice activated too, so you won't even have to type in commands. Our stuff is state of the art, integrating Vulcan technology. Most American corporations haven't come close to stuff we use all the time."

Noticing the expressions on all the core Rimmers' faces, Logan grinned, "Everyone has that worried look again! Take it easy; you'll be surprised how easy this equipment is to operate. If you ever get lost, just contact Daileass, and he'll get someone here to walk you through it."

Scanning quickly through the PADD's screens, Prez noticed, "There's only a hundred pages here and a third of 'em are the contents and index."

"None of it's highly technical, in here anyway," Drew smiled.

"We'll have some reading to do tonight though," Keith sighed.

"Don't worry, bro," Drew teased, and backed up a few steps, "I'll help you through all them big two- and three-syllable words!"

While everyone else giggled, Keith squinted at Drew and warned, "Ready for another telepathic ice bath?"

"Noooooooooo!" Drew laughed.

Jim Hundser loudly called, "The sausages should be done now, boys."

"Okay, dad," Prez chuckled. Facing Adam and Logan again, Prez smiled, "Dinner should be ready in another half an hour or so."

"Kewl," Adam grinned evilly, "See ya later." He and Logan then walked off in the direction of the pool.

Prez, Keith, Mike and Derrick chanted, "See ya," then turned their attentions to the grills.

In the distance, they could see some of the younger kids with their Teddy bears coming across the field towards them. Bringing up the rear and appearing to be an escort for the younger and smaller kids was Reyes. Prez began giggling at the Teddy bears because they seemed to be struggling to keep up on their short legs. John, Bruce and Lindsay were in the pack too.

Geoffrey went over to Drew while Richie went to Prez. Dee went to Keith, Kokaku went to Jennifer Hundser, Carmella went to Jim Hundser and six year old Dillon Helde went to Mike. Reyes and his shadow Jonah went directly to Derrick. All the kids were getting hungry again. Through his comm-badge, Prez called Kaleo. "Prez to Kaleo." It took longer than expected for Kaleo to reply, clearly indicating Kaleo was at least shirtless.

A few seconds later, Kaleo said, "Hey, Prez."

"Dinner will be ready soon, Kaleo," Prez said. "Get the tribe over to the CIC dining room. Let them get started on the salads or whatever else is there...."

"No snack foods, Preston," Jennifer Hundser forcefully reminded.

Prez giggled, "Mom says no cookies or other snacks, real food only."

"I'll try to control their sugar addictions," Kaleo snickered; "it'll prob'ly be a lost cause though!"

"Do the best ya can," Prez smiled. "If I see you running from a pack of hungry cookie monsters and their Teddy bears, I'll know you lost the battle." Richie had wrapped an arm around his thigh. Prez smiled down at the boy that had attached himself.

Kaleo laughed, "Over and out!"

While loading grills with hamburgers, the Core Rimmers and their parents heard out of sync chorus' of "YAAAAAAYYY!"

"We're going to be over run!" Rob Gibbons nervously laughed.

Off to one side, Jonas from the Northeast Division motioned to his partner, Harry and to the little Mikyvis Peter. They talked in low tones for a few moments, and then Peter disappeared.

Once the grill was full of hamburgers, Prez smiled down at Richie and asked, "Ya hungry, little dude?"

Richie nodded and asked, "Can I have supper with you?"

"I'd like that, Richie," Prez assured, and then glanced over at Keith. Sitting on the grass barely a foot away from Keith was Dee, having a conversation with his Teddy bear. Keith smiled at Prez and shrugged.

"Hey Richie?" Prez softly said. The boy looked up and smiled. Prez asked, "Do you know your birthday?"

Richie nodded, "Febr'ary fiteemph."

"You're almost six! Wow, you're gonna be a big boy before we know it!" In the distance, Prez noticed that some kids were now moving from the pool through the housing area into the domed CIC.

"I guess," Richie giggled.

"What's your Teddy's name?"

"I named him RG2. My initials and my second part."

RG2 asked Richie, "Is Prez your daddy?"

"No!" Richie giggled, "Prez is our leader."

"You look kinda the same," RG2 noticed, "red hair, blue eyes and tanned skin."

Richie looked up at Prez and shouted, "HEY! He's right!" After a short thoughtful pause, Richie looked up and softly asked, "Would you be my daddy, Prez?"

Keith heard Richie's question and nodded at Prez. "Sure, Richie!" Prez cheered. "As soon as Keith and me get married, you can be our son."

Dee was near enough to hear and posed the same question to Keith. "Definitely," Keith assured, "then you and Richie can be brothers. Would you like that?"

Richie and Dee cheered and hurried to each other. Richie laughed, "You're gonna be my big bro soon!"

Dee giggled, "And you're gonna be my little bro!"

Jennifer Hundser loudly complained, "Would you all please wait for my fortieth birthday before turning me into a grandmother?" Jim Hundser howled.

"She's gonna be our grandma?" Dee asked.

Prez nodded and Keith pointed at his father saying, "And that's Grandpa Jim!"

"YAAAAAAAYYY!" Richie and Dee cheered and spun each other around, and their Teddy bears bounced up and down happily. After the two little boys ran over to their soon-to-be grandparents, they introduced their Teddy bears, RG2 and Eddie.

This topic of conversation and the resulting celebration opened a can of worms; four-year-old Kokaku and five-year-old Carmella wanted to be adopted by Jim and Jennifer Hundser; Dillon, Reyes and Jonah wanted to be adopted by Mike and Derrick. The Gibbons' teased the Hundser, but the Seavers hoped that one of the kids would latch onto them. It didn't matter if it was a little boy or a little girl, they would even consider adopting one of each.

Dee sat in the grass close to Prez. Richie sat beside Dee, who remained close to Keith.

While carefully flipping the hamburgers, Prez asked, "Dee, you're ten, right?"

Dee nodded and said, "The Vulcan doctor says I'm under... nearished... or somethin' like that. That's why I'm not so big yet."

Becoming concerned, Prez asked, "Did the doc say you needed special foods or vitamins?"

Shaking his head, Dee answered, "He jus' says I need to eat more better and check with umm... a kid doctor." He paused and scowled, "Not sure what that means."

"It means you need to see a pediatrician," Prez smiled. "It's okay, we'll make sure you eat plenty and see the doc as soon as possible."

Dee frowned, "They scare me."

Keith asked, "Doctors scare you?" Dee nodded and Keith took him by the hand saying, "Try not to be scared, okay? We'll all see the doc at the same time. Anything the doc wants you to do, he'll do to me and Prez and Richie too. That way we all know we're in good health." Keith noticed that Josiah Brewster was talking softly to their fathers while Maureen McConnaghay was whispering to their mothers.

Janet was nearby and heard the conversations that the kids were having. She walked over and was about to talk to the kids, but the kids immediately hid behind Keith and Prez preventing her from approaching. She immediately backed off, and motioned Prez over.

She quietly said, "Obviously these kids don't trust adults and won't allow me to check them over, but I do have an idea."

"You're not thinking about drugging them, are you?" Prez wondered, becoming a bit defensive.

She held up her hand in surrender and spoke quickly to try and ease his fears. "No, it's nothing like that. There is a fully trained doctor in the Clan that is only nine years old in appearance. If you'll allow it, I'll call him in." She said, and then paused and teased, "Daddy!"

Prez blushed and giggled, "Sorry. Go ahead and give that doc a ring."

"Don't worry about it, I would probably have done the same thing," she said, and tapped her brand new communicator badge to call Orlando CIC. "Doctor Janet Hayes to Orlando CIC."

"Go ahead, Doctor," Seth responded.

"I was wondering if Antonio was available to check out two kids," Janet softly said, "Both suffering from at least undernourishment, but there may be other things going on. Neither child will allow an adult anywhere near them. I know he's probably asleep, and if he is, don't wake him, but if he's up, please get him for me."

Seth queried, "Doctor Hayes, do you believe this to be urgent?"

Janet considered it for a moment, then made her mind up. "Yes, I do."

"Very well, Antonio will not mind being woke up for that. I will let him know, and he will be there shortly. Orlando CIC out."

Janet nodded towards Prez and smiled then moved away from the grills and the two boys. Prez moved near to the grill and Dee hurried over from his hiding place behind Keith. Kneeling down, Prez softly assured, "It's okay, Dee, she's a nice doctor, but we're gonna find an even better one, just for you. Do you feel safer now?"

Dee nodded, but attached himself to Prez anyhow. Standing, Prez began adding cheese to the burgers on his grill, while Dee watched Janet like she was the wicked witch of the West. After only a minute or so, Prez turned to the Smart Shelf and commanded, "I need hamburger buns." A shelf opened and Prez began picking up buns and sliding cooked cheeseburgers onto them. As Prez was about to complete the burgers on his grill, a shimmer of light appeared next to Janet.

Antonio appeared with cookies in one hand and a glass of chocolate milk in the other. His clothes consisted of sandals and Transformers boxers, with his med kit on a belt around his waist. "Kewl! Burgers to wash down my cookies with! Who are the kids that need a real doctor, not a fossil?"

"I HEARD THAT!" Janet laughed and ruffled the little boy's hair. She then pointed him towards the two boys.

"Oh! You still have your hearing? Kewl!" He giggled as he ran over and away from any form of retaliation.

"And I still have my memory too, you little brat. I get kids like you back!"

"You pwomise?" He asked in his best little boy voice as he handed his cookies to the two children he had come to see.

Janet reminded, "You're almost as old as I am, little man!"

"Yes, but I, unlike you, haven't let myself go yet!" Antonio giggled, causing the other kids to laugh loudly.

Janet stood there speechless for a moment, then, "You're grounded, mister. No cookies for a month!"

Antonio took another bite of his cookie, while giving Janet his best 'Spock' eyebrow raise, then he took a long slurp of his chocolate milk. Putting the empty glass down in a safe spot, he grinned, "Riiight." He giggled as she also cracked up. He turned back to the two kids, "Hi! I'm 'Tonio."

"Hi Tonio, I'm Dee."

"And I'm Richie, Dee's brand new li'l bro."

Dee offered, "Prez and Keith are our new daddies. They says that we gotta all get checked up by a doc. Do you know any good docs?"

'Tonio giggled. "Kinda! You wanna help me check out this new toy Dr. McCoy gave me yesterday? We can see what it does!" He glanced up at Prez and Keith. "Daddies, huh? When?"

"About fifteen minutes ago!" Keith laughed.

"It was a short pregnancy!" Prez played along.

"Hey great-great-great-great-great Granny Janet! Did you make it official?" Antonio said loud enough for almost everyone nearby to hear.

"Nope. Didn't know it happened. Give me a moment." She made a few entries into the tricorder. "Prez, Keith, you want the rug rats?"

Antonio rolled his eyes and sighed, "Memory issues, you get that when you are old."

"Yeah, but we kinda need to be married first," Keith grinned.

Prez laughed, "We had the kids on the sly! What's the diff?"

Janet looked at Tonio. "Can it, runt!" She looked at the kids and softly asked, "You want Prez and Keith as daddies?"

"You're just jealous because Dr. McCoy likes me!" Antonio giggled.

"YES!" Richie loudly stated.

Dee nodded, "Yup, me too!"

She entered a few things into the tricorder then looked up with a smile. "Hmmm... how many times did he pinch your butt? He's got mine at least fifty times. Congratulations, Keith and Prez, it's boys. And it's official."

"Official?" Keith and Prez incredulously repeated.

"Next time, just do it yourselves. Old ladies talk too much!" Antonio giggled as he hid behind Prez.

Keith blubbered but made no sense at all. Prez asked, "Don't we need to be married first?"

Antonio giggled, "Nope! I've got a son, and By and me ain't hitched yet!" He reached into his bag and pulled out eight cards. "Uncle Harrison sent these to HQ to pass on to y'all."

Prez and Keith looked down at the cards they were handed. They were Starfleet identification cards; one for Prez, Keith, Mike, Derrick, Drew, Corey, John and Kaleo.

Keith wondered, "We're Starfleet Ensigns now, huh?"

"No. You're cooks now, you're Starfleet all the time." Antonio grinned. Dee and Richie held onto each other and shared a belly laugh. Mike and Derrick also began laughing.

Prez smirked, "Mike and Derrick, com'ere a sec." When they came over expecting a punch in the arm at least, Keith handed Mike his Starfleet ID. Prez handed an ID card to Derrick and playfully saluted, "Ensign Derrick Seibert, now you and your boyfriend get to adopt Dillon, Reyes and Jonah!"

"Oh yeah!" Janet said, as she pulled out some papers from her bag. She then handed them to Mike and Derrick. "Here are your official papers making you the Shiny Daddies to the Scooby Gang."

Mike and Derrick's jaws were now hanging on the ground. Surprised, they looked at each other and silently mouthed, "We're really parents!"

"I told ya, memory fails when you're OLD!" Antonio giggled.

"Yeah," Janet smirked, "keep at it, you little runt. You're only nine months younger than I am."

"And ninety years cuter!" Antonio shot back.

Janet smiled, "Yup! Oh and by the way, you're hanging out of your boxers."

"Hey, if you got it, why hide it?" Antonio blushed and giggled.

Prez then called over Drew and Corey. They finished loading cheeseburgers onto buns and hurried over. Prez and Keith handed them their ID cards. Prez giggled, "You've been promoted again, from Toy Rimmers and Bun Rimmers to Starfleet Ensigns. As soon as some kids decide they want your scrawny butts, and you decide that you want them, you can adopt kids too!"

Watching their jaws drop too, Keith laughed, "Misery loves company!"

Two new adult men appeared on the driveway just a few paces from the outdoor recreation area. They approached Jim Hundser and introduced themselves. The tallest and plumpest of them said, "Sir, my name is Charles Plungis." Pausing briefly to point to the shorter and thinner man near him, he continued, "and this is Miguel Fuery. We were head chefs at the Halekulani restaurant in Honolulu. We now work here."

Shaking their hands, Jim Hundser smiled, "My pleasure, gentlemen. I wasn't expecting you so quickly."

Charles nodded, "It wasn't expected, but the offer was too good to pass up."

"We've had our fill of snooty people and would be much happier working for Clan Short," Miguel Fuery said.

Charles said, "If you would please step aside, we'll take over dinner preparations."

Holding up his index finger to pause the two men, Jim Hundser said, "Preston and Keith, go spend time with your new family. You're relieved. Go to the CIC dining room with the rest of the Clan."

"Dad," Keith scowled, "I was just about to start loading the grill with hot dogs."

Miguel asked, "Is that all we're preparing this evening, hot dogs and hamburgers?"

Jim nodded, "Mostly, and chicken and sausages for the kids. The adults are having grilled salmon and butterfly shrimp."

Charles and Miguel smiled widely and nodded at each other. Then Charles said, "We can easily manage two grills each."

"Of course!" Jim chuckled, "Mike and Derrick, step aside and finish your adoptions. You're relieved to spend time with your new family too."

"Thanks, Mr. H.," the two boys said in unison. The four boys walked away from their grills. Charles and Miguel took over for them. Prez and Keith watched as Janet made Dillon, Reyes and Jonah officially the sons of Mike and Derrick. Then Antonio began 'playing' with Dee and Richie and his tricorder. Abbie introduced herself to the two new arrivals. Between the three of them they now had all seven grills in that row in service and preparing dinner. Charles and Miguel were experimenting with their Smart Shelves. The spices that hadn't really been used before simply to save time would soon be professionally applied.

Soon the hotdogs were finished and in their buns. The last of the chicken parts, hamburgers, hotdogs and sausages were put on the grills. Two more men and a women appeared on the driveway. They introduced themselves as Jessica Simpson, Randy Leister and Chris Desantis. They were chefs from the Kahala Hotel and Resort in Honolulu. They relieved the entire back row of adults and took over seven grills. In virtually no time the hamburgers, hot dogs and sausages were cooked. The new Clan chefs began grilling the salmon and butterfly shrimp. Six more people showed up and introduced themselves to Jim Hundser as chefs from Perth Amboy, New Jersey.

They followed the other Clan adults to the CIC and immediately went to work in the kitchen. Chicken and vegetable soups by the gallon were prepared. Chocolate and tapioca puddings were also whipped up. A green bean salad was tossed.

Five minutes before seven, a train of fourteen Smart Shelves began the trip to the CIC kitchen. A small group of older kids were waiting outside the dining room and saw them coming. They went inside and announced the food was on the way. Ravenous, everyone went towards the kitchen serving areas and formed a line. Prez, Keith, Mike, Derrick, Drew and Corey were ecstatic watching their simple barbecue dinner turn into a professionally prepared meal by a team of eleven chefs. All the rescued kids, G-Cats, gorillas, and other visitors from Maine and Utah were quickly choosing their meals and moving through the line. Keith and Prez estimated that there were about two hundred and fifty. The only ones missing the feast were the ferrets. Mike and Derrick asked around but nobody had seen them since they arrived or even knew where they were.

While almost everyone was still seated and enjoying their meals, Juan excused himself and went back to the kitchen. Adam, Logan, Donnie and Emily were seated at a table not far from the core Rimmers. One of the new chefs came out of the kitchen pushing a cart that held a single ten-gallon bucket. He went past Drew and Corey's table, then Mike and Derrick's table and Prez and Keith's table. He stopped at Adam and Logan's table and said, "Pardon me, please."

Since Adam and Logan were in mid conversation, Donnie looked up and politely asked, "What can we do for you?"

"Is Mister Logan Hayes at this table?" the chef asked.

Logan looked up and said, "That's me."

The chef said, "A young gentleman named Juan Casey asked that I bring this to you Sir. He said that you desperately needed it."

"Oh?" Logan innocently wondered, "What is it?"

"Barbecue sauce for your sausage, Sir." Emily quickly covered her mouth. Donnie caught his head in his hands and softly snickered. All of the Core Rimmers heard the chef, looked over and began giggling.

Shooting up from their chairs, Adam and Logan both screamed, "JUAN! YOU SONOFABITCH! WAIT TIL I GET MY HANDS ON YOU!"

Peeking around the wall separating the kitchen from the dining room, Juan laughed his ass off and bolted out the nearby dining room doors. Adam and Logan wove their way around tables and out the doors giving chase. Donnie and Emily could now laugh freely and soon most of the dining room was laughing hysterically. The poor chef was one of the last to catch on. "I thought ten gallons was quite a bit of barbecue sauce," he softly muttered, and then turned around to bring the bucket of sauce to the kitchen. He received a warm round of applause from most of the UNIT. No longer would he have to deal with aggravation from the rich and famous. Now he only had to deal with childish pranks, which was a change for the better.

Finished with their dinners, Prez had Richie in his lap while Keith was cuddling Dee. Antonio came over and said, "Hi guys, I got some good news and some not so good news." The boy doctor had Prez and Keith's undivided attention. "Richie here is in good health and so is Keith. Prez has a pretty bad sunburn on his shoulders, though."

"Oh no!" Richie squealed, "Daddy, do you feel okay?"

"I'm fine, little buddy," Prez assured.

Antonio handed Prez a tube of lotion saying, "Apply this three times a day and keep your shirt on in the sunlight."

Prez nodded and sighed, "Irish skin."

Keith asked, "How's Dee doin', doc?"

"He's not malnourished, but is undernourished," Antonio said. "For now, let's just feed him as much as he wants and as often as he wants. Morning multivitamins would be good for both boys. I'll come by again in a week and check his progress. If he gains just a few pounds, two or three, every week, you'll soon see him sprout up and gain a little more." Antonio looked eyes with Dee and said, "Drink lots of milk, and snack on fruits and nuts. Do you know what diarrhea is?" Dee nodded and blushed. "If you ever get that way, let your daddies know right away. It's bad for everyone but for you it could be real bad. Don't be embarrassed or hide it. Tell your dads so they can make sure it goes away fast." Turning to Keith and Prez, Antonio directed, "If Pepto or Imodium doesn't remedy the situation in six to eight hours, call me immediately."

Prez nodded, "Thanks, doc, we'll keep a close eye on him."

Keith grinned at Dee then tickled his belly and teased, "No! Loose! Poopies!"

Desperately trying to push Keith's hands away from his belly, Dee kicked his legs and laughed uncontrollably.

Richie giggled, "He's a silly daddy!"

Prez smiled, "That's one of the many reasons I love him."

The next table over, Mike was helping Jonah cut his chicken breast while Reyes was getting his first table drumming lesson from Derrick. While Mike counted out a four-four tempo, Derrick was teaching Reyes to use each arm and leg as independent entities: his right foot for the bass drum; his left foot for the hi-hat; the left arm for the snare and right arm for the ride cymbal.

Across the dining room, Lanna and Bill Seaver were sitting with Maureen and Josiah enjoying their dinner. Lanna Seaver said, "After I had given birth to Corey, the doctor said I shouldn't have more kids because it would be dangerous. Even though I wanted more, I had my tubes tied. For more than eleven years, Bill and I have considered adopting, but one thing or another kept us from pursuing it." She paused and giggled, "Now there are kids coming out of the woodwork! Part of me couldn't be happier."

"It's just so much so fast, quite a sudden change," Bill finished the thought for his wife.

"I know just what you mean," Maureen said with a smile. "Not long after Jonas was born, my ex started running around on me with a high school kid." She chuckled. "It's funny, this past week I welcomed her back to Arkham, because he took off on her too. But I never expected to have more than Jonas, until early this month when we found Clan Short in the middle of our lives."

"You need to roll with the punches, so to speak," Josiah added. "The kids are out to do the right thing, and they have the best possible equipment to do it; Vulcan discipline that they undertake willingly, positive peer pressure, and legal defense against any possible problems. But it is always a real shock to find all these changes in your lives."

He looked into the distance for a moment. "After my Annie died, I expected never to have children. Honestly, while I've loved Maureen almost from the moment I met her, a big part of what brought us together and kept us going was Jonas; he looked to me as the father figure he never had. But now, we were going to adopt Peter, then Friday we took Calvin, and a week ago we agreed to foster the fourteen other kids we brought with us: Joey, Jacky, Trent, Linda, and the rest. We just got them only about an hour before Peter brought us all out here to the Islands."

Rob Gibbons smirked, "It's one thing for us to adopt and foster these kids."

Anna Gibbons softly said, "I'm having the most trouble accepting our kids adopting other kids."

"I'm at the same place too, Anna," Jennifer Hundser admitted. "While I'm playing it off as being too young to be a grandmother, the real issue is whether our teenagers are ready to be parents."

"They aren't, in the sense most people would mean it; the adults solely responsible for the kids' care, nurture, and upbringing," Josiah said. "But remember that lady with the catchphrase, 'It takes a village.' Their own parents will help, like any grandparents would, their friends will be there for them; there's a lot of mutual support with the other young parents. It's not like they're alone in an apartment trying to make enough money to take care of themselves and the kids, with nobody to turn to. They have the best possible support system, all around them. And the Clan exists specifically to make sure kids get what they deserve; loving families, so who better to give it than the Clan members themselves?"

"Plus, you're a cop, Mr. Gibbons, right?" Josiah went on. Rob nodded. "Then you know the theory of how League and Federation law works with Hawaiian law?

"One element of that," he went on, "is that the leading House on Vulcan, the House of Surak, chartered Clan Short. That means the kids are acting according to Vulcan and Federation laws when they're functioning as Clan members; and Vulcan recognizes a young person as an adult when they show they're ready to undertake adult responsibilities; no nonsense about coming of legal age." He chuckled. "Actually, your kids are now all legal adults, as we just found out two days ago ourselves. As commissioned officers in Starfleet, they are now legal adults."

Harry's mother Abbie piped up. "Something Maureen had to remind me of when I got to worrying about Harry too much. Did you eight do a good job of bringing up your boys?"

"Of course we did!" Laura Gibbons said. "They know right from wrong and have never been a burden on us or a threat to anyone else."

Abbie offered, "Then what you need to do now is to stop worrying and let them show you just what a good job you did; to make you proud by proving themselves to the world, walking in your footsteps to make the world a better place. That was the toughest lesson I've ever had to learn, worse even than losing my Bert or my little Deborah. Harry's all I've got. But I had to let him be who he needs and wants to be. And I couldn't be prouder of what all he's accomplished."

"We've both known it was time to cut the umbilical cord for years," Jim Hundser told Jennifer. "We've almost completely accomplished that with Keith and Preston. And we've come a long way with Drew." She nodded and realized that what her husband said was very true.

"Maybe that's part of my issue," Lanna Seaver admitted. "It's something I know needs to be done and I've tried, but part of me doesn't want to complete that process."

Bill asked, "Why do you have to complete it now? If Corey was eighteen, would it be complete? Would it ever really be complete?"

"We're seeing age, simple numbers as meaning that some process is complete," Rob Gibbons recognized.

"It's really not related to age," Carl Seibert nodded. "Our boys have always been ahead of the learning curves since before they formed their band, since before they met."

"Ours too," Maureen said. "It may be the mother in me talking, but Jonas has always impressed me with how mature he acts for his age."

"I have the opposite problem," George Wentworth said. "I admit I wasn't ready for kids when I adopted. I've been on a fast track learning process ever since." He smiled ruefully. "But my boys were the wards of a religiously conservative couple that sheltered them way too much and did not give them any affection; quite the opposite in fact, they were physically abused. But the twins need cuddling more than what I think is normal for age seven, and Philip at 14 is more like a 12-year-old in terms of social development."

"Actually, none of ours have adopted... yet!" Josiah said. "But we've seen the results of adoptions in a lot of the kids from Orlando. And they're all the happier for it. They're able to give the younger kids something that they need and otherwise wouldn't have; and without interfering too much with their own ability to be kids, because there's always someone available to be responsible when they need a chance to unwind, let go, and just be kids for a bit. That's part of the virtue of being the Clan; they have a Vulcan sense of what it means to be an extended family, something we seem to have lost over the years."

Abbie put in, "If Prez and Keith need to go do something not involving their kids, you don't think Mike and Derrick are going to have the slightest problem with having Dee and Richie come over and play with their kids, do you? We even do that as adults. I can't count the number of times Jonas spent the evening at my place, or even slept over, when Josiah wanted to take Maureen out, or she was working against deadline on a story."

"Just like any extended community, we all share in the responsibilities and the joy of having kids," Jim said. "We assist them when and where we can and they help each other too."

Bill Seaver challenged Lanna; "Tell me you don't enjoy having all these kids around."

"Of course I do," Lanna smiled, "I'm sure we all do. It's only the abrupt change."

Jennifer grinned, "I can't say that I'm not enjoying it though."

Anna chuckled, "I've always told Derrick; someday I hope you have children that act exactly the way you act. That day has come. I'll help him when I can, but the rest of the time I'll be absently giggling over the smallest things. Just remembering him carrying little Dillon around will likely set me off in a fit of hysterics later tonight." All the rest of the adults smiled or softly chuckled at that thought.

Maureen smiled. "I know it's a lot to deal with all at once. Just remember, there are a lot of us that have been in your shoes: Teri, Kyle's father Dan, Joe and Janet, all of us. And we're all just a phone call away. In fact, with Peter around," she giggled, "I can probably just drop over for a visit whenever you want."

A group of two women and two men walked into the dining room asking for Director O'Brian. Hands shot up and pointed with the description of 'the red-headed dude with the little red haired boy sitting on his lap'. Stopping at the table and identifying Prez, the women leading the four introduced herself as Madeline Hupp, and her coworkers Judy Faris, Stephen Mier and Rodney Kile. "We're from New Jersey and have been hired as housekeeping professionals," Madeline said.

"Excellent!" Prez cheered, and then asked, "Is there anything you specialize in or areas where you don't work?"

Madeline answered, "We understand you're just getting your new Clan Short Division operating. While we generally specialize in housekeeping, we can assist anywhere you need us."

"I'll be honest," Prez explained, "we haven't even used the dorms or any of the housing yet. Tonight all the rescued kids will be bunkin' down with our families some way or another. What we'll need for tonight and the next few days is help in the kitchen. Is that okay with you?"

After checking with her coworkers and getting nods, Madeline said, "That's fine with us. We're very proud to be affiliated with Clan Short. Until you have adequate staff, we'll help in any way we can wherever you need us."

"Great!" Prez smiled, "It was good meeting y'all. Go over to the kitchen and introduce yourselves to Kenny Butler and the rest staff there."

As they walked away, Keith smiled, "We're getting close to full operating mode here, baby."

"I can only wonder who's finding all these people," Prez scowled.

"It's almost eight o'clock, Prez," Keith reminded. "Lieutenant Vorik could be here in a little while. Let's just chill until he gets here, okay?" Keith then turned to Dee and said, "When the Vulcan Lieutenant gets here, me and Prez are gonna be pretty busy for an hour or two. Would you mind staying with Richie and Grams and Gramps for a little while?"

Dee shared a meaningful glance with Richie. They both soon nodded and Dee answered, "We'll stay with Granma and Granpa and our Teddies."

Prez asked, "You guys know John's friend Bruce; the little boy we found Friday, don't you?" Both boys nodded and Prez explained, "Since John's gonna be with us, Bruce will prob'ly be with Grandma and Grandpa too. So you three dudes can play together with your Teddies."

Dee wondered, "Why does Bruce follow John around so much?"

Keith softly answered, "Because he's scared; his mom and dad never came to pick him up at the beach like they said they would. Now he doesn't know where they are, maybe for the first time ever in his life."

"Aww, that's too bad," Richie whined.

"The same time we was saved, Bruce was lost," Dee realized.

Prez nodded and said, "He needs all the friends he can get right now, just to make him a little less scared."

"I never had parents before," Richie sighed, "I can't rem'ber anyways."

Keith reminded, "But you do now."

Dee giggled, "I can barely believe it too!"

Prez smiled, "Wait until later tonight! We're gonna have a bunch of kids over our house, and another bunch over Mike's house and another bunch over Derrick's house and more at Corey's house. It's gonna be so much fun! We can play games or watch TV or listen to music; whatever we want."

Making eye contact with Prez, Keith nodded and chuckled, "I can hardly wait!"

"It's gonna be kewl, I know it!" Dee giggled.

Donnie and Emily stepped between the tables where Keith, Prez, Derrick and Mike were sitting. Emily said, "We've talked to your parents and are getting ready to send some guys over to your old houses. We'll be taking all your clothes, pictures and other personal belongings, but are planning on leaving some of the furniture there to be sold at auction; some of the living room furniture your parents asked to have delivered to their new basements. If there's anything in particular you'd rather leave behind or something you cannot do without, let us know."

Prez quickly replied, "In our bedroom closet there's two boxes of stuff from my parents. If I were to lose them, I'd be completely shattered."

On a small pad, Donnie jotted down and restated, "O'Brian memorabilia for Prez in bedroom closet."

Keith said, "Just our instruments and all the stuff in our desk." Pausing while Donnie scribbled in the pad, Keith then asked, "You're taking everything, pictures and paintings on the dressers and walls too, right?"

Emily nodded, "We're planning on taking the team from one house to the next. Each of the six will be in a room and have Daileass transport everything from there to your new homes here. Basically, we'll transport everything obvious, including all the stuff in closets and pantries, including any special items you want in particular. For example, most of your moms want china, silver sets and lots of gifts from their wedding days. Your dads want file cabinets and miscellaneous special items. Mike's dad wants his rifle cabinet and the two locked handguns in his bedroom closet."

Mike said, "I have three guitars at home: an acoustic and my Strat are both in hard shell cases, but I also have the Squier Strat that I learned to play on in a gig bag. Maybe one of the little kids might want to learn to play...."

"If any of the kids want to learn, we'll get them their own guitar, Mike," Donnie interrupted. "Your guitars are yours. I would think they have some sentimental value to you."

"All your instruments are assumed to be coming anyway," Emily smiled.

Bouncing Richie on one knee, Prez said, "In our night table drawer, I have a few issues of Bass Player magazine and Keith has GQ magazines. Oh, please have Daileass get us some Flintstones vitamins. We'll need them for Dee and it wouldn't be a bad idea to have them available for all the kids here in the dining room or kitchen."

Mike said, "I've got Guitar World and Guitar Player mags for the last three years in boxes on the floor of my closet."

Donnie nodded and scribbled more notes for vitamins and magazines.

Derrick giggled, "And another shoe box of all the birthday and Christmas cards he's ever received!"

"Yeah," Mike blushed, "definitely get that box too."

"Got it," Donnie grinned.

Keith asked, "Is there a chance we might be able to get some new things we've never had room for in our old houses?"

"Such as?" Emily wondered.

"I've always wanted an upright baby grand in our living room," Keith said. "We didn't have room for it before, but there's plenty of room for it now."

Tapping his sub-vocal, Donnie asked, "Daileass, do we have any upright pianos in our warehouses?"

"Just a moment, please, Donnie," Daileass replied.

While waiting, Donnie said, "All you guys have new instruments waiting in every auditorium."

"Really?" All four boys chorused.

Emily giggled, "Of course! We've now got a pro band in the Clan. We expect a few concerts now and then! Expect a packed house too; between the UNIT and all the divisions, another fifteen to twenty thousand per show."

Keith smirked, "We ain't exactly pros."

"From what I've heard, you are," Emily smiled.

Drew came over with Geoffrey and asked, "Get my Linux computer from my bedroom please?"

Emily nodded, "No problem."

Daileass told Donnie, "We have three upright pianos in the warehouses: a Steinway and two Yamahas."

Donnie said, "Have the Steinway delivered to the Hundser's home, dude."

"It'll be there tonight," Daileass responded.

Prez wondered, "Do you guys know where our new chefs and housekeepers came from?"

"Peter Lambert saw you guys and your folks cooking," Donnie replied. "He took off shortly thereafter."

"To New Jersey?" Prez excitedly giggled.

Donnie shrugged and grinned, "Whatever it takes to get the job done."

"Word has it that he knows of some economic troubles there," Emily informed them. "They get helped and so do you."

"Sorta killing two birds with one stone," Donnie agreed.

Prez smiled, "A busy little Mikyvis!"

Glancing around, Keith said, "Oh! He's a Mikyvis too? I only got a hug and seconds later, poof! He was gone."

Prez nodded, "Same here, but did you notice Kaleo and Tory at the beach?" Keith shook his head. Prez said, "All their bruises and scars are gone now."

Emily explained, "Not too long ago, Peter had a terminal form of cancer. He was helped; now he helps everyone else every way he can."

"Prez?" Mike called, "Lieutenant Vorik's at the door."

"Okay guys, dinner's over," Prez said, "Let's start learning about our new digs."

Keith said, "I'll take Dee and Richie over to my folks."

"Dillon, Reyes and Jonah will be with my parents," Mike said. As he stood, he suggested. "All you guys can play together."

Keith checked with his boys, "How does that sound?"

Dee and Richie nodded. Richie said, "That's kewl, daddy." Keith's head spun. He couldn't believe how much he loved being called 'daddy'.

While Keith and Mike went with the boys towards their parents, the rest of the Core Rimmers gathered and started across the dining room towards the CIC with Lieutenant Vorik. Mike shoved a euphoric Keith into the CIC. Giggling like mad, Keith drifted across the room, took Prez in his arms and cheek-to-cheek they began slow dancing without music. Oblivious to everyone in the room, Keith whispered,

"I love you so much, baby." Derrick, Mike, Drew, Corey, John and Kaleo moved out of their way and began giggling. Lieutenant Vorik raised one eyebrow at the curious behavior.

Prez softly giggled in Keith's ear; "To what do I owe the honor?"

Keith sighed, "They called me daddy."

"It is surprising how good it sounds," Prez admitted.

Derrick turned to Lieutenant Vorik and explained, "We're parents for the first time."

Mike added, "Prez and Keith are real sentimental."

"And this is what usually happens whenever one or the other feels happy," Drew giggled.

Corey faced Drew and said, "We really should adopt Geoffrey."

"DUDE!" Drew loudly laughed.

"Look in his eyes," Corey said. "He's not saying it but he thinks you walk on water. I can't say that I blame him either."

Drew grinned, "He's five, you're eleven and I'm twelve. What's wrong with this picture?"

Derrick smiled and reminded, "Reyes is thirteen and we're fourteen."

Drew giggled, "You're not helping!"

Corey sighed, "Do you love me?"

Seeing the seriousness in Corey's expression and eyes, Drew noded, "Course I do."

"And I love you," Corey assured. "Geoff was with us twice on the beach and he's been with us for over an hour, since before we came inside."

Mike grinned, "Just say yes, Drew."

Not letting go of Prez, and still swaying around together with him in a small area, Keith nodded, "Do it, bro. Geoff will feel awesome and so will you and Corey."

Already knowing the answer, Prez asked, "How long have you and Corey been friends?"

"Since we started school," Drew answered. "But that's only part of the issue. What about feeding him, clothing him, putting a roof over his head; doing everything a dad does?"

Keith sighed, "We have jobs, bro. We work for Clan Short, providing for all the kids already rescued and however many we need to rescue in the future."

"We've already given up parts of our former lives," Prez reminded. Looking up at Lieutenant Vorik, who was being more than patient this entire time, Prez said, "Tell him so he understands, please Lieutenant?"

Taking this as a command from the Pacific Rim Director, Lieutenant Vorik turned to the first available station and entered commands. The large flat panel display screen zoomed in on the Clan Short Pacific Rim Division's finances. "Here is your existing bank account balance," Vorik said. "Patriarch Short will provide additional funding when you meet him Monday." Then he moved to another station. A few commands later, the next display showed real-time security camera color video of one of the single family homes. While continuing to enter commands, the Lieutenant said, "You may choose to live with your parents in one of their dwellings." Then another monitor came alive with camera video of the row of town-homes and he continued, "Or you may choose to occupy one of the six dwellings here, which are sufficient for the average family of four." The next display showed what was happening in the dining room just beyond the doors. Lieutenant Vorik stated, "You may choose to dine with your Clan or prepare your own family meals within your dwelling." Another flat panel display flickered on showing another building. "This is the educational facility on this base," Vorik said. Turning to face the eight boys again, he finished by adding, "You may choose to devote your time or not for every day of the remainder of your life. As long as you are, it is advisable and preferable to be content as often as possible. If being a parent for one of the rescued children provides a measure of contentment, you may do so."

Prez nodded, "Well done, Lieutenant."

Smiling, Drew asked Corey, "Do you really wanna?"

Corey rapidly nodded, "I'd be happy enough with you. Geoff would be a huge bonus for both of us."

Drew traced two fingers around Corey's ear and down around his jaw, softly saying, "Let's make it happen." Corey giggled and took Drew's hand, then kissed it.

Lieutenant Vorik looked at Prez. Prez nodded, "It's kewl with me."

"You may authorize the adoption," Lieutenant Vorik said.

"I can?" Prez squealed. Lieutenant Vorik nodded and Prez explained; "Doctor Janet did the others."

Lieutenant Vorik tapped his communicator saying, "Vorik to Doctor Janet Hayes."

A few seconds later, Janet's voice was heard saying, "This is Doctor Hayes. Is there a problem Lieutenant?"

"No, Doctor. Please join us in the CIC with the child Geoffrey Eckel," Lieutenant Vorik replied.

Janet asked, "What is this in regards to?"

"The adoption of the child," Vorik responded.

"Understood," Janet said. "I'll be there as quickly as I can."

While they waited, Drew pulled Corey with him to the Vulcan Lieutenant and asked, "What else can these systems do?"

Lieutenant Vorik said, "You have access to all Terran law enforcement and security camera systems in the Pacific Rim." He then turned and entered a few commands. The screen flickered and showed a city street in Tokyo, Japan. Moving back to the first display where the account balance was still displayed, he entered more commands and the display changed to the corner of Yucca Street and Vine Street in Los Angeles, California. Lieutenant Vorik faced the boys again and explained, "These systems can provide you real time reconnaissance and surveillance. Support personnel may be left here monitoring while a team transports on site. Communications with away teams, other Clan divisions, Starfleet support or Vulcan command may be performed from here. The only alternate will be at the residence of Director O'Brian, where the same facilities will be provided in a smaller scale inside the dwelling tomorrow."

The door from the dining area to the CIC opened. Janet and Geoffrey and Geoff's Teddy bear walked in the room. Drew and Corey went over to Geoff. Kneeling down, Drew asked, "Geoff, would you like me and Corey to be your new daddies?"

The boy's mouth hung open in surprise for at least five seconds before he loudly giggled, "Would I? I'd love that!" then threw himself at Drew.

"That's one," Janet smiled, "Do I hear two more?"

Picking the boy up and standing, Drew nodded, "Plus one."

Taking Drew's hand, Corey smiled, "Plus one equals three."

Putting her tricorder down, Janet said, "That's all there is to it. I'll have the paperwork delivered tomorrow." She then went to Lieutenant Vorik and showed him the tricorder.

"Congratulations, dudes," Keith smiled. Geoff's Teddy bear jumped up and down happily.

Prez snickered, "Mom's gonna have a fit!" Prez then turned to Janet and said, "You'll need to show me how to do the adoptions."

Janet moved closer to Prez and showed him how to operate the tricorder while explaining, "You just need to put the tricorder in that mode and make voice recordings of the proceedings. You then either record or enter in the witnesses' names and presto! Paperwork is generated and delivered to the new parents."

Lieutenant Vorik said, "There are eight tricorders in this room, one for each member of your team."

"Hey! This makes me an uncle for three now, don't it?" John realized.

"Yep," Drew grinned, "How's it feel, bro?"

"Pretty good!" John laughed.

Prez noticed Lieutenant Vorik once again waiting patiently, standing at parade rest. "We've got stuff to do here, guys," Prez reminded, hating to cut short the celebrations.

Holding a single hand up, Lieutenant Vorik said, "If I may make a suggestion, gentlemen?"

"Go ahead, Lieutenant," Prez said.

"I was not aware that new families were formed this evening," Lieutenant Vorik said. "So that you may spend time with your families, it would be best if our orientation continued tomorrow. The Endeavor will be leaving orbit at twelve hundred hours local time tomorrow. I will introduce other Starfleet personnel and then take my leave of you."

Prez glanced around at his core team and got nods of agreement. "Good, we'll meet back here at eleven o'clock tomorrow morning. Let's try to give our full attention to the orientation tomorrow, okay?" Again receiving all positive replies, Prez said, "Thank you, Lieutenant, you've been great."

Lieutenant Vorik nodded, "Until tomorrow, good evening, gentlemen." He then tapped his communicator, saying, "Vorik to Endeavour. One to transport aboard." Moments later, the Lieutenant was transported to his ship in orbit.

"This is so kewl!" John beamed

"Ya, think that's kewl?" Keith grinned, "Com'ere bro." John walked over and Keith dug into his pocket, then handed John his Starfleet identification card.

"I'M AN ENSIGN IN STARFLEET?" John incredulously hollered.

Prez laughed, "Yep, a whole galaxy of new opportunities has opened up for all of us." Letting go of Keith, he went to Kaleo and handed him his Starfleet ID.

"Me too?" Kaleo gasped.

"You're a Core Rimmer," Prez snickered, "How's that for a change?"

"Wow," a stunned Kaleo smiled, "Two days ago I was an orphaned boy-toy. Now I'm part of the Clan Short team and an Ensign in Starfleet." He then laughed, "I gotta tell Tory and everybody else!"

Mike suggested, "While you do that, we should check out our auditorium and see what kind of instruments they got for us."

Nodding, Prez said, "Have everyone that's done eating meet us in the auditorium... Mouth Rimmer!"

Kaleo giggled, "You got it, Head Rimmer!" and then hurried out of the room.

"I can't take these rimmer jokes any more!" Keith laughed. Off to the side a few feet away, Drew, Corey and John began giggling. Keith suspiciously squinted, "What's so amusing, you guys?"

"Oh nuthin'!" John teased.

"Now I know something's goin' on," Keith threatened.

"Give it up, dudes," Prez grinned.

Corey cackled, "Keith's the Head Rimmer's rimmer!"

Trying not to laugh while everyone else cracked up, Keith and Prez checked with each other then nodded. Together, they began counting down; "Five... four..." and everyone scattered, running for the door back to the dining room.

Slowly making their way towards the door, Prez told Keith, "Let's get our kids, daddy."

"Ooo!" Keith moaned. "It even sounds good when you say it!" Prez giggled his ass off. Keith took Prez in his arms again, dancing the remaining few yards to the door.

Outside the CIC, Drew, Corey and Geoff had found the door to the auditorium and stepped inside the dimly lit entrance. While Corey held Geoff's hand, Drew searched around for light switches. Drew found a four-foot long steel door in the wall and opened it. "Circuit breakers," Drew said, and began flipping switches. The lobby lights turned on. Derrick and Mike walked in with Reyes, Jonah and Dillon while Drew was still flipping switches.

Derrick noticed, "There's another breaker box over here, Drew."

"Go for it," Drew said, "All the switches are marked."

Handing off Dillon to Mike, Derrick said, "Stay with your pop while I do this. It's just safer, in case of a short."

"Don't you dare electrocute yourself," Mike playfully warned.

"I got a few marked for the PA system here, Drew," Derrick said as he flipped the switches.

Drew nodded, "There's one marked as projector and another marked screen over here. This place can be used as a movie theater!"

Dillon asked, "We gonna watch movies, poppa?"

Shaking his head but smiling, Mike said, "Not here, when we get home later, though."

"I never been to a movie place before," Jonah admitted.

"Me neither," Dillon sighed.

Drew hummed then snickered, "I got a switch marked Dolby seven-dot-one. This place can handle iMax flicks!"

Derrick smiled and made his voice very deep saying; "Voice of God."

Closing the breaker box door again, Drew said, "I think we're set."

Derrick nodded, "All the inside and outside lights are on."

Reyes went to the double doors, opened one and looked inside, then began giggling as he stepped inside. "We found the ferrets!"

Following his eldest son and carrying Jonah, Derrick scowled, "What the hell are they doin' in here?" When he passed through the doors, he couldn't believe his eyes and cracked up. For a moment, all seventy-four ferrets paused and looked over to the auditorium doors. Then they returned to the task at hand, polishing to a shiny sparkle every single piece of brass, chrome or steel in the auditorium, all the microphone stands, the guitars, the keyboards, the drums and the cymbals.

Mike carried Dillon inside. Grinning at the scene before him, he then hollered; "SPIKE!"

In came Drew, Corey and Geoff. Many of the ferrets were wearing aprons and some were balancing four ferrets high to reach the cymbals. Even Dillon and Geoff found the scene before them funny.

Standing up on his hind legs, Spike gleefully cheered, "Shiny Daddy!" and began scampering up the aisle.

"We've been looking for you guys for hours," Mike told his furry son.

Stopping and squatting, Spike looked up and explained, "Weez were exploring. When weez found this place, High Priest Dave said we should always keep it SHINY!"

Unable to wipe the wide smirk off his face, Mike said, "You guys did an excellent job too!"

"We won't even need spotlights," Corey snickered.

Drew nodded and joked, "The audience might even need sunglasses!"

Bouncing slightly from the compliments, Spike begged, "Will you make shiny music for us tonight?"

Derrick nodded, "We're already gathering our Clan and all the visitors."

Mike explained, "Our Shiny leader Prez might have a few things to say first, but I'm sure we can talk him into playing some shiny songs. I've got some special ones already picked out for all you ferrets."

"You do?" Spike happily squealed. Mike nodded and Spike reminded, "We have your special Shiny Robes ready too!"

"Excellent!" Mike cheered. "I'll even wear 'em whenever we perform."

Speechless, Spike hurried over and grabbed hold of Mike's leg, looking up with happy tear-filled eyes. Mike bent down slightly, softly petting the small ferret boy's head, and assured, "I love you too, Spike."

Prez and Keith walked out of the CIC with their two boys. Looking up at the moon and stars, as he often did since his parent's passing, Prez noticed something. He pointed northwest of the CIC and asked, "Keith, was that building there when we went inside for dinner?"

Keith hummed and scowled, "I don't think so. I would've noticed a seven-story building."

While they were looking at the new building, an additional story appeared and it grew to eight stories tall. Prez shook his head and sighed, "I'm not even gonna ask. Like the weather in Texas, give it another minute, it'll change." It didn't even take a minute. By the time Prez picked up Dee and Keith picked up Richie, there were nine stories. They walked around the CIC to the auditorium and slowly moved forward into the building with the mass of people.

Around the auditorium structure, about twenty feet high from the ground, was a wide teal-colored section that was made of a ceramic and glass composite material; it refracted the lights shining against it so that it appeared to glow. With all the exterior lights turned on, the auditorium looked impressive, like other more famous venues such as Madison Square Garden, The Shark Tank or Honda Center. People that were driving past the new Clan Short main base via Iroquois Avenue and others that lived south of it could see the pretty teal glow through the trees.

The auditorium's inside lobby didn't appear that different than most movie theaters; however, there were two flat panel video displays. The movie being shown could be watched by anyone working at the concessions or anyone else that happened to be in the lobby area. Prez and Keith liked what they saw and thought serving from the concession stand and operating the projector would be jobs for any older kids that wanted them. They wondered how they might obtain movies to show. What they found when they went up four flights of stairs was a movie library. Making a quick survey of the library, they found Toy Story, Who Framed Roger Rabbit and a hundred other favorites in the action, comedy, drama, horror and musical genres, ranging from G rated all the way through R. As they came back downstairs, they considered showing some horror flicks the next night, as it was Halloween.

When Prez and Keith made their way inside the auditorium theater, they were once again amazed. There were three balconies and seating for at least twenty thousand. Keith joked, "Not that it matters, Kyle, Ty or Levi could prob'ly add seating with a thought if we needed more!"

Nodding, Prez giggled and admitted that was likely very true. Prez then suggested, "Keith, why don't you go up on stage and check out the grand piano? While everyone gets seated, show 'em what you can really do, babe."

Keith nodded and asked Richie, "So I don't feel alone, do you wanna come with me, son?"

Richie nodded, "Uh huh, okay, daddy."

Feeling another joyful chill race up and down his spine, Keith giggled, "God, I love the sound of the word daddy!" He then quickly made his way down the aisle towards the stage.

Drew and Geoff caught up with Keith and shared something then hurried up the aisle to Prez and Dee. Drew told Prez about the PA system and the iMax surround sound system. He then pointed at Mike, who was now greeting people as they came in, and wearing a long white robe that had silvery eight-pointed stars embroidered on the sleeves and a larger one on the back. Rolling his eyes, Prez snickered, "Shiny Daddy!"

Keith made his way onto the stage and sat on the piano bench. Once Richie was settled beside him, Keith inhaled and considered what he might play for a few seconds. Then he began playing Rachmaninov Piano Concerto number two, movement one. As Keith began playing, the chatter dwindled and everyone began to sit and quietly listen. Richie watched Keith and his hands purposefully moving along the keys with great interest. When Keith finished playing that piece, he looked back into the applauding audience and saw that kids were still filing in, so he played Body and Soul. While Keith was playing, Prez gathered the Core Rimmers and had them sit on the edge of the stage while he checked the first available microphone and Drew got it working. Prez then joined his team and sat in the center of them with Dee beside him. Before him, in the first two rows, were the ferrets and many of the youngest Rimmer kids. He waited for Keith to finish and joined the audience in their applause.

While Keith and Richie remained at the piano bench, Prez lifted the wireless microphone and began, "I only have a few things to say. First of all, for my entire team and our families, I'd like to thank Adam, Logan and the rest of the UNIT for their help today here and at Anahola Bay." More applause traveled around the audience so Prez briefly paused. He then said, "I've been told that Peter Lambert is responsible for hiring our chefs and housekeepers, without whom I'd probably be still standing at a barbecue grill and cooking while the rest of you ate!" As giggles and laughter erupted, Prez wondered, "Is Peter in here?"

Nathan shouted, "He's still building condos for the chefs and housekeepers, the last we saw, Prez."

Prez nodded, "In case we don't get to see him again for a while, please extend our thanks. For the rest of you visiting us from the U.S. Clan, thanks for coming and helping us through our first day. I'm sure we'll be seeing a lot of you occasionally for visits here in paradise. Janet, thank you especially for helping us adopt our kids and forming families. It feels great."

From the audience, Jennifer Hundser hollered, "It won't feel so great tomorrow!" While Prez and many of the Core Rimmers chuckled, she loudly teased, "You're all grounded for a week!" Most of the audience erupted in laughter.

Prez joked, "Sorry for making you a grandmother before your time! I'm sure you'll enjoy having our little ones around to spoil rotten."

"We've already begun!" Jim Hundser loudly admitted.

"I don't doubt it!" Prez snickered. He then said, "Thanks to all the ferrets and High Priest Dave for making everything in here sparkle."

All seventy-four ferrets stood and sang, God save our Gracious Shiny! Long live our Noble Shiny, God save the Shiny, Send it victorious; Happy and Glorious; Long to Shine over us; God save the Shiny!

"Okay!" Prez chuckled. He then said, "Since we can use this place as a movie theater, I thought we might begin tomorrow night with some movies appropriate for Halloween. We'll need one or two projectionists and three or four to serve snacks and drinks at the concession stand. If any of our new Clan members are interested in those jobs, just let any one of us in the Core Team know.

"One last thing since it's getting late and we've all had a busy day. For all our new brothers and sisters now part of the Pacific Rim Division Clan; we've been considering alternatives for bed time tonight, but ultimately the choice is yours. Choice one: whoever wants to can start moving into the dorms; and, choice two: we can divide ourselves up into groups of twenty or so and spend the night together with our parents in our new homes. The choice is yours. Let us know what ya wanna do."

Tory and a bunch of other kids hollered, "We want a concert!"

Prez giggled, "Was that one of the choices I mentioned?"

Janet and Joe loudly added, "We've heard Keith, now we'd like to hear your band."

Prez looked left and right at his bands mates. Mike grinned, "I already promised Spike we'd play a few songs."

"We really should try everything out," Derrick agreed.

"Sweet!" Drew chirped. Prez smiled at him and Drew offered, "It's a five-dot-one surround system." He and Corey jumped down off the stage. Drew helped Geoff down saying, "Give us a few minutes to make it upstairs, Prez." Drew, Corey and Geoff started back up the aisle on their way to the room where the PA system was set up.

"Okay then," Prez smiled, "One impromptu concert comin' up." Turning off the microphone, Prez asked Dee; "Ya wanna stay on stage with me or watch from the audience?"

Shrugging, Dee thought for a few seconds then wondered, "Would you be mad if I watched?"

"Not at all," Prez honestly said, "Whatever makes you happiest."

Overhearing them, Kaleo came over, held his arms out and said, "Jump, Dee." The boy pushed off the stage and Kaleo caught him, then spun him around before putting him down on the floor. One after another, Kaleo helped the little ones down the same way, then they went back into the audience and found seats.

Prez stood and walked across the stage. He had a new Fender Jazz bass guitar and an Ampeg amplifier with a cabinet of four ten-inch speakers to try out. Mike went to check out each of the three new guitars that were sitting on a stand in front of two amps. After turning on both the Marshall and Fender amplifiers, he first inspected the Candy Apple Red Fender Stratocaster with three single-coil pickups. While it was very nice, Mike didn't even pick it up because sitting beside it was a Martin D-45. Mike whimpered and lifted the guitar to see it even closer. The fingerboard hexagon inlays were absolutely beautiful. With Keith still at the Steinway grand piano, Mike and Prez checked their tuning quickly. Both instruments were perfectly in tune with the piano.

While they softly fiddled around to get the feel of their new instruments, Amur Khan lifted Joe, wheelchair and all, onto the stage. Mike and Prez were standing near each other chatting about the instruments and both were wearing wide grins. Derrick was softly tapping his new drums to be sure they were tuned properly. Keith got up and went over to Derrick, then Prez and Mike joined them. Every instrument and amplifier was more than they could've dreamed the Endeavour would've supplied. Drew's voice came over the stage monitors. "Everything's powered up and ready for a sound check, bros."

While Keith, Prez and Derrick began working with Drew to ensure the equipment was operational, Khan pushed Joe closer to Mike. Joe said, "That's pretty much a top of the line Martin." Around them the many colored stage lights were dimming and turned back up again as Corey was testing his part of the equipment too.

Rapidly nodding, Mike agreed, "Yeah, they make more expensive models and other custom ones, but this feels and plays great!"

"Let's hear something," Joe prodded.

Still wearing his Shiny Robe, Mike hummed thoughtfully, then pocketed his pick. Believing it would be something instantly recognizable, he then began finger-picking Beethoven's Fur Elise. Khan handed the third guitar, an Alhambra 4P classical guitar, to Joe. Surprising Mike and many in the audience, Joe effortlessly joined Mike playing the piece. While Mike was using a very standard classical technique, Joe was using a Flamenco technique. The duet was heard very well by the audience and at the end of the song, all eight of the Rimmers' parents stood and applauded. The rest of the audience and the ferrets clapped too.

Returning the guitar to the stand, Joe nodded, "Very well done, Mike."

Mike thanked Joe and smiled, "I had no idea you could play!"

"I took a few lessons from my cousin back in the seventies," Joe admitted. He then asked, "If you don't mind, I'd like to stay up here while you boys play?"

"We wouldn't mind at all," Mike grinned. "You might hear better out front, but if you want to stay up here..."

"I'll hear fine," Joe assured. "I'll be watching you play though."

Mike chuckled, "I do the same thing."

Khan pushed Joe over to the far right front of the stage. He and Joe shared a few words, then Khan walked off and left the auditorium. The boys gathered around the drum kit and discussed what songs they would play. Once they had reached agreement, they turned to the audience and signaled Corey to dim the audience and stage lights. Corey lowered all the lights, but left the blue stage lights on low so the band could see. Mike put the Martin guitar down and picked up the Stratocaster.

The first tune began with Keith's soft organ and synthesizer, and with Derrick brushing the chimes near his hi-hat. Many immediately recognized the song Shine On You Crazy Diamond. Slowly the keyboards got louder, then Mike began playing the introduction guitar licks. Everything became very quiet again until Mike played the first four notes of the second section on his Stratocaster. Derrick and Prez joined in and Corey turned up the blue and green stage lights, then pointed a spotlight on Mike. After about a minute, Keith took over playing the melody on his synthesizer while Mike chopped away at some chords. Then Mike played another lead section before stepping closer to the microphone.

Looking down at Spike and the ferrets, Mike sang; "Remember when you were young, you shone like the sun. Shine on you crazy diamond. Now there's a look in your eyes, like black holes in the sky. Shine on you crazy ferrets. You were caught in the cross fire of childhood and stardom, blown on the steel breeze. Come on you target for faraway laughter, come on you stranger, you legend, you martyr, and shine!

"You reached for the secret too soon, you cried for the moon. Shine on you crazy diamond. Threatened by shadows at night, and exposed in the light. Shine on you crazy diamond. Well you wore out your welcome with random precision, rode on the steel breeze. Come on you raver, you seer of visions, come on you painter, you piper, you prisoner, and shine!"

While ferrets looked up in awe, Keith played the ending saxophone solos on a synthesizer. Further back in the audience, the band noticed more than a few smiling and giggling because they knew that High Priest Dave had to be taking note of the lyrics! Adam made a note to acquire the CD so that he would have another way of gathering all the ferrets without setting off small flares. As the song began to fade to ending, everyone clapped and cheered. All seventy-four ferrets were excitedly bouncing and chanting; "Shiny Mike! Shiny music! Shiny Diamond!" over and over again.

Derrick counted off a quicker beat then the band began playing Collective Soul's Shine. This time, Derrick sang the lead vocals with Keith backing him up. "Give me a word, Give me a sign, Show me where to look, Tell me what will I find, will I find, Lay me on the ground, Fly me in the sky, Show me where to look, Tell me what will I find, will I find?"

"Oh, heaven let your light shine down. Oh, heaven let your light shine down. Oh, heaven let your light shine down. Oh, heaven let your light shine down."

"Love is in the water, Love is in the air, Show me where to look, Tell me will love be there, love be there, Teach me how to speak, Teach me how to share, Teach me where to go, Tell me will love be there, will love be there?"

"Oh, heaven let your light shine down. Oh, heaven let your light shine down. Oh, heaven let your light shine down. Oh, heaven let your light shine down."

Mike moved forward to center stage and played the short solo. Three of the female ferrets fainted. Spike and Xander smiled up at Mike while they fanned their unconscious sisters. Laughing his ass off, Mike moved back to stage right.

"Give me a word, Give me a sign, Show me where to look, Tell me what will I find, will I find, Lay me on the ground, Fly me in the sky, Show me where to look, Tell me what will I find, what will I find?"

"Oh, heaven let your light shine down. Oh, heaven let your light shine down. Oh, heaven let your light shine down. Oh, heaven let your light shine down. I'm gonna let it shine, I'm gonna let it shine, Shine on me, shine on me, come on and shine!"

Khan returned with two guitar cases. He gave one to Joe and left the other sitting on the stage. Ending the song on a thunderous chord, the audience loudly cheered and the band giggled insanely. Some of the rescued kids began hollering for replays of various songs from Friday night's luau.

The band met their requests by playing Separate Ways \(Worlds Apart\), Go All The Way, Time Of The Season, One Thing Leads To Another, Cult Of Personality, Precious and Few, Silent Running, Wildest Dreams, and Traces.

Prez stepped forward and said, "We learned today that General Adam Casey plays guitar. Why don't we get Adam up here to jam with us?" The band clapped and prodded Adam to join them.

While others clapped and some cheered, Adam blushed and shook his head.

Khan pushed Joe, with one of the guitar cases on his lap, over to Mike. Khan walked off the stage and out to the audience. Joe called for Mike, and Mike looked over at him. Joe smiled, "This guitar belonged to my cousin, Randy Rhoads. It's been locked away safe since he died. I know he would want you to have it."

Mike's jaw hung on his chest. He stammered, "Joe, any of Randy's guitars are part of rock history. I can't..."

"You can because he and I both want you to have it," Joe interrupted. He then opened the case and showed Mike the well-known white Les Paul Custom often played by Randy Rhoads.

Khan stood at the end of the row where Logan was trying to get Adam up to go and play with the band. Khan threatened, "You can walk to the stage or I will carry you in front of everyone." Not wanting to be embarrassed in front of everyone, Adam hesitantly stood and walked to the end of the row. Logan followed simply to be there and offer any support.

Since Mike was preoccupied with Joe, Prez continued clapping but went to see what was going on. Seeing the guitar, Prez gasped, "Is that what it looks like?"

Mike smiled, "It's not just a white Les Paul; it's Randy Rhoads' Les Paul."

"No way!" Prez chuckled.

Joe nodded and assured, "This is it. Randy was my cousin and this was left in my care."

"And Joe just gave it to me!" Mike beamed.

"Oh my God!" Prez reverently whispered.

Taking the Stratocaster off, Mike giggled, "This and the Martin are coming home with me tonight!" Facing Joe again, Mike promised, "I'll keep this safe and well cared for, I promise."

Joe nodded and smiled. "I know you will."

Mike went and put the Stratocaster back in the guitar stand, then came back to Joe and picked up the Les Paul. He carefully put the strap on and plugged it in. Derrick looked over and asked, "What's up, dude?"

"It's Randy Rhoads' guitar, dude!" Mike cheered, "Joe just gave it to me!"

"You're kidding?" Derrick incredulously chortled. Mike shook his head and turned the volume knobs completely down, then played runs all the way up and down the fretboard. Envious, Derrick playfully complained, "Now all we need is someone to give me Carl Palmer's kit, and I'll be just as happy."

The other guitar case Khan brought had Adam's Ibanez RG1550M electric guitar. Adam walked over to Prez grinning. "You guys far outplay me. I'm only here because Khan was gonna carry my ass if I didn't get up."

Prez chuckled and nodded understandingly, "Not exactly conducive to maintaining authority over others."

"Not exactly!" Adam snickered.

"Whatchya wanna play, dude?" Mike cheerfully asked.

Adam thought for a moment, then answered, "I'd like to play Switch 625 but..." He paused then softly admitted, "The lead parts are challenging enough alone, never mind in front of all these people."

"Don't worry about the audience, Adam," Prez instructed. "Focus weed-hopper, use more of those rooms you have to concentrate on playing."

"I have another idea," Mike offered. "First of all, don't face the audience. Secondly, why don't we play something a little easier first?"

"Like what?" Adam nervously wondered.

"Sunshine Of Your Love? Do you know that one?"

Adam nodded, "Sure do."

"You take rhythm guitar, I'll play the octave higher and the solo, with Prez taking the octave lower," Mike instructed. "I'll get us started. After two repeats, Prez will join. After two more repeats, you join and we'll play the whole tune. It'll sound great, as good or better than the original record."

Searching the theory knowledge he had acquired from Prez, Adam soon nodded and grinned, "I'll be back stage a bit, staring at Keith or Derrick or the drapes!"

Snickering, Prez went to tell Keith and Derrick. A few moments later, Derrick counted off and precisely on the down beat, hit his snare as Mike began playing then Prez came in just as they had planned.

Adam concentrated hard and came in just where he should have. The ferrets were chattering about the choice of another Shiny song and enjoyed it immensely. Mike and Prez shared the lead vocals duties. It had been years since the band played this song and they were all enjoying the trip down memory lane.

The UNIT members began yelling and screaming before they had even finished the song. Then they played Switch 625, with Adam playing the rhythm guitar part and Mike playing the lead part. More than happy, Adam finished the song with the band and waved to his out-of-control UNIT members, then pressed the standby switch on the amp and unplugged his guitar. Keith, Derrick, Prez and Mike all clapped along with the audience as Adam walked past Joe, receiving a firm handshake and smile before walking down the stage stairs.

For the last song of the night, Mike invited Joe to join the band. Joe agreed but the two bantered back and forth over the song. Finally reaching agreement, Joe took the Stratocaster and soon the band were playing You Can't Kill Rock and Roll. Derrick sang lead vocals, with Prez and Mike backing him up; but the highlight of the song was Joe and Mike switching off the lead guitar solos during the middle break and end of the song. The auditorium erupted in cheers and applause at the end of the song.

After the ovations had quieted and the audience lights were turned up again, Prez walked up to the microphone and asked, "What's it gonna be tonight; does anyone want to sleep in the dorm?" He watched carefully as heads shook. "Okay, the answer is no then. So shall we split into groups of twenty or just guys and girls?"

Kaleo stood and answered, "We'd like to stay together, Prez."

Prez smiled and nodded, "Okay, are separate bedrooms in the same house acceptable, or do we create one big nest in the basement?" Kaleo and Prez looked around. Some of the kids were indifferent. Prez then asked, "Those of you that aren't sure, give me some kinda clue. What's the deal?"

One little girl about ten years old admitted, "Just wanna stay with you, Prez."

A boy about eleven or twelve said, "Same here."

Another boy about eight said, "Me too."

Prez tapped his sub-vocal and called, "Daileass?"

Daileass replied, "Hi, Prez! Excellent concert!"

Prez giggled, "Thanks, dude."

"What can I do for you?" Daileass asked.

"We're gonna need about a hundred blankets and pillows in the basement of the Hundserts' house," Prez answered.

Daileass inquired, "Anything else for anyone else that might be staying the night there?"

"Hold on, lemme check," Prez said. He then asked, "Who's staying the night? I expect about forty from the UNIT, am I right?"

Adam shouted, "Close, Prez; more like fifty on base, including the gate guards and gorillas."

"I forgot the gorillas!" Prez loudly admitted. Grinning and knowing the answer, Prez asked, "Where does an eight hundred pound gorilla sleep?"

At least half the UNIT loudly laughed, "ANYWHERE IT WANTS!"

Back stage packing up the D-45 and white Les Paul Custom, Mike tapped his sub-vocal then asked Daileass to transport both instruments to his bedroom at home.

Prez chuckled and shook his head sadly, then asked, "We'll put aside an entire dorm building for the UNIT. Does that sound okay?"

"That's fine, Prez," Adam loudly responded.

"Who else is staying the night?" Prez asked.

Peter Lambert stood and answered, "Everyone from Northeast Division, Prez."

"Peter!" Prez shouted, "I saw the new building you built for us and heard about all the people you've employed. Thanks for your help, dude."

Peter giggled, "Well, there are actually three new condominiums to the northwest of the CIC. You've got ten chefs and four housekeepers. Tomorrow you'll have six landscapers and two doctors too! All the chefs, housekeepers, landscapers and doctors will take up residences in the condos."

Maureen piped up, "The rest of us from Maine will take a few condos over night?"

"Sounds good," Jonas said.

Harry, however, had been noticing the expression on the fourteen rescued kids the Northeast group had adopted earlier that day. Now he spoke up. "Um, I think our new guys will want to stay with the other rescued kids, for their own comfort, right guys?" There were hesitant nods from their kids. "And we Clan guys probably ought to stay with them?" Again he looked at the kids, and got small smiles and nods. "Can you add us in, Prez?" he asked.

"No problem at all," Prez assured.

"The grownups will be sleeping in proper beds, though," Harry's mother Abbie said. "I'm too old for a slumber party sleepover!"

Prez chuckled, "Make that a hundred and twenty pillows and blankets."

Daileass giggled, "I've got a head count, Prez. You'll have everything you need waiting in your basement."

Looking out into the back rows of the audience at his parents' faces, Keith laughed, "Sounds cozy!"

"Until someone needs a bathroom!" Jennifer Hundser loudly reminded.

Prez grinned, "Us guys can share a toilet, most of the time anyhow. We'll have the girls use two of the three upstairs bathrooms, one for the boys that need more... umm... privacy! And the ground floor half-bath can be for us guys. That way you and dad can just hide in the master-bedroom and attached master-bath! We can make this work, mom."

Janet grinned at Jennifer and whispered, "Valium."

Daileass heard most of this exchange and said, "For showers tomorrow morning, might I suggest the mob showers in the dorms, Prez; girls upstairs and boys downstairs?"

Prez nodded, "Thanks, Daileass; that'll work great." Prez then shared Daileass' suggestion with the audience. "One more thing, please, Daileass?" Prez began.

"Go ahead, Prez."

"How about a couple of TV's down in the basement? I'm thinking four each, PlayStations and Xboxes, and one big one for movies & TV."

"You got it!" Daileass said. "I'll add in a few microwaves, a case of popcorn and a fridge loaded with soft drinks."

"Good thinking," Prez gushed, "You're the greatest, dude."

"You're way cute too, Prez!" Daileass giggled. "By the time you guys get home, everything will be set."

Prez blushed and giggled, "Okay! We're set, folks. Let's get out of here." Prez turned off the microphone and loudly asked, "Kaleo, hang back a minute, please?"

Leading the newly adopted kids to the stage stairs, Kaleo nodded. Walking down the steps with Keith, Prez said, "I'm just curious here, but I expected some of the older kids might like to have a room in the dorms. I also expected that the girls would want a place of their own, separate from the boys. What gives?"

Kaleo answered, "It's simple insecurity versus security, Prez. A lot of kids found it hard to sleep last night in hotel rooms with four to a big room. A room that size would've had ten little kids or eight older kids in the orphanages. For those that were fostered, they were mostly all alone all the time. Besides," Kaleo grinned, "we do really want to spend time with all you guys. If we split up, it would be one or two leaders to a room. That's not good enough. We want to be around all of you. Not just you and Keith, not just Mike and Derrick or Drew and Corey. And the girls are sorta left out in the cold too. Who would sleep with them?"

Donna and Tristan, Jory Casey's two lovers, were fairly close to Prez when this was said, and they giggled. Donna said through her chuckles, "At our base in Wales, boys and girls are always in the puppy-pile together. You better start getting used to it, ginger-top!"

Prez nodded and giggled, "I'm not the problem!"

"Our mothers are the problem!" Keith laughed.

"The sex thing, yes?" Tristan easily recognized. He then seriously said, "The difference is people that are used to consensual sex. Lots of these kids are used to non-consensual sex. They must realize that they now have choices, choices they never had before, like who to sleep with and where. If your mam says anything to any of you, remind her of that. What they're gonna learn from all you lads and from your parents is what love is like, real love versus sex."

"It'll take some time for them and understanding from your parents," Donna added. "It'll happen."

"Oh, and just sleeping in the nest don't mean everyone has to be naked," Tristan added. "A lot of the guys and girls started off with their pants or knickers on," he giggled.

"Unless it's extremely cold," Keith smiled, "and I mean cold by Hawaiian standards, below sixty degrees, we'll sleep with boxers and maybe T-shirts on; otherwise, we always sleep naked."

Prez and Derrick nodded. Mike revealed, "I'd have to be extremely cold to sleep with boxers on. I can't sleep with anything the slightest bit confining on, never have been. My parents would put baby PJ's on me and I'd cry all night. Take my clothes off on the changing table and I'd go out like a light though."

Derrick smirked, "That answers a few outstanding questions lurkin' around my brain."

Everyone cracked up until Donna giggled, "Just give them the choice and no teasing anyone, clothed or naked."

All the Rimmers nodded and Prez assured, "It won't be a problem. Thanks for the advice."

"Advice is free," Donna murmured as she looked the larger teen up and down, her eyes loitering just below his waist. "But I'd pay to see YOU naked... hot stuff!"

Turning redder than his hair, Prez blushed and began sweating. Again everyone laughed hysterically, but Keith loved seeing his lover turn so red. Keith evilly snickered, "Blushing and ticklish now. This is really, REALLY good!"

Tristan giggled, "Donna, you gonna?"

"Hoo, yeah... maybe... yum yum!" she said as she leered at Prez.

Jory, standing not far away, started laughing loudly. "Soooo... she seduced me... now she's after a fourth and fifth for our group, Trist?"

"Looks like it... they're big too!"

"Yippee!" Jory giggled, his eyes flashing with mischief.

"Are they serious?" Prez yelled at Adam and Logan.

Adam shrugged and Logan didn't respond for trying to hold in his own laughter.

Korris however, answered, "Yes, they are. Or they'll have my bat'leth up their arses!"

"Ooo! Kinky! But I'll leave that for Chang!" Donna retorted. Then she reached up and pulled Prez's face down to her level by the simple expedient of use of his ears. "Just joking, stud-muffin." Then she kissed him on the lips quickly. "Just a taste to remember you by!"

Covering all of his face except his eyes, Prez reverted to age ten. He moved away from the stage and started up the aisle mumbling, "I'm gonna hide somewhere. Maybe the ferrets will give me a break?" Keith giggled and, taking Dee and Richie by their hands, quickly caught up then got a few tickles in. Laughing, Prez swatted at his hands, then ran up the empty aisle. Everyone else followed when Drew and Corey began turning off the lights in the auditorium.

The ferrets began leaving en masse, and Mike shouted, "Spike! Where are you going?"

Spinning around, Spike answered, "Weez going to find a place to sleep."

"You've already got a place," Mike said, "with the rest of us."

Spike stammered, "But... but... my litter mates?"

"They're sleeping with us too," Derrick said. Xander, Faith and Willow looked around uncertainly.

"But... but... we-weez n-not hu-hu-human!" Spike stuttered, tears forming in his eyes. "We... weez never been... been allowed..."

"You're not only allowed, you're expected to be with us," Mike interrupted.

"You just gotta be good," Derrick softly reminded. "No stealing any shinys in the house."

Confused and not believing it could be real, Spike said, "But... but if we really are your family, then the shinys are all of ours. We don't steal shared shinys, that would be wrong."

Carrying Dillon over near his ferret kids, Mike smiled, "Then everything's kewl and you can definitely stay with us at night, and eat with us too."

The idea of sleep and eating with their human family was just too much for Spike to handle. He couldn't say anything except "but". Mike offered Spike a finger to hold on to as he led the group up the aisle and out of the auditorium. Since Reyes was carrying a very tired Jonah, Derrick offered both hands and sets of fingers to Xander, Faith and Willow. The three ferrets only emulated Spike and held onto Derrick's fingers.

A short while later, the new Pacific Rim UNIT troops had chosen a dorm building to use as their barracks. The adults from Clan Short Northeast felt as if they had stayed awake all night and went to one of the condominiums. Janet, Joe and Amur Khan, were also feeling the effects of a four-hour time difference, took their leave and Daileass returned them to Utah with Adam, Logan and the rest of their UNIT troops. The adult Hundserts, Seavers and Gibbons went to the Seiberts' new home for coffee and to chat about their new lives. Prez and Keith led the mass of kids through their new house, showing them where the bathrooms were first on the ground floor, then upstairs.

Drew, Corey, John, Lindsay and Bruce led the Northeast Clan kids down to the basement. Prez, Keith, Mike and Derrick led the others outside to retrieve their new suitcases of clothing from the outdoor recreation area where they were left. Rather than bring them inside, they were left outside along the exterior walls of the Hundser house, so when everyone woke in the morning, clean clothes could be retrieved for showers at the dorms.

Drew and Corey were demonstrating the PlayStation games to half of the twenty Northeast kids while John, Lindsay and Bruce demonstrated the Xbox games to the other half when the Pacific Rim kids returned. Soon all the TV's were on, games were being played, popcorn was being popped and kids were helping themselves to the soft drinks in the refrigerator that Daileass had provided. On the other side of the huge basement, some kids were starting to choose pillows and blankets and beginning to make the nest. Many kids took their Teddy Bears to sleep with them. Other Teddy Bears watched their kids play video games, and yet a few others stood guard on either side of the basement steps. Keith turned off the overhead fluorescent lights on the nest side of the basement.

By one in the morning, when the Hundser returned home, most of the hundred plus kids had gone to sleep, while about thirty of the eldest kids remained awake, playing games or watching TV. When the basement door opened, four Teddy Bears extended their claws and moved to block the bottom of the stairs. Once they saw who it was, their claws retracted and they moved aside, allowing the Hundser adults down the stairs. While Jennifer crept quietly around the nest, Jim went over to the other half of basement to softly remind them of the time and to call it an end to a busy day. Prez and Keith assured that they would soon crash, and a few of them did soon after the Hundser went back upstairs. Prez, Keith, Mike, Derrick, Kaleo, Reyes, Harry and the Scooby Gang were the last to give it up around three in the morning.

During the night there were several trips made back upstairs to use the bathrooms, but every kid that needed to go had their Teddy Bear escort. Just after seven in the morning, kids began waking up. They used the bathrooms, played video games or watched TV until the remainder of the nest heard the noises and woke up too. At nine-thirty, Jennifer and Jim Hundser were sitting at the kitchen table having coffee when they heard the mass of kids climbing the basement steps. Most kids politely said hello or good morning while they passed the two adults on their way outside. Even the Teddy Bears and Scooby Gang waved as they passed. Keith, Prez, Drew, Corey, John and Bruce were the last ones upstairs.

After greeting his foster parents, Prez said, "We're heading over to the dorms for showers then to the CIC dining room for breakfast. I'll send over one of the housekeepers to organize the basement."

Keith nodded, "Depending on the kids, we may be doing this several nights, until everyone starts to feel more comfortable."

Jennifer turned to Jim and gasped, "They look like our kids, don't they?" Keith and Prez widely smiled as Drew, Corey, John and Bruce giggled.

Jim silently nodded for a few moments, then smirked, "If they put aside an hour or two, maybe we could have the chance to talk as a family, just to make certain they are who they seem?"

Prez chuckled, "I get the hint. Tonight, as soon as we're done with the CIC orientation, we'll have dinner together."

"Don't forget three extra places for your grandkids, Dee, Geoff and Richie," Keith playfully reminded.

Both Jennifer and Jim nodded and impatiently grunted affirmatively.

Drew giggled, "We'd better go now," then kissed his mom on the cheek before hurrying out of the room. One by one, each of them kissed Jennifer's cheek, then met outside and laughed their asses off.

Tapping his sub-vocal as he walked along the path towards the dorms, Prez said, "Good morning, Daileass."

"Good morning, even though it's already afternoon here, Prez," Daileass replied.

"Oh, yeah," Prez grinned. "Let Keith and my other Core Rimmers listen in to our conversation, please?"

"Okay," Daileass confirmed, "everyone can hear us now, Prez."

"Since you seem to know it all, can you tell me if anyone's still in the new condos?"

"Yes, I can," Daileass answered. "The first building alongside the CIC has two chefs asleep that were working late preparing food for today. Obviously, they're taking the night shift. Three other chefs are awake, but still in their new homes organizing their things. The other six are awake and working in the kitchen. All four housekeepers are awake and either in the kitchen or dining room. The six landscapers arrived about an hour ago and are also in the first building organizing their things."

"Excellent!" Prez chirped.

"The second building over from the CIC is vacant now," Daileass continued. "Your visitors from Maine stayed there last night, but are now in the dining room."

Prez scowled, "Peter said there would be two doctors?"

"They haven't arrived yet, Prez," Daileass responded.

"Oh, okay."

Daileass said, "The third building is vacant and has not been occupied."

"Good deal," Prez said. "I'd like for you to take care of something for me?"

"Sure. What do you need?"

"We'll need a few more people around here," Prez replied. "Let's start with kitchen staff, dishwashers and pot scrubbers. The housekeepers are doing it now, but that's really not their job. Let's get more housekeepers too."

Keith said, "Doctors need nurses and receptionists."

Derrick added, "We should probably get another few chefs, so they're not working seven days a week."

"Is that all, guys?" Daileass queried.

"That's a decent start," Prez nodded.

Daileass said, "Okay, I'll get help wanted ads placed in the Star Advertiser. All employees have to pass Intel division's mind scans, so I'll let Nathan know. As people reply to the ads, I'll let UNIT Security know, so they can get past the checkpoints and on base for their interviews. Will there be anything else?"

"The only things I can think of are signs for the condos," Prez answered. "The first two need to be for staff only. Is that enough space?"

"That's a total of forty apartments, each about one thousand four hundred square feet. I think that would be enough for the main base."

"We'll deal with the others as needed," Prez agreed.

Opening the dorm door, Keith suggested, "I'm thinking lots of folks will be stopping by for visits. Let's make the third building for visiting Clan and other dignitaries that wouldn't be comfortable anywhere else."

"The only thing I'm wondering is if Daileass should even be doing this," Prez admitted. "After all, making signs is something maybe the kids could do?"

As he stepped inside the dorm, Mike said, "While that's a good idea, the kids kinda need to get their own act together before we start giving them odd jobs."

"I can take care of that, guys," Daileass said. "It's really no problem at all."

Walking down the hallway, Prez said, "Then that's all we've got for you, dude. We're going to take a shower now, so we'll chat again later."

"Kewl!" Daileass chirped, "Activating security cameras in the dorm showers now. See ya soon, you sexy hunks!" All the core Rimmers cracked up and made various silly remarks about Daileass' spying on everyone.

While the boys showered, they once again began renaming people, concentrating especially on their growing staff. Generally, they would all be called Staff Rimmers. Housekeepers would become House Rimmers (but Vacuum Rimmers was suggested), while the landscapers would be called Lawn Rimmers and Tree Rimmers, depending on their specialties. Doctors could be called various unique names such as Cold Rimmers or Sick Rimmers or Temp Rimmers. The yet-to-be-hired kitchen staff would be Dish Rimmers and Pot Rimmers. The chefs were the most difficult to rename, and they couldn't really choose between Cookin' Rimmers or Hot Rimmers or Smokin' Rimmers.

As they finished their showers and toweled off, Mike happened to look up at the small security camera. Its red light was on, but then it blinked off and on and off and on! Again they all began laughing at Daileass. Mike flipped him a bird and Keith bent over and mooned him. The camera lens extended for a close up.

Over the speakers mounted in the ceiling, Daileass teased, "Now there's a hard drive I'd love to crash!" Everyone howled laughing.

Drew tried to hide, but the camera turned and followed him wherever he went. "I still see you!" Daileass repeatedly teased.

Kaleo, Nathan and Tory were laughing as much as everyone else. Nathan barely managed to breathe out, "Don't try to hide, it only encourages him!"

Before they and the other boys left the showers, Prez suggested that they check out a few of the dorm rooms. A few boys weren't very interested, but most were, especially the older ones and of course, all the Core Rimmers. They checked out three rooms. The smallest was about twenty feet by twenty-six feet, while the largest was twenty-four by twenty-six feet. Every room had two pre-made full size beds and oak furnishings. One room had sand colored carpet, another had brown and the third had green. All the walls were painted two-tones; the bottom color varied, contrasting with the carpet color, but the top two thirds of the walls were always shades of sky blue. All the dorm rooms were much larger than the rooms they had in their old homes, and everyone thought they were fantastic.

They went over to the CIC dining room next. While it may have appeared very much like a school cafeteria, the food was nothing less than spectacular. Eggs, pancakes, waffles and various breakfast sandwiches were made to order. There were also assortments of breads, cereals and fruits; not to mention milk, juices and assorted flavored coffees and teas. Every served plate of food had fancy little garnishes too. Being friendly and outgoing, Prez introduced himself, his kids and his team to the chefs as he moved through the chow line.

After a meal fit for a king, Prez excused himself from the table to chat with Madeline. Richie wanted to come along, so Prez picked his son up and carried him. Soon Prez found Madeline in the kitchen by the dish-washing machine. After saying good morning, Prez asked her if she could send someone to the Hundserts' home to clean up and organize the basement, where over a hundred kids had played and slept. Madeline said she would make a point of going over herself to meet his parents, and she would also check the other three houses, interested in meeting the other families.

Prez also told her that there would be help wanted ads placed, and she would likely be interviewing more housekeepers by the end of the week. While he was on the subject, Prez called over chefs Charles and Miguel to tell them that there would need to be more chefs hired, as well as kitchen cleaning staff. If they needed or wanted anything, either for the kitchen or for themselves, they would only have to ask. If they couldn't find him to ask directly, any of his core team would suffice. They assured Prez that they would handle the interviews, but reminded him that Kenny or Frankie would assist in getting anything required for the kitchen.

Prez returned to the table with Richie and sat down grinning. "Everything's set with House Rimmers and Hot Rimmers."

"We're pretty much a functioning Clan now, baby," Keith said. "I just had a chat with Daileass about the other five Rimmer bases. I was wonderin' if they were secured and they are. Starfleet has people at each of them. Once we move kids and begin occupying them, the UNIT will relieve Starfleet."

Longingly, Prez smiled and sighed, "What would I do without you?"

Keith giggled, "I know, baby. Later tonight, we'll make some alone time."

Prez turned to Richie and explained, "Me and daddy have another orientation today."

Richie nodded, "We gets ta play wit Dillon, Geoff and Jonah again?"

"That's right!" Prez cheered. He then asked, "Did you guys have fun playing last night?"

Richie nodded enthusiastically. Dee smiled, "Can we play video games at Gramma's again?"

"I think that would be good," Keith answered.

Dee looked at Richie and asked, "Ya wanna go now?"

"You guys don't have to go yet," Prez reminded.

"I know," Richie said. "We just wanna."

Sliding down off of Keith's lap, Dee hurried over to the table where Mike and Derrick were sitting with their sons. In moments, Dillon, Geoff, Jonah and Reyes were kissing their fathers and six boys came back to Keith and Prez. Dee and Richie kissed their fathers, then started to walk off.

"You guys know where you're going?" Prez worried.

Turning around, Dee nodded, "We know and our Teddies know too."

"Okay," Keith grinned, "You guys be good for Grandma and Grandpa. They're old and can't keep up with little guys."

Dee nodded and grinned, "We know, dad. We'll just be playin' video games in the cellar. Reyes is gettin' really good and we gotta try and keep up." He then turned and hurried after the other five boys.

Keith and Prez sniggered. "Did Dee just look like he was going to purposefully exercise my folks?" Keith giggled.

Prez nodded and laughed, "It sure seemed that way to me!"

Corey, Drew, Mike and Derrick came over to Prez and Keith's table. "All our kids are off bein' kids," Mike smiled.

"Somehow I feel kinda lost without them too," Derrick sighed.

Prez wondered, "Where are Spike and the Scooby Gang?"

Mike replied, "They went off exploring."

Derrick snickered, "Something about finding a place for a new vault, whatever that means!"

Keith grinned, "If I were you, I'd use some of our new facilities to learn more about ferrets. Since they're hybrids, they've got human intelligence and ferret sneaky skills rolled into one. That's a potentially frightening mix."

"I'm not worried," Mike assured. He then sighed and explained, "What does worry me is how they seem to be just as happy off on their own. Like last night, they were shocked they could sleep with us. And this morning, they were just as surprised to be allowed to eat with us."

At a table nearby where John, Brandon and Nathan were sitting with Bruce, Benjamin Hatcher and Thanh Espiridion, Nathan overheard Mike talking about the ferrets. "The ferrets were one of the experiments," Nathan explained. "They used to be housed in cages. They could break out of 'em, but were punished severely if they were found roaming around. Really, they think and act like ferrets, but also have special skills, not the least of which is infiltration."

Suddenly, George Wentworth loudly called, "Randy and Drew, let's get ready for home boys."

Drew Hundser started to stand and looked around uncertainly until he saw two identical twins with red hair hurrying across the dining room towards the older man. Turning to Corey as he sat again, Drew sighed, "Ya know, there are lots of Andrews, but they're usually called Andy. That was maybe the second time in my life someone called Drew and didn't mean me."

"...and they'll find their way into every heating and air conditioning duct on the base," Nathan continued his explanation of the ferrets. "There's one other very important skill the ferrets have,"

Nathan said.

Mike wondered, "What's that?"

"They're assassins," Nathan smirked. "If you guys are ever in a position where you know who a bad guy is but can't get at him, they will solve the problem."

"I don't know if I like that idea," Mike droned. "They're just kids."

Nathan nodded, "They are kids but very special kids, with skills just like Adam, Chang, Juan and Jory."

Shaking his head, Mike worried, "But if something were to happen to any of them, I'd be totally shot to hell."

"They're your kids now," Nathan nodded understandingly. "You can use their skills or choose not to. I'm just saying, they are skilled. And one other thing you need to realize is that you and Derrick are extra protected. For example; let's say you're all on a rescue mission. Mike and Derrick are sentries, as are the ferrets. One or two guys sneak up from out of nowhere and jump you. Those ferrets will claw the shit out of them so fast, they'll be raw hamburger before you can say stop. Now that you're including them as humans, sleeping and eating with you, that's probably intensifying their programmed need to protect you. They will protect both of you with their lives."

Derrick sighed, "We have to chat with them and make sure they understand when it's proper to attack."

"Never on any of our bases," Mike agreed. "We're already more than safe here."

"It's almost eleven," Prez realized. "Let's get into the CIC and be there ready when Lieutenant Vorik beams in." All seven boys got up then retrieved Kaleo on their way to the CIC.

They had just entered the room and were looking around while Prez experimented with a tricorder when Lieutenant Vorik beamed in. Finished with greeting them, Vorik explained that they would be joined by four Starfleet personnel when they too beamed into the room. Once everyone was introduced, Vorik stated, "I must take my leave of you now and return to my ship." Everyone said goodbye and included the usual Vulcan farewells. Then Lieutenant Vorik contacted the Endeavour and beamed out.

The orientation began with the communications systems, which were easy to operate. Kaleo contacted the UNIT base in Utah, the Des Moines base, the Northeast Division, the Oceanic Division in Australia and the Orlando base before moving on to Starfleet Headquarters in San Francisco. They then moved over to the surveillance systems, which were slightly more complicated, especially dealing with country codes and Japanese systems. By the time everyone had a chance to operate the systems and had a few opportunities to try it out, two hours had passed. But they weren't quite finished yet. There were still the equipment room and server room to check out. Drew and Corey were very interested in the inner workings of the hardware and software. After another hour in the server room, Drew and Corey remained with two of the four Starfleet engineers, crawling deep into code and wiring cabinets, while all the others left the CIC and returned to the dining room.

"My brains are in turmoil now!" Keith playfully complained. "If, then, else, do, while, do, until, the whole damn world is spinning in one great loop!"

"Around the Day Shiny!" John giggled.

Bouncing against Keith, Prez giggled, "It wasn't so bad until they started talking about voltages in the wiring cabinets! Someone please tell me how zero volts can be binary one? And what on Earth is trinary? That makes no frigging sense at all to me!"

As they walked through the chow line for snacks and drinks, Derrick scowled, "They said negative logic. By itself, negating logic is illogical. Vulcans would have a melt down."

"Maybe that's why Lieutenant Vorik had to leave," Mike grinned, "had he stayed, he only would've argued with the Starfleet guys."

Ensign Dave Patterson, one of the younger members of the engineering team assigned at age seventeen, smiled and reminded, "The Endeavour had to leave orbit on another assignment. It really didn't have to do with anything other than reallocation of resources."

Prez grinned, "We know, Dave; we're just taking tangents."

Keith nodded, "It's something we've always done, like improvising."

"Too much structure sometimes, dude," Mike agreed.

While filling a cup of Coke, Junior Lieutenant Kelly McGuire said, "You guys do have options in Starfleet, you know? There are classical orchestras, jazz and pop bands you could join. It won't make you Captain of a Starship, but it is a niche you can fill."

As they went to find seats, Derrick explained, "We've already got our own group. Right now we're happy playing covers of other band's songs, but we have been writing our own music."

"It's like the best of all genres," Prez embellished. "It's got the drive and emotion of blues and rock, the harmonic complexities of classical and the improvisational freedom of jazz."

Arriving at an empty large table, Mike sat down and added, "It's kinda like the bands Yes or Emerson, Lake and Palmer, but not quite. There's just something that makes our music different from theirs."

"It starts with the melody," Keith nodded in agreement. "When we're writing, the melody drives the harmony, not like most rock and blues where the harmony drives the melody."

"When it comes to military strategies, Derrick and I seem to do well in lots of video and board games," Prez admitted. "Taking over the world is simple in Civilization Four or even more so on a board game like Risk."

Keith smiled, "One time, the four of us played Risk. It was me and Mike versus Prez and Derrick." He paused and giggled, "It had to be the shortest game of Risk in history!"

Remembering that rainy day, Mike smiled, "They wiped our armies out in under an hour! Then we swapped partners, Keith and Prez versus me and Derrick. That had to be one of the longest games in history! It lasted the rest of the first day and went for three more school day afternoons and nights before we called it a stalemate."

While the boys and the two Starfleet officers were chuckling, Richie and Dee came running into the CIC dining room yelling "DADDY!"

Concerned and a little frightened, both Keith and Prez rapidly stood.

John smiled, "It's all right, bros." Scowling, Prez and Keith turned to John.

Nathan nodded, "Good one, John."

"This was easy though," John shrugged. "That was a happy yell, not a scared scream."

Richie took Prez by the hand and said, "Ya gotta come home, daddy!"

"Why? What's going on?" Prez wondered.

Dee gleefully answered, "Gramma and grampa wanna adopt Kokaku and Carmella! Ain't that great?"

"Told ya," John smiled.

"Oh jeez!" Keith snickered, "They couldn't take three of us adopting and them becoming grandparents!"

"And mom's finally got a little girl in the house!" John laughed.

Chuckling, Prez turned to Dave and Kelly then asked, "Would you two mind looking over my shoulder while I operate a tricorder?"

"For an adoption? I'd love to!" Kelly enthusiastically agreed.

Focusing on Prez, Keith said, "You get the tricorder and I'll round up Drew and Corey. They'll probably want to be there."

Hearing Corey's name, Dee remembered, "Corey's mommy and daddy wanna adopt Cesar and Felipe too!"

Prez giggled, "Well then, Corey absolutely has to come!"

Richie looked up at Prez and wondered, "Are we all gonna get

'dopted, daddy?"

Picking up his youngest son, Prez smiled, "I don't really know, but guess what?"

"What?" Richie chirped as he snuggled close to Prez.

Starting back to the CIC, Prez honestly answered, "No matter who gets adopted and who doesn't, we're all brothers and sisters, now and forever."

Keith lifted Dee and planted him on his hip, then asked, "How's your belly feel?" He then followed Prez.

"Really full!" Dee giggled, "We had popcorn and sodas while we played video games."

"Did you figure out the microwave or did grams help you?" Keith wondered.

"Me and Reyes did it," Dee answered. "It's got a special popcorn only button."

"Good job!" Keith cheered. After planting a quick kiss on Dee's cheek, Keith softly asked, "Did you use the bathroom yet today?"

Dee blushed and nodded, "I'm fine daddy, inside and out."

"Good," Keith said as he caught the CIC door with his other hand. Stepping in the room, Keith whispered, "I missed you."

"Did you miss Richie too?" Dee asked seriously.

Keith nodded, "I missed both of you very much."

Dee searched Keith's eyes and wondered, "Didn't you have fun learnin' new stuff?"

"It was a little fun, but not as much fun as being with you and Richie," Keith truthfully answered. Keith then opened the server room door. Corey was on his hands and knees searching beneath the raised floor with Lieutenant Frakes, while Drew was on a ladder with Ensign Copella tracing cables in the ceiling. Keith playfully sang, "I've got a surprise for you two!"

Corey looked up and Drew looked down grinning at his big brother. Drew sang back, "Why am I suddenly very frightened?"

Corey giggled, "Maybe because the last time was while emptying our Christmas stockings?"

Keith laughed, "It's even better than that!"

Climbing down the ladder, Drew huffed, "Oh no!"

Keith glanced at the two Starfleet officers in the room and asked, "Are we about done for today?"

"We've covered everything we needed to and then some," Lieutenant Frakes answered. "If you ever need anything more, just contact us at Starfleet Headquarters."

Reaching the floor and stepping down off the ladder, Drew nodded, "Thanks, once we get into testing mode, we may need to do that."

Keith asked, "Are you guys staying or heading back to San Francisco?"

"I'll be heading back home," Lieutenant Frakes replied.

"Me too," Ensign Copella responded.

Corey said, "We'll give you a holler if something in the systems gets whacky."

Taking Corey's hand, Drew nodded, "Thanks for the extra time, dudes."

Opening the door and holding it for everyone as they passed, Keith added, "If you have the time, help yourself to a late lunch. Our chefs are some of the best and you won't be disappointed." Both men nodded and said they would have a little something to eat. Keith then said, "We have some family stuff to take care of, but it was great meeting you."

The two men replied in kind and followed Keith out of the CIC. When they returned to the table where Prez was standing and thoughtfully rubbing his chin, Keith asked, "Is there something wrong, Prez?"

"Not really," Prez grinned. "It's just a versatile little machine. Not only can I do adoptions, but it has a simple medical diagnostic facility, an element detector that can even identify radioactivity and a whole bunch of other stuff I barely understand."

Richie looked up and said, "Daddy even scanned me! It was kewl."

"His height, weight and body temperature are recorded right here," Prez smiled.

"Scan me too, daddy!" Dee insisted. "That way we know when I'm growin' and gainin' weight!" Keith put the boy down and Dee stood perfectly still, causing everyone around the table to grin or chuckle.

Prez pressed a few buttons to put the tricorder in the correct mode then held it out and near his son. It made a whistling sound, then stopped and Prez said, "Forty-nine and a half inches, one hundred and twenty-five centimeters, forty-eight pounds or twenty-two kilograms and... ninety-eight degrees Fahrenheit or thirty-six point six degrees Celsius."

Keith asked, "Does it say where he should be at, Prez?"

Prez hummed for a few seconds before Lieutenant McGuire said, "Simply input the patient's age and sex."

"Oh! Okay," Prez nodded, "Fifty-five inches and seventy pounds."

Keith smiled, "You keep eating like you have today and you'll be all set."

Prez hung the tricorder over his shoulder then moved towards Dee, leaned down and picked the boy up joking, "Until then, we get to pick you up and gobble you up!" While Prez made goofy lip smacking eating noises, Dee loudly laughed and tried to push his dad's face away from his belly.

"You're both silly!" Richie giggled.

Keith swept Richie up and started playing the same game, with Richie gleefully screaming as they began the walk out of the dining room and back to the house.

Once they were outside and the two little boys had quieted down, Drew asked, "So what's the big surprise?"

"It's a secret!" Keith laughed.

"Daddy!" Richie giggled. "You're so bad!"

Drew groaned and teased, "So the kids know?"

Corey checked with Drew while saying, "We know just how to get them to spill the beans!" Then Corey went to Richie and began tickling him while Drew tickled Dee! Wildly laughing at the top of their lungs, both boys tried to push their uncles' hands away.

"UNCA DREWWWWWWWW!" Dee heartily laughed, "I'M GONNA PEEEEEE-HEE-HEEEEE!"

Drew stopped tickling his nephew and smiled, "Are you going to share the secret?"

Still giggling and red-faced, Dee checked with Prez. Prez shook his head, then started running away from Drew. Keith followed with Richie while Drew, Corey, John, Nathan, Kaleo and the two Starfleet officers chased after them. Prez hollered his name at the door and stuck his hand on the plate, then hurried inside. In the living room sat his parents with one little boy and one little girl between them. "I hear we're havin' babies again?" Prez laughed.

"We're what?" Drew incredulously hollered.

"Damn these short pregnancies!" Keith chuckled.

"Oh no," Corey softly groaned as the truth suddenly dawned on him.

As the two smiling Starfleet officers walked in the room, Prez pointed and said, "Jim and Jennifer Hundser, please meet Lieutenant McGuire and Ensign Patterson."

The Lieutenant stepped forward, extended his hand and said, "Kelly, and it's my pleasure."

After they had greeted each other, the Ensign moved to take his place and said, "My name's Dave."

Carmella looked up at Jim and asked, "Prez and Keith's gonna be our uncas?"

Smiling, Jim shook his head and answered, "No sweetness, even better, they're going to be your big brothers." The girl widely smiled and shuffled into her new father's lap.

Dee took a few steps closer to the sofa and said, "That means me and Richie are gonna be your nephews."

"We can all play together from now on," Richie smiled.

"Oh! That would be fun," Carmella nodded.

Prez checked with Lieutenant McGuire to make sure he had the tricorder in the correct mode then asked, "Carmella, do you want our daddy and mommy, James and Jennifer Hundser, to be your daddy and mommy too?"

The girl nodded, "Uh huh."

Turning to the boy, Prez asked, "Kokaku, do you want our daddy and mommy, James and Jennifer Hundser to be your daddy and mommy too?"

"Yes," the boy smiled.

Prez then grinned at his foster parents and asked, "Do you two want to keep Carmella and Kokaku as your new son and daughter?"

"Yes, we do," Jim Hundser replied.

"We do," Jennifer Hundser answered.

Prez smiled, "Okay then, these adoptions were witnessed by Keith Hundser, Drew Hundser, John Hundser, Corey Seaver, Nathan Hayes, Kaleo Palakiko, Lieutenant Kelly McGuire and Ensign David Patterson. Now I just hit send... and the official paperwork will be here tomorrow... unless Janet finds out and delivers them personally!"

"She already knows," Jennifer smirked. "I called her to do the honors, since I wasn't aware my son, Director O'Brian could do it!"

"Oops!" Prez giggled. "We haven't had much of a chance the last day or so, have we?"

"But we will make time tonight," Keith quickly promised.

"After we take care of the Seavers' adoptions, we'll be right back home again," Prez said.

Corey turned to Drew and grinned knowingly.

But the words had barely escaped Prez's lips before his comm-badge chirped. "Mike to Prez, come in, Prez."

Prez tapped his comm-badge and said, "Wassup, Mike?"

"You still in the adoption mode, dude?" Mike asked.

Prez chuckled, "Yep, how many this time?"

"Two," Mike giggled, "My mom's basically tossing me out of the house I haven't even slept in yet!"

"I AM NOT!" Laura Gibbons loudly laughed.

"We really should though," Rob Gibbons chuckled.

"And I haven't even been home yet either!" Derrick whined.

Prez laughed and said, "While I'm at the Seavers', you'd better go home, Derrick, and check. We'll meet up at the Gibbons' in about fifteen minutes, okay?"

"Kewl, bud," Mike giggled while Derrick whimpered in the background.

"See ya in a few," Prez chuckled.

Keith snickered, "Well, at the rate things are going, we'll be back in about an hour!"

Prez nodded, "Still in time for dinner!"

Drew teased, "Unless rescued kids begin adopting each other!"

Jennifer gasped, "They couldn't... could they?"

Shaking his head, Prez chuckled, "No, we could because we're Starfleet Ensigns."

Grabbing Kaleo by the shoulder, Keith grinned, "Now we just gotta get this guy here hitched with someone special and he can adopt too."

Shrugging, Kaleo joked, "I'm thinking a few days of freedom, then a boyfriend, then we'll see what happens."

John giggled, "I'm an Ensign too, mom. I just gotta find a cute girl, or boy... maybe one of each!"

"You do and you'll be grounded until your thirteenth birthday, Mister!" Jennifer warned. Laughing hysterically at his mom's reaction, John hurried out of the house with Nathan close behind.

"We'll be back in a while, mom," Prez smiled, as he took Dee's hand and turned to leave.

"What's for dinner?" Keith wondered.

"Spaghetti and meatballs," Jennifer replied.

Keith hummed hungrily then picked up Richie and followed Prez.

Jim Hundser stood with Carmella and offered his hand to the two Starfleet officers saying, "It was good meeting you both."

While the men shook hands, Jennifer smiled, "I do hope we'll be seeing you again soon."

"Yes ma'am," Kelly nodded, "I hope so too."

"Please sit and enjoy your new family," Dave said, "We can show ourselves out."

While everyone else were still leaving the Hundser home, John and Nathan suddenly stopped running and came to halt near the Gibbons' home. John scowled, "Something's very wrong."

Nathan nodded and softly asked, "You know what that black cloud means?"

Shaking his head, John said, "I don't see it, but I feel it."

"The black cloud means death," Nathan revealed.

"Oh no," John groaned. "It's Bruce's parents, isn't it?"

Nathan nodded then pointed to the Seavers' home. "There's something else in that house too," Nathan prompted, "Do you feel it?"

John shook his head again and sighed, "Sorry, I've got Bruce filling my mind right now."

Prez walked closer and asked, "What's goin' on, you guys?"

"I gotta go back home, Prez," John explained, and wiped tears from his eyes. Nathan only nodded and wrapped an arm around John. "I'll prob'ly be home the rest of the night," John sighed.

"It's okay," Prez softly assured. "We can take care of these adoptions with two less witnesses. Go do what you obviously need to do." With that, John and Nathan turned around, then ran back home again. Prez and the rest of the group passed the Gibbons' home and went to the Seavers' home.

John walked back in his house and saw his parents still in the living room watching TV with Carmella and Kokaku. "I need to ask a really big favor," John sighed.

Seeing that John was no longer playful, but very serious, Jim and Jennifer turned to each other briefly. "Go ahead and ask," Jim Hundser said.

Since Bruce was in the basement playing video games with the other kids, John moved closer to his parents and softly explained, "Bruce's parents were found. They're dead."

"How do you know that?" Jennifer excitedly asked.

John shrugged but Nathan explained, "John's empathic and I'm telepathic. When we got near Mike's parents house, we both knew it." The phone began ringing in the kitchen. Jim Hundser stood to answer it but waited.

John nodded and said, "You have to adopt Bruce too. Without me, without us I mean, he's gonna be totally lost and freaked out." The answering machine turned on while Jim hurried to the kitchen.

Jennifer asked, "You're both sure about this?"

Both boys rapidly nodded and Nathan explained, "That's Mike's dad on the phone now."

"Say you'll adopt Bruce too mom, please?" John whined and then rambled excitedly. "He's only had us the last two days. He needs us and I want him for a little brother. I'll share my room with him and Kokaku. It's really big anyway. We can all fit in there easy and it'll be fun." Needing some support, John smiled at Kokaku and asked, "You'd like another big brother too, wouldn't you, Kokaku?" The small Japanese boy grinned and nodded. "See, he likes the idea."

Jim Hundser returned to the living room frowning. Jennifer looked up at her husband and softly asked, "Jim? It's true, isn't it?" Jim Hundser grunted affirmatively, then sighed long and hard.

Jim squatted down in front of the sofa and Carmella asking, "Would you like another big brother to watch out for you and keep you safe?"

Counting her fingers, Carmella asked, "I'd have five big brothers and one little brother then?"

"Yes, you would," Jim softly smiled.

"We would all watch out for each other and keep one another safe because that's what families always do," Jennifer explained to Carmella and Kokaku. Both kids excitedly nodded and smiled.

"Okay," Jim Hundser said as he stood. So the two young children would understand, he then explained, "Mike's daddy is on his way here. When he gets here, us bigger boys will go upstairs with Bruce and break the news. Bruce is going to be very sad, but we're all going to help him feel better. It's just going to take time, maybe even a few days."

Carmella said, "We can all help him, daddy."

"Okay, poppa," Kokaku agreed.

There was a knock on the front door. While Jim went to let Rob Gibbons in, Jennifer asked, "Would you two like to help me make dinner?"

"Could we?" Carmella excitedly asked.

"The three of us can make a nice big salad," Jennifer happily said. She stood and took both her new children's hands, then led them out of the room.

John offered, "We'll go downstairs and bring Bruce upstairs." When his mom and Nathan nodded in agreement, John led Nathan to the basement door and downstairs. In the basement, Jonah and Bruce were sitting on pillows on the floor, happily playing video games. At the next television, Dillon and Geoff were playing video games too. Reyes sat behind the four boys watching and playfully commenting on both games.

"Hey guys," John cheerfully said.

"Hey," Bruce smiled, "Reyes has been teaching us to play Sonic better."

"You guys wanna play too?" Jonah asked.

Nathan sent to John; "If it's okay with you, I'll stay here and let these guys know what's goin' on. I can help you from down here easily, if you need me to."

John nodded, then said, "Bruce, could you come upstairs with me for a little while? There's something we need to talk about with my dad. Your Teddy and mine can come too."

"Good idea!" Nathan's voice loudly filled John's brain.

"Okay, pal," Bruce replied. "Someone take over for me here." Nathan quickly moved into position, sitting between Bruce and Jonah. Then Bruce passed off the controller and rolled away, then stood up. "How was your orientation?" Bruce asked John.

"Pretty cool," John grinned, "lots o' computers that can do lots o' different stuff. They make the Internet look lame in comparison." They started up the stairs and John rambled on about the communications systems and how they had contacted all the other Clan Short Divisions and bases. Jim Hundser and Rob Gibbons followed the two boys and their Teddy Bears up to the second level and into one of the bedrooms.

Jim Hundser closed the door and asked the two boys to sit. Bruce sat on the bed and John sat immediately beside him, bracing himself for what was soon to come. Rob Gibbons pulled out a desk chair, sat down and softly said, "Bruce, Honolulu Police called me a little while ago."

"You found my parents?" Bruce excitedly squealed.

Rob nodded and asked, "Did they tell you they were going for a boat ride?"

Bruce shook his head saying, "They told me they were going with some other grown-ups, but would be back to pick me up supper time Friday."

Rob sighed and explained, "Well, they went out on a boat. We're still investigating what exactly happened, but we know there was an accident." Rob paused and looked into the innocent eyes of the boy, saying, "No one on that boat survived, Bruce." The boy didn't seem to understand, so Rob softly said, "I'm sorry to have to tell you, but both your parents have died."

Bruce scowled and inhaled deeply. He remained quiet and wiped his eyes, then began trembling. John wrapped a caring arm around his friend. Both of Bruce's hands reached up for his eyes and he softly cried, "No, no, no," then began quaking violently as he tried to grasp the reality of the situation. Jim Hundser moved over to the bed and sat on the other side of Bruce, wrapping his arm around both Bruce and John.

"I promised you we'd make it better and we will, Bruce," John softly wept.

"How? Why? We was on vacation!" Bruce bitterly sobbed.

Jim Hundser softly offered, "We don't know how or why, but know that you are not alone, Bruce."

While Bruce wailed bitterly, John looked at his dad with red eyes and through sniffles explained, "Bruce only has grandparents, dad. They're real old and in nursing homes."

"We'll take care of everything," Jim Hundser promised.

John and Bruce's Teddy bears approached the bed and did the only thing they were programmed to do when their friends were sad; they crawled up into their laps and cuddled with them.

Jim Hundser and Rob Gibbons quietly stood, then exited the room, closing the door behind them. As they walked down the hall, Rob said, "As we learn more about what happened, I'll let you know."

Jim nodded, "I'll let Bruce know when he's more able to understand. For the next week or two, the reasons how and why won't matter to him."

Rob sighed, "This is one job of a police officer I will not miss." The two men walked down the stairs. Pausing at the front door, Rob smiled slightly and said, "I need to go home and extend my family."

Jim reached for Rob's hand and shook it firmly, saying, "Finally, we can do without worrying about how we can afford it."

"That puts us in a rather odd position," Rob realized. "Going forward, in an indirect fashion, we work for Preston."

Jim grinned and asked, "Is there any other fourteen-year-old more worthy?"

"Not that I've ever met," Rob agreed. He then said goodbye and left for home.

In the upstairs bedroom, there was a lull in the storm. Bruce said, "You know that I knew something was really wrong these last two days." John nodded and Bruce continued, "It wasn't like them to leave me like they did. They wanted to do something other than watch me at the beach. It wasn't that big of a deal to me so I said, go ahead."

"You waited just like you were supposed to," John softly said. "You loved them and they loved you too. Your situation is like so many other kids here now. Some were bad parents, but lots were good. They came here on vacation as families, but wound up alone. Even Prez's parents died here, not on vacation, but still, it was another accident. And just like Prez, we ain't leaving you alone, Bruce."

Bruce sighed, "You really mean it too, don't you?"

John grinned, "Course! You've been my friend and shadow for two days. Tomorrow, if you want, you can be my kid brother. Prez can make that happen. He did it last night for Drew and Corey. He did it earlier this afternoon for my mom and dad. Now he's going from house to house making the other grown-ups parents of some of the rescued kids."

Bruce began crying again and through his sobs, huffed, "It just hurts so much! I'll never see them again!"

John shared in Bruce's pain and laid on the bed, pulling Bruce down too. Then John called his Teddy Bear Zed and Bruce's Teddy Bear Dex to come lay down on the bed too. Soon the two boys had cried themselves to sleep between Dex and Zed.

Prez, Keith, Dee, Richie and Drew came home after performing adoptions at the Seavers', the Gibbons' and Seiberts'. Mike went to the Hundser's house only to retrieve Reyes, Dillon and Jonah then went back home. Corey remained at home for dinner with his new twin brothers Cesar and Felipe. Derrick also stayed home for dinner with his new brothers Kawazoe and Sung, and his new sisters Latoya and Brandi.

While initially all the Hundser boys were happy upon returning home and completing a grand total of ten adoptions across the four families, they soon learned about Bruce's parents. They began softly talking about Bruce's situation. With the six-hour time zone difference, it was after eleven at night in Ohio. Phone calls would need to be placed to verify that there was no other family willing or able to take Bruce. Assuming what Bruce had previously said was correct, he would become another foster son and brother in the house. When dinner was almost ready, Prez went upstairs and peeked into the bedroom to find both boys sound asleep.

Dinner time conversation revolved around assigning three bedrooms to ten kids. Then Keith and Prez offered to move themselves and their two boys into one of the townhomes, once most of the kids had become comfortable and were willing to move into the dorms. Until then, the basement nesting would continue, which Dee, Carmella, Geoff, Richie and Kokaku were thrilled to hear.

At the end of dinner, Prez, Keith, Drew and Corey began sharing all the miscellaneous Clan Short stuff their parents were interested in. While clearing the table, they chatted about the CIC communications and surveillance systems, the details of the UNIT and how the Pacific Rim Division had their own troops to deal with more serious situations should they arise. Finally, Prez decided that a nice dessert for the family would be appropriate. In front of all the kids and his parents, Prez called Daileass and asked for ten strawberry shortcakes with extra whipped cream and chocolate sprinkles. While that was a fair demonstration, Jennifer Hundser was still concerned about the boys getting into and out of dangerous situations.

Standing up from his chair at the table, Drew tapped his sub-vocal and said, "Daileass, my folks are worried we might not be able to move around fast enough."

"Oh, really!" Daileass giggled. "Where would you like to go?"

"Umm... how about over to the CIC?" The words had only left his mouth when Drew disappeared from the dining room.

Keith grinned at his parent's stunned expressions and explained. "We don't even have to speak aloud," Keith then grabbed another mouthful of strawberry shortcake, stood up and silently mouthed, "Daileass, get me to the CIC too." Keith's mouth was full and he couldn't have clearly spoken anyway, but he also disappeared from the room.

Then Prez's comm-badge chirped and everyone heard "Drew to Prez."

"Where are you, bro?" Prez smiled.

"In the dining room at the CIC now," Drew giggled. The rattling sounds of silverware, plates and glassware were clearly heard from the comm-badge in the Hundsers' dining room.

Prez sniggered, "Your strawberry shortcake is enticing me!"

Drew loudly laughed, "Daileass, get me back home and in the dining room before I miss out!"

A second later, Drew appeared standing before his chair again. Then Keith reappeared too, saying, "Thanks, Daileass. I think that's enough demonstrations for the 'rents."

Daileass giggled, "Any time, Keith. Give Prez a kiss from me and an extra special one from you too."

Keith grinned, "Any special reason?"

"I see and hear everything, remember? All the kids there are saying nothing but nice things about the base and all you guys. Some of the kids in the dining room wish you were all there and they appreciated seeing Drew, even if only for a minute. Since you're doing such a good job and Prez is the leader, he deserves a kiss from both of us," Daileass explained.

"Can't argue with ya there," Keith smiled. Leaning over, Keith landed a kiss on his lover's cheek and explained, "That's from Daileass for doing a great job. All the kids in the dining room are saying nice things about us."

"Oh," Prez smiled.

Keith moved closer, then planted a big wet strawberry and whipped cream flavored kiss. All the little kids began giggling when Prez put his fork down and threw his arms around Keith's back. After about a minute, Keith pulled away grinning and Prez was swooning.

"What was the topic of conversation?" Prez softly wondered.

Drew covered his mouth and cracked up laughing, setting all the kids off. Jim and Jennifer just smiled and shook their heads.

Prez giggled and counted fingers while softly reviewing what he had already discussed. "Oh yeah!" He suddenly remembered, "There is one other thing you need to know, and I already know it won't make you very happy. Adam wants us to be able to protect ourselves at all times. He gave us two choices, and based on what I already know about both of you, I've chosen phasers over handguns."

"I strongly object to both!" Jennifer firmly said.

Keith sighed, "Mom, we can probably learn self defense too, but that's going to take way more time. It could potentially leave us vulnerable anyway. The choice Adam gave us was phasers or handguns. Given only those two choices, what would you have us do?"

Jennifer quietly grumbled then reluctantly huffed, "Phasers, but they are to be locked at all times and away from where the children can get anywhere near them!"

Prez considered, "We could keep all of them in the CIC and locked in there. That would drastically limit access to them."

Keith softly offered, "We're all going to have one... even John."

"OH NO!" Jennifer loudly shrieked. She turned to her husband and seeing him calm only upset her more. "Jim, don't tell me you approve?"

"Joel made John part of the core team," Jim Hundser reminded. "Keith and Preston initially excluded him until they learned he was empathic. If any of them could tell when someone was lying, it would be John first. You know that as well as I do, Jen. Of our three sons, Keith is the musician and has always been; Drew is the engineer, forever tinkering with things and always has been; John has been the one feeling when anything was especially good or especially bad. It's always been this way, and John did it again just an hour or so ago. He knew Bruce's parents had died simply by emotions he felt from outside Rob and Laura's house. I understand your concerns; so do Keith and Preston. But we're not always going to be dealing with lost kids on beaches. What if our boys are ever in a position like Joel was Friday night? Joel could've been killed. It was his special group of friends that saved his life. Are any of our boys expendable? No, of course not. If one extra phaser in John's hands prevents one of the other seven from getting hurt, then it is worth it. The simple question that we have to answer is whether to treat John as less capable only because of his age."

Seeing his foster mom still teetering on the fence, Prez offered, "Consider this likely scenario: there's one kid in a bad foster home with two adults. In that case, I would probably have four of the eight transported on-site. First thing to remember is Adam would have a fit if our personal security didn't come with us. Right off the bat, four becomes twelve, including our security team. Twelve against two, six armed outside the foster home covering our backs and six armed inside the home."

Jennifer emphatically stated, "I am not feeling better about this!"

Drew asked, "Remember how you felt about what happened to Stephen and Aaron?"

Keith added, "CPS was proven pointless; they should be called child prostitution services."

"That's why we're here now, mom," Prez softly confirmed. "Clan Short is the ultimate group protecting kids from those that would abuse them. Kids protecting kids; the fortunate liberating the less fortunate. Isn't that what dad does for his law firm? Isn't it what you do at the hospital; what Mike's dad does as a policeman; what my mom did as an accountant? It's what we've learned from all our parents; different flavors of people helping other people."

Everyone was surprised when John came around the corner and asked, "Would you let Bruce be fostered by someone else? If my carrying a simple phaser can help keep myself or any member of a team safer, what's the harm? Or should we let the bad people have their way with everyone? They can take our money, take our friends, take our kids, take our lives! I SAY NO! WE ARE SAYING NO! NOT ANOTHER STEP! THE WAY THEY THINK IS WRONG!"

THE WAY THEY ACT IS WRONG!"

Everyone in the room was stunned silent. John grinned triumphantly then tapped his sub-vocal. "Daileass, tell them what you've learned about Bruce's remaining family."

Over the room's ceiling mounted emergency speaker, Daileass said, "Bruce's paternal grandfather is seventy-two years old, suffers from emphysema and is at an extended care facility in Cleveland, Ohio. The paternal grandmother is seventy years old, has had one stroke that left her unable to walk; she is wheelchair bound at the same facility. The maternal grandfather died September eleventh, two-thousand-one at One World Trade Center. The maternal grandmother is sixty-four years old and living in a nursing home in Queens, New York. She became clinically delusional after the death of her husband. There are no other blood relatives still living on record."

"Thanks, Daileass," John smirked. He pointed at the ceiling saying, "There's a kid upstairs we've been caring for the last two days. He needs us. Even if we weren't Clan Short, he'd still need us. Yesterday morning, while Keith and Prez were showering, he told me that he didn't want to leave when his parents were found, because he'd miss us. That was before Joel made us a division of the Clan. All he needs is one tiny bit of happiness added to this day; just someplace to call home and a family he already trusts to call his own. Where's the problem?"

Jim and Jennifer both got up from the table and went to John. "There's no problem," Jennifer softly said and wrapped her arms around her youngest son.

Jim ruffled his son's hair and smiled, "You do have ways of making your point very well known."

Prez got up and retrieved his tricorder from the living room. He tapped his sub-vocal and said, "Daileass, transmit the records regarding Bruce Downing to my tricorder."

"Transmission complete, Prez," Daileass soon acknowledged.

Prez then spoke into the machine. "Upon learning of the death of Bruce Downing's parents, the Hundser family discussed the future welfare of the boy and have decided to adopt him effective immediately. Bruce is now resting after learning of his parents' passing. Unless the adoption is denied by Bruce Downing at a future time, this record is to be considered true and binding. I will speak for Bruce as Director of Clan Short Pacific Rim Division. Bruce Downing accepts James and Jennifer Hundser as his adopted parents. Do James and Jennifer Hundser accept Bruce Downing as their son?"

"We do," Jim replied.

"Yes," Jennifer stated.

"It's done," Prez smiled. "Eleven in one day and there's still a few hours left."

Looking at the young kids at the table, John grinned, "Why are old people so dense?"

Jim, Jennifer, Prez, Keith and Drew all loudly insisted, "We are not old!" John and all the kids cracked up.

"It looks like I slept through dinner," John smiled and sniffed around. "Italian?"

"Leftovers are in the fridge, bro," Keith smiled.

"And strawberry shortcakes for dessert, courtesy of Daileass," Prez added.

At the Seaver home, dinner was rather uneventful. Corey and his parents were getting to know Cesar and Felipe better. Derrick was home having dinner with his parents, two new brothers and two new sisters.

At the Gibbons' house, dinner was delayed because Mike was out searching the grounds and calling for Spike and the Scooby Gang. Amongst the trees southwest of the outdoor recreation area, they found Mike, but were covered with dirt and wood chips. Before Mike would dare bring them in the house, they had to be cleaned up, so naturally, Mike took them to the dorm showers. "Shiny lovers like us have to keep our hair clean," Mike explained as they walked to the dorm. "Sure, you can get dirty everyday, but then you need to shower to have Shiny coats to be proud of."

This made perfect sense to the Scoobies, but they were used to bathing themselves and each other. Also, they were far too short to reach the knobs to turn on the water. Mike stripped and began to show them how to shower, which was quite challenging because this was not the normal way that ferrets bathed. Since they weren't watching and demonstration was pointless, Mike got on his knees in the shower and organized a ferret assembly line. Daileass was of course monitoring this activity and everything Daileass saw was quickly known by others in Utah. Spike scampered under the water spray and out of it again, then shook the water from his coat, splattering Mike with mud in the processes. Various UNIT members gathered in a conference room and were observing the uproariously hysterical proceedings. Mike had to hold each ferret under the water, get sprayed with mud, shampoo them and rinse them off again. By the time all four ferrets were clean, Mike was filthy and had to shower again! And as far as the Scooby Gang was concerned, they were dry enough after shaking the water from their coats. Mike demonstrated the toweling off process, but the ferrets found it faster and easier to just roll around on the towels on the floor. In Utah, kids were pounding on the conference room table and turning purple from laughing so hard. No sooner did Mike and four ferrets leave the showers, than Daileass had packaged the video into a QuickTime flick titled "A Day In The Life of Dirty Rimmer Ferrets" and transmitted it to every Clan base and division around the world.

The Seiberts' had finished dinner by the time Mike returned home with his ferret kids. The Gibbons' had only begun eating when Derrick came to the door with Reyes, Dillon and Jonah. While Mike and the ferrets quickly ate, Mike held back any remarks about the challenges he had faced finding the ferrets and then bathing them. Not knowing any better, Derrick had a normal, pleasant conversation with everyone at the table while Mike chewed his food as if it were made of leather.

Back at the Hundserts', Prez and Keith went upstairs to check on Bruce but were surprised to hear a chirping sound coming from the first bedroom. Together, they went into the room that was originally going to become theirs, before they and the Hundserts adopted kids. Prez sat down at the computer that was flashing an 'Incoming Message' screen. The first, most recent message on the list was the "Dirty Rimmer Ferrets" and the attachment. At first, Keith and Prez thought it might be spam but then they noticed who it was from and clicked on the attachment. "Oh God!" Prez groaned, but he and Keith couldn't help laughing. Mike was being as patient as he possibly could but getting flustered with the confused Scoobies.

The second message was also from Daileass, simply notifying Prez that Dr. Rod Andrews, pediatrician, and Dr. Randall Wiener, child psychologist, were now present on the Ewa Beach main base.

The third and final message on the list was from Lieutenant Stanley Mathers at C.S.P.R.D. Maui, sent just after four in the afternoon.

Prez grumbled, "This was sent almost three hours ago!" and opened the e-mail. It read:

Director O'Brian,

I am leading the Starfleet Security contingent at your Maui Base.

We now have in our custody five children, four boys and one girl, ranging in age from nine years to fifteen years of age. All are runaways from either their abusive natural parents or from abusive foster care providers.

Please contact me at your earliest possible convenience so that food, medical care and shelter can be provided for the above mentioned children.

Also, I would like to extend my thanks to General Adam Casey for the excellent security arrangements made here in Maui and at the other Pacific Rim Division bases.

Cordially Yours,

Lieutenant (j.g.) Stanley Mathers.

"Okay," Prez thought aloud, "There are five kids so at least five of us should go get them." Prez checked the oldest message, which was from Donnie. The UNIT troops would be moving onto the Oahu peninsula base during that day and on Monday.

Keith nodded and recommended, "The two of us, Mike and Derrick and Kaleo."

"Instead of Kaleo, lets bring Drew to hopefully make the younger kids feel more comfortable," Prez suggested.

"Good," Keith beamed proudly. "I hadn't thought of that, but it would probably make a difference to a nine year old."

"We work and play well together," Prez smiled, and then pulled Keith close for a deep kiss. Breaking the kiss, Prez said, "If you'll gather Drew, Mike and Derrick, I'll contact Lieutenant Mathers."

Keith nodded, "I love you."

"I love you too babe," Prez smiled.

Keith walked down the hall and back downstairs to get Drew and contact Mike and Derrick for their first Clan Short rescue.

Prez tapped his comm-badge and said, "Director O'Brian to Lieutenant Stanley Mathers."

Only a moment later, a deep voice replied, "This is Lieutenant Mathers. Good evening, Sir."

"I just got your message, Lieutenant," Prez began. "I'm sorry for the delay, but we had an orientation of our facilities this afternoon, a bunch of adoptions and just finished dinner a few minutes ago."

"It's not a problem Sir," Lieutenant Mathers responded. "Kids have been walking up to our gates all day. There are now seven here, five boys and two girls."

"Are they in urgent need of medical care, Lieutenant? If need be, I can bring a doctor with me."

"I don't believe so. They're bruised and scraped; and one girl has a twisted ankle that I've already bandaged and iced."

"Okay. I'm gathering my team together and expect to be at your gate in the next five or ten minutes."

"Very well, Sir."

"Lieutenant?"

"Yes, Sir?"

"Please stop calling me Sir; I'm fourteen. If you must be formal, call me Director, but I'd much rather you call me Preston or Prez."

Lieutenant Mathers chuckled, "See ya in a few minutes, Preston."

"O'Brian out," Prez said as he stood. He went and checked on Bruce like he had originally intended to do, then went downstairs.

As Prez arrived at the first floor landing, Keith said, "Mike and Derrick are on their way."

"Kewl," Prez said, and then asked, "Is John done eating?"

"Just finishing up, Prez," John hollered from the dining room.

"We're picking up seven so you're coming with us, John. Make sure you've got your Starfleet I.D.'s ready." Prez then tapped his comm-badge again saying, "Prez to Corey."

"Yeah Prez, wassup?" Corey answered.

"We've got a few kids to pick up from the Maui base. I need you, dude."

"I'm on my way."

Jim Hundser came over and said, "This is just the beginning. You realize that after Friday's news, every abused kid on all the Islands will be locating us for help."

Keith nodded, "We kinda figured that as soon as we saw the message."

John hurried over saying, "I'm ready."

"Be safe," Jim Hundser smiled.

"We will, dad," the four boys chorused as they walked out of the house.

Prez hummed and softly said, "Lemme just tell Kaleo what's going on." Tapping his comm-badge again, Prez said, "Prez to Kaleo."

"Kaleo here."

"We're going to pick up a few kids from Maui, dude."

"Do you need me too?"

"We're kewl, man. Spend time with the others and let them know we'll have seven new arrivals in the nest tonight."

Sounding disappointed, Kaleo softly said, "Okay, if you're sure."

Prez assured, "You're doing an excellent job as Mouth Rimmer, Kaleo. This time it's only seven kids and from our base at Maui. It's really no big deal. Besides, the work you do as liaison is just what we need in this early stage of the game. We'll catch up with you guys within the hour at the pool, okay?"

Much happier, Kaleo said, "Thanks Prez. We'll see you soon. Kaleo out."

John looked up at Prez and said, "He's worried you don't need or want him around, Prez."

"Really?" Prez excitedly squealed. "Nothing could be further from the truth."

As Corey, Mike and Derrick walked out of their houses, Keith realized, "He's still one of the rescued, baby."

"We'll all go into play mode at the pool once we finish this little task," Prez promised. As Mike and Derrick approached, Prez teased, "Shiny Daddy showering with his ferret kiddies!"

"How the hell did you know about that?" Mike incredulously hollered.

Keith giggled, "We got a message from Daileass, complete with video and audio of the whole thing!"

"And your thing and cute bottom too!" Prez laughed.

"SONOFABITCH!" Mike screamed while all the others laughed hysterically.

"Be nice now," Prez playfully warned. "We need Daileass to get us from here to Maui. Get your I.D.'s out and ready."

Reaching into his pocket, Mike grumbled, "If he had an ass, I'd kick it so friggin' hard!"

While the rest of his Core Rimmers laughed their asses off, Prez tapped his sub-vocal and giggled, "Daileass, we need transportation to the Rimmer Maui base where Lieutenant Mathers is stationed."

"Sure thing, Prez," Daileass said, "Stand by."

A few seconds later all seven were standing inside the Maui base main gate. A tall man of African descent walked out of the security building. Holding up his I.D., Prez said, "Lieutenant Mathers?"

Stopping and snapping to attention, Lieutenant Mathers saluted. All the other Core Rimmers smiled at both the Lieutenant and Prez. Adam had warned Prez about this just the prior day, but Prez wasn't really prepared for the salute. Prez returned the salute saying, "At ease, Lieutenant. We work together, I really don't expect you to salute me. I'm only an Ensign, after all."

Moving to parade rest, Lieutenant Mathers replied, "Pardon me, but under current Starfleet regulations, you have a rank one level below Patriarch Cory Short. As a Division Director of Clan Short, you outrank me and most of Starfleet officers up as far as the senior staff. When Clan Short calls, Starfleet answers."

That was news to Prez, but he kept his cool while those around him were more than obviously impressed. "Please, treat me informally," Prez smiled. He then introduced his team before sending Mike, Derrick, Drew, Corey and John inside to get the kids.

Relaxing more, Lieutenant Mathers said, "We've sheltered seven children here. The first showed up about noon; we were having lunch at the time. Each hour or so, another showed up."

Noticing the relatively small size of the security station, Prez said, "You could've called us sooner, Lieutenant. It must be getting crowded in there."

"From a security perspective, it made sense to hold them here," Lieutenant Mathers explained. "Two of the four parents that came to get their kids were more than argumentative, and are now enjoying the comforts of the brig at Starfleet Headquarters."

"Well, that'll make our job easier if we need to prosecute," Keith grinned.

"This is the way we'll work it going forward," Lieutenant Mathers said. "It's better to flush out the bigger jerks and have them stir things up here with us rather than have them seek you out."

The security station's door opened again. Drew, Corey and John led the group of rescued kids outside. John began the introductions once all seven were outside. "Guys, this is Prez and Keith; they're our big bros. Prez is the leader of our Clan and Keith's second in command."

Drew took over introductions and began with the youngest by placing his hand on shoulders. "This is Randy Beale, this is Samuel Bay, and here's Louis Mares and Roy Angulo and Gerald Mayers."

Derrick introduced the two girls. "This is Karen Dehart and Sonia Baugh."

Mike said, "Sonia twisted her ankle running out of her house."

Prez locked eyes with the girl and asked, "How do you feel, Sonia; can you walk all right?"

Sonia nodded, "I'll live now that I'm away from my parents."

"We'll get all you guys and girls fixed up," Prez promised. Karen and two of the boys had small gym bags with them. The others only had the clothes on their backs. As Prez began explaining how things were at the main base on Oahu, Lieutenant Mathers moved away and went to the gate.

Keith watched the Lieutenant and only half listened to Prez, concentrating on the boy beyond the gate. His chestnut brown hair was a mess and his clothes looked tattered and torn, more so than the seven Prez was talking to. Lieutenant Mathers signaled to the security station and the gate began to open.

Keith went to the boy asking, "What's your name?"

"Hi, my name's Gage; Gage Lundberg," the boy softly replied.

"I'm Keith. What's goin' on, little dude?"

Gage sighed, "My mom and dad... they don't care about me, they only care about booze and drugs." Drew and Corey moved closer and listened. "They don't cook, don't clean, don't work... just don't care about nuthin' or anyone; not even me. I've been gone for two days. I wonder if they even noticed yet."

"No worries, Gage," Drew said, "We've got you covered."

Corey nodded and asked, "If they wanted you back, would you want to go back?"

Shaking his head furiously, "No, never again. I've run away before and the police put me back with them. Did it matter or change a thing? Not at all."

Stepping closer to Keith, Prez asked, "What's going on here?"

Keith answered briefly, "Gage has druggie parents. He's pretty much divorced himself of them."

Prez nodded understandingly and asked, "How would you like about another hundred brothers and sisters just like you that really care what you're eating and where you're sleeping?"

"It sounds like it could be real nice," Gage replied, "better than my last eight and a half years."

"Let's go then," Prez smiled. "Everybody together now, pick up your stuff and we're gone." He then tapped his sub-vocal and said, "Daileass, fifteen to transport back to our main base, please."

"You got it, Prez," Daileass replied.

Gage looked around for a van or truck that would be coming, but then suddenly found himself and all the others standing in the center of the lawns of four nearby houses. "WOW!" Gage giggled. Prez smiled down at the boy. "Where are we?" Gage wondered.

"Oahu, Ewa Beach," Prez grinned. "Beats the hell out of flying, huh?"

"I'll say!" Gage giggled.

"Who's hungry?" Prez loudly asked. Eight arms raised with a few voicing affirmations. "Okay, Drew, Corey and John, please lead our new Rimmers to the chow."

Mike said, "Me and Derrick need to sit down with our kids and ferrets for a heart-to-heart."

"No problem," Prez nodded, "We'll bring our kids and meet y'all at the pool. Sonia, if your ankle starts bugging you at all, let someone know and we'll introduce you to our doctor."

"Okay, Prez," Sonia said. Mike and Derrick began the walk to their homes.

"Follow us, guys," John said, and then started in the direction of the CIC.

"Wait till you taste our food here," Corey said as he began walking. "We've got the best chefs in all the Islands right here." Drew agreed and began telling them about that morning's breakfast.

Finally alone, Prez turned to Keith and whispered, "If I don't get ten minutes alone with you soon, it's going to be very, very embarrassing for us at bedtime tonight."

Keith nodded and giggled, "I know, baby. We'll go inside, make the 'rents happy, check on the kids and then..."

Prez waited with baited breath before finishing, "Then make a mess out of our new bed?"

Taking his lover's hand, Keith teased, "I hope the Vulcans soundproofed this place," then together they walked across the lawn and into their parents' house.

Mike and Derrick went to the Seiberts' home to retrieve their kids, but found only Latoya and Brandi, the Seiberts' newly adopted girls were there with Lindsay and Christel, the Gibbons' newly adopted girl. Dillon, Jonah and Reyes were over at the Gibbons' playing with Benjamin, the Gibbons' newly adopted boy. The Scooby gang were split in half. Spike and Xander were at the kitchen table polishing silverware while Faith and Willow were polishing the brass knobs on the kitchen cabinets.

While everyone seemed happy enough, Mike turned to his mother and moaned, "Ma, you put our kids to work?"

Laura Gibbons held up her hands and shook her head giggling, "I did no such thing! They wanted to do it! For the first ten minutes you were gone, they went from room to room. If it shined, they were interested! I told them to play with the boys, but that didn't last a full minute before they returned looking like their whole world was about to end. What you'll learn is to compromise with your kids."

Rob Gibbons entered the kitchen and said, "Do you think it was fun listening to you, at two years old, bangin' on a cheap toy guitar or a little toy piano? It wasn't but you were happy. Every Christmas and birthday, we replaced the worn-out toys until we got you a real child-sized acoustic guitar when you turned five. Since your first music lessons on that guitar went well, we got you the Squier electric guitar when you turned seven. You've got to meet your kids' needs to keep your sanity."

Mike hummed thoughtfully and softly said, "Maybe that's what I did wrong earlier."

"What kept you so long for dinner?" Rob asked.

"It took a few minutes for the ferrets to hear me calling," Mike explained. "When they came running up, they were really dirty. They couldn't sit down at the table looking like that, so I took them to the showers over at the dorm." Laura smiled as Mike wove his ferret shower tale. Rob and Derrick though were barely managing to keep themselves restrained to mere snickering.

Rob Gibbons asked, "Did you place an order for an aluminum tub?"

Mike shook his head and scowled, "Nope, wasn't me."

"Well, there's one out back now," Rob told his son.

Derrick tapped his sub-vocal and called, "Daileass?"

"Hey, Derrick," Daileass replied.

"Patch Mike in with us so he can hear too, dude," Derrick said.

A second later, Mike and Derrick heard Daileass giggling, "Hi Ya, Mike!"

Mike wondered, "Did you deliver an aluminum tub to my house?"

Daileass hummed affirmatively and playfully explained, "It's for the Scoobies, but if you really want to bathe with them, it's big enough for you too!"

Mike grumbled, "I can't believe you recorded that shower, then sent it to Keith and Prez!" Mike's mom couldn't help but chortle and quickly covered her mouth. Rob Gibbons didn't hide it at all though and began chuckling.

"Everything's recorded, Mike," Daileass giggled. "I may not keep the recordings, but everything every camera sees is recorded. Besides it was an Oscar-worthy performance, if I do say so myself!"

Mike grinned but softly complained, "You dog!"

Widely smiling, Derrick then wondered, "Daileass, who else saw the shower?"

"All my brothers, of course," Daileass laughed. "And another hundred or two here in Utah. And the guys down in Australia and in Des Moines. The votes are in from everywhere but Orlando and the Northeast division. Mike has starred in the best comedy flick since Blazing Saddles!"

"Daileass!" Mike shouted, "I was naked!" Mike's parents and Derrick lost it and cracked up.

"Well, duh!" Daileass teased, "I would hope you were naked in the shower! By the way, if you and Derrick ever break up, you'll have lots of guys and girls waiting in the wings for a date!"

Blushing fiercely, Mike softly groaned, "Oh God!"

Derrick giggled, "Daileass, can we see what everyone else in Clan Short has seen?"

"I suppose so," Daileass replied. "It's upstairs waiting on your computer."

Mike then ordered, "Daileass, delete that file."

"It's encrypted," Daileass giggled. "No one outside of the Clan..."

"Daileass! Delete that file now!" Mike interrupted.

"Oh, okay," Daileass sighed. "It's deleted." Of course, since Daileass wasn't directly asked or ordered to delete it, the archived backup still existed. And all the previously sent copies still existed as well.

"Thanks, dude," Mike smiled.

"Have a good night," Derrick said.

"You too, guys," Daileass cheerfully responded. "We'll chat again soon."

Mike smirked, "I would've threatened to tear him limb from limb but he hasn't got any limbs!"

Derrick and Mike then went to the living room to chat with all their kids. An extra amount of time was spent with the Scooby gang. Mike and Derrick wanted very much to make the ferret hybrids a part of their lives as much as was possible. Mike apologized for the shower fiasco, but told the Scoobies about the new bath tub that was theirs to use. Reyes, Jonah and Dillon liked the ferrets a lot. The new family talked about ferret favorite foods and ferret sleeping habits. Neither Mike or Derrick realized that ferrets were nocturnal but because they were hybrids, they were more inclined to stay up very late at night before sleeping for a few hours. They would then take afternoon naps if they felt like it.

Meanwhile, all the newly rescued Rimmer kids had finished eating and had moved over to the pool area. All the other families and kids were also by the pool and diving well, enjoying a warm autumn evening. Bruce was awake and surrounded by John and his new brothers and sisters. Off-duty housekeepers and chefs were also poolside, as were Doctor Rod Andrews, pediatrician, and Doctor Randall Wiener, child psychologist. Dr. Wiener made a point of pronouncing his name in the original German fashion 'VEE-ner', and was soon pointed to Melonie for a private chat. Doctor Andrews examined Sonia's ankle and diagnosed it as a minor sprain.

Many of the off-duty UNIT kids were inside the rec center lifting weights while others organized a game of soccer. The pro-sized field was well lit by solar charged lights and everyone could see to play the game.

It was about quarter-of-nine when Mike, Derrick, their boys and the ferrets joined everyone at the pool and jumped in for a swim. Now that all the Core Rimmers were present, Prez gathered them all together for a chat. Getting directly to the point, Prez sat between Kaleo and Keith and said, "Ya know Kaleo, you really have one of the most critical positions on this team."

"How so?" Kaleo wondered.

"You're one of the rescued that was already looked up to," Prez answered.

Keith nodded, "Like last night, we were open to alternatives, but making plans other than mass nesting. The kids tell you their honest feelings of what they want or need."

Prez agreed, "I still had to poke and prod a little to get to the truth. Y'all wanted to be with the entire core team, not subsections of it. Maybe half of these kids know me well enough to understand that I'm an orphan too. The Hundasers saved me though and that makes my situation different enough."

Kaleo grinned, "I hate to tell you this, Prez, but there's some hero worship going on too."

"They put you on a pedestal the moment Joel did," Drew revealed.

John agreed, "They feel like you've got to deal with everyone's welfare, not just one person's."

"If that's true," Prez began, "and I'll assume it is, that makes Kaleo's role even more important to me and all of us. There's not one kid here that should ever feel like they can't approach me. If I'm occupied, like during tonight's rescue, they must have a Core Rimmer available."

"Prez and I were alone for a while and had the chance to bounce another idea around," Keith explained. "During more dangerous rescues, either he or I will be left here just so everybody has that warm fuzzy feeling that someone's in charge."

Derrick said, "We need you doing what you do, what you've done since way before we met on the beach Friday afternoon."

"If it wasn't for you, me and Derrick wouldn't have been able to spend time with our kids and the Scoobies," Mike admitted. "Without you, Keith and Prez wouldn't have had some time alone."

Drew nodded, "Let's face it; without you we wouldn't get a lot of things done that have to be done."

Wrapping an arm around Kaleo, Prez smiled warmly and said, "It may seem less important to you, but believe us all, what you've done in the last two days is extremely important."

Understanding, Kaleo nodded and said, "Just let me be involved in a few of these easy rescues, okay? It seems to me a little experience is better than none when things get really hairy."

Prez agreed, "You're right. I need to allow each of you to command some of these rescue missions."

Keith offered, "You're taking the responsibilities seriously, baby. We all do though, and we all need that experience."

"You realize I'm going to put John in charge too?" Prez grinned.

"Nooooo!" Drew, Corey and Keith simultaneously hollered. John sat up straight, threw his chest out importantly, but helplessly giggled. The other Core Rimmers had a good laugh over that.

Around nine-thirty, some of the youngest kids began getting tired. Kokaku, Geoff, Richie, Dillon, Cesar, Felipe, Latoya, Carmella, Christel and Renee were led back to the Hundserts' home by the Hundsers and Seavers to settle down for the night. Four bathtubs were filled and two kids per tub were bathed. While the tots got themselves settled in the nest for the night, the Hundsers' old living room furniture was rearranged in the basement so the adults could be nearby watching TV.

Shortly after ten o'clock, Kaleo went over to Prez and Keith explaining, "Some of us think we might like to try sleeping in the dorms tonight."

"Are you sure, dude?" Prez worried. "You don't have to, you know?"

Keith agreed, "Only if you really want to."

Kaleo nodded., "Tory and me want to. So do four other older dudes and four of the oldest girls." He then grinned and said, "Would you go over there with us? The place is so big and empty, even though it's not spooky, it is kinda scary, for us anyway."

Prez smiled, "No problem, bro. It is All Hallow's Eve, after all."

Standing up and reaching for Prez, Keith smirked, "Other than the showers, we really don't even know what else is there."

"Kewl!" Kaleo cheered. He then turned around and waved. Tory, Horacio Sulin, Sean Moorhead, Hank Leve, Gerald Mayers, Melonie Correro, Sonia Baugh, Vera Kirkwood and Trish Vesley all stood up and joined their three leaders for the walk over to the dorms. Sonia was helped along on her sore ankle by Horacio and Sean.

Prez grinned, "I'm really surprised to see you here, Sonia."

"While a nest sounds interesting and may be fun," Sonia shrugged, "I'm used to sleeping alone. I am what you might call an active sleeper; I move around a lot at night."

"Whatever you guys want to do," Prez assured. "Just because we're going doesn't mean you have to stay."

"We figure if the ten of us can manage, then maybe more will join us tomorrow night," Sean explained.

Kaleo nodded, "You guys have started your own families too. We all know it and want you to have time with them."

Melonie asked, "Since there are so few of us, could we all stay on the same floor?"

Trish added, "I'd sure feel safer that way."

"It's fine with us," Prez quickly said.

"The issue is our parents," Keith told them. "We're fine with co-ed dorms. They'd be happier with girls in one building and guys in another. But the UNIT kids are already mixed in their building."

Prez suggested, "If it would make you feel better, I'll ask for two guards, one on each door into the building."

Kaleo, Prez and Keith glanced around. All the boys shook their heads as did Sonia and Vera, but Melonie and Trish shrugged uncertainly. That was all it took for Prez. He would ask for two guards to watch over the dorm that night. Keith opened and held the dorm door as everyone filed inside.

Prez opened the first bedroom door and turned on the lights. "This is real nice!" Sonia beamed. "I expected... less."

Keith stepped up and said, "Two double beds, a TV, a PlayStation, a stereo, a small fridge, two laptop computers, two desks and two chairs in every room."

Sonia excitedly asked, "They're all like this?"

Prez nodded, "Some rooms are a little larger, but yeah, every room has the same basic stuff."

"Someone take my pulse," Sonia joked. "I must've died and gone to heaven." The three other girls nodded and giggled.

Kaleo pointed at the end of the hall and asked, "What's that room, Keith?"

"Got me!" Keith grinned, "Lets go check it out." The group went to the furthest room down the hall. Keith opened the door and turned on the lights. "It's a rec room!" Keith cheered.

The room was easily forty feet by thirty feet. In it was a large flat-screen television with Bose surround sound speakers, two long sofas in the center of the room, at least a dozen other chairs, a Baldwin upright piano, a Takamine acoustic guitar on a stand, an easel with many empty canvases against the wall, with a nearby table loaded with oil paints, watercolors and various brushes. There was even a refrigerator and microwave oven for snacks. Prez went inside and turned the TV on, while Keith went over and gave the piano a quick inspection. There was another door leading to the adjacent hallway. Prez silently considered, "At least twenty or thirty kids could hang out in this room at once. The twelve of us barely make a dent in the space available." After playing a few chords and scales, Keith took a deep breath and sang, "Hey Jude," then began playing the entire song. Prez picked up the guitar and, at the start of the second verse, began playing and singing with Keith.

"They sing too?" Sonia asked.

Trish nodded, "Wait until you hear their band. Mike and Derrick sing and play too."

Sonia smiled, "And I was worried that I was jumping from the frying pan into the fire."

Soon Prez began wandering around and all the kids joined in for the extended chorus loudly singing, "Na, na, na, na-na-na-na, na-na-na-na, Hey Jude," over and over again. Knowing that they had well exceeded the seven-and-a-half minute song, Prez loudly said, "One last time!" and everybody sang the refrain again before Keith and Prez ended the song.

Kaleo loudly cheered, "Well, I'm staying. Who's with me?" Soon all of the other nine kids agreed. Everyone went back outside and over to the Hundserts' house to retrieve their suitcases. It was then that Prez realized Sonia only had the clothes on her back. Moving over to stand near her, Prez tapped his sub-vocal and called, "Daileass?"

"Hi Prez," Daileass cheerfully said.

"Can you see me and the girl beside me?"

Daileass turned a security camera and teased, "She's pretty! What does Keith think about this, I wonder?"

Prez giggled, "This is Sonia, one of the new kids we rescued earlier tonight. She's gonna need some clothes and a suitcase, dude."

"No problem," Daileass said and then asked, "Where should I transport her new duds?"

"She'll be staying at the dorm tonight," Prez answered. "Keep an eye on her, and when she settles into one of the rooms, transport her clothes there."

"Who's Daileass?" Sonia wondered.

"That's not an easy question to answer," Prez said. "Let's just say he's artificial intelligence, but way more than your average machine."

"Aww," Daileass giggled. "I like you too, Prez." Prez cracked up and Keith rolled his eyes knowingly. Daileass laughed, "Made ya blush!"

"You are so bad!" Prez chuckled. "Talk with ya later, dude."

"Wait just a second please?" Daileass asked, "Who's that tall blond boy behind you and to your left?"

Prez looked over his shoulder and answered, "That's Sean Moorhead."

Daileass hummed hungrily and giggled, "He's so cute! You gotta find a job for him! And with a name like Moorhead..."

"STOP!" Prez loudly laughed. Kaleo and Keith turned to each other smiling, but shaking their heads.

"What?" Daileass giggled, "With a name like Smucker's, it's gotta be good!"

Shaking his head sadly, Prez uncontrollably laughed, "Over and out!"

"Catch ya later!" Daileass snickered.

Chapter 5

Ewa Beach, Oahu; C.S.P.R.D. Main Base

Sunday, October 31, 2004 11:33 PM

Wearing a robe and slippers, Jennifer Hundser softly walked down the basement steps, knowing that many of the kids were already asleep. She went over to the sofa where Preston and Keith were chatting with a few of their Clan members. The children were wondering where Kaleo and the older kids were. Preston explained that they were trying out the new dorms, then smiled up at his foster mother asking, "What's up, mom?"

"Your computer is beeping upstairs," Jennifer explained.

Keith groaned, "Uh oh!" then turned to Prez and pleaded, "Let me take care of this one, baby?"

Prez nodded and said, "I hope it's nothing too serious, but it's late. Kinda makes me wonder."

Jennifer said, "It makes me wonder too. I'm not going to be happy if you boys can't even get a decent night's sleep."

"It's probably nothing, mom," Keith assured and then followed his mother upstairs. Once they were walking through the kitchen heading for the stairs up to the bedrooms, Keith smirked, "I know what you're thinking. It's a school night, right?"

Jennifer nodded, "I realize there are special circumstances. John's staying home from school tomorrow for Bruce, and the rest of you boys will be attending school on base. Please make them understand that even you need to relax and unwind this late at night though."

"I will, mom," Keith assured. Soon he was sitting at the desk and typing in the password. There was only one message waiting and it was from their own main gate on North Road. Although tapping his comm-badge would've been easiest, Keith chose to activate the camera and talk face-to-face with the security station. "Hey Chaz, wassup?"

"Hi Keith; sorry for contacting you so late, but two just walked up to the gate."

"It's no biggie. Mom's a little unhappy, but once I tell her it's only a short walk to the main gate, she'll relax. What's the deal?"

"Just two boys, caught with their pants down, ya know?"

"Ooo! Parents went all bonkers, huh?"

"You got it."

"Just so I know who to send, tell me how old they are?"

"They're twelve."

"Expect Drew and Corey then, dude. I'll send them right over."

"Got it. Thanks, Keith."

"Good night, Chaz," Keith said, and then scanned the screen looking for the correct disconnect button.

"Bottom right side, red button," Chaz grinned.

Keith giggled, "I thought so!" Chaz also began giggling and said good night just before Keith disconnected. Keith then tapped his comm-badge and said, "Drew?"

A moment later, Drew answered, "Wassup, bro?"

"You and Corey need to get two boys from the North Road gate. They're gay and prob'ly really scared. Remember to ask if they're hungry...."

"Feed them, then bring them back here," Drew interrupted.

Locking the computer again, Keith said, "It's all yours, bro."

"We got it," Drew said, and Keith stood, then left the room.

Stopping by his parents' bedroom, Keith explained, "It's a rescue right here on base. Two boys that were caught in the act; it obviously freaked out the parents."

"What are you going to do?" Jim Hundser wondered.

Keith shrugged, "We'll give the kids food and shelter; we can't have them walking the streets. As far as I know, Federation Youth Services then intervenes on behalf of the kids. They may be good parents, but were just shocked. The important thing, from Clan perspective anyway, is what do the kids need and want? Are they too embarrassed to go home or are they too scared? If there's emotional or physical abuse involved, pulling a family back together is way more difficult. Exactly how all this really works, we'll learn tomorrow."

"What's tomorrow?" Jennifer asked.

"We meet Patriarch Cory Short and you get a new job," Keith grinned.

"Me?" Jennifer gasped.

Keith giggled, "Of course you! No more dealing with CPS., mom. If Prez is given the opportunity to suggest a head of FYS for this division, it's you. You'll be following FYS rules and deciding who goes home or even if they'll go home.

"No more wondering if another kid will wind up like Stephen or Aaron. What we couldn't do for them before, we're doing now. Did you forget about them? They're down in the basement."

Jennifer smiled, "I didn't forget, I'm just surprised. I haven't even resigned yet and you boys have already given me a new job."

Keith nodded and turned to leave, but his dad asked, "Is everybody comfortable down in the basement?"

Turning around again, Keith nodded, "Sure, why wouldn't we be?"

Jim grinned and reminded, "It's a basement!"

Keith laughed, "It's huge! And it's finished with wood walls, carpeted floors and our old living room furniture! The kids that are awake are playing games or watching TV. The others are snoozing soundly in a pile of pillows and blankets. We're fine, dad, couldn't be better."

"The tone of your voice just went from playful and enthused to somewhat less so," Jennifer noticed.

Jim prodded, "Explain that, if you can?"

Keith sighed, "It's only... well... a privacy issue. Earlier, Prez and me got our first chance to be alone in two days. Mike and Derrick are feeling it too, even though they haven't directly said it. Kaleo's noticed, and some of the older kids are in the dorm because of it."

"If I might make a suggestion?" Jim interjected. Keith nodded and his father continued, "This is a big change for all of us. None of us can do it alone. We need to work together to have some of that private time."

"That's why your dad and I have always found ways to disappear alone together as often as we reasonably could," Jennifer smiled.

Jim agreed, "Now that the issue has been recognized, just work together so that you each get the private time you need."

"We'll help you as much as we can," Jennifer smiled.

"That's why we've adopted the youngest children first," Jim explained. "Not only did they seek us out, they need families and parents the most. While you boys have been organizing your Clan, all of the parents have been considering what we could do to help. Once we learned how easy the adoptions could be from Janet, we talked it over as a group and then as couples."

"Now you need to talk with your partner and the other..." Jennifer paused and smirked, "core Rimmers!" Blushing fiercely, Keith began giggling. Jennifer playfully huffed, "That is so typical of you two!"

Keith laughed, "Prez thought it up!"

Jim chuckled and teased, "But are any of you even considering changing it?"

"Course not!" Keith giggled. He then leaned over to give his mom a kiss on the cheek and said, "Good night." Both his parents said good night, then Keith turned and left the room. Soon, he was back down in the basement and sitting beside Prez.

Meanwhile, Drew and Corey had retrieved the two boys from the North Road gate. Their names were Aki and Hajime, and they were too scared to return to their homes. They were sitting down in the CIC dining room with Drew and Corey. Having walked several miles from Waipahu to Ewa Beach, Aki and Hajime were famished. The kitchen night shift staff was baking breads and pastries for the next day. While the new boys scarfed down cheeseburgers and French fries, Drew and Corey had grilled cheese sandwiches simply because everything in the kitchen smelled so good.

Before Aki and Hajime finished their meals, Kaleo walked in holding hands with Tory, followed by Sean and Horacio. Aki, somewhere between stunned and happy, softly asked, "Is everybody here gay?"

Drew grinned, "No, our parents are here and they're straight."

"It don't matter what you are around here," Corey giggled. "We got gays, straights, chimps, ferrets and gorillas!"

Aki and Hajime nervously chorused; "Gorillas?"

Corey laughed and Drew snickered, "They're the best security in the world! Who's gonna argue with a gorilla?"

Holding a tray with six large cups, Kaleo started for the table. Tory was following with another tray loaded down with bags of chips and plates of cookies. Kaleo asked, "Who have we here, Drew?"

Drew introduced the two new boys and explained, "They were makin' out and got caught by Hajime's parents." Noticing that the two boys were now blushing intensely, Drew apologized, "I'm really sorry, dudes, I should've known better. It even makes me blush sometimes."

Kaleo nodded and smiled, "It's really nothing to be embarrassed about."

Corey nodded, "Kaleo's our communications officer. We call him the Mouth Rimmer."

Tory laughed, "That's so friggin' hysterical!"

Eying Tory suspiciously, Kaleo put his tray down on a nearby table, then took Tory's tray and put it down too. Before Tory could stop laughing or say a word, Kaleo kissed him hard. Drew and Corey smiled, certain that Kaleo's friendship with Tory had obviously progressed in the last few hours. Kaleo didn't release the kiss until Tory whimpered from lack of oxygen. Kaleo picked up his tray and said, "Tell Prez we really like having our own rooms in the dorm."

"I can tell!" Corey giggled.

Drew joked, "So that's why ya got the munchies?"

Kaleo played along. "It'll take some extra energy to keep goin'!"

"HEY!" Tory laughed, "You'd better be good!"

"But you said it was good," Kaleo teased. "It was the best for me anyway."

Picking up his tray, Tory playfully groaned, "Ooo! Now you're really gonna get it!" and started for the exit.

Kaleo's eyes shot wide open and he whined with anticipation, causing all four boys seated at the table to blush and laugh. Quickly grabbing his tray of drinks and almost sending the cups flying, Kaleo hurried after Tory.

"This is so weird!" Hajime grinned.

Aki nodded agreement. "We're used to not mentioning sex or anything about it ever."

Hajime added, "It's just not acceptable any time, anywhere."

Corey said, "Drew and me have known each other since before kindergarten. Our first time together was accidental, but... how should I say... opened my eyes and answered all the questions at once. That goofy feeling in my brain and dull ache in my belly went away whenever Drew held me."

Drew smiled knowingly at Corey. Noticing the two boys had finished eating, Drew said, "It's gettin' late; let's go home, dudes."

"Home?" Aki nervously squeaked.

Standing with his tray of trash, Drew nodded, "My house. Prez and Keith will want to meet you." Relieved, Aki and Hajime gathered their trash and followed Drew.

"And the other ninety or so kids," Corey grinned, "but about half of 'em are already asleep."

"Talk about your big sleep-overs!" Hajime smiled.

Drew and Corey led Aki and Hajime home then introduced them to Prez and Keith.

"Welcome!" Prez happily smiled. Drew then introduced Mike and Derrick, during which time everyone learned about Kaleo and Tory. Sitting down again on the floor with the two new boys, Prez asked, "I understand you guys had an embarrassing night?"

While both boys nodded, Aki frowned and softly explained, "We've been friends since last school year, but over the summer it changed."

Hajime took over and added, "I thought my bedroom door was locked, but it somehow didn't close all the way and my dad walked in on us."

Keith asked, "He didn't hurt you, did he?"

Aki nervously sobbed, "He cussed and screamed and called my folks."

Hajime held Aki close and nodded, "My mom was throwing stuff at us and we got the heck out of there."

Aki croaked, "We heard on the news what happened Friday and that Clan Short bases were opened Saturday."

"It was a long walk, about five or six miles, and took us about two hours, but we didn't know where else to go," Hajime fearfully finished.

Nodding understandingly, Prez said, "You kept your head in a crisis and thought clearly. We'll keep you safe here."

Aki forced a grin and said, "This place is so awesome."

Drew smiled, "I only pointed out the dorms on our way here."

Hajime nodded and said, "But your CIC can be seen a mile away, at least. And the sign outside the main gate told us this was definitely the place."

"Here's the deal," Prez began, "We're just getting organized around here. Later this week, an adult will be talking with you both. Then they'll call your parents. Assuming that they really love you and were simply freaked out, we'll broker a peace with your folks, if that's what you guys want. Until you're ready for them and they're ready for you, you'll stay here with us."

Hajime mumbled, "The girls and boys sleep together here?"

Keith nodded and grinned, "They're mostly orphans and foster kids. That's the way they feel safe right now."

Aki leaned forward and whispered, "Some of 'em are naked though."

Keith giggled and Prez answered, "Imagine your parents selling your sexual services. That's what happened to a lot of these kids."

Aki and Hajime both gasped, "No way!"

Keith nodded and said, "You've seen each other erect, but have never been with anybody else. It's basically the same for me and Prez, and Derrick and Mike, and Drew and Corey. Lots of these kids have seen dozens... maybe a hundred other men and women naked."

Slowly nodding as the two boys absorbed the truth, Prez said, "You can sleep here if you'd be safe and comfortable. If you'd rather share a dorm room, just say so."

The two boys checked with each other and nodded. "We'd be uncomfortable sleeping with girls," Hajime meekly offered.

"Not a problem," Keith said. "There's a dorm with six boys and four girls already over there."

Seeing Drew and Corey preparing to stand, Prez turned to Mike and Derrick, then asked, "Would you dudes come for a walk with us?"

"All six of us?" Mike queried.

"Just wanna air out the cobwebs in my head," Prez smiled.

"An empty attack and starvin' spiders!" Derrick joked.

As everyone started to stand, Prez went to the kids still playing video games and said, "We're gonna take a short walk. You guys can just play and hang out until you're ready for bed."

"We're kewl," Jerrold said, still very involved in the game.

Prez grinned, "We'll be back in a little while," then turned and followed everyone else upstairs. They silently crept through the house and out the back door so as to not wake anyone.

Once outside, Hajime said, "Those are the biggest Teddy bears I've ever seen."

Keith giggled, "They're not your average every day Teddies either."

"They're virtual intelligence, they can carry a conversation with their friends," Mike stated.

Derrick added, "In some ways, they're better than guard dogs too. They'll protect their best friends to the point of destruction."

Prez offered, "If you guys decide you want one, let us know."

"We ain't got money for 'em though," Aki sadly sighed.

Keith corrected, "You don't need money for anything here. Don't worry about a thing now, okay? You've already had enough to worry about just getting here."

Derrick agreed, "Walking as far as you guys did late at night was pretty dangerous."

Aki nodded, "We know."

"One guy offered us a ride," Hajime explained. "We just didn't have a good feeling about him." Keith noticed the look of disgust on Prez's face and knew things were going to be said to everyone very soon.

Prez sighed, "We've got your back now, guys."

As the group approached the dorm, the sentry, Paulie Casey stood from his chair and snapped to attention, then saluted, saying, "Good evening, Sir."

"Hey, Paulie," Prez grinned, "obviously you missed something."

Paulie checked his uniform and weapon briefly, then chirped, "Sir?"

Prez joked, "The next time you call me 'Sir' or salute me, it's a week of K.P. for you!"

While everyone else smiled or giggled, Paulie nodded and stood at ease, saying, "Never again, Prez."

"Good," Prez chuckled, "spread the word; I've been saluted way too much already."

Opening the door to the dorm, Paulie said, "Everyone on base will know by breakfast."

While everyone else stepped inside, Prez said, "Cool beans. See ya in a few minutes," then followed the rest of the group.

Keith led the pack down the hall, past the closed doors, and pointed to the first two rooms saying, "Kaleo and Tory are here on the right. Sean and Horacio have the room on the left. Hank and Gerald have the next room on the right. Melonie and Sonia are here on the left and in the room next door are Trish and Vera. You guys can pick any room you want." Keith then led Aki and Hajime down the hall to the bathroom and let them look around. The far wall was lined with toilets and the adjacent wall lined with sinks and then the parallel wall lined with urinals. Keith flipped the light on for the separate mob shower and both boys checked it out. When they walked past again nodding and smiling appreciatively, Keith flipped the lights off.

Prez pointed and said, "Down the hall is the first floor rec room."

Looking up at Prez, Aki asked, "We can have any room we want... together?"

"Sure," Prez nodded, then opened the room across from the bathroom and turned on the light. "Take your pick."

Both boys looked inside the spacious room and smiled widely at each other. "This is way kewl!" Aki excitedly said as he stepped into the room.

Hajime followed saying, "I live... or used to live, in a real nice house, but this is better! Two full sized beds too!" He then turned around and blushed, "Can we sleep together in one?"

Mike sighed, "Listen little dudes, whatever you think is wrong with loving each other is false." Pulling Derrick closer, Mike continued, "This dude here's my boyfriend. We really love each other.

When we sleep together, it's the soundest sleep ever."

Derrick nodded, "Prez and Keith are boyfriends too, so are Drew and Corey." Both Drew and Corey nodded and held each other close.

"Loving one another is good," Prez smiled. "If your parents can cope with having gay sons and can prove that to Federation Youth Services, you can return home, but only if or when you feel comfortable doing so. If your parents can't cope with gay sons, then you can stay here as long as you like."

"But what about school?" Hajime wondered.

Keith answered, "We'll have our schools set up soon, right here on base."

Prez tapped his sub-vocal and called, "Daileass?"

"Hi Prez," Daileass replied.

"Sorry to bug you so late, dude, but we have two boys here that just showed up and will be staying a while."

"Boxers or briefs?" Daileass asked.

"Umm... boxers," Prez answered.

Daileass giggled, "Not you, silly! You got your own undies! What about them?"

"Oh!" Prez laughed. Turning to Aki and Hajime, Prez smiled, "Boxers or briefs, dudes?"

Aki and Hajime both replied, "Briefs." Only a few seconds later, both beds were loaded with new clothes for each boy. They each had three pair of jeans, five pair of board shorts, five T-shirts, three button down sport shirts, and enough underwear and socks for every day of the week. There were even toothbrushes, tubes of toothpaste, brushes, combs and deodorants. Both boys hurried over to the beds and began shuffling through their clothes.

"That was awfully fast, Daileass," Prez challenged.

Taking on a mystical tone, Daileass replied, "I see all, I know all. I saw them approach the gate, saw Drew and Corey lead them to the CIC dining room, saw them talking with you guys in your basement. It was only a matter of time before you called me."

"You're the best, dude," Prez smiled.

"The best AI perv in all North America!" Mike whispered to Derrick.

"Any time, Prez," Daileass said. Then Mike heard Daileass giggling in his ear; "Thanks for the compliment, Showers with Ferrets."

"Dammit!" Mike grumbled. "These things are never really off."

Keith grinned, "You forgot; tapping is just to get Daileass' attention."

Turning his attention back to Aki and Hajime, Prez asked, "Have you guys met Kaleo?"

Aki nodded and Hajime answered, "In the dining room."

Drew grinned, "Kaleo and Tory made a great first impression."

"I'll say!" Corey giggled.

Prez smiled and hummed suspiciously. "Make yourselves at home, dudes," Prez said to the two newest Rimmers. "Ask Kaleo or anyone for a tour of the grounds tomorrow morning."

"Thanks, Prez," Aki enthusiastically cheered.

"We will," Hajime nodded.

"Y'all have a good night," Prez said. Keith and the other Core Rimmers also said good night, then left the boys to themselves. Down the hall, Prez stopped at Kaleo's room and knocked on the door. There were sounds of movement and garbled words from the other side of the solid wooden door.

Tory finally asked, "Who is it?"

Smiling at the ruckus beyond the door, Prez announced, "Prez and all the other Core Rimmers to see Kaleo."

"Except John," Keith reminded.

"Right," Prez agreed. John had attached himself to Bruce since learning of the Downing's passing.

After about thirty seconds, Kaleo finally opened the door, saying, "What's up, guys?" He was shirtless and trying unsuccessfully to appear innocent while he adjusted himself in his shorts, and a shirtless Tory attempted to straighten one of the beds in the background. All of the Core Rimmers cracked up.

"Wassup?" Keith echoed in an exaggerated incredulous tone through his laughter.

"You tell us what's up, besides the all too obvious!" Derrick playfully sang.

Blushing fiercely through his Hawaiian dark skin and the combined hysterics of the other six Rimmers, Kaleo giggled, "Well, you know how it is. I've been trying for two days! Tory and me have reached an understanding."

Tory walked up behind Kaleo and wrapped his arms around Kaleo's waist, smiling like the cat that just caught and ate the canary.

Checking with his brothers and friends, Prez cackled, "Anyone that did not see this coming since Friday afternoon, please raise your hands." Not a single hand rose. Still blushing, Kaleo chuckled and held Tory's arms. "It's so kewl," Prez softly and sincerely smiled, "we couldn't be happier, for both of you."

"Thanks!" Kaleo and Tory chorused.

Prez said, "Have you got a few minutes? There's a few things I need to talk about that are pretty important."

"It's all right for Tory to hear?" Kaleo confirmed.

Prez nodded, "Absolutely. If what I'd like comes to pass, everyone will know soon enough."

"Come on in," Tory invited and let go of Kaleo. Everyone went into the room and Kaleo closed the door behind them.

Once his team were seated on the beds, Prez said, "This has been bouncing around inside me for two days," and then asked, "Remember Saturday in Utah, when Adam mentioned the sixty-one that died in Montana last week?" Everyone nodded so Prez posed another question, "Is there anyone here that doesn't understand what happened that day?"

Corey was the first to raise his hand, followed by Kaleo and Tory. Corey offered, "I don't pay attention to most news. I remember last Sunday's newspaper headlines though."

"Okay," Prez said and began pacing to and fro. "To make a long story brief, what basically happened was Clan Short was ambushed by a group known as the Fundamentalist Church of Christ. What started as a rescue operation, turned into a real battle. The UNIT was involved with Clan Short and several other U.S. Military organizations; they all fought to win that battle, but are still working to bring the FCC down. I initially thought it was just one of those crazy United States riots until I actually read about it online. It wasn't a riot but a real battle; a war, if you prefer that word."

Prez paused and asked, "Is everyone with me so far?" When everyone nodded, Prez began pacing around again, saying, "Not until Friday night did I realize that even here in Hawaii, we're not immune from those kinds of wackos; the kind that think kids are to be emotionally or physically abused, to be used for sex or prostitution, that gays, lesbians and transgenders are abhorrent. Now we all know they're here too, right?"

Seeing everyone nodding, Prez paced and rambled; "This is why I was slow to accept Joel's nomination as Director of this division. We're already at war, guys. Right now, while we get ourselves situated, kids are already coming to us, not the police or any other government aid organization. Sooner or later, we're going to be called for a rescue operation. The last thing I want is to see is any one hurt, but I want to echo right now what Cory Short said last week and how I strongly feel: Clan Short Pacific Rim Division is at war. This is why I was so insistent with Adam about having our own division of troops. We are not going to wait for those twisted bastards to come to us and catch us off guard. We're going to be ready. When Adam or Donnie contact me to set up phaser training, we're goin' to do it, and we all have to pay attention. If we need extra training, I'll ask for it. I don't expect you to like it; I sure as hell don't like it, but at the same time, I don't want us to ever be caught off guard. Just realize that this is most definitely a war. Be prepared. Learn everything there is to know about a phaser and how to use one effectively."

"Yeah," Mike giggled, "you point the dangerous end towards the bad guys!"

"Thanks for that revelation!" Keith teased.

Prez then briefly outlined what he intended to do as soon as he could the following day, including a phone call to the King. Since it was very late and there were important things to deal with the next day, not the least of which were talking to His Majesty and meeting the Patriarch of Clan Short, Prez called it a night. Everybody said good night and Kaleo walked his fellow Core Rimmers to the door with one hand on the waistband of his boardies and playfully bouncing his eyebrows. Everybody cracked up and walked outside, still giggling.

They had barely started the walk back home when Prez told Keith, "I just wanna check the computer for any last minute messages," and then there was a loud boom followed by what sounded like the rattling of machinery. The entire team and many other UNIT security personnel raced over to the UNIT dorm where the sounds came from. From the basement of that building came a big puff of smoke. Bouncing up the stairs and climbing the safety railings around the basement steps, came a dozen chanting, coughing and screeching chimps. "What in the hell happened?" Prez excitedly bellowed above the sounds of the chimps.

One of the chimps, dressed in overalls and grinning widely, explained, "We were designing a new ATV sufficiently capable for activity on volcanic mountain sides. If at first you don't succeed, try, try again!"

"Is everyone all right?" Prez worried.

"Fine," the chimp nodded. He then sighed impatiently and complained, "Engine's trashed though."

While everyone else rolled their eyes and began giggling, Derrick sniggered, "The only active volcanoes are on the big Island of Hawaii. Just an idea, but you could take your project there."

"Thank you!" the chimp happily said. "Every design requires testing and then implementation of reworked designs." Turning slightly to face Prez, the chimp asked, "Director O'Brian, would you have any problem if we followed that recommended course of action?"

"Not at all," Prez giggled. "All I'm worried about is you chimps being happy and healthy."

"Be safe is all we're saying," Keith added to interpret for Prez.

More seriously, Derrick said, "The last thing we want to learn about is any of you chimps maimed or killed, okay, bud?" All the other Core Rimmers nodded their agreement.

"We are all capable of first aid in the event of such a failure," the chimp assured.

Corey wondered, "If any of you guys were hurt, would you need a doctor or a vet?"

"We'd have Daileass transport the injured party directly to Doctor Janet," the chimp responded. "If you'll excuse me now, I will inform my teammates of the recommended change."

Prez nodded and Keith smiled, "Go ahead." The boys started back to the Hundser's home and Keith turned to Prez yawning, "I hope there are no messages waiting. I'm so totally wiped out."

Mike giggled, "I've been dreaming of ferrets and gorillas; tonight I'll add chimps to the mix."

"You know any control we thought we had before yesterday was just an illusion?" Derrick smirked.

"I had heard you and others make that observation before," Prez nodded, and then joked, "Silly me, I thought there could at least be direction to the chaos!"

The boys went inside the house. While Prez and Keith crept quietly upstairs to check the computer, Mike, Derrick, Corey and Drew went down to the basement to get ready for bed. Prez found only one message from Donnie waiting. The UNIT wanted to begin phaser training Tuesday afternoon at three. A second class was scheduled for Wednesday at the same time. Prez replied to the message informing Donnie that those dates and times would be fine.

Keith pulled Prez's face over for a deep kiss, then softly suggested, "Bed time, baby." Immediately Prez locked the computer and they went downstairs to join the nest. Geoff had put places aside for Drew and Corey to be nearby. In a short while, all the lights were off and everyone was sound asleep. Just before dawn, Dee and Richie tip-toed around and over other kids to fall back asleep between their new daddies. Reyes, Jonah and Dillon found their way in the dark to Mike and Derrick. A twisted knot of ferrets were already close by their Shiny Daddies.

A few of the youngest kids woke around seven in the morning.

They went upstairs to use the bathrooms and spend some time with their parents before they went to work. Little by little, more kids woke and came upstairs from the basement. The tweens headed off to the CIC for breakfast. Bruce, John and Nathan followed the mass of kids out of the house. A few minutes before nine in the morning, Jennifer Hundser kissed the little ones goodbye, then was transported by her security to Hawaii Medical Center West. Jim Hundser, Rob Gibbons, Bill Seaver and Carl Seibert were also transported to their places of business.

The last to emerge from the basement were Prez and the remaining Core Rimmers. Mike and Derrick took their boys home for breakfast and showers. Drew and Corey took Geoff upstairs for their first shower at home. While they waited for Drew, Corey and Geoff to finish, Prez and Keith had breakfast. Even though both of their boys had already been fed, Prez shared his cereal with Dee and Keith did the same with Richie. Just as they were putting their bowls in the dishwasher, the front door bell rang.

"I'll get it, Prez," Keith said.

Dee hurried and happily said, "I'll go too, Daddy!"

Opening the door, Keith found a man in his twenties with striking long black hair. "Hi," Keith said, "Can I help you?"

The man politely said, "My name is Derek Tecumseh. I'm from Camp Little Eagle in Orlando."

"Oh!" Keith cheered, "The Clan Short school. Please, come on in." Keith stepped aside and introduced himself and Dee. The older and taller man stepped inside the house.

From the kitchen, Prez hollered, "Who is it, babe?"

Keith replied, "Derek Tecumseh from Camp Little Eagle."

"Sweet!" Prez chuckled. "We can get our schools set up!"

As Prez went towards the entryway and Keith led Derek to the kitchen, the doorbell rang again. Keith and Dee again went to answer it while Prez introduced himself and Richie. At the door, stood seven smaller kids about John's age, give or take a year or two. Four of the kids were wearing black hooded robes, their faces only barely visible. The other three were wearing green Clan Short cloaks.

"Wassup, guys?" Keith asked.

One boy in a green cloak said, "Hi Keith, I'm Jacob Dodds."

"And I'm Jamie Dodds. Good to meet ya, Keith," the next boy in green said.

"Beau Wagner," the third boy in green waved.

"We're here to get Lei'd!" all three boys exclaimed in perfect unison.

Keith chuckled at their performances, "We'll see what we can do about the flowery necklaces. As for the other kind, you're on your own."

Jamie grinned and partially replied, "Oh, we already..."

Jacob continued, "know all about..."

Beau added, "the other kind..."

"and we practice..." Jamie snickered, watching Keith's eyes dart around to each of the three of them.

"whenever we ain't..." Jacob smirked, wondering if Keith would get dizzy and fall over.

"busy with stuff." Beau finished before Keith actually did fall down.

The three boys broke into giggles as they finished their circular reply.

Slapping his own forehead and closing his eyes, Keith muttered weakly, "You're all telepaths, right?"

"No, we only got one brain!" All three giggled in unison.

Noticing that Keith seemed unsteady, Prez came over, smiled at the crew beyond the doorstep and asked, "Keith, are you all right, babe?"

"I will be, just woozy," Keith answered.

Prez asked, "Who do we have here?"

"NO!" Keith quickly shouted. "Don't get them started again! They're Clan Short telepaths; Jamie, Jacob and Beau. I don't even know the other four yet, but if they answer the same way, I'll need to lay down again for a few hours!"

"Well," Prez laughed, "we should just let them all in then!" Looking down at his sons, Prez smiled, "Dee and Richie, help daddy to the living room and sit him down."

Dee and Richie held Keith's hands and led him to the sofa. As the seven kids walked into the house, they each greeted Prez and gave their names; Jacob Dodds, Jamie Dodds, Beau Wagner, Vicky Evans, Jason Evans, Nathan Evans and Riti Evans.

"Why don't y'all have a seat in the living room," Prez pleasantly said.

Drew, Corey and Geoff came down the stairs and stepped into the living room. Prez introduced Derek and the other kids to Drew, Corey and Geoff, then suggested, "If you guys could get everybody comfy, Keith and I can jump in the shower real quick?"

"No problem, bro," Drew nodded. Prez went over to Keith, offering a hand up, while Dee and Richie scooted down and pulled at Keith's other hand.

Corey asked, "Would anyone like something to drink? Soda? Juice? Tea?"

"Ich bin jetzt besser fühlen," Keith sighed as he stood. Then he pulled both boys close and held on tight.

Prez understood but didn't know how and wondered, "Welche Sprache sprichst du?"

"Deutsch," Keith replied. As soon as he finished he wondered, "Wenn die Hölle habe ich Deutsch lernen?"

Mr. T rolled his eyes as he looked at the three young boys trying to appear innocent. "You guys know that you're supposed to warn people," he admonished.

"Who, us?" all three replied in voices dripping with sugar and innocence.

Watching Keith, Dee, Richie and finally Prez climb the stairs, Drew asked, "¿Qué hizo Usted a Keith?" He then quickly covered his mouth and turned wide-eyed to Corey.

"¿Qué le hicieron ellos Dibujó?" Corey excitedly asked. He then gasped, "¡Dios mío!"

"Признавайтесь, мальчики," Mr. T said in a commanding voice.

"But we're innocent!" Jamie said in a voice that implied he'd just misplaced his halo. "We got nothing to confess."

"Dargh," Beau said to Drew.

"Blesio, gaffwy rhyw de?" Jacob added. Jamie merely screeched.

"Tudo bem, isso é dois chás e uma Coca-Cola," Drew summarized, then did a double take at what had come out of his mouth.

Little Geoff looked up and grinned, "Papá, estás hablando divertidamente."

Corey, Drew and Geoff went to the kitchen to prepare trays of drinks and snacks for their guests.

What was happening in the Hundser's home was happening all over the Ewa Beach main base. Mike and Derrick came out of their bathroom with their boys and the first words out of Mike's mouth happened to come out in Italian. Bruce, John and Nathan Hayes were at the CIC dining room when conversations suddenly shifted from one language to another with ease. Even the staff chefs, doctors, housekeepers and landscapers were affected. Naturally, being able to speak one previously foreign language was shocking enough, but understanding and speaking multiple languages was exciting. A few of the languages shared by Beau, Jamie and Jacob included French, German, Greek, Italian, Japanese, Portuguese, Russian, Spanish and Welsh. The most thrilling things occurred when John, Bruce, Nathan,

Kaleo, and Tory left the CIC dining room and discovered they could understand the dialects of all the birds in the trees surrounding the compound. Then a distant dog off base was heard barking, "Warning! My den! My pack! Go away!"

Prez, Keith, Dee and Richie hurried downstairs from their shower as John came into the house with Bruce and Nathan. Before John could say a word, Keith held up his index finger and forcefully warned, "ENGLISH, JOHN!"

John whined, "¿Pero por qué?"

"Because seven kids I never met just walked in the house already knowing my name," Keith exclaimed. "Our family is of German descent, but we haven't spoke German in four generations. Still, it just came flowing out of my mouth like I had a friggin' clue! Enough is too much!"

"Oh, okay," John grumbled through his grin.

Giggling at the insanity of it all, Prez went into the living room wondering, "Who's responsible?"

Mr. T smiled but shook his head sadly, explaining, "Jacob, Jamie and Beau enjoy a certain level of pandemonium."

"That's not fair!" the three boys playfully complained.

"Ah, but it's true!" Mr. T grinned.

"Isn't that one of the reasons we're here?" Jamie reminded.

"Warnings would've been considerate."

"There are over a hundred people though!" Jacob stated.

Beau nodded, saying, "Warning a hundred times or even a dozen gets real old, real fast."

"Now there are only the five missing adults left to finish the job," Jamie smiled.

John came in the room and said, "I thought it was fun!" Looking up at Keith and Prez, John explained, "Go outside and listen to the animals. We can understand them too." Before John finished speaking, all four Evans kids got up from the sofa and went to him. John smiled at the sudden attention and said, "Hi, how's it goin'?"

Drew, Corey and Geoff returned to the room with drinks and snacks. Keith quickly introduced the four Evans' and the other four still seated to everyone.

Eying Riti and the hump on his back, John explained, "Sorry, I just don't feel like you're in pain, but you look like you could be." John pointed at the hump saying, "That's gotta hurt."

Riti giggled. "They're wings!" the little eight year old said from within his hooded robe.

John's jaw dropped and he wondered, "Can you fly too?"

Riti nodded, "Alla time. It's my favorite way of getting about."

"That must be lots of fun!" John excitedly cheered. "I was in a helicopter the other day. It was great but flying on your own, without a machine? That must be awesome!"

Meanwhile, the other small black robed and hooded figure had her head turned towards John. There seemed to be something intense about the poise of the girl. Vicky murmured, "Powerful. Very powerful. Definitely empathic, Jace."

One of the larger figures nodded his head, "I agree. Are there any other talents he's figured out?"

Blushing bright red, John looked up at the slightly taller boy and giggled, "Umm... none that I know of."

Jason nodded at the others, and all at once they lowered their hoods. Jason's open and smiling face was framed by his rich brown, curly hair; and in the light through the window, it seemed to glow faintly red as well. His blue-green eyes sparkled as he looked down at John.

The boy standing next to him grinned as well, his bright blond hair shimmering in the light of the room. "I can feel he's nearly ready, love," Nathan said as he linked hands with Jason.

Vicky nodded with a smile, her green eyes and flame red/auburn hair mesmerizing the ten year old John. "Yup," she added.

Riti caused the greatest stir, however, for he not only lowered his hood, but threw off his robe altogether. He was stark naked beneath. That in itself was not a big surprise for kids living on Hawaii; but his long webbed toes, long webbed fingers, blue-black fine hair and blue-black feathered triple jointed wings did cause a stir.

"Oh, WOW!" John yelled.

Riti played it up for all he was worth. He held John's gaze with his left eye while turning his right to look at Prez, "Is he always this excitable?"

Seeing two eyes move in opposite directions, Prez fell to the sofa in shock.

"Oh," Riti giggled as he turned his head almost one-hundred-eighty degrees to look at Jason who was standing behind him. "They are all excitable."

"Only when alien bird-brains like you freak them out, Reet," Jason giggled as he started to tickle the winged boy's ribs.

Bruce moved forward and ran a hand over Riti's nearest wing. "Oh... oh kewl! Could you take me up with you? Just a little?" he asked excitedly.

Riti grinned and put both hands under Bruce's armpits and lifted. "Oh, yeah. You're light enough," he said. Then he looked at John, who was hopping from foot to foot in barely suppressed energy. He lifted John the same way. "You're light enough too. I just need to get my harness, then I can take you one at a time."

"I never manage to understand," Vicky smiled, "how someone weighing only thirty-five pounds can lift kids heavier than me!"

"I'm stronger than I look," Riti giggled before he French kissed his girlfriend. "And you make me feel as strong as He-Man," he added with a loving smile. The whole room broke out in "Awwwww! Sweet!" type exclamations.

"Now? Can we go now?" Bruce excitedly squealed with joy.

Jason laughed as Riti called out, "Draco! I need my flight harness, please!"

"Scaring the locals already, Feather-head?" came an unknown AI's voice from the speakers in the room.

Prez looked about quickly, "How? Who was that and how did he manage to get access to our network? I thought only Daileass could do that!"

Nathan looked at him and said with a sunny smile, "We're VSO, Vulcan Special and Covert Ops. We are the Dragon Division and it is our task to protect all of Clan Short. To that effect, we have access everywhere. Draco's the VSO AI"

"Not to mention he has the cutest transistors this side of the Beta Quadrant!" Daileass giggled.

"And yes, they are an item as well!" Nathan finished with a giggle.

"So... you're NOT Clan Short yourselves?" Keith asked as he moved closer.

"Yes," Jason said, "we are Clan Short as well. But being VSO is different. Cory Short has no authority over me as Division Leader for the Dragon Division of the VSO, but as Clan Short, he is my Patriarch on Clan matters. I'm also a Clan Patriarch - technically second in command of the Clan in Cory's absence. That is, in this case anyway. Joel was given that role for the weekend, but..." he trailed off with a serious look at Prez.

Prez nodded, but John groaned as he clutched his belly. "Can someone please tell me what's wrong with Joel?" he desperately pleaded.

Taking hold of John's shoulder, Keith softly said, "All we know is that Joel was hurt badly soon after he returned home. He's doing better and spending time with his family recovering."

John nodded and wiped tears from his eyes, but didn't speak for almost a minute. Finally, he glanced at each of his brothers saying, "You've gotta stop doing this. You're not protecting me any more; in some ways you're making it worse because I've felt there was something. Then my imagination runs wild trying to figure out what the something is."

"I'm really sorry, bro," Keith sincerely apologized.

Drew added, "It's been our job since the day you were born."

"Since before I moved in it was my job to make Keith's job easier too," Prez admitted.

"Yeah, well stop, okay? If I can sense something's wrong, you might as well tell me," John muttered as a transporter beam dumped a harness in Riti's hands.

"Okay," the winged boy grinned as he put the harness on himself, "Who's first?"

"Me! MEMEMEMEMEMEMEMEMEMEE!" Bruce giggled as he reached up and laid his hand on John's mouth to stop John from saying the same thing.

Riti giggled, "Okay, outside we go."

"I've got to see this!" Prez and Keith said in unison. All those in the room followed the Bird-boy and his two overly excited minions onto the grassy area just outside the door.

Riti looked about, then sighed happily. "Just like Orlando; like home... mmm... okay, come here, Bruce."

Bruce bounced over with a wide grin on his face.

"First, you need to know that clothes are gonna get in the way.

You don't have a problem being naked, do you?" Riti asked seriously.

Bruce giggled and quickly stripped himself. "Nuh huh. Nope, I'm kewl with being naked."

Riti grinned and blinked his slightly oversized eyes at the cute boy in front of him. "Sexy too," he giggled, winking at Vicky, who was watching with a lot of interest.

Bruce blushed deeply, but was soon thinking about the airborne fun he'd be having. Riti pulled Bruce over and positioned him with Bruce's back to his chest. After snapping the harness in place and tightening it properly, Riti asked, "Comfy?"

"Yeah!" Bruce yelled with nervous expectation. He had the same fluttery feeling in the pit of his stomach as just before going on a rollercoaster ride. "Oh, yeah!"

Riti reached down and showed Bruce the last part of the harness, "You need to lift your feet into this and press down; that way you won't throw me off balance in the air."

"Okay, what do I do with my arms?" Bruce asked as he studied the lower harness.

"Whatever you like, but we'll go faster if you cross them and hold your shoulders with your hands," Riti answered.

"Kewl!"

Riti unfurled his wings and flapped them a few times, then he jumped ten feet straight up. While hovering there, Riti helped Bruce to get his feet into the lower harness. "Ready?" Riti asked with a smile.

"Yup yup yup!"

And they were off, swooping around the Ewa Beach Main Compound, and causing quite a stir with the other Hawaiian Clan kids in the area.

As they dove down towards where Keith and Prez and company were watching, Bruce let rip a war-whoop. Riti brought himself to a dead stop about two feet from the ground, and asked Prez, "Is it okay to go off and find some thermals? Bruce will be safe, I promise."

"Oh, please, please, please?" Bruce begged.

Prez giggled and pointed north towards the mountains.

And Riti was off like a bullet, Bruce crying out with excitement all the way.

And so it was that the newspapers, the following day had reports of two naked, flying boys being sighted over Ewa Beach, Honolulu, and various other areas of Oahu Island.

John waited patiently; well, as patiently as any ten year old can when there's a marvelous adventure incoming. He sipped on his cola as the increasingly larger group of kids waited for Riti and Bruce to return. "Where are they? Do you see 'em?" John asked as he scanned the northern skies.

Giggles from the rooftop made everyone spin around, only to see Bruce and Riti gliding down towards them. Just as they landed, Riti unsnapped the harness and Bruce tumbled to the ground, a tired but happy mess of an eight-year-old who started babbling a mile a minute to his new older brother Keith about his amazing trip.

John watched as Riti guzzled down a drink, and asked, "You need to rest first?"

"Nope. I'm good. I saw a good mountain to the south on the larger island. You fancy a visit?" Riti asked. He giggled as John was already sending his clothes flying in all directions.

"YEAH!" John cried out happily.

Riti looked John over, then giggled harder. "Yep, you're excited, alright!"

John looked down and blushed. "It always does that when I go flying," he whined.

"No one'll see from up there," Riti giggled as the rest of the kids gathered began chuckling.

It took no time at all to get John fitted into the harness, and then they were off like a shot.

Flying fast over the deep blue waters of the Pacific, Riti had never felt so free since on Earth. John was babbling happily about the ships far below, and about how neat it felt to have the air rushing over his body with nothing but a pair of wings keeping him up. Riti pressed a kiss against John's head and whispered, "Wanna go lower and draw patterns in the sea as we fly?"

"Really? KEWL!"

Riti took that as a definite agreement. And so, laughing and cheeping happily, he dove down towards the sea. Less than a foot and a half above the water, he leveled out and John started trailing his hands in the warm waters of the Pacific. "This is so KEWL!" John giggled as the splashing he was causing soaked him. Riti giggled more.

A sailing boat with a young family on it passed to their left, and both boys laughed at the shocked expressions on the faces of the young couple. The small five year old boy started yelling about angels and waving madly at them. John waved back, but soon the boat was far behind.

As they approached Hawai'i Island itself, Riti raised himself up higher and higher, before starting to ride the wicked thermals that the active volcano was producing. John had never enjoyed something so much in all his life. They spiraled up high, and just before they started to run out of warm air and even breathable air, Riti would dive back down at high speed. This would cause John to squeal out in excited terror; the same type of terror a truly scary rollercoaster would produce, before yelling "AGAIN! AGAIN!"

Over and over they did this, before Riti decided a nice drink was in order. They landed on a beachfront holiday area, and from Riti's only item of clothing - a utility belt, he produced a credit chip to pay for some drinks, a sticky bun each, and a nice bar of chocolate with peanuts. (Riti liked peanuts.)

John's nakedness wasn't an issue, simply as there were holiday makers all over this area, and most of the kids were in the same state. It was Riti that became the issue. His wings drew a lot of attention, even from some Starfleet personnel there. The Lo'Garn were still an unknown to most of the Fleet, even after the Dragon Division had linked up with Clan Short.

"Why don't they know your people, Reet?" John asked as they started making a more leisurely return trip to John's home.

Riti smiled, "My home world is over ten thousand light years from the Federation. There's only a few of us here. It's a very long story, but it'll be on the Clan files if you wanna read it."

"Okay," John nodded. Then he felt something in the pit of his stomach. Something was wrong, and it was very close by. "Reet, down there; there's a kid in danger!"

"I see him," Riti said, his voice hard. His more acute eyesight could clearly make out a small sailing yacht with three people on board; a man, a woman and a small boy. The man was raising his hand over and over and bringing down his fist onto the young child, while the woman watched impassively. As Riti went into a dive, he saw the man throw the sobbing boy at the woman, who started to beat him too, as well as cruelly pull on the child's testicles. "Tuck your arms to your chest. I'm about to show them the meaning of vengeance," Riti snarled. He took out a small phaser from his belt and started firing at the two adults.

The phaser was on tight-beam mode, and on a high burn setting. Meaning, that the beam passed right through the man's feet, one at a time, and then through his hands as he fell to the deck of the yacht. The woman received the same treatment. As Riti landed and unhooked John, the little boy, no older than four years old or so, peeked out from behind his arms. When the 'lightning' from the sky had started, and the two adults started screaming, the child had fallen to the deck himself and covered his head with his arms in complete terror.

John reached him first, and drew him into his arms, "Shhh... you're okay, now. We're from Clan Short, and we won't let anything bad happen to you again. Shhhhh." John sat down and held the sobbing child on his lap, then looked at Riti, "What should we do now?"

"We' will do nothing, bro. I'll deal with this under VSO rules. I'll get Draco to beam you and the boy back to your base. We can have more flying later," Riti said, his eyes hard as agates.

"Umm... okay. Uh, Reet? I can see pictures in my head. I think it's from this boy's mind. What's going on?" John asked as he held the child tighter.

Riti smiled briefly, "That's telepathy. Focus on the pictures and tell me what you see."

John scrunched his eyes closed and his forehead crinkled. "I... these are his parents, but they've always hurt him. They like making him... oh, sick! He's a toy to them, mostly the woman. They're sadists and.... ergh!"

"That's enough," Riti said firmly. "Draco! Beam John and the boy back to Jason and Vicky."

"Okay," Draco answered, and the two little kids vanished.

Riti looked down at the still screaming and maimed adults, "You will regret what you've done, for a long, long time."

Sitting naked in the grass, John appeared directly in front of his older brothers and Mr. T, with the tiny rescued boy on his lap and clinging to him for all he was worth. John had the definite impression that this boy was not about to let go any time soon, either.

"Oookay," Prez droned and then whistled. "You leave with Riti and transport back with a strange kid? What's happening, bro?"

John mutely shook his head and simply cuddled the boy closer. His eyes seemed haunted.

Jason frowned slightly, then looked deep into both the tiny boy's mind and into John's. "Oh, I see," he muttered. He looked at Prez and the others, "John and Riti just rescued this little one from some abusive parents. Riti is, uh... dealing with the two adults now."

"Oh!" Keith murmured, then shuddered, for the look in Jason's eye as he'd said 'dealing' was anything but gentle. "What's the kid's story?" he asked instead.

Jason passed onto Vicky all that he had seen. "His name's Dewi," Vicky said. "He and his parents were visiting from Wales, U.K. Looks like the two arseholes won't be going back there."

"They'll be going back, in mason jars if they're lucky," Jamie stated flatly, obviously not pleased.

"How old's he?" John whispered in between pressing kisses into the crying boy's hair.

Kneeling down next to John and rubbing the little boy's back, Vicky murmured, "He's four... and a half. Can't forget the half, can we, sweetie?"

Dewi looked up and blinked at her through watery eyes. "I'm a big boy," he insisted weakly.

"And a brave boy too," Vicky whispered, and then she kissed his cheek.

"Yeah," John murmured as Dewi increased the strength of his hug.

"What you doing to Mammy and Daddy?" Dewi asked, his eyes traveling from face to face before him. "Please, don't hurt my Mammy and Daddy. I's was bein' bad. I's was sick 'cos boat rocked. I's bad, not thems."

Vicky closed her eyes to hold in her temper, but Jason winced at the increased 'blue' language his 'innocent' little sister was sending out to all who could hear.

"You weren't a bad boy for bein' sick, Dewi," John whispered, his eyes beginning to leak tears.

Dewi turned and gazed thoughtfully at him. "But I's always bad. I's always bein' pun'shed, 'cos I's bad. Daddy says so. He says I's need to be's a man, so I's gotta get the bad outta me."

John didn't know what to say, so he sent an appealing look at Keith and Prez.

"No one should be hurt like that, sweetie," Vicky said as she continued to rub the small boy's back. "Bad boys and girls should learn to be good, but no one, not even Mammies and Daddies, should hit them and make them do dirty things."

"But! Daddy says a real man's gotta make a woman feels good, so I's was being a good boy when I's was lickin' Mammy in her spec'al place," he murmured.

Needing to release some anger, Prez turned and entered the house so that he could scream some profanities into the air without startling the hurting little boy.

Vicky gently cupped the small boy's face in her hands and allowed her eyes to glow out bright blue, bathing Dewi's face with a subtle azure glow. "Dewi, you are a good boy, but your Mammy and Daddy were being bad."

"No they wasn't! I was! I's bad!"

"No, sweetheart. Good Mammies and Daddies don't do that to their children," Vicky insisted.

"Don' believes you," Dewi muttered stubbornly. "Proves it!"

So Vicky did, by grasping her brother's mind and linking them together to project her life and her brother, Jason's life into the mind of the little boy. As the rolling pictures came to an end, she whispered, "Our Mammy and Daddy were good. They made mistakes like anyone does, but they never hurt us. The most they did when we were really bad was smack our bums and send us to bed early."

Dewi opened and closed his mouth over and over, unable to comprehend the difference between Jason and Victoria's happy childhood with his own hell. "I... I..." he trembled. Then, with his heart breaking, he wailed and cuddled back in to John's chest.

Just about this time, Riti appeared via a transporter beam. He took one look at the sobbing child, then glanced at Jason and tapped his head.

Jason took a look and saw what Riti had done as punishment and went a little green in the face. "DAMN, dude! Owwie!"

Jacob grinned. "I like that. Can I borrow it, bird-bro?"

"No," Riti answered Jacob. "I don't want you doing what I did. Besides, you're not VSO. You're not allowed to go quite as far as us with punishments under standard Vulcan law."

"What did you do?" Nathan asked Riti softly.

"Let's just say you can call him 'Chum boy' from now on," Riti smiled evilly.

Beau grinned. "It's only illegal if someone finds out."

"And it fit soooo well," Jamie added.

Nathan Evans glanced at Beau and Jamie and gave them a withering glare before giggling to himself. All three of the Terrors looked at each other innocently before nodding their heads in unison.

Vicky, Nathan, Riti and Jason all said "No!" at the same time. The three Evans boys grabbed a Terror each and began tickling them mercilessly. Vicky just watched and pointed out places her brothers were missing on the Terrors.

Once the group had calmed down and reentered the house, they found Preston still swearing impetuously. Keith, Mike and Derrick got Prez under control, then they passed around drinks and took a seat in the living room with their guests. Riti and John spent a fair bit of time tempting little Dewi into drinking his, and eventually managed to get a few giggles out of the tiny cherub.

After calming down somewhat, Prez went over to Jason. "Dude, I'm just wondering; you said the VSO guard Clan Short. Why haven't we seen any of your guys here yet?"

Jason grinned, "You wouldn't because the AI's see and hear everything. What is of concern to the VSO are persons that might try to infiltrate and cause damage to Clan Short from within a Clan compound. There are operatives in place that will act as covert protection when you are outside of the monitoring area of the AI's video and audible monitoring range. In addition, they will deal with external threats that are intending to become internal threats to your Division."

Vicky decided a distraction might be good. "Keith?"

"Uh, yeah, Vic?"

"What would you say if I said you and Prez are hot-to-trot, and Riti and I would like a tumble in a bedroom with you?"

That was the kind of outrageously silly sexual remark to set Prez off giggling and then laughing. While Prez stomped his feet and fell back into the sofa hysterical, Keith smiled widely and answered, "I guess that means, some other time but not today, thanks."

Jason moved closer to Keith, then gently guided him out to the hallway and whispered, "Has anyone told you that John might be N-Gen?"

Keith answered, "Yeah, Juan did when he was here. It's been worrying us for a few days now, but they all told us it'll work out fine in the end."

Jason smiled, "Well, yes, it will. We've not lost anyone yet, but..."

"Lost anyone?" Keith exclaimed in a choked whisper.

Jason raised his hand to grip the older boy's shoulder, "Don't worry, Keith. Let me explain. When someone starts the turn, their power inside themselves increases off the scale. Their minds, however; are not set up to deal with that increase. It's like crossing a bridge when the bridge isn't even built. So, we need help. I was the first, and if I'd not had that help for another hour or so, I'd have died. So far, every N-Gen we've come across was turned in more than enough time."

Keith nodded, but then asked, "Does it hurt?"

"Like all hell has landed in your head, yes. When you start the turn by pushing yourself over your brain's, or mind's limit, you get a bitch of a headache that slowly gets worse and worse," Jason answered quietly.

"No way," Keith hissed. "I don't want my brother going through that! No way!"

Jason locked his eyes with Keith and said, "I could do nothing for Joel. But in seeing in his mind little John, there might be something I can do for him. That is why I brought five other N-Gens with me, plus Riti who is linked to Viccy. There is something I can try, but it has never been attempted before. One way or the other, he'll be an N-Gen, but I cannot say he won't feel some pain. All of us did to one degree or another. But my idea might work to do this painlessly. Joel would like that," Jason finished, his eyes filling with tears.

Wide-eyed and concerned about the seriousness of the situation, Keith said, "It would be as close to a hundred percent safe as is possible? I'll be honest, if my mom were to ever discover I had anything to do with something that hurt John, I'd have to move to the highest mountain of Tibet. Prez would insist on coming with me and then this division is shot to hell."

"No doctor would say a simple tonsillectomy is one hundred percent safe," Jason replied. "This would be like that, but bad tonsils won't kill you. John turning without assistance would be fatal if not helped in time. As I said, we haven't lost one yet, but we've had some really close calls. For John's own safety, I'd rather try to take him to N-Gen while he's relatively calm and there's a bunch of support around than have to try to do it when he's teetering on the brink and there may not be anybody available to help. Because I can assure you, he will go N-Gen; the only question is when."

Keith nodded, then went to the living room and called Drew into the hallway. John was already eying his brothers suspiciously, but was still busy with Dewi. Keith briefly described the situation for Drew.

"Mom would go absolutely insane if anything happened," Drew agreed. "We'd all have to move to the furthest corner of the Earth to escape!"

"The alternative is far worse though," Keith recognized. "I think it's the best option."

Drew nodded and looked at Jason, "Do a real good job though, Jace. The alternative is having Daileass transport us all far away before five this afternoon."

Keith then went to get Prez. Prez excused himself and joined his brothers while John squinted at the activity. Vicky, Riti, and Nathan Evans surrounded John to assure him that everything would turn out for his benefit. Prez considered the situation carefully and agreed, "Whether we take action immediately or not, we're aware of it now. In my opinion, nowhere on Earth would be safe. We'd have to join Starfleet and remain as far away from this planet as is possible. We're agreed then; we do this now, rather than chance a bad scene?"

Keith and Drew both nodded. All four boys returned to the living room.

By this point, John had passed Dewi over to Bruce's arms, and was standing with his arms crossed. His face was stern and filled with a stubbornness only a ten-year-old could pull off. "Well?" he asked pointedly. "What are you going to hide from me this time? I need to be made a girl, maybe? Or is the world ending and I have to stay behind to sacrifice myself to save all humankind? What?"

Keith couldn't help but snort out a brief laugh, while Drew cocked his head thoughtfully to the side, "You know, I always wanted a little sister. This might work!"

Still naked from his flight with Riti, John instinctively cupped his privates with both hands. "Nuh uh! No way!"

Drew cracked up laughing, and Keith joined him laughing more loudly. Prez decided that the worried look on his younger brother's face was not quite as funny as Drew and Keith thought, and so explained the situation to John and those gathered there. Once he'd finished, John was now sitting again and looking at Prez with his mouth hanging open. Prez then said, "It's up to you, bro. You can wait, or you can go with Jason's idea now. I can't and won't force you. It's gotta be your choice."

John closed his mouth and looked around at his brothers for a moment. His voice trembling ever so slightly, he said, "I don't want it to hurt, and I don't want to die. I want to get it done now." Then he looked down at himself and asked meekly, "Can I put my shorts on now, please?"

Prez laughed and tossed the boy his underwear and board shorts. Vicky giggled, "Owwww! It's nice scenery, though!"

John was in his clothes in a heartbeat, blushing as he warily watched Vicky. The eight-year-old girl didn't move, but her eyes had certainly been watching everything closely.

Once properly attired, John sat back down and asked, "What do I do?"

Grinning at his sister's antics, Nathan Evans said, "First, don't worry. What will happen to begin with is that we'll all link our minds together and draw you into that group. You've got the skills at least of a normal empath or telepath right now, so you'll actually find it kinda kewl. Then we'll explain what we're doing. Most of this is going to be on us."

"How long will this take?" Prez asked seriously. "I expect Cory Short here any time, now."

Jason smiled, "Inside our minds? Hours, maybe. In the real world, a minute or so. Not long for you, Prez."

Prez, Keith and Drew uncertainly grunted, "Huh?"

"Thoughts operate on a faster level than reality," Jason explained as his eyes lit up. The green in his blue-green eyes seemed to be swallowed by the azure blue; even the whites of his eyes changed.

This happened as well to Vicky, Nathan Evans, Riti, the Double Js and Beau.

"Will I get to do that too?" John excitedly asked as he looked from glowing eye to glowing eye.

"Yes," all seven replied in one voice. "You will never need a flashlight again!"

"KEWL!"

Keith muttered in Prez's ear, "Oh, boy!"

"Are you ready, John Hundser?" came the seven fold choral voice from the glowing eyed kids.

John nodded, "Yes."

"Then we shall begin."

John opened his eyes and looked around. He was on a beach somewhere and before him were his favorite drink, fruit punch, and a plate of Wheat-Thins. "Mmm," He giggled, then started to snack.

Behind him, giggles could be heard. With a mouth full of his snacks, John turned to see all seven of the N-Gens sitting right behind him. "Having fun?" Riti asked with a gentle smile.

After swallowing his mouthful, John nodded, "Yeah! What is this place?"

"Your mind," Jamie giggled.

Jacob continued, "and it's..."

"Kinda kewl!" Beau finished.

John looked about the beach. "This is my mind? Really?"

"Yes," Vicky smiled. "All of us have a special place in our heads. You are most at peace when you think of the sun, sand and sea. So this is what your mind will be like when you come inside to think or be at peace."

John nodded seriously and continued to munch on his wheat-thins.

Jason moved closer and drew John into a loose hug, "Okay, little guy, first I want to show you what we're aiming for. Then, me, Nath' and Vicky will start our bit with the three terrible triplets..."

"We..."

"... are not..."

"...triplets!"

"No, but you're as close as triplets," Nath' giggled.

"But that..."

"... would be..."

"... incest!"

"Well, keeping it in the family is best!" Vicky giggled, causing the Double Js and Beau to poke their fingers in their mouths and pretend to puke.

John nearly choked on his munchies as he laughed, making Jason hammer lightly on his back to help him breathe. "You won't pass out, but your thoughts can become a reality if you're not careful," Jason explained to the red-faced and laughing boy.

John took a long swig of his drink and sighed. With a smile, he said, "Okay. So you and them," he pointed at Riti, Nath' and Vicky, "will do one thing. What are the three insane ones gonna do?"

Jason grinned as John received a triple raspberry from the three insulted yet giggling boys. "Okay, watch this," Jason said as he waved his hand.

In the air before them all, an image of a canyon appeared. On one side was John. Then, a bridge formed and linked both sides of the canyon, and John seemed to exist on both sides at once. "What happened with me," Jason explained, "and with Nath' and Vicky was that our power was such that we could exist across this canyon, but our minds hadn't developed to the point where we had the bridge to cross. Or, you could think about a car; our engine was a jet engine in the body of a Ford. The body cannot hold it. So, the Mikyvis, Levi and his parents, came to help us in the past."

John nodded as he studied the image.

"What I'm going to do, and I will let you know now, this is not something an N-Gen has done before, so we will do this slowly and carefully; is build the bridge for you before your power ups to the level of a jet engine. While I do that, with Vicky and Nath', Riti will act as a power dump to ground us. Jamie, Jacob and Beau will be watching, so that they can do this themselves in the future. They already know how to do this to someone who's already dangling off the canyon as I was, but they want to learn a 'Gentle Transformation' as well, and I think it's a good idea. Once I'm ready with the bridge, Vicky and Nath' will withdraw from me to get you to go into overdrive. Once you are, Jamie, Jacob and Beau will start rearranging your mind to operate as an N-Gen."

"While you and Riti hold the bridge in place? Or the Jet Plane body?" John asked, still studying the image.

"That's right," Jason smiled as he ruffled the boy's hair. "So, tell us when you're ready, and we'll begin."

John took another long drink. Then he asked, "Will it hurt?"

Jason hissed a breath through his teeth. "Well, it won't be like when I transformed, no. Definitely not. You... well, you might feel a stretching of your mind, like when you overuse a muscle? Like an ache, I'd imagine. Then again, if we get this perfect, maybe nothing at all. I cannot promise 'no' discomfort, but I will promise - you won't be in pain and definitely not agony as me and my bro and sis went through."

John nodded, "But if I said not now, and waited, it will happen and I will be in a lot of pain. And if you guys don't get to me in time, I could die. That's right, isn't it?"

Jason nodded seriously.

"Then a little stretching won't be a problem," John smiled bravely. "Thank you for doing this."

Jason hugged him. "I saw you in Joel's mind, and you're special to my brother and to I-Cheya. That makes you special to us. Joel would like us to do this, I'm sure. He really likes you a lot."

"Really? We didn't talk a lot when he was here."

"But he hugged you a lot, right?" Vicky asked with a smile.

"Well... yeah," John giggled.

"Sometimes actions speak louder than words," Jason said. "You were hugged the most by Joel, which means there's something about you that made Joel feel the most comfortable. He loves you, so we would do this even if we didn't know you. Now that we have met you, we love you as well, just for yourself. You're an amazing boy, and I sense you're going to do great things to help the Clan, and your big brothers. They are going to need you more than they realize."

Pride rushed into his heart, and John suddenly felt an echo of peace at that last statement. "Okay. I'm ready," he said softly.

At first, John felt nothing other than a tickling at the edges of his mind. He saw the twins and Beau darting their eyes around quickly as they followed something he himself could not see. He giggled as the tickling became greater.

Then, as if a doorway opened, he saw a pathway before him; glowing azure blue just like the eyes of the N-Gens. "Is this the bridge?" he whispered softly.

No word answered him, but a feeling of confirmation swept through his being.

The beach and everything around him fell away and he seemed to only exist on this path of azure power. None of the others were now visible. Then, next to him on either side, Vicky and Nath' appeared.

"What do I do now?" he asked.

The answer he had was a pressure on his mind. Then, "Push back," Nath' ordered.

John didn't quite know what he meant, but instinctively he hardened his mind against the pushing sensation. From Vicky's side, another feeling of pressure started, and he started pushing back. Once he felt the pressure lessen, he smiled at them. They smiled back and then the pressure increased again. "More," Vicky ordered.

On and on this went, with John getting his shield up to push back until he couldn't feel the pressure, but then once he had held it for a moment, the pressure increased again. It was not so much to hurt him, but to make him stretch himself to hold equal pressure back. He felt what Jason had warned him about, a slight ache as if he was doing weight training or pushups, but he wouldn't even say it was unpleasant. It felt kinda good, he admitted to himself as he found himself holding his own against the increasing power of two N-Gen minds.

"Move..."

"...over..."

"...the bridge," came the triplicate orders from behind him.

Without turning, John started obeying the Double J's and Beau and started walking. Vicky and Nath' walked with him, but the pressure was no longer increasing. It was normal now.

With each step he took, the bridge became more and more solid; John felt his mind expanding with every footstep. Room upon room seemed to open in his mind, and his power seemed to fill the spaces around him.

He opened his eyes on the beach of the calm part of his mind, and looked around himself. Puzzled, he asked, "What now?"

Jason formed a mirror with his mind and held it before John's face.

John looked then squealed out in joy.

His eyes, normally light brown, were now washed out in an azure blue glow of his own power.

Beau was further down the beach with the other four building sandcastles. The Double J's did their Clan duty by giving new telepaths their official Vulcan Legal training on the use and responsibility of their power. "So, my telepathy is always on? I'll always read people's minds?" John asked as he sat with the Double J's.

Jacob smiled, "Yes, but you learn to point the 'sight' of your telepathy to just about the heads of those around you."

"That way, you hear a murmuring, not their thoughts," Jamie added.

"You're not speaking like you normally do," John giggled.

Jacob winked, "We can speak normally, but most times we like teasing others by twin or triplet speak!"

John laughed. "Okay, so if I pointed my power out normally, I'd only hear surface thoughts?"

"Yes," Jamie answered. "To read minds and go deeper, like memories, you have to actively scan. All other times, it's passive."

"What about empathy? That's what I've always felt and had," John asked curiously.

Jamie giggled, "That's different. Vicky will show you that one. Now, back to the rules for scanning a criminal."

A little later, John was hugging Vicky as she and Riti finished showing him the basics of his N-Gen style empathy. "What you do with it now is up to you. Like Jace and the Double J's gave you the basics for telepathy, we've shown you the basics for empathy."

Riti added, "It's like teaching someone the alphabet. The story they write once they know how to read and spell is then up to them. Same for you. Each N-Gen is the same, yet each N-Gen is different. The Double J's are practically locked telepaths. Sammy, you've not met him yet, is a pre-cog and an empath in the main, but his other powers do get used some now. Everyone is unique, yet also the same. You'll learn stuff and discover stuff that the others haven't, and then you can show and teach them. Same for the stuff we learn."

"But not all at once, no?" John asked wisely.

"Nope," Jason said as he came to join them. "It's always good to let you grow your power on the basics for a while before we teach you the tricks we picked up."

John nodded with understanding. "So, what's next?"

"Well, Beau and Nath' want to show you telekinesis. Beau surprised us the other day. He's a very powerful T.K. Go on, cute stuff, go have fun. That's the real fun power to learn so you can prank your big bros!" Vicky giggled.

John bounced up and ran over to the waiting twelve- and ten-year-old. Soon thereafter, sand balls, sand pyramids and sandcastles were hovering about the beach.

"The force..."

"...is strong with..."

"...this one!" Jamie and Jacob giggled as Jason found himself hoisted into the air and dunked unceremoniously into the sea.

Just before leaving the union of their minds, John asked, "What about this pre-cog thing? Riti mentioned it, but none of you have said anything about it."

Jason answered, "Because none of us can control it. Yet, anyway. Sammy uses it the most, but even he cannot control it on a whim. It's more a feeling that a certain action is going to be right or wrong. Or something is coming, like a flash image. It just happens. It's why I was very sure I could move you to N-Gen without hurting you. If you're the one to find a way to control it, please tell the rest of us," he finished with a giggle.

"I will," John promised seriously, then he hugged each of them in turn. Giggling, he said, "I'm gonna prank my brothers good!"

"Oh dear," Riti murmured, a smile tugging at the corner of his mouth, "what have we unleashed?"

The beach faded away and they all opened their eyes on the living room in Prez' house. Prez and the others were looking a little worried, and Keith huffed, "You were gone for three minutes! You said it would only take a minute!"

"Oops," Jason giggled. "Well to us it seemed like a full day, so that's a fairly good going!"

Prez moved close to John, who still had his eyes closed, and touched his little brother's shoulder. "You okay?" he asked with concern, for the boy seemed to be sitting rigidly.

His eyes still closed, John shook his head. "No, I'm not okay," he muttered.

Then slowly, John opened his eyes and they radiated out in bright blue power. "I am GREAT!" he yelled out, "PHENOMENAL COSMIC POWERS!" His voice echoed and reverberated around the room. All the lights flashed, the chairs and sofas bounced around, and the mugs on the coffee table danced.

Then everything became still.

"In a cute, itty-bitty body!" John finished with an irresistible grin as his eyes returned to their normal light brown color.

Everyone in the room from Derek Tecumseh, the eldest, to Kokaku Kidotai, the youngest, found John's comical cartoon reference hysterical and cracked up laughing.

Prez growled playfully and pulled John up and into his arms, "That's revenge for the custard attack last week, I take it?"

"Partly," John giggled evilly.

While everyone was still laughing there was a knock at the front door. Passing John over to Keith, Prez went to answer it. He opened the door to find four more kids, two of which he easily recognized from the Internet and newspaper article photographs. Already in an exuberant playful mood, Prez smiled and loudly greeted the two he recognized. "Cory and Sean Short, as I live and breathe! Welcome to Paradise and The Rimmers' Funny Farm!" Stepping outside and offering his hand, Prez pulled Cory into a tight hug briefly, then did the same to Sean.

The strawberry blond that was with the new arrivals stuck his head in the doorway and glanced around. "Are you sure the double J's are here, Cor? The house seems to still be in one piece!"

Before anyone could respond, the telepathic triplets yelled "WE HEARD THAT, DORK!" After giggling for a second, they added "Daileass? North Atlantic please? Three dips!"

There was a brief yell from both twins, then cursing.

"Well, I didn't know you meant JJ, did I?" Daileass giggled as the two soaking wet twins ran outside to warm themselves in the sun.

Cory laughed at their antics, then mouthed silently; "Ark, would you be so kind as to send the gloating redhead behind me on the trip that the twins intended him to go on?"

<Only if you go with him. Tyne's orders.>

"I can live with that. Timmy's complaining about Sean not bringing him pets." Cory replied with a giggle.

Both JJ and Cory vanished, then reappeared holding a baby seal between them, and of course both soaking wet.

Two giggling six-year-old boys came running up, the blond one holding a baby Nene goose. The redhead immediately spotted the seal, and exclaimed "KEWL! You gots me a new friend! Thanks, Unca JJ an' Daddy!"

Letting go of Sean, Prez turned and hollered into the house, "Richie and Dee, come meet some new friends. And can someone grab two towels for Cory and JJ?" Prez then faced Cory, pointed at the silver blond haired boy and asked, "Who's this guy?"

Richie and Dee came to the doorway as Cory said, "That's my bro, Adam Short."

Prez shook hands with Adam and said hello.

"I'm Timmy an thisiza my boyfriend Ricky," the redhead rushed out as Ricky handed the baby Nene to Sean. "Poppa, can you take care of Freddie while me an' Ricky an' Dee an' Richie goes an sees if Uncas Triple Awesome can make his momma better? She's sick."

Sean nodded, knowing better than to try to distract his son from an animal rescue. "Go on, Munchkin; good luck."

"You're silly, Papa! I don' need luck; I got Unca Beau!" Timmy giggled as the Nene was settling in Sean's hands. Once their charge was safe, Timmy and Ricky grabbed Richie and Dee's hands and dragged them off towards the trees lining the driveway.

Cory shook his head and grinned, "I hope you haven't had it as crazy as my life! Is there a tub we can let Harold here play in, then we'll try the introductions over again?"

"My life, crazy?" Prez teased and crossed his eyes briefly. "I've come to expect the unexpected these last few days; especially after our chimps blew up an ATV engine in the wee hours last night." Keith came to the door with a stack of towels and stepped outside while Prez introduced his boyfriend to everybody. Finally, Prez said, "We can put Harold the seal in a tub upstairs."

Keith pleasantly smiled, "Come inside, dudes."

The now somewhat dry Cory and JJ took their partners' hands and followed their hosts into the house, Harold calmly riding in JJ's free arm. Once they got Harold set up in his private tub playground, they came back downstairs and joined the rest of the group. As they took a seat, Cory glanced at Sean. "Hey, Babe? It's been five minutes. You think the wildlife preserve is set up yet?"

Sean shook his head. "I doubt it; give them another five or ten minutes."

"Timmy's Zoo, Ewa Beach branch," Prez smirked knowingly. Prez then introduced Mike, Derrick, Corey, Drew and John. Prez then tapped his comm-badge saying, "Kaleo?"

"Kaleo here."

"Can you come to my house please, bud?" Prez said, "There's a whole bunch of people here you haven't met."

"On my way," Kaleo replied.

John screamed, "JACE! Put me DOWN!" and then there was a splashing sound.

Everyone turned towards the direction of the kitchen, then giggled as Jason walked back into the living room and said, "That got the little bugger."

"Huh?" Prez asked, and then he laughed at the cursing from the kitchen.

"John. I got him back. In the kitchen sink."

Cory sat back with a grin. "You have no idea just how true the zoo comment is! Why the sink? Pools give a lot better air time!"

"Not when one dunks a boy's butt and groin in ice-cube filled cold water, it don't," Jason smirked.

"I believe you might have just started a war you'll never win." Sean commented with a giggle.

"Oh," Jason smiled, "I don't mind... but I've not revealed all my tricks yet... have I, Vicky?"

"No!" came the answering giggle from the kitchen as more splashes happened, and more yells from a now very cold John.

"See? I have minions too!" Jason laughed maniacally.

Cory shook his head. "So what kind of setup did the Elf leave you with, Prez?"

Jason softly said, "We're gonna go outside and let you guys take care of business," then led Vicky, Nathan and Riti out of the house. As soon as one small boy saw Riti, it seemed all the little ones were surrounding the Bird-boy wanting flights around the island.

"Thanks to Uncle Iokii," Prez explained, "we have six bases on four islands; three here on Oahu, one of which I already gave to Adam for the UNIT. The other one is a mile or so west, and we'll use it as an incoming base. There's also a base on Maui, another on Hawai'i and the last one on Kauai. The Endeavour set us up with buildings and facilities on all the bases similar to what we have here. We have a skeleton staff of chefs, housekeepers, landscapers and a doctor and child psychologist too, thanks to Peter Lambert. Adam provided personal and base security here. Starfleet security is stationed at the other unoccupied bases."

Pulling a dining room chair over, Keith sat and added, "Daileass got a few ads placed for more help too: nurses, receptionists and kitchen help. My mom's got degrees in sociology and psychology. My dad's into legal research, Mike's dad is a cop, Derrick's dad is a construction contractor, Corey's dad is a bank manager."

"The only important things we don't know are the specifics of the Clan Short Charter and the Safe Haven Act," Prez said.

"That is on the schedule," Cory replied. "Sounds like you have the basics. Are you confident that you could run this as a Division Director?"

Kaleo walked in the house and Prez quickly introduced him to everyone still in the room.

"Confident?" Prez smirked. "I'll be honest and tell you what I told my team last night, Cory." Prez paused and softly said, "I know some of what happened in Montana and that's why I was hesitant to accept Joel's offer to be Director. We're at war right from the get-go."

We know it and we support it. My biggest worry is for the well-being of a hundred kids and four families, a responsibility I didn't have Friday but I do now. I think I can do it, but I've already made some tentative plans to share some responsibility with my Core Rimmers."

"My Mom got to you before I did?" Cory said with a half-laugh. "She just spent an hour over the weekend chewing me a new one about not delegating enough. That sounds good. Just so you know, if you hadn't had reservations, I woulda denied Joel's appointment of you. People who know it all have no place in any kinda management position in the Clan."

Prez smiled and nodded, "I thought maybe you wouldn't like the idea of delegating. Your mom and mine are definitely singing from the same song book. It's been a busy... no, it's been a hectic two days. Without my team doing their bits, I'd already be shot to hell!"

"Yeah, it's nuts at times," Cory replied with a smile. He tapped his comm-badge with a grin and announced "Hey transistor-breath! Stop looking at nanite porn and open a Clan Wide channel!"

All the Core Rimmers cracked up, as did most of the others in the room.

"Trans What! Johnny Five Alive. No transistors, Ugly Bag of mostly water. You must have used up all of that single blond brain cell to come up with that incredible display of witty conversation." Daileass said, with a playful mirth in his voice.

"I noticed you didn't deny the nanite porn. Busted!" Cory laughed. "Seriously, open a channel so I can let the guys know where to find the Rimmers at officially."

"Shall I show everyone what you and Sean were up to three days ago after bedding down for the evening?" was the response

Daileass gave while making the necessary connections. "Talk about kinky. What I want to know is why the spurs?"

"Because we knew you were watching and wanted to confuse you," Cory replied. "Say when, D."

"So you are an exhibitionist. That explains so much, Blondie. When D," a giggling Daileass responded.

Cory smiled, then began speaking. "Attention, all members of Clan Short. For the second time in less than a week, a new Division has been formed. All Communications officers log this location. Family Clan Short - Pacific Rim Division has been acknowledged and approved with Preston Albert O'Brian as Director. All Divisions are to contact the Director within the next twenty-four hours to ensure what assistance is necessary. In addition, the next person who forms a Division while I'm on a break without at least dropping me a quick message will be locked in a room with me as I consume and digest two loaves of garlic bread. Confirm."

Cory grinned as the confirmations came in, almost overlapping each other in haste. "Congrats, Prez; welcome to the family!" Cory said as the last Division checked in.

"Awesome!" Keith cheered.

Prez suggested, "How about we celebrate at the CIC dining room with a great lunch before we have to head to school for band practice?"

"Great!" Mike enthusiastically said.

"We'll get our boys and meet ya there, Prez," Derrick said, and then took Mike's hand and went back home.

Keith gathered Bruce, Carmella, Dewi and Kokaku. Prez asked Mr. T to join them. Soon everyone had left the house. There was short detour to get Dee, Richie, Timmy and Ricky. It seemed that Freddie's mamma Nene was feeling better, so Freddie was left with her.

On the way to the CIC, while the little kids raced ahead, Sean turned to Keith and said, "We've already heard you guys are musicians. Would you mind having an audience?"

Mildly stunned, Keith wondered, "You guys would want to come to our school?"

"Sure, why not?" Cory smiled.

Keith giggled, "Well, it's school!"

Prez asked, "Would security be an issue?"

JJ snickered, "I'm head of Clan security. We'll have your personal security guys there anyhow."

Keith nodded, "If it's no problem for you, I'd love for you guys to be there."

Prez warned, "Mrs. Diaz, our teacher, is really our only concern. She's gonna have to get used to us bringing security along, or we've got an issue to resolve."

Mike sighed, "We can only hope she doesn't have an issue."

Derrick said, "We've worked for our places in the school jazz band. As long as they're kewl, we are. Otherwise..."

Prez finished, "If Mrs. Diaz, the school or other students have a problem, it's their problem, not ours."

"Let's not stress it for now," Keith suggested.

But Mike still offered, "We're not gonna quit, but if they force our hand, Clan Short takes priority." Almost simultaneously, Prez, Keith and Derrick agreed.

Cory said, "Don't worry about it, guys. Even if school turns out to be a problem, we'll put you on Clan concert tours once in a while."

Sean readily agreed, "We're brothers now. Any problem of yours, we'll come up with a work-around."

Mike turned to Sean and wondered, "What exactly are these rooster tails you're so good at?"

Adam, Cory and JJ burst out in giggles. Sean loudly chuckled, "Who told you about that?"

"Tyler told us Saturday morning," Derrick remembered. He opened the dining room door and held it as everyone stepped inside.

Sean smiled, "A rooster tail is what happens when you bring a shuttle down fast and low, like ten or so feet off the surface of the water..."

"You're a pilot? Prez nervously crowed.

Sean nodded and Cory said, "A damn good pilot too."

Sean offered, "I'll take you guys for a ride sometime."

While Mike and Derrick enthusiastically agreed, Keith explained, "Prez's parents were killed in a plane crash. It was only two years ago. Getting him to fly might require sedation."

Derrick teased, "You were flying on The Endeavour though,

Prez."

Picking up a tray, Prez grinned, "Y'all can go get your jollies while I watch the rooster tails safe on the shore." He then paused briefly and loudly announced, "We got pizza! One of our chefs is from New Jersey, and scuttlebutt has it, he makes the best pizza ever." Lined up ready to be served were several thin and thick crust pizzas; some were plain cheese, some were pepperoni and sausage, some had pineapple and ham, and two were vegetarian.

Dee looked up at Keith and asked, "Can me and Richie have pizza too, daddy?"

"You can have anything you want," Keith answered. "If you'd rather something else..."

"No, pizza'd be kewl," Dee smiled.

"I'll carry our sodas," Keith offered.

As everybody moved through the line, Miguel served Prez and said, "Charles is already doing interviews, Preston."

"Kewl!" Prez chirped.

Miguel nodded, "Several qualified chefs have applied. We're keeping them high on our list for future expansion."

Prez hummed thoughtfully while helping Dewi with his tray then said, "Ya know what, get them past the interview process completely."

Cory said, "Go ahead and hire 'em, Prez. You've got lots o' bases to get staffed. Better to have them before they're needed."

"You heard the boss," Prez smiled at Miguel. "Staff up for five bases ASAP."

"What of the sixth base, Sir?" Miguel wondered.

"That's Adam's UNIT base," Prez replied. "I'm sure he's already getting staff he needs there."

Miguel nodded and smiled, "Enjoy your lunch, gentlemen."

"Have good day," Prez smiled.

Once everybody was seated and had begun eating, Prez asked, "You guys know what went on here with CPS and the orphanages?" When Sean, Corey, Adam and JJ nodded, Prez said, "I'm planning on talking to the King later. We think Republic of Hawaii CPS should just be closed up; that way we don't ever have to go down that road again. Going forward, Pacific Rim Division and Federation Youth Services picks up the ball. What do you guys think?"

"It's a big job we'd be relieving the government of," Adam softly considered.

"But a job the government screwed up majorly," JJ said.

Sean asked, "What if the CPS budget came directly to Clan Short?"

Thoughtful, Cory nodded, "That's a good idea. If the King's agreeable, we could take over. We could even present that option to some State Governors." Cory paused and smiled, "This is awesome pizza! Nice thin, crisp crust, excellent sauce and cheese too. Word's gonna get around about this dude. He's gonna have to do some pizza training for our other chefs."

Sean giggled around the latest slice of pizza he had shoved in his mouth. "Thonehz unna anht o shoh hesahees!"

Adam laughed. "Okay, who brought Joey along!"

Mike, Derrick and Keith loudly grunted, "Huh?"

Prez grinned, "Many languages later and I still don't have a friggin' clue."

Timmy giggled. "You gotta unnerstan feeding hog. He said, Unca Tommy's gonna wanna swap reci-pees!" Timmy then quickly sought shelter on Cory's lap, giggling madly as Sean glared at him.

"That's what Granma Teri calls it!" Ricky added as he quickly joined Timmy.

Sitting nearby with Cesar, Felipe, Carmella, Latoya and Christel, Lanna Seaver overheard this and said, "I cannot wait to meet your Granma Teri!" She then noticed Jamie and Jacob, pointed and warned, "You two will use sunscreen lotion or else!"

"But" "we" "live" "in" "Florida." "We" "are" "used" "to" "the" "sun!" Jamie and Jacob see-sawed in reply.

"And you're already pink!" Lanna forcefully reminded. "No lip now, either you do the sunscreen or I will."

"But" "we" "are" "ALWAYS" "pink!" they argued back.

Corey Seaver went over to Jamie and Jacob, leaned between them and whispered, "She's my mom. She'll getchya, I guarantee it. You'll think you're safe, but you won't be really. Ask Brant, she got him Friday before we even met him. You will have no choice."

Jamie and Jacob both crossed their arms and sulked. "We don't need no friggin' sunscreen..." Jamie muttered.

"We're always outside and we never sunburn," Jacob added in a low irritated tone.

'Chill, you two.' Cory pushed out telepathically to the twins. 'Let me handle this AFTER we are done eating.'

'Yes sir, Captain Cowboy.' Both of them sent back, the sarcasm just enough to let Cory know they would do it for him, only because they knew he would keep his word.

As they uncrossed their arms and quietly resumed eating, Cory motioned to Mrs. Seaver to come over. Once she was at his side, he softly told her in a voice low enough that only she could hear. "Mrs. Seaver, there are a few things that you and I need to talk about after lunch concerning the twins. I think you'll understand their reaction a little better."

Perceiving a seriousness in Cory's tone and noticing many similarities with her own Corey, Lanna nodded and whispered, "I'll be home or by the pool most of the afternoon."

Cory nodded. "Thanks."

Corey Seaver came over to talk with Cory Short regarding the overprotective nature of his mom. In the meanwhile, Prez, Keith, Mike and Derrick were holding a conversation about the school jazz band with Adam and JJ. Simply because they very much wanted to, Kaleo and Tory were eating at a table alone. By the time Corey and Cory were done whispering, the other conversation had moved beyond music to their kids. Everybody joined together on that shared topic.

Then a UNIT Colonel moved towards the table and the conversation paused. The teenage boy snapped to attention and saluted saying, "Kekoa Casey reporting in as Commanding officer of the Pacific Rim Division UNIT detachment."

"Excellent!" Prez cheered. "At ease, Kekoa." The Colonel moved to parade rest. Prez grinned, "Take it easy and chill out! Here's the way I'd like it to be; you act military and I'll assume there's a situation requiring Pacific Rim Division's immediate attention. Call me Prez. We're on a first name basis unless you're making a military report. Right now, we're finishing lunch. Have you eaten?"

"I have," Kekoa replied.

"Then grab a chair and join us, please," Prez smiled. Kekoa slid a chair over and sat between Cory and Prez. Prez asked, "You know we're just getting settled, right?"

Kekoa nodded, "General Casey has briefed me, yes. Just so you know, I am a native of Hawaii. I ran away from one of the orphanages that were shut down."

"I guessed your heritage from your name, brave one," Prez grinned.

Mike wondered, "How the heck do you know this stuff?"

Keith answered, "Etymology. Prez likes to know how we know what we know, so he studies root word forms whenever a new word pops up." Feeling like he had somehow absorbed a part of the Double J's circular speaking, Keith crossed his eyes briefly and giggled, "Ya know?"

"Here's what's been happening in a nutshell," Prez said to Kekoa. "The Republic of Hawaii's government seems to have changed from Parliamentary to Kingdom. How the King manages that mess is still up in the air. What the Pacific Rim Division has been doing is mopping up the mess left behind by corrupt CPS and orphanages that were born from corruption in our Government. Kids have been coming to us directly and I expect that will continue. We haven't done a real rescue, just picking up kids here and there."

Prez paused and smiled at Cory saying, "Patriarch Short made us an official division of Clan Short only about an hour or so ago. In the next day, I expect business to increase. While I very much need you and your detachment, my team and myself need to learn the ropes by participating in rescues whenever is reasonable. I do intend to turn over more dangerous rescues to your troops; when exactly that might happen is only subject to circumstances. Personally, I'd be happy if there was never a need for violent rescues of any sort, but we all know that's a dream." After another brief pause, Prez asked, "Are there any questions, Kekoa?"

Kekoa thought for a few moments, then said, "Just let me reword what you've said to make sure we're on the same page." Prez nodded agreement and Kekoa said, "You'd like to have your team continue picking up kids when risk is low. When the risk is higher, you'd like to have your team still involved, but with divisions of the detachment. Highest risk rescues would depend entirely upon the Pacific Rim detachment. Have I misunderstood anything?"

"No, that's pretty much it," Prez smiled. "Are there any issues?"

"Yes," Kekoa said. "Mixing civilians with trained military is fundamentally dangerous."

Prez nodded, "That's understood. Would there be less danger if my team and our assigned UNIT security personnel hung back until cleared by you or your assigned team leaders?"

"Your safety and ours would both be more certain," Kekoa agreed.

Prez smiled, "Then that's what we'll do."

Keith softly reminded, "It's almost time for school, Prez."

Prez turned to Dee and Richie asking, "You guys stay with Auntie Lanna for a few hours while daddy and me go to school, okay?" Both boys nodded and Prez kissed their foreheads.

Keith also kissed Dee and Richie, then said, "Make friends with Dewi. He needs us all and every friend counts."

"We will, daddy," Dee assured.

"You know me and Prez miss you guys every time we're apart?" Keith dramatically frowned.

Dee and Richie nodded and replied, "We miss you too."

Corey and Drew came over with Geoff. Drew said, "We're all gonna hang together by the pool and rec center."

A few tables away, John, Nathan, Bruce and Dewi stood. Prez and Keith both heard John in their minds, but it was very quiet. 'It's kewl, bros. We're gonna hang together with the kids.'

Prez told Drew, "We'll be gone about an hour and a half," then turned to Cory and Sean Short. "Are you guys ready?" With nods from the Short boys, Prez led the way out of the CIC dining room. Once everyone was gathered and the eight personal security guards were in position with their weapons hidden, Prez tapped his sub-vocal. "Daileass?"

"Ready for band class now, Prez?" Daileass responded.

"Yep, to James Campbell High School, outside the main entrance please."

In a blink, the group was standing outside of the school. Half of the security team led the way inside and Keith explained, "Our mothers have called the board of education. As far as we know, there's no problem."

Once in the school's main office, Prez, Keith, Mike and Derrick went to the counter and identified themselves. Mrs. Winchester stepped away from the counter briefly and returned with four large sealed envelopes, handing one to each of the four boys. "What are these?" Mike asked.

"Your transcripts," Mrs. Winchester answered. "We were told that you are changing schools."

"Oh!" Mike said, "Yeah, that's true."

Prez offered, "We just didn't expect them so quickly."

Mrs. Winchester then did a quick head count and said, "There are four additional boys here?"

"Yes, ma'am. They're visiting friends and Clan Short dignitaries," Keith said, and turned to point each out. "Patriarch Cory Short, Sean Short, Adam Short and JJ Richardson."

"We ain't no dignitaries," Sean softly giggled.

"Shush!" Cory grinned.

"You'll all need hall passes," Mrs. Winchester smiled. She took a pad of paper out then began scribbling out the passes. She only asked for names as she worked and seemed to be completely indifferent about the group of sixteen boys. Once she was finished signing and distributing the hall passes, Mrs. Winchester warned, "Go directly to your class, boys. Only lavatory visits, no wandering around."

All the boys assured they would not stray and exited the office. They softly chattered about the school as they walked down the halls. Everyone made quick pit stops at the boys room near the destination classroom. Since there were six urinals and six commodes, four boys had to wait their turn. A loud gaseous explosion erupted from one of the commodes. Amongst the snickering from the Rimmers, Adam, JJ and Sean shouted, "Jeez Cory!"

"What?" Cory incredulously giggled. "It was good pizza! It was either here or in the classroom."

"Get it out of your system here!" Sean laughed.

Adam chuckled, "Can't take you anywhere!"

While washing his hands, Prez grinned, "Now we know for sure what that garlic bread threat was about!"

"It worked, though, didn't it?" Cory giggled.

When everyone finished, they went to the classroom at the end of the hall. The security team noticed there were windows and decided four would stand guard alongside the mostly glass wall. The bell rang and about twenty-five kids exited the classroom, then the Clan Short group entered.

By this time, Carmella, Kokaku, Richie and Dee were telling Dewi about the fun they had Friday with Joel's Sehlat, I-Cheya. Dewi didn't believe them, so the five little one's went to Bruce and John for confirmation. Dewi still believed the story was a prank. John figured now was as good a time as any to practice his N-Gen skills, especially since his parents and eldest brothers weren't around. Lanna Seaver, Anna Seibert and Laura Gibbons watched awestruck as Richie was telekinetically lifted and tossed into the pool. Then it was Dewi's turn to go for a dunk. Soon Beau and Jason were also having fun with the kids, lifting them higher and higher, then letting them drop into the pool.

Mrs. Diaz watched wide-eyed as the four Core Rimmers, four Orlando Clan and eight security boys entered the classroom. "Hi, Mrs. Diaz," the four Core Rimmers chorused.

Mrs. Diaz grinned, "I saw your performances on television Friday night."

"It was completely unexpected," Keith smiled.

"Are you rich and famous now?" Mrs. Diaz joked.

"Not exactly!" Derrick snickered.

After getting a nod of approval from Cory, Prez explained, "We're now part of Clan Short, Mrs. Diaz," and then began introducing everyone.

Other band members began filing in the room as Mrs. Diaz told Cory Short, "While I'm very glad the injustices were resolved, I'm also quite embarrassed that it happened here."

"Don't be embarrassed," Cory calmly said, "It's everywhere, Hawaii is still part of our planet."

"Thank you," Mrs. Diaz said. She then went into high school teacher mode, saying, "Please be seated and remain quiet during class."

"Can we applaud at the end of songs?" Cory cutely smiled.

Mrs. Diaz nodded and explained, "We've got concerts every day this week, beginning tomorrow morning. There's a lot to cover, so please, don't get too carried away." Each of the Clan Short Orlando boys nodded, then took seats. While the jazz band continued preparing for class, Mrs. Diaz moved to the front of the ensemble and shuffled through piles of sheet music. She looked at the band. Everyone soon stopped chattering and warming up. "Let's begin with One O'Clock Jump," Mrs. Diaz instructed. Everyone began digging through their sheet music.

The band was set up in a small semi-circle. Seated on the left side were four trombone players, and standing behind them were four trumpet players. Keith, Derrick, Prez and Mike made up the rhythm section and were in the center. On the right side were four clarinet players, and behind them were four saxophone players. One O'Clock Jump began with a short rhythm section introduction, followed by clarinet, trumpet and saxophone solos and then the full band.

While the Orlando Clan boys clapped, Mrs. Diaz called out, "In The Mood next, please." More sheet music shuffled, then Mrs. Diaz called out the tempo and the band began playing.

Harlem Nocturne was the next tune played, followed by St. Thomas, both songs featuring the lead tenor saxophonist. The next song Mrs. Diaz called out was the Miles Davis classic Blue In Green. It was a slow, moody blues tune that almost put the Orlando Clan boys to sleep. "Sing, Sing, Sing next, please," Mrs. Diaz instructed. The visiting Clan boys could finally hear a tune that featured Derrick on drums, and they bounced in their chairs as Derrick pounded away at the tom-toms.

Take the 'A' Train featured Keith on piano at first, but soon the harmonized brass and reeds background took over the melody. For Maynard Ferguson's Gonna Fly Now, Keith moved to the synthesizer, Prez picked up the electric bass and Mike moved to electric guitar. Now the Orlando Clan boys could really hear Mike playing as a fundamental part of the song. Without his rhythm guitar and solo section, the song simply wouldn't sound correct.

"Obviously you people need an audience," Mrs. Diaz teased. While the band members all nodded, smiled or giggled, she said, "Well done. Our concerts are during third and fourth periods tomorrow through Friday." The bell rang before she finished. While everyone gathered their sheet music and prepared to leave, Mrs. Diaz loudly said, "Don't forget there are two concerts Saturday; from two in the afternoon until three-thirty and from eight in the evening until nine-thirty." Noticing that Keith, Prez, Mike and Derrick weren't packing up, she asked, "Are you boys staying for seventh period?"

"We almost always do," Mike replied.

Prez explained, "Our friends are from the United States and probably won't make any of our concerts."

"We're not so sure about that," Cory smiled. "If we get the chance, you might have a good part of Orlando Clan here Saturday."

Sean shrugged, "We'll have to see how things go."

As many of the band members walked out of the classroom, Timmy and Ricky raced in, William and Duke hot on their heels. "DAADDDDDYYY! POPPPAAAA! You gotta see the art classes that they gots in here! They got chalk an' clay an' paints an' pencils an' BIG drawin' paper! The teacher's real nice too! He let us make prezzies for you while his class was drawin' pictures of William an' Duke! They's superstar birds now!"

Squark! Duke and William said in confirmation.

Mike and Derrick couldn't help but chuckle at the enthusiastic entrance of the two boys. Keith and Prez were more concerned, however. Each of the boys were less than half the size of the majority of the student body. From his piano bench, Keith turned to Cory and asked, "Umm... is it okay for Timmy and Ricky to be unescorted?"

Cory shrugged. "I'm more worried about anyone who screws with them. Timmy's got more kills during the Montana crap than some of the professionals that were fighting on our side."

Keith's jaw dropped. Mrs. Diaz was also stunned, partially at the revelation about Timmy and partly because of the two large eagles now in her classroom. Glaring at the adorable little boy, Prez stammered, "Timmy? No way!"

Timmy giggled and raised his left arm. Around his wrist appeared a small creature. "It's a Fuzzymore!" he grinned, as if that would explain it all.

"Three confirmed... and I'm not asking how many unconfirmed or shared responsibility," Sean stated seriously. "He is officially the deadliest six-year-old on Earth."

Cory nodded, "And also the most protective."

"Yep!" Timmy added with a serious, almost menacing tone. "NOBODY messes with my Daddy or Poppa."

Ricky giggled as he showed off his 'Fuzzymore' as well.

Cory added, "And he's got a Minion-In-Training!"

Prez turned to Keith, but Keith's head was sagging against the piano, softly chuckling because William and Duke had taken keen interest in Mrs. Diaz. The poor woman was now backed into the corner behind her desk. "Just a few quick questions," Prez offered. "What is a fuzzymore?"

Cory smiled. "I'll explain more when we are in a more secure location. Just think of a biological based weapon tied to the host's nervous system; in their case a sentient weapon." Derrick stood, then went to where William and Duke were perched on Mrs. Diaz' desk. The two eagles only rubbed their beaks against Derrick's arm and hand, but didn't take the hint.

Prez nodded understandingly saying, "That works for me. Question two; would someone please help Mrs. Diaz before she climbs the wall or wets herself?" But before anyone could reply or move, one of the air conditioning vents fell from the ceiling and landed on the floor with a loud metallic rattle and two ferrets attached.

"Spike! Xander!" Mike hollered. "What the hell are you doing here?"

"Making sure Shiny Daddy is safe!" Spike smiled.

From the ceiling, peering down from the duct, Willow shook her head and smiled, "Weez warned them. They're too heavy to sit on the vent."

Timmy looked up at the vent. "Hey Willow! Thanks for the shins for us to put on the prezzies!"

Willow grinned. "You're welcome, Timmy! Their old owner won't need them where she's going. She thought locking the door would hide what she was doing."

Mike put his guitar down and went over to his ferret boys then reached up and sweetly said, "Come on down here, pretty girls." Willow climbed down first and Mike set her on the floor. Then Mike helped Faith down and set her on the floor.

Timmy and Ricky went over to where William and Duke were perched on the desk. They bent over and the two birds climbed on their respective boy's shoulder. Timmy looked sweetly up at Mrs. Diaz and said, "You're really nice! They just want to say hi to you; they's not wild eagles, they's Spirit Eagles, and they both says you are a good person an' they likes you."

Mrs. Diaz whimpered, then sat on her chair weakly muttering, "Uh... thanks."

"Breathe slow and deep," Derrick softly instructed.

Trying not to laugh, but failing miserably, Prez roared. Keith tapped his sub-vocal. "Daileass?"

"Hi Keith," Daileass replied, "Ready to transport back home?"

"Not quite yet," Keith answered. "Do us a favor, dude; contact Doctor Janet. Have her fill a Valium prescription for Mrs. Diaz. She's about one hundred and thirty pounds. Transport it to her desk ASAP."

"Got it," Daileass giggled. "Guess band class wasn't so good?"

"Band class was fine," Keith snickered. "Immediately afterwards, things went slightly askew."

Slapping his hands on top of his amplifier, Prez bellowed, "Just slightly askew!"

Mike sat on a chair near Cory, Sean, Adam and JJ. Faith and Willow climbed up onto Mike's shoulders. Spike and Xander sat on Mike's lap. Mike began sharing the story of how he and Derrick adopted the Scooby Gang, two humans and one android before they had dinner Saturday night.

A small bottle appeared on Mrs. Diaz' desk. Derrick picked it up and read aloud, "Take one tablet at bedtime. Get at least eight hours sleep. Do not drive or operate machinery."

"Who's an android?" Keith loudly wondered.

Mike grinned and answered, "Reyes. Nathan told us, Saturday."

Adam shook his head and joked, "I don't know what you guys are complaining about! This has been a quiet day; just wait until things really get weird!"

"You should have been in Orlando on Thursday," Cory giggled.

"Why? What happened?" Prez heaved curiously.

"Joel's birthday," Sean giggled.

"How was that so bad?" Keith wondered.

"Well," Sean giggled, "lessee... he gets married, finds his dad, Captain Spock, who then becomes our dad, and gets to be an admiral. Then Joel gets the Star Cross, then Clan Short is destroyed as a Clan, then we become a Family, then Cory is given a seat on the Vulcan High Council, then..."

"ENOUGH!" Prez yelled, laughing so hard his ribs hurt. "You're KILLING ME!"

Their comm-badges went off. "Hey, guys," Seth laughed across them. "Jude wants to know if he's chopped liver or something."

"Oh, that's right!" Cory giggled, "The day before, Elf kidnapped Jude to be his brother, they share a birthday, and together they saved the bloody Excelsior! Amongst other things..." he trailed off with a giggle.

"Unca Derrie? When do we get to watch ya beatin' your skins?" Timmy asked with puppy-dog eyes. Derrick quickly turned around and smiled at Timmy, uncertain if the boy was asking about drumming.

Wheezing and absolutely hysterical, Prez sat on the floor; his face becoming redder than his hair.

As Mrs. Diaz watched, totally numbed by the events around her, William flew over to the water fountain in the room with a paper cup in his beak. With Duke's assistance, the cup was filled. Carefully, William carried the cup over to Mrs. Diaz, who took it with shaky hands.

Keith snorted, then got up to help Prez, saying, "Daileass, we've scared the straights enough. Prepare to transport all of us back, outside our base auditorium please." Once Prez was leaning against him and everyone was standing, Keith said, "Now's a good time, Daileass."

"Leave the teacher here, Micro-brain!" Corey quickly interjected.

In a heartbeat, the classroom was empty except for Mrs. Diaz; who looked around and wondered if she had a waking dream. She noticed the bottle of Valium and stuffed it in her purse, then prepared to leave for the day.

Outside the auditorium, everyone grinned at one another. "Well, that wasn't really so bad," Keith giggled.

Wiping sweat from his forehead, Prez caught his breath and sniggered, "Daileass, patch me to all the speakers on the base."

Daileass replied, "You're set, Prez."

Prez called, "Attention all Rimmers. Jam time in the auditorium. Drew and Corey, we'll need you, so bring our kids. Anyone else not occupied is welcome to attend. That is all."

Prez's comm-badge chirped and Drew's voice said, "Hey, Prez. You guys weren't even gone an hour. What happened?"

"Ya had to be there," Prez giggled.

Keith led the way inside the dimly lit auditorium lobby. Since the Rimmers' CIC was the same design as the one in Orlando, Cory and Sean immediately went to the circuit breakers, then began turning on lights and equipment.

Smiling down at Spike and Xander, Mike wondered, "Why did you guys think we wouldn't be safe and join us?"

Spike stammered, "Because weez sleeps with you and... and... weez eat with you and..."

Xander finished, "You's treats us like human kids and you's loves us and weez loves you too!"

"UNIT security deals with immediate threats," Willow smiled.

Faith proudly continued, "Weez can learn about future threats while we're hiding."

Spike nodded, "A boy and girl don't like our Shiny Daddies."

"They says you're stuck-up showoffs," Willow frowned.

Derrick chuckled, "Oh really?"

All four ferrets nodded and Xander grinned, "They won't say that no more."

Keith groaned, "Oh shit."

Mike innocently asked, "What did you guys do?"

"Girl's locked in janitor's closet," Faith giggled.

Willow added, "Knob lock is jammed too!"

Spike nodded and grinned, "Boy's shiny horn is 'missing'."

"He'll never find it!" Xander playfully teased.

Derrick hummed thoughtfully and asked, "Was it a reverse 'S' shaped horn?"

All four ferrets shook their heads and in unison said, "A little horn," then held their hands up like they were playing imaginary trumpets.

Prez giggled, "Had to be Bobby."

"Bobby and Sheryl!" Keith snickered. "Birds of a feather." William and Duke squawked unhappily. Keith said, "Sorry, it's just an expression. I really like birds; lots have pretty songs and beautiful plumage." William flew over to Keith and landed on his shoulder. Keith only ducked his head slightly to accommodate the eagle's large wing-span.

Cory said, "All set, guys," and closed the circuit breaker panel door.

Holding the door into the auditorium open, Derrick scowled, "They say we're stuck-up? They outta know!"

Keith led the way into the auditorium agreeing; "They both think they're good enough to play first chair and solos. In reality, if there's a wrong note to be played, they've done it."

Sean followed and asked, "Is that where the nasty honk came from during the Rocky theme song?"

Prez nodded and explained, "Maynard Ferguson was definitely one of the best trumpet players ever. Bobby's delusional if he thinks he could ever match that man's range."

Beginning the walk into the auditorium and down towards the stage, Mike chuckled, "Good job, guys!" All four ferrets smiled proudly. Willow and Faith hugged Mike's head. "Hey Daileass," Mike called, "Transport my Les Paul and the D-45 to our stage, dude." A moment later, both guitars were in their cases and on the stage. "Thanks, dude," Mike politely said.

"Any time, Scooby Daddy," Daileass giggled. Mike growled, which only caused Daileass to giggle longer.

Kaleo opened the door allowing Dee, Dewi, Richie, Reyes, Dillon and Jonah to race down the aisle. John was next in line with Bruce, Carmella and Kokaku following close behind. William launched himself from Keith's shoulder to soar around the large auditorium's ceiling and was soon joined by Duke.

Dee jumped up into Prez's arms while Richie and Dewi hurried into Keith's open arms. After planting kisses on the boys' cheeks,

Keith wondered, "Where's Uncle Drew and Uncle Corey?"

"Headin' upstairs with Geoff," Richie smiled.

Timmy let go of Cory and went to Mike. "Can I play too, Unca Mike?" Timmy asked.

"Do you play, Timmy?"

Timmy rapidly nodded and sweetly smiled, "I likes guitar most."

"You're way too small to be able to play my guitars," Mike recognized. "Do you have your own gear?"

"Daileass!" Timmy excitedly hollered. "Get my guitar an' amp on stage too!" A second later, a child-sized Squier Strat on its stand and a Fender Hot Rod Deluxe amp appeared on stage.

"Pretty nice," Mike encouraged. "Daileass, get a Shure SM57 microphone for Timmy's amp and let Drew know what channel it's connected to." That was all Timmy needed to hear. He raced to the stage and up the stairs with Ricky close behind. Soon the two boys were pushing the heavy amp into position. Then they crawled underneath the backstage curtains, giggling loudly while searching for a power outlet. Prez, Keith and Derrick went on stage with their kids.

Cory went to Mike and softly said, "Timmy's pretty good. He learns everything by ear."

Mike nodded, "That's really good for his age. So we know how to talk turkey with him, does he know anything like key signatures or names of notes?"

"Pro'bly not," Cory grinned.

"Would you like him to learn?" Mike asked, and then leaned down so Willow and Faith could climb into a seat.

"Whatever he seems interested in is kewl with me," Cory answered.

Sean added, "If he gets that dazed and confused look then starts blinking fast, you've lost him."

"Permanently?" Mike worried.

Sean shook his head, "Nah, just back down the ladder a few rungs 'til you get the spark back."

"Tell ya what," Mike began, "we'll start jammin' the blues and let him play by ear for a while. I'll watch him and he can watch me."

"That'll make him really happy!" Cory giggled.

"Sweet!" Mike chirped, and then went to join the others on stage. Mike filled in his band mates on the situation with Timmy, but then realized the two younger boys were still behind the curtains giggling insanely. Mike went to the curtains and loudly asked, "Hey you two, did you get lost finding the outlets?"

"Jus playin' with our plugs!" Timmy howled.

Mike's eyes nearly shot out their sockets. "We're gettin' our act together and there's an audience waiting," Mike grinned, and then went to get the Les Paul. After powering up his own amps, Mike flipped the power switch on Timmy's amp and the little red lamp lit. Snickering at the little devils behind the curtains, Mike began silently running scales and warming up.

Prez came over wearing his bass and wondered, "Where's Timmy?"

Mike nodded backstage, then giggled, "Playin' with Ricky."

Seeing the light, Prez smiled, "Remember when the four of us used to do stuff like that?"

"I'll never ever forget it, bro," Mike truthfully replied.

"Now that we're fathers, I guess we're too old," Prez smirked.

"Nuh uh!" Mike grunted, and then teased, "Speak for yourself, Director O'Brian!"

Prez bellowed laughing, then moved closer to Mike and whispered, "Keith kept telling me to direct him yesterday."

"Ooo! Direct me! There, like that, yeah!" Mike softly chortled. Prez cracked up.

"Hey you two!" Derrick and Keith hollered.

"We're ready already!" Mike loudly laughed, and then announced, "Hoochie Coochie Man."

Derrick counted out the slow blues shuffle and together the band began playing.

Derrick sang: Gypsy woman told my mother 'fore I was born

Prez sang: You got a boy-child coming, gonna be a son of a gun

Mike sang: Gonna make pretty womens jump and shout

Keith sang: And then the world wanna know what this all about

Kaleo strutted up on stage and really dug into the groove, causing a lot of kids in the audience to hoot and holler. The audience participation only served to encourage Kaleo's dirty dancing. All four band members sang the chorus and their kids started dancing on stage.

But you know I'm here

Everybody knows I'm here

Well, I'm the hoochie coochie man

Everybody knows I'm here

Timmy and Ricky crawled out from behind the curtain. Timmy went directly to his guitar and soon played along. Kaleo began lifting his shirt then lowering it and then lifting it higher before shyly pulling it down again.

Keith sang: I got the black cat bone and I got a mojo tooth

Derrick sang: I got the John the Conqueror Root, gonna mess with you

Prez sang: I'm gonna make you girls lead me by my hand

Mike sang: And then the world will know the hoochie coochie man

All five boys sang the chorus watching the kids dance around and the audience getting more rambunctious. The six landscapers, three adult mothers, two doctors and Mr. T were laughing hysterically at the kids enjoying themselves. In little more than two days, the large group had bonded.

But you know I'm here

Everybody knows I'm here

Well, I'm the hoochie coochie man

Everybody knows I'm here

By this point Kaleo was shirtless and only holding his boardies up with one hand while he tried to entice Tory on stage. Timmy took the first twelve bar solo and did a good job. Then Mike knelt down so Timmy could see and took the next twelve bars, and finally Keith played the final twelve bar solo.

Mike sang: On the seventh hour, on the seventh day

Keith sang: On the seventh month, seven doctors say

Derrick sang: "He was born for good luck, that you'll see"

Prez sang: I got seven hundred dollars; don't you mess with me!

Only three rows back sat Aki and Hajime, Prez noticed. The two newest Rimmers seemed very happy and were sitting amongst other twelve year old boys, Brice, Chiba and Gregory.

All five boys on stage sang the final chorus.

But you know I'm here

Everybody knows I'm here

Well, I'm the hoochie coochie man

Everybody knows I'm here

The song ended to roars of applause and approval. In the front row, the Scooby Gang began chanting; "Shiny Daddy! Platinum Habits!" over and over again.

"That was soooo much fun!" Timmy screamed.

Prez went to Kaleo and smiled, "I can hardly believe you were doin' a strip tease!"

Tying his boardies, Kaleo giggled, "It was mostly for Tory." He then became more serious and softly said, "Ya know, three days ago, Joel rescued me from that orphanage and fat fucker. I thought I'd never want to dance or have sex again. Consensual sex is way different and lots more fun. It's a whole new world for me now. A lot of us feel pretty much the same way, and it's all because of you guys."

"We've not done much," Prez admitted, "We're only giving you guys the chance to be yourselves."

Kaleo smirked, "Don't sell yourself short. A bunch of the tweens were asking us about the dorms. Don't be surprised if you have a much smaller nest tonight."

From the auditorium floor near the edge of the stage, Tory called, "Kaleo?"

Kaleo turned around to find Tory beckoning him with his index finger. Briefly turning back to Prez and bouncing his eyebrows, Kaleo devilishly grinned, "See ya later."

Prez cracked up, but noticed Mike on his knees again, silently showing Timmy a guitar part. Keith came over and said, "Derrick wants a workout, baby."

"Which tune?" Prez asked.

"Moby Dick" Keith answered, and then added, "That'll keep Timmy involved and make Derrick happy. Mike and I get to take a break and check out how it sounds around the auditorium." Prez nodded and Keith landed a deep kiss. The kids on stage and in the audience began cheering again, causing Keith and Prez to giggle into their kiss and hold it longer. When Keith stepped back, he waved at the audience, then led most of the kids off stage, leaving only Reyes and Timmy behind. When Timmy was ready, Mike walked off stage too. Then Timmy, Prez and Derrick started playing the song. After the one minute introduction, Timmy and Prez put their instruments down and waited off to stage left. Derrick pulled out all the tricks in his vast repertoire for about ten minutes. Reyes intently watched his dad using first the sticks, then his hands to modify tones of the drums. Sweating under the stage lights, Derrick pulled his shirt off while keeping the beat with the bass drum and hi-hat, wiped his brow, then waved Timmy and Prez back to finish the song.

During the applause, Prez congratulated Timmy, then introduced him to the audience. Noticing Keith and Mike returning, Prez asked, "Let us practice together as a band for a little while, please, Timmy?"

Timmy happily nodded, "Sure!"

"We'll call you back up for another song or two later," Prez said. "Think of any songs you'd like to play."

Noticing that Derrick was shirtless and obviously very warm, Corey dimmed the audience lights a little, then also dimmed some of the stage lights.

Platinum Habits began rehearsing. The first song was Don't Stop Believin' with Keith singing lead vocals. Before playing the second song, Keith played a chord on the keys and all four boys sang it in harmony. Keith then said, "All together now, nice and strong." Derrick counted out the tempo and the boys simultaneously sang "It's In The Way That You Use It, It comes and it goes. It's in the way that you use it, Boy don't you know. And if you lie you will lose it, Feelings will show. So don't you ever abuse it, Don't let it go." After the opening chorus, Mike sang lead vocals during the verses, then all four joined together again for the chorus'.

The next song began with a single organ tone, then Prez and Derrick joined and finally Mike began playing his Stratocaster for Stone Cold. Keith sang lead vocals with Derrick backing him up and Prez and Mike singing harmony vocals. Something's Missing was the next song played, with Mike singing lead vocals. Derrick and Mike began playing Happy Together then Prez and Keith joined in, with Prez singing lead vocals.

Everyone immediately recognized the opening electric piano chords to the Queen classic, You're My Best Friend. Keith sang lead vocals and the band harmonized beautifully. The next song, What You Wish For, also required good harmonies but this time Derrick sang lead vocals. Stone In Love was the next song played, with Keith singing lead vocals once again.

Prez called Timmy back up on stage.

As he hurried up the stairs, Mike asked, "What song did you decide on?"

"In The Evening," Timmy replied.

"Ooo," Mike groaned, "That's got a lot of studio trickery in it."

"I can play it!" Timmy proudly insisted.

"Let's see what we can do," Mike said. He then stepped up to a microphone and asked, "Drew, have ya got a digital flanger up there in your rack?"

Through the stage monitors, Drew hummed then said, "Yep, we got a good one too. What's the tune?"

"Zeppelin's In The Evening," Mike answered.

"Damn!" Keith softly grumbled.

"What's the problem, babe?" Prez wondered.

"I've never tried playing that keyboard part once," Keith responded. "I've sung it dozens of times with the CD, but I'll have to start from scratch."

Mike said, "Come on, Timmy, let's get Keith up to snuff," then started across the stage with Timmy in tow.

"Keith can play this easy!" Timmy said.

Mike nodded, "I'm sure he can too. We just gotta teach him the changes real quick."

Derrick tapped his sub-vocal and called, "Daileass, I need timpani, dude; at least one, preferably two. Put them to my left side, near the hi-hat. While we're at it, get me two gongs; an eighteen inch and a thirty-six inch. Put them behind me, within reach, but leave me a path on my right to get out of here. I'll also need microphones for each hooked up to the PA system, so contact Drew and get me whatever he recommends."

"On the way, Derrick," Daileass replied, and then set about completing the task assigned.

While Timmy and the band pulled together the song, out in the audience, about twelve rows back, to the far left of the center seating, an intense but quiet conversation ensued. "Go on up there and introduce yourself," Judy Faris softly insisted.

"Mom, please!" Troy desperately whispered.

Judy sighed, then leaned closer to her son, saying, "They don't know you or anything about you. They're just a group of caring boys that happen to be musicians, just like you."

"They're not like me," Troy nervously croaked. "They're better than me..."

"Oh, I don't know about that," Judy interrupted. "You really need to be more confident and forthright. It's not like you could ever feign arrogance. They're so sweet and well behaved, so much like you. They're even gay..."

"Mom!" Troy groaned and shrunk down in his seat. If only the auditorium lights were completely dimmed, Troy wished, then no one would see the blond highlights in his brown hair or the blush of his fair complexion, fresh from the chilly New Jersey autumn.

"You've really got to get out of your shell," Judy encouraged. "I love you. Your father couldn't cope and caused you to feel out of place. I won't have his legacy hold you back. He's gone now, Troy, no longer a problem for either of us. In my eyes, he failed both of us.

"You're practically the same age, all musicians, all homosexual." Judy stopped there before her son slid off the seat and crawled along the floor under the auditorium seating. "Please, Troy," Judy begged, "allow yourself the chance to be the musician you want to be. You can help them and they can help you too. One success will lead to so many more successes, if you'll only allow it to happen."

"Okay!" Troy impulsively agreed, simply to get his mom off her soapbox. "When they're done, I'll introduce myself." Thankfully, Derrick began hitting the two timpani that had magically appeared on stage. Through the stage monitors, Troy could barely hear another boy's voice instructing Derrick to hit his bass drum too so he could mix the levels. Looking around, Troy could only assume that the voice was coming from a lit booth way up high above the balcony and behind him. The little red-haired boy, Timmy, was with the other band members gathered around the piano rehearsing the sections of the upcoming song.

"Sit up," Judy smiled, "you're going to hurt your neck looking around from so low."

Troy pushed himself up and watched the goings on carefully. Derrick was a very good drummer, but more interesting were the other three older boys on stage. Who was cuter, Troy wondered; the brunette keyboard player or the lighter brown-haired guitarist, or was it the red-haired bass player? His mom had earlier said the red-haired boy was the new Director of this Clan Short Division. The guitarist seemed stockier, but the keyboard player and bassist had nice long legs. The keyboard player had the best voice, in Troy's opinion, but the other three could sing very well too. The guitarist had a nice ass, but the bass player had an incredible bubble butt. If only the keyboard player wasn't sitting at the piano. Troy's eyes rolled and he criticized himself for even thinking of them that way. Now he had a boner that would hopefully deflate before he had to stand and go meet them face-to-face.

A number of rows forward, three boys began giggling and bouncing against each other. All three, the two strawberry blonds and one black-haired boy, turned and smiled at Troy. As Troy attempted to convince himself they weren't really looking at him, the two red-heads stood and hurried up to the stage. The black haired boy walked back and never lost eye contact with Troy.

Squatting down in the aisle beside Troy, the black haired boy devilishly grinned, "I'm Beau, how's it hangin?"

Troy blushed at the question, but ignored it and smiled, "I'm Troy. Nice to meet ya, Beau."

"You wanna play on stage with the band?" Beau knowingly asked.

Judy smiled, "He most certainly does!"

Troy glared at his mom, then turned again to Beau, shrugging and balking, "Now's probably not the best time. I haven't even met them yet."

"You will real soon," Beau giggled.

Up on stage, everyone around the piano suddenly cracked up laughing. Prez loudly asked, "What the hell's going on lately? Why am I suddenly the object of everyone's affection?" In the audience, Cory, Sean, Adam and JJ snickered evilly.

Mike howled, "Direct me! Ple-e-ease direct me soon!" and Prez shoved him. Many more in the audience began giggling.

Jacob and Jamie both leaned back, plainly looking at Prez' ass and giggled, "It is" "a really" "cute butt!"

"Oh no," Troy groaned and again slid down into his seat.

Amidst much laughing and teasing, Keith stood and joked, "I've been saying the very same thing for two years! I gotta meet this dude!"

"Keith?" Prez softly pleaded, "Don't tease or scare him, babe, please?"

"You know I won't," Keith assured, and then paused to add, "He knows this song, according to the double J's. He'll play keys, I'll sing and we're ready to jam."

Beau stood and Troy found himself inexplicably rising in his seat, then standing. "Come on, Troy," Beau smiled. "It's totally kewl. You wanna meet them and they wanna meet you too sooo... what's the problem?"

Not understanding how anyone could've possibly known his thoughts, Troy nervously stammered, "I... they... how... Oh God!"

"Hey, those two boys on stage I was sitting with are both my boyfriends," Beau explained. "It really is kewl." Beau then leaned in close and whispered, "Once they get a look at you, I'll tell you what they really thought."

"Oh Jeez!" Troy giggled. He then inhaled deeply, prepared himself to face the music, as the saying goes, and started to walk down the aisle.

Timmy, Jacob and Jamie hung back by the grand piano and Derrick remained seated on his drum throne, while Keith, Mike and Prez went over to the stage stairs and watched Troy approach with Beau. "They like what they see," Beau softly giggled. "Now they're just hoping you can really play the song." Still blushing slightly, Troy climbed the stairs.

Keith was the first to offer his hand to Troy, saying, "Hey dude, you ready to jam?"

Shaking Keith's hand and then knocking knuckles, Troy admitted, "Zeppelin's one of my favorite bands."

"Finally, a keyboard player with taste!" Mike teased as he knocked knuckles with Troy.

Keith complained to Mike, "I just don't know all the changes, bitch! How about we play some Chick Corea next, so I can watch you squirm?"

"No problem, bro," Mike giggled. "I can shred like Di Meola."

"In key?" Keith smirked. Mike playfully cranked up the middle finger of his right hand.

"You guys are really good musicians," Troy smiled at the playful banter, then shook hands with Prez.

Pointing at the stack of electronic keyboards, Prez invited Troy to "Show us your chops, dude."

Giggling at the innuendo, Troy moved behind the keys and adjusted a few settings, then began playing the main themes. Six rows back, Sean was mesmerized by the new boy now on stage. Timmy and Mike both joined in for a few short bars. Prez chirped, "Sweet!"

Keith nodded and instructed, "You play the keys, Troy, and I'll sing, kewl?"

"No problem, Keith," Troy replied. Soon all the boys had moved into position.

Derrick gave one final instruction, "Drew, add a fairly fast flanger to the timpani, bro."

A few seconds later, Drew said over the stage monitors, "Give it a try."

Derrick played a drum roll and said, "Just a little deeper flange," and continued playing. When it was correct, Derrick said, "Right there, that's good, Drew."

Mike turned around and teased, "So good, a little deeper, right there, like that, yeah!"

"You're very bad," Derrick smirked. "Go to my room immediately."

"Ah jeez," Keith groaned.

Shaking his head sadly, Prez playfully reminded, "We used to get randy after jammin'. Now it's before, during and after!"

Mike snickered, "It started Friday night. Blame Joel."

Derrick shook his head and playfully disagreed, "Bet ya it was the Mikyvis trio."

Keith turned to Troy and smiled, "Lead the way, dude." After about a minute's worth of synthesizer chord swells and Derrick's timpani, Keith held the microphone and sang, "In the e-e-e-e-vening," then Derrick tapped the tempo with his sticks and the whole band joined in.

"When the day is done

I'm looking for a woman, but the girl don't come

So don't let her, Play you for a fool

She don't show no pity baby, ya know she don't make no rules

"Oh, oh, I need your love, I need your love

Oh, I need your love, I just got to have

"So don't you let her, Oh, get under your skin

It's only bad luck and trouble, oh, From the day that you begin

I hear you crying in the darkness, Don't ask nobody's help

Oh, Ain't no pockets full of mercy baby, Cause you can only blame yourself

"Oh, I need your love, Oh, oh, I need your love

Ooo yeah, I need your love, I just got to have

"Oh it's simple, All the pain that you go through

You can turn away from fortune, fortune, fortune, Cause that's all that's left to you

Hey, it's lonely at the bottom, man, it's dizzy at the top

But if you're standing in the middle, Ain't no way you're gonna stop

"Oh, I need your love, Oh, oh, I need your love

Oh, oh, I need your love, I just got to have."

With Derrick's timpani drum accents, Timmy stepped forward and played the first guitar solo while Mike played the rhythm guitar, then the two switched off. Moving forward, Mike played the second solo section and Timmy stepped back, playing the rhythm guitar. Keith brought the band back to the main theme singing, "Oh whatever,

"That your days may bring

No use hiding in a corner, Cause that won't change a thing

If you're dancing in the doldrums, One day soon, it's got to stop, it's got to stop

When you're the master of the off-chance, When you don't expect a lot

"Oh, oh, I need your love, Oh, oh, I need your love

Oh yeah, I need your love, I just got to have, I just got have Mike and Timmy went back and forth playing with and against each other during the ending solos while Keith improvised vocals here and there. The song ended with sharp sudden chords and an explosion of timpani, tom-toms and bass drum. Most of the audience stood, clapped and cheered loudly, especially Judy Faris and the Orlando Clan kids. Tilting his head uncertainly, Horacio grinned at Sean's enthusiasm. Completely oblivious, Sean clapped longer and louder.

Mike and Prez turned off their amplifiers as did Timmy. Picking up his shirt, Derrick came out from behind his drums and Reyes hugged him firmly. Derrick wrapped an arm around Reyes and went to meet Troy, where Keith was already standing and talking. Soon all the band members were standing around Troy and learning that he could also play recorder, clarinet, tenor saxophone, baritone saxophone, harmonica and rhythm guitar.

Cory looked over at Jacob and Jamie, asking; "Have they been educated yet?"

Jamie nodded, "Ask them what article thirteen is."

"Better yet, ask in any language you'd like!" Jacob giggled.

Cory then went over to the edge of the stage and called, "Prez?"

Prez answered, "What's up, Cory?"

In Italian, Cory said, "Recitare per me articolo tredici del rifugio sicuro agire in inglese."

Prez said, "Sexual Abuse. All provisions under this article are grounds for immediate removal of said minor children upon presentation of physical evidence, Vulcan Mind Meld Report or Clan Short Telepathic Scan Report. Subsequent or in conjunction with said removal, legal proceedings to revoke parental rights shall commence immediately and without fail."

Keith then recited, "Section 13.1: Use of minor children to provide sexual gratification. Section 13.2: Prostituting own children to provide sexual gratification for self or others."

Mike added, "Section 13.3: Forcing children to perform sexual acts on themselves or siblings or other minor children."

Derrick then said, "Section 13.4: Acquiring and or distributing nude and indecent photos or holographs of nude minor children for financial or other gain."

And Prez finished, "Section 13.5: Forced sex with non sentient species."

"Excellent!" Cory proudly smiled.

Troy innocently asked, "You guys learned that stuff in high school?"

"Umm no," Mike answered, then wondered, "How did we know that stuff?"

Jamie, Jacob, Beau, and Timmy giggled.

From up in the balcony, Kaleo peeked over the edge then hollered, "What happened to the music?"

Prez immediately cracked up. Keith shouted, "Jam time's over, dude. Everybody's leavin'."

Since Prez was almost doubled over laughing, Mike tapped his sub-vocal and said, "Hey Mister see all, what's been goin' on in the balcony?"

"I don't watch and tell!" Daileass giggled.

"Sure, except when it's me!" Mike retorted.

Cory grinned, "I've got one more thing for you guys to do."

"What's that?" Prez and Keith simultaneously asked. They smiled at each other, then reached for each other's hands.

Cory smiled, "All Core Rimmers are on unconditional stand-down for the next two hours." Prez opened his mouth to object, but Cory cut him short, "It's non-negotiable, Prez. Spend time with your partners and with your kids; not a word about Clan business of any type." Cory checked his watch and said, "It's about quarter after three now. See ya around five-fifteen." Cory turned and started up the aisle, following the other hundred-plus kids and adults.

"I have absolutely no problem with that," Derrick said. He then grabbed Mike around the waist and devilishly grinned, "See you dudes later." As he, Mike and Reyes walked down the stage steps, Judy Faris walked up.

Seeing one of the housekeepers approaching, Prez pleasantly said, "Hi Judy. Is there something I can help you with?"

Judy shook her head and happily explained, "You already have, Preston. I'm here to collect my son."

Prez and Keith both did double-takes between Judy and Troy. Finally, Prez turned to Troy and asked, "Why didn't you say anything?"

Troy shrugged, "It wasn't really on topic when I came up here."

Keith then recalled what the double J's had said and playfully hummed.

"Keith, be good," Prez warned. He then faced Troy asking, "Do you have all the instruments you need here?"

Troy replied, "I only have a recorder, clarinet, forty-nine key Casio keyboard and a Yamaha acoustic guitar."

"Daileass," Prez called.

Daileass replied, "You're on stand-down, Prez."

Prez grinned, "It's not Clan business; this is musical."

"Oh!" Daileass said, "Whatchya need?"

"Troy needs instruments to practice," Prez said. "Get him Selmer tenor and baritone saxes, an assortment of reeds for both, an eighty-eight key electric piano, a Taylor twelve-string acoustic guitar, a Fender Stratocaster, a Fender G-DEC Fifteen and a pair of headphones, so he can play without waking everyone in the condo." Troy's mouth was hanging open in amazement.

Daileass asked, "Anything else?"

"Lemme check," Prez said. He then asked Troy, "Is there anything else you might need, dude?"

Troy stammered, "I... uh..."

Keith snickered, "Whatever you need, Troy, just let us know."

Troy nodded and Prez said, "That should do it for now, Daileass."

"By the time he gets home, all his toys will be waiting," Daileass confirmed.

"Thanks, dude," Prez said. He then made eye contact with Troy and assured, "Everything's waiting for you at home."

Troy softly said, "I don't know what to say... except thank you."

"You played keyboards well," Prez smiled. "If you play the other instruments as well, we'd love to jam with you."

Keith nodded, "I can think of a dozen tunes off the top of my head that need recorder or sax parts."

Prez said, "Start with the sax solo for Urgent by Foreigner and the recorder and acoustic guitar parts for Stairway To Heaven."

"Come over here tomorrow afternoon with a list of the songs you already know and let's try 'em out," Keith added.

Judy interjected, "Let me know how much I owe you, Preston."

Prez scowled and shook his head, saying, "It's not necessary. I'm being selfish and jumping on an opportunity to expand our set list."

Judy turned to her son and smiled, "What did I say? Did I say they were sweet?"

Pleased beyond comprehension, Troy couldn't help himself. He blushed and giggled, "And they're really cute too!"

Keith grinned, "Daileass can't get you a boyfriend. You'll have to do that yourself." He then leaned over and checked out Troy's tush, saying, "Shouldn't be a problem." Troy blushed so hard that he broke out in a sweat.

Pulling Keith by the arm, Prez laughed, "You're being bad, babe!" and led him off stage.

"See ya later," Keith giggled. Judy and Troy followed Prez and Keith off the stage.

Waiting in the audience were Drew, Corey, Geoff, Dee and Richie. Picking up Dee and parking the boy up on his shoulders, Keith said, "We've got a whole two hours off. What do you want to do together?"

Drew picked up Geoff and Prez lifted Richie. The three little boys seemed to check with each other for a long few moments. Prez asked, "What's wrong, Richie?"

"Nothin', Poppa," Richie quickly answered.

"I'm Poppa now?" Prez smiled.

Richie nodded and giggled, "Learned it from Timmy and Ricky. If we call both you daddy, then how can ya know which ones of yous we really want?"

Bending down slightly, Dee whispered, "Don't you love Poppa no more, daddy?"

"Of course I do," Keith quickly replied. "We've spent the whole day together and barely any time with you and Richie."

"But you was workin' almost all the time," Geoff sadly groaned.

Richie explained, "Daddies should spend time alone too."

Drew smiled at Geoff and asked, "You three have been planning this?"

All three boys nodded. Richie giggled, "Reyes, Jonah and Dillon too!"

"We got lots o' kids to play with," Dee offered. "We got John and Bruce and Dewi... and Jonah and Dillon... and Timmy and Ricky and... Kakoku and Carmella to play with."

"Okay," Prez smiled, "I'll tell you what? Us daddies will play together for about an hour and then we'll meet you over by the pool. Then daddies can spend time with the boys they love. How does that sound?"

"That sounds great!" Richie cheered.

Keith reminded, "Make sure your Teddies and at least one big kid is by the pool with you."

Dee said, "Put me down, Daddy."

Keith helped Dee down to the floor and groaned, "I think you might already be gaining a little weight there, Dee."

Dee giggled, "I hope so. I'm almost as old as John, but me and Bruce are almost as big."

"Bruce is really a little bit bigger than Dee," Richie softly said.

"Not for long!" Dee joyfully sang. "Soon I'll be picking you up like Daddy and Poppa!"

Richie tightly wrapped himself around Prez and whispered, "I love you, Poppa."

"I really love you too," Prez softly replied and landed a kiss on Richie's cheek.

Soon Geoff and Richie were on the floor. The three boys pushed the heavy auditorium door open, then raced outside. Keith and Drew began flipping the circuit breaker switches off when Corey admitted, "We should've expected that from Geoff after showering with him this morning."

Prez sighed, "They've been confused by some perfect bastards."

Not stopping what he was doing, Drew softly asked, "Did Richie or Dee try to grab for your dick in the shower?"

Keith nodded and said, "We explained that little boys can play with other little boys, but only when they both want to do that. Bigger boys play with other big boys and adult men play with other adult men. They don't ever need to assume that someone wants their dick played with."

"They think that because they love us that that's what they're supposed to do," Prez grumbled. "Swear to God, the first rescue that involves a man fuckin' around with a little boy, I'm gonna aim a phaser on heavy stun right at his crotch!" Keith's head sagged and he began chuckling.

Drew giggled, "Sounds like a good idea to me!"

"It's just so fucked up!" Corey helplessly sniggered. He then seriously explained, "Me and Drew started messin' around a little over a year ago and we both wanted to. These boys have been brainwashed."

Drew agreed, "Zap the first horny fucker that messes with little boys, Cor."

"Leave him with a numb dick and numb-nuts!" Keith chuckled.

"I say we expose him to his own kiddie porn and whenever he starts getting excited, stun his pecker again!" Prez smiled.

Finished with the circuit-breakers, Drew complained, "Can we please stop talking about it, right now?"

Also finished, Keith closed the circuit-breaker door and snickered, "Slightly counter-productive at this time!" He then swiftly took Prez in his arms and swung him around, kicked open the door and went outside with Prez giggling insanely.

Corey slid in close to Drew and softly asked, "Ya wanna?"

"Course!" Drew chirped as they walked outside. Corey removed the sub-vocal from his ear, then whispered in Drew's ear. Drew blushed, "We can try that too."

"Quick shower first?" Corey suggested.

Drew thoughtfully hummed, then countered, "We could beat Keith and Prez into my parents' bathroom and do everything in the big whirlpool?"

"I have a better idea," Corey giggled. "Tell them, but since my mom's busy with the kids, we could use the master bath whirlpool in my house?"

Drew's eyes widened and he rapidly nodded. Then Drew and Corey ran to Keith and Prez, shared the plan and then all four raced home.

As he watched the Rimmers split up to their various homes, Cory smiled and turned to Sean. "Hey, hot stuff, I gotta go tame a tiger. You think you can manage the rest of the zoo?"

Sean giggled. "Like they can be controlled? Go for it, I'll try to keep them from tearing the place apart."

Cory nodded. "Have fun!" He spotted Mrs. Seaver heading towards the pool, and quickly followed her.

Lanna Seaver had the twins, Cesar and Felipe, as well as Carmella and Kokaku with her as she made the turn around the rec center to the pool. Following her and the kids were four Teddy bears. Once she was certain the children were safe, she kicked back on a lounge to relax in the sun.

"Mrs. Seaver, can we talk for a minute?" Cory asked as he pulled over another lounge chair.

"Certainly, Cory," she happily agreed. "I hope Jacob and Jamie didn't misunderstand me during lunch. My son told me that I need to explain things to you as I would an adult so, let me begin by asking you to call me Lanna or Aunt Lanna, whichever you feel more comfortable with."

"Okay, Aunt Lanna." Cory replied with a grin. "I heard about you catching Brant... multiple times. I almost lost my lunch from laughing."

Lanna grinned, "That poor boy! When we met again later that evening, he made sure to keep several arms' lengths away from me! I must admit, there is a method to my madness."

Cory laughed. "You do realize that he's immune to the sun, don't you? If he wasn't, he'd be a pile of ash. That's what usually happens to his species."

"My Corey did say that he was a Vampire," Lanna admitted. "I didn't know that when I saw him Friday afternoon though. I didn't even believe Corey when he told me. But then, during the concert, I saw him with fangs. Beyond being stunned about it, I was saddened because he's so young."

"He was turned in love," Cory replied seriously. "That's not a tattoo on his wrist. It's a band that absorbs into the skin if the two people are in true love when the partner is turned. It's extremely rare that it works, so you can tell just how special his partner was."

She nodded understandingly, then explained, "The reason I'm so concerned about sunburn is quite simple. When Corey was still a baby, my youngest sister, who was only seventeen at the time, developed skin cancer. If I can help one person avoid that horrible disease, I will. To further complicate matters, Corey's my only child, not because I wanted only one but, due to health reasons, I could have only one child. In Brant's case, I was protecting a child and avoiding future skin cancer. I know it was pointless now, but I didn't know that then."

Cory nodded seriously. "I understand what you mean. Unfortunately, in the Double J's case, it's not that simple. They are a lot better than they were when we took them in, but both of them still have a lot of issues that I'm pretty sure they will never totally recover from."

Frowning because she knew so much of the Pacific Rim rescued, Lanna said, "I don't mean to pry, but can I ask how they were harmed?"

"Give me a second, I need to check with Sean to make sure I've got it right." Cory replied. Once Sean had updated his memory over their link, Cory frowned as he started speaking again. "I hate remembering this stuff; I really don't know how Sean can handle remembering it all." He paused before continuing. "Their sperm-donor used to feed them meals that would be illegal in solitary in prison. Basically, they had to let him fondle them, then relieve his urges to get something as simple as a peanut butter and jelly sandwich. When he started using his fingers to take them to the next stage, they took a chance and ran away. We rescued them when we found them digging in a dumpster for food."

Fuming and becoming emotional, Lanna wiped her eyes. She understood that Jacob and Jamie now feared adults like many of the Pacific Rim rescued had Friday and some still did. Lanna cleared her throat and asked, "Please tell them I am not an abuser in any definition of the word. As a mother, I can only look out for the welfare of my kids or any kids placed in my care. Cesar and Felipe came to my husband and me, and it only took a little bit of kindness on our part to release some of their fears. Jennifer and Jim Hundser experienced the same with Carmella and Kokaku. In every case so far, the children have chosen their newly adopted parents."

Cory nodded. "Thanks. Trust me, if I know those two they knew what you said as you were saying it. Their security lies in knowing everything that is going on around them. In their case, the last thing that they will allow is an adult to order them around until they know the adult really well. I think it's habit more than anything; they developed it as a way to protect themselves and have never let go of it."

"They're telepathic?" Lanna asked.

Cory grinned. "Calling them just telepaths is like saying a Lamborghini is just a car. They were the first humans to be certified as Vulcan Telepath Trainers."

Moving closer to Cory, Lanna whispered, "I think Cesar and Felipe are also telepaths. Last night, Cesar told my husband to go ahead and do some office work that he needed to do. Bill still waited until after they went to bed and told them he was simply preoccupied. Only an hour later, I felt the need to use the bathroom but was waiting until the next commercial, to be with them. Felipe told me to go to the bathroom and I know I wasn't fidgeting. And they're always finishing each other's sentences. One can't speak without the other adding a tiny bit."

Cory couldn't help but giggle. "Try being around Jamie, Jacob, and Beau when they're in a pranking mood. I've seen them literally make their Pop dizzy enough to fall on the floor by standing around him and talking in a circle!"

Lanna smirked, "I know that most twins have an indefinable link. Can we find out if they're really telepathic or if they're just being twins?"

Before Cory could respond, three naked streaks ran by, screaming "GERONIMO!" as they went airborne and landed in the pool. "Be careful what you ask for!" Cory laughed.

Lanna laughed, "I don't know whether to ask how they knew or to point out how white their rear ends are compared to their backs!"

"Not by choice!" Cory laughed. "As far as how they knew..." Cory paused as he theatrically counted on his fingers, "at last count, I have two Mikyvis, three telepaths, one elf, and my husband - all with permanent links in my head. Sometimes I think they know what I'm thinking before I do!"

"WE DO!" three voices yelled from the pool.

A shiver raced up and down Lanna's spine. "Should I be as concerned as I am?" Lanna worried.

Cory shook his head. "No. They have good reason to be so protective. My memory is not really stable yet, so they all work together to help keep things from throwing my brain for a loop. It's a case of they have so much love that they refuse to let me get hurt mentally ever again... all of them."

"Your memory isn't stable?" Lanna queried, "Were you hit in the head and suffered amnesia?"

"I had traumatic memory loss when my big brother died almost a year and a half ago. On top of that, I've almost died twice in the last month; once from injuries and once from almost mentally collapsing. I don't get a choice; the guys refuse to take the chance of anything ever hurting me again, mentally or otherwise." Cory replied softly.

As he finished, Beau walked up and plopped his naked butt in Cory's lap. "Cuddles. Now. Doctor's orders." Beau stated, his tone daring Cory to argue. He turned his face towards Lanna. "Go ahead, Aunt Lanna; we're gonna sit down with you an' talk after Cor is done."

Cory wrapped his arms around Beau and Lanna brightly smiled. "I've always considered myself lucky, even privileged to have the happy, healthy family I have. Now I look around at all these kids and watch them becoming happier day by day. I'll never forget how they acted Friday and most of Saturday though. A few were orphaned at birth and have never known any adult to be trustworthy. Some were orphaned later in life, some are runaways, but they're all victims.

"Cesar and Felipe are only the first we'll adopt. I can easily see us adopting two more, possibly four more. All they have to do is show interest like the twins did. Anna and Carl Seibert adopted four right off the bat, two boys and two girls. Our situations are slightly different though, inasmuch as Mike and Derrick are older and committed to each other. My Corey and Drew have committed themselves too, but they're younger and will need help with little Geoffrey."

"This morning Jennifer Hundser called me regarding my assisting at Federation Youth Services. I couldn't give her an answer," Lanna sighed. "Jennifer has also called Anna and Laura for the same purpose. The more I think about it, the more I hope Anna or Laura accept. I'm quite happy these last few days watching the kids, although I realize that I can't watch over all of them all of the time. I've been asking myself, where can I do the most good and be happiest?"

Cory grinned. "You sound a lot like Aunt Helen! She got her son back, after Aaron talked Mom into overriding a judge who thinks any kid that farts wrong should be locked away until he's eighteen. Within twenty-four hours, her son managed to talk her into taking in two runaways. She spends all day just hanging around to give 'Mom Time' to any kid who needs it, no matter if they are her kid or not. A lot of the guys consider her the 'unofficial' HQ Clan Mom; my Mom is the official one, but Helen is the first one that everyone goes to if Mom is busy."

Lanna hummed thoughtfully.

A few minutes after four that afternoon, Drew and Corey arrived at the pool. Geoff hurried over to his Daddies. By the deeper end of the pool, Gage was swimming and joking with some other boys between seven and ten years old when he noticed Prez and Keith had shown up. Dee, Richie, Carmella and Kokaku all hurried to them. Gage watched the two older boys with great interest and slowly moved away from the others he had been playing with. More kids wandered over to Keith and Prez. The kids wanted to show their leaders some new dives they had learned. Keith and Prez followed all the younger kids over to the diving well. Gage got out of the pool and followed, but kept his distance. He listened and learned that Dee and Richie were calling Keith daddy and Prez poppa. Then he heard Kokaku call them big bro. But lots of the kids were calling Keith and Prez bro. After some prompting, Keith then climbed the ladder to the three-meter high diving board. Keith did a twist, then a somersault, then straightened up and hit the water hands first. The dozen or so kids cheered loudly and then some older boys climbed the ladder to try the same dive.

Gage carefully considered what he knew and what he had learned all day at the Ewa Beach compound. All the kids cared about each other. And all the leaders were showing how much they cared too. But Gage's own parents couldn't even manage to show that much interest in anything but booze and drugs. Without even thinking, Gage walked over to the diving well as Keith climbed out.

"Hey, Gage!" Keith smiled. Reaching a wet hand for Gage's shoulder, Keith asked, "How's your first day been?" Gage could only nod, but then began to shed tears. Concerned, Keith softly wondered, "What's wrong, dude?"

Gage shrugged and wiped his eyes. "Never seen anything like this," Gage blubbered. Keith glanced at Prez, then led Gage to a nearby garden chair. "Everyone cares, some a lot, some a little bit, but everyone cares. Why? Why don't my parents give a shit?"

Keith sat Gage down and softly answered, "You know the answer, Gage; it's the drugs. It's one thing to drink a little once in a while, or smoke a joint at night when everything else is done. When that's all you do, though, everything else is less interesting. Maybe your folks just need help?"

By this time, Prez, Richie, Dee, Kokau and Carmella had surrounded Gage. Prez said, "We'll give them the opportunity to get that help, if that's what you want, Gage?" Samuel Bay, another boy also rescued from Maui the same time as Gage, saw the gathering and hurried over.

"It don't matter to me," Gage sobbed. "They can bury themselves in cocaine and drown in whiskey for all I care." He then took a deep breath and composed himself a little. "Look at all you guys," Gage grinned. "All these other kids around and I'm the center of attention?"

"For as long as you need it to feel better," Prez answered.

Gage nodded just as Sammy arrived and asked, "What's wrong, pal?"

Gage smirked, "Nothing's wrong now. I jus' now figured out how screwed up my folks are and how much I've missed out on."

Sammy grinned, "Oh! Well, get over your bad self! We're all here together now." Gage giggled, then Sammy looked up at Keith and Prez saying, "This place is awesome! We got so many new friends in one night, like more than any of us ever had before. When a bunch of us showered at the dorm this mornin', we checked out the whole building and a few of the rooms. After lunch, Mr. T led a bunch of us over to the school and even that place is great! Then we went to the theater and you dudes played music for us. We was playin' basketball a while ago until we got too hot, then came here and jumped in the pool."

Gage agreed, "This really is the best place ever. I had the best breakfast and best pizza in my life here. I can't wait for dinner! I don't even know what chicken cordon bleu is, but I know it's gonna be great!"

Keith smiled and asked, "Is that why you came over to me?"

Gage shook his head then explained, "I just wanted to say thanks and ask you some things."

"You're very welcome, Gage," Keith chuckled. "What did you want to ask me?"

"I always really liked music," Gage admitted, and then asked, "Would you teach me how to play piano?"

"Sure, Gage," Keith happily answered. "If you want, we could go over to the dorm and I can give you your first lesson right now."

Gage's eyes widened and he rapidly nodded, then he got up and hugged Keith with all his strength. "I always wanted to play piano, but the druggies always said no," Gage whispered in Keith's ear. "I love you. It don't matter that you're gay cos Prez is great too. Would you..."

Feeling Gage's heart beating rapidly, Keith waited and smiled up at Prez, then whispered to Gage, "Would I what?"

Gage softly stammered, "W-would you... could I... be your son, like Dee and Richie?"

"Go ahead and ask Prez," Keith whispered. "If he says yes, I'd love for you to be my son."

"What if he says no?" Gage worried.

Keith whispered, "I want you because you've shown us your heart, Gage. Your parents never saw how compassionate and sincere you are. If you ask Prez just like you asked me, he'll see your heart too and say yes."

Gage pulled back and searched Keith's eyes. Keith smiled and nodded, then Gage went to Prez. Gage beckoned Prez with his index finger and Prez squatted down. Gage hugged Prez and whispered, "Could I be your son? I want you and Keith to be my dads. You already mean more to me than my real parents ever did."

Prez smiled at Keith then whispered, "You get two dads and two brothers too. Is that kewl with you?"

Gage nodded and whispered, "Dee and Richie are really kewl. I jus' never had brothers before."

Prez then confided, "My parents died two years ago. I was an only child too and learned to be a brother to Drew and John. Then Keith and I fell in love."

"I know you're gay and I think the gay dudes I've met here are some of the best people I've ever met," Gage admitted.

Prez thought of asking Gage if he thought he might be gay too, but then thought again and realized it didn't matter. He only kissed Gage on the cheek and simply said, "Yes."

"Really?" Gage squealed.

Prez stood and chuckled, "Really." He then pointed over by the pool and said, "That blond dude there is Patriarch Cory Short. He can make it official for us."

Gage nodded and giggled, "Whoosh!" then ran off towards Cory.

Richie looked up at Prez and asked, "Wha's goin on, Poppa?"

"We're getting you and Dee a new brother," Prez smiled.

Dee then put the question to Keith and squeaked, "Gage's gonna be our brother?" Keith only smiled and nodded. Dee and Richie cheered, then ran to each other.

While Dee and Richie spun around happily, Prez noticed Sammy looked a little down and asked, "What's wrong, Sammy?"

Sammy sighed, "I'm just being selfish. It's nothin' really."

Keith scowled, "That's not gonna cut it, Sammy. Aren't you happy for Gage?"

Sammy nodded and explained, "Me and Gage got to be good friends overnight. He wasn't sure if he wanted to be adopted this morning." Sammy stopped short and looked down at the concrete.

Prez directly asked, "And now you feel left out?"

"Do you want a family, Sammy?" Keith also asked.

Never looking up, Sammy softly admitted, "I do feel left out, but don't know if I'm ready for another family. The last one was screwed enough."

Prez and Richie went to Sammy. Pulling up the boy's chin, Prez said, "Think about it, Sammy. If you like what you see, if you want brothers, sisters and parents here, all you have to do is choose where you'd like to be. That's the Clan rule; kids gotta want parents as much as parents want kids. If it doesn't work both ways, someone might feel bad."

"All you guys are wanted here," Keith added. "Now all you've gotta figure out is where you're wanted most."

Adam walked up and joined them. "I couldn't help overhearing you. Prez has it exactly right. You wanna hear my take on it?"

Sammy nodded, somewhat in awe that one of the Clan bosses would care enough to get involved.

"I had some pretty screwed up parents too." Adam began. "My mom was a druggie who cared more about her own problems than her own kid. She shipped me off to my father when the drugs finally took their toll. He had married another woman and they had given birth to another kid. Just before I got there, they abandoned the little brother that I was expecting to meet for the first time. They picked me up at the bus station, and things were going pretty good except for them telling me my little stepbrother was dead. I let it slip, kinda on purpose, that I might be gay. The next thing I knew, I was stripped and getting the crap whipped outta me. Little Kyle got a message from Cory and Sean's dead big bro about me; a few minutes later half of the Des Moines Police Department, and all of what was starting to form what would become the Clan, showed up and rescued me. The next thing I knew, I had a boyfriend, my little brother Tyler, two new big brothers named Cory and Sean, and the best Mom in the Universe." Adam paused for a breath, then finished. "Follow your heart; Cory's magic is contagious and you won't go wrong when you are around people he's touched with it."

From over by the pool near Cory, Beau shouted, "Hey doofus! It was Polk County Sheriff, not Des Moines police! Remember Unca John, your father-in-law?"

"Bite me, Mini-Leech! There were a buncha cops there! I didn't stop to read badges!" Adam yelled back.

"No, you were too busy counting JJ's freckles! Kyle's told us ALLLLLLL about it!" Beau shot back with a giggle.

Adam turned back around, deciding to save his dignity by refusing to reply. "Now where was I?" he asked.

Sammy smiled, "I think I get the idea." He then moved closer to Prez and Richie and said, "I want to be part of your family too."

Prez softly said, "You don't have to rush into anything, Sammy. Are you certain you're ready?"

Sammy nodded, "From the first time I saw you, before you even saw me, I felt something in my belly that I never felt before. When you spoke to us at Maui, I felt it even more. At lunch, I saw you again and felt it again. The same thing happened when you were on stage. I'm not even sure what it is I'm feeling, 'cept I'm happy here and even happier when you and Keith are close by. Three brothers and two fathers works for me. Like Adam said, I can't go wrong."

Keith nodded and grinned, "That feeling in your belly is love. It makes you say and do things without even thinking, like you just did." After glancing at Prez and receiving a confirmation nod, Keith said, "We'd love to have you as our son too."

Richie and Dee surrounded Sammy, then wrapped him in their arms. Gage came running up to the group, loudly saying, "Cory's comin'," but then stopped short and asked, "What's goin' on?"

"We're multiplying," Prez chuckled. "Sammy's going to be your brother too, Gage."

Gage's mouth fell open, then he loudly laughed, "That's awesome!" Swiftly, Gage joined his other three brothers and giggled, "It's perfect!"

Cory walked up with Beau on his shoulders. Prez asked, "Where's your tricorder, Cor?"

Cory pointed up at Beau answering, "He's my tricorder." He then smirked, "I told you guys to stand down for family time."

"We did!" Prez chuckled, "But we fell back up again! During our family time, we doubled the size of our family! Isn't that what you meant?"

"In more ways than one!" Keith helplessly snickered.

"Okay then!" Cory giggled. He then got right down to business and asked, "Gage Lundberg and Samuel Bay, do you want Prez and Keith as your fathers?"

"You bet I do!" Gage cheered.

Sammy added, "Yep, I do."

Cory then asked, "Preston O'Brian and Keith Hundser, do you want Gage and Sammy as your sons?"

Taking Keith's hand, Prez answered, "Always."

"Forever," Keith nodded.

Prez locked eyes with Cory and warmly smiled, "Thanks, Cor."

Cory giggled, "No problem; this is a job I love doin'."

Turning the corner and holding hands, Mike and Derrick appeared with their sons Reyes, Dillon and Jonah. Mike wondered, "What's going on here?"

"We're makin' babies!" Keith joked.

Prez giggled, "We're up to four. What've you guys been doing all this time?"

"What we do best!" Mike joked.

Derrick nudged Mike and grinned, "In the auditorium, we noticed that the Scoobies were scratching themselves like crazy."

Mike nodded, "No more swimming in the pool for our ferrets. Their skin can't take the chlorine." Hearing this, Cory turned slightly and ordered the pool water be changed immediately at all Clan bases.

"Doctor Janet sent us some special shampoo and ointment to help them out," Derrick added.

Reyes laughed, "We got to bathe them again!"

Jonah explained, "They weren't too happy about it at first."

"But now they feels less itchy and way more better," Dillon giggled.

"Where are they now?" Prez wondered.

"Workin' on their Shiny Vault," Mike replied.

"Heaven help Hawaii," Cory softly muttered, shaking his head.

Keith looked at Gage and asked, "Ready for your first piano lesson, son?"

"YEAH!" Gage loudly chuckled.

Prez glanced at Keith and said, "While you're doing that, I'll take our other three boys over to the townhouses and check them out."

"Good idea," Keith smiled, "We'll be moving there sooner or later. Let's all go together then. I'll want a piano of some sort there."

Derrick and Mike checked with each other, then nodded. Derrick said, "We'll join you."

"Might as well invite Drew and Corey," Prez suggested.

Before the older guys started walking over to the pool area, all the kids raced away and over to Drew, Corey and Geoff. Carmella and Kokaku were nearby and soon all the little kids had joined hands, spinning around Gage and Sammy, welcoming them to the family.

In the pool, Cesar and Felipe were with Jamie and Jacob. None of them were speaking but they were all giggling. Latoya, Christel and Brandi were together, floating on their Teddy Bears. On the other side of the pool, John, Bruce, Dewi and Nathan were with the Evans group practicing telekinesis, lifting and lowering some of the poolside lounges and their occupants. Bruce, Dewi and Nathan were loving the rides but Anna Seibert and Laura Gibbons were not quite as enthusiastic. Mike and Derrick couldn't help laughing at their mothers' nervous expressions.

'This is working out better than I could've ever imagined,' Prez proudly thought. Keith invited Drew and Corey to check out the townhomes. Soon the Rimmer families started walking towards the housing area.

Geoff looked up at Corey and sadly asked, "We gonna move away from ev'rybody, Daddy?"

Corey checked with Drew. Drew shook his head and answered, "No, Grandma and Grandpa would probably like us to stay with them for a while."

Keith said, "We're all going to stay together for a while, Geoff. But someday soon, Prez and I will move out with our boys."

"We'll always be close together, Geoff," Prez assured. "Then our boys can have sleepovers with you and other boys. It'll be fun for all of us."

Richie happily squealed, "Yeah, Geoffy. We can come stay with you, and you can comes stay with us!"

Corey picked up Geoff and smiled, "We're just going to look, because we haven't even seen the inside of those houses. It'll be like a new adventure for all of us."

Gage moved closer to Corey and Geoff. Gage said, "Imagine it, Geoff; we'll only be a short run across the compound. We can all still play together."

Reyes then said, "You know our Grandmas and Grandpas like having us around. Instead of us always nesting at the Hundser's house, we can nest anywhere we want."

Keith leaned closer to Drew and whispered, "Geoff needs a brother, so he doesn't feel so alone."

Drew nodded and softly said, "Lenny Cutler was with us up in the sound booth. On his own, Lenny went up there with his Teddy looking for me, Corey and Geoff. Most of the time, Geoff and Lenny were playing with their Teddy's together while we ran the PA and lights."

"Make it happen, bro," Keith suggested.

Drew snickered, "Mom's gonna have a fit when she gets home!"

"I know!" Keith laughed, "It's gonna be great! She goes to work and comes home to a few new grandsons!"

Arriving in front of the townhomes, Prez unlocked the North end house while Derrick unlocked the house next door. Prez led his group inside. Derrick and Mike went inside the other townhome with their kids.

Inside the townhomes, both groups found large furnished living rooms. There were sofas, lounge chairs, a flat panel television mounted on the long adjacent wall complete with Bose surround sound systems. Prez walked through to the dining area and then into the galley style kitchen, where he also found a breakfast counter and four stools. Prez could see from the kitchen to the dining room and most of the living room.

In the living room, Keith turned on the fifty inch TV and flipped the channel to VH1 Classic, then turned up the volume. Keith then heard giggling. Lowering the TV volume, Keith glanced around and discovered Richie and Gage were missing. Following the sound of giggling boys, Keith soon found both boys, pissing in the toilet of the lower level half bath, with their boardies at their feet on the floor. "Don't cross the streams! Atoms are flying together at the speed of light!" Gage giggled. Richie cracked up again. Shaking his head but smiling widely, Keith left them to finish their business.

Prez walked up and wrapped his arms around Keith saying,

"This is really nice."

Keith nodded, then Richie and Gage hurried past. The boys went upstairs so Keith and Prez followed. At the top of the stairs were three bedrooms and two bathrooms. The master bedroom had a king sized bed and matching furnishings. In one of the two other bedrooms, Prez found Sammy lying on one bed and Dee standing on the other bed. In the other bedroom, Keith saw Richie turning on the smaller television while Gage sat at the desk powering up the laptop computer.

Meeting back outside the two rooms, Prez and Keith held each other close. "Look at our kids," Prez whispered.

"They split up and chose their bedrooms," Keith softly said.

Prez admitted, "I half expected Dee and Richie would be in one room with Gage and Sammy in the other."

Keith then asked, "What do you guys think; could this be our home?"

Four voices loudly cheered, "YEAH!"

"We lost Drew, Corey and Geoff," Keith noticed.

Richie said, "Geoffy don't like us splitting up."

"Well, we'll have to show him that we're only a short sprint away then," Prez suggested. All four boys raced past Keith and Prez, then hurried down stairs.

While Prez chuckled at the boys, Keith tapped his sub-vocal and called "Daileass?"

"What's up, Keith?" Daileass answered.

"This townhouse we're in will be ours, so we'll need a few things," Keith said. Prez went in the bedroom to turn off the TV. The laptop PC was in the middle of a Windows installation so Prez left it running.

"You'll have six things in that house!" Daileass giggled.

Keith shook his head and looked up for the nearest security camera, chuckling, "You really need a boyfriend!"

"He's already got me!" Draco interjected.

Keith snickered, "We'll need two pianos in this place, an upright in the living room and a Fender Rhodes in the bedroom Gage was in."

"Don't forget a little amp for the Rhodes, Daileass," Prez added.

Prez and Keith started walking down stairs and noticed a Yamaha upright piano, across from the bottom steps, between the living room and dining room. Keith smiled, "Thanks, Daileass. I'll give Gage his first lesson right here."

"You're welcome, Keith," Daileass giggled. "Good luck with Gage."

Keith replied, "Thanks, dude." He then asked Prez, "Send Gage in for a quickie piano lesson please, baby."

Prez nodded, "He'll be right in. We'll meet you back over by the pool."

"We'll be there in twenty or thirty minutes," Keith assured.

Prez walked outside to find everybody surrounding Geoff and Drew. All the kids were trying to assure Geoff that they would all still see each other every day and they could even have sleep-overs. Prez saw that Geoff still wasn't all too happy. Prez sent Gage inside, then sat down on the step and waited for a chance to interject. Soon everyone saw him sitting there and stopped talking. Prez asked, "Can I see you for a minute, please, Geoff?"

Geoff nodded, "'Kay, Unca Prez," and Drew put the boy down. Geoff went to Prez and Prez sat the boy on his lap.

Prez whispered, "It's just the change that's scaring you, isn't it?" Geoff nodded and Prez asked, "Guess what you just did?"

Geoff shrugged and asked, "What?"

"You made a change, from Daddy to me, all by yourself."

"I did?"

"Uh huh; that's a change. And guess what? All these boys and their daddies love you, and don't want you feeling sad." Geoff blushed, nodded and grinned slightly. "You can show them that you can make changes too. Ya wanna know how?"

"How?" Geoff asked.

"Run over to Uncle Mike and give him a hug, then go to Uncle Derrick and hug him. Go to each of the boys and give them hugs. Every time you go from person to person, you're making a change."

"Yeah?"

Prez nodded and grinned, "Show 'em, Geoff," then helped the boy off his lap and watched as Geoff went around to Mike, Derrick, Reyes, Dillon, Jonah, Richie, Dee, Sammy, Corey and finally back to Drew.

"That's my big guy!" Drew proudly cheered.

Corey smiled and nodded at Prez, then turned to Geoff and suggested, "To show you how close we'll all be, let's walk back to the houses and then over to the pool."

Cutting across the grass, the group then took the path between the two northern most dorms and the CIC, then were back at the Hundserts' house. The whole trip took about five minutes at a leisurely pace. It only took another few minutes to walk between the four homes and wind up back at the pool house. Mike, Derrick, Prez, Reyes, Sammy and Jonah decided to use the diving well and split off to the left. Drew, Corey, Richie, Geoff and Dee went to the right and directly into the pool.

John was still practicing telekinesis, lifting Anna Seibert and flying her about six feet above the pool when he saw Drew and Corey jump in with the boys. Without even trying or focusing too much, John got an image in his mind of Drew and Corey naked together in a frothy whirlpool. John then scanned deeper to learn exactly what his big bro had done. Mrs. Seibert and her lounge chair stopped cruising and slowly began to lower nearer to the pool. Seeing an image of Drew licking and gently nibbling Corey's lily white ass set John off giggling. He didn't even hear Mrs. Seibert, Drew, Corey or anyone else calling his name, but simply laughed at the memories of Rimmers rimming in his mind. Kids in the pool under Mrs. Seibert scurried away just before the lounge chair and older woman splashed into the pool.

Wondering why John's powers had failed, Jason and Nath Evans and Nathan Hayes got the full picture and cracked up laughing. All four boys were rolling hysterically, then Vicky, Riti, Jamie, Jacob and Beau joined in. Drew and Corey began trying to figure out what John and the others found so funny. Mrs. Seibert waded out of the pool to

John and impatiently huffed, "You were doing so well! What happened?"

Barely catching his breath, John offered an apology.

"A momentary distraction," Nathan Hayes giggled.

"Now I have to get changed," Anna Seibert grumbled, and swished off to her house.

Corey and Drew had suspicions and got out of the pool, then went directly to John. Seeing them coming, but unable to do anything other than stand up and back away, John laughed even harder.

Drew challenged, "What's so funny, bro?"

"You're making us paranoid!" Corey threatened.

John gasped, "Clean whirlpool Rimmers!" then took off running. Corey and Drew gave chase, cutting across the soccer field, then the walkway between the dorms and townhouses, then towards the Hundser home.

Jennifer Hundser stepped out of her house just as John raced to the front door. John hid behind his mother. "Whoa!" Jennifer hollered as Drew and Corey approached. "What's going on?" Jennifer loudly wondered.

Drew and Corey were speechless. What could they say, after all? They couldn't tell her that John was an N-Gen. They also couldn't divulge what they had done together. John remained safely behind his mom, snickering evilly.

On the lawn outside his home, Jim Hundser appeared with his two security guards and shouted, "Is this the way we set an example?"

"Dad," Drew whined, "John's being a brat!"

Corey added, "He was kinda spying on us!"

"Kinda spying on you?" Jim queried. "Excuse me, but how does one kinda spy? Either he was or he wasn't?"

Jennifer turned and simultaneously pulled John before her. "Were you spying, John?"

Knowing he could still get in trouble, John grinned, "Well... umm... it was an accident. Besides, they weren't exactly keeping it private either."

Drew squinted at John. Clearly reading Drew's thoughts, John heard, "You still have to sleep sometime, somewhere, bro!"

Corey didn't keep his threat silent or private though. "You have to tell your folks what happened today. You know Derrick's mom is going to say something about being dumped in the pool."

"What?" Jennifer shrieked.

"That was an accident too!" John quickly and loudly assured. "She knows it and I did apologize!"

Keith walked up with Gage and saw there was something not right. Since he had no idea what was going on, he simply said, "Hi mom, hi dad." Both Hundser adults said hello, then Keith said, "We have a few things to talk about. It's been another busy day."

Jim sighed loud and long. Jennifer nodded, "Family meeting time," then turned and entered the house with John.

Following Drew, Corey and his dad inside with Gage, Keith tapped his comm-badge and called, "Prez?"

It took a few moments for Prez to reply because he was naked at the diving well. As everyone got comfortable in the living room, Prez answered, "Yeah, babe, what's up?"

"Mom and Dad are home now," Keith explained. "It's time to fill them in on today's trivia."

"Is Gage with you?" Prez asked.

"Yep," Keith grinned. "Bring all our kids and Geoff too."

Prez replied, "Okay, we'll be there in a few minutes."

"Okay, baby," Keith replied. There were a few moments of uncomfortable silence before Keith scratched his head and grinned, "Okay, our guests from Orlando showed up this morning. Derek Tecumseh, the Clan Short educational adviser was first. He's going to help us get good teachers staffed here. While we're on that topic, we did go to band class today. We got our transcripts and the teacher had no problem with the security guys at all."

Jim glanced at Jennifer and nodded, "So far so good."

Keith then explained, "After Derek Tecumseh, we got another seven visitors from Orlando. Their names are Jacob, Jamie, Beau, Jason, another Nathan, Vicky and Riti. They're all really nice and have shared a lot of the knowledge we need already."

"That was very quick," Jennifer commented.

"You have no idea!" Keith giggled. John, Drew, Corey and Gage all began sniggering. While his parents looked around the room, Keith smiled, "Just so you know, we call Derek Tecumseh, Mister T. and Jacob and Jamie are... how shall I say... playful? We call them the Double J's but really, they're only part of the set of Terrible Triplets, which includes Beau."

Jennifer turned to Jim and said, "I'm already getting nervous."

In perfect German, Keith then asked, "Sprechen Sie kein Deutsch?" (Do you speak any German?)

"Ein bisschen," Jim Hundser answered. (A little bit.)

Keith then asked, "Was würdest du sagen, wenn jeder hier nun sprechen konnte Deutsch, Französisch, Italienisch, Spanisch, Russisch, Japanisch und mehr?" (What would you say if everyone here could now speak German, French, Italian, Spanish, Russian, Japanese and more?)

Jim grinned, "I'd say I only got the first section of that! But I heard half a dozen languages named."

Jennifer asked, "Pouvez-vous parler français?" (Can you speak French?)

Keith nodded, "Je peux parler français facilement. Jamie, Jacob et Beau sont télépathes puissant. Nous allons leur faire partager ces connaissances avec tous les parents bientôt. Ils pourraient même prendre sur eux-mêmes, comme ils ont fait plus tôt aujourd'hui." (I can speak French easily. Jamie, Jacob and Beau are powerful telepaths. We'll have them share that knowledge with all the parents soon. They might even take it upon themselves, like they did earlier today.)

Prez walked inside the house after Richie, Dee and Sammy, but had only heard part of Keith's statement.

Jennifer smiled proudly, "Vous parlez français mieux que moi!" (You speak French better than I do!)

Prez grinned, "Je vois que vous avez couvert la première partie de la matinée, babe." (I see you've covered the first part of the morning, babe.)

So his parents wouldn't understand, Keith replied in Portuguese. "Eu lhes disse que ia para a escola também, mas não disse uma palavra sobre ter que sair mais cedo ou porquê. " (I told them we went to school too, but didn't say a word about having to leave early or why.)

In Spanish, John asked, "¿Por qué no les dices de mí?" (Why won't you tell them about me?)

Keith answered, "En un minuto, Juan! Vamos a tener esto un poco a la vez!" (In a minute, John! Let's take this a little bit at a time!)

John grumbled, "Voy a ir a buscar un poco de café, entonces!" (I'm gonna go get them some coffee then!) John then got up from the sofa and went to the kitchen.

Shocked beyond words, Jim and Jennifer sat back in their chairs.

"After we learned the languages, Cory and Sean Short arrived," Keith explained.

Prez added, "They brought Adam Short and JJ Richardson along with them. They're all really nice guys, you'll like them."

"There's a little something you probably need to know about Riti," Keith told his parents. Then he turned to Prez and asked, "How should I say this?"

Prez shrugged, "There's really only one way to say it. Reet's an alien; he's partially humanoid, with arms and legs, but he's got some bird-like features like wings and Owl eyes that can move independently."

Keith nodded and watched his parents carefully as he explained, "Reet took Bruce for a short flight around the Island." Jennifer groaned and Jim closed his eyes. Since his parents hadn't run for the front door, the liquor cabinet or medicine chest, Keith softly said, "Then John went with Reet for a ride... to Hawaii. While they were gone, John and Reet rescued a little Welsh boy named Dewi."

Prez quickly added, "He's only four and was being horribly abused by his parents."

Drew added, "The kid's been brainwashed into believing that he's always bad. Doctor Weiner had a brief chat with him already."

"He needs real parents most," Keith said.

Prez nodded, "We could take him, but he needs to know a mother that won't beat or sexually abuse him."

Keith explained, "We'll see who he latches onto over the next few days, but for now, he trusts John and Bruce most."

"Which leads us to the next topic," Prez smiled. He stood and gestured for Gage and Sammy to also stand. "Mom, Dad," Prez began, "I'd like you to meet two of the boys we rescued from Maui last night." Prez wrapped his arms around both boys saying, "On my right is Gage Lundberg and on my left is Samuel Bay."

Keith rose with Dee and Richie then said, "They both decided that they wanted parents and brothers. Specifically, they chose us, so we've adopted them."

Richie giggled, "They're really kewl too!"

Dee nodded and smiled, "Then Daddy and Poppa took us over to the townhouses. We got a place all picked out! When the little kids are readier, we'll move into that place as a family."

Richie said, "Daddy's teachin' Gage to play piano!"

"Well, that is good news!" Jim chuckled. "Welcome to the family, Gage and Samuel."

"Call me Sam or Sammy, okay?"

Jim nodded and grinned, "Sam it is then."

Gage offered, "Me and Sammy got to be really good friends last night. Now we each got three brothers and two great fathers."

"I can see how happy you all are," Jennifer smiled. "You even look like a family."

John walked into the dining room from the kitchen, telekinetically carrying two cups of hot coffee for his parents.

Seeing him before he entered the living room, Drew, Prez and Keith all hollered, "No, John!"

John giggled, "Why not?"

"Everything's going really good!" Drew said. "Don't ruin it!"

"You guys never let me have any fun," John softly complained. He set the two cups down on the table, then picked them up with his hands and slowly carried them into the living room. John put the cups down on an end table between his parents.

Keith then began to explain, "You've both already figured out John's empathic?" Lifting their cups, the two Hundser adults nodded.

Prez then said, "We've learned that John's special on a level you probably didn't already know."

"John was identified as a next generation human, or N-Gen for short," Keith said. "It's basically the evolution of the species."

"We had a choice to make and the four of us talked about it with Jason," Prez carefully informed his parents. "See, making the transition isn't easy. It could've hurt John..."

"Or even killed him," Drew finished.

"I didn't want it to hurt," John said. "And I sure didn't want to die." John paused and scanned his parents. They were slightly nervous, so John explained, "The Terrible Triplets and the Evans kids helped me so it didn't hurt and I won't die." John then spun around and smiled, "Ya wanna help me out, Richie?"

Richie nodded and giggled, "Just don't drop me, 'kay?"

Keith quickly told his parents, "Put your coffee cups down, please." John spun around again and watched his parents place the cups back on the end table.

Turning back to Richie, John lifted his nephew about two feet off the floor while his parents watched. John was barely using any effort at all, though, so he stepped back and lifted the coffee table too. Powering up, John's eyes shone azure blue as Drew also lifted up from the sofa. While two people and the coffee table hovered, John turned around so his parents could see his eyes. "Don't be scared," John pleaded with his parents. "I'm really fine. Now I can see images in my mind too. I wasn't spying on Corey and Drew. They were with Geoff in the pool and I just kinda saw what they had done alone together. I didn't mean to see it at first; it just happened. That's how I accidentally dropped Mrs. Seibert in the pool. I was practicing T.K. when I got too busy watching Corey and Drew. I still have a lot to learn, but I can feel that you're nervous. As time goes on and I practice more, I'll get more control. Then I won't accidentally see stuff I shouldn't or drop people in pools." John set Drew down on the sofa, then lowered the coffee table and then Richie. His eyes returned to their normal brown color, and he said, "See? It's so kewl. I can help Prez and the whole Clan even more now."

Eying her youngest son, Jennifer fretted, "Are you really okay?"

John giggled, "I feel great, mom, honest."

Jim looked at his other three sons and admonished, "I wish you had warned us."

Keith explained, "We knew John was N-Gen Saturday, but didn't find out that him turning could be so dangerous until today."

Prez sighed, "I'm Director and ultimately responsible for over a hundred kids and adults." He then softly asked, "Should I have called you both at work for this?"

Before his parents could answer, Keith took Prez by the hand and reminded, "You're not the only one responsible, Prez. I've got your back, baby."

"It's just like before the Clan," Drew chimed in. "We're together in this; Joel made us all leaders of this Clan. Now Prez wants to delegate authority too."

Jim took a sip of his coffee and thought before saying, "Should we have been notified? In this case I believe the answer would be yes, but I'm also asking myself what purpose knowing might've served."

Looking at his parents and eldest brothers, John asked, "What's gonna happen if we have a real rescue while you're at work? Do you want Prez to call you every time something happens?" Pointing at his brothers, John then huffed, "They all talked about the turning without including me. I was the last one to find out! As usual, my brothers protected me until I had a fit about it! It was my choice. You all treat me like a baby still! Stop it!" Beginning to shed tears, John shouted, "Before I even turned N-Gen, I helped Reet find and rescue Dewi. You wanna baby someone? Baby Dewi! His parents were sadists! His father was slapping him around! His mother was tugging on his nuts! And Dewi still don't know how bad that really was! He thinks that because he got seasick he deserved it! While Keith and Prez were at school, me and Drew took Dewi to both doctors. It didn't take Prez or any major decision; we just did it cos Dewi needed it."

When John paused, Jennifer reached for his hand and smiled, "You've always been the youngest. We wanted to protect you from the harsh realities of the world as long as possible. We know it needs to change. Now you've got two little brothers and a little sister that you'll want to protect too."

John frowned, "Make it three little brothers, please?"

Jim chuckled, "We should at least meet Dewi first!"

Prez reminded, "It's up to Dewi, bro. He can latch onto whomever he wants."

Keith nodded, "Since his real mom was such a perv, we already figured that Dewi needs a mom, not two dads. It don't take a degree to figure that out!"

"Can I make a suggestion?" Drew offered. Everyone nodded so Drew said, "They're serving chicken cordon bleu and rice pilaf at the CIC tonight."

Keith chuckled, "Good one, bro! Always thinking with your stomach!"

Drew cackled, "What? Mom and Dad already worked all day! Why cook another dinner?"

Prez nodded, "It's actually a good idea. Let's all sit together, though; grandparents, parents and our kids. We can show all the other kids what a family is like."

"Minus the hissy fits!" Corey giggled.

Pulling Corey back against him, Drew teased, "How can it be family time without the occasional hissy fit?"

Bruce, Carmella, Dewi and Kokaku walked in the house. Carmella hurried to Jim squealing, "Hi daddy!"

Jim picked her up and sat her on his lap asking, "How's my princess today?"

"Good," Carmella smiled. "We was playin' at the pool, an' the band played after lunch. We has pizza!"

John then introduced Dewi to his parents. Jim and Jennifer both said hello, but then Jennifer dramatically wondered, "Why am I sitting here alone?"

"Weez is big boys," Dewi answered.

John corrected, "You're never too big for a hug," then went around the boys to his mom where he gave a hug and got one. Bruce followed John, then Kokaku took a turn. Finally, Dewi moved forward.

While Dewi became acquainted with the family, Prez moved out of the room to the entryway. Richie dutifully shadowed his pop. Tapping his comm-badge, Prez called Mike. "Where are you, bud?"

"At the pool still," Mike answered.

Taking a seat on the stairs and parking Richie on his lap, Prez asked, "Is your dad home yet?"

"Haven't seen him yet," Mike replied. "He's probably getting changed out of his uniform though."

Prez shared the plan. "Let's get all our families together for dinner over at the CIC." He then asked, "Are Cory and Sean Short nearby?"

"Yep, only a few yards away."

"Let's lead by example and make it happen, dude," Prez instructed. "We'll meet you at the dining hall in a few minutes." Prez then heard various kids cheering and grinned, "I hear a few hungry kids."

"Can't say that I blame them," Mike chuckled. "Oh shit! The dinner bell has rung! There they go! Last one to the dining hall misses out!"

Prez then tapped his sub-vocal and said, "Daileass, where's Judy and Troy Faris?"

"Troy's in his condo practicing," Daileass replied. "Judy's on her way up in the elevator."

"Patch me into the Faris condo, please?"

"Go ahead, Prez," Daileass said.

"Hey, Troy?" Prez called.

"JESUS CHRIST!" Troy nervously hollered. Prez cracked up. More softly, Troy wondered, "How in the hell?"

"Speakers and microphones in the ceiling," Prez breathlessly sniggered.

Troy nervously huffed, "You startled the piss out o' me, Prez."

"Sorry about that," Prez giggled.

Troy asked, "What did you need?"

"All our families are meeting at the CIC dining hall," Prez explained. "I'd like you and your mom there too. She should be walking in any time now, so don't let her make dinner."

"Oh my God!" Troy gasped, "She just walked in!"

Prez chuckled, "Well, turn her around! We'll meet you in the dining hall, okay dude?"

Somewhat embarrassed because he was shirtless and had been vividly daydreaming about the band while practicing, Troy stammered, "Uh... okay... but... can you see me too, Prez?"

"Not at the moment," Prez honestly answered.

Packing up his saxophone, Troy giggled, "Oh, okay. See ya in few minutes."

"Kewl bud, see ya." Prez lifted Richie then went back into the living room. Kokaku was proudly wearing his dad's necktie; it hung from the boy's neck to his knees.

In moments, everyone was walking out of the house and over to the CIC. Although Prez had pictured sitting down to dinner with Keith and their boys, Dee, Gage, Richie and Sammy had decided to sit with Reyes, Jonah, Dillon and Geoff. Prez, Keith, Mike, Derrick, Kaleo, Tory, Drew and Corey sat together. Judy and Troy Faris chose a table close to the eldest Core Rimmers and were joined by Benjamin Hatcher, Sean Moorhead, Horacio Sulin and Roy Angulo. On the other side of the Core Rimmers sat Cory, Sean, Adam, JJ, Timmy and Ricky. At another table were John, Bruce, Nathan Hayes, Dewi, Kokaku, Cesar and Felipe. The next table over had Brandi, Carmella, Christel, Latoya and Lindsay, who were joined by Renee Carlos. The parents took the seventh table.

After dinner conversations began with JJ and Rob Gibbons, the idea was discussed to have Rob remain part of Honolulu Police, but on detached duty as a liaison between the Clan and the Police. Rob would pursue that option the very next day and, with luck, would be back on base by lunch time. JJ suggested talking to Fred White and Jack Watson, the former Indiana policemen working as Clan liaison out of Orlando, and using JJ's stepfather Commander John Martin, the Southeast U.S. head of Starfleet Security, and his bosses Starfleet Captain Barney Drumm and Admiral Juan Garcia-Lopez, if the Police Department gave him any difficulty about the proposal. Rob thanked him and noted down the names and numbers to call.

Kayla York was transported from Orlando to the dining hall to begin the organization of Pacific Rim Federation Youth Services. She glanced around; Cory grinned and pointed her at the parents' table. She walked over and introduced herself. "Hi, I'm Kayla York, Teri Short's number-two person. Teri sends her apologies, but her boys come first, and she's... tied up dealing with Joel right now."

Jim Hundser took the lead on introducing the eight parents.

"I recognize that expression," Kayla chuckled. "It was only about two months ago that Robin and I were wearing it. I call it Clan shock."

"You're probably wondering what Federation Youth Services does," she went on. "The answer is something like the one to where an eight hundred pound gorilla sits; anywhere it wants to." Everyone's eyes went involuntarily to the security gorillas, which appeared to be engaged in an animated discussion of something using coconuts and bananas as symbols to move around. "We typically underwrite the costs of things that kids need, like converting the old Naval Hospital in Charleston to a state-of-the-art pediatric facility, or enabling an older brother to afford a house for his younger siblings when he becomes their guardian. We cut red tape to make sure kids get the care and happy home they need. And we are the umbrella agency for professional services, like the two doctors that Austin and Dan approved to start up your operation here. But most importantly, we make sure every kid has fathers and mothers they love and who love them."

Lanna Seaver was the first to chime in. "After considering my options most of the day, I believe I would serve best as a house mother of sorts. Cory Short mentioned someone named Helen."

Jennifer Hundser then said, "Keith already forewarned me that Preston would like me to lead Federation Youth Services. I have a Masters degree in sociology and a Bachelors degree in psychology. After John was born, I took a job working for Hawaii Medical Center West. I've been employed there for nine years."

Kayla smiled. "Teri and I already discussed that; with a little help from the Terrible Trio." She gestured over at Jamie, Jacob, and Beau. "We think you would be the perfect person for the job. Any idea who would be a good office manager or assistant director for you? Somebody well organized, not afraid to throw his or her weight around when it's needed?"

"That would be me," Anna Seibert smiled. "I've been driving school buses for five years and dealing with kids. Before that, I was an office secretary for seven years."

"That makes sense," Kayla replied. "You've got the two doctors, and they'll probably need additional staff, so make sure they know they're authorized to hire people. Any other roles you need filled that occur to you right now, Jennifer?"

"Preston has already had ads placed in local papers for nurses and receptionists," Jennifer answered. Turning to her husband, Jennifer grinned, "The only other position we'd need to fill is for a legal department."

"You belong to the Hawaii National Bar, right?" Kayla asked. Jim nodded. "Good, you are now head of FYS Legal Services, based out of here." She called over to the twins. "Boys! Mind dump, please; legal information, including the Safe Haven Act and Clan Charter for Mr. and Mrs. Hundser and Mrs. Siebert." Jacob gave her a thumb-up gesture.

Jamie giggled, "Once we get the updated data, we'll get it dumped."

Bill Seaver said, "I've been a bank manager for eleven years. It's been a lackluster career; all I do is accounting and paper pushing."

Jim thought aloud, "That has some legal ramifications. Would you be interested in assisting the legal department, Bill?"

"It sounds like a winner to me!" Bill smiled.

"Oh, Jacob!" Kayla called out again.

"Got it covered already!" Beau giggled. "Honestly, old people!"

"I'll show you 'old,' you little scamp," Kayla laughed. Then she pulled out a communicator. "Crystal?" she said into it.

"Yeah, mom?"

"Finish off that paperwork I've got loaded. Jennifer Hundser accepted becoming FYS Director. Fill in Anna Seibert for her Deputy, James Hundser for Legal, and William Seaver as his assistant."

"Will do, mom. Send it to Prez's terminal?"

"That works; it's networked to the one in PRD CIC," Kayla said.

A few tables over, Cory and Sean Short were having a discussion with Mike and Derrick regarding upgrading Reyes' software and firmware. Austin Short was transported from Orlando to the Ewa Beach dining hall to meet Reyes and discuss how the upgrades would be done. Reyes only cared about keeping his memories. Once Reyes, Derrick and Mike felt comfortable, they went into the CIC with Austin, Cory and Sean to accomplish the deed.

When Mike, Derrick, Cory, Sean, Austin and Reyes went into the CIC, Troy moved over by Keith and Prez to begin a serious music conversation. Troy had a few ideas for additional songs Platinum Habits could learn and cover. During the course of the discussion, Prez and Keith learned that Troy could not only play various instruments, he could also read music and had more than a basic understanding of music theory. Troy had never attempted to write any music, but he did have a notebook of lyric ideas.

Nearby, John was using the leftovers to build an armada of marching baby carrots. Jason Evans noticed the marching vegetables and 'fired' a baby carrot 'missile' from his table to John's, knocking down a row of carrot 'troops' and thus beginning the first Baby Carrot Battle. After only a minute or two, Cory Short came out of the CIC and went to Prez.

"There's a bunch of kids to be picked up at your base on Hawaii," Cory told Prez.

Prez sighed, then asked Cory, "Now's as good a time as any to delegate, don't you think?"

"It's your call, Prez," Cory shrugged. "If it were me, I'd include John and Nathan Hayes for Intel division inspection."

Prez said, "Okay," then turned to Kaleo saying, "You're in charge, dude. Take Drew, Corey, John and Nathan with you." Launched baby carrots fell to the floor before Prez even finished speaking.

Kaleo apprehensively asked, "What do I do?"

"Introduce yourself to Starfleet security first," Prez replied. "Ask the kids about their situations and tell them a little about this base. Make them feel like their lives are about to improve. When you return, get them fed and orientated. If anyone's hurt, like Sonia's twisted ankle, get Doc Andrews to have a look. Just common sense stuff."

Keith reminded, "Make sure you've got your Starfleet ID's."

"We've always got them, bro," Drew assured.

Kaleo gave Tory a quick kiss, then said, "I'll be back soon." John and Nathan were already waiting when Kaleo, Drew and Corey stood. Tapping his sub-vocal, Kaleo called, "Daileass?"

Daileass replied into the ears of the five man team, "Transport to Hawaii when you say go, Kaleo."

"Let's go," Kaleo chirped. Then all five disappeared from the dining hall.

The team appeared inside the Hawaii base a few yards from the security station. As a Lieutenant stepped outside, all five held up their Starfleet ID's. "Good evening, gentlemen; I'm Lieutenant Roger Blair."

Kaleo smiled, "Nice to meet you, Lieutenant; my name's Kaleo Palakiko. With me are Drew and John Hundser, Corey Seaver and Nathan Hayes."

Lieutenant Blair asked, "Where is Director O'Brian?"

"We were just finishing up dinner," Kaleo explained. "We also have guests from Orlando, including Patriarch Cory Short."

Nodding, Lieutenant Blair said, "We've gathered ten youth today," he then waved at the other security guard. One by one, a group of kids came out of the shack.

John scowled then whispered to Nathan. Nathan softly giggled,

"Why are you whispering?" then transmitted, 'Logan is hearing everything I am.'

Drew and Corey began greeting the kids and asking them their names. Included in the group of boys were Bill Devine, Nicholas Shavers, Roger Mosqueda, Jeff Cummings, Stephen Marr, Jerry Burk, John Huth, Manuel Simonton, Jonathan Dupre and James Hahn. John and Nathan had taken immediate interest in Bill Devine, the tallest of the group.

John and Nathan transmitted messages back and forth. As Nathan went to Lieutenant Blair, Kaleo innocently asked John, "What's the problem?"

John shook his head and transmitted to Kaleo, "This one's not like the others. He's been planted by the Fundamentalist Church of Christ. Nathan called him a mole."

Lieutenant Blair drew his phaser and waved for the Ensign in the station to come outside. With his weapon drawn, the Ensign hurried outside. "Put your hands on your head and step away from the others, Mister Devine," Lieutenant Blair strongly ordered.

Bill Devine looked around nervously at the two armed men and shouted, "What? What did I do?"

Lieutenant Blair yelled, "MOVE AWAY FROM THE CHILDREN NOW!"

As Bill Devine took his first step away from the other kids and put his hands on his head, Kaleo lost his temper and shouted, "You stupid son of a bitch! You wouldn't know a good thing if it was right in front of your face, would you? Didn't Jesus say, 'love one another as I loved you'? But that's not good enough for you and your so called church!" Never losing eye contact with the boy, Kaleo loudly said,

"Lieutenant Blair, as leader of this team and acting on behalf of Director O'Brian, I want this asshole arrested. Subject him to mind scans, find out where he came from. If there are any of those FCC jack-offs within the Pacific Rim jurisdiction, arrest them all on charges of conspiracy against Clan Short of Vulcan."

"Aye Sir," Lieutenant Blair responded.

Bill Devine grinned, "We'll get you; all of you fucking fags will die."

That was all Nathan needed to hear. Logan appeared beside Nathan and John.

Kaleo held off, and with all his strength and weight, landed a fist on Bill Devine's jaw. Staggering backwards, Bill then took two steps toward Kaleo, but was hit by two phaser blasts and crumbled to the pavement. Kaleo started shaking his sore right hand and complained, "Mother fucking assholes don't even know we're around for all abused and abandoned kids." Noticing the shocked expressions of the other nine kids, Kaleo calmed down and explained, "I'm sorry; I wish you guys hadn't witnessed that. I was rescued by the Clan Friday and my life has never been so good. Clan Short doesn't care if you're gay or straight. We're here for any abandoned or abused kid."

Logan conferred with Lieutenant Blair while Kaleo continued greeting the kids. Logon softly said, "Lieutenant, I'll take this worthless sack of shit to Utah. In no time, I'll have locations of any FCC congregations this guy knows of. When we get more of the scum in shackles, we'll find out where any more of them might be hiding. They stirred up shit last week. I intend to feed it right back to them." Drew, Corey, John and Nathan all assured the Lieutenant that Kaleo would agree with the plan. Logan then moved over to the unconscious

Bill Devine and they both disappeared.

Kaleo began talking with each of the boys. Nicholas Shavers was thirteen and his parents hated him because he was gay and in a relationship with Roger Mosqueda. Jeff Cummings was twelve and his father was an alcoholic child abuser. Stephen Marr was eleven and his mother barely provided him with enough food. She knew that she couldn't provide for him and dropped him off at the gate. Jerry Burk, John Huth and Manuel Simonton were also eleven. Jonathan Dupre was ten and ran away from his foster parents. James Hahn was nine and only saw his parents when they needed to bitch about how everything wrong with them was all his fault.

"We're going to our main base on Oahu in Ewa Beach," Kaleo explained. "All you guys will have warm beds and plenty to eat from now on. We've also got pools, indoor and outdoor rec centers, basketball courts and a huge auditorium. Four of our leaders have their own band and perform for us often. Stephen, you're the only one with a suitcase, but all of you will have clothes and anything else you might need by the time you're ready for bed tonight." He paused and asked, "Any questions?"

Jonathan said, "I ain't eaten since this morning. How long till we can eat?"

Kaleo grinned, "About two minutes," then tapped his sub-vocal and said, "Daileass, fourteen to transport directly to the Ewa Beach chow hall."

"Your will be done, Mouth Rimmer," Daileass giggled.

Rolling his eyes, Kaleo snickered from Hawaii to the Ewa Beach kitchen. Almost all the kids exclaimed joyfully at their first transporter trip, then went for trays and got in line. Putting his suitcase down, Stephen Marr was the last to join the line. Kaleo also noticed the boy wasn't much taller than the nine-year-old boy beside him. Tapping his comm-badge, Kaleo called, "Doc Andrews to the CIC dining room, please."

Doc Andrews responded, "Is there a problem, Kaleo?"

Stepping away so the boy wouldn't overhear, Kaleo said, "I think so, Doc. We just picked up an eleven year old that's obviously malnourished."

"On my way," the Doctor replied. Kaleo started to walk towards the dining room to find Prez, but Doctor Andrews stopped him and asked, "Which boy, Kaleo?"

Turning around, Kaleo pointed and softly said, "The one in the green and blue striped polo shirt that looks like a tent."

Doc Andrews nodded, "Yep, I could've guessed," then went into the kitchen and began scanning the boy with his tricorder.

Sitting with Keith, Cory and Sean Short, Prez noticed Kaleo approaching and smiled, "How'd it go, Fist Rimmer?"

"Fist Rimmer?" Kaleo giggled, still rubbing his sore right hand with his left hand. "Guess you heard already."

As Kaleo sat down, Prez nodded, "Daileass patched us in to hear the blow-by-blow as it was happening." Prez then chuckled, "It's a good thing you went."

"If Prez, Mike and Derrick were there, the dude would probably need surgery instead of an ice pack on his chin," Keith snickered.

Prez warmly smiled, "You were great, Kaleo. I couldn't be prouder."

Cory added, "The FCC is on the run now. Prez has confirmed your orders and so have I."

"Where's my brothers?" Keith asked.

Kaleo answered, "Last I saw, showing the newbies through the chow line." Seeing Drew leading the pack into the dining room, Kaleo pointed.

Nathan hurried to the table and skidded to a halt between Cory and Prez. Nathan giggled, "John's getting really good. He felt something was wrong as soon as we arrived. Then he began light scans as the kids walked out of the security station. He zeroed in on Bill Devine before I did!"

Keith groaned, "Oh God!" and Prez cracked up. Keith smirked, "He's going to be impossible to live with." No sooner did Keith finish speaking, he was promptly beamed by a baby carrot. Keith huffed, "We need to move out, baby, soon!" and then swatted another incoming carrot out of the air.

Prez giggled, "First we need to contact the King." He then asked Cory, "Would you like to listen in, Cory?"

A few tables away, Mr. T and Kayla York both hollered, "NO!"

Kayla added, "It's only seven-thirty here, but it's one-thirty Eastern Time. You need to go to bed to be ready for another day."

Cory scowled, "Guess we need to be on our way. The Double J's and Beau need a vacation so, if it's okay with you, they're staying here."

"I see no problem with that," Prez smiled. "We've got plenty of space."

Cory snickered, "Send them back to Orlando if they get to be too much for you." Suddenly, several dozen baby carrots were launched across the dining room that Cory began swatting away.

Sean laughed as two carrots came around from behind Cory and nailed him in both ears at the same time. "Now that is what I call a food fight!"

"Just wait, babe! Since the adults seem to want to ruin the fun, I guess we'd better get home," Cory pouted, and he deflected a carrot trying to climb up his nose.

Keith and Prez stood, then shook hands with Cory and Sean. Prez said, "Stop by any chance ya get, guys. The Funny Farm's always open."

As Mr. T, Kayla, Austin, Timmy, Ricky, Adam and JJ approached, Cory smiled, "You guys come to Orlando next time."

"We'll show you a real Funny Farm!" Sean giggled.

Cory tapped his comm-badge. "Hey, Nanonuts, are you ready to take us home?"

Daileass laughed, "Any time you're ready, Micromind!"

Everyone waved and the Orlando Clan group vanished.

Prez turned to Keith, saying, "Mike and Derrick are still in the command center with Reyes."

Keith nodded, "Let's see what's going on."

Prez suggested, "Then we'll call the King." The couple walked across the dining room and into the command center. Stopping short inside the room, they found Mike, Derrick, Dillon and Jonah surrounding Reyes, cuddling and hugging him. Concerned, Prez frowned and asked, "Are you guys all right?"

"Definitely," Reyes smiled.

Mike explained, "Reboot caused a rush of old memories."

Derrick grinned, "Reyes is thirteen going on fifty-seven."

"Jeez," Keith softly said, "You're older than any of our parents. No wonder the memories were overwhelming."

"It's great!" Dillon cheered, "He's our big bro now and always will be!"

Prez explained, "I need to call the King before it gets any later. Can I do it here or should I go home?"

Derrick asked, "Do you need us around, Prez?"

Shaking his head, Prez said, "Reyes takes priority. Family always takes priority."

"We'll take our kids over to the pool then," Mike suggested.

Derrick remembered, "The Scoobies probably need another ointment treatment anyhow."

As the family walked by, Adam's voice came over the speakers in CIC. "Commander Casey to Director O'Brian," Prez immediately hurried over to the terminal and nodded to Paulie, bringing Adam up on the main screen.

Noting the tone in Adam's voice, Prez knew it was a business call and asked, "What can I do for you, Commander?"

Adam stated, "I just wanted to let you know that we will be running multiple operations on your islands during the next several hours. This is because of the information obtained from the mole that your Intel team was able to discover. Basically, what is happening is this; the Mole was able to give us the information we need to execute several operations to take down a growing group of sleeper cells run by a rogue faction of the FCC in the Republic of Hawaii. Last week, we were not able to capture any of the FCC members alive, so we have never been able to get any information. That is about to change."

Prez almost shivered at the feral grin that came across Adam's face as he spoke. He was about to say something when someone rushed into the picture behind Adam and handed him a rifle and then a gun belt. Adam turned for a moment to that the soldier, then turned back to Prez.

Prez took a deep breath and softly said, "What do you need from us, Adam? You can have any of my troops that you need."

Adam gave a half smirk. "That won't be necessary. All of the troops you have were not there for the battle on Saturday. The troops I will be using for this... most of them were there, and now it's time for them to get some payback."

Prez nodded, "Okay, if you need anything from us, just let us know."

"Well, two things," Adam said, "first, if you or any of your team want to be involved, just let me know and I will assign some extra security for those operations. Second, you will probably be getting some more kids from this. At least the ones that do not need debriefing."

Prez shook his head. "We haven't had phaser training yet; I think we'll stay out of this one. You guys are the military; we'll let you take care of it. As for the kids, we'll be ready for whatever you need."

"Sounds good, Prez, and thanks. Casey out."

"Oh joy," Keith sarcastically commented. "It wasn't bad enough to have greedy bastards in our government, now we have religious zealots too?"

"Not for very long," Prez sighed. Placing a hand gently on Paulie Casey's shoulder, Prez asked, "Get me King Aalona, please, bud."

"Before the list of topics grows anymore," Keith added.

"Placing the call now, Prez," Paulie reported. After a few moments, Paulie said, "This is Clan Short Pacific Rim Division headquarters. I have Director Preston O'Brian here to talk with His Majesty. Yes, I'll hold."

"Busy man," Keith softly said as he pulled a chair over and sat down.

Also taking a seat, Prez nodded, "He's got a shit load on his hands. I have to wonder if he's going to dissolve Parliament and take over or just oversee everything."

"Either way, he needs all the help he can get."

"We'll offer to help by eliminating CPS and national orphanages. If he accepts, that's one burden lifted."

After another few moments, Keith sighed, "While we're waiting,

I'll contact Peter Lambert for the additional condos at our other bases."

Prez nodded and smiled, "Thanks, babe." Keith then rolled across the room in the chair.

Paulie then repeated, "This is Clan Short Pacific Rim Division headquarters. I have Director Preston O'Brian here to talk with His Majesty." After a pause, Paulie said, "We've already been on hold." Paulie whined, "Okay, but this is important. Yeah, I'll hold." Paulie pressed mute and turned to Prez saying, "I think we're getting the Royal run-around here, boss. The second guy didn't even know we were on hold."

Prez nodded and said, "He's had a lot dumped on his shoulders, but if another person acts ignorant, get Daileass to find us a direct line."

Paulie smiled then remarked, "The music sucks."

Prez giggled, "Hawaiian?"

"No, far worse," Paulie grimaced, "ultra-light elevator music. They're probably expecting people to fall asleep while on hold."

"I hate that!" Prez snickered. He then slid forward and pulled up an Internet search on the King. Prez learned that King Aalona was working with Vulcan diplomats; The Republic of Hawaii had asked for and been granted the status of a Vulcan Facilitated Territory. The King was fashioning his new government after the United Kingdom's and Japan's Monarchies. Elections would be held to replace the Prime Minister, but the Parliament would report to the King. Any laws or policies instituted by Parliament on behalf of the People would have to be approved first by The Monarchy.

After about thirty minutes on hold and two more switches by Paulie, Prez had finished reading and Keith had completed his message to Peter Lambert. Paulie shook his head and sighed. Prez complained, "I haven't even met or talked with nine new kids." He then growled, "Daileass! Find me a direct video line to King Aalona. If he's not taking a shit, in the shower, or in bed with the Queen, find him and notify me when he's available."

Over the CIC loudspeakers, Daileass replied, "Workin' on it, Prez. I have your Clan robes. You'll need them for this meeting, now that you're officially Clan." Before Prez, a pile of folded black clothing appeared on the desk before him. Standing up, Keith and Prez put on their robes. On the left breast area was the Clan Short Emblem.

Looking down at himself, Keith smiled, "Pretty nice."

Prez nodded agreement, then grinned, "My only issue would be wearing black in the bright Hawaiian sun during the summer. Not that we ever get terribly hot here, but black absorbs heat."

Keith smirked, "Beats the hell out of talking to the King in boardies and T-shirts."

Prez and Keith sat back down. Only about a minute later, Daileass said, "Found him on a conference call with other heads of State, Prez. He did not know that you've been waiting and is wrapping up. Paulie can hang up. I'll connect you."

"Thanks, dude," Prez said. "Forewarn us before connecting. If Joel bowed to him, we probably should show our respect similarly."

"Got it," Daileass replied.

Keith said, "Joel's a prince, Prez. What should we do?"

Prez thought for a moment then said, "Let's start on the right foot or, more to the point, on one knee with our heads lowered." Keith nodded in agreement.

Only moments later, Daileass said, "The King is ready, Prez."

Keith and Prez got on one knee and lowered their heads slightly then Prez said, "Connect us, Daileass."

The screen flickered and King Aalona appeared on screen, saying, "Director O'Brian, rise and be seated, please."

"Good evening Your Majesty," Prez smiled up at the screen. Prez and Keith then returned to their chairs.

King Aalona said, "I apologize for the lack of communication within my Palace. In the future, Clan Short is to be treated with the same courtesies as any other head of State."

Prez nodded, "Thank you, Your Majesty. I called for several reasons. First, to introduce myself and my partner, Keith Hundser. Keith is second in command of our Division."

Keith said, "Hello, Your Majesty."

The King greeted Keith, then Prez said, "I just read that as of this morning, Hawaii is becoming a Vulcan territory. There are other thoughts I had that may be of interest to you, Sire."

The King nodded, but seemed distracted when he said, "Pardon me for a moment, please?" The King then looked beyond the screen and to his left slightly, forcefully saying, "I am in conference now, Aidrian! Do not interrupt us again!" Paulie quickly covered his mouth, then kicked himself and his chair across the room as he began snickering. The King then sighed, "My apologies, gentlemen. Even my staff are uncertain how they should proceed."

Prez nodded and grinned, "I know that feeling too well, Majesty. A few days ago I was a high school student. Now I find myself responsible for many lives."

The King nodded understandingly and smiled, "What are your thoughts, Director O'Brian?"

Prez replied, "Majesty, I found no news articles on the topic of Hawaiian Child Protection Services. Since that is where Clan Short discovered injustices, I thought perhaps Clan Short could take over that function within The Republic of Hawaii. Patriarch Cory Short was here today, and he agreed that we could perform that function with only minimal additional funding. Specifically, in addition to the percentage of Gross Domestic Product already paid, the portion of our social services budget allocated to CPS and the orphanages would be sufficient."

King Aalona nodded, then asked, "Director O'Brian, how many children were rescued Friday?"

"Eighty-seven, Majesty."

"Have additional children been rescued?"

"Yes Sire; an additional eighteen."

"How many are you prepared to feed and shelter?"

"Our five bases can provide for a total of two thousand, but we are still staffing the other four bases. Additional facilities can be provided so that we could double that if need be."

The King said, "My desire is to clean up the seedier areas of Honolulu. There are far too many children prostitutes on the streets." Prez nodded and the King asked, "Would you be willing to join me in a televised announcement to accomplish that task?"

"Yes, Sire, of course," Prez replied.

The King then turned slightly to his assistant and said, "Prepare for an immediate transmission to all Hawaiian television and radio stations, Aidrian." Keith, Paulie and the other boys in the CIC began scurrying around to get all the televisions turned on. Daileass was ready to record the upcoming announcement. Returning his attention to Prez, the King said, "While that is being accomplished, have you any other ideas?"

"Yes Sire, I did want to mention the sixth Clan Short base. It's on Oahu. The peninsula previously occupied by the United States Marine Corps is being occupied by the Clan Short's military division known as The UNIT. It will be a worldwide rapid response force not under my direct control. The UNIT's commander reports only to Patriarch Cory Short. There was an incident earlier this evening that I feel you need to be aware of as well."

"An incident?"

"Yes Sire, a boy from the Fundamentalist Church of Christ had attempted to infiltrate our base. As you are aware, the same organization was responsible for an attack on Clan Short, in the United States last week. Sixty-one of our troops were killed. The FCC mole has been interrogated, and operations are in effect to find the responsible parties and hold them accountable." Prez paused to gather his thoughts, then continued, "Sire, Clan Short is at war. While we firmly believe people have the right to choose their religion and personal beliefs, no one has the right to enforce those beliefs on others in a militant fashion."

King Aalona nodded, "I strongly agree. Only a few weeks ago an ROH abortion clinic was attacked via a letter bomb. Ten innocents were killed and more than twenty injured."

A voice off screen was heard saying, "All television and radio stations are prepared for your announcement, Majesty."

"Very well," King Aalona said. "Are you prepared, Director O'Brian?"

Prez asked, "Our primary purpose is to rescue the young prostitutes?"

"Yes. I will not make any mention of your military operations."

Prez turned to Paulie and said, "Notify Doctor Andrews so he's prepared for possible incoming tonight. Also notify Kekoa and Starfleet Security, so they're aware of possible repercussions."

Returning his attention to the screen, Prez said, "I'll wait for your introduction before saying a word, Sire."

The King nodded and smiled, "You are a very capable young man. We are both new to this, but we will do what must be done."

Seconds later, the television in the CIC showed the King, but had the sound turned all the way down. King Aalona said, "Aloha. Good evening, citizens of The Republic of Hawaii. This evening I was contacted by Clan Short Pacific Rim Division Director Preston O'Brian. After a very productive conversation with Director O'Brian, I have two announcements. Effective immediately, all ROH branches of Child Protection Services are closed. All future needs for Child Protection are to be directed to Clan Short Pacific Rim Division Headquarters. Employees of Child Protection Services are also directed to report to Clan Short Pacific Rim Division headquarters for possible re-employment.

"My second announcement concerns cleaning up the streets of our cities. There are far too many young prostitutes on the streets. I am certain that many do not wish to be prostitutes, but are working to survive in very difficult times. If you are among the many that do not wish to sell your bodies, I urge you, I beg you, to find your way to the nearest Clan Short base. At this time, I would like to introduce you to Clan Short Pacific Rim Division's Director, Preston O'Brian."

The television screen split in half with the King on the right and Prez on the left. "Thank you, Your Majesty," Prez smiled. "Clan Short exists for the benefit of abandoned and abused children. We value family, but not at the expense of our children. If you are abused or abandoned, you are welcome in the Clan. Federation Youth Services will work with children and families for everyone's mutual benefit, but emotional and physical abuse of children must not be allowed to continue in our society."

Prez paused for a moment, then spoke from his heart. "I am an orphan that was adopted by a caring family. I've always known I was lucky, but these last few days have proven to me how fortunate I am. My own parents never beat me or emotionally abused me. My adopted parents have never abused me either. Under no circumstances should a child be beat or abused into submission. It's been proven over and over again that violence begets violence. There are other alternatives. If you are an abused or abandoned child; if you are walking the streets trying to earn money to survive; if you are a pregnant teen shunned by your family, then come to us for help. We can help and will help you. If you are a doctor or lawyer, or housekeeper or landscaper, or teacher or chef that has a deep caring for children, but are having trouble finding employment, come to us for help. Don't continue down the rough and rocky road alone. Clan Short is part of your community and we can help."

Prez then smiled, "Thank you for your time and thank you, Your Majesty."

King Aalona said, "Director O'Brian and I share the same dreams and goals for a better world; one filled with caring and hope for the future; a world where we all help one another; where separations are eliminated. We will begin working on the future progress of mankind here and now with our Island Nation. It may take a life time, but we will succeed with your help. Aloha."

A second or two later, normal television programming resumed. The King said, "Thank you for calling, Director O'Brian. I have high hopes that we've made an impact this evening."

Prez nodded, "Me too, Sire. We've accomplished much more than I could've hoped for."

The King then said, "I have decided that the uninhabited Island of Kaho'olawe shall henceforth be granted to Clan Short Pacific Rim Division."

Prez's and Keith's jaws dropped. Prez stammered, "Y-you are very generous, Sire."

"If ever we can help each other again, please call me," The King sincerely said.

"Thank you, Your Majesty," Prez smiled. "Have a good night."

"I will sleep better tonight. Good night."

The screen went blank and the speaker clicked, indicating the connection was broken. Keith and all the boys in the CIC erupted with applause, cheers and laughter.

Blushing fiercely, Prez loudly giggled, "Hey! Might I remind everyone that the shit is about to hit the fan?"

Springing out of his chair, Keith howled, "You got that right! It's only a matter of time before we're inundated with more kids! And tomorrow morning the gates will be crowded with professionals of every sort!"

While the laughter subsided, Prez stood and said, "Call me if you need anything, Paulie."

"Yes, Sir!" Paulie giggled, knowing the response he would get.

Prez spun around and shouted, "'Scuse me?"

"What?" Paulie giggled, "You just proved yourself by taking the political bull by the horns!"

Shaking his head, but smiling widely, Prez huffed impatiently.

Keith slid over and wrapped his arms around Prez. Keith whispered, "Speaking of horns."

Prez whimpered and Keith chuckled as he led his lover out of the CIC. As soon as the door opened, they were overwhelmed by more applause and cheering from the adults and kids still in the dining room. The adults were closest and therefore loudest, but further away, John was firing baby carrots up towards the high ceiling that exploded into carrot confetti.

Reyes Taraschke Personal Log 1

Saturday, October 30, 2004

Life has been amazing these last two days. This is the first chance I've had to write about it since my new daddies suggested the idea earlier tonight. They said that it would be good for me and for them too, if anything ever happened to my memory, to have a place outside my own positronics where everything I think and feel is stored. Almost everyone is down in the basement chatting or nesting or playing video games. Mike, one of my new daddies, asked our new leader, Prez, if I could use a computer to begin telling my story.

Yesterday morning, about ten, my life and the lives of all the kids at the orphanage changed dramatically. Our lives were terrible at the orphanage. We were all slaves to the adults. They had us cook, clean, paint walls and ceilings, repair anything broken, mow lawns, perform sexual acts for them, with them and with other adults. The days all ran together in a never ending blur of nightmarish images.

The strange thing is, I know my name is Reyes Taraschke; I know I'm an android; I know that I appear to be thirteen; I know that I have friends and I know their names. But I do not know my own birthday; the day I was first activated. I do not know how long I was at the orphanage; everything before June first, 2004 is a blank.

Even more distressing, my friends can tell me stuff about me that I have no recollection of. According to Jonah and Kaleo, I've always been at the orphanage. Jonah became an orphan at age three and is nine now, but he says that I've always watched out for him and been his best friend. Fourteen-year-old Kaleo had been at the orphanage since he was a baby, and he says that I was there as far back as he can remember.

Who am I?

I do not really know. I only know what others have said about me, with very few exceptions.

My two best friends are Kaleo Palakiko and Jonah Desak. Tory Burgas and Liki Kealoha are also good friends. Between Kaleo, Tory, Liki and myself, we kept the adults at the orphanage from having their wicked way with the younger kids. We couldn't keep them satisfied all the time, but we really tried. Mostly, the kids were photographed. Sadly, the pedophile adults liked the little kids because they were young and hairless. That was something Kaleo, Tory, Liki and I couldn't satisfy because we're all pubescent adolescents. But we could at least try to wear the old folks down enough where photography sessions were the worst they could dish out to the little kids.

A simple knock at the front door yesterday morning changed all that. I wish I had seen it, but I was upstairs, tied up and getting my ass whipped at the time. I hadn't done anything wrong to get punished, but I did push Jonah aside so he wouldn't get sexually abused. Suddenly, there was a loud crashing sound and what I can only describe as an ear-splitting roar. Then the whole house seemed to shake, like a downstairs wall had been knocked down. Starfleet Vulcans beamed in and stunned the asshole that was whipping me, then set me free. When I made it downstairs with Jonah and some other kids, I found Kaleo, still naked, but wide-eyed and smiling like I've never seen before. A wall wasn't knocked down, but Mister Kanes, who had locked himself away with Kaleo, was lying unconscious on the floor beyond the wall he had been thrown through.

We were herded into a room where a little boy, as small as Jonah, said, "My name is Joel Short of Clan Short. You are safe now. You won't be hurt any more." Oddly, the boy was wearing Armour and a Crown, and a large Sword seemed to be slung on his back. When he turned to talk to a large bear-like beast that was standing behind him, I could see that the Sword had nothing holding it on his back; and it was in pieces, but the pieces seemed to keep themselves together.

Kewl! Weird but very kewl!

I silently wondered, who are Clan Short? I had never heard of them. We were never allowed to watch television or listen to radios at the orphanage, so I had no idea. I was still thinking and trying to figure out what was going on while Joel was talking to other kids and with Vulcans. The next thing I knew, all the kids and I were standing on the lawn of a beautiful house. There was an older man sitting on the porch drinking from a cup.

We spent a good part of the day there with Uncle Iokii. Our orphanage had about thirty kids. Arriving intermittently over the next hour or so were more kids, until there were more than eighty kids at Uncle Iokii's house. The Vulcans had doctors that checked us out, gave us hypo-spray inoculations and healed our many wounds. Like me, many of us had bruises and other "soft tissue" injuries that would have to heal naturally over time. We were fed as much as we wanted and even had cookies and brownies for dessert. We were bathed. Soon, we had real clothes, not the kind we were used to, that you can see through, but real clothes – underwear, board shorts and shirts. They even gave us sandals for our feet. It seemed that no sooner did we all have clothes to be proud of, than Joel's Sehlat, I-Cheya was stripping them off, giving each of us tongue baths and then tossing us in Uncle Iokii's pool.

While Joel was sitting alone with Kevin, I took the opportunity to go over and thank him for rescuing us. At that time, I learned a little bit about Clan Short and even asked about his Armour, Crown and Sword. I cannot say that I understood the explanation entirely, because it had to do with Vulcan history, but the general idea was that Joel was an heir to an important Vulcan family line. Therefore, the Armour, Crown and Sword respond to his commands.

Around the time all eighty of us had been tossed in the pool, trucks began rolling by the house. Some of the trucks stopped at Uncle Iokii's and delivered more food and drinks. I am certain that I had eaten a week's worth of food in a single afternoon. Jonah and I found a nice spot under a tree where we took a nap. As far as Jonah and I were concerned, this was all too good to be true. We were actually afraid to fall asleep as we might wake up back in the orphanage.

Kyle, Levi and Tyler woke us up. Kyle smiled, "Come on, sleepy heads. We're going to make a small change of location. There's gonna be a party tonight."

Between munched cookies, Levi corrected, "A luau."

Looking around quickly and realizing that we had, in fact, been rescued, Jonah squealed, "It was all real? We was taken away from there? It happened?"

Tyler rapidly nodded and smiled, "We said that we'd take care of you guys. Everything's falling into place."

Jonah and I got up and followed the three purple-eyed boys. It seemed we had just arrived with the larger group of rescued kids when we were someplace else, away from Uncle Iokii's house and pool. How we moved or where we moved to, I had no idea, but at least we were all together. People were setting up tables and tents.

Other people were cooking more food, and truckloads of food and drink were being prepared for the luau. A stage was being erected in another field. Speakers and video screens were being setup at other areas. We went down to a beach, where I-Cheya played Toss-The-Kid some more. Once again we were naked. I almost wanted to ask why they had bothered getting us clothes, but there were no creepy adults around and we were all having fun. Then we went back over to the fields where we ate again. Afterward, my belly felt like it was holding a month's worth of food.

"Pay attention to the band tonight, guys," Kyle grinned.

I couldn't help but wonder "Why?"

"They're that good," Kyle giggled. I noticed Kyle glancing at Tyler and Levi, then all three began giggling.

They were Clan and saved us, so I trusted them, but I could tell they knew something we didn't. I was about to ask what they were hiding when suddenly my lower abdomen twisted and growled. After all that food, I had to find a toilet, so that's what I wound up asking about. There were rows of Porta-Potties along the eastern bluff. Jonah and I raced in that direction with lots of other boys and girls following us. Considering how much I ate and how much my belly ached, I was prepared to fill the portable toilet to overflowing, but I didn't. When Jonah and I were kidding about it with Kevin, another Clan kid named Kai explained, "You guys weren't being fed right. I know what that's like. Your belly gets full fast, but your body is absorbing all you need that it hadn't been getting." He blushed and giggled, "You feel like you're gonna shit a mountain, but hardly anything actually comes out. That means you're gonna get healthier faster so it's kewl, bros."

Kevin paused and seemed thoughtful for a few moments. He grinned and nodded, then looked at us again, saying, "Come on. Let's get a welcoming committee together!" and started running. Jonah and I followed, not knowing where we were going or who we were welcoming. Kevin gathered almost half of the kids and he led us west, across a road and beyond some trees until we were standing on a bluff overlooking a beach. Kevin had us all crouch down and hide. Even his dog was lying down flat on the ground.

We watched I-Cheya, way down the beach, tossing more kids. They were all boys except for the older woman with them. These weren't rescued kids though. They were naked and walking in the surf in our direction. Compared to Joel, they were tall. There was a redhead, two blonds and five brown haired dudes. Kaleo tapped Kevin on the shoulder and whispered, "Who are these guys?"

Kevin smirked and softly replied, "Friends."

I wondered, "Are we hiding to surprise them and if so, why?"

Kevin giggled, "It's all very kewl, even the woman. When I say go, run down the bluff and say hello to the guys." Kaleo, Tory and I uncertainly glanced at each other and shrugged. They were still quite a distance away. I thought to ask Kevin more about the group, but I didn't get the chance. He suddenly jumped up and yelled, "NOW!" Following his lead, all of us ran, slid and fell down the bluff to the sand below. We could hear the other guys laughing at our large group. Kevin was heading directly for Joel shouting "Sa'r!" while the rest of us were stripping our clothes off and heading for the water.

Joel hollered, "Kevvy!" and ran to his new husband. They spun each other around and hugged, then joined the rest of us, approaching the new guys. Kaleo, Tory and I were the first to meet Prez, Keith, Mike, Derrick, Drew, Corey, John and Bruce. All these new guys were exceptionally cute! As usual, Kaleo was spokesman for our group. The new guys seemed more concerned about where the stage was than they were about food. Seeing them up close, it was obvious that none of these guys were orphans or abused.

As it turned out, the red-haired dude, Prez, was an orphan. His parents died in a plane crash two years earlier, but he was adopted by his partner's parents. What was most surprising was that the new kids didn't know that Clan Short was in the Republic of Hawaii or that they had rescued over eighty kids that day.

I was walking beside Drew and asked, "Don't you guys get to watch television either?"

Drew tilted his head curiously and softly replied, "Sure we can, when there's something worth watchin'."

Taking Drew's hand, Corey grinned mischievously, "Me and Drew needed some private time alone after school though."

Blushing intensely, Drew shook his head and smiled so wide that his face seemed to split in half. Drew giggled, "Corey's my boyfriend."

"Oh," I droned. "That's really sweet. How old are you guys?"

Corey answered, "I'm eleven. Drew just turned twelve, in August."

Drew asked, "How old are you, Reyes?"

"Thirteen," I answered, but didn't elaborate. I didn't know them or if they might have a problem with androids, so I didn't tell them.

Both Corey and Drew scanned my body briefly. I was taller than Corey and about as tall as Drew, but Corey had as much hair around his dick as Drew and I. Locking eyes with me, Corey asked, "You're a late bloomer?"

Drew giggled and teased Corey, "You're just an early bloomer, dude."

"That's your fault too!" Corey softly giggled.

Drew's mouth hung open and he turned even redder. The three of us cracked up. Jonah laughed too and I think that surprised Corey and Drew. Jonah's nine, but small for his age. Walking ahead of us, Kaleo was explaining to Prez, Keith, Mike and Derrick that we were sexually abused at the orphanages. They were not only shocked, but obviously disgusted. Kaleo then explained how we were rescued by Clan Short, and that I-Cheya had "picked up a fat man at our orphanage and threw him through a wall." Kaleo cracked up at the memory and loudly laughed, "It was great! Exactly what that overstuffed, tiny-pricked bastard deserved!"

Almost all of us, except the very youngest kids, lost it and cracked up. Using space between my thumb and forefinger, I showed Drew and Corey about how small his cock really was. Corey absolutely howled laughing and staggered around.

Then the woman called us to her. We found out she was Keith's, Drew's and John's mother. She was also Prez's foster mom. With a nod from Kaleo, we all started walking up the beach.

Mike smiled, "They all listen to you?"

Kaleo shrugged, "Mostly; I'm one of the oldest and have been watching out for them the best I could, so...."

"Kaleo in Hawaiian means 'the voice' and man, does he use it!" Tory interrupted.

Kaleo chuckled, "Shush!"

"WHAT?" Tory incredulously giggled, "Just cos ya can't ever shut up!" Kaleo took a playful swing at Tory, but Tory ducked away and ran up the beach.

The woman had us get dressed, explaining that it was time to eat. I wondered where Corey's mom was, and Corey said she was on her way with his dad. Unfortunately, I never got to ask where Derrick and Mike's parents were as they were helping load I-Cheya with little kids. In only a few minutes, we were all dressed again. The little kids got a ride up the bluff from I-Cheya. The huge Sehlat left nice, deep indentations for the rest of us older kids to easily climb the steep bluff.

While we loaded our trays with food, Kaleo, Tory, Liki and I were keeping watch on the new guys. It could easily be seen that they were very close friends. We couldn't hear exactly what they were saying to each other, but they occasionally leaned against each other, and more often broke into fits of laughter. We found a table and sat down to eat. Two teenage boys from another orphanage, named Sean Moorhead and Horacio Sulin, joined us at our table. The orphanage Sean and Horacio were at was like ours. They weren't fed well and were sexually abused like we were. Prez stopped by our table and asked if he and his friends could join us.

It was a little strange at first. Us orphanage kids were eating fast until they sat down with us. We slowed down a little and Kaleo even passed a comment. "Is this the greatest food ever, or am I just underprivileged?"

Prez said that it was really good food, "some of the best I've ever tasted," making us feel better. The four guys made us feel more relaxed and talked to us about the Clan, told us they were musicians, and then said that they'd like to help us recover from the abuses at the orphanages. They had us watch the sunset. It was the most colorful sunset we'd ever seen, with reds, yellows, greens, and purples washing across the western sky. Keith suggested that we wake up early the next morning to watch the sunrise on our first full day of freedom. Mike and Derrick began playing catch with their food. In moments, all of us were doing the same. Jonah was tossing tiny cakes up for me to catch in my mouth.

They weren't just nice guys; they were great. I could easily see myself becoming friends with any of them. While we were playing, Keith's mom came by our table. She didn't know how badly we were abused. Learning of our sexual and physical abuses made her very sad. All of the Ewa Beach boys surrounded her and tried to make her feel less sad. Ultimately, it was little Levi that made her feel better.

Arriving at the luau, after we had finished eating for the fourth time that day, were Mike's, Derrick's and Corey's parents. Derrick, Mike, Keith and Prez stayed with us while the adults ate. They were getting anxious about the concert and began singing for us.

Prez sang; "I'm a lumberjack, and I'm okay. I sleep all night and I work all day."

Derrick, Mike and Keith then sang; "He's a lumberjack, and he's okay. He sleeps all night and he works all day."

Prez then sang; "I cut down trees. I eat my lunch. I go to the lavatory. On Wednesdays I go shoppin', And have buttered scones for tea."

While we were all giggling about Prez going to the lavatory, Derrick, Mike and Keith sang; "He cuts down trees. He eats his lunch. He goes to the lavatory. On Wednesdays he goes shopping, And has buttered scones for tea. He's a lumberjack, and he's okay. He sleeps all night and he works all day."

Joel and Kevin joined us. Again, Prez sang; "I cut down trees. I skip and jump. I like to press wild flowers. I put on women's clothing, And hang around in bars."

Appearing very uncertain and shifting their eyes back and forth, Derrick, Mike and Keith disjointedly sang; "He cuts down trees. He skips and jumps. He likes to press wild flowers. He puts on women's clothing, And hangs around in bars? He's a lumberjack, and he's okay. He sleeps all night and he works all day."

We were all laughing and giggling when Prez sang; "I cut down trees. I wear high heels, Suspendies, and a bra. I wish I'd been a girlie, Just like my dear Papa."

Kaleo and Tory, and Jonah and I were in tears laughing harder than ever as Derrick, Mike and Keith reluctantly sang; "He cuts down trees. He wears high heels, Suspendies, and a bra?"

Shoving Prez, Keith complained, "What's this? Wants to be a girlie?! Oh, My! And I thought you were so rugged! Poofter!"

Joel and Kevin were rocking each other while laughing hysterically. Kaleo fell on the ground and roared laughing, but Derrick, Mike and Keith finished the song. "He's a lumberjack, and he's okay. He sleeps all night and he works all day. He's a lumberjack, and he's okaaaaay. He sleeps all night and he works all day."

Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike finally broke down laughing and bowed while we all clapped and cheered. Then they huddled up. We had just stopped laughing and caught our breath when they lined up and began singing; "Down at an English fair one evening I was there, When I heard a showman shouting underneath the flair. I've got a lovely bunch of coconuts, There they are all standing in a row. Big ones, small ones, some as big as your head. Give them a twist a flick of the wrist. That's what the showman said." While they were singing, they were making hand gestures in front of their crotches, showing us the size of their 'coconuts'. All of us were cracking up, leaning against each other and falling down to the grassy ground while they sang this silly tune.

We didn't even realize that their parents were now watching and listening to their sons. While we all hiccuped and tried desperately to catch our breath, the four boys changed out of T-shirts and put on silver-gray polo shirts. Prez explained, "We've got to get ready for our act now, dudes."

Mike added, "Round everyone up and hurry over to the stage. Get the best seats you can."

Breathlessly, Kaleo giggled from the grass, "Please sing those songs again! That was great!"

Derrick shook his head and sniggered, "It's time to rock!"

All four boys enthusiastically shouted, "ROCK AND ROLL!" then walked off with their parents. Joel, Kevin and more of the Clan Short boys went with them back stage. Other Clan boys and G-Cats joined us gathering the rest of the rescued kids. We were given the first two rows of the audience chairs and were looking up at the six foot high stage. The only people that might have had a better view than we did were those watching the show on television in their homes. None of us had ever been to a concert before. The stage was pretty, with colored lights shining down from above and across from the sides of the stage.

The music that had been playing through the speakers stopped.

All the stage lighting went out. A minute or so later, a Hawaiian radio disk jockey came out and outlined the night's entertainment. Then he introduced the band from Ewa Beach, "Old Habits" and left the stage. Mike came out first, jogging all the way across the stage to the guitars. He was followed by Prez, who picked up another guitar. Derrick was next and went to the drums. Keith came up and stood before a rack of keyboards. Green and yellow lights around the stage turned on.

Keith played the first notes that rumbled across the fields, and swirled from the left speakers to the right and back again. Soon, Mike, Prez and Derrick joined in. With a spotlight on him, Keith sang lead vocals with the others singing background vocals. The fields seemed to be alive and awash in sounds. It was LOUD! It was hard to believe that the same four goofballs who were singing to us minutes earlier were now on stage playing and singing. They were very good musicians and vocalists. Derrick caught my attention though. He was a great drummer! Sometimes he seemed to be easily moving from drums to cymbals, but other times I couldn't even see his hands; they were moving so fast that they were a blur.

Every now and then, between songs, they talked to the audience. When they weren't singing, Keith, Prez and Mike were dancing around the stage. When they sang the first ballad, lots of the girls began moaning and groaning. Immediately after the ballad they played an awesome song about rescues. That's the song that got me up and bouncing with Jonah. Every time they sang "Oh oh, rescue me," I felt my heart race and my dick throb. All of the songs were brand new to me and probably to all of us rescued kids.

For some reason, I wanted to be up there on stage with them. As far as I know, I've never played an instrument and I only would've made a fool of myself, but I did want to play. Of all the instruments, the drums interested me most. I couldn't figure out why I felt the way I did, so I just watched them enjoying themselves while they played for thousands of people. At one point, during an instrumental, I looked over my shoulder to one of the field video displays. A camera was on Mike while he played the melody of the song.

Keith sang the next song and was really getting into it. A whole bunch of us kids in the audience were up on our feet, dancing and clapping in time to the music. Prez sang the lead vocals on the next song that was about friends and friendship. Mike was instigating the audience to sing along during that song and many did sing. Unfortunately, we didn't really know the words and only sang a few words now and then. They then played another ballad. All around the fields, couples were slow dancing. Again, some of the girls in our group began moaning and squealing.

Mike sang lead vocals and played an acoustic guitar for the next song. He was obviously enjoying himself because he was hopping during almost the entire song. My attention kept getting drawn back to Derrick though. He wasn't just a good drummer, he was fantastic! I could see the face of the bass drum moving while his right hand hit cymbals and his left hand moved around the other drums. After dedicating the next song to Starfleet, Mike played and sang another song about star riders. Derrick's hands were blurs again. And the sound of the drums through the speakers were shifting left and right, back and forth.

The whole concert was nothing short of amazing! Pictures and videos were flashing up on the backdrop behind the band. The words were perfect for us rescued kids. Keith sang another ballad that had some of the girls in tears. I think Keith noticed them because he shifted focus and looked way out into the audience. They didn't get a chance to stay all lovey-dovey though because the next song Keith sang was a rocker. Mike and Prez were bouncing around while they played, then stopped and walked up to a single microphone to sing the backup vocals. When Keith sang the next verse, they started bopping around again. Derrick was singing background vocals too. How he managed to sing and play like he was, I may never know. They played so many great tunes, I think each of us had our favorites and our favorite band members. While I obviously liked Derrick, Jonah thought Mike was the best. Kaleo was pointing at Keith during several parts of the show. Tory was actually following Prez's every move. Sean, the kid from the other orphanage, danced almost the entire time.

During another song, the four guys were singing different parts at different times. Keith would sing a part, Mike and Derrick would come in singing another part and Prez would add another part. Again, I wondered, how they could do that without messing each other up. They did it though and seemed to enjoy doing it, watching our eyes dart from one to the other. They then played another dance song that got us all up on our feet. Again, they sang different parts at different times, making our eyes dart around.

A harder rock song was played next, with Mike and Prez leaning back-to-back against each other. Jonah pointed them out. But again, I was watching Derrick and pointed him out to Jonah. Almost as if I had queued him, Derrick said, "Ask not what your country can do for you!" then they finished the song. I picked up Jonah and sat him up on my shoulders, then we both began clapping furiously.

They played another ballad, then started another spacey song with a low rumble through the fields. Without warning, they all fell into the groove and began rocking again. Derrick sang that song, occasionally asking, "Can you hear me, can you hear me running, can you hear me calling you?" It was another really great song. I happened to look over my shoulder and, on the video screens, saw a close-up of Derrick playing and singing. I pointed it out to Jonah, Kaleo and Tory.

As if that song wasn't enough, Prez began slapping the crap out of his bass and sang lead vocals on the next song, which I think was titled 'Wildest Dreams'. Prez has a deeper voice and he sang it like he was leading an army into battle. And Mike was getting really animated during the guitar solo. It was all phenomenal, as if they had chosen the songs specifically for us. I know they couldn't possibly have, but it sure seemed that way.

During one instrumental song, Brant and Matthew were flying around way above the stage. The entire audience gasped then cheered. Derrick had a drum solo during the song that almost pushed my positronic matrix to overload. How was he controlling those drum sticks and hitting the drums so precisely, I wondered. Brant and Matthew landed on the stage, then disappeared. It obviously broke the band's concentration, but very briefly. They then continued playing and finished the song to a roar of applause and cheers. Something was happening on stage though. They were all looking back stage and shouted something. Then they all reached for their mouths and started laughing. Again, each of the four of them spoke to the audience and joked around. They were truly artists and musicians that loved what they were doing.

They played two more songs before jogging off stage. The disk jockey came back onstage and prompted them to come out again for an encore. A minute or two later they came back onstage, waving to the audience and thanking us. They played an awesome instrumental where Mike roamed around the stage playing directly to us. Then they played one more ballad that had the girls screeching and couples dancing. At the end, they gathered center stage and bowed, then hurried off stage. The whole concert lasted over two hours. Remarkable!

I know it was my first concert, or at least the first one I could remember, but it was all so great. While I was trying to work my way backstage with Jonah, I overheard something from one of the Clan boys. They were planning on making a new Clan Division right here in Hawaii, and the Ewa Beach boys would be our leaders. The only question was, which would be the leader of the new division? It was to be kept a secret until morning though, until Joel could figure out which would be our new leader.

I never did manage to get backstage, but soon all the Ewa Beach boys came out from the pack of people surrounding them. Catching up to Derrick, I smiled and told him, "That was a completely awesome concert, from beginning to end!"

Derrick chuckled, "Thanks, Reyes. I saw you watching me."

"You're a great drummer."

"I try," Derrick simply stated.

Shaking my head, I giggled, "You do more than try, you are! Seriously!"

Moving over by Mike, Jonah asked, "Where are we going?"

Mike said, "We're gathering the little kids so we can get them to bed." Looking down at my friend, Mike asked, "How're you feeling? Are you tired, little dude?"

"I guess," Jonah shrugged. "But it's been such a great day. I don't want it to end yet."

"We're getting a bus to take you guys to Anahola Bay," Mike explained. "Starfleet's got a rec center there. Joel and the Clan have everything set for us."

Jonah looked up and almost begged, "You're coming too, aren't ya?"

Mike nodded, "Yup! First the younger kids go, then us older kids."

Jonah asked, "Would you stay the night with me and Reyes?"

Mike chuckled, "Derrick's gonna be with us too."

Before I could stop myself, I giggled, "Oh, sweet!"

Walking behind us, Mike's dad chuckled, "That settles those sleeping arrangements!"

We started finding other kids and walked over by the Porta-Potties to find some more. Each kid we found thanked Mike and Derrick for the concert and excitedly overflowed about their favorite songs. Soon, we had a bunch of kids with us and were heading back across the fields when we found a little girl crying. Her mother had been snagged by a transporter beam.

While Mike's father got the kids loaded on the bus, Derrick and Mike led us teenagers back to the food. I was more thirsty than hungry though after four meals in a single day. In a few minutes, I was sitting at a table with the Ewa Beach boys, Jonah, Kaleo, Sean and Horacio. We were all just relaxing while Prez explained that teenagers would buddy-up and share rooms with the younger kids. Of course, us rescued kids didn't know how to sleep with less than three or four to bed, never mind four to an entire room. We let them know we were nervous about sleeping in a strange place.

Mike sighed, "It's a Starfleet facility. None of us could possibly be safer. I know it's something new to you, and we can fully understand how you feel, but this is really kewl, dudes."

Derrick nodded agreement, "Sleeping three or four to a bed isn't normal or right. Mike and me have our own beds at our houses, but the last two years, since we hooked up as a couple, neither of us can sleep well alone anymore. So I spend a few nights at his place with him, then he comes over my house and spends a few nights there with me. You'll see, it's way more comfortable to share a bed with someone else and still have room to move around, without having someone knock you out of the bed and onto the floor."

We all began giggling and nodding because we had been in that situation before. Only to change the subject, I began talking with Derrick about drumming and asked him to teach me to play. He promised that he would, no matter where we wound up with the Clan. Unable to hide my disappointment, I frowned, "But I really wanna be with you."

"And I have to be with Reyes," Jonah added.

Derrick nodded understandingly and smiled, "We'll find a way to make that happen."

Relieved, I said, "That would be very kewl." I felt like Derrick was the kind of person I would definitely want to emulate; not only because he was a drummer, but just because he was the kind of person I wanted to be like.

Uncle Iokii came over with some beers for the band members, which they happily accepted. Joel came over and started to greet us, but then seemed to turn pale and hurried off, burying himself against

I-Cheya. Two of the G-Cats went over to see what was wrong. "That was weird," Keith sighed.

The Prime Minister went on stage and began delivering his speech. It was quickly apparent that he was speaking of the Clan Short rescues. Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike began goofing on him and we all smiled at their wacky remarks. John walked over to our table and said, "Something's wrong, Prez. I..." Never taking his eyes off the Prime Minister, John shook his head and offered, "He don't feel right."

Prez put his beer down. Wrapping an arm around John and pulling him closer, Prez wondered, "What do ya mean?"

John shrugged, "Him... he feels bad. I dunno why, he just does."

Keith explained, "He's a politician, bro. He'll kiss anyone's ass to get the brownie points." Hearing that, Kaleo, Tory, Sean and Horacio cracked up.

Kyle growled, "It's him, Elf. He's 'The Boss' behind it all!"

Then Joel called over, "Get the kids safe, Preston."

Keith muttered, "Preston? Since when?"

But Joel was already giving orders to his team. I could not believe what I saw when Kyle plainly disappeared from where he had been standing! I mean it; not a sound or anything; he was there one second and gone the next! While I was still searching the area for Kyle, Prez stood and shouted, "All you guys and girls, I want you over behind the video displays and speakers." He pointed and screamed, "MOVE! NOW!"

"Oh crap!" I hollered as I stood, and quickly grabbed Jonah, then raced to where Prez had pointed we should hide.

"What the hell is goin' on?" Jonah screamed.

I frantically explained, "Clan Short found 'The Boss' behind the child sex ring!"

"I wanna see!" Jonah hollered.

"Are you nuts?" I ranted, "You saw what I-Cheya did to Mister Kanes!" Parking my butt behind the speakers, I forced Jonah down onto my lap and held him there.

In less than a minute, all of us were gathered behind the speakers. Prez, Keith, their father and Mike's father counted heads to make sure we were all safe. Mike's dad, still wearing his Police uniform, said, "Stay here and stay down low in case things get ugly," before running around the speakers.

Mike shook his head and grumbled, "If he gets hurt, my mom is gonna kill me!"

Derrick disbelievingly glared at Mike. "Oh," Derrick droned, "she'll break your heart." Mike nodded, then rested his head on Derrick's shoulder. Wrapping an arm around Mike, Derrick shifted closer and kissed the top of Mike's head.

Hearing that short conversation, I realized that Mike and Derrick were virtually inseparable. They knew each other so well that they could almost read each others minds. I wondered what it might be like to love someone that much; how wonderful that must be.

All I've ever known was physical love, the sexual acts, but not the emotions that should be behind them. At the orphanage, if we didn't have sex with the adults as we were told, we wouldn't be fed a meal. And the 'meals' were small to begin with. I wanted to spend a lot more time with both of them, but didn't know how to accomplish that. Under no circumstances did I want them to think I had sexual desire for them because I honestly did not. I simply had a need for exposure to that sort of love. My dilemma was figuring out how to tell them what I wanted, since I couldn't really describe it in terms other than 'to learn the emotion of love'. And that's a really poor description, considering they were already obviously in love with each other.

We heard Joel challenging the Prime Minister. We heard the Prime Minister say, "I think not." Then there were shouts, gunfire and other sounds that might've been phaser fire followed by a man's scream.

After a few seconds of silence, we all heard Joel say, "You are sentenced to death... in case you didn't know it... but I think you did... okay, that was a total waste of breath. Blow your nose, Bo-Bo." Joel called, "Your Majesties. Will you come up here, please?" and we all followed Prez, Keith, Mike and Derrick around to the front of the speakers to see what would happen next.

Kaleo joked, "Music, politics, violence and vaudeville! That's what I call entertainment! What a night!" Knowing Kaleo too well, I lost it and cracked up. At least I wasn't laughing alone though, almost all the kids were giggling.

When I looked up at the stage again, the King, Queen, Kyle, Tyler and Galli were on the stage with Joel. "Yes, your Highness?" the King prodded.

Joel said, "The Islands and Republic of Hawaii need leadership, and the Government has been found lacking. Are you prepared to regain that which was taken from you?"

"I... I do not know, Highness. I never expected for this to be a possibility," the King answered.

Joel clasped his hands together and said one word, "Sa'ren."

Before the King, the Shattered Sword of Surak appeared in the young Vulcan's hands.

/Are you willing to rule with compassion, to guide with wisdom, to be the first in defense and the last to have comfort? Are you willing to be all you can be?/

The King blinked and stared at the light-pulsating Shattered Sword. He nodded slowly, "I will try... but I don't think I'm ready."

/That is why you are the perfect choice. I Crown you King of the Jeweled Isles, Lord of Hawaii and Protector of the Pacific Rim./

The Sword burst out in brilliant light. Around the heads of both the King and Queen beautiful Crowns appeared. On the apex of the brow of each, the Royal standard of Hawaii was clearly visible.

"Welcome back, Your Royal Majesties," Joel grinned as he bowed from the waist. Everyone in the audience stood and applauded.

Then I remembered that Hawaiian television crews were on location and everything that we didn't see would likely be shown on the news that night. I reminded Derrick and Mike of that, and we were looking forward to watching it on TV at the hotel.

That's what my first day of freedom and as a Clan Short kid was like. For another hour and a half, we gathered back at the dining fields and relaxed, waiting for our bus ride to Anahola Bay. The stage was cleaned up and the final entertainment of the evening began, consisting of traditional Hawaiian music by Ho'okena. All the Ewa Beach boys sat with Kaleo, Tory, Jonah and I. Joining us were Sean and Horacio, who introduced us to two of their friends, Hank Leve and Keanu Hekekia.

I found myself knee-drumming to the Hawaiian music and Derrick noticed. He smiled, "You seem to know at least a little of what you're doing," and then glanced down at my hands and knees.

Still, I wasn't quite ready to announce to everyone at the table that I was an android. I had good feelings that no one would really care, but I didn't want to ruin a very good day. I shrugged, "I guess there's some old Hawaiian blood running through my veins."

"It's very kewl, bro," Derrick smiled. "When I get around to showing you some drumming, I think I may start with hand drums like bongos and congas. What do you think?"

Excited about the opportunity, I squealed, "Would you really?"

Derrick nodded and chuckled, "Music is the same all over the world. Drum kits are only one facet of the art. I can play bongos and congas too. It's just not a big part of most rock or jazz, until you start getting into Latin rhythms, anyway."

I was so happy, I could only nod but honestly, I wanted to hug Derrick so much at that moment. In only a few hours, he had become so important to me, I hoped that we would see a lot of each other in future days and weeks. Derrick and I began discussing drum kits. Derrick's kit was a Pearl Vision set in metallic silver-flake. It had a bass drum, five inch deep snare drum, two mounted tom-toms and two floor tom-toms. His cymbals were all Paiste and he was most proud of his "sound edge" hi-hats. His own kit at home was big, but not as big as the one he played on stage. He wanted a set of "Roto toms" and more cymbals, like he had on the set on stage that night.

When the bus showed up to take us to Anahola Bay, thankfully Jonah and I got to sit nearest to the Ewa Beach gang, at the back of the bus. It was after midnight and everyone was tired, including myself, but for me it was nice. Even better yet, Mike, Derrick, Jonah and I did get to share a room together like we planned.

Derrick and Mike went directly to the bathroom to take a shower. After the concert, they said that they felt slimy and sweaty. Jonah got settled in one of the beds and I turned the television on. But I didn't know which channels were where, so I flipped channels until I found the news. By the time Derrick and Mike came out of the shower, Jonah was asleep. They were only wearing towels though and I uncontrollably blushed. There was no denying they were very cute, but I knew they were a couple and I sure didn't want to have sex with either of them. Sadly, they programmed my android brain like any other human boy's, and my dick started getting hard anyway.

"Relax, Reyes," Mike softly chuckled. "We made love in the shower so everything's kewl. Get yourself comfy and ready for bed."

Shaking his head sadly, Derrick chuckled, "Mike, give him a break."

Noticing Jonah asleep, Mike shrugged and removed his towel. Placing it across a chair to dry, he whispered, "Like any one of us doesn't know. Our things have minds of their own most of the time! I'll bet even Jonah knows." For some reason, even though what Mike said made perfect sense, I really felt uncomfortable seeing him naked. From his long brown damp hair to the bush around his circumcised dick to his feet and toes were all really cute. Thankfully, my dick realized the rest of me was uncomfortable and shrunk back to its normal state.

"He should only just be starting to ask questions to figure it out though," Derrick reminded.

Mike turned to me and asked, "Did they show anything from the luau yet, Reyes?"

Shaking my head, I said, "I think this is a United States channel."

"Because of the information blackout, they won't have nothin'," Derrick explained. He then asked for the remote control. I gave it to him. Sitting beside me on the edge of the bed, still wearing only a towel, he flipped to channel nine saying, "They'll replay the local eleven o'clock news in a few minutes." Mike sat on the edge of the other bed naked and Derrick was sitting beside me, on the same bed Jonah was sleeping in. Derrick softly asked, "They sexually abused you too?"

I nodded.

Mike asked, "Have you ever liked or loved someone your own age?"

I shook my head and answered, "Never," even though I really couldn't recall if I had or had not.

Derrick asked, "They fucked with Jonah too?"

"As little as possible," I replied. "The older kids at our orphanage took care of the adults as often as possible, so they wouldn't mess with the kids too much."

Making a crooked, unhappy face, Mike grunted, "That means yes?"

I nodded, "I was getting a beating this morning for taking on an adult so Jonah wouldn't have to. The bastard liked beating us and got off on doing it too. Then the Clan showed up and Vulcans beamed in, saving me from the worst part."

Uncertainly, Derrick repeated, "The worst part?"

I nodded, "After my backside was good and red and I was crying, he would've fucked me."

Scrunching his face, Derrick shook his head and grumbled, "That's so friggin' kinky and plain ol' wrong!"

"Reyes?" Mike softly called. I turned to him and he asked, "Take your shirt off, please?"

Vigorously shaking my head, I said, "I'm marked and bruised, if that's what you're asking. The Vulcans fixed up what they could. The rest will heal in time."

Derrick asked, "Are you sleeping with your clothes on tonight?" I shook my head and he said, "Then we're gonna see you either tonight or tomorrow anyway."

"We're prepared for it now," Mike added. I couldn't see any fault in that reasoning, so I took my shirt off. Mike groaned then leaned forward and rested his head in his hands. When I turned to Derrick, there were tears rolling down his cheeks. Mike got up and went to the bathroom. I heard water running and he returned with a hand towel, saying, "This is gonna feel cold, dude." He gently laid the towel on my back and I flinched.

Derrick softly shushed me and wiped his eyes, saying, "You're covered with bruises and welts. Never again, Reyes. You'll never have to deal with that shit ever again."

I began to cry because they were being so nice to me. Mike worried, "It hurts?"

Shaking my head, I sobbed, "This is the sort of stuff we did for each other at the orphanage. You guys weren't there, but you know what to do. I can only wonder why you care so much?"

"Because you're obviously hurtin', dude!" Mike firmly said.

Derrick added, "Real human beings don't do the shit that was done to you or any of the other kids. Anyone with an ounce of consideration in their body would do what we're doing."

Mike softly said, "I'm gonna remove the towel now before it starts to dry on you and hurts you more. It might sting a little as I remove it though, okay?"

"Okay," I said, and tightened my jaw in preparation. More carefully than anyone had ever done it before, Mike removed the towel and returned to the bathroom. It didn't hurt a bit.

While Mike rinsed out the towel, Derrick gently turned my head to him. All he said was, "I feel for ya, dude," and I lost any chance of controlling myself. Not once in my memory had I cried so hard. I felt ashamed for showing them, for accepting their kindness, for allowing what happened to ever happen, but I only cried on Derrick's shoulder and didn't say a word. I wanted to tell him everything, but couldn't make myself speak. If I had any human courage at all, while I was at the orphanage, I would have stuck my finger in a two hundred and twenty volt outlet and fried every circuit in my positronic brain. With my luck, it wouldn't have destroyed me though. It might have left me blind, deaf or mute and still a fuck toy for those perverts.

Mike came out of the bathroom and gently laid the cold wet towel on my back again. I looked up just in time to watch him run out of the room naked with an ice bucket in his hand.

Forcing a weak smile, I reminded, "He's got no clothes on!"

"So what?" Derrick smiled. "We want you to sleep tonight."

Finally, after another quiet minute, I grew a human pair, stood up, then took my shorts and underwear off, explaining, "My butt hurts worse than my back."

Derrick gasped, then growled, "They used a belt on you too?"

Taking in a deep, quivering breath, I nodded, "After it was red, sore and I was crying, he would've..."

"My God!" Derrick croaked, and shot up off the bed so fast that his towel fell off. Seeing that my entire front wasn't too bruised or battered, Derrick pointed at the bed and ordered, "Lay down, face first."

I did as I was told and Derrick got another cold wet towel from the bathroom. He returned and put the second towel across my battered bum. The news program started on the television. Mike walked in with two buckets of ice in time to hear the news lady say, "Our top story tonight, the ROH Prime Minister was found guilty of organizing and profiting from a nationwide child sex scandal, and was executed by representatives of Clan Short of Vulcan. More on this story, and others, after these commercial messages."

Mike smiled at Derrick, "You got him to take his drawers off. Excellent!"

Shaking his head, Derrick frowned, "No, dude, not at all excellent," and then lifted a corner of the towel covering my ass.

"Jesus!" Mike gasped. He then started cussing up a storm. "I hope every one of them God damned sons of bitches were killed slowly and as painfully as fucking possible!" Then Mike squealed, "Oops!"

"Nice goin'!" Derrick chuckled.

"Reyes?" Jonah called, and then squatted on the floor before me at the end of the bed. "Are you all right, bro?"

Reaching for my best friend, I assured, "They're helping me, Jonah. Just like Kaleo, Tory and Liki did."

Looking around anxiously at all three of us, Jonah wondered, "They didn't try to..."

"NO!" We simultaneously shouted.

Beginning to laugh, Mike howled, "Oh Jesus Christ! We're all naked! Of course he thought we were fuckin' around!"

"We honestly never even considered it," Derrick chuckled, and pointed at his own flaccid dick, then at Mike's.

Mike smiled, "In the state Reyes is in, no one's gonna be messing with him for at least a week... maybe two!"

"That's fine by me," I giggled.

Derrick called, "Jonah?" My friend looked up and Derrick said, "Stand up and turn slowly in place, please?" Jonah was only wearing white briefs and did as Derrick asked. Derrick sighed, "You're bruised, but nowhere near as bad as Reyes. Do you hurt anywhere?"

Shaking his head, Jonah giggled and shamelessly pushed his briefs off, then turned around again. Mike cracked up and fell back on the bed laughing, "If any of the Clan dudes walked in on us now!"

We were all laughing when the news started and we missed at least half of what was said. Even after a parental discretion warning, they blurred out the picture of the Prime Minister. We could barely see anything but his form falling down. Then they moved on to an interview with the King. Mike loudly complained, "What about our concert? Fuck me! That's way more important than this shit!"

Giggling hysterically, Derrick went over and kissed Mike hard. When they broke their kiss, they each said, "I love you," then returned to caring for my back. Once the towels were replaced and ice was applied, Mike changed the channel on the television. He found cartoons and settled there. Until about two in the morning, we watched TV while Mike and Derrick periodically replaced the towels on my back and butt. I don't believe that I've ever felt so cared for, peaceful or content.

As I drifted off to sleep, I finally figured out that Derrick and Mike weren't like boyfriends or brothers to me. They felt more like parents. That was a stupid idea. I was thirteen and would always appear thirteen. How could two fourteen-year-old boys be fathers to me? Once they discovered that I was an android, they probably would not want to be anything more than friends. I would have to be satisfied with them as friends. Maybe even best friends. It wasn't all I wanted, but it would be enough.

Saturday morning, I was woke by Levi calling my name and finger-combing my hair. He said, "The sun will be rising soon, Reyes. Do you want to see it?"

"Yeah," I croaked, and then called, "Jonah?"

Jonah groaned, "What?"

"Sunrise, bro."

"Kewl."

I giggled and sat up. Levi softly said, "There's French toast sticks and juice on the dresser. Let Derrick and Mike sleep until you get out of the shower."

I stretched and yawned, "Yeah. They were so great last night, Leev."

Levi giggled, "So I heard."

"How did you hear?" I wondered.

"You were talking in your sleep," Levi giggled.

Stunned because no one had ever told me that before, I asked, "Was I really?"

"Well," Levi giggled, "it's my good hearing, I guess. No one else heard, I'm sure."

I leaned forward to turn on the light, but the bathroom light turned on behind me. Levi was standing over there. I could have sworn he was standing right in front of me a second ago! I exclaimed, "How the heck?"

Levi held a finger to his lips and giggled. "Shhh! Don't wake up your dads."

Standing up and heading for the bathroom, I whispered, "You're so weird!"

"Boy, if I had a dollar for every time I heard that!" Levi giggled. "What you wish for could become your reality, if you want it enough." He then ran to the door and waved. I went into the bathroom and tried to look at my back. Then I stuck my head out the doorway to call Jonah again, expecting Levi would still be in the room, but he wasn't there. I never heard the door open or close, but he was gone. I shook Jonah and walked to the door. It was double-locked and the security bar was still in place. I hummed and wondered, how did Levi get in the room in the first place? The dead bolt and security bar can only be done from inside the room. And he called Mike and Derrick my dads! Did I really call them that in my sleep? If I did, I could only hope that I didn't say anything about being an android, or that they slept through it and didn't hear.

Standing by the dresser and watching me, Jonah called, "Reyes? Come on, bro."

Smiling, I whispered, "Since when am I 'bro'?"

"Since last night," Jonah reminded. He then offered me a French toast stick. I took it and began eating. After more than a few of them and finishing one of the glasses of juice, Jonah seriously said, "There's no one I want to have as a brother more than you. We gotta stick together."

Feeling incredibly intense chills race up and down my spine, I softly said, "I promise, we will." Gesturing to Derrick and Mike, I asked, "What do you think of them?"

Jonah brightly smiled, "They're real nice. I can't believe we spent almost an hour awake together naked and none of us got hard!"

I led the way into the bathroom so we could talk behind a closed door. Once there and in the shower, I shared my hopes with Jonah. "I want them as our fathers, Jonah. It would be so kewl if you, me and them were together, every day and night, just like last night."

"Could that really happen?" Jonah wondered.

I began soaping up while Jonah shampooed his hair, saying, "I don't think so, but we could treat them that way anyway."

With his eyes still closed as he was shampooing, Jonah said, "You know that little kid that was following us around yesterday?"

"Dillon?"

"Uh huh. He was fostered and messed with like we were. He's really nice."

After thinking for a minute, I offered, "Well, they're gonna create a new Clan Division here. All the Clan guys consider each other brothers, so we could add Dillon to our family easily."

Rinsing his hair, Jonah wondered, "Who do you think they'll make Division leader?"

I shrugged and picked up the bottle of shampoo, giggling, "I hope it's Derrick."

Jonah laughed, "I hope it's Mike!"

For the rest of our shower, we let our imaginations run amok. I sniggered, "It's Keith!"

"Nope, Corey!"

"Drew!"

"John!" Jonah howled. He then loudly said, "Oh my God! He's so drop dead cute too!"

I mooed and teased, "Jonah's got a boyfriend!"

He smirked, "In my dreams maybe."

"Then why have you popped a bone?"

Giggling, Jonah explained, "Because when he hugged me last night, I suddenly felt so much better about everything. It was like, for a few seconds, nobody ever fucked with me. Whoever gets John as a partner is gonna be the luckiest person on Earth."

"So you do like him that way?"

Shaking his head, Jonah said, "I don't want a boyfriend or a girlfriend yet. All I want is a big brother and a little brother. Two fathers would be pretty kewl too."

"They don't scare you, do they? I mean, after the orphanage?"

"After last night, watching them with you, not at all."

I suggested, "Let's start showing them how we really feel today then."

"I'll talk with Dillon about it too."

"Kewl. I'm done."

"Me too."

We got out of the tub, dried off, brushed our teeth then went to get our clothes. I picked up my underwear and slid into them, then grabbed my shorts. In the light from the bathroom, I noticed that there weren't any grass stains. The little bit of barbecue sauce that dripped onto them during the luau was gone too. As I pulled them up, I watched Jonah dressing. His shorts were clean too! After sleeping under a tree in the grass and wearing them all last night, our clothes should have seemed at least a little dirty, but they weren't. Picking up my shirt, I raised it to my face and inhaled through my nose. It didn't smell like me at all. It didn't smell of anything, as if it were brand new.

Jonah incredulously giggled, "What're you doin'?"

Raising my index finger to my lips, I softly shushed him and grinned, "I'll tell ya later."

We slid into our sandals, then Jonah started to wake Mike and I woke Derrick. Once we got responses from them, we reminded them of the sunrise and begged them to please come watch it with us. Mike groaned. Jonah giggled at him, then leaned over and kissed his cheek. Mike shuddered and giggled. Derrick reached for me and asked, "How're ya feelin', Reyes?"

"Much better," I answered. Taking a lesson from Jonah, I leaned over then kissed Derrick's cheek and whispered, "Thank you, for last night."

Derrick smiled and opened his eyes, saying, "Any time."

Jonah told them, "There's food and juice on the dresser."

Mike threw the sheet and blanket aside, then sat up in bed. Again, he groaned and leaned to one side, collapsing back onto the mattress. Jonah and I cracked up. Derrick looked over at Mike, then goosed his partner's ass. Mike squealed and lurched, then giggled. Tossing the covers aside, Derrick sat up. For the first time, I saw him with a morning erection and turned away. Seeing him hard felt so wrong! I didn't care about seeing Jonah's little boner or seeing any of the other teenagers at our orphanage with hard-ons, but seeing Derrick that way felt so weird. I told myself, if I really wanted him as a father figure, I had better get used to it. I asked, "You'll watch the sunrise with us?"

Derrick nodded and grinned, "We'll meet you at the beach. It's right across the road. Lemme just get lazy-ass motivated."

Mike smirked, "Bite me!" Without delay, Derrick leaned back and bit Mike on the tush! Jonah and I cracked up again, then left them to get dressed.

Closing the door behind me, I saw Mike and Derrick start wrestling around on the bed. We could hear them laughing as we walked past our room.

I cheered, "They're so great!"

Jonah nodded and smiled, "I know it."

Breathing deeply in through my nose and smelling the fresh salt air, I told Jonah, "We're free, bro."

He nodded, "No more whoopin's, no more sex, no more pictures, nothin' to be scared of or worried about. It seems soooo... different."

"I'm liking this a lot," I admitted. "Have we ever woke up talking and laughing like this before?"

Shaking his head, Jonah reminded, "We'd be making our own breakfast, cleaning it up, doing chores or worse."

"Not today, not ever again."

Crossing the parking lot, we could see other rescued kids at the street. It was still dark and the street lights were on. There wasn't a car in sight, so kids were walking across the street in groups, except for one. When we got closer, we recognized Dillon. He obviously recognized us too and ran to us. I expected him to run towards Jonah and he did. After they greeted and hugged each other, he then grinned and jumped at me, forcing me to catch him. Again, another pleasant chill raced up and down my spine.

"Did you sleep well, Dillon?"

He giggled, "Yup! Derrick's mommy and daddy is real nice!" Bursting at the seams, Dillon rambled, "She put me in the tub and washed me, but didn't play with my pee-pee! He helped me dress and didn't play with my pee-pee either! They says they didn't want to, that it was bad for my other mommy and daddy to that!"

Jonah grinned and wiped his eyes. Leave it to a five year old to make the truth plain. For the first time, to me anyway, my body was mine. I could choose my friends. I could choose whether or not to have sex and who I wanted to have sex with. I wondered what it would be like to want to masturbate. If I wanted to, I could do that now too. I had never wanted to before, that I could recall. The world was a different place suddenly. With that, I hugged the little boy in my arms and kissed his cheek. Dillon ate it up and hugged me back with all his strength.

Arriving at the beach, we joined with the others and sat in the sand together. Seeing some other kids coming, Dillon raced to them and brought them back to us saying, "Jonah and Reyes, this is Geoff, and this is Richie, and this is Dee, and this is Kokaku. They's my friends and ya know what? Nobody played with their pee-pees either! Not once! All night long!"

Helplessly giggling at Dillon's enthusiasm, Jonah instructed, "Breathe, bro!"

"Bro?" Dillon squealed. He stood there glancing between Jonah, his other friends and me with his mouth hanging open.

From behind us, Kaleo loudly said, "We're all brothers and sisters now, in case no one has figured it out yet." We all turned and watched him approach with Tory, Sean and Horacio. Stopping nearer the larger group, Kaleo said, "Pay attention, guys. I learned a little something last night. Today, we're going to become a new Clan Short Division. They don't know it yet, but the entire Ewa Beach group are going to be our new leaders." Excited gasps, exclamations and squeals erupted. Kaleo widely smiled at the enthusiastic response, then said, "All of you have choices now, choices we never had before. The best part is, when the Ewa Beach group are made our leaders, they'll automatically be able to adopt kids. If you want to, you can choose any of them, or their parents, to be your parents. It's totally up to you, but I just wanted you all to know, you have choices. No one is forcing anything on us any more. What makes you feel good is probably good for you."

Hearing that, Jonah and I locked eyes. Slowly, our smiles spread. My only worry was whether Mike or Derrick cared that I was an android. That meant I had to tell them that before telling them that I wanted them as fathers.

The sky was changing from black to dark blue. Minutes passed, and far out on the eastern horizon, shades of purple and red began to appear. Behind us, we heard harmonized singing. "Good morning mister sunshine, you brighten up my day. Come sit beside me, in your way. I see you ev'ry morning, outside the restaurant, the music plays, so nonchalant, ahh!"

Tory giggled and Kaleo laughed, "Good mornin' to you dudes too!"

"How is everyone?" Prez smiled.

"Fed, clean and dressed in clean clothes!" Kaleo excitedly answered.

I so badly wanted to jump up and run to Derrick. There was something about him that was so kewl. It was the way he walked and spoke. He was quiet, but not shy. He was taller than me, but not taller than Prez or Keith. Just watching Prez, Keith, Derrick, Mike, John and Bruce walk nearer to us and knowing what they didn't know, set my heart racing and made my skin crawl with gooseflesh.

From the northern end of the beach, we heard the sound of bongos being beat and turned to see Kyle, Tyler and Levi marching toward us. Suddenly, Derrick had a set of four tenor drums before him and drum sticks in his hands; Mike had a snare drum before him and Keith and Prez found themselves holding pairs of cymbals. Where and how in the hell that happened, I have no idea!

Following the tempo and rhythm being set by the three purple-eyed boys, Derrick and Mike played along. Kyle, Tyler and Levi loudly sang: "Why don't you ask him if he's going to stay? Why don't you ask him if he's going away?"

"Why don't you tell me what's going on? Why don't you tell me who's on the phone? Why don't you ask him what's going on?"

"Why don't you ask him who's the latest on his throne? Don't say that you love me! Just tell me that you want me! Tusk! Just say that you love me! Don't tell me that you... Real savage like! Tusk! Tusk! Tusk! Tusk! Tusk! Tusk! Tusk! Tusk! Tusk! Tusk! Tusk! Tusk! Tusk! Tusk! Tusk! Tusk!"

Just as quickly as the drums and cymbals appeared, they were suddenly gone. The sun was fully above the horizon. It was a bright clear morning and I didn't imagine it. What kind of magic is this, I wondered. So many remarkable things had happened since we were rescued, I couldn't begin to list them all. But it wasn't over yet.

Two girls got up and ran to stand before the four members of Old Habits. One asked, "Are you stayin'?"

The other girl said, "You can't just go away now; we need all of you."

Walking up and joining in, Kaleo said, "Tell us, what's really going on."

"I really don't know what to say," Prez stammered.

Keith nodded and explained, "We're not Clan Short. We rescued a handful of kids off Ewa Beach, but that's nothin' compared to the Clan."

"I strongly disagree," Galli said. How he appeared with the rest of the Clan Short group is beyond me! But there they were, standing just a few yards to the side of the Ewa Beach group. Geoff ran over to Drew and Corey. The little guy practically dragged them, John and Bruce over to us and began his introductions again.

"So do I," Joel added.

Kevin offered, "You just don't realize what you've done."

"Last night, while we ate, you told us how you'd like us to be," Tory reminded.

Kaleo clarified, "We're here because you suggested it. You made us really notice the sunset; you entertained us and for lots of us, it was the first time we really listened to music and paid attention to the words. The lunatic fringe you sang about – the low-lives that made us service their perverted wants?"

Tory remembered, "Takin' care of business? Well, ya have. Time? The time is now."

"You dedicated a song to the Clan last night," Joel said. "I'd love to change the world but I don't know what to do?"

"Tell me where is sanity?" Kevin asked.

Kaleo recited; "I'm destitute, I'm looking for protection, I want love, And physical asylum, A vagabond, Running from destruction, Cover me, While I seek defection. Rescue me... rescue us."

"Didn't you know what you were singing?" Tory excitedly asked.

Keith stammered, "Uh... you... you're inviting us into the Clan then?"

Joel grinned and exchanged another look with Kevin, Kyle and Tyler. All three nodded at him. Joel turned back to the four boys before him. Rather than speak to them, he raised his voice, "Corey, Drew, John and Bruce! Front and center!"

The four boys left us and gathered around Keith, Prez, Derrick and Mike.

Joel clearly said, "Let it be known that as of 6:54 AM, Hawaii Time, on the 30th of October, Clan Short Pacific Rim Division has been established by the authority of the Acting Patriarch of Clan Short, me! Sa'ren Joel Short, son of Spock, son of Sarek of the House of Surak of Vulcan. Also, by my authority, I now appoint the Division Head - until it can be ratified by Cory Short when he takes up his responsibilities..."

Joel let his voice trail off as he looked up at Prez.

"YOU'VE GOT TO BE JOKING!" Prez bellowed. He turned to Keith then stammered, "No, not me, a leader?"

Shaking his head, Keith chuckled, "Well, it ain't me!"

"Don't look at me!" Derrick and Mike chorused.

"Prez?" Joel called softly.

Prez turned and looked down at the small thirteen year old Prince.

"Keith is just as able as you to lead these guys. But he'd jump in before thinking everything through. You... you would think more carefully. With Keith at your side, both traits - which are both good - will guide and guard this Division. And so, you are the Division Director."

Looking up into the morning sky, Prez loudly cried, "MA-A-A-A-A!"

From the tree line behind him, standing amongst the group of eight adults, Jennifer Hundser answered, "Sorry, hon... I agree with the little elf!"

"TRAITOR!"

"Thank you, hon!" Mrs. Hundser giggled.

"Are you sure, Joel?" Prez softly asked.

"Yes," Joel nodded. "But, if you think it'll help, would two others telling you help?"

"What do you mean?" Prez worried.

I-Cheya moved into the center of the group and breathed on Prez, causing him to tremble violently.

From out of nowhere, we all heard a man's voice say; "Son, I agree with Joel. You are all I could wish as a son and heir."

Then came a woman's voice. "You make me so proud. You will always make me proud. These children need you, Preston; more than you know. Be a father to them all. I love you. We love you so much."

Prez fell to his knees as tears poured from his eyes. He reached and pulled Joel into his arms, barely managing to say, "I... I accept, elf," before dissolving into gentle sobs. The other seven boys quickly moved to surround them with hugs. I was up and racing to Derrick and Mike like my shorts were on fire. In no time, all eighty-seven rescued kids were gathered around the Clan Short boys and our new leaders.

Joel lifted his voice as he looked around at the group surrounding him and Prez and started to sing; "Well, I know this life is filled with sorrow, And there are days when the pain just lasts and lasts, But I know there will come a day, When all our tears are washed away, With a break in the clouds, His glory coming down, And in that moment, Every knee shall bow, every tongue confess, That God is love and love has come for us all. Every heart set free, every one will see, That God is love and love has come for us all."

Joel lifted Prez' tear stained face and kissed his nose, then sang the next verse as if for Prez alone. "For anybody who has ever lost a loved one, And you feel like you had to let go too soon, I know it hurts to say goodbye, But don't you know it's just a matter of time, Till the tears are gonna end, You'll see them once again, And in that moment, Every knee shall bow, every tongue confess, That God is love and love has come for us all, Every heart set free, every one will see, That God is love and love has come for us all."

Everyone gathered there easily picked up on the words and sang the last line a few times. From some unknowable place, a tremor ran through me. I looked at Jonah and Dillon and could tell that they felt it too, but we all continued singing; "Love has come for us all, Love has come for us all!"

We stopped singing, then glanced around at our new Clan brothers and sisters. Overwhelming cheers and applause erupted from the crowd of almost one hundred kids and adults on the beach. We were all so happy. Having never known ecstasy, I wondered if that was what we were all feeling as us rescued kids mulled around hugging and kissing each other. I didn't know the names of half the people that I was hugging, but it didn't matter in the least.

Keith asked, "What's so funny, Prez?"

Prez shrugged and softly chuckled, "We are The Rimmers!" Burying his face in Prez' shoulder, Keith cracked up.

"I knew I should have named them something else, Kevvy," Joel giggled.

"I don't know," Kevin mused, "it does have a certain poetic charm to it, don't it?"

Bruce innocently asked, "What's a rimmer?" Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike blushed scarlet. Smiling widely, I wondered how they might explain this remark away.

"It's because of their taste in steakhouses," Drew explained.

"Because they like to eat Outback." Corey laughed so hard that he could only stagger around dizzily.

John pointed at Prez and laughed, "You're a real Queen and a leader now!" Drew and Corey howled laughing.

Prez playfully counted down; "Five... four... three..." Giggling, John and Bruce backed off into the pack of kids.

Derrick asked, "What's the first order of business, Prez?"

"Good question," Prez replied and glanced around thoughtfully. "What do you think, Keith?"

Keith shrugged, "Everybody's in such a good mood, we should let them be kids first. Then we can get some organization."

Prez shouted, "Let's go swimmin'!" We all hooted and hollered. Prez then loudly added, "Clothes optional!"

Once again, I hadn't been dressed much more than an hour and I was stripping down with Jonah, Dillon, Geoff, Richie and Dee. In less than a minute, we were down at the water line, kicking cool water at each other. Every now and again, I'd look up and check where Derrick was. As long as he was nearby, I was happy. Jumping onto my back, Jonah held on tight and giggled, "It's gonna happen, Reyes! I can feel it like it already has happened; we're brothers!"

Before I could reply to Jonah, Dillon was barreling towards me. It was a good thing I was hunched over with Jonah on my back, or my nuts would be rattling around in my throat! Jonah jumped off my back and gathered Dillon in his arms. All three of us were happier than we ever had been and told each other so. I explained my concern to Jonah and Dillon; that I was afraid Mike or Derrick wouldn't want an android son. Of course, Jonah knew me, but Dillon was stunned, then thrilled to learn I was an android. He took my hand and inspected it, then lifted my arm to see underneath. Dillon's hand was reaching for my crotch, but thankfully Jonah stopped him and laughed, "His dick is real flesh and blood too!"

Blushing intensely, I smiled and explained, "Only my brain is positronic. The rest of me is human. I eat, drink, pee and take a crap just like you, bro."

Looking up at me, Jonah assured, "That's exactly why I know it won't matter to Mike or Derrick that you're an android. You have feelings, bro. In every visible way, you're human. And they proved it last night. They care about you and they care about me too."

Above our heads, Prez flew naked over us, screaming in a mixture of fear and pleasure. Jonah and I laughed hysterically while Dillon giggled and clapped his hands. All of our new leaders were first to be tossed by I-Cheya. All of us gathered around the Vulcan beast and anxiously waited our turns for a tongue bath and to be tossed into the bay. After I had been tossed, I waited in the bay for Jonah and Dillon. What was amazing to me was that both of them landed about a meter in front of me. It was no problem to make sure they were both perfectly fine and we started swimming back to the beach.

We had barely arrived when Richie, Geoff and Dee came and pulled Dillon along with them to I-Cheya. The massive Vulcan bear was in the water with Joel and Kevin. A horde of little kids were climbing up to I-Cheya's back. Then I-Cheya swam out and caught a wave, giving the kids the thrill of their lives and their first surfing lessons. It was a little too exciting for a few kids. They hurried up the beach to the adults and soon a bunch of them were heading back to the hotel. Jonah took the next ride with I-Cheya, Joel, Kevin, Cesar and Felipe. This was a much bigger wave though, perhaps six or even eight feet tall. Riding surfboards on the top of the wave were Prez with Levi on his shoulders, and Keith with Tyler on his shoulders.

After riding that wave to shore, Jonah hurried to me and laughed, "You have got to try it," then pulled me over. With me on I-Cheya's back were Joel, Kevin, Drew, Corey, Bruce and John. I-Cheya paddled out again and we lined up with Mike, Derrick, Prez and Keith for the next ride. Kyle was on Derrick's shoulders, Tyler was still on Keith's shoulders, but Levi was now on Mike's shoulders. Suddenly, the water level lowered by at least three feet and we were being hurled forward on a wave that never seemed to stop growing.

Standing with Tyler on his shoulders, Keith hollered, "I said ten feet, Ty!"

"This is ten feet!" Ty giggled.

"Oopsie!" Kyle laughed, "Plus my ten feet!"

Almost in unison, Keith, Prez, Mike and Derrick screamed; "SHIT!" while Levi, Kyle and Tyler giggled hysterically. I-Cheya huff-huffed his chuckles.

From I-Cheya's back, I could see Kaleo, Hank, Liki, Keanu, Sean, Horacio and all the bigger kids grabbing little kids and scurrying out of the water. Somehow, and I still don't know how it happened, the wave began shrinking down and down until it was barely three feet high.

"Spoilsport!" Joel whined.

I-Cheya just huff-huffed his laughter.

Prez raced out of the water with his surfboard. Derrick, Mike and Keith came to me. Derrick asked Keith to give me the surfboard he had been using, so I could go out and learn to surf. Keith happily gave me his board, then my favorite two new leaders showed me how to paddle out and stand on the board. Strangely, I had absolutely no problem surfing, even though I was scared and thought I might not be able to do it. We only got two rides together before Prez and Keith called Derrick and Mike to shore. It then became my task to teach Kaleo, Sean and Hank how to surf. As it turned out, I was teaching all of the older kids to surf for the next twenty minutes or so. Now and then, I noticed all the new leaders talking with Uncle Iokii.

We were then all called together for a beach meeting. Even the adults were there with us. Prez loudly announced; "You've all been told to think about where you'd like to live and friends you'd like to stay with; now I'll explain why. We just had a talk with Uncle Iokii. Clan Short Pacific Rim Division will have bases on four islands. On Hawaii, we'll have about two square miles of land. On Maui, we'll have another large lot of land. On Oahu, we'll have three more large lots of land; one in Ewa Beach for our base of operations and the other two for whatever purposes we decide. Finally, here on Kauai we have the land south of the wildlife refuge, where we had the luau last night.

"Our goal is to make certain you all have the best possible living arrangements; no more than two to a bedroom so no one will ever feel alone or cramped; you'll all have recreation facilities and easy access to beaches; and if there's been some hobby or special interest you have, let us know what you need, we'll do our very best to supply it. When I asked Uncle Iokii how we could ever repay his generosity, he only asked that we care for and help each other. We can always try our best to do that, can't we?" A roar of affirmations exploded from all us rescued kids.

Keith leaned over to Prez and whispered something.

Nodding, Prez waited for everyone to chill then said, "Being the generous and humble man he is, Uncle Iokii has left, but he has promised to visit us often. When we see him again, we're all gonna show our gratitude the best ways we can, won't we?" Everyone nodded and again agreed with Prez, albeit more softly.

When the sounds died down, Prez said, "Soon, more of our Clan brothers and sisters will be visiting us. We're gonna show them the paradise we've always dreamed of, aren't we?" Another enthusiastic cheer burst forth.

Mike chuckled, "You're more of a ham than I am!" and Prez playfully shoved him.

"I only have one more announcement," Prez began and watched the group of adults carefully. "Since all our lives are changing for the better, Uncle Iokii also wanted to make sure our parents could devote their skills and time to the Clan. Towards that end, all their mortgages are paid in full." Eight adult's mouths hung open in amazement. Prez laughed, "Now all you guys have eight real parents that care, and our parents have more kids than they can count!" Almost all of us rescued kids laughed and surrounded our new surrogate parents. Jonah and I moved closer to Derrick and Mike.

Tapping his shoulder, I called, "Derrick?"

He spun around and faced me smiling widely. "Wassup, Reyes?"

Uncertainly and with all my hopes bunched into a knot in my throat, I asked, "Can Jonah and I stay with you and Mike, please?"

"Course!" Derrick quickly answered. "We kind o' figured and hoped you'd like to be near us."

Relieved, I hugged him tight and laughed with tears running down my face. Jonah went to Mike and hugged him. Derrick softly shushed me and whispered in my ear. "Lives of pain and suffering are over now, big guy. We're gonna replace pain with joy and suffering with comfort. You'll see, I promise."

Excitedly, Prez rambled, "We need buildings for them, we need schools, the kids need clothes..."

Joel interrupted, "You'll get all that and more. Trust us, Prez; we've done this before."

Kevin handed Prez a Starfleet communicator and explained, "Just open this up, tell them who you are and let the Vulcans do their bit."

Joel nodded and smiled at his husband, then looked up at Prez. "Soon after that, more Clan will be showing up. Anything you need, just ask and it's yours."

Prez sighed, "It just feels like so much and I really don't feel prepared."

Keith took hold of Prez and repeated, "You will never ever be alone, baby."

Derrick said, "You've got us too, bro," and took hold of Mike's hand.

"And Corey and me too," Drew reminded.

"We're the core Rimmers!" Corey giggled. The group around Joel heartily laughed; even I-Cheya huffed a few more chuckles.

Relieved, Prez finally smiled. "Don't be a stranger, Prince. As hectic and odd as it's been, we're really gonna miss all you guys."

"Prez, we've really gotta go, now," Joel said with a small smile.

Prez's face fell slightly.

"Don't worry, doofus!" Joel giggled, "In a few hours you'll be meeting most of the Clan. You'll either see me later today, or sometime over the next few days - I might be busy making Kevvy squeal!"

"Hey!" Kevin protested as he blushed bright red.

"Oh, okay... Kevvy might be making me squeal!"

"Sa'ren!" Kevin groaned, "You're making it worse!"

"I know... but you still love me, right?"

"Grrrr..." Kevin managed through his giggles.

Joel kissed Prez on the cheek before slipping over to where I-Cheya, Brant, Kyle, Tyler, Kai and the two Lions were. "See ya soon, guys!" They vanished.

While I was still processing the disappearances, Galli, Levi, Kevin, the two Cheetahs, Aphrodite, Blackie, Artemus, and Matthew all waved and folded away.

While my mouth hung open, Derrick and Mike turned to Jonah and me. Mike laughed and Derrick smiled, "Give us a few minutes, please, dudes?"

Speechless, I nodded. Jonah and I walked away from the new "Core Rimmers". Jonah looked up at me and asked, "How?"

I shrugged, "How has anything happened since we were rescued yesterday? How were we being moved from place to place? How was it that the guys who just happened to be musicians here to give a concert wound up being our leaders? How did Levi get in our room this morning? How were our clothes from yesterday cleaned?"

"HEY!" Jonah screamed, looked up at me and stopped walking.

Thoroughly confused, I confessed, "Magic or destiny?"

Shaking his head slowly, Jonah then reached over and tickled me then took off running for the water. Dillon caught up with us just as I caught Jonah and was mercilessly tickling him. He laughed at us, then began splashing us with water. We rounded on him. I held the little boy still while Jonah tickled him. The next thing we knew, a bunch of kids were around us, all tickling each other. Hank, Keanu and Sean were back on the surfboards and paddling out.

Our new leaders came down to the water. I introduced a bunch of kids to Derrick and Mike. When they moved off with a few kids, Drew and Corey came by and I performed introductions for them and did it a third time for Prez and Keith.

Dillon decided he wanted to stay with Jonah and me. Richie, Dee and Geoff, wanted to be wherever the Core Rimmers were. Over the next few hours, we all decided that we wanted to stay together and near our leaders. I noticed Prez and Keith were out surfing with Kaleo and Tory. They then handed their boards to Sean and Keanu.

For a while, Richie and Dee were playing in the surf with Prez and Keith. Drew and Corey were with Geoff, Lenny and Kokaku. John was building sand castles with Bruce, Carmella, Cesar, Felipe and other little kids. Derrick and Mike returned and spent time with Dillon, Jonah and me. There was a brief pause in our playtime when Mike asked Derrick, "Where are Prez and Keith?"

Checking his wristwatch, Derrick chuckled, "It's after eleven."

Turning to me, he asked, "Did you see where they went, Reyes?"

Shaking my head, I shared, "The last I saw, they were with Richie and Dee."

"I hope they're getting food," Mike smirked as he moved to my other side. "If I'm hungry, then all you dudes must be too." The next thing I knew, Derrick and Mike had taken hold of me and were lifting me up. Mike evilly sniggered, "You thought you were too big to get dunked, didn't you?"

As I started laughing, Derrick slyly stated, "Think again!" They reached down and cupped my feet in their hands, then walked with me to waist-deep water before sending me flying. By the time I rose above the water, Derrick had captured Jonah and Mike was carrying Dillon like a surfboard. One after the other, Dillon and Jonah were sent flying and landed a meter or so in front of me. Our little game was soon being copied up and down the beach. Teenagers were sending little kids flying out into the bay.

Derrick pointed and shouted, "They're back!"

Mike frowned, "I don't see no food, dammit!"

A small fish swam by me and I grabbed it, then held it up, suggesting, "Lunch!" Derrick and Mike howled laughing, then went to where Prez was chasing Keith in and out of the surf.

Mike shouted, "Where the hell did you go?"

Ducking away from Prez, Keith laughed, "Aboard the Endeavor."

"You know what this means?" Derrick queried.

"No, what?" Keith giggled.

Derrick snickered, "Prez was flying!"

Coming to an abrupt halt and realizing the truth, Prez hollered, "OH MY GOD!" Keith, Derrick and Mike roared laughing, then raced away. Tables appeared on the beach, and a few of the adult men, including Derrick's dad and Mike's dad, hollered, "Food's here!" Everyone hurried towards the tables. Once again, it was meal time and the amount of food available could have easily fed three hundred. Without trying, I became one of the servers with the other teenagers and adults helping the little kids. At first, I was getting Dillon and Jonah trays of food and drinks, but little kids seemed to come forward in a never-ending wave. It all worked out for the best, though, because I got to have lunch with the Core Rimmers and was amongst the first to learn about our new bases.

Sitting around in a large circle, we were just finishing up our lunch and joking around when behind Prez and Keith appeared another large group. I was looking up the beach, towards the dunes, where Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike were sitting. I am not lying or stretching the truth; at least a hundred appeared out of thin air! And among them were more G-Cats and gorillas! Wide-eyed, Jonah and I gaped at each other. Since when do gorillas stand upright, wear military clothing and carry weapons?

Being Clan is so much fun, but it's so weird sometimes too.

The new group were Clan Short Special Forces Division and were assigned as security for us. Gorillas, G-Cats and armed kids jogged off in all directions. Prez called all the Core Rimmers over to meet the security team.

They were all shaking hands and greeting one another until, from further up the beach, Keith's mom screamed, "PRESTON!" This nice lady, who I had spent most of last night and the whole day with, appeared ready to burn down buildings with the fire blazing from her eyes. On one side of her was a gorilla. On her other side, and struggling to keep up in the sand, was a boy about eleven years old.

Keith's mom was having a very animated discussion with Colonel Donnie when Keith giggled insanely and shook his head.

"Oh man!" Drew whined, "We're all in trouble now!"

Jonah worried, "She won't hit us or nothin', will she?"

Drew shook his head and grinned, "Never, but she just learned the hard way that she's not in charge anymore."

Corey nodded, "Prez will never have an issue talking with any of us, but Drew's mom has ways of making her unhappiness clearly known." He then laughed, "As you can plainly see!"

Keith, Mike, Derrick and Prez began snapping their fingers and singing: "We've got a gorilla for sale, Magilla Gorilla for sale. Won't you buy him, Take him home and try him, Gorilla for sale. Don't you want a little gorilla you can call your own, A gorilla who'll be with ya when you're all alone?"

They're goofy! All four of them have a never ending supply of goofy songs stored away in their organic brains!

Mrs. Hundser shot flames from her eyes at all four, causing them to turn away and snicker. Smiling widely at us, Derrick held a finger to his lips. Before Jonah or I cracked up, we too turned and faced the sea.

Still facing seaward, I was struggling to not laugh, but I kept seeing Derrick's hazel eyes and wide grin in my mind's eyes. I heard John ask, "Can I have a gorilla?" This I had to watch, so I turned around.

Prez chuckled, "What do ya say, Donnie? John's another foster brother. but a little too young to be a Core Rimmer."

Donnie grinned, "Sure, but only if you teach him to surf!"

"Sure!" John excitedly answered. "I can surf... a little bit."

Keith reminded, "A gorilla's gonna need a much bigger board, bro."

Derrick scanned the nearest great ape and estimated; "About fifteen feet long, four feet wide and a foot thick."

Looking up at Prez, Bruce whined, "Can I have a gorilla too?"

"Donnie, this is Bruce," Prez smiled, "John, Drew and Corey rescued him from Ewa Beach yesterday. We're still looking for his parents so we've kept him with us."

Donnie turned to the assembled gorillas along the dune and said in a loud clear voice, "Okay. You heard the little guys. Which of you wants to belong to which boy?"

The gorillas all turned their eyes in the direction of Bruce and John and looked down. They began to eyeball the two boys and bared their teeth.

John and Bruce stepped back. John gasped, "Err... umm..."

A pair of young Silver-backs stepped forward and the larger of the two began to speak. "Me and my little bro always wanted a boy of our own. We'll take 'em!"

"They speak?" Bruce and John chorused. Glancing at each other, wide grins spread across their faces.

"How totally kewl is that!" John loudly giggled. The next thing John knew he was being swept up by the larger Silver-back. Wide-eyed, John laughed; "Who-o-oa!"

Busy laughing at John, Bruce didn't notice the younger Silver-back until a massive arm wrapped around and picked him up. "AHHH-HA-HA-HA-HA-HA-HA-HAAA!"

"Of course we speak," the larger gorilla grinned. "You don't think that those dumb cats get to talk and us hugely intelligent apes don't, do you?" Two gorillas carrying the two younger boys walked down the beach, away from our group.

Seeing cookies and brownies remaining on John's and Bruce's trays, Jonah and Dillon practically dove for them.

While my two younger friends were scarfing down treats, Donnie scowled and shouted, "YOU THERE! HALT!" A ferret spun around, stood upright and pointed at himself.

Shaking his head sadly, Donnie softly grumbled, "Sonofabitch! Why me?"

"Cos you led us to SHINYs!" the ferret giggled, then sped off and dove into the bushes. With their faces stuffed, Jonah and Dillon stopped chewing, then looked up at me. Raising both my hands to shoulder height, I shrugged, shook my head and grinned. Now we had speaking ferrets!

Donnie tapped a communicator on his shirt. "Daileass, how many of the ferrets are in Hawaii, and how did they get here?"

"Well... all of them," Daileass giggled. "Dave thought it would be a nice holiday for his flock. As for how? I sent them. The base is peaceful and quiet right now. Isn't that nice?"

"You bastard," Donnie grumbled.

We heard high pitched singing. "Onward, Shiny soldiers, marching as to war, With the Shiny Warrior going on before. Dave, the Shiny Master, leads against the foe; Forward into battle see His Shinys go! Onward, Shiny soldiers, marching as to war, With the Shiny Warrior going on before. At the sign of triumph, Hater's host doth flee; On then, Shiny soldiers, on to victory! Dull's foundations quiver at our Shiny praise; Ferrets, lift your voices, high your Shinys raise. Onward then, ye Ferrets, join our happy throng, Blend with ours your voices in this Shiny song. Glory, laud, and honor unto Dave our King, This through countless ages men and Ferrets sing."

A mass of fur broke from the bushes and departed in all directions, muttering comments about needing to find shinys. I looked down in time to notice a ferret gathering all our forks and spoons.

Donnie turned to Prez and snapped to attention saying, "Director O'Brian?"

"Uh oh!" Prez grunted. Closing his eyes and sighing, Prez opened his eyes again and said, "We have a problem, don't we, Colonel?"

Looking down, Derrick and Mike were spinning around, watching ferrets steal anything and everything that shined.

"This is not good!" Keith hollered. Prez had obviously given up.

He covered his eyes, shook his head and began laughing.

Up and down the beach, kids were screaming and hollering as ferrets snatched their silverware, some right out of their hands. One ferret stopped beside Mike and reached it's thin claw into his shorts.

Keith hollered at Donnie, "What do we do?"

"Pray," Donnie shrugged.

I tried to catch a ferret as it ran by, but only wound up missing and landing on my belly in the sand, then smiled up at Derrick.

Worried for all the kids, Derrick asked, "Do they bite?"

Donnie sighed, "In the worst way."

Stunned, Keith incredulously asked, "What? There's nothing we can do?"

About ten meters away, another group appeared. One of the older boys in the group was obviously stunned, watching ferrets scurry around Anahola Bay beach. He screamed, "WHAT THE FUCK? DAVE! Get your ass over here and bring your entire flock!" If a single ferret paid him any mind, I didn't see it.

Ferrets were everywhere! Some were in the water gathering seashells and stones. I went after those that were standing still, but I guess they saw my shadow and ran away before I had a chance of catching any of them.

I heard a small 'pop' and thought someone was firing a weapon at the tiny scavengers, but when I looked up, there was a flare shining in the air above the new older boy. Every ferret on the beach had stopped where they were though.

The same older boy shouted, "NOW! Get your asses over here, or I'll have Daileass transport your Shiny Vault away!" From all corners of the beach, ferrets hurried over and sat on their haunches before him.

Prez carefully sidestepped closer to Donnie and exclaimed, "Who is that?"

Donnie turned towards the Core Rimmers softly saying, "That would be General Adam Casey, the head of the UNIT; also known as the Clan Short Special Forces, with the rest of his family."

Adam walked up to Prez and held out his hand. "I assume you're Preston O'Brian?" Prez nodded and shook Adam's hand. Adam grinned, "Welcome to the Clan. Uh... would you excuse me one second?" Adam then turned his attention back to the ferrets.

"Okay," Adam loudly said, making sure they all heard him. "Here's the rules; you may NOT steal any shinys from the Shiny Haters for at least twenty-four hours. You may however feel free to take any and all shinys you find out there," he said, and pointed towards the ocean. "If you dive to the floor of the bay, you might find little oysters." Adopting a reverent voice in a much lower tone and volume, Adam instructed, "Inside those oysters are pearls; bright shiny pearls, that can be made into adornments for your belts and hats. However, I must warn you, the oysters should be treated properly, as they are the ones who create such shinys for you to find. Treat them well and they will make more for you."

The entire flock turned and started to run away, rambling excitedly. "SPIKE!" Adam bellowed, and one of the younger ferrets with spiky fur stopped dead in his tracks and looked back at Adam. It was the ferret that had reached his hand into Mike's pocket. Adam ordered, "Give him back his guitar pick!"

Mike's right hand dug into his pocket. He softly grumbled, "Dammit!"

"But... but... he has not taken the pledge!" the young ferret whined.

"He is a member of the Clan," Adam reminded. "What have we said about Clan members?"

The grudgingly whimpered, "We can't steal their shinys unless they have been in the Clan for more than a week."

"Right," Adam droned. "So why?"

The young ferret quickly ran up to Adam and dropped to his knees. "But... but... it's so... SHINY! It begged me to liberate it from the dull one. How could I live with my faith had I not done as the shiny had asked?"

The blond haired boy that was next to Adam softly offered, "I understand. But how would the shiny feel if you took it from someone who would become a shiny lover, and perhaps be able to create wonderful music in the name of shininess, but now he can't because his shiny guitar pick was stolen. Don't you think that would make the shiny sad?"

The ferret seemed horrified, then ran over to Mike, upending a small bag he had tied to his waist. He dropped to his knees and rifled through all the different baubles that fell to the sand. He found the guitar pick and carefully cleaned it off before offering to Mike while still on his knees. "Please, mister; can you make shiny music with this?"

"I can now," Mike smiled at the thieving little ferret. Bending down and retrieving his pick, Mike then asked, "Did you know that shiny guitar picks can only make shiny music for a little while before they wear out?" The ferret seemed to gasp in horror and shook his head. "It's true; the music gets less shiny over time. When this one wears out, I'll give it to you only if you use it as a shiny adornment that I can see. That way, I'll know its shininess has not been completely used up and worn out. Every now and then you'll get a used shiny pick, then I'll get a new shiny pick to make shiny music with until it wears out. Then you'll get another, and another; soon you'll be wearing so many shiny picks that people will come from far and wide to see your shiny adornments."

Great! One of the guys I want for a father is certifiably insane!

"Oh! Thank you, mister!" Spike squealed in delight. Looking between Mike and Adam, Spike asked, "Uhh.. can I go look for other shins now?" Adam nodded his head and the little boy was off like a shot.

Adam then turned to the group and grinned, "Okay, crisis over. Now, where were we?"

Kaleo, Keith and Derrick were laughing hysterically over Mike and Spike. Prez snickered, "We were just getting to know each other, oh leader of the Shiny Tribe!" The rest of the Core Rimmers, Donnie, Jonah and I howled laughing.

I picked up Jonah and softly giggled, "This cannot be real! Do you think the abuses at the orphanage pushed us to insanity?"

Jonah nodded furiously and laughed, "This day is like those cartoons we were watching last night!"

Adam, the UNIT Team and the Core Rimmers were introducing themselves so I put Jonah down, then he and I listened as we finished our lunches.

Leaning closer to Jonah, I whispered, "Do you think Mike is a little whacky?"

Jonah giggled and soda shot out of his nose! I cracked up while Jonah rubbed his nose and groaned. "No!" Jonah finally laughed. "Smarter than the average ferret, that's all!"

"Oh, yeah!" I droned. "So he was playing to Spike's weakness. Perfect! I'll remember that."

Jonah tilted his head curiously. He leaned closer to me whispering, "Isn't that what you did to the pervs at the orphanage? They wanted dick and ass and you knew it. Rather than have them fuck with me or the other little kids, you forced us out of the way and gave them yours."

I was just about to say no, that was different, but realized it really wasn't too different after all. Words versus actions; I had to be sure to remember this stuff. Naturally, for me anyway, I attempted to save it in my archive storage so it wouldn't be lost. I told Jonah, "I've lost too many... mem... o..."

Suddenly, Jonah was shaking me and softly sobbing, "Reyes? Oh shit, please speak!"

Looking around nervously, I softly said, "Something's wrong, Jonah. I can't store to my interpersonal storage archives."

"What's my full name and age?"

"Jonah Desak, you are nine years old."

"Good," Jonah smiled, and then pointed asking, "Who are they?"

I rambled, "Kaleo Palakiko, Derrick Seibert, Michael Gibbons, Preston Albert O'Brian, Keith Hundser, Drew Hundser, Corey Seaver, Donnie Williams, Adam Casey, Logan Hayes, Nathan Hayes..."

"Good," Jonah said, and huffed in relief.

Prez turned to us saying, "Guys, excuse us for a little while, please? We're just gonna have a little pow-wow here." We nodded understandingly, then went to gather our lunch trays and began the trek back to the food tables. On the way, we heard Prez tell Kaleo, "You're being promoted to Core Rimmer. Since you were rescued by the Clan, there may be something you could ask or offer that none of the rest of us can."

Jonah looked up at me, then turned to Tory, saying, "It happened again, Tory. Reyes zoned out on me for like thirty seconds."

Shaking his head, Tory grumbled, "Those fuckers messed with your memory so many times, it's a wonder you know yourself. I should've taken that little memory zapper thingamabob from the orphanage before we left. Maybe it could've helped, if we showed it to the right person." Tory paused and smiled at me, saying, "Then again, it's gone and can't ever be used on you again, Reyes."

"There's a malfunction though," I worried. Worst of all, it didn't even register as a malfunction. I simply got stuck, then was suddenly unstuck. We dumped our trash, then went back to the table for more cookies and brownies.

After we were a good five meters from the table and alone again, Jonah looked up at me whining, "We've got to trust Derrick and Mike."

"I do mostly," I assured. "Right now they don't know and they treat me like any other kid. I'm afraid if I tell them, they'll treat me differently."

Tory shook his head, then said, "Listen, Reyes, and think about this. They're our leaders now. For you to get help, they need to know."

"I know," I whimpered. "But I don't think of Derrick or Mike as leaders."

"We want them as our dads," Jonah told Tory.

Tory giggled, "Oh, it's like that, is it?"

Jonah excitedly asked Tory, "Wouldn't you want a father too?"

Tory thought a few seconds then replied, "Nope. I don't really know what I want right now, but it sure isn't parents." After another bite of his brownie and glances between us, Tory mumbled, "Think of this then; these kids here are white, brown and black skinned. Jonah, you're white and Reyes, you're brown. If any of them is any kind of a bigot, then it's gonna be known and their leadership value goes directly into the toilet. If they consider you differently because you're an android, they are all fucked. Nobody will pay attention to them." He paused, swallowed the last of his brownie and pointed to the Core Rimmers, saying, "See Kaleo over there? Brown skin, exactly like yours, and our new communications officer; a Core Rimmer." Tory turned me to the group of Core Rimmers and UNIT guys, saying, "Look and listen. They're talking and joking around, right?"

I nodded and smiled, "Yup."

Tory explained, "I may not be the sharpest tack in the drawer, but I see no reason to worry. I don't see bigots over there. If I'm wrong, then we need new leadership fast. Agreed?"

Jonah and I nodded. Tory said, "I can't and won't make you do it, but you have to, Reyes. I've known you for years and so has Jonah. We're buds, right?" I smiled and nodded. He asked, "Can you make it happen today?"

I sighed explosively and nodded, "I will, as soon as I gather the nerve and balls."

Glancing down at my naked body, Tory giggled, "You ain't no manikin, bro. You got balls, dick and a little hair too! I see a human boy in front of me. When you get a cut or scratch, you bleed red."

Taking my hand, Jonah reminded, "You're our friend, Reyes."

"And always will be," Tory reminded. He waved down the beach then said, "I'm gonna try surfin' again. I will stand on that damn thing today!" Jonah cracked up.

I giggled, "Ya want more instructions?"

Tory shook his head answering, "The knowledge is there, my body and mind ain't connecting fast enough, though. I'll get it right. See ya later?"

"Kewl, bro," Jonah and I replied. Tory jogged down the beach and caught up with the other guys surfing.

Alone with Jonah again, I looked down and smirked, "With all the Clan magic goin' on, I do need to take advantage of it, don't I?"

"I'm gonna be there with you when you tell them, bro. They say one wrong word to you and it's time for new leadership... new father figures too."

"I'm sorry I scared you, Jonah. That and the fact that there's no warning at all is what really bothers me."

"Baby steps, Reyes. First you tell them the truth. If that goes okay, you can add tiny bits now and then. They were concerned about your body, they'll be concerned about your brain too."

I sighed, "I want them as fathers, Jonah. I don't know why, but I wish I did."

"Reyes?" I turned to Jonah and he said, "My earliest memories are of you. Even then, when I was four or five, you protected me and other kids. If you want my version of the truth, Kaleo, Liki and Tory learned from you to protect us younger kids. You did it for them too, remember?"

"I only know what you guys told me since June."

"None of us lied, bro. Three times I've seen you walk into rooms introducing yourself like we didn't already know you." Breaking down in tears and hugging me tight, Jonah sobbed, "Each time, you were the same guy and acted the very same way. You just had to get to know us all over again, like it was day one for you. You want your memories back and I want you to be happy, but memories hurt too, ya know? What if those things you can't remember make you sad? What if they make you different? It scares me, Reyes. I don't know how to live without you!"

I held onto my friend and little brother as if both our lives depended on the contact. After a long few minutes, Jonah wasn't crying any more. Derrick and Mike were still sitting with the other Core Rimmers and UNIT Guys. "I'll tell them, Jonah." He looked up at me and smiled from ear-to-ear. I confessed, "The longer I wait, the more scared we both get. It's making us a little crazy."

He cheered, "You're the best, Reyes; the only brother I've ever known."

With a nod, I gestured to the leadership group sitting in the sand and suggested, "Let's keep an eye on them. As soon as we're alone with Mike and Derrick, I'll tell them." Jonah nodded and smiled. I led him out into the water, which seemed like the best idea until Jonah blushed. Grinning at his exceptionally pink face, I wondered, "What's wrong?"

He softly giggled, "Now that I've pissed, I really gotta take a dump!" I roared laughing, then we hurried out of the water, up the beach and towards the road. A gorilla and G-Cat stopped us, but Jonah danced in place saying, "Bathroom, NOW!" Remarkably, the gorilla and G-Cat easily kept up with us running at top speed to the public restroom near the hotel. With that disaster narrowly avoided, Jonah came out of the bathroom giggling, "It felt like all my insides were comin' out, but what happens? Marbles!" I nodded and laughed because the same happened to me. Our escorts found the remark funny too.

Back on the beach, we noticed that our leaders had moved and gotten partially dressed while we were gone. Now they were eating a second lunch and chatting. Since it was kewl to sit with them, we did so. Jonah sat near Mike and Adam and listened intently to their discussion about guitars. Derrick and I chatted about drummers. What was really kewl was that Derrick was left handed when he wrote but generally ambidextrous, so he played his drums as a right-handed person would. I didn't know it until Derrick told me that Ringo Starr was also left-handed and played a right-handed kit. That's how he was able to do tom-tom rolls so effortlessly. Derrick demonstrated by knee-drumming. It all made sense to me, but because I was right handed, imitating him was difficult.

After lunch, the UNIT guys wanted to learn how to surf. Honestly, I was becoming a little frustrated because I had something to say, wanted to say it, but now I was being delayed. A whole bunch of surfboards appeared on the beach so I could at least spend time with Derrick surfing. A little time is all I got too because one of the UNIT kids used underwater explosives to create our waves!

"WHAT THE FUCK ARE YOU THINKING?" Mike bellowed, and we all jumped up on our surfboards. Several of the surfing newbies didn't manage to ride the whole wave, but those of us that remained upright were joined by ferrets that were popping up out of the water and onto our boards.

Far to my left, John screamed, "WAAAAAA-HOOOOOOO!" from atop his gorilla. After that frightening ride, I went back to the sand and Jonah, passing my surfboard to Keanu.

After the second ride, all our Core Rimmers and the UNIT leaders disappeared from the beach and didn't return for an hour. During the time they were gone, some crazy people were getting pulled on surfboards by helicopters. Jonah and I hung with Dillon, Richie, Dee and Geoff while the daring got their jollies. I did a little regular surfing on two and three foot waves with each of the little kids I was with, but had no intention of getting dragged around Anahola Bay by a helicopter. My systems were screwy enough, I did not need to destroy my body.

When I noticed that the Core Rimmers had returned, Derrick and Mike were already talking with Nathan Hayes. I handed off my surfboard to Kaleo, then Jonah went with me so I could finally talk with them. But once again, there was excitement. One of the teenage rescued girls needed a second rescue, this time by helicopter. When the helicopter landed, with the girl safe and sound, Derrick waved to me saying, "Com'ere, Reyes."

Jonah followed and Mike joined us too. "Confession is good for the soul," Derrick slyly stated.

Mike nodded and teased, "You got something to confess, Reyes?"

They were making it so easy for me. I'm an android, was what I wanted to say, but instead, what actually came out of my mouth was, "I'm gay." Quite simply, I balked at the last moment.

Taking Derrick's hand, Mike smirked, "Good for you."

Derrick grinned, "We'll see what we can do about helping you find a boyfriend. We might get lucky, he could even be an android."

Stunned, I squealed, "You knew?"

Derrick and Mike nodded. Glancing at me and then Jonah, Derrick sounded disappointed saying, "You can tell us anything, any time. Did you really think we'd be the least bit bothered about it?"

Looking down, I shrugged, "I didn't know, only had hopes."

Placing his other hand on my chin and lifting my face up, Mike locked his eyes with mine and firmly assured, "After Vulcan Sehlat tossing, Mikyvis waves, underwater explosions, how could you believe for a second that being an android matters? It doesn't, not in the least. You have hopes too, just like any of us."

Beginning to break down emotionally, I tearfully admitted, "I'm a damaged android. At the orphanage, they messed around with my memories. I don't even get a warning or error when I try to store something in my archives; I just freeze up, then become unstuck. If it weren't for my friends' actions and descriptions, I wouldn't even be aware something went wrong. Assuming what I've been perceiving from human reactions is correct, I go into a loop trying to read from or write to any archived storage."

Jonah nodded, "He just zones out for a little while."

Surrounding me and Jonah, Derrick and Mike hugged us. Derrick said, "We learned the Clan has experts that can hopefully help you, Reyes. We'll get you all the help we can, I promise, first opportunity we get." I began shedding happy tears and Jonah looked up at the three of us, giggling his little butt off.

I smiled, "Thanks."

"Not necessary," Mike assured.

Derrick nodded, "That's part of what we're here for; to help. You'll all get what you need."

Somehow, I managed to not blurt out, "We want both of you as our fathers!" I only held onto Jonah with one hand, and Derrick with my other hand.

Mike confirmed, "We're good now?"

I nodded, "Excellent!"

Jonah giggled, "Better than ever."

Derrick suggested, "It might be a good idea for you to write down your memories; ya know, like what you've experienced the last two days? That way, when we get you fixed up, anything you may not have stored is safe."

Nodding agreement, Mike said, "Come hell or high water, we're getting you back to normal, Reyes. It's a good idea to be as prepared as possible."

"Can I ask a favor please?"

Mike answered, "Anything, dude."

I sighed and shared, "Let me tell the others my secret? I'm not comfortable with everyone knowing."

Jonah impatiently whined, "Reyes?"

I shrugged, "Everything's so new to me still. Once my memory access issue is solved, I'll probably feel better."

Derrick began nodding his head, then said, "No sweat."

Locking eyes with me, Mike said, "Prez needs to know. He'll be kewl about it too. It's just that, if we're gonna use Clan resources to get ya fixed up, he'll have to know." I nodded but dreaded telling our new director.

Jonah then asked a valid but silly question. "Why's nobody got a boner?" Derrick and Mike cracked up laughing. Rolling my eyes, I giggled. "What?" Jonah squealed. "The four of us are sandwiched together!"

Still laughing, Mike pulled Derrick's face closer and planted a kiss. He assured us, "Derrick's got everything I want and need."

Derrick continued, "None of you guys need to worry about forced sex any more. Like Tory said during lunch, sometimes our dicks get hard, but for no real reason. That does not mean the dude is hoping for action. It's just what happens to teenage boys."

Jonah nodded and smirked. Then Jonah paid for his innocence. Mike already had a hold on him and Derrick let go of me to hold Jonah's other arm. They lifted my little friend up, carried him further out into the bay and tossed him. They turned to face me, grinning evilly. Giggling hysterically, I started to back away.

Mike shouted, "Ya wanna go para-surfing, Reyes?"

"Not really!" I laughed.

Not far away, Dillon, Richie and Geoff hollered, "Toss me too!" Saved by the midget brigade, I waded back up onto the shore where I watched Derrick and Mike send little kids flying. Soon, some older kids, about ten and eleven years old, wanted in on the fun. I could tell Derrick and Mike were getting tired and giggled hysterically as they finally worked their way out of the water towards me. Before I could react, they each wrapped an arm around me. I expected to get tossed, but instead, I got a kiss on the cheek from each of them. Stunned, I stood there with my mouth agape like a fool. They simply kept wading further up the beach until they met with Keith and John.

We remained at Anahola Bay beach for a few more hours. I told Jonah that Derrick and Mike kissed me. That was really the highlight of my day. It felt so good to be cared for by two guys that I really cared about too. Another little purple-eyed boy appeared between Jonah and I. He healed all Jonah's welts and bruises. Even his scars faded away. Jonah wanted Peter to fix me up too, but he couldn't, explaining that my android systems would take care of all that.

"Who told you Reyes is an android?" Jonah impatiently asked.

"No one told me," Peter smiled. "I just know stuff like that."

I wondered, "What else do you know?"

Smiling even wider, Peter hummed then held up two fingers. "Good stuff, tonight and two more days," he giggled, and then he vanished.

Frustrated, I wondered, "What the heck does that mean?"

Jonah hollered, "What's happening tonight and in two days?" He then looked up at me and warned, "Don't you dare try to store that!"

Shaking my head, I assured, "Two days doesn't deserve long term archiving."

Relieved, Jonah smiled, "More cookies?" I nodded and Jonah took off for the food tables. Giving him a five-step lead, I then raced after him, caught up and carried him to the snack table. We had sodas too. We weren't allowed sodas at the orphanage. Juice was allowed only twice a week. Mostly we drank water. Then we went for another walk to relieve our bladders.

When we returned to the beach the food tables were gone, but replaced by tables of clothes. Jonah and I helped Dillon pick out clothes and got his suitcase packed with Derrick and Mike's help. Then they helped us choose clothes and got our stuff packed. Soon, we all had suitcases of clothes and the little kids had new Teddy Bears too. Dillon introduced us to his new Teddy he had named Niles. Groups of us rescued kids gathered around our new leaders. Prez called, "Daileass, transport all the kids around me to the outdoor recreation area at our main Ewa Beach base, please." They vanished then Keith said the same thing and another group disappeared. Derrick called Daileass, and the next thing I knew, we were all off the beach and standing in a grassy field. Mike and Kaleo showed up next with the adults and our luggage.

Glancing around, the first thing I noticed was a huge domed building, a few large houses and what appeared to be an office building. All around the perimeter of the new base were trees. Emily and Donnie walked up and began tours. The Core Rimmers and their parents went to the homes with Emily. Donnie led all us rescued kids to the domed CIC, past the dormitories, then to the pool and diving well, where there was a pool house and an indoor recreation center. Again, I was amazed at all the great stuff. The pool house was basically boys' and girls' locker rooms, bathrooms and saunas. The indoor rec center had a weight room, bowling alleys, handball courts and a general purpose gymnasium that could be used for wrestling, basketball or gymnastics. Donnie then showed us the soccer field and the outdoor basketball courts. They had solar powered lights that worked on timers.

With the tour finished, we all went swimming in the pool. I tried out the diving well with a bunch of other teenage boys and a few of the more daring kids. At the diving well were three diving boards; one meter, three meters and five meters above the water. Everything we could ever need or want was there. Drew and Corey arrived by the pool and we showed them all the great stuff we were shown. After Drew and Corey left, Derrick and Mike came over. Finally, Prez and Keith were shown around. For most of us, it was like nothing we had ever seen before.

Some of the fostered kids remarked that it was better than the facilities their schools had. We had all gone from having virtually nothing to all this in a day. The sun set on our first full day of freedom without us even noticing until the lights had automatically turned on. Overflowing with joy, a bunch of kids wanted to go find our leaders to tell them how happy they were. Smelling the food cooking at the barbecue grills, we went around the indoor rec complex and over to where our leaders were. Richie and Dee peeled off to Prez and Keith. Dillon, Jonah and I went to Derrick and Mike. Geoff went to Corey and Drew. Carmella, Kokatu, and a bunch of other kids went to the adults.

"Dinner will be ready soon, Kaleo," Prez said. "Get the tribe over to the CIC dining room. Let them get started on the salads or whatever else is there...."

"No snack foods, Preston," Mrs. Hundser forcefully reminded.

Prez giggled, "Mom says no cookies or other snacks, real food only."

"I'll try to control their sugar addictions," Kaleo snickered; "it'll prob'ly be a lost cause though."

"Do the best ya can," Prez smiled. "If I see you running from a pack of hungry cookie monsters and their Teddy bears, I'll know you lost the battle." Richie had wrapped an arm around Prez's thigh. Prez smiled down at the boy that had attached himself.

Kaleo laughed, "Over and out!"

Suddenly we heard about sixty kids holler "YAAAAAAYYY!" from the pool area.

"We're going to be over run!" Mike's dad nervously laughed.

Dillon, Jonah and I decided now was the time to make our feelings known. We couldn't wait to tell them but were nervous that they might not want us. Dillon and Jonah went to Mike while I went to Derrick. He was busily flipping burgers on the grill. When he finished, he wrapped an arm around my shoulders asking, "Everything kewl, Reyes? Do you like your new home?"

I nodded and gushed, "It's awesome in so many ways. There's only one thing missing to make it the best."

"What?" Derrick quickly asked and offered, "Anything you need, let me know and I'll get it here."

Wrapping my arm around his back, I grinned, "I want you and Mike as my fathers." His head bounced and jaw dropped.

Derrick smiled, "You know I'm not even fifteen yet?"

Before I could reply, Richie and Dee cheered and hurried to each other. Richie laughed, "You're gonna be my big bro soon!"

Dee giggled, "And you're gonna be my little bro!"

"It don't matter to me," I assured Derrick. "It's all been building since the concert. Last night you and Mike took care of me and Jonah just like any real fathers would."

Coming over with Jonah and Dillon, Mike giggled, "We have an unexpected issue here."

"You're tellin' me!" Derrick laughed.

Looking at Dillon and Jonah, Mike smiled, "Please don't misunderstand; it's not that we don't want to, we do, but it's not usually allowed."

Noticing how disappointed we were, Derrick offered, "Tell ya what; we'll act just like fathers if you'll all promise to act like our sons."

Dillon, Jonah and I gathered and wordlessly agreed without any delay. Speaking for my two younger brothers, I assured, "We want to spend time with you two guys, as a family."

Jonah said, "Reyes has always been like a brother to me."

Dillon offered, "Jonah and Reyes is real nice. I was with 'em lots yesterday and today too. They can be my big bros too."

Derrick nodded, "Then we'll act like fathers, no problem."

From behind us, Mike's dad softly groaned, "Oh my God!"

Mike spun around and began laughing at his father. Mike's mom loudly whined, "Janet! Medication please!"

Holding a finger up, Doctor Janet smiled, "Just a moment," then went towards Dee. Dee and Richie hurried away, hiding behind Prez. Janet and Prez had a whispered conversation.

Only a few moments later, Prez blushed and giggled, "Sorry. Go ahead and give that doc a ring."

"Don't worry about it, I would probably have done the same thing," she said, and tapped her communicator badge. "Doctor Janet Hayes to Orlando CIC."

"Go ahead, Doctor," a boy's voice responded.

"I was wondering if 'Tonio was available to check out two kids," Janet softly said, "Both suffering from at least undernourishment, but there may be other things going on. Neither child will allow an adult anywhere near them. I know he's probably asleep, and if he is, don't wake him, but if he's up, please get him for me."

The boy asked, "Doctor Hayes, do you believe this to be urgent?"

Doctor Janet considered for a moment, then said, "Yes, I do."

"Very well, 'Tonio will not mind being woke up for that. I will let him know, and he will be there shortly. Orlando CIC out."

I whispered to Derrick, "Any doctor checks me out and everybody's gonna know."

Nodding understandingly, Derrick softly asked, "How do you feel? Is there any reason a doctor should check you over?"

Frantically shaking my head, I answered, "I feel fine. It's just like big lessons, stuff I want to save away so I don't have to relearn it, that's when I freeze up for a few moments. It's all automatic too, so I have to consciously remember to not do that. At least half the time, it's too late."

"Don't worry," Derrick smiled, "No doctors for you. We'll find an AI Engineer to get your problem resolved. If anything else starts acting flaky, let me know. I sure don't want a bad scene to get worse for my boy."

Hearing that, I smiled and happy tears flowed. Hugging him tight and with my face buried in his chest, I giggled, "Thanks, dad. I love you so much."

Squeezing me back, Derrick assured, "I love you too. We're gonna have lots of fun together."

"I know it."

A little boy appeared with cookies in one hand and a glass of chocolate milk in the other. His clothes consisted of sandals and Transformers boxers, with a med kit on a belt around his waist. "Kewl! Burgers to wash down my cookies with! Who are the kids that need a real doctor, not a fossil?"

"I HEARD THAT!" Doctor Janet laughed and ruffled the little boy's hair. She then pointed him towards Dee and Richie.

"Oh! You still have your hearing? Kewl!" He giggled as he ran over and away from any form of retaliation.

"And I still have my memory too, you little brat. I get kids like you back!"

Handing his cookies to Dee and Richie, he whined in his best little boy voice, "You pwomise?"

Janet reminded, "You're almost as old as I am, little man!"

I wondered, how in the world could a little boy about Dillon's size be as old as a grown woman.

"Yes, but I, unlike you, haven't let myself go yet!" the boy giggled, causing all of us kids to laugh loudly.

Janet stood there speechless for a moment, then, "You're grounded, mister. No cookies for a month!"

He took another bite of his cookie, then he took a long slurp of his chocolate milk. Putting the empty glass down in a safe spot, he grinned, "Right." He giggled as she also cracked up. He turned back to the two kids, "Hi! I'm 'Tonio."

"Hi 'Tonio, I'm Dee."

"And I'm Richie, Dee's brand new li'l bro."

Dee offered, "Prez and Keith are our new daddies. They says that we gotta all get checked up by a doc. Do you know any good docs?"

'Tonio giggled. "Kinda! You wanna help me check out this new toy Doctor McCoy gave me yesterday? We can see what it does!" He glanced up at Prez and Keith. "Daddies, huh? When?"

"About fifteen minutes ago!" Keith chortled.

"It was a short pregnancy!" Prez joked.

"Hey great-great-great-great-great Granny Janet! Did you make it official?" 'Tonio said loud enough for almost everyone nearby to hear.

"Nope. Didn't know it happened. Give me a moment." She made a few entries into the tricorder. "Prez, Keith, you want the rug rats?"

'Tonio rolled his eyes and sighed, "Memory issues, you get that when you are old."

"Yeah, but we kinda need to be married first," Keith grinned.

Prez laughed, "We had the kids on the sly! What's the diff?"

Janet looked at Tonio. "Can it, runt!" She looked at the kids and softly asked, "You want Prez and Keith as daddies?"

"You're just jealous because Doctor McCoy likes me!" 'Tonio giggled.

"YES!" Richie loudly stated.

Dee nodded, "Yup, me too!"

"Hmmm.... how many times did he pinch your butt? He's got mine at least fifty times." She said as she entered a few things into the tricorder, then looked up with a smile. "Congratulations, Keith and Prez, it's boys. And it's official."

"Official?" Keith and Prez incredulously repeated. They can adopt kids? What was this going on? All of the leaders adopt too, I remembered. Now there were no secrets.

'Tonio giggled, "Next time, just do it yourselves. Old ladies talk too much!" and hid behind Prez.

Prez asked, "Don't we need to be married first?"

'Tonio giggled, "Nope! I've got a son, and By and me ain't hitched yet!" He reached into his bag and pulled out eight cards. "Uncle Harrison sent these to HQ to pass on to y'all."

Prez and Keith looked down at the cards they were handed.

Keith wondered, "We're Starfleet Ensigns now, huh?"

"No. You're cooks now, you're Starfleet all the time," 'Tonio grinned. Dee and Richie held onto each other and shared a belly laugh. Mike and Derrick also began laughing.

Prez smirked, "Mike and Derrick, com'ere a sec." Keith handed Mike his Starfleet ID. Prez handed an ID card to Derrick and playfully saluted, "Ensign Derrick Seibert, now you and your boyfriend get to adopt Dillon, Reyes and Jonah!" I almost shouted, YES!

"Oh yeah!" Janet said, as she pulled out some papers from her bag. She then handed them to Mike and Derrick. "Here are your official papers making you the Shiny Daddies to the Scooby Gang."

Mike and Derrick's jaws were now hanging on the ground. Surprised, they looked at each other and silently mouthed, "We're really parents!" Dillon, Jonah and I smiled widely.

"I told ya, memory fails when you're OLD!" 'Tonio giggled.

"Yeah," Janet smirked, "keep at it, you little runt. You're only nine months younger than I am."

"And ninety years cuter!" 'Tonio shot back.

Janet smiled, "Yup! Oh and by the way, you're hanging out of your boxers."

"Hey, if you got it, why hide it?" 'Tonio blushed and giggled.

Dillon, Jonah and I surrounded Janet, giving her no escape. Mike smiled and Derrick prodded, "Since you're in the adopting mode, would you do the honors for us too, Janet?"

Janet nodded and wondered, "Which kids?"

Breaking down in a fit of giggles, Mike answered, "The three that have you trapped seem to want something."

Looking around and behind her, Janet noticed the three of us.

Derrick sniggered, "Just give us a few minutes before these burgers turn into hockey pucks." While Mike and Derrick got burgers on buns, Janet faced us and asked our names. She seemed to look at me for a long few moments as if she recognized me but never said a word. Relieved of their cooking duties, Derrick and Mike joined us. With Prez, Keith, Dee and Richie watching, Janet confirmed that we wanted Derrick and Mike as fathers. Derrick and Mike confirmed that they wanted us as their sons. Our new family wandered away from the grills and went to the CIC dining room, where most of the other rescued kids were already being fed.

That dining room was huge! There were easily a hundred tables that could seat eight teenagers or ten little kids comfortably. Directly across from the entrance were a pair of doors labeled "Command Center". To our left were two more sets of double doors. Derrick and Mike led us there where we found another huge room filled with billiards and Foosball tables, dartboards, arcade video games and wall mounted televisions. On our way back through the dining room, Dillon got tired so Mike lifted him up and carried him. Dillon poured on the charm. He whispered, "I love you, Poppa," and cuddled close to Mike. Mike ate it up and held on to Dillon like he was the happiest guy in the world.

Smiling up at Derrick, I shared, "I love you too, dad."

Derrick chuckled, "I'm trippin' so bad now!"

Mike laughed, then wondered, "How're you feelin', Jonah?"

Jonah giggled, "I'm the middle son. I love all of ya!"

Ruffling Jonah's hair, Derrick chuckled, "The perfect answer."

"Let's get dinner, dudes," Mike suggested.

As we arrived in the chow line, Derrick told us, "After we eat, us Core Rimmers are gonna get our own orientation from Lieutenant Vorik. It starts at eight o'clock, but should only take us about an hour or so."

"We'll be in the Command Center," Mike added. "You guys can hang at the pool with your buds."

I told our new dads, "We hung out with Dee, Richie and Geoff today, so we'll probably be with them."

"Kewl," Derrick chanted. Mike was busy helping Dillon choose chicken and macaroni salad. I got a cheeseburger, a hot dog, a sausage in a bun, a little macaroni salad and a little potato salad. I carried my plate and Jonah's. Mike carried his own plate and Dillon's. Dillon carried his own soda and Mike's while Jonah carried his own and mine.

Settled at our table, we began eating and chatting. Once I had shared that most of memories prior to June first were inaccessible, Jonah picked up the story. What we hadn't shared with them before about life at our orphanage was told. We all learned that Dillon had been fostered by a horrible couple. The little boy was only six years old, but he was being sexually fondled and photographed. While Mike helped Dillon slice his chicken, he explained that "little dudes shouldn't ever have to play sex games with anyone." When Derrick and I finished eating, I got my first drumming lesson. In the meanwhile, Mike was singing with Jonah. Mike would sing a line then Jonah would copy it.

"Guess who just got back today?

Those wild-eyed boys that had been away

Haven't changed, haven't much to say

But man, I still think those cats are great

"They were asking if you were around

How you was, where you could be found

I told them you were living downtown

Driving all the old men crazy

The boys are back in town."

Donnie and Emily came by and talked with all the Core Rimmers about stuff that had to be moved from their old homes to their new houses. Mike is a sentimentalist! I never would've guessed. Too quickly, dinner was over and our new dads went into the Command Center. Jonah asked, "What do you think is in there?"

I shrugged, "Clan Short stuff, I guess." Seeing Jonah's head tilt and knowing another question was brewing, I giggled, "I dunno, bro. How did Clan Short know about our orphanage or the others, or the fostered kids? I'd bet it has some kewl Starfleet stuff though. The Vulcans and Starfleet were involved in all of it."

Satisfied, at least for the time being, we went with Richie and Dee over to our new grandparents. Corey's dad, Derrick's dad, Mike's dad, and Prez and Keith's dad took us into the rec room beside the dining hall where we learned to play pool and tried our best at various arcade games. Soon, a bunch of other rescued kids were in there with us. Televisions were turned on. One had cartoons on it and another had a situation comedy on it. It was too kewl! We were not only allowed to play but encouraged to play. At the orphanage, we'd be cleaning up after our meager meals and then sent to bed or sent to play with some old man or woman.

In under an hour, our dads were out of the Command Center and gathering us together for a trip to check out the auditorium. Once there, Derrick helped Drew get the place powered up. I opened the lobby door to peek inside and couldn't help but giggled hysterically. Scattered around the auditorium and the stage were all the missing ferrets, dressed in aprons and polishing everything in sight!

Carrying Jonah on his hip, Derrick followed me inside. Mike had Dillon on his hip. Grinning at the ferrets handiwork, Mike hollered, "Spike!" Drew, Corey and Geoff followed us into the massive auditorium.

Standing up on his hind legs, Spike gleefully cheered, "Shiny Daddy!" and began scampering up the aisle.

"We've been looking for you guys for hours," Mike told Spike.

Stopping and squatting, Spike looked up and explained, "We was exploring. When we found this place, High Priest Dave said we should always keep it SHINY!"

Mike smiled, "You guys did an excellent job too!"

"We won't even need spotlights," Corey snickered.

Drew nodded and joked, "The audience might even need sunglasses!"

Bouncing slightly from the compliments, Spike begged, "Will you make shiny music for us tonight?"

Derrick nodded, "We're already gathering our Clan and all the visitors."

Mike explained, "Our Shiny leader Prez might have a few things to say first, but I'm sure we can talk him into playing some shiny songs. I've got some special ones already picked out for all you ferrets."

"You do?" Spike happily squealed. Mike nodded and Spike reminded, "We have your special Shiny Robes ready too!"

"Excellent!" Mike cheered. "I'll even wear 'em whenever we perform."

Speechless, Spike hurried over and grabbed hold of Mike's leg, looking up with happy shiny tear-filled eyes. Mike bent down slightly, softly petting the small ferret boy's head, and assured, "I love you too, Spike."

When we got to the stage, I looked back at the room and estimated, "Fifteen thousand could fit in here easily. I can't even see all the balcony seats either."

Derrick nodded his agreement saying, "That's enough for most of the Clan, I think... maybe."

Surprised, I asked, "Clan Short is that big?"

Derrick answered, "About eight thousand in Utah. I can only guess that all the other divisions combined would double that number, but I'm honestly not sure. Our Rimmer Clan is already over a hundred kids, adults and staff."

Shaking my head, I giggled, "Rimmer Clan! That's so wrong!"

Bouncing his eyebrows playfully, Derrick chuckled and put Jonah down repeatedly saying, "Rimmers!", then Derrick, Dillon and Jonah began tickling me. While I was somewhat indisposed because I was still giggling from the onslaught, Mike knelt down before all the ferrets and accepted his Shiny Priest robe.

The large ferret standing before Mike said, "It is with great Shiny pleasure, that I bequeath to you, Michael Gibbons, with the robes of your new office. That of a Priest to the all great and powerful SHINY!"

Mike smiled, "Thank you, High Priest Dave. I will wear this proudly tonight and always." He then stood and put his Shiny Priest Robe on for the first time. The ferrets all clapped and squealed happily at how perfectly it fit and, of course, how big and shiny the eight-pointed stars gleamed on the white robe. Our new family, Drew, Corey and Geoff witnessed this and began clapping and cheering. Seeing other Rimmer Clan kids and Clan visitors entering the auditorium, Mike suggested that the ferrets take seats in the front rows. Picking up Dillon, Mike went to greet the people coming in.

Prez, Keith, Dee and Richie entered the auditorium and looked around much like I had. Keith came down the aisle with Richie but was met halfway by Drew, Corey and Geoff. He came down to the stage where Derrick, Jonah and I were waiting, softly giggling, "Shiny Rimmers!"

"Not goin' there!" Derrick chuckled.

Keith went up on the stage with Richie. They sat at the piano, then Keith began playing. It sure wasn't rock or anything like what the band had played at the concert Friday night. Derrick led us up the stage steps, then we sat at the edge of the stage. Drew, Corey, Geoff and Kaleo joined us there. After at least ten minutes, Keith ended the song, then started playing another different song. Mike, Dillon, Prez and Dee joined us at the edge of the stage. The center seating area was filled about twenty rows. The three hundred people, gorillas, G-Cats and ferrets barely made a dent in the total floor seats available. When Keith stopped playing, everyone clapped, then Prez began speaking. He started by thanking all the visitors for their help setting up our new Clan Division. He also thanked Doctor Janet "for helping us adopt our kids and forming families. It feels great."

From the audience, Mrs. Hundser hollered, "It won't feel so great tomorrow!" While Prez and many of the Core Rimmers chuckled, she loudly teased, "You're all grounded for a week!" Most of the audience erupted in laughter. Further down the row of seats, Richie and Geoff were assuring some kids that Mrs. Hundser was really nice. The cranky act was her way of teasing her sons.

Prez joked, "Sorry for making you a grandmother before your time! I'm sure you'll enjoy having our little ones around to spoil rotten."

"We've already begun!" Mr. Hundser loudly admitted.

"I don't doubt it!" Prez snickered. He then said, "Thanks to all the ferrets and High Priest Dave for making everything in here sparkle."

All seventy-four ferrets stood and sang, "God save our Gracious Shiny! Long live our Noble Shiny, God save the Shiny, Send it victorious; Happy and Glorious; Long to Shine over us; God save the Shiny!"

"Okay!" Prez chuckled. He then continued, "Since we can use this place as a movie theater, I thought we might begin tomorrow night with some movies appropriate for Halloween. We'll need one or two projectionists and three or four to serve snacks and drinks at the concession stand. If any of our new clan members are interested in those jobs, just let any one of us in the Core Team know.

"One last thing since it's getting late and we've all had a busy day. For all our new brothers and sisters now part of the Pacific Rim Division Clan; we've been considering alternatives for bed time tonight, but ultimately the choice is yours. Choice one: whoever wants to can start moving into the dorms; and, choice two: we can divide ourselves up into groups of twenty or so and spend the night together with our parents in our new homes. The choice is yours. Let us know what ya want to do."

Tory and a bunch of other kids hollered, "We want a concert!"

Prez giggled, "Was that one of the choices I mentioned?"

Doctor Janet and her husband loudly added, "We've heard Keith, now we'd like to hear your band."

Prez looked left and right at his bands mates. Mike grinned, "I already promised Spike we'd play a few songs."

"We really should try everything out," Derrick agreed.

"Sweet!" Drew chirped. Prez smiled at him and Drew offered, "It's a five-dot-one surround system." He and Corey jumped down off the stage. Drew helped Geoff down saying, "Give us a few minutes to make it upstairs, Prez." Drew, Corey and Geoff started back up the aisle on their way to the room where the PA system was set up.

"Okay then," Prez smiled, "One impromptu concert comin' up." Turning off the microphone, Prez asked Dee; "Ya wanna stay on stage with me or watch from the audience?"

Shrugging, Dee thought for a few seconds, then wondered, "Would you be mad if I watched?"

"Not at all," Prez honestly said, "Whatever makes you happiest."

Overhearing them, Kaleo came over, held his arms out and said, "Jump, Dee." The boy pushed off the stage and Kaleo caught him, then spun him around before putting him down on the floor. One after another, Kaleo helped the little guys down the same way, then we went back into the audience and found seats.

For a few minutes, while our fathers got their act together on stage, Dee, Dillon, Jonah, Richie and I chatted about them. The consensus between us was that having family and them as fathers was the best possible choice any of us could have made. The greatest part was that the five of us were rapidly becoming close friends, just like our dads were close friends.

Kaleo, Tory, Sean and some of the older rescued kids were sitting in the row behind us. Kaleo leaned forward and tapped me on the shoulder. He whispered, "Some of the other kids are gonna be closely watching you dudes." When I uncertainly locked eyes with him, Kaleo whispered, "Others are gonna want families too. You guys are the examples or the pattern; how you guys act around your new dads is gonna show other kids whether it's kewl or not."

"What should we do?" I wondered.

Kaleo shrugged, "Show your dads that you love them, so the kids can see how their new leaders react to that love. Then they can find parents they may want to have adopt them too."

I nodded, "That's simple. I just don't think I'm ready to be an example for anyone." Realizing my main concern, I worried, "You don't think they'll treat us like leaders, do you?"

Kaleo grinned, "Ya never can tell if that might happen. For now, you're definitely examples."

Turning around again, I softly shared with my brothers what Kaleo and I were talking about. That got the little guys giggling. Of course we were going to show our new dads how much we loved and wanted to be near them as much as possible. As for other kids watching us when we were with our dads, we couldn't help that. All they would see was what they'd likely already seen; that we were their sons.

Mike began playing guitar with the older man in the wheelchair.

All the chatter in the auditorium stopped. It was so pretty and sounded really great with the two of them playing the same song.

While we all clapped and cheered, Jonah turned to me and grinned, "He's such a great player!" Mike switched to a red guitar, then checked with his band mates.

Then the auditorium lights dimmed but only slightly. Green and blue lights draped the stage. A spotlight turned on Keith as he began playing. Another spotlight turned on to Derrick when he added chimes. Mike began playing and another spotlight turned on him. Spotlights turned off and the stage lights changed to only blue while a single tone played. A shiver ran up and down my spine that only got more intense when Mike played four notes with a spotlight on him. Twice more he played the same four notes, then Derrick began pounding his drums and the lights above him seemed to flash in time with his drum beats. I had no idea what the song title was but it was awesome! I looked around and saw everyone transfixed on the stage, smiling or grinning and enjoying the song as much as I was.

Old Habits played for about an hour. With prompting from us rescued kids, they performed a few songs from Friday night's luau. Then they called Adam down to jam with them. In a few minutes, they began playing two more songs with Adam. Finally, they played another song with the man in the wheelchair. Watching Mike and him play together was great!

After the audience had quieted and the lights were turned up again, Prez walked up to the microphone and asked, "What's it gonna be tonight; does anyone want to sleep in the dorm?" He watched carefully as heads shook. "Okay, the answer is no then. So shall we split into groups of twenty or just guys and girls?"

Kaleo stood and answered, "We'd like to stay together, Prez."

Prez smiled and nodded, "Okay, are separate bedrooms in the same house acceptable, or do we create one big nest in the basement?" Kaleo and Prez looked around. Of course, the five of us had no input on the decision. We knew we were sleeping with our dads. Prez then asked, "Those of you that aren't sure, give me some kinda clue. What's the deal?"

Lu Guerrieri admitted, "Just wanna stay with you, Prez."

Chiba Atsushi said, "Same here."

Makan Kama said, "Me too."

For the next few minutes, Prez organized sleeping arrangements for all the visitors and us rescued kids. The auditorium began emptying out, but Kaleo and the six of us adopted kids went to the stage and waited for our dads. Dillon and Richie were very tired but neither wanted to leave.

When the ferrets tried to leave without us, Mike was a little put off, I think. Mike shouted, "Spike! Where are you going?"

Spinning around, Spike answered, "We're going to find a place to sleep."

"You've already got a place," Mike said, "with the rest of us."

Spike stammered, "But... but... my litter mates?"

"They're sleeping with us too," Derrick said. Xander, Faith and Willow looked around uncertainly.

"But... but... we-we're n-not hu-hu-human!" Spike stuttered, tears forming in his eyes. "We... we've never been... been allowed...."

I almost groaned aloud. Wherever they used to live, they were treated more like animals than like humans. How unfair! They're so little; smaller than Dillon or any of the smallest kids.

"You're not only allowed, you're expected to be with us," Mike interrupted.

"You just gotta be good," Derrick softly reminded. "No stealing any shinys in the house."

Confused and not believing it could be real, Spike said, "But.. but if we really are your family, then the shinys are all of ours. We don't steal shared shinys, that would be wrong."

Carrying Dillon over near his ferret kids, Mike smiled, "Then everything's kewl and you can definitely stay with us at night, and eat with us too."

The last thing done that night was a trip to the field where we had all been transported with our suitcases. The original idea was to drag all the luggage to the Hundserts' house, but our leaders realized we would need to help the little kids and could be doing that for a long while. Finally, they called Daileass and had him transport the suitcases to the house. All eighty-seven of us and our leaders went down to the basement.

While popcorn was popped and sodas were passed around, my brothers and dads surrounded me. In a quiet corner of the basement, my dads said they were still trying to find someone that could help my memory access issue. Since I didn't want to forget anything that had happened and we all wanted to remember our first days together, I was led upstairs by Mike and sat before a computer. I've been up here almost three hours. Computers are easy but this word processing program leaves a lot to be desired. Why I can't simply speak into a microphone and dictate, I don't know. Typing can be done quickly but a vocal interface would be faster; at least that's my point of view.

I'm going to go downstairs now. My brothers are probably asleep by now, which means I get to spend a little time alone with my new dads; the two best guys I could ever hope to have as fathers. I never did get to tell Prez my secret. If not tonight, I'll get around to it.

Reyes Taraschke Personal Log 2

Sunday, October 31, 2004

Sunday morning Jonah woke me up. Most of us kids played video games until our dads and leaders woke up and then went upstairs. After saying good morning to the Hundasers, most of us rescued kids went outside to our suitcases to get clean clothes to prepare for our showers. Of course, us adopted kids waited for our new fathers to come outside before going to the dorm. Mike and Derrick came out first, but we still waited for Prez, Keith, Drew, Corey, John and Bruce. When they came outside chuckling and laughing, we started for the dormitories.

During the walk, Prez immediately went to work as our new Clan director. He asked Daileass to patch in all the Core Rimmers and then found out who of our visitors were still around. After that topic, Prez got help wanted ads placed in the local newspaper for additional employees then arranged for signs to be made for the three condominium buildings. Once all that was done, all our dads began joking about Daileass spying on everyone. At that time, we learned that Daileass was the AI at the UNIT base in Utah. The jokes continued during our shower as our dads began renaming the staff. We had House Rimmers, Tree and Lawn Rimmers and Hot Rimmers.

While we were toweling off, Mike looked up at the security camera. Its little red light flashed off, on, off and on again, making us fully aware that Daileass was watching and causing another bout of silliness. For some reason, Drew tried to hide from the camera. I think he was only playing, but maybe he was bashful and shy. In my opinion, Drew had no reason to be shy. For a twelve year old, he's exceptionally cute. Since he's already reached puberty, Drew's shoulders were wider than Corey's and overall, he was perfectly proportioned.

On our way to the CIC dining room, all our leaders wanted to check out the bedrooms in the dorms. They were big rooms and very similar to one another; only the dimensions were slightly different. Each room had two full sized beds, two night stands, two dressers, two closets, two personal computers, a television and a stereo. Corey checked out the TV in one room. He discovered that they had satellite broadcasting from the United States, Japan and Hawaii. The kids that had not been adopted would have very nice living arrangements.

We had great breakfasts at the CIC. It was like a buffet restaurant with everything we could ever want available for the asking. Prez introduced himself, Keith, Dee and Richie to the servers. For our family, Mike performed the introductions. The chefs serving that morning were named Miguel, Charles, Jessica and Randy. Our new families sat at separate tables; Prez, Keith, Richie, Dee, Drew, Corey and Geoff at one table while Derrick, Mike, Dillon, Jonah and I were not far away at another table. We had pancakes and sausages. Dillon and Jonah couldn't decide which kind of syrup to have with their pancakes so they tried them all. Watching them dip their pancakes in little bowls had Derrick and Mike grinning through the meal.

While we ate, we chatted about plans for the day. Our dads would be in the Command Center getting trained for at least two hours. All us kids could do what ever we wanted while our dads were busy. We decided we would likely split the time between video games in the Hundsers' basement or at the pool with the other kids. The last hour of the morning and early part of the afternoon were spent playing video games. Since there were only a few kids in the basement and it was obvious that I had some rare ability to play

'Sonic The Hedgehog' better than the rest, I shared my secret with Carmella, Richie, Dee, Kokaku, Bruce, Geoff, Cesar and Felipe. Having never met an android before, Carmella and Kokaku came to me and inspected me for signs of machinery. They even looked in my ears expecting to find flashing lights. Dillon, Jonah and I asked that they keep the secret, at least for another few days. A little at a time, I would tell the other rescued kids.

Unbelievably, to us anyway, Keith's and Corey's mothers came downstairs with trays of sandwiches and chips. It had only been about two hours since we ate a huge breakfast, but they were serving us. Shocked, we all thanked them. Cesar and Felipe sat on either side of Corey's mom to eat their lunches. While we ate, we learned that the adult men were keeping an eye on the kids that were out by the pool, diving well and indoor recreation center. One of the housekeepers, a lady named Madeline, came down stairs to organize and clean up the basement. After we ate, we all went outside and joined the rest of the Clan so the basement could be cleaned.

At the diving well, while Dillon and Jonah played at the pool with the other kids, I went to Tory. I explained that I had begun sharing my secret with some of the younger kids. Then I asked, "Are there any older kids that you think would be kewl knowing?"

Tory nodded and answered by calling over a bunch of kids. I already knew Sean, Horacio and Hank, but was introduced to about a dozen other thirteen and fourteen year old boys and girls. With the introductions complete, Tory offered, "Reyes has been a brother to me and Kaleo for years. He's got a little something to tell you guys."

Watching all of them carefully, I easily said, "I'm an android."

Horacio prompted, "Yeah? And?"

Uncertainly, I answered, "That's it."

Horacio turned to Sean. Sean rolled his eyes and giggled, "I thought maybe you were sick or in trouble. Jeez!"

"Get us all worked up for nothin'!" Horacio softly laughed.

One of the girls, Trish Vesley asked, "So, can you do anything kewl, like math or sciences?"

"I don't think so," I smirked. "The assholes at the orphanage screwed up my memory, so I don't really know."

Sean realized, "So you are actually sick and in trouble?"

"To a certain degree, I guess so," I replied, "but Derrick and Mike know. They're gonna get me help."

Glancing around the group then finally looking at me, Tory assured, "There's nothing to worry about, Reyes. You're set, bro."

For the first time, I decided to not ask that my secret be kept. About twenty of the eighty-seven kids now knew. I figured it wasn't really a secret to be kept any longer. Since they were being kewl, I decided to hang out with the older kids by the diving well. All the boys were naked so I stripped off my boardies too. I tried out the one-meter board a few times, then moved up to the three-meter board. After five totally wicked dives where I felt like I was briefly weightless in a pocket of air, I thought it was time to try out the five-meter board. That was too high for my pleasure and backed off to the three-meter board again.

Bruce, Dillon, Jonah, Geoff, Dee and Richie came over to the diving well and began getting dressed. I dove once more from the three-meter board then swam over to the ladder. Jonah prompted,

"Let's go back to the video games, bro."

Climbing out of the well, I wondered, "Where's Carmella, Kokaku, Cesar and Felipe?"

Bruce answered, "Cesar and Felipe went with Corey's mom."

As I pulled up my boardies, Dee added, "Carmella and Kokaku went home with our grandma."

The group of us began walking to Hundserts' house. Jonah told me, "You and Bruce are kickin' our butts every game! You gotta teach us how to play better, bro."

I nodded and smiled, "I'll try."

Bruce challenged, "I'll take ya on, Reyes. While we play, we can try and describe what we're doin'." Jonah and the other boys thought that was a great idea.

At the front door, Dee placed his hand on the security plate and stated his full name. The red light changed to green and the door unlocked. Dee opened the door and the rest of us followed him inside. To our left, in the living room were Keith's mom and dad with Carmella and Kokaku. Dee and Richie hurried into the room and sat on the sofa with their grandparents.

Uncle Jim asked, "Tired of the pools already, boys?"

Jonah grinned, "Bruce and Reyes is getting' good at Sonic. The rest of us need more practice."

"You know the way," Aunt Jen smiled, but warned, "Dinner time in about three hours. Don't fill up on popcorn and sodas."

Bruce nodded, "I'm only thirsty now," then led us to the basement. When we got down there, Bruce noticed Dee and Richie hadn't followed. He said, "I guess Dee and Richie aren't comin'." He then turned on TV's and game stations.

I went to the refrigerator and asked, "Who else is thirsty?" Soon, cans of drinks were passed out then we sat down to play. Bruce and I took one game and began showing the others the tricks of the game. Dillon, Jonah and Geoff hooted and hollered because my score was higher than Bruce's from the very beginning. I began explaining what I was doing as I was about to do it. Minutes later, Bruce lost his final hedgehog and I had won.

"What was I thinking?" Bruce giggled, "Like I ever had a chance."

Jonah tapped my shoulder and suggested, "Lemme play with Bruce?" I nodded and rolled away then helped get Dillon and Geoff started. For at least an hour, I sat behind the other four and offered suggestions while they played.

The basement door opened and we heard footsteps on the stairs. I turned and saw John with Nathan. "Hey, guys," John cheerfully said.

"Hey," Bruce smiled, "Reyes has been teaching us to play Sonic better."

"You guys wanna play too?" Jonah asked.

John shook his head and asked, "Bruce, could you come upstairs with me for a little while? There's something we need to talk about with my dad. Your Teddy and mine can come too."

"Okay, pal," Bruce replied. "Someone take over for me here." Nathan quickly moved into position, sitting between Bruce and Jonah. Then Bruce passed off the controller and rolled away, then stood up.

"How was your orientation?" Bruce asked John.

"Pretty cool," John grinned, "lots o' computers that can do lots o' different stuff. They make the Internet look lame in comparison." They started up the stairs with their Teddy Bears in tow. John told Bruce about the Core Rimmers' orientation. Since John and Nathan were back, I figured it would only be a matter of time before Derrick and Mike showed up. But Nathan was kicking Jonah's butt while he told us that Bruce's parents had been found, but were dead. Nathan explained that Bruce was going to need all of us to help him through the loss. Easily and quickly, we agreed that Bruce would hardly ever have any chance to feel alone or sad.

After Jonah lost the game, I got to play against Nathan for a long while. It was a really long match and I completely lost track of time. I'd get my points past Nathan's, then he'd pull off an amazing move and pass me again. Back and forth we went like that. At first, Jonah was excitedly commenting, but then Dillon and Geoff ended their game and watched us play too.

The basement door opened again and heavier footsteps came down the stairs. Dillon said, "Hi, Daddy." I glanced over my shoulder briefly and saw Mike standing there.

"Whoa!" Mike chuckled. "Look at those scores! You guys have set record high scores."

Jonah giggled, "They've been playing this one match for at least an hour."

Mike said, "I hate to break this up, but it's getting near dinner time. Our parents want to know what's been going on, so we're gonna have supper at home tonight. Just so you guys know, I've got a new brother and sister."

Jonah asked, "Who?" Nathan and I began purposefully killing our hedgehogs to quickly end the game, causing Dillon and Geoff to squeal in hysterical laughter.

Mike answered, "Ben Hatcher and Christel Robusto." He quickly added, "Derrick's got new brothers and sisters too; Sung Henjes, Kawazoe Yoshitoki, Latoya Tran and Brandi Soriano."

We turned off the TVs and game stations then stood. Jonah told Mike, "Richie and Dee never came down to play."

Starting up the steps, Mike nodded, "Carmella Socia and Kokaku Kidotai were adopted by the Hundserts. Cesar and Felipe Laurito are now part of the Seaver family."

Dillon giggled, "I guessed that would happen," and Geoff nodded agreement.

Mike explained, "For tonight, we're gonna split up and have dinner with our families. Reyes, Jonah and Dillon, you'll have dinner with Derrick's family this time. I'll go find the Scooby Gang and they'll have dinner with my family. Next time, we'll switch it around, the Scoobies with Derrick and you guys with me."

Opening the basement door, we turned into the kitchen. Geoff saw Drew and took off like a miniature bolt of lightning. Drew squatted down and caught his little fireball, then picked him up. Mike laughed, "I guess that answers where Geoff is having dinner." I couldn't help but notice how much happier Geoff seemed with Drew. I also noticed the wall clock read twenty-of-five.

Turning to Mike, I asked, "You guys were busy for almost six hours with the orientation?"

Shaking his head, Mike answered, "A little over three hours with that then with the various adoptions." He then faced Prez and Keith saying, "We'll see you dudes later tonight."

Prez was chomping on a piece of bread he had dunked in the pot of sauce and nodded. Keith answered, "After dinner, at the pools, bro."

Leading our little group to the sliding doors, Mike said, "See ya." When we got outside, Mike noticed Nathan with us and groaned, "Dude! I'm sorry, we completely forgot to include you in our dinner plans."

Nathan grunted then joked, "Just like my brothers. When they've swallowed the table, they look at me and ask if I might be a little hungry."

Mike chuckled, "Vocalize, dude!" A few seconds later, Mike laughed, "You and Daileass are definitely related. One talking in my ear and the other in my mind, at the same time."

Nathan assured, "It's kewl, Mike. You guys need family time too. I'll eat at the CIC dining room with Kaleo and the rest of the Clan. I'll catch up with you guys later at the pool."

Mike nodded, "Kewl dude," then led us to the Seiberts' house.

Before we arrived at the kitchen doorway, Derrick stepped outside with Sung and Kawazoe. Upon seeing the two small boys with my dad, I realized that they were now my eight-year-old uncles. Derrick confirmed, "You guys know each other?"

Shouting, "Yup!" Dillon and Jonah hurried to Sung and Kawazoe.

While my brothers and uncles greeted each other, Derrick came to me and asked, "Do you like pork chops, Reyes?"

I nodded and smiled, "I haven't found anything yet that I don't like."

Mike slid in close to Derrick and planted a kiss then softly said, "I'm gonna go find the Scoobies."

Derrick smiled, "See ya in about an hour."

Mike nodded and hurried off past the homes toward the trees shouting, "Spike! Willow! Xander! Faith!"

Derrick slid open the kitchen door. Dillon, Jonah, Sung and Kawazoe went inside, but I hung back with Derrick. I asked, "Do your parents know about me?"

Shaking his head, Derrick answered, "No," then planted a kiss on my forehead and smiled, "It won't matter to my folks. I went over by the pool after the orientation looking for you guys. Tory told me that you shared your secret with lots of kids." Wrapping an arm around me and pulling me inside, Derrick instructed, "Be proud of who you are, Reyes. I'm proud of you and so is Mike."

With that said, I felt incredible shivers race up and down my spine. I closed the door behind me and grinned, "I need to use the bathroom."

Squeezing me firmly, Derrick teased, "You remember how that works?"

I laughed, "I think so," then went to the bathroom, just beyond the kitchen and dinette, near the basement door. The first floor bathrooms were split in half, with a utility room beyond the inner wall. In the utility room were water heaters and the largest washing machines and dryers I had ever seen. For curiosity's sake, I made a mental note to sneak a peak at the housekeepers' closets in the rec center and the pool house some time in the future.

When I finished in the bathroom and opened the door, Grandpa Carl had just closed the basement door. He was dressed in jeans and a white T-shirt with a carpenter's tool belt around his waist. There was a ladder leaning against a nearby wall. He smiled, "How're you doing, Reyes?"

"Good," I answered, and then asked, "What're you doin'?"

Gesturing at the many framed pictures along the wall on the floor, he answered, "Hanging pictures. Would you like to help?"

I shrugged, "I've never done it before."

Picking up a metal bar, Grandpa Carl explained, "This is a level," and pointed to little glass encased bubbles saying, "You just need to watch the bubbles. When they're centered between the lines, we'll have a true level line to mark the wall."

I replied, "It sounds easy," and Derrick came around the corner.

Grandpa Carl pulled something off his belt and said, "This is a tape measure. I'll mark a distance from the ceiling. You can use the level to make sure we don't have drunken, crooked pictures hanging." Derrick began chuckling and I grinned.

Derrick smiled, "That was a shot at me and Mike."

While we waited for dinner to finish cooking, Grandpa Carl, my dad and I got some paintings and photos hung in the hall, the living room and dining room. Grandpa Carl told me that I had used the level correctly and congratulated me each time. I asked about some of the people in the various photos we hung. They were Derrick's aunts, uncles and grandparents that still lived in the United States. I learned that my dad was born in California, where many of Grandpa Carl's and Grandma Anna's family were from. Derrick and his parents moved from California to Hawaii in 1992 when Derrick was two. In 1994, the Hundserts and Gibbons also moved from the States to Hawaii. The O'Brians were the last to move here in 1997. Derrick pointed out a photo taken in 1999 of all the families together. In the foreground of the photo sat Drew, Corey, John and Lindsay. Behind them were nine-year-old versions of Derrick, Mike, Keith and Prez. In the back rows were the mothers and then the fathers. Back then, Prez looked a lot like his mother. While we were in the dining room hanging the last of the large oil paintings, Grandma Anna said, "Perfect; dinner in five minutes, men."

Grandpa Carl nodded then told Derrick and me to "get washed up."

My dad and I went back into the bathroom, quickly washed our hands then hurried back to the dining room. All the little kids were already seated along the sides of the huge table. I sat down and Derrick asked for plates adding, "little ladies first." All us boys griped and groaned in frustration. Derrick cracked up before serving us. Thankfully, Grandma Anna and Grandpa Carl helped get all of us served.

Grandma Anna was a great cook. She made the moistest, tenderest pork chops I had ever eaten. There was also seasoned corn, green beans and what she called 'twice baked potatoes'. Latoya and Brandi helped her make them. The baked potatoes were allowed to cool then cut in half. The potato was scraped out of each skin then mashed and returned to the skins. Cheese and bacon bits were added on top then put back in the oven again. All of us adopted kids had never had such a fantastic meal in our lives. There were ten people around the table and everybody ate their fill, but there were still leftovers. Never again would we be limited to what we wanted to eat. As if we could lift ourselves from our chairs after we finished, Grandma Anna began clearing the table and asked, "Who wants apple pie?"

I loudly groaned over the cheers of Dillon, Jonah, Sung and Kawazoe.

My grandparents smiled at me, and Derrick chuckled, "Stuffed yourself, huh Reyes?"

I honestly said, "Apple pie sounds great, but I couldn't eat another bite."

"I'll save you a piece for later or tomorrow," Grandma Anna promised, then turned and left the room with a stack of plates. Grandpa Carl followed her out of the room with a few serving bowls.

The moment they were gone, Jonah teased, "I'm here for breakfast tomorrow!"

Not too long after dinner and dessert, we went back to Mike's house. His family were still finishing up dinner. Mike seemed somewhat distracted, I noticed. Derrick led Dillon, Jonah and I down to their basement where the drums were set up. Derrick gave me another drum lesson, then let me practice on his kit.

Mike and Ben came downstairs both carrying acoustic guitars. Jonah went to them and asked, "When did Ben get a guitar?"

"Just a few minutes ago," Mike answered. "He told me that he wanted to learn how to play during dinner."

Jonah practically begged, "Can I have one too? I wanna learn to play."

Mike smiled, "Sure ya can. You never told me you were interested before." He then tapped his sub-vocal saying, "Daileass, another Taylor GS Mini acoustic guitar for my son, please."

A second later, a guitar was hanging off Jonah's shoulder, exactly like the one Ben had.

"Before we get into lessons," Mike began, "here's a goal for you guys to shoot for. It's pretty easy to play, and given the situation with Bruce, I think it's appropriate. Mike began playing then sang:

Would you know my name

If I saw you in heaven

Will it be the same

If I saw you in heaven

I must be strong, and carry on

Cause I know I don't belong

Here in heaven

Would you hold my hand

If I saw you in heaven

Would you help me stand

If I saw you in heaven

I'll find my way, through night and day

Cause I know I just can't stay

Here in heaven

Time can bring you down

Time can bend your knee

Time can break your heart

Have you begging please

Begging please

Beyond the door

There's peace I'm sure.

And I know there'll be no more...

Tears in heaven

Would you know my name

If I saw you in heaven

Will it be the same

If I saw you in heaven

I must be strong, and carry on

Cause I know I don't belong

Here in heaven

Cause I know I don't belong

Here in heaven

While everyone else in the room clapped, I sat there fighting back my tears. Derrick noticed though and came to me, then held me tight. Instead of mourning, Mike went directly back to Ben and Jonah, beginning their guitar lessons. I buried my face on Derrick's shoulder and let quiet tears flow from my eyes onto his T-shirt. After about a minute, Derrick led me upstairs and into the bathroom. He went in there with me, and I offered, "I'm sorry, dad."

He shushed me and said, "Don't be. It's plain ol' wrong for something like this to happen; now is worse because all you guys are settling into new lives. It proves that the cycle of life continues on, no matter what else might be happening. For Bruce, this is gonna be a day he'll always remember. What we can do is make it an easy transition from one life to another. From now on, we're gonna be his friends, brothers and sisters."

Understanding, I nodded and then sighed, "I might not have cried until later, if at all, but Mike singing that song wrecked me."

Derrick smirked, "That's part of why I love him. As whacky and fun as he can be, his heart shows in the music he plays." Gesturing to the sink, he gently instructed, "Clean up and join us when you're ready." Finally, he kissed my forehead then left me to wash my face and pull myself back together. The only question I had running through my mind was, why after so much good stuff did something bad have to happen. There was no valid reason for it.

I went back downstairs. Ben and Jonah were practicing their guitars. Just as I sat down behind the drums, Mike's comm-badge chirped. Mike tapped the little badge on his T-shirt and replied. Keith's voice announced, "Dudes, we just learned there are kids to pick up from our Maui base. It's time to go do our stuff."

Derrick nodded and Mike said, "We'll meet you outside, bro."

Derrick locked eyes with me. I smiled, "It's kewl now, dad. I'll try to keep a tempo for Jonah and Ben." After about half an hour, Dillon was bored and Ben and Jonah's fingers were burning.

Since Dillon and Jonah hadn't seen the second floor, we went to investigate the upstairs. At the top of the stairs, the first thing you see are bathrooms; three of them are lined up directly across from the stairs and to the left. To the right of the staircase is a single doorway leading to a massive master bedroom suite. The master bedroom and attached master bath occupied the entire right side of the upstairs. Beyond all the bathrooms, to the left of the stairs, is the first and smallest bedroom; though, even this room was pretty large and had a full size bed. Further around the left of the staircase down the hallway are three more bedrooms. Each of these other three bedrooms were large enough for two full size beds, two night tables, two desks, two dressers and a complete entertainment center. It was obvious which bedroom was Mike's, the fourth of five bedrooms, by the musical paraphernalia in the room. Dillon and Ben hunkered down on the floor and played video games. Jonah and I were listening to compact disks on the stereo. Mike had a lot of music by guitarists, but many were by a man named Eric Clapton. The Scooby gang wandered in, but weren't interested in video games or music so they turned around and left.

We weren't up there alone for very long when Derrick and Mike walked in. After checking with us to see if everything was kewl, Mike went to his desk and unlocked the computer. Soon, Derrick was softly chuckling. Mike grumbled, "This is not funny!"

I turned to see Mike with his head sagging in his hands and Derrick turning red, holding back laughs to mere chortles and snickering. Soon, Ben, Dillon, Jonah and I were beside Derrick and Mike watching a video of Mike showering with the Scoobies.

At the end of the flick, Jonah giggled, "What were ya thinkin', pop?"

Shaking his head pitifully, Mike smirked, "They were dirty so..."

Ben teased, "Ya got a hairy butt!" then swiftly hid behind Derrick. Dillon, Jonah and I howled laughing as Ben tore out of the room and raced downstairs. Dillon tried to get away with passing the same remark, but Mike caught Dillon before he could escape and began tickling him.

A couple of minutes later, our little family was gathered with the Scoobies in the living room. We had our first family chat. The greatest part for Dillon, Jonah and me was that our dads didn't expect or desire anything from us except our best and our caring for each other. They didn't care if I became a drummer or if Jonah became a guitarist; our interests would be allowed to change and develop over time. Mike apologized to the Scoobies for the shower and then we went out back where a nice big aluminum tub was sitting, ready for the ferrets to use whenever they wanted a bath.

With our family meeting over, we went to join the rest of the Clan by the pool and diving well. Almost everyone was there, including the new kids picked up at Maui earlier that night. One of the kids, Randy Beale, got along famously with Jonah and Dillon. Randy was seven years old; two years older than Dillon and two years younger than Jonah. The last two Core Rimmers to arrive at the pool were Prez and Keith. After they made the rounds checking on the new kids, they called together the Core Rimmer team. First, everyone was introduced to the doctor and child psychologist, then the Core Rimmers went for a private chat. That didn't last very long though. They returned to the pool and diving well to hang out with the rest of us.

At nine-thirty, by the clock in the rec center, adults began gathering the four and five-year-old kids to get them ready for bed. The Hundserts and the Seavers led the troop of midgets back to the nest for the night. That left our four grandparents, the two doctors, a small group of housekeepers and landscapers by the pool to watch over the remaining seventy or so kids. Mike was playing "Jaws" in the pool, pretending to be a Great White Shark and sending kids screeching away from his stealthy attacks. It was a great game and Mike was an awesome swimmer. To try and make things more even, Derrick began playing "Orca". The Great White seemed to like getting chased away by the killer whale, for some strange reason.

At some point, Prez, Keith, Tory and Kaleo vanished along with most of the older teenagers. About an hour later, around eleven o'clock, many of the younger kids left the pool to call it a night. When Randy began getting tired, Jonah led him to the Hundserts' house to join the nest. Prez, Keith, Tory and Kaleo returned and saw that only about twenty of the eldest rescued kids were still at the pool with Derrick, Mike and me.

After telling us that they were moving to the dorms, Kaleo and Tory said goodnight then departed. By eleven-thirty, everyone was walking to the Hundserts' house to chill out and call an end to a busy day. This night, I didn't have to sit in a quiet bedroom alone typing my story. Derrick called Daileass and got me my own laptop computer. Keith's mom came downstairs a while ago. Two kids were picked up by Corey and Drew at our North Road gate about midnight. The newbies decided they wanted to sleep at the dorm, so Prez, Keith, Derrick, Mike, Corey and Drew just left to walk them over there. Since I'm done for today and my dads still aren't back, I guess I'll join the nest.

Monday, November 1, 2004

Once again, Monday morning we woke in the Hundserts' basement. Dillon, Jonah and I were with our dads almost the whole day. After showers at the Seiberts' home, we had a home cooked breakfast. Derrick's mom made us hash browns and breakfast sandwiches on biscuits with egg, cheese and bacon. What made it really strange was that we all began speaking in tongues. Jonah began speaking in Yiddish. I was speaking Russian. Dillon was speaking Gaelic. Derrick's mom was speaking in German, and we could all understand each other perfectly. Clan magic was happening again and we weren't awake an hour.

Ben and Jonah were having a rough time with what Mike had showed them the prior evening so Mike showed them the 'spider chromatics' again. Mike played very slowly at first, with Ben and Jonah closely watching Mike's fingers. Christel and Lindsay excused themselves, then went upstairs. Us boys were sitting around the kitchen table, enjoying our time together when I noticed Prez, Keith, Bruce, John and a bunch of other kids outside. Also noticing the activity outside, Derrick softly chuckled, "Here we go."

Quickly, guitars were put aside and we went out the sliding glass doors. One of the kids had wings! He picked up Bruce and flapped his wings then took off like a shot, with Bruce laughing loudly at the top of his lungs. Our group approached the others and three kids about Jonah's age met us. First they went to Derrick, already knowing his name, and introduced themselves. Their names were Jacob, Jamie and Beau. They went around hugging each of us in turn; Mike, Jonah, Ben, Dillon and finally me. We were just saying hello to the other three, Jason, Nathan and Vicky Evans, when Bruce and the bird-boy returned from their flight. The best part of this magical Clan insanity was that Bruce was a giggling mass of naked eight-year-old in the grass. After learning of his parent's passing, this was exactly what Bruce needed.

Little kids came from everywhere wanting a flight around the island. John was next in line though and quickly stripped. Some of us shook our heads sadly while other kids giggled insanely because John had a boner. This time Riti wanted to take John to the big island of Hawaii. They would be gone at least an hour, I figured. Anyway, I was too big to have a chance to fly with Riti so I turned to Derrick and asked, "Dad, can I go play the drums for a while?"

"Sure, Reyes," Derrick nodded. "Let Mike's mom know you're there though."

Mike chimed in, "She might be at the pool now. Check there first, okay?"

I agreed, thanked my dads and told my brothers where I was going then hurried to the pool. Mrs. Seaver was there and so was grandma Anna, but grandma Laura hadn't been there yet, I learned. I ran around the rec center and went in the front door. Sitting in the living room and watching the morning news, Grandma Laura asked, "Not interested in playing at the pool today, Reyes?"

"Nope," I giggled. "The little kids are getting flown around. Dad said I could play his drums."

She closed her eyes, then opened them and slowly repeated, "Little kids are getting flown around?"

I nodded and tried to explain, "One of our visitors has wings. I can only guess where he's from, but it sure isn't Hawaii."

She groaned and seemed to gag, "Where?" I led her through the dining room to the kitchen's sliding glass doors and pointed to the large group of kids standing in the center lawns of the four homes. She turned to me and remarked, "I don't see anyone flying."

I grinned, "He just left with John for the big island."

"John?" She gasped, and then clarified, "John Hundser?" I nodded and watched as she hurried outside, muttering something about boys, Valium and how "Jennifer is going to have a heart attack!"

So I went downstairs to the basement and played drums. Remembering what my dad had taught me thus far, I set a tempo then pressed the bass drum pedal on every beat. I began tapping the hi-hat twice for every beat, and hit the snare on every second and fourth beat. Okay, this was easy and it sounded like some of what Derrick had done on stage Friday at the luau, and Saturday night in the auditorium.

After about a minute of holding that tempo, I began thinking of what my dad would do and had done. I tried to play what dad had called a 'fill' on the tom-tom. Bleh! That was awful. So I started over and thought of exactly how Derrick played a fill. Realizing that they almost always started on the third or fourth beat, I tried a simple fill, hitting the smaller tom twice then the next larger tom twice. It was simple, but at least it was progress. I decided to try it again. This time

I would wait until the fourth beat and play both toms twice, but faster so they would fit in that one beat. I must've tried that at least ten times before it sound anywhere near good. Taking a short break, I thought of trying the fill on beats three and four, but using the two rack-mounted toms and the two floor toms. I tried just that with my bass drum keeping the tempo. I made small amounts of progress, a little at a time, and kept trying different fills.

Derrick came down the stairs and smiled as I played, showing him the several different fill patterns I had managed to learn. On the next downbeat, I hit the crash cymbal and stopped playing. I stood and went to him feeling like I hadn't accomplished much, but at least it was something. Derrick wrapped me in his arms and hugged me tight saying, "That was really very good."

Looking up into his eyes, I asked, "Was it really?"

He nodded, "You kept the tempo through each of the different fills perfectly." Leading me upstairs, he instructed, "Next time, try keeping your main tempo with the hi-hat or ride cymbal, but hit the bass drum only on the up-beats." My dad counted it out for me and used his hands to demonstrate the bass drum hits.

We walked outside together and I giggled, "That sounds rough. I'm gonna wind up hitting the snare on the upbeats too."

Derrick shrugged, "Maybe, but I think you'll get it. You accomplished a lot in only two hours."

Stunned, I gasped, "I was down there two hours?"

Derrick cracked up and laughed, "It's lunch time! And guess what?"

"What?" I cautiously asked.

He pointed ahead of us and said, "That blond dude there next to Prez is Clan Short Patriarch Cory Short. Mike and I are planning on pulling him aside some time today so we can make good on our promise. We're gonna get you fixed up, as soon as possible, Reyes."

Completely shocked, I didn't know what to say and my mouth hung open. I was happy and frightened by the prospect. Then I remembered what the boy named Peter had said. "Tonight and two days." That was Saturday afternoon. Saturday night I became Derrick's and Mike's son. Now it was Monday, two days had passed and I could have all my memories back again before I went to bed.

"Well," Derrick smiled, breaking me out of my trance. "Aren't you happy?"

I nodded and admitted, "A little scared too."

"Ya know what?"

"What?"

"I think you're more anxious than scared. Do want to know why?"

"Why?"

Derrick explained, "Two reasons. First, what you thought was far away is now around the corner, and secondly, no matter what happens, you've still got a family that loves you. Jonah, Dillon, Mike and me love you just the way you are. The only thing this is going to do is add to what you already have." Realizing that he was right, I smiled up at him. He nodded and prompted, "Come on, let's catch up with them."

Together, we ran to the CIC, catching up with Prez, Keith, Mike, Cory Short and some other guys they were with. They were in the middle of a conversation.

Keith nodded, "If it's no problem for you, I'd love for you guys to be there."

Prez warned, "Mrs. Diaz, our teacher, is really our only concern. She's gonna have to get used to us bringing security along, or we've got an issue to resolve."

Mike sighed, "We can only hope she doesn't have an issue."

Derrick said, "We've worked for our places in the school jazz band. As long as they're kewl, we are. Otherwise..."

Prez finished, "If Mrs. Diaz, the school or other students have a problem, it's their problem, not ours."

"Let's not stress it for now," Keith suggested.

Mike offered, "We're not gonna quit, but if they force our hand, Clan Short takes priority." Almost simultaneously, Prez, Keith and Derrick agreed.

Cory said, "Don't worry about it, guys. Even if school turns out to be a problem, we'll put you on Clan concert tours once in a while."

Derrick leaned closer to me and whispered, "Catch up with your brothers. As soon as I know something, I'll let you know." I nodded and hurried into the dining room.

Dillon needed help carrying his soda, so I put his cup on my tray and carried it to a table where Jonah was already sitting with Ben,

Sung, Kawazoe and Randy Beale. Our fathers and the other Clan leaders were sitting at a nearby table. Every time Derrick looked our way and grinned at me, I all but burst at the seams, ready to scream "I'm finally getting my memories back!" All during lunch, I listened to my brothers ramble on about their flights around the island with the bird-boy, who I finally learned was named Riti Evans.

Derrick and Mike came to our table. Mike explained, "We've gotta go to school, but should be back in about an hour-and-a-half." Our dads then kissed each of us on the head and we each said goodbye. Even their new brothers and Randy got a kiss before they hurried out of the CIC dining room.

Blushing from his unexpected kisses, Randy giggled, "They're really nice."

Jonah nodded and smiled, "They're our dads."

Ben added, "Mike's my big brother."

Gesturing to himself and Kawazoe, Sung proudly cheered, "Derrick's our big bro."

"Wow!" Randy reverently cheered, "Dads and brothers, huh?"

For the next few minutes, we told Randy about Derrick and Mike and a little about the other Core Rimmers. He was surprised to learn that they could adopt kids. Finished with our lunches, we dumped our trash, left our trays and glasses by the dishwasher, then went out to the pool.

Since I was being a drum geek most of the morning, my brothers had to introduce me to Riti and a Native American man named Mr. T. It turned out that Mr. T was the Clan Education adviser. He led all us kids over to the school buildings that were beyond the trees south of the outdoor recreation area. He led a tour of the three buildings and explained about Clan Short education. It would be nothing like any other schools we had ever attended. That meant nothing to me because I couldn't recall having ever attended school. Some of the other kids, including my brothers, that had been to school seemed very enthused about the opportunities Mr. T talked about.

Kaleo was there and asked questions to make sure we all understood. We would all be tested on the basics of reading, writing and arithmetic. Depending upon the results of those tests, we might then either be immediately placed in classes or given another test to determine areas of aptitude; in other words, what we were best suited for. Those of us that were on that path would then have to choose between education in an area we were already suited for or another area we were more interested in pursuing.

Finished with our tour, our large group started back to the pool. Noticing that Drew, Corey and John weren't with us, I asked Jonah where they were. Jonah softly answered, "John and Riti rescued a little Welsh boy this morning. His name's Dewi Jones. Corey, Drew and John took him to the doctors."

"Was he hurt bad?"

Shaking his head, Jonah said, "He didn't seem too bad, but his own real parents were abusing and beating him. He's only four years old, bro."

I groaned then wondered, "Did I miss anything else?"

Jonah nodded and giggled, "Did you have fun?"

"Yeah," I smiled, "It wasn't too hard until I tried doin' fills and stuff that dad does. Time just flew, but dad said I was doing really good."

Before making it to the pool or asking Jonah again what I had missed, we heard Prez over the PA system. "Attention all Rimmers; jam time in the auditorium. Drew and Corey, we'll need you, so bring our kids. Anyone else not occupied is welcome to attend. That is all."

"Sweet!" Jonah and I chirped.

Dillon laughed, "They're back!"

I picked up Dillon then Jonah and I ran to the auditorium. Kaleo picked up Richie and raced us there, with Tory, Dee and the rest of the kids not far behind.

Inside the auditorium, I was surprised to find two eagles flying around up by the ceiling. Derrick gestured for me to follow him. Leaving Jonah and Dillon with Mike and the Scoobies, I followed my dad up onto the stage. He said, "From up here, you can watch everything I do and then try to copy it. Whatever you need help with, just ask."

Thrilled, I giggled, "Awesome!"

Derrick tapped his sub-vocal saying, "Daileass, get a padded folding chair for Reyes. Put it about three feet off to the side of my drum kit please." A second later, the chair appeared. Derrick thanked Daileass then gestured for me to have a seat. From where I was sitting, I could see both of my dad's legs and watch everything he did from the best vantage point.

Out in the audience by Mike, a little red haired boy screamed "Daileass! Get my guitar an amp on stage too!" An instant later, a child-sized electric guitar and amp appeared on stage over by Mike's amps.

I asked my dad, "Who are these kids?"

Derrick grinned, "Timmy and his boyfriend Ricky. Timmy is Cory's son."

Prez and Keith came up on stage with Richie and Dee. Moments later, two more chairs appeared beside mine. Dee and Richie came over and sat beside me while Keith and Prez got their gear powered up. Mike was still in the audience talking to Cory Short so Derrick began copying exactly what I had been working so hard to do earlier that day. Derrick then changed the bass drum pattern to what he had asked me to try and do. Ben, Dillon and Jonah came up on stage with Mike. He stood before the drum set, saying, "Timmy's gonna play with us, but he plays by ear. Let's start with some easy blues." Hearing the two little boys behind the curtain, Mike smirked and walked over loudly asking, "Hey you two, did you get lost finding the outlets?"

One of the boys loudly laughed, "Jus' playin' with our plugs!"

"We're gettin' our act together and there's an audience waiting," Mike grinned, and then went to get his guitar. Prez went over and started chatting with Mike. Within a minute, Prez was loudly laughing.

Keith looked back at Derrick. They began shaking their heads and smirking. "Hey you two!" Derrick and Keith hollered.

"We're ready already!" Mike loudly laughed, and then announced, "Hoochie Coochie Man."

Derrick looked back at me saying, "Slow blues shuffle," and then counted off the tempo while tapping his sticks together.

Simultaneously, bass, drums, guitar and keyboards began playing the instrumental introduction. Derrick sang the first line of the song, and then Prez sang the next line. Mike sang the third line and Keith sang the fourth line. Kaleo came dancing up the stage stairs then all four band members sang the chorus. From the audience, I could hear catcalls, laughter and whistles. Richie, Dillon, Jonah and Dee got up to dance with Kaleo. I cracked up because Kaleo was being extremely provocative with his dance, but Richie and Dillon just looked silly trying to keep up with him.

Returning my concentration to what my dad was playing on his drums, I began trying to copy his feet and hand motions. I think I managed to last through the second verse and chorus before I felt my leg muscles begin to cramp up. This was a relatively slow tune, but Derrick's bass drum foot was moving pretty fast most of the time. At the start of the song, Derrick had counted out to four, however that didn't seem to be what he was playing. At the end of the song, I called over, "Dad, was that four-four time like you showed me?"

He shook his head and answered, "Twelve-eight time, three eighth notes to every beat. Most blues shuffles are played like that."

It took me a few moments to grasp what he described. Three times four equals twelve, but instead of counting out each eighth note, he had only counted to four. That meant the entire band had to know how he was counting and what they were expected to play. It was fun learning this stuff, but it was not easy yet the band made it look so simple. I had to grin because Ben and Jonah were just beginning to get their fingers moving on their guitars. Ben and Jonah likely had so much more to learn and they probably didn't realize it. But the little red-haired boy playing guitar was pretty good and obviously younger than Jonah and Ben. I reasoned, that must be what it means to play by ear; you hear and copy without much understanding of how or why to play something. I needed to ask my dads what they understood 'playing by ear' to mean. Since Mike was on his knees showing the little red-haired boy something, and Keith was talking with Prez, I posed my question to Derrick.

Smiling widely, he answered, "That's a tough one. Think of it like learning the alphabet, then how to spell words and then forming sentences. Now consider a blind person. They still speak with words and sentences, but maybe haven't learned to spell. In music, if you have a naturally good ear, you can still play songs. There's theory and ear training involved in music."

"What do you guys do, theory or by ear?"

"Both," Derrick chuckled. "Keith, Mike and Prez know theory better than I do, because they deal with notes and notation on a level that I don't need to know. I still know some theory, but they've all got me beat."

"What're you teaching me?"

"Right now, just rhythm and timing. Eventually, you'll be able to listen to a song and know which drums or cymbals are being hit by the tone. When you get there, we can move into more advanced theory and harmony."

Rather than ask what harmony meant, I said, "Thanks, dad," and tried to absorb what he had already explained. Keith and Mike went off stage. Prez and the little boy played an introduction with Derrick. They then put their guitars down and went off to the other side of the stage while Derrick played a drum solo. Oh, man! What an amazing solo it was too! At first it was only his feet playing the hi-hat and bass drum. Occasionally he threw in a few snare and tom-tom bits. Then his hands and feet were just a blur moving all over the kit. For a few minutes, he played with his hands only and no drums sticks at all, then went back to playing only the bass drum and hi-hat again. He took his shirt off and wiped the sweat off his face then tossed the shirt aside. Prez and the little boy went back to their guitars and together, watching my dad for signals, they finished the song. While the audience cheered, I went to get my dad's T-shirt so he could wipe his face off again. Prez announced, "Timmy Short on guitar everybody."

After watching that drum solo, I had a hundred questions running through my mind at once, but all I could manage to say to my dad was "Wow!"

Timmy went out to the audience and almost flew into Cory Short's lap.

The band gathered in front of the drums and listed songs they wanted to practice. I went back to my chair then they began rehearsing. Richie, Dee and Dillon began chatting. Soon, they pulled Ben, Jonah and I into their conversation. Without intending to, it seems that we had all been selfish. Our fathers were spending time doing their Clan jobs and they were spending time with us, but none of us had seen our dads spend time alone, as couples. This was bad news. Before Keith walked off stage with Mike, Keith and Prez kissed deeply, but Mike only smiled at Derrick. Us kids had to remind our dads to spend time alone together. Here they were performing for us, all the rescued kids and our Orlando Clan Short guests. Dillon and Jonah were afraid that Derrick and Mike didn't want to get too close to each other. Dee and Richie were afraid that Prez and Keith didn't love each other anymore. We loved our dads the way they were Friday and Saturday. The last thing we wanted was for them to change.

As soon as the band took a break and Prez called Timmy back on stage, I went to Derrick, leaned close and whispered, "You and Mike need to spend time alone tonight."

Derrick chuckled, "We're fine, Reyes."

Mike went to a microphone and asked, "Drew, have ya got a digital flanger up there in your rack?"

Through the stage monitors, Drew hummed then said, "Yep, we got a good one too. What's the tune?"

"Zeppelin's In The Evening," Mike answered.

"And you're going to stay fine too," I insisted. "The last time I know you made love was Friday night. Have you since then?" Derrick shook his head. I kissed his cheek then assured, "I'll watch over the kids for as long as you need." Without waiting for him to say anything, I went back to my chair and sat down. My dad smiled at me then nodded.

I told my brothers, "It's settled. After we're done here, we leave our dads. We go to the pool with the rest of the Clan, they go home for private time."

Derrick tapped his sub-vocal and called, "Daileass, I need timpani, dude. At least one, preferably two. Put them to my left side, near the hi-hat. While we're at it, get me two gongs: an eighteen inch and a thirty-six inch. Put them behind me, within reach, but leave me a path on my right to get out of here. I'll also need microphones for each hooked up to the PA system, so contact Drew and get me whatever he recommends."

Keith, Prez, Mike and Timmy went to the grand piano to work on the song. Softly, so only those of us on the stage could hear, Mike played a little bit then Keith copied it. Timmy played a short part and Keith copied it. They went back and forth like that, pulling together the sections of the song. Off to the side of Derrick, two large timpani drums appeared. Next, behind Derrick, the two gongs he ordered appeared.

Jacob and Jamie hurried up on stage and joined the band around the piano. I still couldn't tell the twins apart and complained to Jonah. "There's only one way ya can tell 'em apart!" Jonah giggled. He leaned closer to me and explained, "One's circumscribed and the other isn't."

"Great!" I softly chuckled. "I have to see them naked to know which is which?" Jonah nodded and cracked up.

Everyone around the piano suddenly burst into laughter. For a moment, we thought they had overheard us. Prez loudly asked, "What the hell's going on lately? Why am I suddenly the object of everyone's affection?"

Mike howled, "Direct me! Ple-e-ease direct me soon!" and Prez shoved him.

Jacob and Jamie both leaned back, plainly looking at Prez's ass and giggled, "It is" ... "a really" ... "cute butt!"

Amidst much laughing and teasing, Keith stood and joked, "I've been saying the very same thing for two years! I gotta meet this dude!"

"Keith?" Prez softly pleaded, "Don't tease or scare him, babe, please?"

"You know I won't," Keith assured, and then paused to add, "He knows this song, according to the double J's. He'll play keys, I'll sing and we're ready to jam."

Out in the audience, Beau was leading an older teen boy down the aisle. He seemed pretty tall, had brown hair with blond highlights and the most intense light blue eyes. All-in-all, he was extremely cute. Keith, Mike and Prez went over to the stage stairs to greet the new kid. Beau said, "Bros, this is Troy."

Keith was the first to offer his hand to Troy, saying, "Hey dude, you ready to jam?"

Shaking Keith's hand and then knocking knuckles, Troy admitted, "Zeppelin's one of my favorite bands."

"Finally, a keyboard player with taste!" Mike teased as he knocked knuckles with Troy.

Keith complained to Mike, "I just don't know all the changes, bitch! How about we play some Chick Corea next so I can watch you squirm?"

"No problem, bro," Mike giggled. "I can shred like Di Meola."

"In key?" Keith smirked. Mike playfully cranked up the middle finger of his right hand.

"You guys are really good musicians," Troy smiled at the playful banter, then shook hands with Prez.

Pointing at the stack of electronic keyboards, Prez told Troy, "Show us your chops, dude."

Giggling, Troy moved behind the keys and adjusted a few settings, then began playing the main themes. Timmy and Mike both joined in for a few short bars. Prez chirped, "Sweet!"

Keith nodded and instructed, "You play the keys Troy, and I'll sing, kewl?"

"No problem, Keith," Troy replied. Keith went to center stage. Prez, Mike and Timmy moved over to the other side of the stage.

Derrick gave one final instruction, "Drew, add a fairly fast flanger to the timpani, bro."

A few seconds later, Drew said over the stage monitors, "Give it a try."

On the timpani, Derrick played a drum roll and said, "Just a little deeper flange," and continued playing. When it was correct, Derrick said, "Right there, that's good, Drew."

Mike turned around and teased, "So good, a little deeper, right there, like that, yeah!"

"You're very bad," Derrick smirked. "Go to my room immediately." I helplessly laughed, knowing I had put ideas into my dad's mind.

"Ah jeez," Keith groaned.

Shaking his head sadly, Prez playfully reminded, "We used to get randy after jammin'. Now it's before, during and after!"

Mike snickered, "It started Friday night. Blame Joel."

Derrick shook his head and playfully disagreed, "Bet ya it was the Mikyvis trio."

Keith turned to Troy and smiled, "Lead the way, dude." Troy began playing and Derrick started pounding the timpani. After about a minute of spacey introduction, Keith began singing. The sound was something out of this world. Prez, Mike and Timmy were bouncing around and having fun. During the middle instrumental break, the timpani drums broke through the wash of sounds from the keys, bass and guitars like an explosion. It was obviously the first time that the band played the song. Even with two temporary musicians added, it sounded great. The audience agreed and jumped to their feet, cheering, clapping and whistling.

Keith immediately went to Troy and patted his back. They shook hands and Keith congratulated him. Picking up his shirt, Derrick came out from behind his drums and I hugged him firmly. Derrick wrapped an arm around me and we went to meet Troy. Jonah and Dillon went to Mike while Richie and Dee went to Prez. When we were all gathered, Keith asked Troy, "How long've you been playin', dude?"

"Nine years," Troy answered. "I started with guitar, moved on to piano, then in second grade, began clarinet lessons. I started messing around with harmonicas and the recorder too. In fifth grade I switched to tenor sax. Last year, I discovered that baritone sax and tenor sax weren't too different."

Cory Short came over to the edge of the stage and called, "Prez?"

Prez answered, "What's up, Cory?"

In Italian, Cory said, "Recitare per me articolo tredici del rifugio sicuro agire in inglese."

Prez said, "Sexual Abuse. All provisions under this article are grounds for immediate removal of said minor children upon presentation of physical evidence, Vulcan Mind Meld Report or Clan Short Telepathic Scan Report. Subsequent or in conjunction with said removal, legal proceedings to revoke parental rights shall commence immediately and without fail."

Keith then recited, "Section 13.1: Use of minor children to provide sexual gratification. Section 13.2: Prostituting own children to provide sexual gratification for self or others."

Mike added, "Section 13.3: Forcing children to perform sexual acts on themselves or siblings or other minor children."

Derrick then said, "Section 13.4: Acquiring and or distributing nude and indecent photos or holographs of nude minor children for financial or other gain."

And Prez finished, "Section 13.5: Forced sex with non sentient species."

"Excellent!" Cory proudly smiled.

Troy innocently asked, "You guys learned that stuff in high school?"

"Umm no," Mike answered, then wondered, "How did we know that stuff?"

Jamie, Jacob, Beau, and Timmy giggled.

From up in the balcony, Kaleo peeked over the edge then hollered, "What happened to the music?"

Prez immediately cracked up laughing. Keith shouted, "Jam time's over, dude. Everybody's leavin'."

Mike tapped his sub-vocal and said, "Hey Mister see all, what's been goin' on in the balcony?" A moment later, Mike grunted and bitched, "Sure, except when it's me!"

Cory grinned, "I've got one more thing for you guys to do."

"What's that?" Prez and Keith simultaneously asked. They smiled at each other, then reached for each other's hands.

Cory smiled, "All Core Rimmers are on unconditional stand-down for the next two hours." Prez opened his mouth to object. Cory cut him short, "It's non-negotiable, Prez. Spend time with your partners and with your kids; not a word about Clan business of any type." Cory checked his watch and said, "It's about quarter after three now. See ya around five-fifteen." Cory turned and started up the aisle, following the other hundred-plus kids and adults.

"I have absolutely no problem with that," Derrick said. Releasing me, he then grabbed Mike around the waist and devilishly grinned, "See you dudes later." Dillon, Jonah and I followed our dads off stage. Beginning to walk up the aisle, Derrick tickled Mike's waist.

Mike incredulously laughed, "Derrick! Not in front of our kids!"

Derrick smirked, "Who do you think gave me the idea in the first place?"

Mike swung around to face us. Dillon giggled, but Jonah and I put on our best angelic expressions. Mike chuckled, "Don't pull that innocent crap on me. What will you dudes do while we're busy?"

Dillon easily answered, "Play at the pool."

"Practice guitar with Ben," Jonah replied.

I said, "I've got about thirty or so drum patterns to try and imitate."

Derrick smiled at Mike, "Give it up, our boys will be fine."

Mike nodded and softly told Derrick, "I need you so bad."

Dillon's hands shot to his ears and he shouted, "I'm not hearing this!" With that, Dillon and Jonah ran up the aisle, laughing their little butts off.

I told my dads, "Have fun," then followed my brothers up the aisle and out of the auditorium. Jonah caught up with Ben. They peeled off together towards the Gibbons' home. I followed Dillon most of the way to the pools, but noticed Grandma Anna seemed to be heading home. Dillon and I hijacked her and took her to the pools with us. Checking around the pool for adults, I found Grandma Laura and Mrs. Seaver. All the adult men and Mrs. Hundser had gone to work that day. Some landscapers and a few housekeepers were working near the pools too. Kaleo and almost all the older teens were at the diving well. Since everybody was accounted for, I went to the Gibbons' basement and began trying to imitate my dad's drumming.

I was only alone down there for about forty minutes when Dillon, Jonah, Mike and Derrick came down stairs. Jonah loudly laughed, "This is so not fair! In two days, Reyes is playing kewl stuff, but Ben and me are struggling to make our fingers move!"

Mike smiled down at Jonah saying, "You're all just beginning to learn. Have you ever heard of the learning curve?" Jonah and I shook our heads. I put the sticks down and stood up as Mike explained, "It's like climbing a hill as you learn. It's slow and steady progress then you reach a plateau, where you feel like there's nothing more to learn. But there's always more to learn, so you climb the hill some more until you reach another plateau. Don't be discouraged. It goes like that all through life with every thing there is to learn."

Derrick took my hands and looked at them closely then said, "That's enough for today, son. You've got blisters. Do they hurt?"

I shrugged, "Not too bad."

Derrick firmly said, "No more until tomorrow. We don't want the blisters breaking open and bleeding. You want them to turn into callouses."

Frowning, I started to complain, "But..."

"No buts," Derrick cut me off. He then tapped his sub-vocal saying, "Daileass, a pair of congas, ten inch and eleven inch, on stands." Instantaneously, two very kewl congas were beside the drum kit in the basement. Derrick smiled, "I'll show you how to play those tomorrow." We started up the stairs and Derrick softly instructed, "Keep an eye on those blisters tonight. If they start to break open, as I expect they will from the pool water, we'll have to bandage 'em up."

Arriving in the kitchen we found all four Scoobies sitting at the table and scratching themselves raw. "Okay men," Mike announced, "we have four little brothers and sisters here that reacted badly to pool water. Doctor Janet says the chlorine dried out their skin. We've gotta bathe them with medicated shampoo then dowse 'em in special lotion." Mike leaned forward, allowing Faith and Willow to climb up onto Mike's shoulders. Derrick picked up two bottles from the table and we all went outside to the aluminum tub where we spent the next half hour bathing our ferret brothers and sisters. Actually, Mike and Derrick did the bathing while Jonah and I toweled them dry. They were obviously feeling better after their baths and began scampering around the lawn chasing and playing with each other. Dillon had fun playing with them and they had fun running up and over Dillon.

Once we were done with the Scoobies, they went back to working on their vault and the rest of our family went to the pool. We found Prez and Keith with their sons at the diving well with Cory and Adam Short standing nearby. Mike wondered, "What's going on here?"

"We're makin' babies!" Keith joked.

Prez giggled, "We're up to four. What've you guys been doing all this time?"

"What we do best!" Mike joked.

Derrick nudged Mike and grinned, "In the auditorium, we noticed that the Scoobies were scratching themselves like crazy."

Mike nodded, "No more swimming in the pool for our ferrets. Their skin can't take the chlorine." I overheard Cory ordering that the pool water be changed immediately at all Clan bases.

"Doctor Janet sent us some special shampoo and ointment to help them out," Derrick added.

I laughed, "We got to bathe them again!"

Jonah smirked, "They weren't too happy about it at first."

"But now they feels less itchy and way more better," Dillon giggled.

"Where are they now?" Prez wondered.

"Workin' on their Shiny Vault," Mike replied.

"Heaven help Hawaii," Cory softly muttered, shaking his head.

Keith looked at Gage and asked, "Ready for your first piano lesson, son?"

"Yeah!" Gage loudly chuckled.

Prez glanced at Keith and said, "While you're doing that, I'll take our other three boys over to the townhouses and check them out."

"Good idea," Keith smiled, "We'll be moving there sooner or later. Let's all go together then. I'll want a piano of some sort there."

Derrick and Mike checked with each other. Wordlessly agreeing, Derrick said, "We'll join you."

"Might as well invite Drew and Corey," Prez suggested.

Without another word, my brothers, Sammy, Gage, Richie and Dee ran to the pool to get Corey and Drew.

Following the kids to the pool, Mike asked, "What do you think about moving into a townhouse, Reyes?"

I thought for a moment then answered, "I don't think it will matter where we live. Dillon, Jonah and I only want to be with you." Seeing both my grandmothers in chaise lounges floating about four feet above the pool, I turned to each of my dads with wide eyes.

Between his mom's nervous expression and my confusion, Mike cracked up laughing. Derrick chuckled, "John's an N-Gen. He and the Evans' are just practicing telekinesis; lifting stuff with their minds."

I nervously chuckled, "It took me two days to get used to transporting from place to place and seeing stuff just appear. I'll be fine, in a day or two."

With our families gathered, we started the short walk to the townhouses. Geoff was not at all happy about having any of us move away, even though it was only a short walk away. All us kids tried to reassure him, but it simply didn't work. He didn't want Corey and Drew to move into a townhouse of their own, nor did he want to follow our family or Prez and Keith into our townhomes. I guess Geoff finally had a large family, grandparents, cousins and friends so the thought of being separated was more than the little guy could handle.

Dillon was about the same age as Geoff, but had no problem checking out our townhouse. The kitchen was perfect for our family. The dining room table could accommodate eight. The living room had entertainment and plenty of seating. We went upstairs and checked out the three bedrooms. The master bedroom had a king size bed and it's own private bathroom. Basically, everything was similar to what the full size homes had, just scaled down slightly. Finally, we went to the basement. My dads saw it as a perfect practice and rehearsal space. We weren't planning on moving there that night or even that week, but depending upon future rescues and those kids, it might happen by the end of November.

Back outside again, we told Corey and Drew what the inside of the townhome was like then set about trying to reassure Geoff again. It was Prez that figured it out though. Change is what scared Geoff the most. So Prez showed his little nephew how easy change was by having Geoff go to each of us for a hug.

"That's my big guy!" Drew proudly cheered.

Corey smiled and nodded at Prez, then turned to Geoff and suggested, "To show you how close we'll all be, let's walk back to the houses and then over to the pool."

Our families started the walk, but to prove the point, Jonah challenged me to run to our house and back again to our families. We started our race at the edge of the dorm where the older kids had moved and made it back again before our families made it beyond the second dorm where the UNIT kids were living. Geoff seemed very happy with how quick it was and wanted to try it for himself. This time, Dillon, Jonah, Dee, Richie, Gage, Sammy, Geoff and I ran all the way to the Seavers' house and back to our dads. I was pretty hot and sweaty by the time we made it to the pools.

Our large group split in half, the younger guys going with Corey and Drew to the pool while the bigger kids went to the diving well. I couldn't help glance around the kids at the diving well. My dads, Prez and Kaleo were naked and having fun with the rest of us. After a dive and listening to Prez, Mike and Derrick singing their way from boards into the water, I glanced over at the pool. I don't know what happened, but a chaise lounge was in the pool, Grandma Anna was soaked and lots of kids were laughing hysterically. Sammy and Gage came running over to the diving well. They told Prez something that set Prez off in another fit of laughter. Prez has the most infectious laugh I've ever heard. In minutes, everyone knew that John had gotten distracted and accidentally dumped Grandma Anna in the pool.

At the diving well, Prez, Derrick and Mike were the center of attention. Kaleo was going from group to group at the diving well, sharing the news that Cory Short had made Prez the official director of our new division. If anyone thought that Prez wasn't the best choice, they weren't saying it. Instead, Prez was surrounded by a group of older kids. At first it seemed they were all congratulating him. Then Prez's arms and legs were grabbed by Derrick, Mike, Kaleo and Horacio. Prez was thrown, laughing his butt off, into the diving well.

We all heard chirping. Derrick, Mike and Kaleo found their shirts then checked their comm-badges. It was Prez's T-shirt that was tossed to him.

Prez answered, "Yeah babe, what's up?"

"Mom and Dad are home now," Keith explained. "It's time to fill them in on today's trivia."

"Is Gage with you?" Prez asked.

"Yep," Keith replied, "bring all our kids and Geoff too."

Prez replied, "Okay, we'll be there in a few minutes."

"Okay, baby," Keith replied.

Prez announced, "Time to handle family matters, dudes." Prez slipped into his T-shirt then found and pulled up his boardies. He went to the pool to gather his kids.

Celebrations weren't quite over yet though. Kaleo, Horacio, Liki and Keanu took hold of Derrick then sent him flailing into the diving well. Mike was still laughing at his partner and so, didn't notice when Sean, Hank, Roy and Tory had surrounded him. Within moments, Mike was sent flying into the diving well. Finally, we chased Kaleo, got hold of him and swung our rescued brother, Core Rimmer and Starfleet Ensign into the well.

Then my dads came to me. I fully expected to be tossed into the diving well. Instead, Mike said, "Let's see what we can do about getting you fixed up." We walked over to the pool and had a chat with Cory, Sean, Adam and J.J. I explained as much as I could, that the adults at the orphanage periodically wiped my short term memories and that I couldn't access any long term archives without "zoning out". Jonah saw us together, added his part of the story then hurried over to the diving well to get Kaleo, Tory and Liki.

While Jonah was gone, Cory stood and walked behind me. He brushed my hair aside and found the Matrix Uplink Port at the base of my skull. He grunted then said, "No identification." Jonah ran back with Kaleo and Tory. After they told their version of the same story, Cory asked, "This thing they used on Reyes, did it say Cynthetilife on it?"

Kaleo answered, "We never got a good look at it," and then described the little unit that caused me all this trouble.

Adam said, "He looks a lot like Austin. His hair and eye color's different, but generally, about the same height and build. Even what's hangin' between his legs is similar." JJ slugged Adam hard on the shoulder. "What?" Adam squealed. "He's naked, we're naked. Should I have not mentioned it?" We all began laughing.

I giggled, "Who is Austin?"

Sean grinned, "We think he's your android brother." Wow! I really had android brothers?

Cory nodded and added, "We can get you fully functional again, Reyes."

I asked, "Will I get all my memories back too?" While my dads and the other Clan leaders glanced at each other, I added, "I just don't want to forget anything and, if possible, I'd like to know more of who I am. All I know is what my orphanage brothers have told me."

Pulling me closer and hugging me, Cory carefully explained, "I don't know if we can restore all your memories, Reyes. What I can tell you is that you'll be able to access your long term archives again. And we'll get you upgraded to the latest software. You'll be everything your dads and brothers love plus more than you are now."

Derrick asked, "What do you mean by more, Cory?"

Cory shrugged, "It depends; I know one android that's a hundred years old and another that's about seventy years old. Austin is about forty-eight years old, but looks thirteen, like Reyes. All I'm saying is, if we can get full access to his memory archives, Reyes will know everything he once knew. For example, if Reyes knew auto-mechanics once upon a time, he'll have all that knowledge restored. In addition to what he previously knew, he'll have a few new databases to access too. So he'll be the same guy and more."

Mike asked, "Will he remember us, his family and friends now?"

"Course!" Cory smiled. He then focused on me and assured, "We are not going to let you be hurt again, Reyes. What you know now, you'll still know tomorrow. We're just going to identify and correct the memory access problem then upgrade your software to current versions."

More chirping from a comm-badge was heard. Tory said, "I'll find the shirt and bring it back here," and then ran over to the diving well.

Derrick smiled, "I guess the only questions left are, how long will it take and when can we get it done?"

Cory answered, "When is up to Reyes. How long, twenty or thirty minutes, I guess; Austin's the expert, not me."

All eyes turned to me. It could happen whenever I wanted it to happen. I wouldn't lose my current memories and would gain everything I'd forgotten plus more. With nothing to lose and everything to gain, I answered, "How about after supper?"

Cory nodded and smiled, "No problem."

Running with a T-shirt in his hand, Tory returned loudly asking, "Who's shirt is this?"

Mike said, "It's mine." Tory tossed Mike his shirt and Mike tapped his comm-badge.

Prez asked, "Where are you, bud?"

"At the pool still," Mike answered.

Prez wondered, "Is your dad home yet?"

"Haven't seen him yet," Mike replied. "He's probably getting changed out of his uniform though."

Prez said, "Let's get all our families together for dinner over at the CIC" He then asked, "Are Cory and Sean Short nearby?"

Mike nodded, "Yep, only a few yards away."

"Let's lead by example and make it happen, dude," Prez instructed. "We'll meet you at the dining hall in a few minutes." Having heard Prez mention food, kids began cheering and getting dressed. Prez chuckled, "I hear a few hungry kids."

"Can't say that I blame them," Mike grinned. Partially dressed kids ran past on their way to the CIC "Oh shit!" Mike laughed, "The dinner bell has rung! There they go! Last one to the dining hall misses out!"

Taking me by the hand, Derrick led me back to the diving well.

He asked, "How're you feeling, son?"

He handed me my shorts and, as we started to dress, I giggled, "Mixed up; a little scared, a little nervous, but mostly happy."

After we had pulled our shirts over our heads, Derrick smiled, "Understandable. I probably would feel the same way if someone was messin' around in my head." My dad then pulled me into a firm hug and assured, "We're gonna be there with you; me, Mike, Jonah and Dillon will be right there, before, during and after."

I shivered, "That's why I'm scared, dad. I have no idea what I might remember."

"Memories are good and bad," Derrick shared. "I had an older brother that died when I was two from complications of pneumonia. I barely remember him. That's why we moved to Hawaii, to start life over again, far from the bad memories."

"Grandma and grandpa didn't say anything about that."

"They wouldn't because it hurts too much," Derrick whispered. "For you, I'm feeling happy, anxious and frightened too. I don't even want to consider what I might do if this fix fails or makes matters worse. I'm not thinking of that though. I'm thinking of you, the whole you; all your memories and dreams for the future with us."

Shedding happy tears, I hugged my dad tight and admitted, "I love you, dad. I love our entire family. I don't want to forget a thing that's happened since Friday." What I had realized while writing the prior evening was that I could go into detail about everything I experienced; from the appearance of Uncle Iokii's house to the length of the grass and the shape of the tree Jonah and I napped beneath. Those things that weren't written in detail is what I was afraid of losing.

"I love you too," Derrick said, and then kissed my forehead. He stepped back from me and we smiled at each other. Mike, Jonah and Dillon were dressed and waiting for us. Our family started for the CIC dining hall. Dillon hopped in front of me and held his arms up, wanting to be carried. I lifted my little brother up and parked him up on my shoulders.

At the chow line, I loaded up my tray and helped Dillon by carrying his glass of milk. Dillon, Jonah and I shared a table with Richie, Dee, Gage and Sammy. The main topic of conversation was me and my upgrade. At the next table over, I could hear my dads talking with Keith and Prez about it. Not far away, I overheard a little bit said at the table where Cory, Sean, Adam and J.J. were eating.

When we were finished eating, my dads went over to Cory's table. While I watched, a Caucasian teen boy with bright red hair and gray eyes appeared. He pulled a chair closer to Cory and sat down. Jonah began looking between that new boy and me. "Damn!" he giggled, "He looks a lot like you, bro!"

I giggled, "A little bit, but not a lot like me. I have auburn hair, blue eyes and darker skin. His nose is shaped different too."

When I looked over again, Austin was coming over to our table. With huge butterflies flapping around my gut, Austin patted my back and said, "How're ya doing, Reyes?"

Austin pulled a chair beside me and sat down. I smiled, "Really nervous."

"Don't be," Austin confidently said. He then reached his hand into his shorts pocket and pulled a palm-sized device out. Austin asked, "Is this..."

"Get that away from him!" Jonah loudly interrupted. My little brother appeared ready to jump over the table and attack Austin.

Wide-eyed, Austin giggled, "Okay! That answers the question." He pocketed the device again explaining, "Those were meant for Cynthetilife androids, not for you, bro. Here's what I'm thinking; those things generally wipe the slate clean and restart Cynthetilife androids. The results on androids like us are pretty unstable though. I was told they used to use it on you every year or two. Is that correct?"

I shrugged and turned to Jonah. Jonah nodded then called Kaleo over. Jonah asked Kaleo, "About how often did they screw with Reyes' memories?"

Kaleo tilted his head and answered, "It wasn't something they did like clockwork, ya know? It was like, when Reyes seemed out of it, distracted or depressed, then they'd pull him aside and zap him again. Sometimes it was a year or so. I remember it being as long as three years too."

Austin nodded and smiled, "I don't think they messed you up majorly, Reyes. What I'm hearing is that whenever you started remembering old stuff, they'd wipe your memories again. I think all we'll have to do is recover your self-diagnostics, do the software upgrades and then tell you to reinitialize."

I asked, "Then I'll remember everything?"

Austin nodded, "Everything prior to the first time they wiped your memories. What I've learned is that they were wiping your memories as far back as Kaleo can recall. That means about fourteen years of your orphanage life is likely gone because it was never stored."

Kaleo grinned, "That's no biggie. I wish someone could wipe most of the last fourteen years from my memory." Jonah agreed and so did I.

"Okay," Austin cheered. "Here's a little something you need to know first. My name, Austin stands for Android Upgrade - Second generation Teen Interactive Neurosystem. We found your name in the old records. Reyes stands for Research Engineering - Youth – Expanded Senses. Your systems and programming were the stepping stone to mine. That means you're my older brother and Marc's younger brother. As far as we know, you were developed in the late 1940's. Once we get you fixed up, your archives will confirm your activation date. Do you understand what I'm driving at?"

I thought for a few minutes then uncertainly said, "I'm probably about fifty years old."

Austin nodded, "That implies that you had a life and family before the orphanage. Although the memory wipes may seem bad to you, we were designed as companions. When our family dies or abandons us, for whatever reason, accidental or otherwise, we tend to feel worthless... suicidal. I'm sure they started wiping your memories to overcome that problem."

I nodded, "So there's gonna be some bad memories recovered as well as good memories."

Austin softly said, "Yeah."

"All I care about now is what I currently have," I shared, and pointed at the table where my fathers sat. "They're my dads. Jonah and Dillon are my brothers. Kaleo and Liki have been my friends for longer than I can remember. Will I remember everything about my life now?"

Austin rapidly nodded, "We're erasing nothing, bro. Everything you know now, you'll know after we're finished. Worst case scenario, it's only the stuff between your first memory wipe to the last memory wipe that's probably lost forever. There may be little blocks of memory between the memory wipes you will recall. Like I said, those devices weren't designed for us so the results are unpredictable."

Kaleo huffed, "Count your blessings, bro."

Jonah agreed, "Yeah, there wasn't anything there worth remembering anyway."

Austin asked, "Are you ready, Reyes?"

Gathering all my courage, I sighed, "Yeah, let's get it done." Austin and I stood. Glancing at Jonah and Dillon, I said, "Come on, I want you guys there too." At the other table, my dads, Cory and Sean stood. Our group followed them towards the Command Center. On the way, I turned to Austin and smiled, "In case I don't get the chance after, thanks for helping me, Austin."

Austin giggled, "It's no problem at all, Reyes. Until today, you were a model type in a ledger. Now, I've almost got my big brother back. I hope to visit you here often. Maybe you would like to come to South Carolina some time to meet our other brothers. Who knows, you might even have buried memories of Marc already."

For the first time, I walked into the Command Center. The room seemed filled with computer monitors, keyboards and had a few kids sitting on each side of the rectangular room. My dads, Austin, Cory and Sean led us through the room, a few steps down a hall and then into an attached room with a big table and many chairs. Derrick invited me to sit at a chair at the head of the table. Derrick took the chair to my right and Mike sat to my left. They each took hold of my hands. Jonah, Dillon and Cory sat down too.

Moving close to me, Austin pulled from his pocket a couple of small plastic modules and a meter long cable then put them on the table. Picking up one of the modules, he explained, "First thing we're gonna do is determine what software version you're at, Reyes."

I nodded and asked, "Will any of this hurt?"

"Not at all," Austin confirmed, and began pushing my hair aside to access my uplink port. Before I felt a thing, Austin said, "There; read from the chip and tell us your controller software version."

In a few seconds, I answered, "Five-seven-e-s point two one."

Austin laughed, "1957! At least it was a stable version!" He put the chip down then picked up another one and said, "We've got four upgrades to do, bro. Each will take about five minutes, but will build on the previous one. If there's any kind of hardware malfunction, we'll know it before the first upgrade completes. Go ahead and read only the first file and tell us if anything happens."

"Okay," I shuddered, wondering what sort of 'anything' might happen. Everything seemed to be fine for about two and a half minutes but then the room went dark. "Hey!" I hollered, "I can't see! I'm blind!"

"Relax, Reyes," Austin confidently said, "Memories are sensory; sight, sound and smells. Keep reading the file." My heart was beating through my rib cage, I was so nervous.

Jonah said, "He's twitching..." and then I heard nothing else until the file was completed. Suddenly, I could see and hear again.

I smirked, "That was scary! Will that happen with each upgrade?"

Mike chuckled, "You almost crushed my hand, dude!" Jonah and Dillon began giggling.

Austin said, "From here on, it'll be only a few seconds of dark and quiet. This is good, Reyes. It means nobody opened you up and physically messed with your positronics. Go ahead and read the second file, bro." I did as I was told. This time the room didn't go dark and quiet for more than two seconds. They were the longest two seconds I had ever experienced though, and I told them all so.

"Okay," I sighed, "the second file is complete."

"Good," Austin encouraged, "read the third file, and as soon as that's complete, read the fourth file."

Twice more during the next ten minutes, my vision and hearing blinked off then back on again. When I said, "Both files are finished," Austin removed the chip from my uplink port.

Putting the chip down on the table and picking up the cable, Austin explained, "This is the last part of the upgrade, Reyes. We'll connect to each other, I'll make the file available to you and you'll read it just like the others." Austin reached behind his head and connected the cable to himself then connected it to me. This transfer happened much more quickly. The weird thing was, when I blinked or closed my eyes, it seemed I was in a dark room alone with Austin. Assuring me in my mind that this was normal, Austin hugged me tight. When the upload was complete, I knew in my heart that Austin was my brother. What Adam had said was true; Austin and I were very similar.

Austin said, "We're almost done, Reyes. About another ten minutes of databases to read in. Take everything on this chip, bro." He attached the chip to my uplink port then said, "Go for it." While I was reading in the files, Austin and Sean stepped out from behind me then sat at the table.

Since this was taking no effort on my part and everybody was staring at me, I wondered, "What sort of databases am I uploading?"

Sean giggled, "It would be easier to list what we're not uploading."

Austin smirked, "Anthropology, astronomy, biology, chemistry, geology, horticulture, mechanics, medicine, philosophy, physics, theology, to name a few. I don't want you accessing them all at once though, Reyes. We've got one more hurdle to pass first, remember?"

I nodded, "Reinitialize."

"Exactly," Austin confirmed. "You're a person not a library, bro. What's most important to you are your memories. Just sorting through that will take a good night's sleep and at least another day. For the next week, I want you to take it slow and easy, okay?"

I nodded and so did both of my dads and both brothers. While we waited for the file uploads to complete, Derrick got up and went to the First Aid chest mounted on the wall. He returned to the table with gauze, tape and a tube of antibiotic ointment. For the next few minutes, Derrick and Mike bandaged the blisters on my hands. I had completed the file uploads before they finished with the bandages. When my hands and fingers were bandaged, I reached behind my head to pull the chip from my uplink port and placed it on the table.

Austin locked his eyes with mine and softly said, "Reyes, when you initialize, everything you had forgotten is going to come rushing back. We're not talking a few years here, bro. For you, it could be thirty, forty, fifty or more years of previously lived life. It's going to be an emotional rollercoaster ride of ups, downs, highs and lows. I want you to take it slow and I want someone with you for the next two days. I mean it, Reyes. If you have to piss in the middle of the night, take one of your brothers or fathers with you. Anything you see, hear, taste or touch could bring back another rush of memories."

Both of my dads and both of my brothers assured that I would not be alone a single minute during the next forty-eight hours. Austin, Cory and Sean stood and left us alone in the conference room.

Nervously, I smirked, "I know what I need to do but haven't had to do it in so long. I can't even remember having ever done it before. It's almost like jumping off a cliff."

Mike softly said, "Take your time, Reyes. The fact that Austin, Cory and Sean left says that they're not concerned. They wanted to give us private family time for this."

Derrick nodded, "We're all here, son. Once you start, everything you know now will still be here. Everything you once knew will be restored too. For us, nothing has changed."

"That's part of why I'm afraid," I sniffled. "I don't want anything to seem different to me."

Jonah challenged, "How different could it be? I won't treat you any differently."

"Me neither," Dillon assured.

Mike lifted his hand and mine. Derrick did the same, insuring me that no matter what, I had a family that cared. Derrick softly asked, "Ready?"

I nodded then closed my eyes and executed the reboot. My eyes opened and nothing seemed to have changed. I looked around the table and recognized my brothers and fathers. Seeing Derrick's concerned expression, I cried, "Of course it was you! How do you spell your first name?"

He answered, "D-E-R-R-I-C-K."

I sobbed, "My first father's name was Derek Taraschke; D-E-R-E-K. He was a musician too, a drummer, just like you. No wonder I've attached myself to you. Even though I couldn't remember..." I couldn't even finish the sentence because I was crying too hard. I recalled my first father and his death then stopped reading my memories because it was already too overwhelming.

Mike said, "Positronic subconscious recall? Stranger things have happened."

Softly shushing me, Derrick smiled, "A little at a time, Reyes. Don't over-do it."

Leaning back in my chair, I groaned, "Oh, I feel so dizzy."

"We've got no place to be any time soon," Mike assured.

"Do you remember me?" Jonah asked.

"Course I remember you," I laughed through my tears. "You too, Dillon; I met you Friday afternoon, after the rescues, at Uncle Iokii's house. Everywhere Jonah went, you followed."

"Yep!" Dillon cheered. "That's exactly right!"

"Aw shit!" I grunted.

Derrick incredulously giggled, "What?"

"I have to pee!" I grinned.

"But you've never swore before," Mike chuckled.

Jonah cracked up laughing, "He just hasn't needed to, but he used to cuss at the orphanage."

I started to stand, but was uncontrollably shaking all over. "Whoa!" Derrick giggled, and wrapped an arm around me.

When we stood together, I looked up at him and smiled, "Thank goodness my other dad wasn't blond too. He had auburn hair, like mine. I'd hate to break down crying every time I look at you."

Wrapping my other arm over his shoulder, Mike snickered, "The men's room is across the hall."

Jonah hurried to the conference room door and opened it. Dillon raced across the hall and body slammed the men's room door to open it. After we passed Dillon, he hurried to one of the toilets. My dad's supported me the entire way to the men's room urinal. Derrick didn't let go of me while I relieved myself. Mike stood at the next urinal, but didn't even hold his dick. He kept his right hand on my back, just in case I got wobbly and he needed to catch me. When Mike and I finished, Mike took hold of me at the sink so Derrick could take care of business and I could wash my hands. Seeing my own face in the mirror though caused another rush of old memories and I started crying again. There were so many other public men's rooms I had been in before, I had to concentrate to stop the flood of memories and tears.

Jonah stepped up to the sink beside me. I asked him, "Why did Piglet look in the toilet?"

Jonah frowned, "Piglet?" and then smirked, "I dunno, why?"

I giggled, "He wanted to see Pooh!" Jonah groaned, but Dillon thought that was the funniest thing he had ever heard and cracked up.

Shaking his head, Mike smirked, "Oh, God help us, he's remembering bathroom jokes."

Turning to him, I asked, "What do toilet paper and the Starship Enterprise have in common?"

Mike chuckled, "They both fly around Uranus looking for Klingons."

Derrick laughed, "Don't let Juan or Korris hear that shit."

"Speaking of shit," I giggled, "What do you call a twelve-inch turd?"

"A foot stool!" Derrick and Mike answered. Jonah and Dillon howled laughing.

We were all finished in the bathroom and went out to the Command Center. I looked around again and wondered, "What happened to the old C.R.T. type televisions?"

Derrick groaned, "Oh man, they stopped making those years ago."

"We had one a long time ago, when I was a little kid," Mike added.

I searched my memory for when I had last seen one of the old tube televisions. I couldn't remember that, but I did remember other things that brought me to tears again. Derrick softly asked, "What's wrong?"

All choked up, I shared, "I was first activated July thirty-first, 1948. Derek Taraschke died of natural causes in 1971. I lived with my cousin and his wife after that, but they died in a car accident in November of 1983. They first wiped my memory November twenty-second, 1983." Breaking down in tears, I sobbed, "That's the last thing I remember. Twenty-one years of my life were spent in that friggin' orphanage." My brothers and fathers wrapped me in their arms. I think we all cried for a long couple of minutes.

The door from the Command Center to the dining room opened. Prez and Keith walked inside and, seeing my family surrounding me, they came to an abrupt halt. Concerned, Prez frowned and asked, "Are you guys all right?"

Safe and warm in the arms of my new family, I nodded and smiled, "Definitely."

Mike explained, "Reboot caused a rush of old memories."

Derrick grinned, "Reyes is thirteen going on fifty-seven."

"Jeez," Keith softly said, "You're older than any of our parents. No wonder the memories were overwhelming."

"It's great!" Dillon cheered, "He's our big bro now and always will be!"

Prez explained, "I need to call the King before it gets any later. Can I do it here or should I go home?"

Derrick asked, "Do you need us around, Prez?"

Shaking his head, Prez said, "Reyes takes priority. Family always takes priority."

"We'll take our kids over to the pool then," Mike suggested.

Derrick remembered, "The Scoobies probably need another ointment treatment anyhow."

Our family walked out of the Command Center. Again, I looked around the dining room. Kaleo and Tory quickly came over to us, looking like they might cry. Kaleo complained, "You were in there so long. Is everything okay?"

I nodded, "It's weird, crying my eyes out one minute then cracking bad bathroom jokes the next."

Tory giggled, "That doesn't sound very normal."

Derrick offered, "It's basically what Austin said would happen though; ups and downs, highs and lows."

Glancing around the dining room as we slowly walked through, I listed off every person I knew, proving I had lost nothing. Kaleo and Tory followed us outside. Smelling the fresh salt air blowing from South to North, from the beach, I stopped walking. My dads, brothers and friends stopped and waited for me. "Ya know what? I've always lived near the ocean. My first family lived in Myrtle Beach, South Carolina until 1958. Ten years we lived there; the 'low country' it was called. Oh man, I remember riding bumper cars, with my dad, at the boardwalk. Myrtle Beach was a great place to grow up. I remember learning to surf, catchin' crawdads and frogs in the lagoon, sunset strolls along the beach. We moved here because my dad's wife was Hawaiian and she wanted to be near her family. Her name was Lokelani, which means heavenly rose. She was so pretty and so nice." Pausing, I sighed and enjoyed remembering stuff that had been forgotten for so long.

Mike softly reminded, "A little at a time, Reyes."

Squeezing him tight, I smiled, "I'm good, Pop. Ya know why?" Mike shrugged and I explained, "Things that I took for granted matter more now. I have family again. I know what that means and I also remember how bad things can get. An hour or so ago, I still smelled that salt air, but it had no meaning. Now it does." Turning to Kaleo and Tory, I smiled, "I have friends that cared about me when I wasn't all there to show how much I cared about them."

"Aww man," Kaleo groaned. "You showed it the best ways you could, Reyes."

Tory nodded, "You were there for us when we were kids; younger than Jonah and Dillon."

Derrick gently prodded, "Tell them how long you were at the orphanage, son."

"Since November 1983, twenty-one years." Kaleo's and Tory's mouths fell open. I smirked, "You know stuff I don't though."

"Like what?" Tory challenged.

I told them the truth. "From November 1983 until this past June, I have no memories. When did the sexual abuses start?"

Kaleo grumbled, "Before I had hair on my dick." He faced Tory and asked, "1998?"

Tory frowned, "I'm not sure either. I was about eight the first time an adult messed with me so either 98 or 99."

Liki Kealoha, Hank Leve, Sean Moorhead and Horacio Sulin came outside. Without stopping, they walked down the path towards the dorm and Horacio pleasantly said, "How's it goin' guys?"

"Really good," I smiled.

Not knowing any better, Dillon gushed, "Reyes is all better now! He remembers stuff he didn't used to. He's fifty-six years old!" All four of them stopped and turned around. Mutely, they seemed to glance at Kaleo, Mike and Derrick for confirmation.

Derrick, Mike and I cracked up. Jonah giggled, "We ain't keepin' any secrets in this family!"

"What?" Dillon squealed. "Was it a secret? Nobody told me that!"

Picking up my little brother and planting him on my hip, I chuckled, "It's not a secret. I have no secrets anymore."

Hugging me as tight as he could, Dillon giggled, "Good!" Resting my head against Dillon's, I breathed in deeply and sighed, thankful that I had a life that mattered once again.

Derrick whispered in my ear, "You need to rest." I nodded agreement and passed Dillon to Derrick.

Mike wrapped an arm around my waist. He suggested, "Let's check on the Scoobies?"

I assured, "I can stand and walk, Pop."

"Give it up, Reyes," Mike smirked. "Enjoy it while ya can."

We began walking towards the family housing complex. I smiled up at Mike and said, "I love you, Pop."

Mike giggled, "I love all you guys too. And I like being called 'Pop'."

Derrick softly chanted, "I'm not goin' there. I am not goin' there," causing Mike to heartily chuckle.

Glancing at my dad and then my pop, I couldn't help smiling. They were so obviously in love with each other. Unfortunately, I remembered my first dad, Derek crying when his wife, Lokelani died peacefully in her sleep. He passed only three months later. My cousin, Akamu took me home with him that day. When we met in 1958, after arriving in Hawaii, Akamu was seven years old. He became my best friend. In 1971, after my parents died, he was a twenty year old man with a fiancée named Hakumele. They married the following June and I was his best man. At the reception luau, I played various native Hawaiian drums like the Pahu drum, Ipu and Pu'ili.

At the south side of the compound, Mike began calling for the ferrets. In under a minute, all four came scampering out from the trees. "How're you guys feeling?" Mike asked, "Still itchy?"

Bouncing on his back legs, Spike answered, "Better now, Shinny Daddy."

Mike nodded, "Doctor Janet said we should apply the ointment at least twice..."

"Do weez got to?" All four ferrets whined.

"That's what the doc said," Mike smiled. "After this, it's up to you guys; you tell me if you're feelin' itchy."

Willow griped, "Weez don't gots to have another bath, do weez?"

Mike shook his head, "Nope. Just a little ointment on the red spots."

Satisfied, the Scoobies hurried towards the Gibbons' house. We sat in the grass and applied the ointment on their bellies, backs and legs. It was relatively easy to tell the four ferrets apart. Spike had the fur that stood upright from his head and down his back. Xander had the dark patches over his eyes and on his chin. Willow had a brown streak of fur down her back and belly. Faith had the lightest colored hair with dark patches only on her feet. Dillon told the ferrets all about my fixes and even had me tell them some bathroom jokes. With the task completed, each of the four thanked their "Shinny Daddy" then hurried back to the trees surrounding the compound.

Derrick asked me, "How do you feel? Do you want to lay down?"

Shaking my head, I grinned, "It's too early for bed. I just want to be with you guys."

Mike suggested, "Pools?"

Derrick reminded, "We need to keep Reyes' hands dry so the blisters can heal."

I said, "Why don't we hang out at the CIC? All the houses are dark. It looks like almost everyone is still there."

Dillon and Jonah agreed. They wanted to find Dee, Richie and Geoff. We started walking back to the CIC. On the way, I shared more memories. "Derek was one of the engineers at Vision Industries and a weekend musician that played drums and percussion in jazz bands. Not too long after I moved in, Derek began teaching me to play congas and bongos. I remember playing with his band. At the time, in the early 1950s, big jazz bands were becoming less popular. Bebop and Latin rhythms were becoming more popular. Dad's band changed with the times; the big horn section was whittled down to two sax players and a flugelhorn. By the late 1950s, I was playing every weekend with my dad's band at clubs along the boardwalk in Myrtle Beach." I paused and chuckled, "It caused my dad some trouble every now and then. I looked thirteen, but was really under ten years old. In either case, my being at clubs where alcohol was served was a problem. My dad's band found a different place to play, a restaurant where only beer and wine were served. By that time, Latin rhythms were being replaced by early rock and roll."

Stepping inside the dining room, we found most of our Clan still there. Kids were hanging out together there and in the attached rec room. Derrick wrapped an arm around me and chuckled, "Reyes, you lived music history that Mike and I have only read about."

Mike nodded, "You'll have to tell us more about that sometime."

I was just about to start naming songs when Keith came out of the Command Center wearing a Clan Short robe. He hollered, "Prez is gonna be on TV!" and ordered, "Daileass, turn the TVs on to local channels in here and the rec room too, dude."

All the televisions turned on. Mike's head sagged and he chuckled, "Mister laid back, chillin' out, playing his bass. What a ham!"

Derrick shook his head sadly and commented, "For someone that wasn't sure he could be a Clan leader, Prez sure is pullin' out all the stops."

Glancing at my dad and pop, I wondered, "I thought he was talking to the King? That was a long while ago though."

On the televisions in the CIC, regular programming was interrupted. King Aalona said, "Aloha. Good evening, citizens of the Republic of Hawaii. This evening, I was contacted by Clan Short Pacific Rim Division Director Preston O'Brian." Kids in the dining room began chattering while the King continued. "After a very productive conversation with Director O'Brian, I have two announcements. Effective immediately, all ROH branches of Child Protection Services are closed." In the dining room and rec room, cheers began. "All future needs for Child Protection are to be directed to Clan Short Pacific Rim Division Headquarters. Employees of Child Protection Services are also directed to report to Clan Short Pacific Rim Division headquarters for possible re-employment.

"My second announcement concerns cleaning up the streets of our cities. There are far too many young prostitutes on the streets. I am certain that many do not wish to be prostitutes, but are working to survive in very difficult times. If you are among the many that do not wish to sell your bodies, I urge you, I beg you, to find your way to the nearest Clan Short base. At this time, I would like to introduce you to Clan Short Pacific Rim Division's Director, Preston O'Brian."

The television screen split in half with the King on the right and Prez on the left. "Thank you, Your Majesty," Prez smiled. "Clan Short exists for the benefit of abandoned and abused children. We value family, but not at the expense of our children. If you are abused or abandoned, you are welcome in the Clan. Federation Youth Services will work with children and families for everyone's mutual benefit, but emotional and physical abuse of children must not be allowed to continue in our society."

Prez paused for a moment, then said, "I am an orphan that was adopted by a caring family. I've always known I was lucky, but these last few days have proven to me how fortunate I am. My own parents never beat me or emotionally abused me. My adopted parents have never abused me either. Under no circumstances should a child be beat or abused to fit some predetermined mold. It's been proven over and over again that violence begets violence. There are other alternatives. If you are an abused or abandoned child; if you are walking the streets trying to earn money to survive; if you are a pregnant teen shunned by your family, then come to us for help. We can help and will help you. If you are a doctor or lawyer, or housekeeper or landscaper, or teacher or chef that has a deep caring for children, but are having trouble finding employment, come to us for help. Don't continue down the rough and rocky road alone. Clan Short is part of your community and we can help."

Prez then smiled, "Thank you for your time and thank you, Your Majesty."

King Aalona said, "Director O'Brian and I share the same dreams and goals for a better world; one filled with caring and hope for the future; a world where we all help one another; where separations are eliminated. We will begin working on the future progress of mankind here and now with our Island Nation. It may take a lifetime, but we will succeed with your help. Aloha."

Cheers and laughter erupted in the dining room. A few seconds later, normal television programming resumed. Derrick grinned, "It seems ROH CPS is closed and we're taking over."

"That's great!" Jonah and I hollered.

Uncertain what had just happened, Dillon glanced around then asked Mike, "What's goin' on, poppa?"

Sitting Dillon on his lap, Mike answered, "Uncle Prez has invited all the kids that need our help to come live with us."

Dillon squealed, "He has?"

All Mike did was nod before Keith and Prez came out of the Command Center. Proud of our leader, we all stood and clapped, whistled and shouted. From John's table, baby carrots were launched high in the air that exploded into carrot confetti. Sammy, Gage, Dee and Richie hurried to their dads.

Prez stood on a chair and announced, "King Aalona and I have opened up the flood gates. We're going to have street kids showing up soon. Think about that for a second, please. The people those kids work for are not going to be happy about this. Extra base security needs to be on alert through the next few nights."

From the Command Center, a boy's voice confirmed, "We're already on alert, Prez. Base shields have been activated. No one gets in or out without your prior say."

Prez grinned, "Excellent! Thanks, Paulie. Put our parents on both lists for tomorrow. They have to go to work."

"Tomorrow morning, we'll need the remaining parents manning the FYS building and prepared for interviews. Guaranteed we'll have CPS workers knocking at our gates. Hopefully, we'll have all sorts of professionals coming to us for employment. Let's get a coffee urn and a few dozen coffee cups over there. Since the adults will be occupied, we'll need the teens watching out for the tweens and little tikes at the pool, diving well and recreation centers. Drew and Corey, please oversee the safety of the kids."

Drew and Corey simultaneously responded, "No problem, bro!"

"Mister Gibbons, I'm hoping you can get the Clan Liaison situation sorted and be back here by noon."

Grandpa Rob replied, "I don't foresee any issues. I'll be gone around eight and back by ten, Preston."

"That would be great!" Prez cheered. "Return to the FYS building, please." He then continued, "John, Nathan, Jamie, Jacob and Beau, your services will be required to ensure we hire the very best people."

John loudly assured, "We got it covered, bro!"

Derrick gathered us together saying, "We're gonna need to go to work soon. There's a bunch of new kids to get oriented. Jonah and Dillon, it's your job to watch out for Reyes while we're gone. Make sure he doesn't get quiet or spend too much time reviewing memories."

Both my little brothers nodded. Jonah assured, "No problem, dad."

Locking eyes with mine, Derrick smiled, "No drums tonight, son; congas only."

Mike added, "And no writing either. Let the memories settle down for two days."

I nodded, "I think I'd rather hang around here with everyone for a while."

Derrick kissed each of us and then so did Mike. Holding hands, they walked across the dining room to where Prez and Keith were now standing near the table of new kids. From various areas of the dining room, Dewi, Cesar, Felipe, Bruce, Ben, Sung, Kawazoe and Kokaku converged and came over to our table. Dillon shared the news about my restored memories with everyone. I suggested that we all go over to the rec room and try out some of the arcade video games.

When our grandfathers brought us in there Saturday night, I didn't notice the pinball game, but there it stood. It brought back more happy memories so I went there with Jonah and Dillon, sharing my tales of times gone by. My first two pinballs were wasted before I got the feel of the game again. Then I took off, just like old times. I got an extra pinball and then broke the previous high score, earning another pinball. The next thing I knew, the table was surrounded by a large group of kids, shouting and squealing, encouraging me on.

I noticed that Bruce was not with the others around the pinball table and wondered where he went. It was obvious to me that Bruce had to be feeling painful pangs of loss over his parents. That train of thought caused me to lose a pinball. Since I couldn't decide if I should say anything to Bruce or not, I pulled myself together, pulled the pin back and let another ball rip. My concentration was completely shattered though. All I could think about was how Bruce must feel and how I felt when my first dad and mom died. Although that was very bad, I still had Akamu, my cousin, best friend and father figure. Within a year, I had a surrogate mom in Hakumele too. Losing them in a car accident left me without family and no one to turn to. Another pinball went into the gutter. My hands were shaking with everyone watching. I already had quadrupled the previous high score and didn't see any reason to continue the game; much the same way I didn't see any reason to continue living back in 1983. I let the final ball fall into the gutter. While everyone around me was ecstatic, I pulled Jonah along and picked up Dillon as I left the pinball table.

While others clamored to play the game, Jonah looked up at me asking, "Reyes? What's wrong, bro?"

Shaking my head, I explained how my thoughts went from Bruce's parents to my first parents and finally to my cousin and his wife. Alone in the dining room and sitting at a table away from others,

I told my brothers, "They were only in their thirties when they died. I had nowhere to go and no reason to live. It shouldn't have been that way." Falling apart again, I sobbed, "They never had a chance to have kids of their own. I tried to end it all by running into traffic, in front of a bus. All I caused was an accident where other people were hurt. I was arrested, then put in a hospital as suicidal."

"Reyes?" Jonah said. I wiped my eyes and he said, "That was a long time ago; it's over now, bro. I love you. Dillon loves you." Dillon nodded and climbed into my lap. Jonah finished, "Dad and Pop love you too."

I sighed, "I wanted to say something to Bruce."

Shaking his head, Jonah reminded, "How can ya make Bruce feel better? You're just now getting your memories back. Now's not the time for Bruce; it's time for you, Reyes."

I sniffled and admitted, "It's been more than twenty years, but it feels like just last week."

"Last week you were saving my ass from pervs!" Jonah loudly said. He looked around to determine if anyone heard his outburst. The adults were still seated where they had eaten dinner. They were now watching us. Bruce was there with the Hundses.

I told my brothers, "I'm not gonna try and off myself. I've got a family that I love again. It just hurts."

John Hundser appeared in the dining room. Not even looking our way, John went over to his parents and Bruce when I heard his voice in my mind. 'It's past now, Reyes. I'll make a deal with you. I'll help you focus on good memories if you'll help me learn to concentrate on more than one thing at a time. Deal?' Arriving at his parents' table and standing between them talking, John's voice in my mind asked, 'Well? Have we got a deal?'

Focusing on John and wondering how I had heard him, I nodded, "Yeah, I'll try."

Dillon asked, "What're ya tryin'?"

Crossing the dining room with Bruce and Dewi, John sent, 'Kewl, bro.'

Jonah scowled, "Reyes? Hello? Don't you freak out on me!"

Glancing at Jonah and then Dillon, I promised, "I'll try to focus on good memories."

Heading our way, John began giggling and sent, 'Good recovery!'

"Oh!" Jonah grunted. "That's better." Dillon hugged me tighter, obviously happier. I silently wondered how I heard John in my mind.

He answered, 'N-Gen now, remember?'

Since he was hearing my thoughts and he was now close enough to hear my voice, I grinned, "I thought that was telekinesis only."

'Empathy and telepathy too,' John replied. 'I felt you, Jonah and Dillon.'

Jonah spun around and laughed, "Stop talkin' in my head!"

I helplessly giggled, "What did he say, bro?"

Spinning around to face me again, Jonah was blushing bright pink. He growled but didn't say a word. Dillon scrambled off my lap. First he hugged John, then Bruce and finally Dewi.

John enthusiastically said, "Let's go suit shoppin'!"

Bruce wondered, "Are Geoff, Ben, Sung and Bane still in the rec room?"

Standing up, I nodded, "As far as I know."

Dillon chattered, "Ya shoulda stayed, Bruce. Reyes got a new high score! Ev'rybody was watchin' and yellin'. It was kewl!"

Bruce giggled, "Wow! I'll bet your proud of him."

Dillon hurried back to me and hugged me.

John tapped his sub-vocal. "Daileass, are Bane, Ben, Geoff and Sung busy in the rec room?" After a short pause, John said, "Transport the four of them and all six of us to the store, by the swimsuits, please."

A split second later, we were all in a department store. Grunts and yells erupted from the four that had been playing in the rec room. John cracked up laughing and they all tackled him.

Shaking his head and helplessly giggling, Bruce told John, "We can't wear swimsuits to a funeral, you know."

"Yeah," John loudly laughed at his pint sized attackers, "but look how kewl the Speedos are!"

We all went to the nearby table where Speedos with the Clan Short emblem were displayed. The last to arrive, John stripped off his T-shirt, boardies and underwear. "Come on, you guys!" John encouraged, "Is there somebody here that doesn't have a dick?" Shaking his head, Bruce giggled at John, and most of the boys in our group began laughing too. Wiggling his hips and making his dick flop around, John sent to me, 'This needs to be fun for Bruce. I know you want to help him as much as I do. Let's make this fun.'

Without delay, I stripped my clothes off. Dewi and Dillon were next to unashamedly lose their clothes. I nudged Jonah and teased, "Now you're shy?" Soon, Jonah, Bruce and the rest of the boys were naked. Suddenly, Jonah turned to John and ran at him. Laughing hysterically, John raced down the center aisle of the store with Jonah in pursuit. Shocked but grinning widely, I hurried after them. Bruce and all the other boys with us started chasing John around the store.

It was then I realized that Jonah thought the world of John and had shared his feelings with me. If John was N-Gen and telepathic, then he must know how Jonah feels too. At some point, I had to get Jonah alone to find out what John had telepathically sent. The first time, John made Jonah blush and now, John's telepathic remarks caused Jonah to chase after John. I was laughing my butt off wondering if John liked Jonah or if John was simply teasing Jonah. To make matters more funny, John raced through the girls' and ladies' underwear, making all kinds of panties and bras fly at Jonah. I was practically in tears laughing and could barely keep up. When Dillon, Geoff and little Dewi passed me, I knew I had to try and stop laughing. After the third trip, Dee, Sammy and Gage were running around the store naked too. We ran the length of the store six times before stopping to get Speedos then finally arriving at the boys' dress clothes.

Jonah and John grinned at each other. I could only wonder what was truly going on between them. John focused on Dee, Gage and Sammy. The three boys shook their heads, then wandered off. When Bruce arrived, he giggled, "That was great." John focused on Bruce. Bruce caught his breath and said, "White is more normal for Buddhist funerals."

Surprised, John said, "Really?" and Bruce nodded. "Okay. Since you're family and Buddhist then you should wear a white suit. The rest of us will wear dark suits. That way they'll know who's who."

Bruce smiled, "Sounds good to me."

Glancing around the remaining seven of us, John asked, "Who knows what size suit, shirt or pants they should get?" Not one of us said a word. "It's kewl," John said, "I dunno what sizes I need either. Everybody line up between Dewi and Reyes, shortest to tallest. We're gonna do this quick and easy. John walked down the line and checked to make sure we were sorted. Soon we stood in order; Dewi, Dillon, Sung, Jonah, Bane, Bruce and I. John instructed, "Dewi and Dillon, go get boy's size small white dress shirts. Sung, Jonah and Bane, boy's size medium white dress shirts. Bruce, get a dark blue or black shirt. I think medium might work for you, but if it feels tight, get a boy's large." John stood before me and said, "I think you're too big for boy's size shirts, Reyes. I'm gonna have to measure your neck and arms, bro." John telekinetically pulled a measuring tape over then had me stand like a scarecrow. He measured my neck and arms, then sent me off to the men's shirts. John hurried over to help Bruce and get his own shirt. In a few minutes, we were all standing in our green Clan Short Speedos with dress shirts on. "Okay dudes, buddy up," John announced. "We're gonna get waist and inseam sizes for pants." Using Bruce as his buddy, John showed us how to measure each other. In another few minutes, we all had pants selected, but hadn't put them on. Finally, we measured chest sizes to get suit jackets. Then we went into the dressing room to dress, where we had mirrors to check ourselves out.

In a couple of minutes, we were all dressed in new suits. John did a great job keeping us organized and getting the task done quickly. The only one dressed in a white suit, Bruce looked awesome. John smiled, "Good work, dudes. Hang up your jackets and slacks, take off your shirts, then go back to the swimsuits. Change out of your Speedos and put your clothes back on. Once that's done, all you guys still need are shoes, socks and ties. Help each other out, okay? I'll be right back." John then raced out of the dressing room. He returned barely a minute later and started getting undressed. He hung his jacket and pants, then began unbuttoning his shirt. John's comm-badge chirped. He tapped it and said, "Hey, bro. How's Stephen?"

Sounding frustrated, Keith said, "Why do you even bother asking?"

John giggled, "We're just finishing up with the suits for Wednesday. I'll be there in a few minutes."

Keith pleasantly said, "Kewl, bro."

John instructed, "Turn around, Keith." After a brief pause, John sang, "Kaleo and Tory sittin' in a tree..." and then cracked up.

"God, bro!" Keith huffed impatiently. "You're worse than Daileass!"

John howled laughing.

I grinned and wondered, "What was Kaleo doin'?"

John giggled, "Boyfriend stuff with Tory."

Jonah squealed, "Yeah? That's awesome!"

John teased, "Betchya you're next, Jonah!" and then raced out of the dressing room, carrying his new clothes.

Shaking his head, Jonah grumbled and concentrated on hanging his clothes.

Sung grinned, "You got a boyfriend, Jonah?"

"No." Jonah flatly said.

Bane asked, "A girlfriend?"

"NO!" Jonah hollered. He pointed at me and then Dillon, loudly proclaiming, "I got brothers and fathers. That's all I want!" The other guys were all grinning, but Jonah's face was as red as I've ever seen. I couldn't tell if he was angry or blushing. When the others had left the dressing room a minute or so later, I asked Jonah, "What's up, bro?"

Jonah huffed, "Nothin'," but didn't even look at me.

For the first time, Jonah was hiding something from me and I didn't like the feeling. I carefully asked, "Are you angry or what?"

Looking up and around the empty dressing room, Jonah sighed, "I'm not angry. I don't know what I feel, really."

"I'm listening," I prompted.

Jonah whined, "I don't know, Reyes. It's weird, ya know?" He huffed then rambled, "I hated anybody messin' with me at the orphanage. I wanna be nine years old and not worry about boyfriends or girlfriends. But then I watch dad and pop, or Keith and Prez, or Drew and Corey and say, yeah, that's what I'd like too. Somebody to talk with, somebody to just be with that wants to be with me too. But I don't want sex as much as the other stuff. I don't know if I want a boyfriend or a girlfriend either. I'm happier than ever now, with you and Dillon, and Mike and Derrick. I want everything to stay like it is now."

I went to my brother and patted his back, saying, "I know now what I didn't know just a few hours ago. What they did to us at the orphanage was very wrong. It was wrong for me, for you and for all of us. Love is what dad and pop have. It's what all the Core Rimmers have and what their parents have too. Love is just what you said that you do want. It's not somebody grabbin' your dick first and then hoping for the best. It's the exact opposite, someone to talk with and be with and then maybe wanting to have sex. When you reach puberty, you'll definitely be more willing to have a sexual relationship. There's no rush, Jonah. Take your time."

We left the dressing room together. Jonah said, "I feel so different now, watching these people that really love each other." We helped each other choose ties to go with our suits.

I admitted, "I feel it too. Now I have my old memories to prove that those around me are really caring, loving people. I didn't have that this afternoon. I was just like you, dealing with only orphanage memories of adults wanting mainly sex from the kids. Watch them and learn, that's all I can recommend."

Jonah looked up and smiled, "You're still the best big brother I could ever want."

We went to get ourselves socks then went to get dress shoes. While we were alone together, Jonah asked me if I had ever had a boyfriend or girlfriend. The truth was, I hadn't. However, my first parents were excellent examples. Almost as good were my cousin and his wife. Maybe, if I had more time with them, I would've grown to love them as much as my first parents. And what I had witnessed since Friday morning were lots of people that had huge, caring hearts. I told Jonah, "We have a lot of abuses to get over while we learn from these guys how to have a successful relationship. Put it side-by-side in your mind, bro. Compare the old to the new, the bad to the good. If I need help, you know I'll go to you. If you need help, I hope you'll come to me."

Jonah nodded then wondered, "What about dad and pop?"

I shrugged, "It depends on the situation. For some stuff, it'll be easier to talk to you. On the other hand, if I can't help you out, then I'll point you to them. I expect you'd do the same for me."

Finished with shoes we liked that fit well, we went to the checkout counter where we caught up with Ben, Dillon, and our dad and pop. Our stuff was checked out, then Derrick whispered something to Mike. They nodded then turned to us. Derrick said, "It's after ten, dudes. Time to wind down and call it a day."

Mike said, "I'll have Daileass transport you to my folks' house. Have grandma or grandpa help you get your clothes hung up."

Derrick added, "We'll be at the Hundsters' joining the nest as soon as we can." Our dad and pop kissed each of us on the forehead and we hugged them in return.

Once we had our stuff gathered, Mike called Daileass and had us transported to the Gibbons' home. Grandpa Rob was home, sitting in the living room watching TV. We said hello as we walked inside. I told grandpa Rob that we needed to get our stuff for the funeral hung up and put away. He showed us upstairs to what was planned on becoming our room. Once again, Dillon opened his mouth and told grandpa Rob that we had looked at one of the townhouses earlier that day. We were sure he was going to be shocked, but if he was, he didn't show it.

Christel and Lindsay were in their room doing whatever it is girls do between chattering. Grandpa Rob knocked on the door. Lindsay answered the door. Grandpa Rob said, "The boys are heading over to join the nest. Have you girls decided if you're staying here or going there?"

Lindsay turned around to check with Christel. Christel said, "Let's stay here."

Grandpa Rob nodded, "All right then. Don't stay awake too late, ladies."

Lindsay giggled, "We won't, dad." We followed Grandpa Rob down the hall and downstairs. Us four boys said goodnight and hugged grandpa Rob, then went out the front door.

Once the front door closed, I giggled, "All right, you guys, this is just wrong." Coming to a halt, Ben, Dillon and Jonah smiled up at me. "Christel is six and breaking away from the nest. The older teenagers have already moved into the dorm."

Ben said, "Some of the other teenagers were planning on moving to the dorms too."

Jonah incredulously squealed, "What?"

Dillon whined, "But we have fun playing and then get to sleep with our daddies."

I told Dillon, "We can do that at the Gibbons' or the Seiberts'. Don't you think it's time to consider breaking into family units?"

Ben shrugged, "I guess."

Jonah told Dillon, "Wherever our dad's are is kewl with me."

Dillon asked, "Can we get some video games and build a nest of our own?"

I answered, "We can do that in a real bedroom, bro." Dillon whined indecisively. I offered, "Let's get all the Gibbons and Seibert kids together tomorrow and start talking about it. Our dads need time alone. If we can let them sleep together at night, we won't have to do what we did today."

Jonah nodded, "That makes sense."

We started walking to the Hundserts' house again. Ben began giggling. We turned to him and he laughed, "Mike's only been my brother a day. I just don't want to think of him having sex with Derrick."

I grinned, "Get over it. He's a teenage boy in love. The sex they have is nothin' like what we were forced to do."

"I guess," Ben giggled. "I wonder what they do together?" Dillon and Jonah loudly groaned, then attacked Ben for even mentioning it. I cracked up laughing at the three of them.

The light was on in the Hundserts' living room. I knocked on the front door. Uncle Jim opened the door and smiled, "Hello, boys," then stepped aside to let us inside, asking, "Ready to join the nest?"

I said hello and answered, "Yeah, is anyone down there yet?"

"All the little ones are already asleep," Uncle Jim answered. "Bruce, Gage, Sam and Dee are probably still awake."

Dillon said, "Thanks, Unca Jim."

Closing the door behind us, Uncle Jim led us through the house. He offered, "Sleep well, boys," then went past the basement door.

We each said, "Goodnight," to Uncle Jim and then went downstairs. A lot of the youngest kids were already asleep in the nest. Missing from the basement were all the thirteen year old kids and a bunch of twelve year old kids. Playing video games and watching television, were most of the kids between eight and eleven years old. Jonah joined the crew playing video games. I decided to get my laptop PC and began writing, even though my dads warned me not to.

Dillon fell asleep on the couch beside me. I picked him up and gently put him in the nest near Richie and Geoff. A few at a time, kids stopped playing video games and went to sleep. John came downstairs about eleven-thirty with one of the boys picked up at Hawaii. John and Stephen were definitely falling in love. After teasing John but getting nowhere, Jonah gave up and went to the nest. Writing about my restored memories took a lot out of me. I know that's just the tip of the iceberg; however, I'm not going there now.

It's time for bed. I wonder what I'll dream about.

Chapter 6A

O'ahu, Ewa Beach, C.S.P.R.D. Main Base

Monday, November 1, 2004 8:45 PM HTZ

Prez and Keith looked around the CIC dining room. Dee, Richie, Gage and Sammy hurried over to embrace their dads. At least half the UNIT kids and most of the rescued kids were still there. Mike and Derrick had returned with their kids. The four big televisions mounted on the walls were still turned on. The doors to the rec room were open, with another dozen or so kids in the doorway, and the television that could be seen in there was on too. This family dinner had turned into much more than Prez had envisioned.

Since most of the Rimmers were present, Prez told Daileass to patch him in across the base PA system, and then stood on a chair while holding his hands up to get some quiet. Once Daileass gave the word, Prez said, "King Aalona and I have opened up the flood gates. We're going to have street kids showing up soon. Think about that for a second please. The people those kids work for are not going to be happy about this. Extra base security needs to be on alert through the next few nights."

From the Command Center, Paulie interjected, "We're already on alert, Prez. Base shields have been activated. No one gets in or out without your prior say."

Prez grinned, "Excellent! Thanks, Paulie. Put our parents on both lists for tomorrow. They have to go to work.

"Tomorrow morning, we'll need the remaining parents manning the FYS building and prepared for interviews. Guaranteed we'll have C.P.S. workers knocking at our gates tomorrow morning. Hopefully, we'll have all sorts of professionals coming to us for employment. Let's get a coffee urn and a few dozen coffee cups over there. Since the adults will be occupied, we'll need the teens watching out for the tweens and little tikes at the pool, diving well and recreation centers. Drew and Corey, please oversee the safety of the kids."

At the tables with the newest nine Rimmers, Drew and Corey simultaneously responded, "No problem, bro!"

"Mister Gibbons, I'm hoping you can get the Clan Liaison situation sorted and be back here by noon."

Mike's dad replied, "I don't foresee any issues. I'll be gone around eight and back by ten, Preston."

"That would be great!" Prez cheered. "Return to the FYS building, please." He then continued, "John, Nathan, Jamie, Jacob and Beau, your services will be required to insure we hire the very best people."

John loudly assured, "We got it covered, bro!"

"Thanks," Prez said, then scanned the CIC. He then asked, "Where's Jason Evans?" Getting no response, Prez wondered, "Has anyone seen any of the Evans kids?" Again, there were no replies. "Well shit," Prez softly grumbled, "They didn't even say goodbye."

John telepathically replied to Prez and Keith; 'Sorry bros, it took a little extra time. Jace says you and Keith can know, but no one else, except me, of course. Off base VSO are watching the streets just outside our fences. If anyone tries something, they'll be lucky to find themselves in a VSO jail cell. Now don't say anything!'

Prez said, "If anyone thinks of something I haven't, let a Core Rimmer know A.S.A.P.," and then got down off the chair. Keith and Prez took their Clan robes off then draped them over a chair. Taking Prez's hand again, Keith led the way over to the tables where the nine new kids were sitting. "How're you guys doin'?" Prez cheerfully asked.

After getting positive replies and compliments about the food from all, Keith turned to Drew and asked, "Who's who?"

Remaining seated, Drew rattled off brief introductions, pointing at each boy as he proceeded. "Here's Nicholas Shavers and his boyfriend Roger Mosqueda. Then we have Jeff Cummings, John Huth, Manuel Simonton, Jonathan Dupre, James Hahn, Jerry Burk and Stephen Marr." Each boy waved and widely smiled at Prez.

Keith grinned then whispered to Prez, "You did it again, baby."

Scowling, Prez searched Keith's eyes for an answer of what he'd done. John answered; 'They were barely here an hour before watching their new leader on TV with the King. They think you're awesome, Prez.'

Closing his eyes and taking a deep breath, Prez then smiled, "Okay you guys, just chill out and listen. Friday afternoon, I was just another high school student. What I said on TV is the truth. We're here for anybody that needs and wants our help. I'm the same as any of you, doing the best I can as each situation presents itself." Seeing the same awestruck expression in almost all of the boy's faces, Prez turned to Keith.

"Prez is my partner," Keith said, and pulled Prez close. "We're just like you in every way; we sleep, eat, shower and relieve ourselves just like you do. Hero worship is totally uncalled for." Keith then kissed Prez deeply, but when they stopped and looked back at the boys, all they managed to change was skin tones as a few were now blushing.

Getting up and moving between Prez and Keith, Drew took hold of them both then chimed in, "We're brothers and all you guys are our new brothers. We've only been Clan for a few days." Corey stepped up and Drew proudly said, "Corey's my partner."

John, Kaleo, Mike and Derrick joined Drew, Corey, Keith and Prez. Keith quickly introduced Mike and Derrick and explained, "Derrick and Mike are our Clan Historians. When you need something or if there are any problems, we're the guys you come to. Our main job is to make you dudes safe and comfortable. We're just getting our act together as a new division, but all the important stuff, like chefs and housekeeping, is already taken care of."

Prez pulled a chair closer and so did Keith, Kaleo, Mike and Derrick. Drew, Corey and John excused themselves to spend some time with Jacob, Jamie and Beau. Everyone sat down and Keith put his hand on the nearest boy's shoulder, then asked, "Tell us a little about yourself, Jerry?"

Jerry blushed and smiled, "There ain't much to tell. I'm eleven years old. My mom died of cancer a few years ago. I was placed in a foster home last year. My foster dad ain't too bad, but the woman, she's wicked; she goes out of her way to make my life shit when he's not around. Only when he's around and watching does she act nice. He don't believe what I said about her. Now she's even worse and he don't trust me no more. Saturday, she threw a knife at me while my back was turned. It was only luck or bad aim that kept me from getting hurt. I heard on TV that Clan bases were here last night. I left home before the sun came up this morning."

Prez asked, "If we could broker a peace, would you be interested?"

Jerry shrugged, and then tearfully answered, "She goes before I take another step in that house. If I ever see her again, I might be killed or forced to kill her in self defense."

"We'll take care of it, Jerry," Prez assured.

Keith nodded, "Don't worry about a thing, Jerry. Your foster dad will ultimately make the choice, but we've got your back now."

Before Keith finished speaking, John sent confirmation to the other Core Rimmers; 'Omigod! She really did throw a knife at him! It wasn't a small knife either; it was big! What a bitch! When are we getting our phaser training?'

Mike sputtered, and then covered his mouth before cracking up at an inappropriate time. Prez grinned and moved on to the next boy. "Your turn, Stephen."

"I'm eleven too," Stephen said, but then he broke down in tears. "It's only my mom and me," he sobbed, "She ain't got a good job and tries so hard, but it ain't been workin' out. We can barely stay in an apartment for a while then the rent goes up and we can't afford 'lectricity or food." The boy fell apart and everyone tried to comfort him at once. During that chaos, Kaleo told Prez and Keith that Doctor Andrews had already been called for Stephen. John didn't know what to think of Stephen, because the new boy didn't want to be in the Clan; Stephen only wanted to be with his mother and didn't care that they didn't have a home. This boy was more frightened than any of the other eight newbies.

When Stephen finally calmed down and could hear beyond his own sobbing, Prez said, "We're gonna take care of your situation too, Stephen. How would you like it if your mom worked for us?" The boy looked up with a bit of hope in his eyes, and Prez said, "It don't matter what her job is or how much she gets paid; the most important thing is to save families that need saving."

Prez then stood and looked around. He shouted, "Troy, c'mere a sec please, dude." Troy Faris hurried over to the tables. Prez introduced Troy to Stephen, then said, "Troy's mom is one of our housekeepers. We'll get in touch with your mom then you can live with her on this base or one of four other bases. We'll find her a job and you two get to be a family. How does that sound?"

Struck dumb, Stephen could only hang his mouth open as if it couldn't be real, but finally said, "That would be really good."

Looking at Troy, Prez asked, "Show Stephen around please, bud? Let him meet your mom and see your condo. Then take him over to my mom. If we can, let's get the ball rolling tonight."

Troy nodded and, as Stephen stood to follow, he grinned, "Two days ago, my mom and me were freezin' our asses off in New Jersey. Now my mom's got a great job right here on base. We've got a really nice apartment too."

Turning his attention back to the other boys, Prez sat again then continued, "This is what we do and how we do it; no red tape, no bullshit; if we can save a family, we will. Does anyone else have a family worth saving?" The rest of the boys shook their heads. The Core Rimmers listened to seven more horror stories from the new boys; one involving alcohol, another involving drugs, some anger management issues and some of complete parental indifference. The only other bright spot came telepathically from John via the Terrible Trio when Jonathan Dupre was talking. It was quite likely that Jonathan had an Aunt in Maine that was already associated with the Clan Northeast Division.

The Core Rimmers then explained sleeping arrangements. The new boys had the choice of dorms or nesting in the basement, as had been the norm for the last two nights. Kaleo explained that most of the existing Rimmer tweens had decided to try out the dorms for the first time. Afterward, Prez tapped his sub-vocal and called, "Daileass?"

"Mister Popularity!" Daileass teased. "What can I do for you? Perhaps you'd like to talk to the U.S. President or Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth?"

Prez sniggered, "No, no, we've got enough to deal with right here. All we need is some clothes for these new kids I'm with."

"Just in time," Daileass replied. "The store is finally stocked."

"What store?" Prez frowned.

Connecting to all the Core Rimmers sub-vocals, Daileass giggled, "Have everyone stand and I'll show you."

"Ooo-kay," Prez droned uncertainly. All the Rimmers stood and asked everyone else gathered to stand. Prez picked up Richie. Once the group was standing, Daileass transported them into what appeared to be a department store. "Where the hell are we, Daileass?" Prez excitedly wondered.

"In the basement of the CIC," Daileass laughed.

"I didn't even know the CIC had a basement," Keith said.

"It was an empty basement until today," Daileass giggled. "The only way in or out is via transport; there are no stairs or elevators. At least one of the Core team has to request transport. To your left are the girls' and ladies' departments. To your right are the boys' and mens' departments. All the clothing you'll ever need is down here: underwear, socks, sneakers, shoes, sandals, shirts, jeans, shorts, suits, slacks, jackets and raincoats. There are some basic accessories too, like belts, hats, wallets, handbags, combs, hair brushes, toothbrushes, toothpaste and other toiletries. We even have our own Clan Short Speedos. Guess where the Clan emblem is?"

Knowing Daileass all too well by this point, Prez roared, "This is a hard one!"

"Is it?" Daileass teased, "Can I see?"

"No!" all eight of the Core Rimmers loudly laughed.

"Fine; be that way!" Daileass giggled. "Have the guys grab a shopping cart and start picking out their own clothes. There are dressing rooms too, if anyone needs to try on their new clothes. Don't forget Clan suitcases. When you're all finished, just swipe over the bar code readers at checkout and you're all done. This system will let me know what needs to be replaced and can keep everything stocked up. You guys also should know that the store occupies a third of the space down here. Another third is an emergency bunker. I'd doubt there's anywhere safer on any of the islands. You can fit a thousand people in there. The other third of the basement is emergency food and water storage and bathrooms with showers."

"Excellent!" Prez cheered. "Thanks, Daileass."

"One other thing you'll all need to know," Daileass interjected. "Cory Short, being a blond, forgot to mention that he had contacted the AI Division in South Carolina. Pacific Rim Division will have their own AI installed. Caleb and Noah will be on-site by the time you wake up in the morning. Your new AI will work in parallel with me and Draco. Of course, he'll be your primary contact for transports and other requests. He's kind o' cute too, but I'm biased."

Mike smirked, "Will he be a perv like you?"

Daileass giggled, "Not exactly like me, but he will be monitoring things just like I have. He takes after his daddy." All the Core Rimmers began groaning through their chuckles. Exactly how an AI could reproduce was a question none of them were willing to ask.

"Okay dudes," Keith loudly said. "It's time to go shopping. And best of all, it's free!"

"It's free?" James Hahn and Jonathan Dupre, the two youngest boys uncertainly repeated.

"You bet," Keith smiled. He then realized the two boys had probably never gone clothes shopping before and didn't have any idea what size clothes they needed. "We'll help all you guys out," Keith reassured.

One after another, the boys began grabbing shopping carts. Gage looked up at Keith and asked, "Can we get some stuff too, Dad?"

Keith nodded, "You guys will need rain gear of some sort. It's getting to be that time of year."

"Lemme down, Poppa," Richie smiled, and Prez put his son down on the floor. Gage and Sammy grabbed shopping carts then led Dee and Richie down the center aisle. Prez hurried after his four boys while the remaining Core Rimmers helped the new boys select clothes. Drew and Corey made sure James and Jonathan were getting the correct sizes while Mike, Derrick and Kaleo helped the older boys. Socks and underwear were the first items gathered. None of the boys were interested in pajamas; they all slept in their underwear.

Keith trailed behind and ensured everything remained organized. John walked over to his oldest brother and reminded, "The Downings' funeral is Wednesday. They're Buddhists, bro. I need a suit and so does Bruce."

"What time is the service?" Keith wondered.

"Eleven," John answered. "Bruce already knows you guys can't make it because of school."

Keith nodded, "Are any other kids going?"

"Eight other boys that I know of," John replied.

"Go get Bruce and the others that are attending," Keith said. "Tell mom and dad what's going on too, please." He then paused and chuckled, "We keep transporting in and out. They never know where the hell we're at any more!"

"I know," John laughed. "You should've heard what they were thinking when we all disappeared from the dining room."

"I can imagine," Keith smiled.

"Daileass?" John called.

"Bruce is with your parents now, John," Daileass replied.

"Sweet!" John chirped. In a flash, John was back in the CIC dining room.

Keith caught up with the new kids at the footwear department. Manuel, Jeff and Roger had older sneakers with hardly any tread remaining. Keith had them select new sneakers too, so they wouldn't slip in the coming rainy season. Out of the corner of his eye, Keith thought he saw someone run past, but when he turned, there was no one there. Returning to the task at hand, he finished getting the new boys' sneakers and reorganizing the shoe department.

Mike and Derrick led the boys to the summer clothes department where they could choose T-shirts, board shorts and swimwear. Some of the boys were only taking two pair of shorts until Drew and Corey went over and told them everyone should have at least a week's worth of clothes. Soon every boy had five pair of boardies and five T-shirts in their carts. They passed through the sports and dress shirts, picking two or three out each and then moved on to the jeans.

Over by the racks of belts, Mike noticed movement and grinned knowingly as he stealthily crept between tables and racks. By the time Mike arrived, the belts were swinging, but no one was there. Then he saw that some hats seemed to be moving on their own and hurried over. There he found Spike and Xander, already wearing shiny new patent leather belts and trying on similar black patent leather Derbies. Mike grinned, "What are you guys doing?"

"Shiny Daddy!" the two ferret boys chimed in unison.

Xander grinned, "Weez getting new clothes."

"For the funeral." Spike finished.

"You're lookin' pretty snazzy," Mike chuckled. He dug his hand in his pocket then handed each boy a worn out guitar pick saying, "These will go well with those clothes."

Bouncing happily, Xander took a pearloid guitar pick and smiled, "Thank you, Daddy!"

"Weez thought maybe you forgot," Spike slyly grinned.

Mike shook his head saying, "I can't give just one away when there are four of you." He then asked, "Where are your sisters?"

Spike and Xander pointed and chorused, "Over in the girls' section."

"I've got two more picks for them," Mike smiled.

"We'll go get them!" Spike and Xander cheered, and then scurried off across the store.

Stepping up beside Mike, just in time to see Spike and Xander scamper away, Derrick grinned, "The Scoobies are here?" Mike nodded and Derrick softly giggled, "Shiny clothing racks."

Mike chuckled, "They picked out shiny patent leather belts and hats."

"Of course they did," Derrick howled.

Over by the coats and jackets, Prez was helping his boys choose Clan Short ponchos for the rainy season when his comm-badge chirped. He tapped it and replied, "Prez here."

"Hey, Prez," Paulie said, "Daileass just transported a box of credit cards into the Command Center."

Prez frowned and asked, "Why do we need a box of credit cards?"

"For the kids," Paulie answered.

"Ya lost me, Paulie," Prez honestly said.

"Okay," Paulie began. "They're pre-paid credit cards. The kids get allowances every week and they're automatically added to the credit cards. If the kids do odd jobs around base, they get paid for that too on their credit cards. This way the kids learn responsibility, not only for the work they do, but for the money they earn. Then they can go online and order stuff they want, like video games, posters, music and stuff like that. Mister Takamura owns lots of companies; Nile dot com, e-Cove and Target, to name a few, so the kids can get their stuff at wholesale prices instead of paying retail."

"That's excellent!" Prez excitedly cheered. "Tell ya what, we can get that stuff sorted and the credit cards handed out tomorrow."

"One other thing," Paulie said. "Jamie, Jacob and Beau left your Clan Short IDs here in the Command Center."

Prez said, "Cory Short didn't mention we got Clan Short IDs too."

Paulie said, "He wouldn't; Intel Division handles Clan Short IDs."

Seeing the light, Prez droned, "Therefore, the Terrible Triplets."

"For the Rimmers, John's the head of Intel, so he fills out the forms and gets everybody their IDs."

"Okay, I'll stop by with the Core Rimmers when we're done with the new kids."

"Kewl. Thanks, Prez. Paulie out."

Prez grinned at Richie in his green Clan Short poncho. Other than a little bit of red hair and a portion of his pale freckled face, the boy was lost under the hooded poncho. Prez grinned, "Can you walk around wearing that, Richie?"

"I think so," Richie said, and started walking around.

Uncontrollably, Prez giggled, "Let's get the next size smaller, son. I'd like to see your feet, so I know you won't trip over the poncho."

"Kay, Poppa," Richie said, and then tried getting out of the poncho himself, but was failing terribly until Prez lifted Richie's arms and helped him.

"I knew you were under there somewhere!" Prez laughed, and then began hanging the poncho.

"It was a size five," Richie blushed.

"Boys' sizes don't match ages though," Prez instructed. He then returned the poncho to the rack and pulled out a size four. "Try this one on." Prez held up the poncho and Richie stepped underneath it and got it on. Pleased that he could now see more of his son and his hands and feet were also visible, Prez nodded, "That one looks good, Richie. Bend, twist and turn to make sure you're comfortable."

Richie did as he was told and then began dancing and singing, "Well, shake it up baby now, twist and shout!" Prez swept the boy up and together they laughed their asses off.

John returned with Bruce, Dewi, Dillon, Geoff, Jonah, Reyes, Benjamin, Sung Henjes, and Bane Kahele. Since John not only knew Bruce, but could feel his emotions, John had Daileass transport his group of boys to the swimsuit department. Since there were no girls around, John stripped off his boardies. At first Bruce and the other boys giggled, but then they followed their young leader and got naked too. The next thing Keith knew, his brother was streaking down the center aisle of the store, followed by Jonah, Reyes, Bruce, Benjamin, Bane, Dillon, Geoff, and Dewi. 'Don't say a word!' John warned his fellow Core Rimmers. 'Getting suits is bad enough. Getting suits for a funeral is even worse. I'm making it fun so Bruce don't cry.'

John had started more fun than he could've imagined. From that point forward, few of the boys bothered using the dressing rooms to try on boardies or jeans; they simply stripped and tried on their new clothes where they stood.

Peter Lambert popped in beside Keith while he was reorganizing the shorts tables. "Got your message!" Peter cheered, and then wrapped his arms around Keith.

"Hi, Peter!" Keith giggled, still feeling a bit jumpy because the towhead Mikyvis appeared out of nowhere.

"You guys need more condos at your other bases?" Peter confirmed.

Keith nodded, "We're gonna be staffing up quickly. I don't think we'll need your special talents, but we like the general design."

"How about I get Derrick's dad involved?" Peter suggested, "That way we give more people jobs and the work still gets done quickly. We could work twenty-four hours a day, as long as the bases are unoccupied."

"That would be great!" Keith enthusiastically said. "We'd like to start at the O'ahu Incoming base. Then we can continue with Hawaii, Maui and Kauai."

Peter nodded then said, "There's another idea you guys might like. How would you like a small strip mall on base? We could maybe have a convenience store, a video game store, a skate and surf shop, a novelty store for posters and other stuff the kids might like. Maybe add a hair stylist too?"

"That sounds really good!" Keith cheered.

"Lemme check with Derrick's dad," Peter said, and then released Keith before disappearing. Peter popped into the CIC dining room a few yards behind Carl Seibert then hurried over to his side. After greeting each other, they began talking about the new condos and strip malls. Carl Seibert loved the plans; hundreds could be employed across the Islands building the two projects.

Troy and Stephen had returned to the CIC dining room, but the Core Rimmers were nowhere to be found. Troy asked Tory where they had gone, but Tory wasn't sure so he hollered at the ceiling, "Daileass, where's Kaleo and the rest of our leaders?"

"Just a moment, Tory," Daileass replied through the dining room speakers. Daileass then contacted Kaleo, giggling, "Oh, Fist Rimmer, your boyfriend is looking for you!"

Kaleo smiled, "I'll bet he is."

"The new boy, Stephen Marr, and Troy Faris are with him," Daileass playfully sang.

"Stephen probably needs some clothes," Kaleo replied. "Go ahead and transport them down here." Laughing his little butt off, John led the pack of hysterical streakers back down the center aisle. Their numbers were growing. Dee, Sammy and Gage had joined the group.

In the dining room, Daileass said, "Tory, Troy and Stephen, stand up and prepare for transport."

Troy looked up at the ceiling as he stood. He was about to ask Tory about the transport when he found himself, Tory and Stephen standing in what appeared to be a department store. Tory hurried over to Kaleo; Troy excitedly muttered, "Jesus, Mary and Joseph! How the hell did we get here?"

Stephen grinned, "Pretty wicked, huh? That's my second time. First time took me from Hawaii to Oahu and it was just as quick."

Still shaking off the experience, Troy asked, "Do you know where we are?"

Shaking his head, Stephen answered, "Nope."

Kaleo walked over with Tory and put his hand on Stephen's shoulder saying, "You're in the CIC basement."

The streakers raced up the center aisle again and John sent to Kaleo; 'Stephen's got ratty ol' clothes, bro. He needs all new stuff.' Troy's and Stephen's mouths hung open in surprise at the nudists as they passed.

Stephen looked up at Kaleo and shyly smiled, "I never said thank you."

Kaleo tilted his head uncertainly and asked, "Thanks for what?"

"Bill Devine was closest to me," Stephen reminded. Worshipful, Stephen blushed, "He could've grabbed me and broken me in two."

"Not in this lifetime," Kaleo assured. He then said, "Let's get you some clothes, Stephen."

"I got a suitcase full already," Stephen replied.

Not wanting to embarrass the boy, Kaleo smiled, "It's free, dude. Everybody gets a week's worth of the basics. Use what you've got as spares." Taking Tory by the hand, Kaleo led Stephen and Troy to the front of the store.

Troy wondered, "Are Prez and Keith down here?"

Kaleo nodded, "Around here somewhere."

Looking down at Stephen, Troy asked, "You all set now, bud?"

Stephen looked up and gratefully smiled, "Yup. Thanks for showing me around, Troy."

"No sweat," Troy assured, and then said, "Catch ya later, okay?"

Stephen nodded then, as Troy wandered off, glanced at Kaleo and Tory softly offering, "I hope they find my mom tonight."

Nodding and grinning impishly, Kaleo was a bit distracted because Tory had slid a hand up the back of his shirt and was running his fingers under the waistband of his boardies.

Appearing completely innocent of any controversial activity, Tory asked, "Your mom is nice?"

Looking through the stacks of packaged underwear, Stephen nodded, "We've just had it rough, ya know?"

Sliding a hand behind his back while Stephen was busy, Kaleo pulled his boyfriend's hand out of his shorts and giggled, "Stephen, this is Tory."

Briefly glancing up, Stephen smiled, "Hi," then tossed a few packages of briefs in his cart.

Tory then asked, "Would you excuse us for a minute?"

"Umm... sure," Stephen replied, and then checked with Kaleo, "I can just take what I think I need?"

Again unable to reply because Tory was now searching for an elusive ticklish area, Kaleo nodded.

Tory smiled, "We'll be right back."

Without looking up from the socks he was perusing, Stephen nodded, "'Kay."

Kaleo and Tory then quickly moved several displays away and behind a larger rack of shirts. Kaleo softly giggled, "What's with you?"

"You're with me!" Tory playfully replied, and then pushed himself against Kaleo and into the rack of shirts, grabbing a kiss in the process. Breaking away and sighing contentedly, Tory softly admitted, "I'm so friggin' horny."

"I can tell!" Kaleo chuckled, "You're getting me all hot and bothered too!"

"Let's sneak away for a few minutes?" Tory softly pleaded.

Brushing Tory's dirty blond mop back, Kaleo whispered, "You know I really love you?"

Tory nodded and smiled, "Let's show it," then began grinding himself against the front of Kaleo's boardies.

Kaleo giggled, "I can't just walk away from a new kid." Tory whimpered and Kaleo said, "Help me get Stephen caught up with the rest of the guys. Then we can disappear alone for a while."

Becoming more frustrated, Tory whined, "I want some now!"

"I know," Kaleo warmly smiled, "I do too. But I'm a leader now. Soon, okay?"

Tory softly grumbled, "Don't put me in second place."

"You're not second place."

"Prove it!" Tory demanded.

Kaleo looked around and saw Stephen moving his cart forward to the shoes. He tapped his comm-badge and said, "Keith?"

Keith replied, "Wassup, dude?" Tory ripped open the Velcro on Kaleo's boardies.

"I have a... umm... emergency," Kaleo nervously said as Tory knelt down and started lovingly playing with his dick. "Stephen Marr's... over... by... the shoes. Can you... help him... out... for a few minutes?"

"Sure dude," Keith replied, "I'm on my way. Is everything all right?" Tory swallowed Kaleo's dick and Kaleo's eyes rolled back in his head.

"Uh huh," Kaleo stammered, "it'll be fine... way fine."

Going back in the store toward the shoes, Keith briefly wondered why Kaleo was speaking oddly, then thought maybe he needed to use the bathroom. Finding Stephen not far away, he said, "Give me a holler when you can."

Nodding as if Keith was close enough to see it, Kaleo brushed Tory's hair back and gazed into his hazel eyes whispering, "Love you so much, baby."

Keith giggled, "'Scuse me?"

Realizing things were spiraling out of control, Kaleo abruptly said, "Sorry, Keith."

"Yeah!" Keith loudly laughed, "Over and in and out!"

Knowing he was caught, Kaleo giggled, "Out!" then tapped his comm-badge again. Smiling down at Tory, he sniggered, "You're gonna get me in so much trouble!"

Beginning to laugh, Tory had to spit out Kaleo's cock, but began stroking his lover's dark meat and snickered, "You're my Rimmer! All mine!"

Dropping to his knees on the floor, Kaleo helplessly cackled, "And you're mine!"

Approaching Stephen and still chuckling like a mad man, Keith could see the boy was having a rough time measuring his feet. "Lemme give you some help there, dude," Keith smiled.

"Thanks," Stephen meekly offered.

While helping Stephen, Keith noticed his socks were threadbare and softly asked, "Did you get yourself a week's worth of undies and socks?"

Stephen nodded, "Yup, Kaleo said I should even though I got a suitcase with some clothes."

"Kewl," Keith said, and checked the scale. "Size five and a half," Keith rattled off, and then stood. "Let's get you a pair of sandals and a pair of sneakers, bro." Blushing because Keith had called him "bro", Stephen stood and followed the older boy to the racks. Keith wondered, "Are there any sports you like?"

Stephen shrugged, "I'm not really any good at basketball; too short. I like tryin' though."

Concentrating on the basketball sneakers, Keith asked, "Did Doc Andrews see you?"

"Yup."

"What did he say?"

"I'm malnourished," Stephen softly answered. "I gotta drink special shakes three times a day."

Pulling a pair of Converse sneakers off the shelf and nodding, Keith softly said, "It's gonna be okay now. Go ahead and try these on." Stephen nodded and returned to the chair. Beginning to lace a sneaker, Stephen started leaking tears again. He then fumbled and dropped the sneaker. Keith reassuringly said, "Hey, it really is gonna be okay. We'll get your mom and you all fixed up, you'll see."

Wiping his eyes, Stephen nodded and shuddered, "She ain't got a phone. She ain't even got a place to live no more."

Keith put the sneaker he was lacing down then sat beside the boy and asked, "Did you tell anyone else about that?"

Looking down at the floor, Stephen nodded and sobbed, "A lady in the dining room. She said she'd find her."

"Which lady?" Keith wondered.

Drawing in an unsteady breath, Stephen replied, "Mrs. Huzzer."

Keith grinned, "Mrs. Hundser is my mom."

"Really?" Stephen squeaked.

"Really," Keith smiled. "You're set, dude. It might take a day or two to find her, but we will. Then we'll offer her a job and you'll be living here on base with her and with us." Finally, Stephen looked up at Keith with a small spark of hope in his eyes. Keith's heart melted and he leaned closer to whisper, "Com'ere," then patted his lap. Stephen looked uncertain at first, then got up and sat in Keith's lap. Holding the boy close, Keith whispered, "Trust us. Your mom did the smartest thing ever and she doesn't even know it yet. But you and I do."

Stephen trembled uncontrollably and admitted, "I'm so scared."

"Scared of what?"

"New place, new people; I don't even know where my mom is."

Keith sighed, "She dropped you off in a car, right?" Stephen nodded so Keith explained, "Then she has a driver's license and her car is registered. We have our very own Honolulu policeman here that will help us find your mom. As for being in a new place with new people, you'll find out real fast this is the best place with the best people. All the kids you've seen around here had it worse than you. Some were orphans with no mother or father. Some had really bad foster parents that beat them or sexually abused them."

Stephen blushed, "Not sure what that means."

"It means grownups played with their dicks and worse. If it was a girl, they did sex stuff with them too. It didn't matter how old they were either."

Stephen grimaced and groaned, "No!"

Keith nodded, "That's why Clan Short is here. Your mom prob'ly heard the news over the weekend. When she learned about the Clan being here, she knew her boy would be safe with us. What she didn't know was that we can help families too. She's gonna find out real soon though."

Relieved, Stephen sighed then rested his head on Keith's shoulder. Keith pulled the boy in close and hugged him. Stephen softly wondered, "Why's ev'rybody so nice if they've been hurt so bad? Was Troy hurt too?"

"Troy wasn't hurt, but his mom had a rough time finding work, just like your mom," Keith answered. "That's why Prez sent you off with Troy; to show you what it could be like for you and your mom. As for the rest of the boys and girls here, they want to be nice people. Everyone wants to be nice at first, it's just bad stuff that makes some people mean. All you've gotta do is give us a chance. Just like Troy, these kids want to be your friend."

"In school, lots o' kids made fun of me."

Keith sighed, "Some kids think they're better than everybody else. Some don't even know they're that way or how much it hurts other kids. Others do it on purpose, to make themselves feel better than they really are. The kids here though, they know how bad things can get. They don't want to make anyone feel bad; all they want is another friend. You wanna know what I think?"

"What?"

"I think you're gonna have lots of friends here. And in a few days, once we find your mom, I think they're gonna look up to you."

Blushing, Stephen grinned, "Ya think?"

Keith nodded, "You're already a sensitive, caring boy. All you gotta do is stay just the way you are."

After a few quiet moments, Stephen said, "Keith?" Keith hummed, then Stephen whispered, "The stuff in my suitcase is really old and don't even fit me good."

"It don't matter. We're gonna get you fixed up with lots of brand new clothes and a new suitcase too."

Stephen's head popped off Keith's shoulder. For the first time since arriving, Stephen smiled.

Keith asked, "You're feeling better?" Stephen rapidly nodded then Keith said, "Let's get you some nice clothes." Stephen slid off of Keith's lap then Keith stood and tapped his comm-badge. "John?" Stephen sat down and returned to lacing his sneakers.

"Hey bro!" John replied, then asked, "How's Stephen?" Hearing his name, Stephen paused and looked up.

Keith's eyes rolled and he slouched. "Why do you even bother asking?"

John giggled, "We're just finishing up with the suits for Wednesday. I'll be there in a few minutes."

"Kewl, bro."

"Turn around, Keith," John said.

Keith did as his brother asked and saw Kaleo with Tory holding hands and walking towards him.

Over the comm-badge, John sang, "Kaleo and Tory sittin' in a tree..." then cracked up.

Kaleo and Tory could only blush, grin and hold each other close.

"God, bro!" Keith huffed impatiently. "You're worse than Daileass!"

John howled. Over the loudspeakers, Daileass giggled, "Shirt Rack Rimmers! I can't claim comedic value this time though!"

Mike grumbled, "That honor was saved for me!"

Privately to Mike, Daileass giggled, "That was a shower with the Scoobies and you have to admit, it was funny."

"I guess," Mike grinned, "if it was anybody else, it prob'ly would've been."

Daileass laughed, "The first time Spike shook muddy water all over you, the look on your face was priceless!"

Keith's comm-badge chirped. Keith tapped it and said, "Keith here."

"Okay," Prez suspiciously said, "John's laughing his ass off in a dressing room and Daileass is cracking Rimmer jokes. What did I miss?"

The dark Hawaiian skin on Kaleo's face turned even redder. Keith smiled and briefly answered, "New lovers."

"Oh," Prez droned, and then chuckled, "As long as they didn't leave a mess."

Grinning evilly, Tory loudly giggled, "Cleaned up every drop, Prez!" From opposite ends of the store, Prez, Troy, Keith, Kaleo and Tory cracked up laughing.

Keith knocked knuckles with Kaleo and Tory then told Prez, "We're just getting Stephen started here, baby. It's gonna take us a while more."

"No problem," Prez replied. "Our boys have new ponchos. John, Bruce and that group have almost finished up with the suits. Our new Rimmers are checking out and loading up their suitcases."

Dee asked, "Where should we put our ponchos, Poppa?"

"I'll have Daileass transport them to Grandma and Grandpa's house," Prez replied. He then suggested, "Why don't you guys go help Daddy with Stephen?" Four positive replies from the boys burst forth, then Prez yelled, "John! Put some clothes on!"

John giggled, "I will, but I left my board shorts by the Speedos!"

"Exhibitionist!" Prez shouted. Laughing, John raced down the aisle.

"When ya got it, flaunt it!" John loudly laughed so that he was heard both over the comm-badge and in the store, heading toward Keith. 'Oh, by the way,' John sent to Keith and Prez, 'Mom's already talked to Mike's dad. There's an APB out for Stephen's mother. The Terrible Trio are scanning Stephen too. We'll find her.'

Stephen stood and started walking around in his new sneakers. Keith went over to him and asked, "How do they feel, dude?"

Making a crooked face, Stephen shrugged, "Weird; like they're... stiff."

Keith asked, "Do they feel tight around your toes or by the heel?"

Shaking his head, Stephen said, "No, they just don't bend right."

"Well, it's nice enough out for sandals tonight anyway," Keith assured. He then picked up a similar pair of sneakers and instructed, "Later tonight, bend and twist them in your hands like this. The next time you wear them, they'll feel better and, after a few hours on your feet, they'll be broke in just right."

Stephen sat down again to take his new sneakers off and shyly smiled, "Thanks Keith, for everything."

Keith smiled, winked and nodded then found a pair of sandals in a nearby rack. Kaleo and Tory had followed Keith. Keith dropped a pair of sandals in Stephen's cart then Stephen put his new Converse sneakers in the cart. Once he was dressed again, John hurried over to the shoe department carrying his own Speedos and a pair of Speedos for Stephen. John said, "Here Stephen, try these on."

Stephen smiled at John and, seeing the tiny swimsuit, he blushed, "Where?"

"Right here," John grinned. Rather than freak out the new boy, John moved closer and whispered in the smaller boy's ear. "It's kewl, dude. We was all running around the store naked."

Helplessly, Stephen giggled then pulled John closer and whispered, "I can't."

Tilting his head curiously, John softly said, "There's no girls here. Why not? Are the older dudes..." But then John heard Stephen's thoughts and pulled back to look into Stephen's hazel eyes. His heart beating faster, John then anxiously looked around. Kaleo, Keith and Tory were near the swimsuits and board shorts. Since they weren't watching, John reached for Stephen's hand, pulled him aside and nervously whispered, "I umm... like your eyes. I think you're way cute too."

Abruptly pulling his hand back, Stephen said, "It's wrong."

Shaking his head, John softly admitted, "I'm only ten, but I know it's not wrong to like another boy. I just think we could be friends... really good friends... maybe." John wanted to share his feelings more, but didn't know what to say or how to say it. In his frustration and without even trying to, John pushed his feelings to Stephen. For a long few moments the two boys locked eyes. John then tentatively reached for Stephen's hand and Stephen reached for John's hand.

'Do you feel me? Can you hear me?'

Stephen nodded.

'It's okay. I know you're scared. I am too. Let's just be friends, please?'

Again, Stephen nodded and grinned. He thought it would be nice to hug John, if only for a second or two.

'Yeah, I'd like you to. You can, if you want.'

John clearly heard Stephen's worries in a long series of rambling short phrases.

'I don't know what I want either. I know what I feel now though' and it's okay. You can hear me in your mind and feel my feelings cos I'm empathic and learning telepathy. If it scares you too much, I'll stop.'

Shaking his head, Stephen moved closer to John. They hugged and contentedly sighed.

'Oh man, this feels real nice! I don't wanna ever let go, but Keith's wondering what's wrong. If we don't catch up soon...'

Keith called, "John? Stephen?"

'Rats!'

Stephen giggled hysterically and then stepped back, smiling at John. He then loudly said, "Just a minute, I'm trying on my new Speedos." Stephen then started to take his shorts and underwear off.

"Oh, okay," Keith replied.

While Stephen changed, John only briefly glanced at Stephen's dick.

'You got no reason to be ashamed. Turn around.'

Blushing harder than he ever had, Stephen slowly turned around in a pair a Clan Short Speedos.

'Nice!' John then smiled, "Put your shorts back on, dude."

Stephen then quickly changed back into his briefs and shorts, but never lost eye contact with John. The whole time, John read Stephen's concerns and telepathically pushed answers back to him. Holding on to Stephen's Speedos, the two boys hurried over to the board shorts displays. Tossing both his own and Stephen's Speedos into the cart, John said, "Sorry." John then introduced Dee, Gage, Sammy and Richie to Stephen, adding that they were Keith's and Prez's sons and his nephews. He then went to the boardies and found a pair that was brown and sand tan in Stephen's size. John handed them to Stephen saying, "Try these on," then looked up at Keith and said, "Get boy's medium size T-shirts for Stephen please, bro? Stick to browns, tans, light blue and especially greens, but no reds."

Keith grinned, "Don't ya think Stephen can choose his own clothes?"

Dropping his shorts and standing in white briefs, Stephen smiled, "It's okay. That's exactly what I would've got anyway."

John smirked at his older brother and tapped his head. Keith rolled his eyes, shook his head and wandered off to the shirts. Giggling at the two brothers, Kaleo and Tory followed Keith. Once they walked off, John dug through the stacks of board shorts and kept handing Stephen new ones to try on. After only a few minutes, Stephen had tried on five pair of really nice board shorts that all the boys thought looked good on him. By the time they caught up with Keith, Kaleo and Tory, five T-Shirts were picked out.

Stephen only tried on one and browsed the others. "These are really nice," Stephen gushed.

John smiled at Stephen and sent, 'I think so too, but I think you look good all the time.'

Stephen turned bright red and silently wondered why John thought so much of him.

While they walked to the jeans department, John sent, 'Because I can feel my brothers. I knew that Keith liked you a lot already. What he said about you being sensitive is so true and I think that's awesome. I couldn't wait to meet you. And then...' John turned and glanced at Stephen and sent, 'Your eyes! I could lose myself in your eyes!' John and Stephen both began giggling and blushing.

Wondering what John and Stephen were giggling about, Gage and Sammy grinned and glanced curiously at each other. It was Richie that made the connection first though and started laughing.

Dee suspiciously wondered, "Why's ev'ryone laughin' and gigglin'? Did I miss somethin'?"

Richie laughed even louder. John did a quick scan of his little nephew then warned, "Don't you say it, Richie!"

"What?" Richie squealed, "Jus' cos you remin' me of Daddy and Poppa!" The next thing Richie knew, he was four feet off the floor and being flipped upside down.

"UNCA JO-HO-HON!" Richie hysterically laughed. Gage, Sammy and Dee cracked up at their brother.

"John!" Keith hollered.

"What?" John evilly grinned, "He was teasing me!"

Watching his son spin ass over tea kettle, Keith complained, "Well you're not really teaching him not to tease you. He seems to be enjoying it, if ya ask me."

"Oh?" John wickedly said, then sent Richie higher and spinning in a horizontal circle, as if there was a pole through his belly button.

Richie laughed "WOO-HOOOOO!"

"If he pukes, you're cleaning it up," Keith warned.

John hummed and slowed Richie's spin, realizing his nephew could vomit, then lowered him down to the floor, laying flat on his belly.

Dizzily, Richie got up and staggered around, bouncing off tables and clothing display racks, but helplessly giggling.

Keith picked him up before he hurt himself. "Close your eyes," Keith softly instructed.

Richie giggled, "Everythin's still spinnin', Daddy!"

"I've got ya, Richie," Keith softly assured.

John noticed that Stephen was now watching him carefully. Stephen croaked, "You did that?"

'Please don't be scared,' John desperately pleaded.

"How can I not be scared?" Stephen asked, and then searched the racks of shirts.

John stood beside him and begged, "Please?"

Stephen sighed then softly said, "What am I supposed to think? In the last fifteen minutes I've felt your feelings; I heard your voice in my head. I know you heard my thoughts by what you said... or sent. Now I learn you can pick people up and spin 'em around too? Tell me how to react to this?"

John lowered his head and felt tears welling up in his eyes. "I'm sorry. I guess... maybe... I was only trying to help." John then looked at Stephen and saw he wasn't looking back, but only glancing through shirts. John sighed, "I'm really sorry," then wandered away into the center aisle, severely chastising himself. Not knowing where to go or what to do, John went back to the place where he first got to know

Stephen, in the shoe department. He sat in the chair Stephen had been sitting in, wondering what he could've done differently.

By this time, Richie had told Keith why John was spinning him around. In the shirts department, Stephen had picked out two nice shirts. Keith went over to Stephen to find the boy had the same lost and hopeless expression he had before they had talked.

Still carrying Richie, Keith softly asked Stephen, "What's the matter?"

Shrugging, Stephen moved on to the jeans, but didn't reply. Keith asked Gage, Sammy and Dee to find their Uncle John then followed Stephen. Before Keith could say another word to Stephen, Prez and the other boys joined with Keith, Stephen, Kaleo and Tory. "Where's John?" Bruce asked.

Stephen pointed in the direction he had last seen John walking, but didn't say a word. "Thanks," Bruce smiled, and then hurried off.

Richie whispered to Keith, "Lemme tell Poppa what's goin' on."

Keith nodded and handed Richie off to Prez. Immediately, Richie began whispering to Prez. Now understanding, Prez softly told Richie, "If it's meant to be, it'll be okay." With help, Stephen gathered jeans, a canvas belt, two baseball hats, toiletries, a Clan Short windbreaker, a poncho and a suitcase.

At the other end of the store, in the shoe department, John talked with his nephews and Bruce about what had happened. "I don't know why I did it!" John whined. "Richie was just bein' a kid. Stephen didn't seem to mind me talking telepathically. He really seemed to like it. When I played with Richie, I thought he'd like that too. I didn't even feel him getting scared, but should've. I dunno..." Leaning back in the chair, thoroughly confused, John closed his eyes and huffed.

Dee, Gage, Sammy and even Bruce grinned. "I know why you did it," Bruce smirked.

Without opening his eyes, John wondered, "Why?"

"Cos you like him," Bruce helplessly giggled.

"Course I do; I even told him so."

Bruce asked, "Did you tell him you love him?"

"No."

"You do though, don't you?" Bruce grinned.

"So he got scared," Gage offered. "You bein' away ain't making him less scared."

Sammy nodded and reminded, "You guys just met. He dealt with a lot and liked it."

Dee agreed, "Look at this place. We got gorillas, G-Cats, chimps and a hundred other kids. We've had days with 'em and I still get weirded out watchin' gorillas patrolling the base."

"You did what any of us woulda done if we really liked someone," Gage smiled.

Sammy giggled, "You were showin' off!" Bruce, Dee and Gage all began giggling and laughing.

Opening his eyes, John demanded, "I don't like him like that!"

The other boys glanced at one another then sang, "Yes you do!"

"You wouldn't be so upset if ya didn't," Bruce said.

"Admit it," Gage cackled, "a part of you wants to be with him."

"Sitting here ain't doin squat!" Dee urged. "If you like him, ya gotta be with him."

Bruce nodded, "If he's scared, make him less scared. Show him the way you are, the way you were when you found me."

"Keith and Drew will tease the piss outta me," John pouted.

"They better not!" Gage giggled. "We've had pouncing lessons from Timmy and Ricky!"

Bruce suggested, "If they tease you guys, show 'em your powers all by yourself. Power up and toss 'em in the pool!"

"Wasn't that you flying Mrs. Seibert around the pool?" Sammy reminded.

Dee giggled, "You can get Daileass to help too; without even saying a word aloud."

A little uncertainly, John wondered, "Yeah?"

In John's ear, Daileass confirmed, "In a heartbeat, John. The North Atlantic is awfully chilly this time of year."

John couldn't help snickering evilly. "Yeah!" With a new found determination, John got up and said, "Thanks, guys. I owe you." John then led the pack running down the center aisle of the store. In the distance, by the checkout counters, everyone was gathered around Stephen. Keith, Prez and Kaleo were helping him get his clothes folded into the suitcase. There was still a lot more to do though. Stopping short of the checkout counter, John said, "You guys are taking way too long." Three pair of jeans, two button down sport shirts, five T-shirts, a poncho and a jacket all flew into the air at once and began folding themselves. Then John neatly laid each item in the suitcase, closed it and zipped it up. While all that was happening, John sent Stephen a warm hug with one short message; 'I'd do anything for you, anytime; please just give me another chance?' Stephen only nodded his head once, but that was plenty for John. With the suitcase closed and the task almost complete, John silently mouthed, "Daileass, me and Stephen need to talk alone. Transport us to the trees near the outside rec area, please?"

"Way to take charge, John!" Daileass giggled, "You got it, Soul Rimmer."

When John and Stephen vanished, Bruce, Dee, Gage and Sammy cracked up. "That's my big bro," Bruce cheered.

"And our uncle," Dee giggled.

Prez frowned and whined, "Someone tell me what the hell is going on?" Bruce, Dee, Gage and Sammy filled everybody in. Although no one really knew the details, John definitely had a crush on Stephen. It was too cute for the older Rimmers to comprehend.

Prez and the remaining Core Rimmers got the kids they had picked up at Hawaii settled into their dorm rooms then went to the Command Center. When they walked into the room, Paulie told Prez, "Colonel Williams called while you were busy, Prez. He's got more kids for us, all between four and eight years old."

"How many?" Prez wondered.

Paulie answered, "Eleven. Seven boys and four girls."

Drew suggested, "Let's bring some of our little guys with us again, Prez."

Keith agreed, "Bruce and our kids will make them feel safer."

"Not to mention, I like having them around," Corey admitted.

"We all do," Keith confirmed and Drew rapidly nodded.

"Back to the store we go," Prez grinned. He then told Paulie, "Contact Donnie to be ready to have the kids transported to the store, where we'll be waiting." Keith led the seven Rimmers to the CIC dining room to gather their sons, Bruce, Carmella, Dewi and Kokaku. Once Drew and Keith explained there were seven new little boys and four girls that were going to be scared, all their sons readily agreed. Since Prez didn't know how many were what age, Jennifer Hundser, Anna Seibert, Lanna Seaver and Laura Gibbons all insisted that they join the welcoming committee. Finally, Prez called Daileass. "Here we go again, dude, back to the store; all us kids and our mothers."

* * * * *

John and Stephen appeared beyond the volleyball courts, near the south end of the outdoor recreation area. "You're scared?" John worried.

Stephen nodded, "It's only my third time moving around that way. Where are we?"

"Still on base," John answered, and then turned himself and Stephen around. He pointed and said, "That's the indoor rec center. On the other side of that is our pool and diving well; there's the Seiberts' house. Ya can't see it from here, but there's four houses over there. That big dome is our CIC and auditorium."

A deep voice back in the trees asked, "Is that my Johnny-boy?"

John recognized the sound of his gorilla's voice, turned and said, "Yep. How ya doin', Lucky?" Seeing the massive gorilla, Stephen gasped and hid behind John. "It's okay," John quickly said, "Lucky's my personal security gorilla. Saturday, when I asked him his name, he rattled off a bunch of numbers. The first and last numbers were seven so I named him Lucky."

"Seven-nine-o-three-two-seven," Lucky chanted. He then grinned, "You really shouldn't be out alone at night, Johnny-boy."

"I'm not alone with you around," John playfully reminded. He then pulled Stephen's hand to introduce him to Lucky, but Stephen was frozen solid. Moving beside Stephen, John said, "Lucky, this is Stephen; he's a new kid on base."

"Nice to meet you, Stephen," Lucky pleasantly grinned. He then locked eyes with John and said, "I'll let you talk with the newbie, but I'll be close by."

"Kewl, thanks Lucky," John smiled, and watched his gorilla return to the trees. Realizing that Stephen was stunned silent still, John inquired, "It's an awful lot, huh?" Stephen rapidly nodded. John sighed and briefly wondered how he could make Stephen more comfortable. Hitting an idea, he said, "Ya know what? This place is missing some really important stuff. Hey Daileass, with all these kids, we got no swings, jungle gyms, merry-go-rounds or slides. How about it?"

"You smoothie!" Daileass giggled. "Coming right up." In the grassy area between the edge of the outdoor recreation center and the tree line appeared two sets of six swings, two jungle gyms, two merry-go-rounds and four slides.

"Awesome!" John cheered. Then he checked with Stephen; "Better now?"

Shrugging, Stephen stammered, "Umm... where? How?"

"It's a long story," John smiled. "I could tell you, but it would be quicker if I showed you instead." Still partially dumbstruck, Stephen nodded. John then took Stephen by the hand and telepathically showed him everything that had happened since meeting Joel Friday afternoon. In Stephen's mind, everything flashed by like a movie being played at triple speed. John finished his little show in the CIC basement store, when he and Stephen hugged each other. "That's how it happened," John said. "We went from normal kids to Clan Short leaders, just like that. It's only been three days. What really matters is you."

Stephen blushed crimson and softly wondered, "Why? Why me?"

John shrugged, "Every kid here matters." He then paused and softly admitted, "You matter to me."

With an obvious quiver in his voice, Stephen nervously said, "I don't know who you think I am. I mean, my mom dropped me off because she couldn't afford rent in a one-bedroom shit-hole. I hadn't sat down to eat before a doctor here told me I was malnourished. I've got nothing, John."

"None of that stuff matters to me," John easily said. "Remember I showed you Brandon and Vicky. They're nice people and I like them, but they miss the mark somehow. But you; you made my heart beat really fast. You got scared of me and it hurt so much, like nothing else mattered if you didn't like me anymore. I can't explain it right. Part of me wants to do something... to make you like me, but I know that'll only scare you more. I don't wanna trick you into liking me because... well... I don't wanna be N-Gen right now with you. If you only liked me because I'm N-Gen, it wouldn't be enough, it wouldn't be right." Not knowing what else to say, John went over and sat on a swing then looked helplessly at Stephen.

Stephen walked over and sat on the next swing saying, "I can't help being scared. Talking with Keith helped some, but you helped even more. When I saw Richie doin' somersaults and spinning in mid-air, I got scared again. Then I got angry at myself for being scared. Do you know why?" John shook his head and Stephen answered, "Because it hurt you. I didn't mean to, ya know. There's so many things that scare me here; new places, new people, transporting from place to place, talking gorillas, playgrounds that just appear out of nothing."

"It is weird," John giggled.

"John?"

"Yeah?"

"I'm curious. What else can you do?"

Shrugging, John smirked, "I'm not even really sure yet. But I can do this." The swing Stephen was sitting on pulled back and way up then John let it go. Holding on to the steel chains of his swing, Stephen cackled hysterically as the swing moved forward and back then John pushed it again. John made the other ten swings start moving too. Smiling widely because Stephen was obviously enjoying it, John watched Stephen swinging. Then John thought of another small demonstration. The sand in the volleyball court before them started springing up in thin and high towers then dropping back down again. Within a few seconds, John had a synchronized sand fountain shooting before them too. Stephen howled laughing. John then envisioned synchronized fountains of sand in all the volleyball courts. Soon, sand fountains from all the volleyball courts were popping and falling.

"Okay!" Stephen hysterically cried out.

Fearing that Stephen might get scared again, John stopped his sand fountains then let the swings stop on their own. Stephen let his feet drag on the ground to slow his swing. In a short while, he was sitting still on his swing beside John, still giggling.

"How about a tour?" John suggested.

"An N-Gen tour?" Stephen grinned.

Shaking his head, John said, "A walk around the base. Once you see everything, you won't have to be afraid of where you are anymore." Enthusiastically, Stephen nodded.

The two boys got off their swings then walked across the driveway. Following the concrete walkway, John led Stephen around the indoor rec complex. Through the transparent aluminum walls, they could see almost everything in there except the locker rooms. John pointed out the soccer field and basketball courts. They then walked around the pool, pool house and diving well. The main housing area was next and John told Stephen which families were in each home. They went over by the dorms next. John told Stephen a little about the UNIT and base security while they passed. Then they walked by the townhomes. John told Stephen that as soon as things settled down, Keith, Prez, Mike and Derrick would be moving there with their kids. On their way to the CIC, they passed the condos, where Troy had already taken Stephen, and walked back around the dorms. John pointed at the one that some of the older kids were already using.

"Is that where I'll be sleeping tonight?" Stephen asked.

"If ya want," John softly replied. "We've been nesting in the basement of my house the last few nights."

Stephen curiously repeated, "Nesting?"

John nodded, "Lots of the kids were just as scared as you when we got here. Saturday night, there were over a hundred kids in our basement. About fifteen were from the Northeast U.S. Clan division, the rest were our kids. It was pretty kewl. We have lots of TV's and game stations and one really big TV mounted on a wall. One half of the basement is like a rec room with our old living room furniture; the other half is where we all sleep. I don't know how many will be nesting tonight though. I'm figuring about thirty or forty, not including the seven of us Core Rimmers."

"Are you rich?" Stephen wondered.

John sniggered, "Nope, Clan Short is. We get what we need from them. Everything I've already showed you and the rest I haven't yet was all put here Saturday. It was just a big empty field before that."

Stephen incredulously repeated, "Everything here was built in one day?"

John nodded, "With Starfleet's help. Here's the CIC, where we arrived and had dinner."

"John?"

"Yeah?"

"Where am I sleeping?"

"Wherever ya want; in the dorm or in the nest." John then pointed to his left and said, "Here's our auditorium. My bros have a band. They had a concert Saturday night and a jam session in there earlier today."

As they walked past and out to the driveway, Stephen asked, "You're sleeping in the nest then?"

"Yep."

"Can I sleep with you there?"

John's heart skipped three beats then hustled to catch up. He turned and smiled at Stephen then nodded, unable to answer with words. They walked towards the housing area security checkpoint and Stephen reached for John's hand. Shocked and thrilled to death, John struggled to point to his right and choke out, "Parking garage."

"I can see that," Stephen grinned.

Turning to the left, John giggled, "Federation Youth Services offices over there." Pointing forward and to his right, John said, "Shuttle pad."

"Is there anything else?" Stephen asked.

"Nope, that's all."

"Can I ask a favor?"

"Course!"

"I told you my mom and me had to move out of our apartment?"

John hummed affirmatively. "I ain't had a shower since then."

"Oh! No problem. I'll show you the inside of the dorm then."

After a few silent steps heading back around the CIC on the way toward the dorms, Stephen chirped, "John?"

"Yeah?"

"I really like you a lot."

John blushed and giggled, "I like you too."

Stephen grinned, "I know already, remember?"

"Oh yeah! Sorry about that. I just didn't know what to say."

"If I tell you something, promise you won't laugh?"

"Okay, I promise."

"You make me feel really special. Better than I've ever felt before with anyone else."

"I'm glad," John smiled. 'It's so weird. I never wanted to sleep with anybody before. Drew and me used to have twin-size bunk beds. For the first time, I'm looking forward to sleeping beside someone.'

"You're not doing anything to me, you know, with your mind?"

"No; what happened in the store, sending you my feelings, was an accident, honest. I hope it never happens again."

Stephen nodded then thought for a few moments before saying, "I hope it does happen again."

Coming to an abrupt halt, John stopped and looked at Stephen carefully. The boy before him was a year older, but appeared a year or two younger; about Bruce's height, but much thinner than Bruce. Stephen smiled and nodded. John sent, 'You're so great, it's making me crazy inside! Nobody has ever made me not know what to say or do before. Part of me wants to show you everything everywhere, just so we can be alone longer. Another part of me wants to cry. Another part just wants to hold you.'

"I know," Stephen nervously whispered. "It's the same for me."

Following his instincts, John stepped forward and wrapped his arms around Stephen. Both boys sighed and closed their eyes. After about a minute, John softly wondered, "Is this love?"

"I hope so," Stephen whispered. "I'm not thinking of my mom or anything else; only you."

"Can I kiss you please?"

"Yes."

Their eyes opened. Two faces slid by one another and their lips met for the first time. They both gasped and their mouths opened then their eyes closed.

Something happened then that none of the UNIT kids or gorillas had ever seen before. John and Stephen began slowly levitating; two feet then higher and higher, until they were up about thirty feet off the ground. They then rotated until they were horizontal and began slowly swaying; as if they were lying side by side in an invisible hammock.

Outside the housing security checkpoint, Chaz saw them and softly chortled, "Oh shit!"

One of the gorillas asked, "What should we do?"

"I have no fucking idea!" Chaz laughed. "If we say something and break John's concentration, they might fall."

"Daileass, are you seeing this?" the gorilla asked.

"I was," Daileass giggled, "the camera can't tilt up that high!"

Chaz ordered, "Get a trampoline underneath them, just in case." A second later, a huge gymnastics trampoline appeared on the ground beneath John and Stephen. John and Stephen began slowly drifting down moments later, like two feathers in the light Hawaiian breeze. As they made their way down, UNIT kids, G-Cats and gorillas hurried over to the trampoline and surrounded it. They landed and broke their first kiss, contentedly sighing and euphoric.

Then John heard soft giggling and opened his eyes. The kids, G-Cats and gorillas began clapping and cheering. "Oh no," John groaned. "Daileass, get us outta here!"

"Where to?" Daileass giggled.

Stephen's eyes opened and he looked around then closed his eyes and hid his face.

"Someplace more private!" John begged, "I don't care where!"

"No one's in your bedroom at home," Daileass suggested.

"Works for me!" John replied.

The next thing the boys knew, they were laying in the same position on a bed in a dark room with only the outside lights shining in through the windows. Relieved, John grinned, "Any chance of keeping 'us' a secret just ended in applause."

"Why would you want to keep it a secret?" Stephen seriously asked.

"I wouldn't," John quickly replied. "But we haven't found your mom yet and I thought maybe you would."

"Not because of her; because of kids at school."

"Oh," John droned. "So other kids at school teased you?"

Stephen nodded, "They bullied me, John. That's why I pulled my hand away at first."

Feeling his temper rise, John huffed explosively then asked, "You know better now?"

Stephen nodded and brightly smiled, "After a kiss like that, I know way better."

Giggling like a hyena, John rolled back and pulled Stephen on top of him. The computer in the room began beeping and the screen flashed, 'Incoming Message'. "What the heck?" John grumbled. "Daileass, I ain't the director of this division. Why's my computer beeping?"

Over the bedroom communications system, Daileass giggled, "You need to see this message, John."

"Now?" John whined.

"As soon as possible," Daileass replied, and then giggled, "I think you and Stephen will really like it. It does raise a question or two though."

"All right," John groaned, and then let go of Stephen. After grabbing a quick kiss and making John giggle again, Stephen rolled off to the side of John. Getting up, John went to the computer. In a few clicks, he had opened the message Daileass sent and the attached QuickTime video. Watching himself and Stephen kiss then begin to rise in the air, John's eyes opened wide. "Holy crap!" John shouted. "You gotta see this, Stephen!"

Stephen got up and leaned over John's shoulder. He giggled and kissed John's cheek then confessed, "I thought I was imagining it."

"But no N-Gen's ever done that before!" John told him. "Sure we can lift other things and people, but Jace never told me I could do that!"

Stephen asked, "So this is new; for you and everyone else?"

John replied, "As far as I know." John then warned, "Step back, baby."

Stephen moved back from the chair and tearfully repeated, "Baby?"

Blushing and giggling, John stood and nodded, "I think I love you and, judging by what we just did, somethin' special is going on. Now I just gotta figure out what and how." John took a deep breath and closed his eyes. Imagining himself kissing Stephen, John tried to levitate off the floor. After about thirty-seconds, John's eyes opened and he whined, "It ain't working!" He then said, "Kiss me, Stephen."

Stephen grinned, "Call me 'baby' again."

John giggled, "Kiss me, baby."

Stephen happily obliged. Their eyes closed and they began tickling one another's tongues. Almost immediately, John and Stephen rose up off the floor. A few seconds later, John's head bumped the ceiling. Helplessly giggling, John and Stephen broke their kiss and dropped to the floor with a loud thud.

"Okay!" John snickered, "One plus one equals two. Kiss me again."

Stephen smirked, "You just want more kisses!"

"Yep!" John laughed. "And to see if we can slowly lower down again, like we did outside."

"So we break the kiss more slowly this time?" Stephen queried. John rapidly nodded. Stephen teased, "Just say the magic word."

"Please?"

"Close!" Stephen giggled, "Four letter word beginning with 'B'."

John pleaded, "Please, baby?"

Stephen then laid a whopper on John. Humming deliriously, the two boys rose again. This time John expected the bump on the head. The kiss broke more slowly this time though and they gently lowered to the floor.

"One more test," John suggested. He took a step back, but held Stephen's hands and closed his eyes. This time they only rose an inch or two off the floor. "This is kewl!" John declared then pulled Stephen close for a hug. The same thing happened until John closed his eyes and imagined kissing Stephen. They rose a few inches higher then stopped. Humming curiously, John pushed Stephen away, but held his hands. They immediately lowered back to an inch off the floor. John released only one hand from Stephen and they dropped to the floor.

"It's you," John laughed, "You and me together make it happen! How awesome is that?"

There was a knock at the door and Jennifer Hundser opened it then turned on the lights. Jennifer smiled and wondered, "When did you get home?"

"A few minutes ago mom," John answered. He then confirmed, "Mom, you know Stephen?"

Jennifer nodded, "We met a few hours ago, yes."

Stephen waved, "Hi Mrs. Hundser."

John smiled at Stephen briefly then turned back to his mother and asked, "Where's dad?"

"In the kitchen," Jennifer answered.

"Have I got some stuff to show you!" John excitedly laughed. "Let's go downstairs."

Closing her eyes for a few moments as the two boys passed, Jennifer muttered, "Every time I hear that lately, I get nervous." Turning around, she followed the boys downstairs and into the kitchen.

Entering the room and finding his dad at the table, John smiled, "Hey Dad! Have you met Stephen?"

Jim Hundser nodded, "We met earlier. We're still looking for your mother, Stephen."

Stephen nodded and softly said, "Thank you, Mr. Hundser. I'm sorry I mispronounced your name earlier."

Jim chuckled, "All our boys mangled our surname. I think John said Huzzer until he was three or four."

John and Stephen giggled while Jennifer sat at the table.

"Okay," John grinned, "I got good news and then even better news. First, me and Stephen learned we really like each other a lot." Wearing a wide, loving and appreciative smile, John turned to Stephen saying, "We're boyfriends!"

"That's wonderful!" Jennifer cheerfully said, and felt more relieved that nothing odd was about to happen.

Jim nodded and smiled, "We're very happy, for both of you."

"What's even better is what happens when we're together," John grinned. He then paused and thought how to explain it since he wasn't quite sure himself. "My N-Gen abilities let me move stuff around telekinetically. But when Stephen and me are together, something new happens." John stepped forward and hugged Stephen. Stephen wrapped his arms around John and rested his head on John's shoulder. Before John's parents' eyes, both boys levitated about six inches off the floor. After a few seconds, John whispered, "Kiss me, baby." Stephen and John tenderly kissed. Two bewildered parents watched while the boys rose higher as their tongues danced. Before hitting the ceiling, their tongues slowed and they lowered down back down. Breaking the kiss, they squeezed each other tightly then separated and landed on the floor. Turning his head to see his parents, but already knowing they were frightened, John softly grunted, "Uh oh!"

Jim simply eyed the boys suspiciously, but Jennifer's head was hanging in both her open hands.

"Mom?" John softly called.

Jennifer lifted her head and leaned back in the chair. "I know boys grow up," Jennifer began, "I know boys are more adventurous. I also realize that things have changed. But now I only have to ask, how high can you levitate? Is there any chance you could float off into outer space?"

"I don't think so," John answered. "I really don't know because it's brand new to me too." John then tapped his sub-vocal and asked, "Daileass, can you help me out here, dude?"

Replying privately to John, Daileass giggled, "Do not tell your parents how high we know you can levitate!"

"DUH!" John laughed.

Over the room's loudspeakers, Daileass then seriously offered, "There are three telekinesis trainers in the Clan."

Draco added, "Eli and Benji have just woke up."

"Only three?" Jim asked.

"It is a rare skill," Draco replied.

"How quick can they get here?" John wondered.

"You rang?" Two voices announced from behind John. He spun around and saw two boys standing about a foot off of the ground, a pajama-clad leg doing circles around them.

"Don't forget us!" Two more voices announced from near the ceiling.

"I'm counting four," Jim helplessly chuckled.

One of the boys giggled from the ceiling, "I'm Sammy, he's 'Bastian, that one is Eli, the other is Benji, and our little friend is 'Leg'."

"Hey, hot stuff, you can stop getting us up now!" the boy identified as 'Bastian giggled, obviously speaking to the boy named Eli.

Jim sputtered and tried not to laugh for his wife's sake. "Oh Lord!" Jennifer smirked, and then laid her head on her crossed arms on the table. She then began softly mumbling, "If I take two Valium, I may not wake up until noon; it could be very bad."

Watching 'Leg' dance around, John chuckled and introduced himself, Stephen and his parents. He then demonstrated what happened whenever he and Stephen were close or kissing.

Twisting to and fro, 'Leg' seemed to look around the room, then hopped over to a table with a notepad and pencil on it. It hopped up on the table, grabbed the pencil between its toes, and furiously scribbled on the paper. It then picked up the paper in its toes, and hopped over to Jennifer. After placing the note on the table next to her, it cuddled up to her side.

Jennifer glanced at 'Leg' then lifted her head and read the note. It read:

Mommy Jennifer,

I'm the prosthetic leg that Eli used to wear before Uncle Marc gave him an android leg and arm to replace the ones that he lost when his parents' plane crashed. Eli is silly, but he won't let anything happen that could hurt John; he still remembers how messing around caused his parents to lose control of the plane. Can I have a hug?

'Leg'.

P.S. Do you have a single lost sneaker? My toes are cold!

Saddened but also relieved, Jennifer looked up at Eli saying, "I'm not sure if I need to cry or laugh. Instead of choosing, I'll trust you boys to take care of business." She then got up from the table, kissed John on the forehead and warned, "You be careful!"

John smiled, "I will, Mom."

She then hugged Stephen and said, "Welcome to the family." She moved from Eli, to Benji, to Sammy to 'Bastian, hugging each boy. Kissing her husband, she said, "Work in the morning. Good night all."

Jim promised, "I'll be up soon, Jen."

The boys all said, "Good night," then waited until she had left the room.

Almost bouncing with anticipation, John asked, "So what do I do now?"

"Kiss again. That was cuuuuute!" Sammy giggled.

Turning to his new boyfriend, John smiled; ready, very willing and able. Stephen playfully complained, "I've been hoping for my first kiss forever. Now it's getting like kindergarten show and tell."

John took hold of both Stephen's hands. Once again, they lifted off the floor a few inches. Wrapping their arms around each other in a tight embrace, John and Stephen levitated a few inches higher. Finally, John whispered, "I really do love you, baby." Stephen whimpered then hurried to kiss John. This time though, they almost shot to the ceiling and again, John bumped his head.

Benji giggled as he lightly punched Eli's new arm. "Told ya we shoulda brought your spare crash helmets."

The two hovering lovers only sputtered briefly, but seemed to forget about any lessons to be learned and kept on kissing.

Jim asked, "Does it mean anything that they rose so quickly this time?"

"Yeah, they need to get laid," Sammy muttered under his breath.

"You got a one-track mind, babe!" Benji giggled. "Actually, we're watching it now, me and Eli on the T.K. side and the cute boys we call boyfriends watching the mental side."

"So the more willing they are, the faster the levitation?" Jim pondered. "Interesting."

Eli tapped his comm-badge and asked, "Hey Draco, you think you can arrange a set of padded ceilings here?" Looking at John's dad, Eli said, "You're right, Jim, but we are trying to figure out just what John is doing differently. This is a new twist on the skill; at least in how it's being applied by John."

"Sure, one completely padded-ceilinged-house comin' up!" Draco giggled. The ceiling of the kitchen shimmered slightly. "Should help keep the noise down when Prez and Keith get it busy," he mischievously added.

"If they're like Cory, there's not enough padding in the Universe to do that." Eli giggled. "Jim, 'Bast thinks he might have figured out something about what is happening. We'll find out if he's right once the two lovebirds decide to take a break to breathe."

Hearing that their demonstration was sufficient, John and Stephen slowly lowered, but since neither was willing to separate, they remained hovering inches above the floor.

Since the boys were safe, Jim smirked, "This house is built well, but I'm sure a little padding and sound proofing could only help. As for Keith and Preston, if they don't take a break soon, I might be forced to lock them in a bedroom."

Contentedly snuggling Stephen, John softly offered, "They had a break today, Dad. Cory Short made 'em take time off."

Relieved, Jim cheered, "Oh! Thank goodness!"

"Now if Cory could just follow his own advice," Eli giggled. "Hey, John, you think our brain-leech boyfriends can look in you guys' heads while you're floating there?"

Feeling Stephen becoming nervous, John softly shushed his boyfriend and assured, "It's okay, baby. It won't hurt at all, I promise. Just stay with me." Stephen relaxed again then John nodded at Eli, "Go ahead."

Sammy and 'Bastian nodded and began their scan, keeping a respectful distance from the two boys to help them stay comfortable. After a few minutes, they both smiled; at the same time the two floating subjects blushed and giggled. "Okay, I think we've got it," Sammy announced. "Eli, Benj, stand by for dumping."

"Go for it," Eli replied.

Sammy completed the dump into Eli's mind, and then, after a moment for Eli to sort through it all, the boy giggled and said, "It's interesting. You've always been an empath, John, but when you became an N-Gen your mind opened up a lot more. You've always had the other abilities, but you've only used telepathy once before your change. Now, even with the basic training and Vulcan legal stuff the other guys gave you, you're still using your other abilities as if they were empathy."

"What do you mean?" John asked curiously.

Eli smiled, "You read people's minds and see images, pictures, feelings, desires, flavors, all that stuff. You don't usually hear the words they are thinking, but still understand what they are thinking as you interpret it through your empathy. You can talk to other minds, like a telepath does normally, and could listen the same way, but you're just doing it different. Same for your telekinesis. You've been shown how to do the beginning stuff; exploding carrots, floating your brothers and others around; but the higher stuff, like floating yourself up and more, you were meant to find out for yourself. It's just that you're doing it by going through your empathy first! So, when you're with Stephen, you're super happy. When you kiss him, you are literally walking on air. Your triggers for telekinesis are empathic. That's it. You need to find out exactly what those triggers are, then learn to not hit them when you are kissing your boyfriend. Or, when you both go further, you'll really join the 'Mile High Club'!"

Stephen blushed and hid his face. John giggled, "I'll work on the triggers. I guess what I don't understand is, why Stephen? I mean, he's the first person I've ever wanted to kiss. Would the same thing have happened if it were Lindsay, Tommy, Brandon or Vicky?"

"To a degree, but not to the same level," Benji giggled. "What makes this so obvious is that it is Stephen."

"Me?" Stephen incredulously squeaked. "Why me?"

"Because you're special," Eli said with a smile, yet dead seriously.

"I know that," John smiled. He and Stephen floated just a little higher as they hugged tighter.

"Well, yes... but not the way I meant," Eli giggled. "He's a resonance chamber for you, bro! You put in ten parts of power, you have an effect of one hundred or something. Since it's Stephen you like, your power output is increased by being near or in contact with him. That helps you, right now. You can learn quicker what the trigger is so that you don't flip it when you kiss or cuddle and feel good faster because he amplifies anything you do so you'll see it easier!"

Jim Hundser leaned back in his chair chuckling, "Oh no."

Letting go of Stephen for a moment, John turned to his father and asked, "What's wrong, Dad?"

Shaking his head, Jim smiled, "Nothing's wrong. Stephen acts as a power amplifier, raising ten to one hundred. You know what your brothers will say, don't you?" John thought for a moment then shook his head. Jim chuckled, "I can hear them now; introducing Stephen Marr, the Power Rimmer." All six boys cracked up and howled laughing. Throwing his arms up in defeat as he stood, Jim said, "Since I know everything will work out fine, I'm going to bed." Holding his son and Stephen by the shoulder, Jim grinned, "You two stay under a roof until you figure out how to control your triggers."

"DAD!" John loudly laughed, and blushed just as much as Stephen. The other four laughed even harder.

"No matter what you might think, I was referring to the triggers in your mind, not the other ones!" Jim then turned to Eli, Benji, Sammy and 'Bastian saying, "You boys are welcome to stay the night if you like. I hope to see you again tomorrow."

"Holding hands won't be a problem, will it?" Stephen shyly asked as Jim walked out of the room.

"Do it now," Eli giggled.

They did, and both found out that they were about an inch or so off of the floor.

"How do we walk?" John giggled.

Eli shrugged and said, "Try it anyway."

They did and found that John was subconsciously moving them along as if they were.

"We're walking in the air!" John sang through his giggles, "We're dancing in the moo-oonlit sky!"

"Well," Eli cracked up, "at least you can do that outside until you learn control! Just anything more, stay under something solid."

"Or tie your ankles to a lamp-post!" Sammy howled laughing.

* * * * *

During the time John was alone with Stephen in his bedroom, practicing his kissing and floating skills, Keith had said it was time for Dewi, Richie, Geoff and Dillon to join the nest. Jennifer had taken the youngest FCC kids home with her and got them settled in the nest.

Bruce had taken the other young kids back to the Hundserts' house. Bruce, Gage, Sammy, Dee and Jonah played video games for a while before also going to sleep. Meanwhile, Prez and the remainder of the Core Rimmers were with the eldest FCC kids, getting them acquainted with the base then situated in dorm rooms.

Shortly after eleven that night, while John was with Stephen and his parents in the kitchen, Prez and the Core Rimmers were in the Command Center. They picked up their own new Clan Short ID cards. Then they began discussing how to deal with passing out credit and ID cards to more than a hundred kids. Pages were printed out listing each kid by name so each kid got their cards. Right after breakfast would be the best time to get everyone together. Kaleo and Tory would ask Sean and other older kids for help getting the job done as quickly as possible. Kaleo was hoping for four boys and two girls on the team passing out cards. If they could get four or more on the team, they might get all the cards passed out in an hour or less.

Just before they left the Command Center for the night, Donnie Williams called for Prez once again. A new potential threat had been identified through the mole and others captured during the FCC operations. They called themselves the Human Liberation Front; a group that believed any and all alien interference in Earth governments were to be eliminated. This not only affected Hawaii because of the King's recent declaration, but also several mainland American States. The UNIT Intel division needed to do more 'research' to find out more about the HLF. Donnie and Prez promised to share whatever information they learned about the HLF with each other then said goodnight.

Clapping his hands like one of the four- or five-year-old kids, Keith sarcastically shouted, "Oh goody! Greed, zealots and arrogance!" He then bent over, pointed his ass at Prez and grabbed his ankles yelling, "Thank you, Sir, may I have another!"

Prez swatted his partner's butt and sniggered, "You're so bad, babe." Kaleo and many of the others in the Command Center howled laughing. Grinning insanely, Mike, Derrick, Drew and Corey only shook their heads.

Covering his mouth with his fist, Kaleo yawned then turned to Prez and asked, "If it's okay, I'll go over to the dorms and talk with some of the kids, so we can get a team organized to pass out the credit and ID cards?"

Prez nodded, "Kewl, dude. Have a good night. See ya tomorrow." Everyone else said goodnight too and Kaleo turned to leave.

Keith hurried to Kaleo, held his shoulder then whispered, "You and Tory, in the store before; it's totally kewl with us, dude. We just gotta be careful we don't get caught by the kids, ya know?"

Kaleo blushed and whispered, "Thanks, Keith. There was no chance of waiting."

Keith whispered, "Next time, make yourselves more comfy. Have Daileass transport you back to your room for a quickie." He then put his clenched fist out. Kaleo knocked knuckles with Keith then left the Command Center.

Stepping up to the console, Drew said, "Computer; Internet search, news articles, Republic of Hawaii, United States of America, Canada, Mexico, Japan, China."

The computer responded in an emotionless adult female voice. [Ready. State additional search parameters.]

"Human Liberation Front; attack or diplomat or embassy or representative or threat. January one, 2000 through current date, inclusive. Display results. Execute."

[Processing. Estimated search completion time, thirty minutes.]

Corey stepped closer to Drew and from behind, wrapped his arms around Drew's waist. Corey sighed, "I get all tingly when you talk logical to the computer."

Drew blushed and softly said, "Love you so much, Cor."

Prez grinned, "Okay you two, you're relieved..."

"Don't say 'relieved'," Keith cackled.

Prez chuckled, "Okey doke. Go home, dudes."

Corey giggled, "Thanks, Prez."

Turning around and taking Corey's hand, Drew said, "Good night, guys."

Everyone said good night to Drew and Corey then, as they left the Command Center, Paulie said, "Hey, boss?" Prez turned to Paulie and Paulie pointed at one of the display screens saying, "Check it out." A bus had stopped at the corner of North Road and Iroquois Avenue. A bunch of male and female kids got off the bus. Some pointed down North Road then the group started walking.

"All right, here we go, dudes," Prez pleasantly said. "Our first group of teen street kids."

Keith frowned and wondered, "How should I contact Jamie, Jacob and Beau?"

Prez giggled, "Any one of three should work."

Keith tapped his comm-badge and called, "Jamie?"

"Hi, Keith," Jamie replied. Then came the all too familiar circular reply from the Terrible Trio; "Those kids," "are dressed," "real nice." "We'll meet you," "at the gate," "to check them out."

Rapidly shaking his head because the telepathic triplets had obviously seen what everyone in the CIC had, Keith grinned, "Thanks, dudes. See ya in a few. Out."

Derrick called Doctor Andrews while Mike called Doctor Wiener. Both doctors were asked to meet the team at the North Road gate.

Prez told Paulie, "We're going home after this, Paulie."

Paulie nodded, "My shift ends at midnight, Prez. I'll let the next shift know at turnover."

The team of four Core Rimmers said good night then walked out of the Command Center and outside. With towels in their hands, but still wet, Jamie, Jacob and Beau ran up to them.

"You guys need to know about John and Stephen," Jacob cackled.

While they continued to walk to the gate, Beau giggled, "They kissed a little while ago."

"You shoulda seen it," Jamie cheered, "They actually floated way up in the air!"

All three pointed to the area by the CIC and in unison chanted,

"It happened right over there."

"Together, they make an awesome couple," Jamie added.

Beau stated, "Stephen's only a little empathic."

Jacob explained, "When John gets close to Stephen, his N-Gen powers grow."

All three simultaneously laughed, "We've never seen anything quite like that."

"Whoa!" Prez loudly chuckled. "They kissed and actually levitated?"

All three boys laughed and nodded. Beau tapped his comm-badge and called, "Chaz, tell Prez and the guys what happened to John."

Over Beau's comm-badge, Chaz chuckled, "He scared the piss out of us. Swear to God, he and Stephen were up at tree-top level. We were all worried they'd fall and got them a trampoline."

Keith groaned, "I don't know if I should be happy or scared to death."

The terrible triplets surrounded and pounced Keith then began tickling him. "Be happy!" they all laughed as Keith struggled to protect himself from six hands tickling him at once.

Beginning to tickle the three terrors, Prez saved his partner from further abuse then asked, "So how does this work?"

"Our friends from Orlando were here," "Eli, Benji, Sammy and 'Bastian," "They checked 'em over to find out what the deal is,"

"Stephen's like an amplifier for John."

In unison, they all cackled, "Your dad called Stephen the Power Rimmer!" The eldest four Rimmers cracked up and agreed to keep the name.

By this time, Drew and Corey had finished making love in the shower then went downstairs to get ready for bed. They walked down the flights of stairs into the basement and couldn't believe their eyes. Hovering about a foot above the couch cushions, Stephen was laying on John.

John smiled, "Hey."

Corey complained, "I'm so jealous! I've always felt like that when Drew hugs me, but we've never actually floated."

"Stephen's my little amplifier," John explained. "He's empathic and my powers are based on empathy. When we're close, like now, this is what happens."

Stephen softly offered, "I was so scared when I got here. Ever since meeting John, I've felt so much better, like everything else is candy. It was love at first sight."

Running his fingers through Stephen's wavy auburn hair, John assured, "I love you too, baby." Stephen softly kissed John and they floated up another two feet.

"Wow!" Corey and Drew chimed.

Holding the kiss, John transmitted to Drew; 'I've never felt like this before. I feel like I could easily lift Aloha Stadium, but I just don't have the time. How can I be so happy and so peaceful at the same time?'

"That's love, bro," Drew smiled.

The next second, a bunch of two inch tall Lilliputians came running out from nowhere and started firing off grappling hooks with long ropes around the floating boys. "Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade inflatables!" they all squeaked, and they started lowering the laughing boys back to the sofa.

"What the hell are these guys?" Drew exclaimed.

"Imaginary," came a giggling voice from behind them. Corey and Drew turned to find a boy with bright yellow eyes and mischief clearly showing on his face. His white blond hair gleamed in the lights of the room. His impish grin was infectious. "I've never come across a psionic like your brother, so I was curious. Be scared."

"Who are you?" Corey asked cautiously.

"A friend of Levi's," the boy giggled. "You can call me Lord and Master." Levi's hand appeared from nowhere and slapped him. "Okay, okay," the boy giggled again. "I'm Quint. Nice to meet you." Looking down at the tiny troops, he called, "Now, my minions, start the Parade."

"Yeah!" all the Lilliputians cried. John and Stephan started getting towed about the room, laughing hysterically all the while.

Approaching the North Gate security station, the team of seven saw the two doctors standing by. Outside the gate stood a group of twelve teenage boys and girls. One boy was constantly tilting his head from side to side and holding his left arm. Another boy had a black eye and several fresh wounds on his face, neck and arms.

One of the UNIT security guards named Billy met the Core Rimmers. "Hi, guys," Billy softly said and gestured to the group behind the gate. "Some of these guys have weapons; knives and mace."

"They're afraid," Jamie said.

"Of their pimps and tricks." Jacob added.

"They don't mean no harm." Beau finished.

Prez nodded and softly asked, "What do you think, Billy?"

"It's my job to keep this base and you guys safe," Billy answered. "My gut says to call a company over."

Keith asked, "Can they be scanned as they enter?"

Prez agreed and added, "To see which has the weapons?"

Keith and Billy nodded, but the triplets assured, "They just want in. They'll give up the stuff as soon as they feel safe."

Prez thought for a moment then told Billy, "You and Andy stay sharp. I don't want them scared or shot on arrival. Let 'em in, Billy."

Billy went to the security station. A moment later, Andy came outside with his M-16 drawn. Billy opened the shield portal at the gate. All twelve kids hurried in at once. Many of the boys and two of the four girls were complaining about having to wait, exposed to possible identification. Hearing a disturbance, six security gorillas came from out of the trees and rapidly approached. The twelve street kids backed up against the closed gate, frightened of the massive beasts carrying M-2 rifles and grenades.

Prez gestured for the UNIT troops to lower their weapons and grinned, "Now that I've got your attention, let me say welcome to Clan Short Pacific Rim Division. I didn't invite y'all here to be scared. The gorillas are only responding as they've been trained. As long as you're kewl, they will be too. There's one thing we have to get out of the way right now. We know some of you have knives and weapons. You won't need them here; you're all safe now." Keith bent down and picked up a small pebble then tossed it at the shield, just to the side of the kids. The stone bounced off the shield and fell to the ground. "That's a Starfleet quality shield around the entire base," Prez explained. "It's active now, for the first time, because we already know the pimps you guys worked for are going to be pissed off. They could fire bullets at that shield until they're blue in the face and out of ammo; nothing will hurt you here. So please, just toss your weapons and mace to the ground. Then we can introduce ourselves and get acquainted."

The twelve kids began unloading various knives, small bats and cans of mace. When they stopped, Prez glanced at Jamie, Jacob and Beau. All three nodded and approached the street kids. Billy and Andy began gathering the weapons on the ground. Prez clearly said, "Y'all know me from TV, so let me introduce my teammates. To my right is my boyfriend and life partner, Keith Hundser."

Keith waved and smiled, "How's it goin', guys?"

Prez then said, "To my left are Mike Gibbons and Derrick Seibert. They're also boyfriends and partners. We're the oldest of the eight leaders of this division."

"You're the oldest?" One of the girls incredulously repeated.

Prez chuckled, "Yep, 'fraid so! The other four members of our team are either asleep or taking care of other things. You'll meet everybody tomorrow."

The boy that had been holding his arm and tilting his head to and fro grunted then groaned, "OW! What the fuck?"

Beau looked up at the boy and asked, "Feel better now?"

The boy turned his head left and right then rotated his sore arm around. He smiled, "Yeah, I do."

"Your shoulder was dislocated," Beau said. "Next time some jerk-off throws you into a brick wall, get up and kick him in the nuts."

The boy grinned, "I should've thought of that."

"You did!" Jamie and Jacob giggled.

Shaking his head, Prez chuckled, "That little black haired boy is Beau, a Clan Short healer, and the other two, Jacob and Jamie are telepaths. Their job is to check you guys over. Whatever they can't fix, they'll tell me about. The only other people that will have to know about your overall health are the two gentlemen standing by the security shack." Gesturing to the two men, Prez said, "This is Doctor Andrews, pediatrician, and Doctor Wiener, child psychologist."

"We don't need no head shrink!" one boy sourly bitched.

Prez moved forward and stood before the boy that spoke. He was about the same height as Prez, but a little thinner. Knowing what was about to happen, Derrick, Mike and Keith glanced at each other then shook their heads. Prez softly said, "You're here so I assume you want to get off the street, correct?" The boy nodded and Prez took one step back then loudly said, "There are over a hundred kids on this base right now. I'm responsible for them, my friends, their families and everyone else that arrives across five bases. We'll give you a warm bed in a nice room and plenty to eat whenever you want it. We'll give you education and recreation of every sort. There's no price or cost for any of it. Nobody's gonna tell you to bend over and get ready for a good fucking. If or when you find somebody you like and they like you too, then you can make love together, consensually. The last three days those hundred kids, ranging in age from four to fifteen, have been here recovering from their own nightmares. They never got paid for sex. They were abused by adults that were supposed to be taking care of them. If the telepaths tell me that any of you need to see either doctor, then you will see them. I'm not jeopardizing the welfare of all for one person. If you'd rather go back to the streets then let me know now." Prez paused and locked eyes with each of the kids.

Beau looked over the group with a critical eye before adding his own two cents. "Before any of y'all go coppin' an attitude, you better understand somethin' right now. My two boyfriends there started out on the street, and were the reason that a group of great kids became Clan Short. I had no living relatives, and was almost killed by the sperm donor of a kid who became my brother. That asshole decided that since he couldn't screw my bro, nobody else would get to either. When you walked through those gates, you were asking to join the Family of Cory Short and to enjoy all of the benefits of that family. With those benefits comes the responsibility to allow yourself to be helped to become the person you should have been all along. It's all or nothing; either agree and find out just how great you really are, or turn around and make the stupidest move in your entire life. Your choice, but once you make it, you're determining your entire future."

Prez asked, "Does anyone want to leave?"

Eleven heads shook, but one of the smaller boys tentatively held up his hand.

Prez went over to the cute little African boy. He was looking really sharp in his black suit, red dress shirt and black neck tie. Prez asked, "Don't tell me you want to leave?"

The boy shook his head and asked, "Is this like a military base?"

The Terrible Triplets helplessly giggled. Prez grinned, "Is Clan Short military? No, we're not. We have a military division. Anyone that decides they'd like to participate in our military organization just let me or any of the Core Rimmers know."

"Core Rimmers?" the tallest boy laughed. Turning away briefly, Prez rolled his eyes and realized that he had slipped. The Triplets, Derrick, Keith and Mike cracked up. Unable to control themselves, Andy and Billy quickly turned away and tried not to laugh. All the street kids began snickering.

Mike giggled, "Clan Short Pacific Rim Division was too big. We weren't Clan five minutes before Prez called us The Rimmers." All the new kids lost it and howled.

Derrick loudly laughed, "We've got Toy Rimmers, a Soul Rimmer, a Mouth Rimmer, Shiny Rimmers and most recently, a Power Rimmer. Prez is the Head Rimmer."

After waiting for everyone to calm down, Prez chuckled, "ANYWAY! We're a big family, not military. We have the facilities to protect ourselves, like the shields and base security."

Prez heard the Triplets in his mind then went back to Keith, Derrick and Mike, gesturing for them to take over introductions.

Keith went over to the four girls. They were: British fourteen-year-old Cassie Cornwall, American thirteen-year-old Caitlin Axford, German fourteen-year-old Helena Schmoll and Irish fifteen-year-old Mollie Mcelhannon. Derrick and Mike spoke with the eight boys.

They were: American fourteen-year-old Christian Beresford, American fifteen-year-old Lance Elling, African sixteen-year-old Jessie Foulds, French-Canadian fifteen-year-old Darren Devault, American fourteen-year-old Hugh Gartrell, African thirteen-year-old Clinton Foshee, American fourteen-year-old Allan Farabaugh and American fifteen-year-old Darryl Don.

Prez returned to the group and whispered to Cassie, Christian and Darryl to please see Doc Andrews. In only a few minutes, the Doctor had scanned them with his tricorder and administered inoculations via hypo-spray. Mollie and Clinton were asked to go with Doc Wiener to the CIC dining room for a private conversation. Waiting for Doc Wiener, Clinton and Mollie to pass, Prez then led everyone else to the CIC dining room. The Terrible Trio decided they were going to go check on John and Stephen then join the nest.

Much to everyone's surprise, Kekoa had gotten two extra chefs to man the grill in the kitchen for the incoming kids. Three of the older kids recognized Kekoa even though he was wearing fatigues. Once everyone got their food, Kekoa stood on a chair and told every one of his own history, from orphan to street hustler to rescued Clan Short kid to UNIT Colonel and Commander of the Pacific Rim detachment. Prez was thrilled. The one thing he and everyone else had forgotten was extra chefs to feed the kids. Kekoa took it upon himself to get the chefs and tell his story. Prez went into the Command Center and wrote a message to Adam Casey, giving accolades and the highest praise for his new UNIT Commander.

Once Kekoa had finished his pep talk, Derrick, Mike and Keith told the kids about current sleeping arrangements. By the time Prez came out of the Command Center, the kids had already finished eating and had decided to sleep in the dorm. They were in the process of deciding who would buddy up with whom. All Prez did was tap his comm-badge and call Kaleo.

Kaleo immediately replied, "What's up, Prez?"

"Sorry to bug you, dude, but we have a bunch of newbies here," Prez said. "The only problem is, I don't know how many rooms are occupied in the dorm."

"Got it covered, Prez," Kaleo said. "Out of fifty-two rooms in this building, we're using twenty-nine. We've got one hallway upstairs with girls now. That's eleven rooms and twenty-two girls. Down here, we've got thirty-eight boys in eighteen rooms."

Prez asked, "Shouldn't that be nineteen rooms?"

"Four of the seven- and eight-year-old boys are sharing one room. They feel better that way."

"That's great!" Prez beamed.

"Until they get more comfortable, they'll stay together."

"That's sixty kids," Prez cheered. "You're awesome, Kaleo! Expect at least one big hug when I see you. You might even get four hugs."

Kaleo giggled, "I didn't do it; the kids did it all by themselves."

"You got bonus points twice today in my book, Fist Rimmer!" Without intending to, Prez caused another roar of laughter from the new kids. Even Kekoa was shaking his head, but chuckling.

"We'll meet you there after we take them to the store for clothes, Kaleo," Prez smiled. "We've got four girls and eight boys."

"No problem... Head Rimmer!" Kaleo giggled. In the background, Tory was obviously hysterical.

Soon, all the newbies had dumped their trash. Their empty trays, plates, glasses and silverware were left by the restaurant-grade dishwasher. When everyone was gathered, Keith explained, "We're about to take you guys and girls to the store for clothes and suitcases. Just so ya know, we won't walk there. We use something like Starfleet transporters. It feels a little weird the first few times, being one place and then suddenly being in another place. Is everybody ready?" Getting nods and vocal affirmations, Keith then tapped his sub-vocal and called, "Daileass?"

"Ready when you are, Keith," Daileass cheerfully said.

"We're outta here," Keith confirmed.

A moment later, the entire group of sixteen was standing in the CIC store. A couple of kids shouted expletives of various sorts. Prez, Mike and Derrick grinned or chuckled. Keith giggled, "I said it felt weird!"

Prez turned to Mike and Derrick saying, "Show the girls through please, buds? Keith and I will show the guys through."

Derrick nodded, "No problem, Prez."

But Mike playfully complained, "Oh sure! We get to be embarrassed with bras and panties!"

Wide-eyed and giggling, Keith teased, "I've seen you in your frilly panties. Kinda cute, but ya really need to shave the panty lines, dude." Some of the street kids were smiling and softly chuckling, but the rest obviously couldn't tell if Keith was serious or not.

Shaking his head, Mike grumbled, "Fucker."

Derrick smiled and assured the kids, "He wears boxers all the time, as far as I know."

Prez grinned, "To each his own," then slid in closer to Keith and wrapped him in a warm embrace. Each of the twelve kids grabbed a shopping cart. The four Core Rimmers led them through the various departments: socks, underwear and pajamas; sandals, shoes and sneakers; summer wear; shirts; jeans; belts, hats and accessories; dress clothes; coats, jackets and ponchos; toiletries and finally, suitcases.

Another hour was spent getting the boys through the store, checked out and their suitcases packed. Then Mike and Derrick got the girls checked out and packed. Seeing they were almost finished, Prez tapped his comm-badge and called, "Kaleo?"

"Here, Prez," Kaleo replied. A television could be heard in the background.

"We're almost done in the store, dude."

"Me, Tory, Sean and Horacio are standing by in the first floor rec room."

"Kewl, bud. See ya in a few minutes."

Once the final suitcase was packed and everybody was ready for transport, Mike called, "Daileass?"

"Shiny Daddy?" Daileass giggled.

Rolling his eyes, Mike grinned, "Wise ass. To the dorm rec room where Kaleo's waiting." A split second later, the group was lined up with their suitcases between a sofa and the piano.

In a thick Irish brogue, Mollie excitedly asked, "How in the hell do you get used to it?"

Derrick shrugged, "Repetition."

On the sofa before them, Tory got up off of Kaleo. At opposite ends of the front sofa, Sean and Horacio turned around. Prez quickly introduced everybody then suggested, "Derrick, Mike, Tory and Kaleo, get the guys situated. The rest of us will take the girls upstairs."

Kaleo said, "Prez, I put signs up at the second floor doorways. The girls want to know when boys are around."

Tory nodded, "Everyone on both floors keep their bedroom doors open a lot of the time. By now, I'll bet most of them are asleep, but there might be someone in the bathroom."

"When you open the door, just shout, 'Boys on the floor'," Kaleo added. "That's almost exactly what the signs say."

Prez smiled, "Necessity is the mother of invention."

Keith added, "Once we're finished, it's bed time."

Mike checked his watch and realized, "It's after two in the morning. We've got a concert at school at ten in the morning."

Everybody split up and started to show the newbies to their dorm rooms. Walking up the stairs and carrying Mollie's suitcase, Keith softly said, "Hey, Daileass?"

"What's up, Keith?" Daileass asked.

"We're gonna need wake up calls in the morning, dude."

"Say when," Daileass said.

Keith suggested, "Nine?"

Prez said, "Make it eight forty-five."

Keith agreed, "I'm gonna need some coffee."

Into each of the Core Rimmer's sub-vocals, Daileass said, "Wake up call at eight-forty-five Hawaii time. Do you want alarms or music?"

"Music," all four chanted.

"Classic rock?" Daileass suggested, and all four agreed.

"Thanks, Daileass," Prez yawned. Stopping at the second floor landing and opening the door, Prez hollered, "Boys on the floor."

Referring to how tired they were getting after their third rescue group in one night, Keith softly joked, "Almost literally on the floor."

While the two leaders and everyone began walking down the second floor hallway, Sean softly said, "We left a few doors open down at the end of the hall. You can pick which room you like."

Prez told the girls, "They're all very much alike. Only the carpet, wall colors and game systems are different."

Beyond the bathroom and before the rec room, four bedroom doors were left ajar. Once again, the four girls were pleasantly surprised at the spacious rooms and amenities. The four split in half and chose two rooms across from each other. Prez and Keith told them to get with Kaleo in the CIC dining room for orientations after breakfast. The boys said good night and started back down the hall.

Glancing between Sean and Horacio, Prez said, "I'm not prying, but I am curious; are you two a couple?"

Sean and Horacio grinned at each other. Horacio explained, "I'm bisexual, Prez. Yeah, we're messin' around together, but since Sean's gay and I'm bi, we're both free."

"We're free in more ways than sex," Sean happily said. They started back down stairs and Sean added, "There is one dude I'm very interested in. He don't know it yet, but I have been watching him."

Horacio asked, "Should I tell them?"

"I can do it!" Sean giggled. "It's that dude that was playing keyboards with your band earlier."

Prez and Keith excitedly shouted; "Troy?"

"Is that his name?" Sean asked.

Prez couldn't help laughing. Keith answered, "His name is Troy Faris. His mom's one of the housekeepers and yes, he is gay."

At the first floor landing, Prez leaned against the door and chuckled, "Would you like us to introduce you to him?"

"Hell yeah!" Sean laughed. "If he's really as cute as he looks..."

"Sean can stop beating his meat," Horacio interrupted.

"HEY!" Sean laughed and uncontrollably blushed. "I didn't even know his name!"

"Am I lying?" Horacio grinned at Sean. "Did you or did you not tell me that he gave you a raging boner?" Keith and Prez cracked up.

Sean cackled, "Yeah, but let's not put the cart before the horse, so to speak. He might not like me or I might not like him. He's definitely eye candy though."

Keith smiled and promised, "We'll get ya hooked up sometime tomorrow, Sean. You take it from there."

Reaching for the door handle, Prez warned, "Troy's really shy, as best as I can tell."

Keith agreed, "The only reason he got on stage is because..."

"Keith!" Prez loudly squealed.

"What?" Keith cackled, "I was only gonna say that the telepaths knew he wanted to jam."

"Shy is good," Horacio confirmed, "Sean's not exactly the most outgoing person around."

Sean only nodded, but Horacio, Keith and Prez noticed a dreamy, faraway look in Sean's eyes. They all began chuckling. Opening the door, they went down the hall. Several bedroom doors were still open. When they noticed Prez and Keith out in the hall, Nick and Roger, two of the boys picked up at Hawaii earlier that evening, hurried out of their room in their underwear just to say hello.

"How're you guys doing?" Keith pleasantly asked.

The two boys cheered, "We're GREAT!"

"This place is really awesome," Nick gushed.

Roger nodded, "It's like the best hotel; big beds, televisions and game stations in every room."

Horacio grinned, "We're choosing which room we want based on the game stations."

"Is it working out evenly?" Keith wondered.

Horacio nodded, "I think so. Most of us don't know one game station from the other. We've been trying them both out."

Grinning at the two younger boys, Prez slyly asked, "Will it still seem like a resort when school starts?"

Obviously less enthusiastic, Nick and Roger hummed. Keith, Sean and Horacio chuckled. Prez grinned, "Come on, you guys, even I have to go to school. But I will tell you this; Clan school won't be anything like your other schools. There will be placement tests and teachers for the basics; reading, writing and arithmetic. Depending on your placement scores, you could find yourself in more interesting advanced classes. You could take trade school classes like carpentry or auto mechanics or computer programming. One of those computer classes is taught by Patriarch Cory Short. There will be special military classes over at the UNIT base here on O'ahu, or in Utah, USA. Other classes are available in Florida or Des Moines or even in Wales, U.K."

Seeing a spark of interest in both boys' eyes, Keith added, "We spoke with the Clan education adviser today. He asked if me, Prez, Mike and Derrick would be interested in teaching music classes. We're talking everything from music appreciation to music performance and theory. You name it, the Clan schools can teach it."

"Don't forget our close affiliation with Starfleet either," Prez reminded. "If you've got the right skills, you'll get recommendations and could attend Starfleet Academy."

"Really?" the two younger boys delightedly squealed. When Keith and Prez nodded, they found themselves on the receiving end of tight hugs from Nick and Roger.

Prez returned Roger's hug and said, "All you guys need to adopt a new attitude. Keep telling yourselves, 'I can do anything if I seriously want to do it enough'."

Roger looked up and smiled, "Thanks, Prez." Nick repeated the sentiment to both Prez and Keith.

"Any time, dudes," Prez assured.

"Spread the word," Keith said.

Prez then informed them; "Drew's working on setting up our own division website so all these little pieces of information can be shared with all the kids."

Keith said, "Until the site's built, things are going to be largely word of mouth."

Snapping his fingers, Prez said, "Daileass, I want cork bulletin boards in every dorm, on every floor, by the doorways and in each rec room."

Daileass asked, "How large and where exactly, Prez?"

"Twenty-four inches by thirty-six inches, landscape orientation, forty inches high off the floor so even little tikes can see and read from it."

Daileass said, "There's one by Kaleo's room now, Prez. Is that what you want and how you want it?"

Prez turned around then went and checked it out. Keith, Sean, Horacio, Nick and Roger followed Prez. Hanging perfectly centered on the wall and at the height Prez instructed was a new cork bulletin board. Humming uncertainly, Prez checked with the others; "Is that too high? There could be little kids, five, six or seven years old trying to read from this."

Everyone turned to Roger for his opinion since he was slightly shorter than Nick. "I don't know," Roger said, "The overall height's okay, I guess. The lower half would have to be 'specially for kids announcements. Then it should work all right."

Keith praised the boy, cheering, "Good job, Roger."

"That'll work, Daileass," Prez said.

"All dorms are done, Prez," Daileass replied.

Tilting his head, Keith grimaced, "It's real low tech for a place filled with so much high tech stuff."

"It'll get the job done until we get the web site up," Prez said. "After the web site is running, we could use these for 'this dorm only' stuff or even the kids' artwork."

Kaleo and Tory returned from the other hall to find the group standing outside his room. "Lookin' for me?" Kaleo grinned.

Prez pointed at the bulletin board and told Kaleo, "I just had an idea to help with communication, Mouth Rimmer... or should I say, Fist Rimmer?" Nick and Roger began giggling.

Kaleo laughed, "I prefer Mouth Rimmer."

Bouncing his eyebrows, Tory seductively growled, "So do I!" Everyone gathered cracked up.

Kaleo chortled and appeared to change the subject. "Prez, I need to show you something."

Prez said, "Sure, dude, as long as it's relatively quick."

Keith nodded. "We have to wake up for school in the morning."

Horacio said, "We'll say good night and let you guys take care of business."

"We'll be helping with the ID cards tomorrow morning anyway," Sean explained. He, Horacio, Roger and Nick said good night then went back to their rooms.

Tory unlocked the door and led the way in. Entering the room, Kaleo pointed at two stacks of boxes beside the stereo. The first stack was cartons of Wet, KY and AstroGlide lubricant. The second stack was three cartons of Trojan Lubricated condoms. Each of the three cartons were different sizes; regular, Magnum large and Magnum extra large. Keith and Prez grinned.

Prez gave Kaleo the hug he had promised and declared, "You rock, dude. There's so many trivial things like that I completely forgot about." Stepping back from Kaleo, Prez asked, "You took that upon yourself too?"

With Tory wrapping his arms around him from behind, Kaleo nodded, held his boyfriend's arms and giggled, "Kinda had to."

"Besides you two being a couple, the great thing is, you thought of the other guys too," Keith expressed.

Prez glanced at the boxes again then turned to Keith, shook his head and grinned, "Extra large! And the box is opened! Dear God in heaven, I couldn't begin to imagine."

Keith, Kaleo and Tory cracked up. Then Tory offered, "Regular works for me. I'm completely average; six inches long and five inches in circumference."

Prez grinned, "Regular for me too. Six and a quarter by five and a half."

Keith and Kaleo grinned at each other. "Come on!" Tory giggled and swayed excitedly, pulling Kaleo around with him. "You say it or I will," Tory warned.

"Regular," Kaleo blushed, "Six and a half by five and a half."

"Omigod!" Keith groaned. "I can't believe we're talking about this."

Prez prompted, "Tell 'em, Keith."

Keith sighed then grinned, "Seven by six."

Kaleo and Tory incredulously hollered, "SIX? A LARGE! HOLY SHIT!" They then turned to Prez for confirmation.

Prez nodded, wrapped his arms around Keith then giggled, "It's a bonus." While Kaleo and Tory roared hysterically, Keith turned ten shades of red and shook his head.

To make matters worse, in Keith's ear, Daileass giggled, "You stud! Half a dozen hard disks just crashed!"

Draco warned, "Watch it, mate."

Over-tired and playful, Prez shared, "Being director of this division has nothing to do with how I act alone with Keith. We're versatile all the time."

Kaleo and Tory were surprised. Kaleo smiled, "We are too, but we thought it was because of the orphanage."

Shaking his head, Prez confirmed, "I don't think it has much to do with the orphanage. There are times when our roles change. That's just the way it is; that's love. Derrick and Mike are the same. I'm not sure about Drew and Corey. If they aren't versatile now, I'd bet money on them eventually becoming so."

Wanting to change the subject, Keith wondered, "Just curious, but who asked for the extra larges?"

"You'll never believe it," Kaleo devilishly grinned.

Prez thought aloud, "The tallest, biggest and oldest guy here is Roy Angula."

Tory cackled, "Nope! Try again."

Keith hummed, "Until Roy showed up, Horacio was the tallest and biggest."

"You're off track completely, Kaleo grinned, "Go the other direction."

Prez begged, "Please don't say it was someone thirteen or younger?"

Shaking his head, Kaleo honestly said, "I gave lube to the twelve- and thirteen-year-old kids. None of them, except Tory, asked for rubbers. They know I got 'em if they need 'em though."

"Fourteen and thin?" Keith softly considered. Kaleo and Tory nodded.

Prez asked. "Tall or short?"

Kaleo answered, "Taller than me, about the same height as you two dudes."

Tory reminded, "You've both already seen him naked, but that's all the clues you get."

Prez checked with Keith. "Almost all these dudes we've seen."

Keith softly listed the fourteen-year-old boys on the beach Friday and Saturday. "Kaleo, Keanu, Liki, Hank, Sean or Horacio."

"Liki and Hank aren't much taller than Kaleo," Prez recalled.

Tory cackled, "Ooo! They're burnin' up they're so close!" Kaleo only grinned and nodded.

Little light bulbs almost flashed over Keith and Prez. They both softly chanted, "No."

"I have no proof of this," Kaleo grinned, "just his word and what size rubbers he asked for."

Tory's eyes flashed mischievously and he whispered, "Nine by six and a half."

Keith and Prez gasped, "No way!"

Kaleo grinned, "We may never know for sure unless something happens in plain sight for everyone to see."

All four shook their heads then Prez locked eyes with Kaleo and asked, "Can I give Tory a hug?"

Kaleo nodded and said, "Sure," but couldn't get Tory to release his grip. After a few moments of playful struggling, Tory let go.

Prez gave Tory a hug and said, "That's for keeping Kaleo happy."

"It's so easy and so much fun too." Tory giggled.

Keith gave Kaleo a hug saying, "For doin' an incredible job dude."

They all separated and Prez reminded, "We're outta here early tomorrow for our school concert, Kaleo. You're in charge until we get back."

"About eleven-thirty, dude," Keith added.

"You about covered everything already, Prez," Kaleo smiled. "All I have to worry about is more incoming kids while you four are away."

"Even if you do, you know the drill anyway," Prez assured. All four said good night then Prez and Keith left the room. On the way home, Keith gave Prez hell for sharing cock sizes. Laughing, Prez blamed Tory for starting it. They then discussed another very long and busy day. The Pacific Rim Division was growing by leaps and bounds. Cory and Sean were a cute couple, as were Adam and JJ. John was now an N-Gen and he had a boyfriend; one that could make their little brother literally float in the air. They promised to find the time to have a chat with John and Stephen. Their first trip to school turned out really well, all eagles and ferrets considered. Mrs. Diaz could've passed out from all the shocks, but she didn't.

Quietly walking in the house, they went directly downstairs. About twenty Teddy Bears waddled away from the stairs and retracted their claws. The nest had shrunk considerably over the last three nights; from about one hundred and twenty, to about ninety, to forty-nine of the youngest kids, four ferrets, and the seven Core Rimmers. Stephen and John were spooned together. Kicking off their sneakers and stripping off their clothes, Keith and Prez joined their sons in the nest and quickly fell asleep after an eighteen hour long day.

Only a few hours later, about seven-thirty in the morning, Dewi, Kokaku, Richie and Geoff woke up. The four youngest boys had heard noises upstairs. Together they climbed the stairs and went directly to the bathroom. Geoff and Richie taught Dewi and Kokaku to wash their hands after peeing. But the two four-year-old boys couldn't reach the sink. So the five-year-old nephews lifted their four-year-old uncles. The issue of uncles versus nephews never came up between the boys however...

At the kitchen dinette table, drinking their first cups of coffee, Jennifer and Jim Hundser heard two little boys loudly laughing, "Gramma and Grampa!"

"Mammy and daddy!" The two other boys screamed.

While the silly argument continued, Jim grinned at his wife. "You realize we'll be in our mid to late fifties when they reach eighteen?"

Smiling widely and nodding, Jennifer playfully whined, "I'm already getting too old for this." The sound of tiny feet rapidly climbing the basement steps was added to the boys' argument.

Then little Carmella raced by in her new pajamas. "Mornin', daddy! Morning, momma!" the girl shrieked as she ran down the hall and upstairs on her own bathroom mission.

The pitter-patter of more feet on the basement steps was heard by the two adults. Jim reached for the pad of paper and pencil then began hastily scribbling. Jennifer wondered, "What are you doing, Jim?" Murakami, Shimizu, Cesar, Felipe and Dillon opened the basement door then ran into the bathroom with Dewi, Kokaku, Geoff and Richie. They did not bother to close the bathroom door, but just gathered around the toilet and pushed their underwear down.

Without looking up from his frantic work, Jim loudly responded over the sounds of four boys arguing and five boys pissing. "A quick family tree. It's only a matter of time before the boys come in here asking if we're grandparents or parents. I can only hope a visual will settle the problem."

The four youngest boys stormed out of the bathroom. Approaching Jennifer and possessively wrapping his arms around Jennifer's arm, Dewi sternly told Geoff and Richie, "My mammy!"

"You're all correct," Jennifer helplessly smiled at the forceful tone of voice and thoroughly disgusted expression on her new son's face. Now she only had to wait for Preston to make it official.

Geoff frowned and wondered, "How can that be?"

Jim said, "Gather around me and I'll show you." All four boys hurried to either side of Jim's chair. He then pointed to the little bubble characters he had drawn then said, "This is me and this is my wife," He connected the first two bubble characters with a line.

Dewi wondered, "Hows come ya don't got a willie and Mammy ain't got boobies?"

Jim grinned, "I forgot," then rapidly drew the correct body parts.

Noticing the oversized breasts and penis her husband had drawn, Jennifer grinned, "We will discuss your artistic interpretations later."

"I'll look forward to that," Jim grinned, but then continued on with his explanation. "This is Keith and this is Drew and this is John. They are our sons so we're their mommy and daddy, correct?" All the boys nodded, so Jim drew lines connecting each to the line between himself and Jennifer's exaggerated caricature. He then added appropriate appendages between his son's legs before Dewi asked about it. "Along comes Preston. He falls in love with Keith. And here's Corey falling in love with Drew. Here's Stephen, the new boy that loves John." Three new connecting lines were drawn. "Remember Saturday morning, when Joel made us part of Clan Short?"

Again the boys nodded, but Dewi frowned, "I wasn't 'round."

"But here you are, Dewi, and here's Kokaku, Bruce and Carmella." Jim drew four new lines connecting them to himself and Jennifer. Circling the entire row of kids, Jim said, "Everyone in this group are our sons and daughter. Now that we're Clan, Keith and Preston adopt Richie, Dee, Gage and Sammy." Quickly, more lines connected those four to the line between Prez and Keith. "Over here is you, Geoff. You're Drew and Corey's boy, correct?"

"Yup!" Geoff proudly declared, "dems my Dad and Pop!"

Again Jim circled that entire row, saying, "This is two rows away from me and my wife so everybody here are our grandsons. So you see, you are all correct." Gesturing at Geoff and Richie, Jim said, "You guys are our grandsons." Turning to Dewi and Kokaku, Jim said, "Since you're only one group away, you're our sons." Cutting off the inevitable argument over which is best, Jim said, "Everybody here is our family. You're all the best things that ever happened to us."

Obviously satisfied, Richie hollered at the ceiling, "Daileass, a bowl of Cocoa Puffs with milk."

"I can get you breakfast, Richie," Jennifer softly said. "I can get all of you breakfast."

Daileass giggled, "It's really all right, Mrs. Hundser, but I'll meet you halfway." On the dining room table appeared boxes of Cocoa Puffs, Coco Pops, Fruit Loops, Frosties, a gallon of cold milk, ten bowls and ten spoons. Daileass giggled, "In the dining room, guys. All you have to do is pour, Mrs. Hundser."

All the boys turned around to look. Dewi squealed in delight; "COCO POPS! I LOVE Coco Pops!" He then ran into the room and wiggled his way into the nearest chair. As if Dewi had rung the meal bell, Carmella came down stairs as fast as she could. The other five boys in the bathroom raced to the table and squirmed into chairs.

Walking into the dining room with her husband, Mrs. Hundser said, "Thank you, Daileass."

"You're very welcome," Daileass giggled.

Opening the first box of cereal, Mrs. Hundser said, "We really need to get to know each other better, don't we?"

"I'd like that," Daileass replied, and then added, "I do have some information for you and Mr. Hundser."

Pouring cereal for Dewi and then beginning to add milk, Jennifer queried, "Oh?"

"Neither of you really need to hurry to work," Daileass said.

"About six hours ago, Teri Short began making phone calls. She has already found replacements for both of your old jobs. To Teri, Clan Short is the primary concern. She realizes you're both juggling too many eggs."

Dewi looked up and carefully said, "Mammy? The milk?"

Jennifer Hundser looked down and gasped as she realized she had poured too much milk. It had overflowed out of the bowl and onto the table. Dewi instinctively flinched, ready for a whipping. But Jennifer only apologized, "I'm sorry, Dewi. Mommy was distracted." Dewi looked up awestruck at Jennifer. Dewi began to realize more completely that his old mammy was bad and this new mammy was really nice.

Dealing with new Clan adults was familiar to Daileass. He disconnected himself from the speakers while he cracked up and cleaned up the mess. Dewi was provided a fresh bowl of Coco Pops with milk.

The two adults glanced at each other occasionally while feeding the hungry kids. They then went to the living room, sat down and sighed. Jim Hundser then looked up and softly called, "Daileass?"

Only just beginning to calm down, Daileass choked back a giggle and said, "Yes Sir?"

"I'll be honest with you, we're conflicted. We've worked all our adult lives."

Jennifer Hundser added, "We carefully chose our careers and enjoy the work we do."

"Pardon me, but all that is obvious," Daileass said. "Your sons and foster son are testament to your values and abilities as parents."

Joel and his team saw it; Donnie, Emily, Adam and all the UNIT here saw it; the Northeast division kids and their families saw it; Cory Short, his brothers and their sons saw it yesterday. I can assure you, Teri Short did not have to pull any strings. The hospital and legal firm were both very willing to concede to Clan Short priorities. Not because you're bad employees, but because you found work with employers that care as much about children and justice as you both do. It's guaranteed you'll both get your final paychecks. All you both need to do is a little turnover to make sure your replacements are up to speed on the cases you're working on. Once you and your replacements are comfortable, come back home, check on the kids then go over to the FYS building. According to my records, there will be sixty ex-C.P.S. employees looking for work either today or over the next few days. You have work to do here. Your sons have been working their cute butts off the last three days. If you'll please go over to the sofa, I'll show you your sons in action."

The Hundserts moved across the room to the sofa. The television turned on. Daileass played video with audio of the rescues at Maui, Hawaii and Ewa Beach. All ten kids at the table finished their breakfasts and joined the adults in the living room watching their fathers or older brothers doing what they do. Each of the kids recognized Prez, Keith, Mike, Derrick, Drew, Corey, John and even Kaleo. Most amazing was Kaleo at Hawaii dealing with Bill Devine and Prez at the Ewa Beach main gate greeting the street kids.

When the clips were complete, Daileass seriously told them; "Stephen's only a little empathic, but a very sensitive kid. He was frightened beyond adequate description until he met John. They complement each other in ways no one in the Clan has seen before. Every relationship is unique and so is theirs. John stayed awake talking with Stephen and reassuring him until one in the morning. Drew and Corey were home about eleven-forty-five, but stayed with John and Stephen until they were ready for bed. Mike and Derrick didn't make it to the nest until two-forty in the morning. Prez, Keith and Kaleo were working until almost three. Then they talked and released some tension by goofing around until ten minutes after three. Then they all went to bed.

"It's yours, The Gibbons', The Seavers' and The Seiberts' values coming out through them. Each of them do their bit just like their parents do. Your jobs are here with Clan Short now."

Jim turned to Jennifer and said, "It was highly likely that we'd be doing turnovers to replacements anyway. Teri just expedited things."

"The six-hour time difference is keeping lines of communication limited," Daileass reminded. "It's already after two in the afternoon in Orlando." After a moment's pause, Daileass said, "Stand by please." Another few moments passed then Daileass said, "Teri Short is having a conversation regarding Pacific Rim Division. Joel wants to visit. He was rather insistent about it. Now they're deciding when. If they decide before you leave for work, I'll let you know when they'll be arriving." Daileass then transported two comm-badges to the coffee table and added, "If you've left for work, I can contact you when Teri arrives with these communications devices. Would you like training now?"

Jennifer said, "I've seen the boys just tapping them when they chirp."

"Keep them with you at all times, preferably on your shirt or blouse. They're also tracking devices. That's all you really need to know for now," Daileass said.

The Hundserts chanted, "Thank you, Daileass."

Jennifer added, "We'll get ready for our last day of work now."

"Any time," Daileass giggled, "Hey, kids, ya wanna see something really kewl?" Ten different positive replies burst forth from the living room. "John is awake. Go downstairs and check it out."

All the kids hurried back down to the basement. Any chance of the others in the nest remaining asleep was shattered when ten kids began squealing excitedly at the sight of John and Stephen, still horizontal, but hovering four feet off the floor. Forcing his eyes open, Keith saw them, groaned and pulled a pillow over his face. Some of the other kids that hadn't seen it before rubbed their eyes, then bounded up. Carmella, Dewi and Kokaku were underneath John, jumping up and poking him in the back, amazed that the couple were moving higher from the pokes, but then slowly lowering down again. John and Stephen began laughing hysterically into their kiss and suddenly lowered to only about a foot above the nest.

Still lying down, Mike began singing; "Got a crazy feeling I don't understand, Gotta get away from here."

Derrick and Prez joined in and sang along. "Feelin' like I shoulda kept my feet on the ground. Waitin' for the sun to appear. Mamma's gonna worry, I been a bad, bad boy." At that line, John howled laughing while the others continued singing. "No use sayin' sorry, It's something that I enjoy. 'Cause you can't see what my eyes see."

Lifting the pillow off his face, Keith sang; "I can see it, I can see it!" then joined the others singing; "And you can't be inside of me, flying high again!"

While the band continued singing, John began telekinetically lifting the kids. Imitating his parents, Bruce crossed his legs into the lotus position and hummed. Since the band were still singing through the screeching rug rats, John warned Stephen of what was about to happen then powered up and lifted his brothers, Corey, Reyes, Mike and Derrick.

Seeing the pretty bright blue shining from John's eyes, Stephen wasn't frightened since he'd been warned, but was thrilled nonetheless. Kissing John caused the couple and everyone else to float higher. Raising one arm and touching the ceiling, Reyes finally began laughing loudly at the situation.

Finished singing, Keith asked, "Hey bro, I don't suppose you could float my lazy ass up and into the shower?" Prez cackled at the question from his way overtired lover.

John was not able or willing to respond since he was kissing Stephen so he sent; 'I prob'ly could, but can't guarantee you won't bump into a few walls on the way.'

"Oh well," Keith sighed, "never mind then."

Mike stretched then yawned, "Coffee; I must have coffee and lots of it."

Derrick asked, "Hey Prez, do you think we could get Doc Andrews to give us a shot of B vitamins?"

"I don't see why not," Prez replied.

Derrick said, "Coffee will get me through the concert, but I'll be draggin' ass after that."

Drew sweetly called his brother and asked, "Let us down, please?"

Powering down, everyone began lowering back to the floor and Stephen slowed his tickling of John's tongue. Soon, everyone was down on the cushions and pillows on the floor.

Some of the little girls that had not yet been to the bathroom raced up the stairs before the giggling boys had a clue they needed to go. All four bathrooms had been occupied by the girls and there were already lines formed. Having a revelation, James Hahn told Bane Kahele; "Dorms!"

"And quick!" Bane giggled. Then the two boys raced out of the house in their boxer shorts and directly to the dormitory with their Teddy Bears struggling to keep up.

Remaining in the basement nest were the Core Rimmers, their sons, two new little brothers and Carmella.

"Hey, John?" Corey sweetly called. "Can I ask a favor?"

"Yeah?"

"If I kissed Drew right now, could you... you know?"

John giggled, "Sure!"

Rolling over on top of Drew, Corey chanted, "Ready?"

John grinned, "Set!"

"Go!" Corey said, then quickly kissed Drew. The couple began levitating and settled about four feet off the floor with their blanket draped over them.

Standing up, Geoff giggled happily then jumped up and pushed his fathers a little higher, but only for a moment.

Derrick hummed then said, "There's one minor issue with this activity."

"Only one?" Mike cackled.

"Oh?" John wondered. He then turned his head towards Derrick and asked, "What's wrong, bro?"

Pointing up at Drew and Corey, Derrick smirked, "Drew's naked!"

Prez, Keith and their boys chuckled, but Mike teased, "Why are you looking?"

Derrick laughed, "My eyes are open and he's right there, barely four feet away and four feet up! It's not like I have much choice in the matter!" Corey simply changed his hold on Drew from the upper back to his buns and naturally, had to give them a firm squeeze through the blanket.

Drew broke the kiss and wondered, "What would happen if we rolled or moved, bro?"

John hummed then said, "You could, but I'll bet it would feel weird."

"Weird how?" Corey asked.

"There's nothing to push against at all," John reminded.

Stephen added, "When we're standing and kissing, our feet just dangle. There's nothing pushing or pulling us up. When we come back down slow, our toes touch the floor first."

Proudly smiling at his boyfriend's explanation, John said, "You and Drew would have to use only yourselves, your muscles working together to roll or move."

Drew softly asked Corey; "Ya wanna try?" Corey nodded then dove back down for another kiss. Together they rolled towards their left where Prez and Keith were with their boys. The blanket draped over Corey's back fell on top of Prez, Sammy and Richie.

Prez laughed and Richie giggled hysterically, completely covered by the blanket.

Pulling the blanket off his face and seeing way more of his Uncle Corey than he wanted, Sammy snickered, "That's just wrong!"

Keith cracked up, setting off Dee and Gage in fits of giggles.

Mike sat up and said, "I can wait no longer. Coffee is what I seek!" He and Derrick stood, found their boardies and put them on then were followed by their sons to the stairs. "We'll meet you dudes after breakfast," Mike said.

On their way up, Derrick wondered, "The Scoobies are already gone?"

Mike shrugged, "Sixteen to twenty hours sleep is what I read is normal for ferrets."

Keith reminded, "They're ferret-human hybrids though."

"They get by on much less, like three," Mike said, "They go to sleep with us, but are already gone when we wake."

"Five hours is all we got," Derrick figured. "We'll have to ask them if they're sleeping enough." The family went through the kitchen then out the back door on their way home for breakfast and showers.

Keith sat up and pulled the blanket off of Richie. Keith suspiciously grinned, "What're you doin'?"

"Hidin' from Unca Corey's butt!" Richie giggled. John and Stephen cracked up.

Drew said, "Let us down, bro."

John shook his head and teased, "I dunno. I was thinking of leaving you there. A hundred Rimmers might like to see this. Fifty cents a pop times a hundred is fifty bucks! Can you meet the fifty?"

Wickedly smiling, Corey warned, "We haven't got you back for yesterday, John. An opportunity will present itself."

Drew agreed, "It's even more likely now that you've got a boyfriend too."

Realizing that he and Stephen could someday be caught in a compromising situation, John huffed, "Oh, all right," then lowered Corey and Drew to the nest.

Getting up, Prez and Keith pulled on their boardies. Prez found his T-shirt and tapped his comm-badge. "Doc Andrews?"

A moment later, the Doctor replied, "Good morning, Preston."

"I've got a small favor to ask, Doc. We were up late and now we're awake early. There's a concert today we need to be alert and functioning for. Could we get shots of B vitamins, please?"

The Doctor hummed thoughtfully then answered, "I have an alternative idea. An additional Doctor from Starfleet has been assigned to our division by Doctor Leonard McCoy. Doctor Elaine Howard is with me now."

The woman then said, "Hello, Preston. I've been briefed about all the children here. Since I arrived at six local time, I worked with the chefs already. I recommend that you go to the CIC for highly nutritious breakfast shakes. They were developed by Doctor McCoy. The shakes are excellent for malnourished and undernourished children, but they wouldn't do the rest of you any harm."

"Excellent!" Prez chirped. "I look forward to meeting you, Doctor Howard."

Doctor Andrews said, "We're on our way to the CIC dining room now, Preston."

"We'll meet you there," Prez said.

"Andrews out."

Keith suggested, "How about we take our boys to the dorm showers, baby?"

Prez agreed, "Six of us could get done more quickly."

Drew checked with Corey then said, "We'll join you with Geoff."

Glancing around at the youngest kids, Prez asked, "Did you guys eat already?"

While most of the kids nodded or simply answered 'Yeah,' Dewi bounced around happily about his Coco Pops.

Keith scooped up Carmella and asked, "Did our little sister get a bath last night?"

Carmella giggled, "Uh huh, Mommy gave me a bath b'fore bed."

"Excellent!" Keith cheered, then asked, "Do you need help getting dressed?"

Shaking her head, Carmella answered, "I can do ev'rythin' 'cept tie sneakers. Mommy'll help me."

Keith put his sister down and she hurried up the stairs.

John noticed that Stephen had a worried expression on his face. Being malnourished and underdeveloped for his age, he wasn't in any rush to be naked around a bunch of other boys.

'It's okay, Stephen,' John sent, 'We'll stay here and shower together.' Feeling Stephen's continued trepidation, John paused then sent, 'I would never ever make fun of you!'

Nodding, Stephen smiled, "Let's go," then got up off of John.

Sitting up and standing, John said, "We'll meet you at the dining room," then sent to his brothers and Corey, 'Do not tease us in any way! I can deal, but Stephen can't.'

Everyone nodded and Keith said, "Kewl, bro."

While everyone was climbing the stairs, Prez brought up the rear and tapped his sub-vocal. "Daileass, are Derrick and Mike in the shower already?"

"A very hot shower," Daileass giggled, "they're steaming up the camera lens."

Prez grinned, "I was going to have you tell them to meet us at the CIC dining room, but I'd better do it."

"Patch complete, Prez," Daileass giggled.

"Dudes!" Prez called. "Breakfast at the CIC today. Doc Andrews has some vitamin fortified shakes for us that will keep us goin'."

Over the sound of the running shower, Mike asked, "No shots?"

"He and the new Doc say the shakes will be enough."

Derrick asked, "When did we get a new doctor?"

"It sounds like she was here at the crack of dawn."

Daileass loudly laughed to only Prez, "Don't say 'crack'!"

Derrick said, "A lady doctor? That's especially good for all the girls."

"Exactly what I was thinking," Prez shared.

Mike said, "We'll meet you for breakfast then."

"Later," Prez chirped. Walking around the main floor of the house, Prez grinned, "Draco?"

Draco replied, "How can I help you, Prez?"

Prez snickered, "You need to keep Daileass more occupied, if you get my meaning?"

"He does!" Daileass playfully assured.

Draco replied, "It's our job to watch everything. Daileass just gets a bit more enthusiastic about the job."

"I can't help myself!" Daileass giggled.

"Someday!" Draco warned.

While John and Stephen went upstairs, Corey, Drew, Geoff,

Keith, Prez and their four boys went outside then began walking to the dorm. Now that they were finally alone, John asked Stephen, "Did you get to eat three times a day?"

Stephen shook his head and sadly answered, "Never. Usually once a day at school. Every now and then, there'd be something at home; usually peanut butter and jelly sandwiches, sometimes Ramen noodles."

"Everything's gonna be fine now," John confidently assured, then stepped into his bedroom and pulled his T-shirt off. "I forgot your clothes," John griped. He then said, "Daileass, where's Stephen's suitcase?"

Daileass replied, "Outside your house, John."

"Transport it here, to my bedroom, dude," John said. "From now on, he's with me." The suitcase appeared beside the bed. Stephen smiled and shook his head. "What?" John grinned.

"I just don't know what I stepped in or when I stepped in it," Stephen honestly shared. The two boys began undressing and Stephen said, "Sunday, my mom and me moved out of our apartment because we had to. We slept in the car that night. After we talked all morning and most of the afternoon, she dropped me off at the Clan base in Hawaii late yesterday afternoon. The security guys there fed us. It was a big sandwich, a salad, a pint of milk, an apple and cookies. It was more food than I've ever had at once. I couldn't even finish all the sandwich. The other guys there ate all their food and one took my salad, another took the apple and another took my cookies."

Obviously annoyed, John excitedly asked, "They took them from you?"

"No, sorry. I hadn't touched 'em so, when they asked for them, I gave them away."

"Oh, that's okay."

Already naked, John led Stephen, still in his threadbare briefs, to the bathroom. "This house is huge!" Stephen loudly giggled.

John nodded and went to the toilet. "It's bigger than the house we used to have." Pointing his dick at the bowl and beginning to pee, John glanced at Stephen. "Don't ya have to go?"

Stephen blushed, "I'll wait."

Wondering what he could say, John sighed, "Com'ere." Stephen took a few steps closer, but remained away from the bowl. John patiently explained, "Our other house had two bathrooms; it was less than half the size of this house. My parents, Keith, Prez, Drew and me all lived there. Us guys learned to share a bowl if we needed to."

"Didn't you ever feel embarrassed?"

"No," John chortled, "what's worse, pissin' your pants or sharing a toilet?"

Stephen giggled, "Pissing your pants."

Finished leaking, John flushed the bowl then turned to Stephen. "We're boys; we all got dicks. Prez moved in after his folks died. He's two weeks older than Keith, but Keith's dick is a bit longer than Prez's. I've seen Drew and Corey too. They're older than me and each of their dicks is different than mine. Prez and Mike are the only two on the team that have circumcised dicks. My friends Jeff and Tommy are my age and even their dicks are different than mine. I saw yours last night and it's a bit longer than mine. We're all different some way or another; there's nothin' to be ashamed of."

Stephen blushed, "I just never had brothers or did stuff like this before."

"It's okay, I just want you to feel more comfortable," John said. He went to the tub and turned the water on then turned back to Stephen. Finally out of his briefs and naked, Stephen was relieving himself. John said, "You'll see at the pool later, at least half the guys here swim naked. An added benefit is not having to stay in wet shorts. It don't matter to any of us who sees our dicks. There's girls and adult women around too. When you see a dude suddenly running for his shorts and putting them on, you know what's happened?"

Giggling hysterically, Stephen nodded then reached to flush. Facing John again, Stephen blushed, "He got a stiffy?"

John laughed, "Some of the little dudes don't even care about that."

"They don't know better," Stephen offered.

John led Stephen by the hand into the tub saying, "We do though." Stephen slid the door closed then John turned on the shower. After wetting himself down under the spray, John moved around Stephen to allow him to get wet. Grabbing the soap while Stephen's back was turned, John then began washing Stephen's neck, shoulders and upper arms. "My brothers are gay," John explained, "I never thought of myself as gay or straight, because I don't honestly know, but it don't matter to my family. What's inside a person matters way more than the outside. All I know is I care about you, Stephen. Your past is past. You're gonna get healthier. Someday you're going to grow and maybe get taller than me. It don't matter to me how tall you might get. All that matters is you getting better, being comfortable here with all the kids and with me."

Choking back his sobs, Stephen said, "John? I told you they teased and bullied me at school. It's because I like boys and they figured it out. I guess I act girly and seem gay."

"First of all, I see a boy in front of me," John seriously said. He then asked, "How does anybody seem gay? Does Keith? Does Prez? Or Drew or Corey? Or me for that matter?"

"No, I'm just different from a lot of boys."

"Yup, you're so different that I fell for you. You're so different that you can make me a more powerful N-Gen. You heard what they said, Stephen. I just have to figure out how to control it." Feeling that Stephen was frightened again, John said, "Turn around."

"I can't."

"Are you crying?"

Stephen nodded.

"Why?"

Stephen shrugged, "Because they were so mean and you're so nice. Because I'm falling in love with you and I'm scared you won't love me back."

John softly begged, "Please turn around?" Stephen huffed then did as John asked. Their eyes locked for a moment then they noticed the other had an erection. John blushed, "From washing you, baby."

Still upset, but because John was similarly aroused, Stephen helplessly giggled, "It felt real nice."

Blushing crimson, John admitted, "I was beginning to worry too. All them hugs and kisses last night and we never got hard."

"You're not angry or nothin'?"

Shaking his head, John admitted, "A little scared too now."

"Of?"

John shrugged, "I think I'm falling in love with you too. I wanna hold you so bad but..."

Before John could finish speaking, Stephen stepped closer and wrapped his arms around John.

John gasped, "Omigod!"

"So warm," Stephen sighed, and then tenderly kissed John.

The communications between Daileass and Draco were flying at the speed of light. Daileass giggled, "Do you think they'll float?"

"It don't really matter," Draco sniggered, "I'm just glad for their sake the house is empty."

"They're getting awfully loud," Daileass laughed.

"Above the shower door, is that the top of John's head?" Draco wondered.

"I think so. They're floating again."

"And calling each other's names as if they've forgotten who's who."

"Uh oh!" both AIs grunted in unison.

Daileass giggled, "Thank goodness you put the padded ceilings in."

Draco laughed, "John would be unconscious by now."

Daileass began counting the numbers of times John's head hit the ceiling. "Six... seven... eight..."

"Nine... ten, eleven, twelve... thirteen..."

"Where'd they go?"

"They're laughing. End of round one, intermission."

"Do you think they'll finish their shower or go for it again?"

"Dunno," Draco giggled, "I've activated the backup water heater, just in case."

By this time, Drew, Corey, Prez and Keith and their sons had finished their showers at the dorm and were walking into the CIC kitchen. The prior day's dirty clothes had been transported home by Daileass. A new display had been added at the kitchen entrance to help kids choose their breakfasts. It showed pictures of the various ways eggs could be prepared, breakfast sandwiches, and waffles versus pancakes. Keith and Prez greeted the chefs. Prez asked, "What's the story behind these shakes?"

"Doctor Howard ordered them," Charles replied. He then explained for the boys, "There are several flavors: chocolate, cinnamon, vanilla, butterscotch, eggnog, apple, cherry, lemon-lime, mango, pineapple, orange and strawberry. Each of the flavors can be mixed with others for variety. Many of the kids have tried apple and cinnamon for an apple pie flavored shake; others have tried various mixed fruit flavors. We can offer small sample cups."

Looking down at his sons, Keith asked, "What flavor would you guys like?"

Richie delightfully squealed, "We can have shakes for breakfast now?"

Chuckling at their youngest son's enthusiasm, Keith and Prez nodded.

Gage quickly asked, "Can I try the apple pie?"

Sammy said, "I'll try chocolate and strawberry."

Dee hummed uncertainly then said, "Chocolate?"

Richie asked, "What's scutterbotch?"

Prez and Keith helplessly laughed at the mispronunciation. Charles grinned, "It's a very sweet candy flavor."

Gage grinned at Richie and explained, "Butterscotch and chocolate would taste like a candy bar, bro."

"ALL RIGHT!" Richie cheered. "Dat's what I'll have!"

Charles went to work getting small sample cups made for each of the four boys and quickly returned. Prez and Keith handed the appropriate cups to each of their boys. Each of them were pleased and ordered their shakes. Keith got a strawberry shake. Prez ordered a chocolate shake. Drew decided on a mixed fruit shake; lemon-lime, mango, pineapple and orange. The chef that prepared it remarked that it was the most unusual shake he had prepared thus far. Corey and Geoff had apple shakes.

Mike and Derrick came in with their boys, got their shakes and coffees then sat near Prez and Keith. Glancing around the dining room, the six Core Rimmers noticed that almost every table had only shake glasses. A lot of the glasses seemed to be less than half full and very few seemed to be empty. Fewer kids had plates of food.

Leaning back in his chair, Dee huffed and grinned, "Dunno if I can finish this."

Gage nodded, "My stomach's about to explode."

"They're just too good to not finish," Sammy smiled.

"Just do the best you can, guys," Prez suggested. "Don't overdo it, okay? Me and daddy could barely finish ours." Standing up, Prez glanced around until he found Doc Andrews sitting with an unfamiliar woman wearing a Starfleet uniform. Squeezing Keith's shoulder, Prez said, "I'll be right back, babe." Keith nodded and Prez went over to the table where Doc Andrews was sitting.

Doctor Andrews and Doctor Howard noticed Prez approaching and stood. The three of them shook hands and Prez grinned, "I have to ask, what's the deal with these shakes? I could barely finish mine and most of the kids seem to be struggling to finish theirs."

Doctor Howard smiled, "A sixteen ounce glass has the equivalent of ten times the Federation's Recommended Daily Allowance of vitamins and minerals in less than one thousand calories. They've been designed by Doctor McCoy for malnourished and undernourished children, but everyone can benefit from them."

Prez incredulously chuckled, "Ten times the RDA?"

Doctor Andrews asked, "You've met the new boy, Stephen Marr?"

Prez nodded, "Yes, I have. He and my brother John have latched onto each other."

"Even better," Doc Andrews said, "Stephen needs to drink as much as he can of those shakes twice a day until further notice."

"My son Dee is undernourished," Prez told them.

The two doctors glanced at each other. "Sit with us please, Preston," Doc Andrews smiled.

Prez sat down with them and Doc Howard said, "Most of your Clan is in good health, by the book, but they're not like you or your core teammates. What you've seen over the last few days are a bunch of kids that are happy to be out of the bad situations they've been in. They're most likely eating better than they ever have before and, because they're happy, they're burning those calories playing."

Doc Andrews added, "When you asked me for B vitamin shots earlier, I suggested these shakes because they have twenty times the RDA of B-1, B-6 and B-12."

Wide eyed, Prez laughed, "Twenty times? So the kids are going to be even more active?" Both doctors nodded.

"Who are those two boys drinking coffee with their shakes?" Doc Howard wondered.

"Mike Gibbons and Derrick Seibert," Prez answered. "They're part of my core team and band mates." Again the two Doctors grinned at each other. Prez asked, "Is something wrong?"

"No," Doc Howard smiled, "It's simply the combination of the shakes and the caffeine in the coffee."

Doc Andrews helplessly chuckled, "Your two friends will be high as a kite most of the day."

Prez cracked up then softly chortled, "Derrick's usually pretty mellow, but Mike is the exact opposite."

"Get a rope!" Doc Andrews laughed.

"Make it two, one for each of them!" Doc Howard giggled.

Seeing John and Stephen entering the CIC dining room, hovering a foot off the ground, Prez cackled, "Better make it four ropes," and pointed for the two Doctors to watch.

Jonathan Dupre hurried over to John. Jonathan reached for John and Stephen's shoulders then pushed them down to the floor. The second he released them, John and Stephen rose back up again. A few moments later, Jonathan loudly snickered, "Let go of each other!"

"Not on your life or anyone else's!" John laughed.

Prez noticed Derrick, Mike, Corey and Drew heading into the Command Center.

Jacob, Jamie and Beau hurried over to John and Stephen. In one voice, they said, "Watch what happens when they kiss." Stephen blushed and covered his eyes with his free hand as more kids gathered around.

Feeling his boyfriend's embarrassment, John loudly said, "Come on, you guys! Let us eat first."

Stephen then softly said something to John. Obviously, Stephen wanted to get it over with. He and John kissed then levitated, but much more quickly than Prez had previously seen.

"Draco!" Jacob loudly laughed. "Padded ceiling in the Rimmer's CIC dining room now!" The sixteen-foot-high ceiling in the dining room shimmered and changed just in the nick of time. When John's head bounced off of the ceiling, every kid in the room burst into applause and cheers. Slowly the couple returned to their previous location about a foot off the floor. They then went to the kitchen for their breakfasts.

"Psionics," Doc Howard muttered, "very interesting indeed."

Doc Andrews smiled, "This is good. Stephen needs someone that cares watching what he eats."

Before Prez could reply, he heard John in his mind. 'I already knew that, bro. I'll take care of Stephen.'

"John's already aware of it," Prez assured the doctors. "He'll watch over Stephen."

Kaleo, Tory, Sean and Horacio walked in soon after the large mass of kids that had been around John and Stephen scattered in various directions. Sean and Horacio went directly to the kitchen. Finding the first available chair and standing on it, Kaleo said over the PA system; "Can I have your attention please?" When the chatter lessened, Kaleo said, "Last night we received Clan Short ID cards and personal pre-paid credit cards. I need everybody to stay in the dining room after breakfast so we can get them handed out. Prez, do you want to tell everyone how the credit cards will work?"

Prez nodded then got up and stood on his chair. "As Kaleo said, these are pre-paid credit cards. That means you cannot exceed the amount available on the card. These cards are for you to purchase the miscellaneous things that you want; like things for your dorm rooms, posters, music, video games, and so forth.

"Everybody will get a default weekly allowance. In addition to the allowances, you can each take optional odd jobs of various sorts. I'll repeat, the odd jobs are optional. We're thinking simple stuff appropriate for all the age groups. For instance, little tikes can work with the landscapers cleaning up any litter around the grounds. Older guys and girls can do housekeeping chores or work in the kitchen. We especially need help in the kitchen, mopping floors and running the dishwasher. Our auditorium can be used as a movie theater too. We'll need projectionists and concession stand people. Any one that takes a job will be paid for the work they do. Remember always, you're kids; school and recreation come first, then you can spend time doing odd jobs. We'll work it so that you can do one job for a few hours, then take time for your other responsibilities until you decide that you want to work another few hours."

Prez paused then asked, "Are there any questions?"

Nine-year-old Makaio Ka'aukai asked, "We're really getting allowances, Prez?"

Prez nodded, "Yup. We want you guys to learn responsibility for yourselves, the work you've done and your money. You can't get everything you want all at once, you'll run out of money. That means priorities. What do you want most and do you have the money for it?"

Seven-year-old Lupe Jui said, "Clan Short already gives us everything, Prez. What else could we need or want?"

Prez answered, "If you like flowers and want a plant in your room, get a plant. If you like pictures of snow-capped mountains and want to see that every day, get a poster of a snow-capped mountain. If you're interested in building stuff, you can get model cars, ships or Starships. All the little, relatively inexpensive, miscellaneous stuff Clan Short doesn't provide is what you want to get for yourselves. If you want to be a musician and are taking guitar classes at our school, the Clan will get you a guitar. Remember, Christmas is coming soon too. Leave some stuff for us to get you for Christmas."

Thirteen-year-old Nicholas Shavers stood and said, "These odd jobs, can we spend time picking up garbage one day, and then a few days later mop floors, and then a day or two later run the dishwasher?"

"Exactly like that, Nick," Prez replied. "We're thinking it takes a certain physical ability to do some stuff, so those jobs require older and bigger kids. However, for picking up litter around the base, we have over seven hundred acres on this base and everyone can participate in that." Prez waited for a while for another question. Since none were asked, Prez said, "Please make life easy for Kaleo and those that will be handing out the IDs and credit cards? Form lines, wait your turn and do what Kaleo and the others tell you to do. Keith, Derrick, Mike and I will be leaving for school soon, but will only be gone an hour and a half. Kaleo, Drew, Corey and John will be here with you guys."

Prez got down off the chair and the chatter level quadrupled. The kids were obviously excited about having their own money to spend. He then welcomed Doctor Howard to Hawaii and the Pacific Rim Division before explaining there were a few 'Director' things he needed to check on in the Command Center.

Stepping inside the Command Center, Prez heard Keith and the others complaining. "What's going on?" Prez wondered.

Drew sighed, "There's virtually nothing about the Human Liberation Front, Prez."

Keith said, "They've taken responsibility for various things, but so have other militant groups and terrorists. What's real and what's not? Are they full of shit and wanna-be bad guys or are they the real thing?"

"Even the US FBI and CIA public published reports come up empty," Derrick added.

"Okay," Prez said, "We've got Clan Short Intel divisions, the VSO and the UNIT. Share what we've learned with the other divisions and we'll take it from there." Prez started to reach for his comm-badge to call John, but then it surprisingly chirped. He tapped it and said, "Prez here."

Through the comm-badge, John said, "Stephen and me are having breakfast with Nathan and the Terrible Triplets." The three boys blew loud raspberries at John then began giggling. John chuckled, "Everything you, Keith and Drew said and heard, I heard too, Prez. When we're done here, we'll go in there. Jamie, Jacob and Beau want to show me some Intel stuff anyway."

Prez sighed then grinned, "We're gonna have to have a long talk about what you can and cannot hear from us, bro."

John honestly said, "Keith and Drew are the loudest and you're just behind them, Prez. Mom, Dad, Mike, Derrick, Corey, Bruce, Dewi and now Stephen are in my head too. It's just a matter of how much I want to pay attention to any of you." Keith and Drew locked eyes and began thinking of John hearing their thoughts. John huffed impatiently then his eyes blazed azure blue as he lifted Keith and Drew till their heads bumped against the ceiling.

Keith and Drew simultaneously screamed, "JOHN!"

Two twelve-year-old boys walked into the Command Center and grinned at the other two hovering almost three feet off the ground. A younger boy was with them.

Jamie, Jacob, Beau and Nathan cracked up. Still drinking his shake, Stephen glanced at John and the other four boys at their table wondering what was so funny. John evilly grinned, "What did I just say? Who can I hear loudest? Any more questions about what I can hear?"

Looking up at Keith and Drew, Prez chuckled, "No more plotting against our little brother, I guess."

John snickered, "Only if you want the table suddenly turned on you," and then put his brothers back on the floor. His eyes returned to light brown and he finished his shake then said, "Later, bros."

One of the two boys introduced himself to the Core Rimmers. "I'm Caleb Barnes." Pulling the younger boy close, Caleb proudly smiled, "This is Hunter."

The other boy waved, "I'm Noah Barnes. Your new AI is online. His name is Alden."

After each of the Core Rimmers greeted the two boys, Caleb explained, "We're running him through a few tests now, but he'll be available soon."

Prez explained that they had a concert at school and had to leave, but looked forward to chatting during the afternoon. Derrick and Mike struck up a conversation with Caleb and Noah regarding Reyes. Once Caleb was up to date, he tapped his comm-badge with an evil grin. "Hey Marc! You know, for being a gay Android you sure gotta lot o' kids. You sure you ain't Bi?"

"I told you all that sugar would rot your brain," Marc replied. "What tangent has that warped mind of yours drifted off on this time?"

"I guess that means Austin didn't tell you his big bro showed up, did he?" Caleb giggled. "Are you sure that all you and Danny were doing is sailing?"

"Stuff it, Shrimp!" Marc exclaimed, his blush obvious. "I already know where KC is; I put a tracker on him, so I don't have to hunt him down next time he knocks himself out."

Caleb shook his head. "His other big brother, oh thou of the defective memory! Never mind; you and Danny get some clothes on, we're bringing back company."

"Whatever... unlike you two, we have some decency! Marc out!"

Drew fixed his hair and complained to Keith, "Life's definitely not the same anymore."

Keith nodded at Drew and sighed then reminded Prez, "We gotta move into the townhouse soon, baby."

"Where we're at prob'ly doesn't make a whole heckova lot o' difference," Prez realized. He then went over to Staff Sergeant Jimmy Hayes and asked, "What've you got for us this morning, Jimmy?"

"Nothin' serious, Prez," Jimmy responded. "There's some pending investigations around the Rim that the AIs are still reviewing. The only other thing worth mentioning is a car accident further up North Road, where it turns into 12th Street."

"Was anyone hurt?" Prez worried.

Jimmy explained, "A single vehicle lost control. Four adult males including the driver got out of the Mercedes. We never saw where the men went. Within an hour, a tow truck removed the car."

Prez silently wondered, a Mercedes lost control with four men less than a thousand feet from the base? "We're kewl until eleven-thirty then?" Prez asked.

"Should be fine, Prez," Jimmy replied.

"Please notify our security we'll need to leave for school soon," Prez ordered.

"Got it," Jimmy chirped and then began contacting the eight personal security guards.

"Kaleo's got the ball, guys," Prez loudly said to everyone present. "Drew, Corey and John will be here too if anything gets weird."

Tilting his head and appearing thoughtful, Jimmy softly and slowly repeated, "If... anything... gets... weird?"

Prez grinned, "Okay, weirder."

Derrick joked, "There is a limit to the definition of 'weird', and I think we breezed past that about two days ago."

The Command Center's door opened and John came in with Stephen, Nathan and the Terrible Triplets. At John's appearance mere seconds after his name was mentioned, Keith and Drew shook their heads sadly. First thing, John and his entourage greeted Caleb and Noah. John went to Derrick and Mike and asked, "Do you remember the names of the street kids rescued last night?" Derrick and Mike both nodded. "Thanks," John smiled appreciatively. "We got ID cards for everyone except the ones we picked up last night." Spinning around to face Prez, John said, "Jamie, Jacob and Beau are gonna show me how to fill out forms for ID cards. Then we're gonna find a new voice for the computer; this one sounds too much like my Principal at school. Another thing we're gonna do is see if we can find out Kaleo's birthday." Prez smiled at John. Their eyes locked and Prez heard John say; 'I know, a Mercedes lost control close to our base. Is that just too weird or what? We're gonna dig deep to learn what we can about the HLF too.'

Prez cackled, "If there's anything else, you'll let me know?"

"That about covers it, bro," John smiled.

Keith begged, "Please don't change our computer's voice to Woody Woodpecker or something dumb like that. Find something kewl we can all understand."

The Triplets all moaned, "Aww! Woody's kewl!" and then they all began laughing like Woody.

"We're outta here, dudes," Prez chuckled. Keith was closest to the door and opened it for Caleb, Hunter, Noah, Mike, Derrick and then Prez to pass before he followed them out of the Command Center. Derrick stopped at the table where his boys were sitting to tell Reyes that he needed to go with Caleb and Noah, to AI Division headquarters in South Carolina for a checkup. Jonah said that he would go with Reyes.

As the team passed through the dining room, many of the kids greeted each of them by name and gave them words of encouragement for their upcoming concert. Feeling a chill race down his spine, Prez waited until they were gathered outside before sharing; "Thank goodness they're all chilling out. I don't wanna be on any friggin' pedestal. When people on pedestals screw up, it's a big crash to all that put the person up so high to begin with."

"They're recovering, baby," Keith assured. "The better they feel as individuals, the more they'll see you as just another teenager."

Prez nodded and smiled then glanced around at the security guys. Other than the short military hairstyles the guys had, they looked like any other teen boys. Prez confirmed, "All set, dudes?" Receiving positive replies, Prez tapped his sub-vocal, "Let's jam, Daileass. Outside our school's main entrance, please." For the first time, Daileass didn't reply, but simply followed the order. In front of his school, Prez frowned, "You okay, Daileass?"

"Sorry Prez," Daileass replied. "I'm a bit preoccupied with Alden and trying to make heads or tails out of some real screwy accounting records."

They all began walking towards the school. Prez said, "I'm okay if you are, dude. It's just not like you to say nothing."

To the entire group, Daileass giggled; "On the tits of a barmaid named Gayle, Were tattooed prices of beer, stout, and Ale. And on her behind, For the sake of the blind, Was precisely the same, but in Braille."

In an emulated Irish accent, Draco playfully sang to them; "There was a young gigolo named Bruno, Who said, 'Screwing's one thing I do know. While women are fine, and sheep are divine, Llamas are numero uno!'"

In fits of hysterics, the group came to a halt before the school's entrance. Prez roared, "I'm so glad I mentioned it now!"

The boys went inside the school and a new voice, their new AI, Alden, obviously now online, continued reciting dirty limericks. "An agreeable girl named Miss Doves, Likes to fondle the young men she loves. She will use her bare fist, if the fellows insist, but she really prefers to wear gloves."

Daileass giggled, "There was a young man named Dave, Who kept a dead whore in a cave. Said he, 'I'll admit, She does smell a bit, But look at the money I save!'"

Outside the main office in tears, the boys heard Draco sing; "There was a young Scotsman called Andy, Who knocked over his bottle of Shandy. He lifted his kilt, To wipe up what he spilt, and the barmaid said 'Blimey! That's handy!'"

"We give! We give!" Derrick laughed.

Daileass got in one final shot. "What're you giving away?"

"Catch me at home in the bathroom, I'll show you!" Derrick giggled.

"Woo-Hoo!" Alden, Daileass and Draco giggled. Then they began arguing who would see what first.

Checking his watch and realizing the time, Keith chuckled, "We really gotta get movin', dudes."

* * * * *

About ten o'clock, Mike's dad, Rob Gibbons, transported from Honolulu back to the Federation Youth Services building with his security contingent. He was now officially the Rimmer Liaison to Honolulu Police. The gorilla decided to stay with Rob when he went inside. His wife Laura, Derrick's mom and Corey's dad, Anna and Bill, were performing interviews of ROH Ex-C.P.S. workers. Miguel was doing interviews with chefs. The two doctors were meeting with nurses and receptionists. Landscapers were also doing interviews. Lanna Seaver and Carl Seibert were watching over the kids by the pool, diving well and the newly installed playground. Rob did a quick head count of people waiting in the lobby and came up with twenty-four.

During the time Prez, Keith, Mike and Derrick were at school, Drew and Corey were in the server room, creating the Rimmers' web site. After confirming that Apache was already set up on the Linux server, Drew began writing the web pages. Corey handled creating the graphics with the Gimp program. The entrance page contained a GIF of a large ring of fire. In the center of the ring was a graphic of the Pacific Rim. They built the menu options across the top and had each catch on fire (or 'flame up', as Corey playfully explained to Drew) when the mouse pointer hovered over the individual options.

John and Nathan were getting all the newest Rimmers entered into the system as Clan members so they could get ID and credit cards as quickly as possible. After John had gotten his boyfriend's information entered into the system, he and Nathan continued with the other boys picked up at Hawaii, the younger FCC kids, and then the group Keith and Prez had picked up late the previous night. It took about half an hour to complete that task.

Then John began going through the various available computer voices. John liked the Terminator voice at first, but after a brief demonstration of the computer reading the Gettysburg Address, John grimaced then searched the list again. John softly rambled, "Bugs Bunny, Charlie Sheen, Chickenhawk, Goofy?" John grinned, "I gotta hear Goofy reading the Gettysburg Address," and everyone in the room began giggling before the computer said a word. While it was funny, John knew that Prez and Keith would quickly lose their patience waiting for Goofy to finish any short phrase. John re-sorted the list in a descending order. He found Zsa Zsa Gabor, Wolfman Jack, Victor Borge, Robert Redford and a bunch of others before finally hitting upon a winner that wouldn't make his brothers completely insane. John then played the demonstration of Foghorn Leghorn.

"Four score and sev, I say, seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. Pay attention, boy! Any o' this gettin' through that little blue bonnet of yours?"

"It's perfect!" John shouted, and spun around in the chair with his feet out and his arms up. "That's what my bros need; an occasional insult to keep them on their toes."

Stephen softly giggled, "You're plain evil, hon."

Slamming his feet down onto the floor, John smiled at Stephen and sent; 'Did you just call me hon? As in honey?' Blushing because he was around a bunch of boys he had only just met, Stephen grinned and slowly nodded. John got up and began walking over to his boyfriend.

Quickly moving to hold John back by his shoulders, Jacob giggled, "Oh, Draco!"

"Oh, what-o?" Draco playfully sang. John twisted and turned to get past Jacob.

Standing directly in front of Stephen as a last line of defense,

Jamie laughed, "They're gonna do it again!"

Beau crowed, "We need padded ceilings in here too, dude."

The ceiling shimmered briefly and Draco teased, "They're the most padded division in the Clan."

Jacob let go of John and jumped out of the way. Jamie moved away from Stephen. Without further delay, John quickly went to Stephen. The two boys wrapped their arms around each other and kissed. Quicker than they ever had before, they rose to the ceiling and hovered there for about thirty-seconds while the other boys in the Command Center looked on. John pushed so much appreciation and love to Stephen that he shed tears of joy. They drifted back down slowly. Once they had set foot on the floor, the Terrible Triplets began singing, "Slip sliding away, slip sliding away, You know the nearer your destination, the more you're slip sliding away!"

"Shush!" John giggled at the teasing triplets. "We still got Intel stuff to do." He then asked, "How can I find out Kaleo's birthday?"

"We need his feet," Jamie said.

Tilting his head curiously, John repeated, "His feet?"

Beau explained, "Every baby gets tiny foot prints taken and stamped on their birth certificates."

John tapped his comm-badge and asked, "Kaleo, you busy, bro?"

Kaleo replied, "Still got a bunch more cards to pass out, John."

Jacob said, "Hold a foot up to one of the cameras."

"Have your tootsies smile, Kaleo," Jamie giggled.

Kicking off one of his sandals, Kaleo put a foot up on a nearby empty table and said, "Cheese!"

John said, "Snap a photo of Kaleo's foot please, Alden."

"Even his feet are cute," Alden giggled. "It's snapped and on the Intel division console."

Beau instructed, "Now we check Hawaiian birth records."

John said, "He's as old as Keith so for 1990, right?"

Jamie said, "For 1989 too, just in case."

"He might be turning fifteen today for all we know," Jacob added.

John commanded, "Computer, search Republic of Hawaii birth certificates, years 1989 and 1990, using the supplied image for a boy named Kaleo Palakiko. Tell me the date of birth. Execute."

"Hold yer horses there buckaroo!" Foghorn replied, "The search will finish in about three minutes, boss."

While they waited, Jamie, Jacob, and Beau began showing John just how much access he really had. To start it off, they had a little fun, bringing up Admiral Morrow's test scores throughout his entire Starfleet career.

John giggled, "An Admiral with average test scores, mostly. But a 'D' in diplomacy? Puh-lease!"

"I kinda like him though," Beau grinned, as the 'D' suddenly turned into a 'C'. "I'm givin' him extra credit for dealin' with Cory!"

John smiled, "Can the change be traced back to us? Prez would get pissed off."

The three teachers giggled. "Naw, we give the VSO headaches tracing us. They are about the only ones that can pull it off." Jamie replied. "A double route through Alpha Centauri's secure networks along with a redirect through random Earth government agencies pretty much hides us."

Jacob pressed a few unmarked areas on the screen. "This session is routing through the U.S. Department of Education servers!" he giggled. "That's soooooo fitting!"

Giggling at the irony, John cackled, "Better than the U.S. Department of Fish and Game anyway!"

Jacob giggled. "They're on the list though. There's one other thing; what is the highest level of security encryption that you've heard of?"

Humming thoughtfully, John tried to recall what Drew and Corey had said about encryption. He answered, "Level 6."

"I can break that in twelve-seconds. Justy's working with me to get my times better," Beau bragged. "We use up to level fifteen normally; we will be able to use up to level twenty-five pretty soon."

John asked, "That means we can get just about anywhere, but can be found by no one?"

"If we really wanna hide, we can. Lots of times we don't need to though," Jacob said seriously. "I need to register you with a server, come over here and stand in front of the console."

Moving over and standing before Jacob, John wondered, "Which system is this?" He then joked, "My handsome face might cause a few fried circuits."

[Identity confirmed. John Hundser access to Clan Short Diplomatic and Intelligence Networks confirmed. Note to Lieutenant Hundser, it is illogical that physical appearance will have detrimental effects on the physical makeup of my circuitry.]

Making a crooked face at the computer's remark, John turned around and griped, "Gotta be Vulcan."

Stephen blushed and giggled, "It's okay, I still think you're handsome, hon."

'I love you too, baby,' John quickly sent to Stephen.

Jamie, Jacob and Beau loudly giggled, "Float break!"

"Not this time," John blushed. He then asked, "What can we find out about these HLF scum bags?"

[HLF Search activated. Interstellar database access pending authorization.]

Glancing at the three teachers, John croaked, "Authorization?"

"You started a search, dude. Just say 'authorization confirmed'; the system knows that it's you by the bio-signature." Beau chuckled.

"Authorization confirmed," John repeated, and then smirked, "Stupid thing should've known it was authorized since I asked for it!"

"You have to verify, silly." Jacob laughed. "It needs to make sure that it understood you correctly."

[Search initiated. Results to be delivered upon completion.] The system announced.

"Besides, the search is keyed to you now." Jamie added. "Nobody else can access the results."

While they were still waiting for records on the HLF, Foghorn said, "Search complete, I say, the search is done. Kaleo Palakiko was born September sixteenth, 1990. Pay attention to me boy! I'm not just talkin' to hear my head roar!"

Tapping his comm-badge again, John smiled, "Kaleo?"

"Here John, what's up?"

"Happy belated birthday bro," John grinned. "You were born September sixteenth, 1990. Just so ya know, Prez's birthday is September twelfth and Keith's is September twenty-second. You're right between the two of 'em, bro."

"That's great!" Kaleo chuckled. "Can I get a belated birthday cake too?"

"Sure," John giggled. "Tell the chefs your favorite and that we're making up for fourteen missed birthdays with a party of one hundred and thirty." With that, all the kids still in the dining room cheered and began wishing Kaleo happy birthday.

John smiled, "Septembers are gonna be busy birthday months from now on." Too quickly, John's smile flipped upside down and he wiped his eyes.

Concerned at the sudden change, Stephen hurried over and asked, "What's wrong, hon?"

John sighed, "Remember I told you about Joel?" Stephen nodded and John said, "He's here and hurt worse than I could've imagined."

"We're done here," Jacob quickly assured. "Let's go see Joel."

Jamie offered, "We'll cover the FYS interviews for you later, bro."

John sniffed and nodded, "Thanks, guys."

* * * * *

Over at James Campbell High School, the trumpet player Bobby, who had mysteriously lost his shiny horn the prior day, wasn't participating in the jazz band's recital. His girlfriend Sheryl had been locked in the janitor's closet for hours, until almost eleven o'clock Monday night. When she was first heard banging on the door and calling for help, a locksmith was called. Arriving at the school hours later, the locksmith was unable to unlock the door. He wound up having to dismantle the knob and lock then take the hinges off the door to let the girl out. Completely freaked out after standing alone in a dark janitor's closet for over eight hours, Sheryl didn't even bother going to school that Tuesday. Mrs. Diaz was livid. Both Bobby and Sheryl lost their places in the jazz band and the marching band.

In the CIC dining room, Kaleo, Tory, Sean, Horacio, Sonia and Vera worked as three teams passing out credit and ID cards. Although everything was organized with two lines of boys and one line of girls, the task still took an hour. Many of the kids wanted to know more about the jobs that were available and some were even interested in the hourly rate of pay. All the kids had to do was initial the printed list beside their name for proof they had received the cards. Only two sets of cards remained at the end; one set for Melonie, who had a scheduled appointment with Doctor Wiener that hour, and one set for Troy Faris. Kaleo tapped his sub-vocal and called Alden. "Where's Troy Faris at this morning?" Kaleo asked.

Alden replied, "He's in his condo apartment, practicing his guitar and singing, Kaleo."

Kaleo hummed thoughtfully for a few moments. Noticing Sean nervously fidgeting, Horacio grinned, "Sean will take them to him, Kaleo."

Almost snapping his neck turning to his roomie, Sean glared at Horacio.

Unaware of Sean's crush on Troy, Kaleo innocently asked, "Would you, dude? I'll ask Alden which apartment he's in."

Sean tried to find a graceful way out, but never said a word before Horacio let him off the hook by saying, "We'll both go over there."

Kaleo then asked Alden which condo unit was the Faris'. Kaleo told Sean and Horacio, "Building one, apartment 5-A; that's the fifth floor on the right side coming out of the elevator."

Tory appreciatively smiled, "Thanks, guys. This saves us a bunch of time," and then handed the two cards for Troy to Horacio.

"We've gotta show the newbies around first, and we're gonna give Melonie her cards, then go hang by the pool and diving well," Kaleo said. "Mrs. Seaver and Mr. Seibert are there managing all the kids pretty much by themselves." Kaleo and Tory stood, held hands and walked out of the CIC, leaving Horacio there grinning and Sean sweating.

Once they were out of earshot, Sean faced Horacio and softly grumbled, "Why are you doing this?"

"Why are you so upset?" Horacio smirked. "I'm goin' there with you to make sure you actually get there... today! I can see you, roaming around this entire base, wondering how to tell Troy why you're there and what you really want."

"What do I want?"

"Come on, man," Horacio softly smiled. "You want to meet him and get to know him. What happens after that is up to you and him. You could have said something to him last night at dinner. But noooo! We sat at the same table as Troy and his mom, but not a peep out of you." Standing, Horacio pulled Sean up by his upper arm.

"You're forcing this. Why?"

Taking Sean by the shoulders and pushing him forward, Horacio answered, "We've been friends since we met at the orphanage, right?"

"Right."

"You know me and I know you just as well."

Sean nodded.

"I can give you what you need physically, but won't always be there for you. You need what I can't give you, Sean. I want a wife and my own kids someday. You want a boyfriend and partner." Horacio then moved beside Sean and wrapped an arm around his shoulders then softly admitted, "I'm being selfish really. If I found a nice girl and left you alone, how would you feel? Like shit, that's how. I know it and don't want to chance losing you as a friend. So, I'll help you as much as I can. Just show Troy what you've always shown me, that you can be a real friend and then some."

"But what can I say to him?" Sean desperately moaned.

Outside the condo building, only a few yards from the double doors, Horacio stopped and stood in front of Sean. "Open your eyes, Sean!" Horacio giggled. "Don't just look at him, look around his house. What's in there? What is he interested in? Is there anything you guys have in common? Talk to him like you talk to me. You go in there stutterin' and staring at him, frothing at the mouth and he's gonna think you're a spaz. Just chill! Our friendship has lasted through good times and bad since we were nine years old. Whether you accept it or not, you are a great person."

Since Horacio was being honest, Sean was too. He grinned, "Dude, no one has ever affected me like he already has, and I don't even know him. He's gonna smile and I'm gonna melt; party's over, just like that." Horacio cracked up. Sean giggled, "See, you know it's true!"

Horacio went to the doors and opened one, then gestured for Sean to walk inside. As Sean reluctantly walked past, Horacio followed, saying, "Here's what your gonna do; act like you don't know him or like him; look at his ID and confirm he's Troy Faris then introduce yourself. Tell him you were passing out the cards with Kaleo, since he probably knows him as a Core Rimmer. All the while you're talking, look around his apartment. Pass a simple compliment about something..."

"Like what?" Sean interrupted, and then joked, "Nice apartment, dude?" Sean noticed that on this ground floor there were two apartment doors on the right and the left sides.

"Yeah!" Horacio laughed, "That or anything else you see. Not his hair, or his eyes, or his face, or his ass."

Sean smirked, "Uh huh, then what?"

"Well, he might say thanks or something else, so strike up a conversation. If worse comes to worse, you can tell him about the ID and credit card. Say what Kaleo said. Say what Prez said. The idea is to say something so he has a reason to invite you inside." Stopping before the elevator, Horacio pressed the button and joked, "Once you're inside, you're set. Now you can talk with him... or jump his bones!"

Momentarily surprised, Sean then shook his head and grumbled, "You bastard," then snatched the two cards from Horacio.

"Yeah, I am," Horacio laughed. The elevator bell rang and its door slid open. Horacio pushed Sean into the elevator and promised, "I'll wait out front for five or ten minutes. If you're not back by then, I'll know we have a success."

The elevator's door began to slide closed and Sean reached his hand out to stop it. It automatically slid open and Sean blushed, "Jeez; I forgot where I'm goin'!"

Barely stopping himself from laughing, Horacio repeated, "The fifth floor, apartment 5-A."

"Right," Sean grinned, "If this don't work, I'm gonna chase you all over this base."

Horacio chuckled then countered, "If this does work, I'm gonna chase you around until you tell me everything that happened." Sean pressed the button for the fifth floor. As the door began sliding closed, Horacio smiled, "Good luck!"

"I'm gonna need it," Sean huffed. The door finished closing and the elevator began to rise floor by floor. Horacio turned around and laughed, shaking his head, but wondering how he might react, after all the sexual abuse he'd been through, when faced with some girl he really liked.

Wondering what he might be able to say to Troy, Sean glanced around at the elevator walls. Brushing his fingers across the nearest wall, Sean realized it was a real wood wall, not a simulated veneer. Sean absently thought that what he'd seen thus far inside the new condominium was really nice. He looked up at the lights in the ceiling, noticing the new brass fixtures around each of the six frosted glass bulbs. The floor he was standing on looked like it might be real marble. The bell rang twice at the fifth floor and the doors slid open.

Sean stepped out of the elevator and looked around. Just like the first floor, the elevator was at the end of a single hall. However, here there was only one door on each side, not a total of four doors as on the first floor. Obviously, some floors had single bedroom apartments while others had two-bedroom apartments. The lower half of the walls on this floor matched the walls in the elevator. At the end of the hallway, well above where the entrance doors were on the first floor, was a large tinted window. It was about three feet off the floor and went almost to the ceiling. Wanting to catch a glimpse of what the base looked like from about fifty feet up, he walked to the end of the hall and peered outside the window. He was way above the trees and slightly higher than the domed CIC directly before him. To the right were the flat roofs of the dormitories. Sean hadn't realized it before, but all the dorm rooftops had solar panels. The closest one was the building he and the other kids were already living in. Sean noticed that the UNIT dorm rooftop was set up with armaments of various sorts. Beyond the dorms were the pitched rooftops of the four Rimmer family homes. Over to the left was the roof of the Federation Youth Services building and the parking garage. "I wonder what this looks like at night with the CIC dome and the auditorium lit up?" Sean softly muttered. Knowing it had to be pretty, Sean realized he was just delaying the inevitable, sighed then turned around and went back down the hall.

He stopped and stood before apartment 5-A. There was a small doorknocker in the center, just below one of those security peek lenses. Sean lifted the doorknocker and was surprised to hear a bell ringing. Accidentally, he dropped the two cards. Squatting down and reaching for the cards, Sean mumbled, "An electric bell hidden in the knocker? That's a new one." The door opened while Sean was picking up the two cards.

Troy looked down and grinned. Sean looked up from Troy's bare feet past his legs and khaki cargo shorts to find him shirtless, but with an acoustic guitar hanging off his shoulders. Oh man, Sean silently thought, even his feet and legs are perfect. Quickly standing, Sean blushed and said, "Hi." Looking at the ID card, he confirmed, "Troy Faris?"

"That's me," Troy smiled, but then blushed because his voice cracked for the first time in at least a year. The word 'me' came out of his mouth sounding something like a chipmunk. Too much singing too early in the day, Troy reasoned. Covering his mouth with his fist, he cleared his throat so it wouldn't happen again.

Hearing Troy's voice for the first time, Sean's heartbeat quickened and everything Horacio told him to say fast-forwarded through his mind at once then was completely gone. He stammered, "I... uh... I'm Sean Moorhead. I was helping Kaleo... pass out credit and ID cards before... earlier, in the CIC?"

Troy thoughtfully scowled and said, "My mom's an employee."

Sean shrugged, "Guess it don't matter; you live on base." Holding out the two cards, Sean said, "The credit card is pre-paid." Troy reached for the cards and their fingers briefly brushed. Becoming light-headed, Sean softly explained, "We all get weekly allowances. We can work odd jobs on base for extra money too, if we want."

Nodding, Troy then glanced at the cards in his hand and softly wondered, "You brought these to me instead of calling me to come get them?"

Feeling his face heat up, Sean nodded and grappled for an answer. "Saw you yesterday," Sean stammered, "with the band, on stage... and dinner last night. Didn't think you'd mind." He paused then asked, "You play guitar too?"

Troy nodded, "Guitar, keyboards and a couple other instruments."

"Kewl," Sean chirped. He then pointed down the hallway and admitted, "I was lookin' out the window. Bet you have an awesome view." Both boys blushed and Sean sighed, "From up here, of the compound, at night, I mean."

Troy nodded and smiled, "Ya wanna come in and check it out?" Not liking how he said what he had said, Troy's eyes closed briefly then he shyly added, "The view... out the windows?"

"Could I?" Sean excitedly squealed. Then he forced himself to relax a little and said, "If it's all right with you, I mean?"

Stepping back and aside to let Sean in, Troy said, "Sure, man."

Walking in the apartment, Sean admitted, "I don't think I've ever been in a building this high up before."

Closing the door, Troy said, "Really? I used to live in New Jersey and went to New York City a couple o' times. I've been to the observation deck of the World Trade Center. Talk about a view! It was a clear day and I'll bet it was twenty or thirty miles in every direction."

Stopping and waiting for Troy, Sean glanced around the kitchen and dinette offering, "I've never even been in an elevator before. If it wasn't for TV and movies, I wouldn't have known how to work it."

Realizing that Sean was a Clan rescued kid for the first time, Troy didn't want to make him feel bad, but couldn't think of anything to say at first. So he took his guitar off and said, "Lemme put this down in my room."

Trying to not stare at Troy's bare chest, Sean nodded then absently followed him through the living room, down a hall, past a bathroom and into Troy's bedroom. Troy's bare back was every bit as attractive as the front though. Slightly above the waistband of his khaki shorts was the waistband of his FTL underwear. In the bedroom, on the queen size bed was a guitar case. Troy put his guitar in the case then turned to see Sean still in the doorway looking around his room. Walking around his bed, Troy said, "Com'ere, Sean." Troy stopped before a set of sliding glass doors and pulled open the blinds. As Sean joined him, Troy smiled, "The CIC looks really kewl at night, almost like a space ship." Gesturing further beyond the CIC, Troy pointed out, "Way out there, you can even see the beach." He then went to the other window, on the adjacent wall, facing southwest, and raised the blinds.

Sean followed and looked out the second window. "Wow!" Sean softly gasped.

"You can see part of the pool from here," Troy offered.

"Yeah," Sean said, "We're always over there by the pools and rec center."

Troy exclaimed, "There are two pools there?"

Sean nodded, "An Olympic size pool and a diving well." Glancing at Troy, Sean wondered, "How come I've never seen you over there?"

Troy blushed and shrugged, "I'm really into my music. When I'm not practicing, I'm listening to tunes or watching VH-1. I've thought about going to the pool, but then I hear something, take a tangent and forget all about it." Troy chuckled, "The next thing I know, it's dark."

Sean giggled and nodded, "You really should go over, at least to check out what's there. The indoor rec center has bowling alleys, handball rooms, weights and lots o' stuff. There's even a sauna in the men's locker room and a Jacuzzi."

"Yeah, I should," Troy nodded.

"The rainy season's gonna start in December. I'll show you around, if ya want?"

Troy shrugged then said, "I was working on a song before. I think I've got it down pat. If I played it for you, would you give me your honest opinion? Then we can go over to the pool."

"Sure," Sean giggled. "I don't know anything about music, but I can tell when something sounds good."

Going over to get his guitar and then to the stereo, Troy rambled, "I heard this song last night on the radio and I knew it was in my collection somewhere. It took me a while to find it, but I think Prez and the guys will like it." He paused then prompted, "Tell me what you think of this." Sean nodded, but was still standing by the window. Troy grinned and gestured to the bed. "Have a seat."

Sean sat on the edge of the bed and Troy pressed play on the CD player. The Moody Blues tune 'The Story In Your Eyes' began playing through the stereo and Troy strummed the acoustic guitar part along with the recording. Sean began tapping his feet and smiling.

Troy then loudly sang; "I've been thinking about our fortune,
And I've decided that we're really not to blame, For the love that's deep inside us now, Is still the same.

"And the sounds we make together, Is the music to the story in your eyes, It's been shining down upon me now, I realize.

"Listen to the tide slowly turning, Wash all our heartaches away, We're part of the fire that is burning, And from the ashes we can build another day.

"But I'm frightened for your children, That the life that we are living is in vain, And the sunshine we've been waiting for, will turn to rain."

Troy played through the middle eight and then sang; "Listen to the tide slowly turning, Wash all our heartaches away, We're part of the fire that is burning, And from the ashes we can build another day.

"But I'm frightened for your children, That the life that we are living is in vain, And the sunshine we've been waiting for, will turn to rain.

"When the final line is over, And it's certain that the curtain's gonna fall, I can hide inside your sweet sweet love, for ever more." With his eyes closed, Troy played through the end of the song. As the stereo's music faded out, Sean began clapping.

The moment that Troy opened his eyes and turned to press the stop button, Sean bounced up, still clapping and loudly cheered, "That was excellent. What a great song! You really played and sang it perfectly." Sean realized he was spazzin' out and stopped clapping.

Blushing fiercely at Sean's compliments, Troy giggled, "I was thinking maybe Keith or Derrick would sing lead vocals. I'd sing backup with Mike and Prez."

Shaking his head, Sean forcefully said, "No! You have to sing it, just like you just did. What was that line? I'm frightened for your children?"

Troy recited, "That the life that we are living is in vain, and the sunshine we've been waiting for will turn to rain."

"Awesome." Sean reverently cheered. He then wiped his eyes and looked down.

Noticing that Sean seemed a little upset, Troy softly asked, "What's wrong?" and took his guitar off again.

Sean shrugged and sighed, "It's just... me. That line in the song makes me want to cry. I'm damaged goods. No one nice is ever gonna like me."

"I like you," Troy quickly said before he could even consider stopping himself. Putting his guitar back in its case, he blushed and added, "No one except my mom has ever clapped after I played like you did. Besides, you're a nice guy and..."

Sean waited for Troy to finish then softly wondered, "And what?"

Shaking his head, Troy quickly considered everything he knew about Clan Short, the people at this compound, especially Prez, Keith, Mike and Derrick. Rather than wait to say something and have it turn out badly, Troy looked off beyond Sean and huffed, "And I think you're really cute. I'm gay, Sean."

But Sean didn't get up and leave like Troy expected. He only smiled for a few moments then giggled, "I'm gay too. Not only do I think you're cute, my roommate forced me to come up here. Since I saw you yesterday, I can't get you outta my head."

Turning a hundred shades of red and purple, Troy squealed, "Me?"

Looking away slightly, Sean blushed and nodded, "Can't help it."

Troy thought for a few moments then grinned, "So much for going to the pool... again. We have some stuff to talk about, don't you think?"

Nodding, Sean giggled, "You want to know more about the credit card?"

Troy helplessly laughed, "Screw the credit card!" Sean cracked up. When they had stopped laughing, Troy then seriously said, "Tell me why you think you're damaged. If you're damaged, I must be Quasimodo."

Sean grinned and tilted his head wondering "Who's Quasimodo?"

"The Hunchback of Notre-Dame," Troy explained, "frighteningly ugly."

"You ain't ugly," Sean slowly and softly said. He then grinned, "As a matter of fact, if you don't put a shirt on real soon, we'll never get to talking."

Blushing bright red, Troy went to the closet and picked out a faded navy blue Pink Floyd Dark Side Of The Moon T-shirt. Sliding it over his head and getting the shirt adjusted, Troy began, "You were rescued by the Clan?"

"Friday," Sean answered, "from an orphanage."

"It was bad for you there?"

"For all of us. The men and women there were vicious, in every sense of the word." Sean wiped his eyes; partially because of the memories and partially because he really didn't want to tell Troy what he had been through.

Pulling over his desk chair, Troy sat close before Sean and softly said, "I know a little about Clan Short. You don't have to tell me anything that will make you sad, okay? We can save that for another time."

Relieved, Sean sighed, "The summer of 1999, me, my dad and stepmother came here on vacation. My dad had a heart attack and died. After the funeral, she didn't even tell me she was leaving to go back to the States. I didn't find out until that afternoon, when the hotel housekeeper came to the room. She took the plane tickets and some of her stuff, but didn't say a word to anyone that I was still in the hotel room. By that night, I was at the orphanage."

"How old were you?"

"Nine."

"That sucks. Obviously she was in love with your dad, but didn't give a shit about you."

Not wanting to dwell on it any more than he already had, Sean simply said, "She was a bitch."

Quickly doing math in his head, Troy asked, "So you're fourteen?" Sean nodded and Troy smiled, "I'm fourteen too. What's your birthday?"

"January twenty-seventh, 1990."

"I'm exactly a month older than you are. I was born December twenty-seventh, 1989."

"Here's the part I have to tell you," Sean shuddered. He paused and gathered every ounce of strength to softly admit; "I've been sexually abused by men and women."

Shocked, Troy couldn't think of anything to say. Saying that it sucks would've been an understatement. Troy softly asked, "That's why you think you're damaged?"

Sean nodded, "I never wanted to do it; I had to do it."

"I assumed that."

After a long many moments, each boy waiting for the other to say something, Sean asked, "You're not bothered about it?"

"Well, yeah! I mean, shit! Who wouldn't be angry about something like adults molesting kids?"

Sean nervously asked, "You're not gonna tell me to leave?"

Shaking his head, Troy softly answered, "No. I want to help, if I can."

Sean brightly smiled, "You are, right now." Relaxing more, Sean chuckled, "I was sure that would be the end; you would tell me to get out."

"That wouldn't be much help," Troy smirked. "I have one question; then we can drop that topic as being just history."

"What's that?"

"They never got you sick, did they? No sexually transmitted diseases or anything?"

"No. The Vulcan doctors checked us over real good. There were bruises, cuts and scars before a little guy named Peter fixed me up."

Troy grinned, "A boy named Peter..." and then helplessly chortled.

"Not that kind of peter!" Sean laughed. "I don't know how he cleared all the marks up, but he did."

Playing the suspicious, jealous boyfriend, Troy teased, "Peters and Marks?"

Blushing fiercely, Sean giggled, "No Peters or Marks, just gross old ladies and men. Soon the ladies realized they weren't my type and, for the most part, they left me alone. Then it was just gross men."

"Just curious, but umm... what made them gross?"

"What wasn't gross? Beard stubble, bad breath, body odor, you name it."

Dramatically grimacing, Troy asked, "You've never been with anyone our age?"

Sean thought carefully then admitted, "My roomie, Horacio. We've been friends since the orphanage. He's bi though and don't like kissing. We helped each other through some really bad times. He'll jack me off and I'll do the same for him, but that's all it's ever been."

Troy shyly admitted, "It's more than I've ever done."

Believing he had said too much, Sean sighed, "I shouldn't have told you that, huh?"

Thinking it over for a moment or two, Troy grinned, "Extra points for telling the truth."

Sean wondered, "What else do you do beside play guitar and keys?"

"I play clarinet, recorder, harmonica, tenor and baritone saxophones. I've played tennis too, but I'm not really good at it. I do enjoy it though."

"Do you swim?"

Troy nodded, "Used to go to the shore all the time. Point Pleasant is a beach in New Jersey that I really liked."

"Ever surfed?"

"Nope, never tried."

"I tried Saturday for the first time. It's really kewl."

"You'll have to teach me some time then."

"You still wanna go to the pool?"

"Sure," Troy agreed, "we can talk more there. Lemme just change into trunks." Sean nodded and widely smiled. Standing and moving his chair back to the desk, Troy turned to Sean and loudly giggled, "You're just gonna watch?"

Turning fire engine red, Sean cackled, "I'll show you mine if you show me yours?"

Troy howled laughing then leaned down and planted a kiss on Sean's forehead.

Stunned, Sean blushed and softly remarked, "No beard stubble, nice breath too."

Turning around and dropping his shorts and underwear, Troy giggled, "No B.O. either, I hope! I just showered this morning."

Sean hummed agreement then commented, "Really cute butt too!"

"Hey now!" Troy laughed, "You can look, but no touching... yet." He then pulled a pair of boardies out of his dresser drawer.

Watching Troy dress, Sean wondered, "When then?"

"Jesus! You move fast!" Troy giggled. Once he had pulled his boardies up, Troy turned around and honestly answered, "I want to, Sean. I just can't go from 'I like you' to sex quite so fast. I'll tell you some important things though."

A little concerned, but mostly curious, Sean softly said, "Okay."

"I intend to spend the rest of the day with you. No matter what else happens, I want you nearby."

Smiling and standing, Sean said, "Sounds real good so far."

Troy devilishly grinned then moved closer and seriously said, "From now on, you keep your hands off your roommate and he keeps his hands off you. I know I'm the jealous type already. I also know I want a real relationship, not a one or two night stand. If we're gonna hook up, then it's long term."

Sean nodded, "I ain't runnin' for the door."

"Good. Nothing you've said has made me like you less. As a matter of fact, I like you a lot and have high hopes for us."

Holding his right hand up, Sean seriously swore, "I promise, no messin' around with Horacio or anyone else." Dropping his hand, he explained, "Sex before, at the orphanage, it was always fast. I don't mean to rush it; I just don't know any other way."

"I don't know of any way at all; I just have dreams and ideas."

Sean wondered, "What kinda ideas?"

Troy shrugged and blushed, "Being held close, hugs, slow dancing; guess I'm more of a romantic than I'd like to admit."

Understanding, Sean slowly reached for Troy's face and gently brushed the back of his fingers along Troy's left cheek and jaw. Sean whispered, "Somethin' like this?"

Closing his eyes, Troy whimpered then whispered, "Exactly like that."

Taking a chance while Troy's eyes were closed, Sean tenderly kissed him on the mouth. It was a short, heartfelt kiss that left Troy reeling. Breaking the kiss and waiting for Troy to open his eyes, Sean then softly assured, "I'll wait, Troy."

Locking eyes with Sean, Troy couldn't believe how lucky he was getting. Sean was really good looking, about the same height and weight as he was, self-conscious, but sexually active and a great kisser. Troy whispered, "I won't make you wait too long, Sean." Reaching for Sean's head and tapping lightly, he said, "I need to know what's in here," and then he tapped Sean's chest adding, "and in here. All we have to do is tell each other the truth. Otherwise, we're screwed from the start."

Nodding, Sean asked, "Ready for the pool?"

"Yeah, just lemme grab a towel," Troy said, and started walking down the hall.

Following close behind, Sean told him, "There's piles of towels there already."

Troy grinned, "Force of habit. My mom told me she's been washing loads of towels every day. I'll leave a note for her so she won't expect me here for lunch."

After the note was written, the two boys left the condominium then went down the elevator. Looking into Sean's deep blue eyes, Troy asked, "Who taught you to brush your hand across my face like that?"

Sean grinned, "Promise you won't tell." Troy rapidly nodded and Sean admitted, "Keith and Drew. When they do it to Prez or Corey, anybody can tell how much they like it. Did you like it as much as I did?"

"Definitely," Troy giggled. "I thought maybe... you learned it from one of those gross older men."

Sean huffed and smirked, "Those dudes just wanted to get their rocks off. Romantic to them meant asking me to take my pants off."

Stepping out of the elevator, Troy reassuringly said, "No more of that for you or any of the others," then reached for Sean's hand. They glanced at each other and Troy admitted, "This is what I've always wanted to do. I hope you don't mind."

Sean grinned, "Why would I mind?" then opened the door for Troy and followed him outside. Sean took the time to introduce Troy to a few of the kids then showed him through the indoor rec center. They paused at the Jacuzzi and again at the sauna then went directly to the diving well. Horacio was naked, up on the three meter diving board and Sean pointed him out. Seeing a handsome Latino teenager, Troy slowly and deliberately nodded then grunted. Grinning, Sean softly said, "You really are the jealous type."

"Sorry."

"Don't be. It makes me feel really good."

Chapter 6B

O'ahu, Ewa Beach, C.S.P.R.D. Main Base

Tuesday, November 2, 2004 11:10 AM HTZ

Jennifer Hundser transported back to the base with her security contingent. After dropping her jacket at the house, and then using the bathroom, she started towards the pool to check on the kids. On the way, she saw the merry-go-rounds, swing sets, slides and jungle gyms. At the playground were many of the youngest kids, including her three newly adopted children. She paused briefly to watch the kids play. Seeing their mother, Dewi, Kokaku and Carmella hurried to her side. She knelt down and kissed all three kids, wondering where the playground came from. The kids didn't know, but loved having it. As Jennifer walked around the indoor recreation building, her five grandchildren noticed and joined the three children walking with her. To her surprise, Joel was at the pool, surrounded by many kids, with a human woman and a Vulcan man. Nearby were four G-Cats, Juan and another young Klingon boy. The young Prince was barely recognizable in his black Clan Short robe and dark sunglasses. She assumed the woman with Joel was Teri Short and went over to introduce herself.

As she drew close to the group, Joel let go of Teri's hand and seemed to turn in her direction. "Auntie Jen?"

"Yes, Joel," she said softly, and she looked at the boy sadly, not really sure why he wasn't looking directly at her.

"Hi," he whispered back, and then he turned, reaching out for the man and woman he was standing near. "Mammy? Daddy? This is Mrs. Jennifer Hundser. Auntie Jen? This is my mammy, Teri Short, and my daddy, Admiral Spock."

While Teri moved forward to greet Jennifer, Spock picked up Joel and cradled him over his right hip before moving to join the two women.

Holding out her hand, Teri smiled, "So you are the famous 'Auntie Jen'? It is a pleasure to finally meet you."

Jennifer shook Teri's hand and smiled, "My pleasure, Teri." She turned and said, "Welcome to Ewa Beach, Admiral Spock." Cautiously reaching for Joel, Jennifer asked, "You've been talking about us, Joel?"

Turning to the sound of Jen's voice, Joel trembled, "Yeah... was I wrong to?"

Pulling her hand back, Jennifer glanced at Teri and Spock then back to Joel saying, "You'll never need to be frightened of me. What's happened to you, Joel?"

Joel bowed his head as he was held tighter by Spock. "I was attacked on Saturday," he whispered.

"We heard," Jen said.

Joel removed his shades to reveal his empty left eye socket and white right eye. "I was blinded and gang raped," he whispered.

Facing Teri, Jennifer said, "The boy has clearly been traumatized. I appreciate your visit, but Joel doesn't seem ready."

Teri nodded seriously. "You would be right, but in his case the interaction with those that he cares about has helped more than anything a psychiatrist has been able to do."

"Yeah," Joel whispered with a ghost of a smile. "And I insisted," he added with the beginnings of cheekiness.

Rapidly returning from the boy's bathroom in the pool house, John said, "Hi mom. You've met Aunt Teri and Admiral Spock, obviously." John and Stephen went directly to Spock and Joel.

Joel giggled as Spock put him down, "You can call Daddy 'Uncle,' silly!" Then Joel reached for and cuddled in with John quickly. "He told you already," he added with a kiss to John's cheek. "Did we float?"

"No," John sniggered.

"Shame," Joel teased.

Noticing the immediate change in Joel's demeanor, Jennifer's eyes rolled and she reminded, "Only indoors, John."

John blushed, "We've tested it out, ma. We can lift off slowly and come back down slowly too now. It's just a matter of how we stop kissing that makes the difference."

"We're walking in the air!" Joel sang before giggling.

"You're just jealous cos you and Kevvy can't float!" John laughed.

Joel stiffened for a second, then giggled briefly, "No, but he can take me to heaven and back!"

"Only if you have a regenerator to heal the bruises!" Kevin yelled from across the pool.

'I was teasing,' John sent to Joel. 'Don't be scared of me.'

Jen looked at Teri and Teri mouthed, "Pon Farr. Thank GOD it's only once every seven years!"

Reaching and touching John's face with his fingers, Joel sent, 'I know. Just thinking 'bout me and Kev makes me nervous, again. Just like it was Saturday or Sunday, but it's getting better again.'

John replied; 'Ya know what we learned when Prez's parents died? Who's here now? Always show people you love that you care. Kev's happy because you're here and alive, Joel. I feel your hurt and confusion clearly. Let him know that he's important. Call him here just to hold his hand. It would make his day. Okay, it'll add to his day. Then the four of us, me and Stephen and you and Kev can go for a walk so our mom's can deal with business stuff.'

'Can my kids come too?' Joel asked. John started laughing, for he had already been mobbed by the eight kids Joel had adopted. 'I'll take that as a yes,' Joel added as he removed his hand.

John began introducing Joel's kids. "Mom, this little guy here is Rafe. The G-Cats are Aslan and Shere Khan, the badger hybrids are Brian and his twin sister Sue. Jules and Verne are the two ferrets and finally, we have Lee the chimp. Lee's mute, but he knows sign language."

Lee waved his fingers at Jen before climbing onto Joel's back. Kevin came running over, and Joel shyly took Kevin's hand. Kevin's face split into a smile.

'Told you,' John whispered in Joel's mind.

Looking up at his mother, John said, "We're gonna go for a walk. Did you notice the playground I had Daileass build for us?"

Jennifer nodded, "That was your idea?"

"Course!" John proudly smiled.

Stephen grinned, "He just wanted to swing me," but then blushed and giggled.

"The kids seem to love it," Jennifer smiled, "Good job. Go on, have a good time boys."

Spock turned to Teri saying, "I will remain with our son."

"Thank you," Teri warmly replied.

Spock faced Jennifer and said, "It is agreeable to make your acquaintance. I look forward to meeting your sons."

Jennifer smiled, "Thank you, Admiral Spock. My boys will be pleased to meet you too." Spock followed the pack of kids, including her own children and grand children. Jennifer turned to Teri, saying, "The issues here with CPS have shattered my trust. Two abandoned boys that my sons recovered over the summer were among those rescued by the Clan." She pointed out Aaron Farris and Stephen Wicks explaining, "I can barely describe the effect all these kids have had on me the last few days. Suffice to say, my patience is at its thinnest for some parents and care givers."

"It's understandable," Teri pleasantly said.

The two women began walking toward the FYS offices and Jennifer said, "I'm very much a pacifist. The only issue I may have is capital punishment."

"You understand you'll only have to prosecute, not deliver justice?"

"I do. There was one woman arrested Friday night. Her little girl, Daba was left behind. I spoke with her father and he doesn't want her. I've never wanted to strike a person so much before in my life."

"She's better off here then, Jennifer. All the kids are much better off here," Teri said, then paused and swung her arm, gesturing at all the kids. "Those that have made mental connections are teaching those that haven't. What we adults might be able to accomplish in weeks, they do in days or hours."

Jennifer nodded, "Doctor Wiener, our child psychologist, is having daily group sessions with some of the kids. What I find most remarkable is how the youngest seem to be learning fastest. Carmella, our adopted little girl, latched on to my husband Saturday. All Jim did was give her a piggy back ride. And Kokaku, one of our little boys, needed to go to the bathroom Saturday. I took him across the road and sat his little behind on the toilet then waited for him to finish. He was shocked that I waited for him and didn't fondle him. Since then, he attached himself to me. When I was busy with another child, Jim took him to the toilet in my place. Lanna Seaver told me that she had taken him to the toilet yesterday with the same results."

Smiling, Teri offered, "The adults that abused those kids are the extreme cases. If other less extreme cases can be educated and helped, they will be. The telepaths can determine in a minute or two if it's worth the effort."

Shuddering, Jennifer realized, "John's becoming telepathic. I heard him at work telling me you were here; clearly, as if he was standing beside me. I actually looked for him and expected to find him standing there in the room. It was seconds after Daileass called to tell me you were here."

"John is a remarkable boy," Teri smiled. "His empathic abilities alone are helping many of the kids, Joel included."

"Will it affect him?" Jennifer worried.

Teri answered, "In the short term, yes; but we have Vulcan methods to release the long term effects. To the kids, it becomes like a nightmare; unreal and not worthy of remembering. For instance, when we arrived, John came running over to us with Jamie, Jacob, Beau and Nathan. Joel and John held each other and cried for about five minutes. After that, Joel was a little better and John seemed to shrug off all he had learned from Joel about the attack. Spock is prepared to offer John assistance dealing with the shared images. If John doesn't ask directly, Joel will ask Spock. Jamie, Jacob and Beau can also help John, if need be. I can easily understand your concerns. My boys, Sean and Cory, have been helped similarly."

Nearing the FYS building, Jennifer said, "I'll perform these interviews as I would any other, only with the added qualifications required by the existing Safe Haven Act and Clan Short charter."

Teri added, "Your husband will perform secondary interviews based on Vulcan law, which will supersede Hawaiian law."

"Understood," Jennifer said. She opened the door and held it for Teri. Thanking Jennifer, Teri walked inside. Seeing Rob Gibbons at the reception desk, with his security gorilla standing nearby, Jennifer said, "Good morning, Rob. How've things been so far?"

Rob smiled, "Busy, but organized. Anna, Bill and Laura have been doing interviews. Four individuals were released by Jamie, Jacob and Beau for not having the correct temperament. I've arrested one for collecting child pornography."

Shaking her head sadly and smirking, Jennifer turned to the assembled group in the reception area. "Ladies and Gentlemen," she said, and paused briefly, noticing Tamara Hekekoa amongst the group. "My name is Jennifer Hundser. I am the Director of Clan Short Pacific Rim Division Federation Youth Services. Let me make myself perfectly clear. Our job is to protect children from all forms of abuse. We will not have positions filled by those that cannot abide by our regulations, both on the job and in their private lives." Jennifer briefly locked eyes with Tamara Hekekoa and informed them; "The practices allowed by Child Protection Services will not be continued here. We will be performing thorough background checks of all prospective foster parents. Anyone that fails to do their job to the best of their ability and report cases of abuse to this office will be summarily released and, if appropriate and necessary, arrested for their lack of common decency.

"In my years working at Hawaii Medical Center West, I've seen the most horrendous punishments inflicted by parents on their children." Teri Short watched and listened, struggling to keep her composure and not giggle or laugh aloud. Jamie, Jacob and Beau came out of a room and stood at the end of the hall near the reception area, grinning widely at Jennifer's remarks. Jim Hundser walked in to hear his wife say, "One woman tried to explain to me that it was appropriate to burn her child's hands on the stove for playing with matches. That is not only inappropriate, it is illegal. No, no people; corporal punishment in the form of a slap on the wrist or swat on the backside is one thing, but loss of control and whipping children into submission is child abuse. Adults will not get away with blaming their children for their own actions. My own children have never gotten away with the phrase, 'he made me do it,' without an adequate explanation. Therefore the adults I hire will not get away with it either. Have I made myself clear?"

Everyone nodded or vocally affirmed that they understood. Jim Hundser grinned at his wife; "Having a good day, love?"

Jennifer smiled, "Generally, yes. I simply couldn't believe that one moron came here looking for work that was collecting child pornography."

The Terrible Triplets said, "That's why we're here, Aunt Jen."

Jennifer turned and instructed, "If you boys need a break, just let one of us know."

"We're good," Jamie confirmed.

"We just got here a little while ago," Beau added.

Checking his wristwatch, Jacob said, "It's not even been an hour."

Jim introduced himself to Teri Short. Now that she had released some of her concerns, Jennifer also properly introduced Rob Gibbons and Teri. The four adults briefly chatted then Jennifer asked Rob, "Who's next?"

Checking the clipboard of names, Rob called out; "George Lu?"

A man of Chinese ancestry stood and smiled warmly at the gathered group. Jim softly told Jennifer, "I'll join Bill and relieve him for a break. Send Mr. Lu over when you're done, Jen."

Jennifer nodded and appreciatively smiled then told the group, "We're going to try our best to have each of you interviewed by the end of the day." Facing Mr. Lu, Jennifer introduced him to Teri Short. The stout gentleman was very enthusiastic to learn he had met the mother of the famous boys. The Hundserts walked back to their offices and began performing their new jobs.

As previously scheduled, Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike arrived back on base about eleven-forty that morning. Keith and Prez had already received word from John that Joel, Teri and Spock were on base. They told Mrs. Diaz that they had more guests and asked if they could skip their sixth period band class. She eventually gave in when reminded that tempo for the band could be provided electronically by the synthesizer. Their concert had gone well, with only a few coffee and shake induced tempo increases. Prez tried to hold back Derrick, but it was like constraining a missile in flight. Walking towards the pool, they teased each other and goofed on the misfortunes of Bobby and Sheryl. While Mike and Derrick went directly to the pool to burn off excess energy doing laps, Prez and Keith went to find Kaleo. At the diving well, Kaleo reported that all the cards were handed out, that John had discovered his birthday and that Teri Short was on the base with Joel and Admiral Spock. Keith and Prez wanted to go find Joel and report to him all the good work they'd managed to accomplish in only three days. Kaleo held them back and prepared his two teammates for the shock.

"He's not the same mischievously playful elf we met on Friday," Kaleo sadly explained. "If you want my honest opinion, he's closest to himself around John, but even then, he's different." Pulling Keith and Prez closer, Kaleo sighed then whispered, "John sent me a brief thought. Joel was gang raped and blinded. All you can see is a scar on his face and dark glasses, but he's emotionally messed up."

"Where is Joel now?" Keith wondered.

"With John and Stephen," Kaleo answered.

Glancing between Keith and Kaleo, Prez asked, "Do you think we should leave Joel be until he's ready?" Prez received his answer in a surprising way. He suddenly found himself floating and then gliding backwards. "JOHN!" Prez yelled through his giggles, "Stop it!"

"It's not me!" John giggled from behind him. "Blame the Elf!"

Prez managed to twist enough to look over his shoulder. He saw Joel standing a little in front of John and Stephen with Kevin next to him. Kevin's normally brown eyes were mixed blue, somehow, and Joel's glasses were missing. Prez felt his heart break at the sight of the scar and missing left eye, and slightly sick at the deathly white right eye on his 'mischievous elf'. Curiosity was also there, however. Joel had his hands spread wide as if waiting for a hug, and his lips were moving.

As Prez drifted closer, he realized that Joel was whispering over and over, "Feel the Sands of the Forge... Feel the Sands..."

He was telekinetic; something Prez never knew about Joel. Was it a Vulcan trait, or something due to Joel being part human?

Prez finally made it to the Li'l elf and then had Joel snuggled into his chest. "Hi, Prezzy," whispered the smaller teen.

With his throat tight and tears pouring down his face, Prez only held Joel firmly with one arm and gently pet the hair on the back of Joel's head with his other hand. Gaining a little strength back, Prez softly sobbed, "I'm sorry. I feel that if I had let you leave sooner or kept you here longer, this might've been avoided. It's stupid, I know, but that's what I feel."

Softly, Joel answered, "What Was is now no more. What Happened was new. What Is is now to be lived. That's what Levi's Friend said. Don't worry, Prezzy. I'll be okay... eventually. It is only logical." His voice slowly shifted from emotive to void as he finished.

Kevin sighed, but John whispered, "Oh no, you don't," and laid a hand briefly on Joel's back.

Joel's suddenly emotionless face shifted back to emotive and he continued to snuggle with Prez as if nothing had happened.

Realizing that Prez was teetering on the edge, like he had been after his parents died, John took immediate action. John sent images into Prez's mind, reminding his brother that Joel had family and hundreds caring for him; just as the Hundserts, Gibbons, Seiberts and Seavers had been there for him two years earlier. To all the other Core Rimmers, John sent pleas for help before Prez completely lost it. 'Prez needs us all, now!' Keith and Kaleo were the first to hurry over. From the pool, Mike, Derrick, Drew and Corey came running to the diving well. Within thirty-seconds, Joel, Prez and Kevin were surrounded and embraced by the entire team.

Joel spoke, but his voice seemed richer; feminine even. "Preston, Child of Vulcan. Do not grieve beyond that which is necessary, Child. As I remained for my own son, so too would your parents remain in their own way for you. A mother's love is forever, Preston. That is no difference between Vulcan and Earth. It is eternal."

Finally more secure and seeing logic beyond his own emotions, Prez looked down at Joel and uncertainly repeated, "Child of Vulcan?"

Joel shook his head slightly and in his own voice answered, "That was my birth mother. You're a member of Family Clan Short, now. That makes you a son, or Child, of Vulcan. You're my brother, so you have to be."

Prez asked, "The same can be said of the entire team then; and all the kids here?"

With a small smile, Joel nodded. "You are all Children of Vulcan as well as being Children of Earth." He added with a small giggle, "Good things need sharing about!" Then, after a brief pause, he added, "Besides, Cor and me're greedy. We like brothers and sisters, so we're collecting."

Prez grinned, "We won't let you down, Joel. We're collecting street kids, prostitutes now too."

Joel clapped happily. "I know. I've met some. More family! Yay!"

Keith chuckled, "I figure we'll have all our bases active and loaded by Christmas."

"That's two thousand more kids," Mike grinned.

Drew giggled, "The more the merrier!"

Derrick agreed, "That's one hell of a Merry Christmas!"

Humming hungrily, Corey reminded, "My mom's strawberry tarts." That was all it took for all the boys to begin rambling on about their favorite Christmas treats.

Kaleo offered to gather the Rimmers' sons and call the rest of the kids for lunch. With a nod and thanks from Prez, he was off.

"It's lunch time Li'l Elf," Prez said, and then asked, "You want a piggy back ride?"

Not only did Joel quickly scramble up onto the older teen's back, but his son, Lee the Chimp, was soon clinging onto his back as well. Keith offered Kevin a piggyback ride too. Derrick swept up Rafe and parked the boy up on his shoulders. Mike knelt down for Jules and Verne to climb aboard. Drew offered Aslan a lift as did Corey for Shere Khan. Not to be left out, John gave Sue and Brian a lift then took Stephen's hand and followed the pack to the CIC dining room.

For this day's lunch, the chefs had prepared a Mexican feast of tacos, burritos, chili and Mexican rice. Once again, menu display boards had been prepared so the kids would know how to order their meals. Keith and Prez were a bit more careful with Dee, limiting their son to tacos and Mexican rice to avoid any digestion problems.

Joel, Kevin, Prez, Keith, John, Stephen, Derrick and Mike shared a table. The Rimmers shared with Joel and Kevin their current status and that a total of fifty-two more kids had been added to the Clan in only three days. Some more time was spent giggling about the insanity of Saturday night, trying to get dinner together for the masses, and then nesting with a hundred kids in the basement. At the next table were Drew, Corey, Geoff, Dee, Gage, Sammy and Bruce. At another nearby table were Dillon, Richie, Rafe, Aslan, Shere Khan, Jules, Verne, Sue and Brian.

The phone rang at the reception desk of the FYS building. Rob answered it; "Federation Youth Services, O'ahu, can I help you?"

A woman asked, "May I speak with Lieutenant Robert Gibbons please?"

"This is Lieutenant Gibbons."

"Sir, my name is Sergeant Rose Flora from Hawaiian Police. We've located Mrs. Kathleen Marr."

Rob smiled, "That's great news, Sergeant."

The woman softly explained, "Sir, she's been detained for petty theft."

"You understand that she had to relinquish custody of her only child to Clan Short?"

"I do, Sir. However, the grocery store manager is insisting we prosecute."

Rob sighed, "What is your location?"

"The Safeway store at 111 East Puainako Street, Hilo."

"I'll be there in two minutes or less. Standby with Mrs. Marr and the manager."

"Yes, Sir. Goodbye."

Rob turned to his gorilla and ordered, "Get Jim's security and be ready to take a short trip to Hawaii."

The gorilla nodded and, as Rob stepped away from the reception desk, contacted Jim Hundser's security. Rob knocked on Jim's office door.

After a moment, Jim said, "Come in." Rob opened the door to find Jim, George Lu, Jamie, Jacob and Beau smiling. Rob said, "We have a small issue to take care of, Jim."

Tilting his head uncertainly, Jim wondered, "What is it?"

"Stephen Marr's mother was located." Rob glanced at George Lu and decided not to say more.

Jim assured, "It's alright, Rob. George will be hired."

Rob nodded, "Mrs. Marr was caught stealing from a Safeway store in Hilo. The store manager wants to prosecute."

Standing, Jim huffed, "Not for very much longer." He grabbed his suit jacket then turned to George Lu and asked, "Care to take a short trip?"

George Lu answered, "I'd like to if it's a very short trip. I'm diabetic and have to eat soon."

"This won't take more than ten or twenty minutes," Jim promised. "When we return, you can have something to eat here."

George Lu nodded and stood. He then looked at the three boys and chuckled, "It was very nice meeting you."

"Same here!" Jamie, Jacob and Beau chimed.

Tightening his loosened tie, Jim asked Rob, "Security is ready?"

Rob nodded, "Standing by."

Jim placed a hand on George's shoulder and asked, "Have you ever been transported via a Starfleet transporter before?"

George shook his head and smiled, "No, never."

"It's a bit disorienting," Jim briefly explained. The three men walked out of the office. Waiting outside were two gorillas and two teen boys. One teen boy and one gorilla were dressed in standard dark blue police uniforms to blend in with Rob. Jim's security team were dressed in dark suits, white dress shirts and ties, similar to what Jim had worn to work that day.

Rob tapped his comm-badge and said, "Daileass, transport us to 111 East Puainako Street, Hilo, Hawaii."

"Yes, Sir," Daileass pleasantly replied. In an instant, the group was outside the Safeway store. A gorilla led the way across the parking lot and into the store. Needless to say, people stopped and stared. Once inside the store, Rob pointed to the Customer Service desk and they all walked there.

At the desk, Rob held out his Police and FYS identification then asked to see the store manager. Nervously watching the two gorillas, the woman backed up, bounced against the cigarette display shelves then hurried to the manager's office and frantically knocked.

Jim turned to Rob and said, "I'll take care of this. I can easily prove that the woman was distressed and she wouldn't have been detained more than a few hours for petty theft."

Rob nodded and grinned at Jim's determined glare. "We'll wait until you're finished."

When the customer service clerk mutely waved him over, Jim went into the store manager's office. He politely introduced himself as Legal Director for Federation Youth Services, greeted the store manager, Sergeant Flora and Mrs. Marr then closed the door.

Back at the CIC dining room, John was finishing his lunch when he suddenly stopped and grinned. Turning to Stephen, John smiled, "We found your mom, baby."

Obviously excited, Stephen squealed, "Really?"

John nodded and pulled Stephen close saying, "My dad's with her right now. It won't be long before she's here." With all John's empathic abilities, there was nothing that could have kept Stephen from becoming fidgety, and then kissing John repeatedly. "Okay!"

John loudly giggled.

Becoming hysterical at Stephen's excitement and John's pleasure, Keith laughed, "I told you we'd find her."

As Stephen began to relax and rested his head on John's shoulder, Prez smiled, "First thing we're going to do is get your mom into one of the condo apartments. You two can catch up on what's happened during your time apart. Tomorrow, we'll find your mom a job right here."

John's eyes widened and he croaked, "Ooo! Dad's getting pissed off majorly!" Keith and Prez nervously glanced at each other. John then said, "Dad just told some store manager guy how we could help him with youth petty larceny."

"Larceny?" Keith nervously repeated.

John nodded and asked, "What's that mean?"

Keith sighed, "Robbery or theft."

"Dad's calming down now," John relayed.

Keith nodded, "The angrier he gets the more determined he is."

Prez was watching John closely, but behind John, coming into the dining room, were Troy Faris and Sean Moorhead. They were holding hands. Prez couldn't help cracking a wide smile and thinking, that's one less thing I have to do today. John locked eyes with Prez and giggled.

Obviously, Mike had also seen Troy and asked Prez, "What's the plan for the rest of this afternoon?"

Prez answered, "All we have on our schedules is phaser training from three until six."

"Kewl," Derrick smiled, "Wanna jam for a few hours then?"

Prez, Keith and Mike rapidly nodded. Prez looked at Joel and Kevin and asked, "If you'd like, you guys can meet us in the auditorium?"

Kevin smiled, "We might do that later."

Joel added, "We're going to stay with John and Stephen for now."

Keith promised, "We'll be back before you know it."

Stephen whispered, "Can you tell what's happening now, hon?"

John nodded, "My dad's still talking to the store manager." He then sent to Stephen, 'Do you really want to know what happened?'

Stephen whispered, "No, I think I can guess."

Prez grinned at Joel and Kevin, "Don't you guys leave before we get back."

Mike added, "We'd really like to meet Admiral Spock."

"Daddy's Uncle Spock to you!" Joel playfully reminded.

Kevin giggled, "We'll be here for dinner too."

"Kewl!" Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike chanted. They all stood then dumped their trash and decided to find Troy to invite him to jam with them. While Prez and Mike went to Troy's table, Keith and Derrick went to get Drew and Corey. They stopped at the kids table to see if any of them wanted to tag along. Of course, all their own kids did, but they didn't want to leave Joel's kids behind.

Brian grinned, "It's kewl. We're gonna go find the Scoobies then find some food that we find more tasty."

Richie wondered, "What's better than tacos?"

Knowing what kind of reaction she would get, Sue giggled, "Worms and grubs, of course!"

Richie, Geoff and Dillon groaned, "Ewww!"

Scrunching his nose, Dillon complained, "The Scoobies like raw chicken. They slurp it up like noodles too!"

At the far end of the dining room, Troy and Sean had taken a table by themselves, and had only begun eating when Prez and Mike walked up. Prez pleasantly said, "It's good to see you two together."

Mike nodded and smiled, "You make a cute couple."

Cracking a wide smile, Troy blushed, "I'm glad you think so."

Sean nodded, "We're just getting to know each other better."

Prez said, "We're heading over to the auditorium to practice and jam for while. Would you like to join us, Troy?"

"Yeah, right after we're done," Troy nodded. He asked, "Can Sean come watch and listen?"

"Course!" Prez and Mike chorused.

Prez said, "We'll have a bunch of our kids there too."

"What instruments should I bring, Prez?" Troy asked.

"Both saxes, the recorder, the acoustic and the electric guitars," Prez answered. "We'll need to get the right mics, amps, and the stage rearranged."

Turning to Sean, Troy sweetly smiled, "I'll need a hand."

Bouncing his eyebrows playfully, Sean slyly grinned, "I'll give you a hand."

Troy's face flushed scarlet while Mike and Prez giggled. Shaking his head sadly, Troy softly chuckled, "Breaking the speed of sound, Tiger."

"Can I help myself?" Sean grinned. "I'll be lucky to brush my teeth after Mexican food before tryin' to grab a kiss."

Mike and Prez groaned then laughed.

"No burrito flavored kisses!" Troy helplessly cackled.

Looking down at the table, Sean smirked, "I only offered to show you my burrito."

Troy's eyes opened wide and he playfully shoved Sean. Mike and Prez howled laughing. They waved and walked away in fits of laughter. Troy giggled and softly asked Sean, "Do you really want to that much or were you just playing?"

Sean considered the question then truthfully answered, "Both. Yeah, I was just being silly, but at the same time, I really want a relationship with you. I can wait and I will, Troy. When you're ready, I will be too."

Troy chewed on what Sean said while taking a bite out of his taco. He swallowed then softly called, "Sean?"

Shyly glancing over, but with a mouth full of food, Sean raised his eyebrows.

"We have to go back to my apartment to get my instruments."

Still chewing, Sean nodded.

"If my mom's not there, wanna play some show and tell and kiss and touch?"

Swallowing, whimpering and nodding simultaneously, Sean began gagging and choking on his food.

Troy patted Sean's back and giggled, "You okay?" Sean nodded and coughed up the clog in his throat then swallowed properly. Troy leaned closer and softly chuckled, "It was your idea!"

Sean grinned, "Please tell me you have mouthwash or a spare toothbrush at your place."

Widely smiling, Troy nodded and noticed that Sean was eating faster. "Easy, Tiger," Troy chortled.

Not wanting to shoot himself in the foot, or in the pants, Sean slowed down, ate a little more then asked, "I thought you didn't want to right away?"

Troy finished swallowing and clarified; "We ain't goin' all the way today. Part of me did want to take you up on the showing when you mentioned it before though."

Sean nodded understandingly, ate a little more, then flatly asked, "Which part?"

Quickly grabbing a napkin, Troy spat up his food and cracked up. Sean grinned and happily bounced in his chair.

While Prez and Platinum Habits were in the auditorium getting their stage setup modified, Admiral Spock walked into the CIC dining room and went directly to Joel's table. John, Joel, Kevin and Stephen had barely greeted Spock when Jim Hundser transported into the room with Stephen's mother. John and Stephen's backs were turned. John hadn't said anything to Stephen when he felt his dad and Stephen's mom were ready to transport. John wanted to let Stephen have at least a little bit of a surprise. When they walked over to the table and Stephen's mom put her hand on her son's shoulder, Stephen immediately recognized the feeling and quickly jumped up into his mother's arms.

Both Stephen and his mother, Kathleen, cried happy reunion tears for several minutes. Mrs. Marr was a short, frail looking woman; maybe an inch over five feet tall and not much more than one hundred pounds. She had the same auburn hair as Stephen, but her eyes were deep blue, not hazel like her son's eyes. Finally, Stephen asked, "Did they tell you mom?"

"Tell me what, Stephen?"

Stephen happily said, "They're gonna keep us together; they're gonna give you work and give us a place to live!"

Mrs. Marr groaned, "Oh baby, they can't really..."

"Oh, yes we can," John loudly interrupted. "Can you mop a floor, Mrs. Marr? Can you vacuum a rug? Can you push dishes through a dishwasher? We'll find something for you to do. I'm part of the leadership team of this Clan. My big brother, Prez, is the Director and he's already said it's gonna be that way. We'll help families whenever we can."

While Stephen smiled proudly at his boyfriend, Mrs. Marr looked at John in amazement and disbelief, and then looked up at Jim Hundser for confirmation. Jim simply nodded and smiled, "It's true; John is my son and head of the Pacific Rim Division's Intel team. My foster son, Preston is the Director of this entire Division. We will give you work to be proud of and a place to live with your son."

John nodded and said, "All you need to do is relax for tonight. Put the old, bad stuff behind you. Tomorrow, we'll get you a job somewhere. Just tell us where you'd like to work."

Stephen smiled, "Keith said last night that you made the smartest decision ever when you brought me to the Clan. Do you know it too now?"

Mrs. Marr looked around and wondered, "Who is Keith?"

"He's Prez's boyfriend and John's big brother," Stephen happily answered.

"Boyfriends?" Mrs. Marr uncertainly repeated. Stephen nodded and giggled then hugged his mom tight.

John wanted to make sure Stephen wouldn't be hurt by anything his mom might say and performed a deep scan without asking. Amongst the things he learned was that Mrs. Marr was only sixteen when she gave birth to Stephen. Satisfied that the woman was only surprised, John smiled, "We got gays, straights, gorillas, G-Cats, chimps, ferrets, and visiting today, two badgers and two Vulcans!" Unable to logically define John's enthusiasm in the rambling description of his Clan, Joel clapped his hands and loudly laughed.

Over the dining room's loudspeakers, the Terrible Triplets giggled, "Don't forget," "the partridge," "in a," "pear tree!" In the corner of the dining room, well behind where Sean and Troy were still sitting, a potted pear tree materialized with a single partridge sitting on its highest branch. Around the tree, occupying the entire corner almost up to the ceiling was a large cage so the partridge wouldn't escape. The bird had plenty of room to stretch its wings, perches to rest on, water and food.

Mrs. Marr softly asked her son; "You really like it here?"

Stephen nodded and answered, "Yes. These people are really nice, mom. They fed me twice in four hours; they had a doctor check me over; they got me all new clothes, like the stuff I'm wearing. John, Keith and another boy named Troy went out of their way to make me feel less scared. We could have a better life here. Please say we can stay?"

Mrs. Marr squeezed Stephen tightly and answered, "Anything to be able to stay with you."

John was ecstatic. First he sent his dad a short message. 'Dad, can you get Stephen's mom something to eat? She looks like she ain't eaten right in days. She prob'ly needs to see Doc Andrews or Doc Howard too.' Jim Hundser nodded, but held up his index finger, signifying they should wait until Stephen and his mom were ready. John then sent to Stephen, 'Baby? Let my dad show your mom around and get her fed. She's kind of confused and scared, like you were last night. You can tell her about us later tonight. Don't dump it on her now, okay?'

Stephen briefly turned to John, smiled and nodded. Understanding that Stephen was fit to be tied, and that he was going to be on the receiving end of a hug and many kisses very soon, John blushed and giggled. He sent Joel a quick message. 'Umm, Stephen's gonna hug and kiss me as soon as he lets go of his mom. We're gonna start floating and she's gonna freak out! We gotta go someplace, really quick!'

Joel giggled then looked towards his father and smiled, "Daddy, can I give John and Stephen a tour of the Enterprise?" John's mouth dropped open.

Spock nodded understandingly and tapped his comm-badge. "Spock to Kirk."

"A tour of the flagship!" John excitedly squealed. He looked up at his dad and begged, "Please say we can go?"

Jim Hundser chuckled, "I don't see a problem with that. Remember, Jamie, Jacob and Beau are here too though."

Joel said, "It shouldn't take much more than a few hours. We'll be back by dinner time."

Jim nodded, "That's fine."

Stephen softly told his mother, "Get some lunch and a tour of the base, mom. Try not to be scared. Everybody's real nice, even the gorillas. While you're busy, can I go with John and Joel?"

Kathleen Marr kissed her son's cheek and said, "You be safe and hurry back. I've missed you."

Stephen kissed his mom and assured, "I missed you too."

Hesitantly, Stephen and his mother separated, but watched each other until she turned to Jim Hundser saying, "I can barely believe all this. I thought I had failed miserably."

Leading her towards the kitchen, Jim Hundser shook his head and explained the details behind the news stories Kathleen Marr had heard on the radio.

Throwing himself at John, Stephen repeatedly kissed every square inch of his face. Giggling insanely, John held his boyfriend and they slowly rose about a foot off the floor. Once satisfied he had shown sufficient appreciation and left no spot un-kissed, Stephen rested his head on John's shoulder and contentedly sighed.

Spock turned back to his son and said, "Your Uncle James has agreed for a tour to be granted, with a few surprises as well. Orders have been given for Acting Captain Sa'ren Joel Short, Acting Commander Kevin Thompson, and Acting Lieutenant Commanders John Hundser and Stephen Marr to report immediately to the Enterprise and await further instruction from the Admiral." Kevin turned and waved four G-Cats over to act as personal security for Joel.

Joel giggled, pulled Kevin close to his side, and then smiled towards Stephen and John. "Ready, Commanders?"

John, his eyes as wide as an owl's, nodded his head foolishly.

Joel tapped his communicator, "Short to Enterprise, nine to beam up."

"Locked on," came the response, "Acquired... wait. Illegal life form? Excuse me for a moment, Ensign Short."

The kids all looked at each other and shrugged. Joel whispered, "Levi's not with us - he'd trigger that response. John? Do you have antimatter underpants or something?"

John laughed and shook his head. "No," he said, as he realized that Joel couldn't see the head shake. "Just normal boxers."

Stephen giggled, "Plaid cotton. I helped him put them on."

The next voice heard over the comm was that of the most famous Starfleet Engineer John knew about - Captain Scott. "Sa'ren Joel Short!" he barked, "Where in th' Seven Circles of Satan's Spawn did ye' aquire that ungodly creature, laddie?"

Joel's eyebrows raised. "One of what, Unca Monty?"

"That there blasted TRIBBLE! They're all dead! The only good thing those thrice damned Klingons ever did!"

"Ummm... Oh! You have a restriction on Tribbles? Still?" Kevin giggled.

"YES!"

"She won't be a problem, Unk!" Joel said sweetly.

"SHE'LL BREED, an' I'd be defurring the Lady's innards for months!"

"She won't breed. She's controlled."

"She be clipped?"

"Well... no. Not really, but she's controlled. She's a Borg."

"Laddie, have ye been sippin' Romulan Ale? There be no creature I've been made ken to known as Borg."

"I been... no! No... well, not... NO! No drinkies! Never mind, Unk... she's... snipped," Joel sighed, giving up.

Kevin glared at the back of Joel's head. "When did you go drinking Romulan Ale?!"

"Tardis... with Juan... he was a little... squiffy... after..."

"And what about you?"

"I got the biggest hard-on off my life! You enjoyed THAT night, Kevvy!"

John felt Stephen's embarrassment and smiled at his boyfriend, playfully bouncing his eyebrows. 'We've gotta try some of that Romulan Ale, baby. You're plenty big already, but... just wondering.' John and Stephen broke into fits of giggles.

Then Scotty's answer came back, "I'll be trustin' you for this time, Laddie... iff'n I hear whisperin 'bout any nestin' of those creatures in Spock's stateroom, I'll be puttin' you over my knee!"

Joel blinked, then giggled. He knew his Uncle Scotty would never really carry out such a threat. "Can we come up now?"

"Yes... transporting."

Relatively certain that his mom would not be in the apartment, Troy and Sean left the CIC dining room. In the condominium's elevator, Sean and Troy were holding hands. Two hearts were frantically beating. Sean wanted to tell Troy that they didn't really have to do what they were planning, only to reduce any pressure he may have inadvertently applied. He simply couldn't make his mouth speak the words. Troy was wondering what Sean found so attractive about him. Sean had said that he liked him the moment he got up on stage the prior afternoon. What was so appealing, he wondered. Was it his eyes or hair or the clothes he wore or was it something else? But Troy couldn't find the words to express himself without making Sean feel uncomfortable. So he let his mind race off on multiple tangents.

In the auditorium, the four band members were keeping Alden busy while they waited for Troy to join them. Derrick ordered four-foot high risers for his drum kit and had his entire setup placed center stage. Mike ordered an additional Acoustasonic amp and a Bassman amp for Troy. Keith and Corey thought it would be really kewl to have some extra lights behind the drum risers. They wanted to be able to have the appearance of shafts of sunlight back stage. After nine yellow spotlight cans were placed and looked very nice from the audience, they added nine red spotlight cans. Separately the red looked nice too, but then they tried mixing the yellow and red cans to get an orange color. Corey could visualize beginning with the red lights, adding the yellow for orange and then fading out the red for yellow only. Four fog machines were added; one stage left, two center stage under the drum risers and one stage right. High above and forward of the stage, an additional white spotlight was installed for Troy. Prez worked with Alden to prepare a large sign with the band's name. They decided on using an italicized calligraphy font in a bright platinum color against the dark green curtain backdrop.

When Kaleo and Tory walked in the auditorium with dozens of other Rimmer kids in tow, the band were just finishing the new stage setup. Corey was up in the sound and light booth with Drew testing out the new lighting gear. Keith kept his piano and electronic keyboards stage left, and added a Hammond organ. Before the drum risers were the bass amp and Troy's guitar amplifiers. Stage right is where Mike had his guitar amplifiers. Prez ordered a GT-6B bass effects unit. Mike got two GT-6 guitar effects units; one for himself and the other for Troy.

From the stage and down into the audience, Prez loudly asked his kids, "How does it look guys?"

Richie hollered, "It's really kewl, Poppa!"

Gage agreed, "It's sweet!" Dee, Dillon and Sammy nodded their agreement, adding additional remarks.

Up in the booth, Corey still wasn't satisfied. He asked Alden to connect him to Mozart Music. Within a minute, Corey was chatting with Kayla, the woman that he had worked with during the luau Friday night.

Keith wondered, "Where's Troy at, baby?"

Prez grinned, "He's already met Sean."

"Oh great!" Keith knowingly cackled.

"Let's get started without him," Mike suggested. "How about we start with Something's Missing, since there's someone missing."

Outside and in the trees to the south of the schools, Jules and Verne had found the Scoobies. Soon, all the ferrets were gathered with Brian and Sue, Aslan and Shere Khan, Rafe and Lee.

Spike ran up to Sue excitedly shouting, "Lookie! Fat grub! Is this a nice one, Sue?"

Sue popped it into her mouth, and then hugged Spike. "Yeah. Really juicy! Thanks!"

"There's more! There's more! Under the shiny rocks and stones!" Xander yelled.

Aslan and Shere Khan were digging holes in the earth, looking for worms, while Lee and Rafe were getting their heads together to design a super-duper new device to find the best grubs ever. At least, that was Rafe's plan. Lee was simply playing along.

Walking into the apartment, Sean nervously said, "I'm just wondering, you seem to have the larger of the two bedrooms?" He then reprimanded himself; jeez, focus on the bed a little more, why don't ya?

Troy shook his head and, in an uncontrollably shaky voice from being excited and nervous, replied, "Both rooms are the same size. They each have sliding glass doors to the balcony. I get the morning sun and the better views outside." Troy wanted to mention that both rooms had similar beds, but stopped himself. Don't go there, he berated himself. You start talking about beds and you're gonna mess your pants! Yeah, you're already really attached to him, but slow the fuck down!

They went into Troy's bathroom. While Troy searched drawers in the vanity for his new unopened toothbrush, Sean picked up the bottle of mouthwash, opened it and took a quick mouthful from the bottle. Finding the toothbrush and putting it on the vanity counter, Troy then picked up the mouthwash and took a swig. Watching Sean swish the mouthwash around from the mirror, Troy grinned and a little bit of blue mouthwash dribbled out of his mouth. Grabbing the towel quickly, Troy patted his chin dry. Sean spit out his mouthwash then picked up the toothbrush and fumbled with the packaging before finally getting it out. Troy picked up his electric toothbrush and reached for the toothpaste tube. The simple task of unscrewing the top was somehow forgotten though and the unopened tube dropped into the sink. Impatiently rolling his eyes, Troy snatched it like it was alive and might jump from his hand again.

Sean seriously asked, "Are you nervous too?"

Running a squiggly line of paste on the brush, Troy grinned and nodded then handed off the tube and asked, "You are too?"

Sean nodded, "I really don't want to screw this up... you and me, us as a couple, I mean."

"It's not that I'm not ready," Troy tried to explain; "it's just my first time doing anything like this."

"It's not my first time as in first times, but this is way different."

"How so?"

Sean shrugged, "This time I really care," and stuffed the toothbrush in his mouth before he said anything more embarrassing or stupid.

Troy nodded then put his toothbrush in his mouth and turned it on. Rather than watch Sean in the mirror, Troy concentrated on Sean's hand on the vanity. He had nice long fingers with trimmed nails and a little blond hair too. Troy softly ran his fingers along Sean's fingers then slowly up his hand to his wrist. Sean flipped his hand over. When Troy began the process of tracing his fingers again, Sean slowly closed his hand. Troy looked up into Sean's eyes. There was softness there in Sean's dark blue eyes; willingness, but a genuine fear too, it seemed.

In Troy's paler blue eyes, Sean saw something he could only describe as respect. No one had ever really respected him before and it was shocking. He wondered; why would Troy respect me, of all people? There also seemed to be lurking questions in Troy's eyes, all possible questions at once; where, when, how, and why?

Leaving the toothbrush hanging from his mouth, Sean reached for Troy's face and caressed it again. It was a rounder face than his own and, thank goodness, it was a smooth face; the face of a teen boy, not an older man. Troy took a deep breath in through his nose and closed his eyes then pressed his face against Sean's palm. In that one simple action, Sean had a revelation. He trusts me! For the first time, I want to do all those things the gross older men made me do. Does he realize I could spend hours eating him alive? Go slow though this time, Sean told himself. There's no reason to hurry or scare him. I'll take a small step then let him take a step and we'll go back and forth like that.

Troy's eyes opened and he turned off the toothbrush before it wore his teeth down to stubs. Lifting his head off Sean's palm, Troy then leaned forward to spit out the toothpaste and suds in his mouth. While Troy wiped his mouth, Sean spat out the toothpaste in his mouth. Troy offered the towel and Sean took it to wipe his mouth. When Sean put the towel on the sink, Troy moved closer and wrapped his arms around Sean's back, resting his head on Sean's shoulder.

"You're shaking," Sean realized, and held Troy firmly in place.

Troy nodded and softly admitted, "Can't help it. It's so weird. I never thought it could be like this."

"Do you not want to?" Sean whispered, "We don't have to."

"I do want to; just don't know how to."

"For someone that don't know how, you're doing and saying the best things."

Troy giggled, "I'm there already."

Sean wondered, "Where already?"

"I falling in love with you."

Those were the most precious few words Sean had ever heard in his life. "I love you too, Troy."

"It's not even been three hours since we met."

"Is there a certain amount of time it should take?"

"I guess not. I just never believed in the possibility."

"Love at first sight?"

"Almost first sight."

"I'd never hurt you or anything."

Looking up into Sean's eyes, Troy smiled, "I know it." Sean softly kissed Troy, just long enough to feel soft lips against his own. Only to try to emulate Sean's kiss, Troy kissed him back. Pulling back, Troy asked, "How was that?"

Sean giggled, "Awesome!"

"I'm just following your example," Troy blushed.

Sean teased, "We could probably do everything we need to here, standing in the bathroom?"

Troy chuckled, "Or we could get more comfortable?" Sean nodded and Troy began pushing Sean backwards out of the bathroom.

Walking backwards, Sean giggled, "What are you doin'?"

Wide eyed, Troy playfully admitted, "I just don't want to let go of you."

Tossing his head back and laughing, Sean realized, "You're not shaking anymore."

"Be afraid," Troy giggled. "Be very afraid."

Stepping into Troy's room, Sean teased, "Of you? Never! Anything you did to me I'd prob'ly like a lot."

Troy laughed, "Kick the door closed, Tiger."

Sean did as Troy instructed and loudly purred then admitted, "I like that name."

Troy softly asked, "Show me a really deep and passionate kiss?"

Sean grinned, "I can do this." Their lips met and Sean snaked his tongue past Troy's lips and into his mouth. Holding Sean tighter, Troy whimpered and Sean desperately groaned. They began breathing through their noses and getting excited. However, they were still standing only a few feet beyond the door and the blinds Troy had opened hours earlier were still open.

When they finally broke apart, Troy gasped, "Oh Jeez! That was incredible!" Sean couldn't help giggling at Troy's enthusiasm. Troy then gathered his self control and softly smiled, "Gimme a minute, okay?" Sean nodded and watched Troy race from the sliding doors to the window, closing the blinds. Exactly why Troy was worried about the windows fifty feet up, Sean wasn't sure, but then he remembered the balcony. Troy then closed his guitar case, snapped the latches and put it on the floor. Lastly, Troy crawled onto his bed and patted the mattress for Sean to join him, saying, "My turn to try that out." Smiling widely, Sean sat on the bed by the headboard and pulled his feet up. Troy crawled over his boyfriend and landed the kiss he'd always dreamed of. This time, Sean briefly whimpered and pulled on Troy to have him eventually squatting across his lap. Breaking the kiss, Troy slid his face over Sean's shoulder and sighed, "Oh man! We ain't done diddly yet, but I feel all kinds o' crazed."

Sean nodded and breathlessly admitted, "It's all way different for me too, now that I actually love who I'm kissing."

Troy softly said, "Tell me something. Why me?"

"I don't even really know," Sean honestly replied. "I guess it's everything about you combined. Your brown hair with blond highlights really looks kewl, but that was only the first thing. On stage yesterday, you just caught my interest. Now that I know you, it's even more intense than it was yesterday. I can barely wait for tomorrow."

Troy then softly admitted, "Before I got on stage, I was scoping out the guys in the band." Sean softly chortled. Troy said, "You got them beat now." He then whispered, "I love you and think you're way hot."

Sean took that as a signal and carefully groped Troy's erection through his shorts. Troy gasped and his entire body lurched. "I'm sorry," Sean sincerely said. "I'm rushing it again, ain't I?"

Troy shook his head and said, "Just a shock. No one's ever touched my dick when it's hard before except me." He then grinned, "Touch it again?"

Sean whispered, "I love you, Troy," then more gently pressed his hand against the front of Troy's shorts. Sean watched Troy's facial expressions. Since he was obviously enjoying it more, Sean softly asked, "Can I see it?" Troy nodded, so Sean deftly unbuttoned the shorts with one hand. He then slid his fingers inside Troy's shorts to protect against accidental snagging then used his other hand to lower the zipper. Seeing his boyfriend's circumcised erection for the first time, Sean looked up and smiled, "Nice, really nice."

"Ya think so?"

Sean nodded, "I've seen tiny ones and real big ones. Yours is perfect, really."

Troy blushed, "God! You're so sweet! Who could've possibly ever taken advantage of you?"

"The slime of the Earth," Sean plainly answered.

Troy smiled, "Never again, Tiger." He then deliberately added, "You are all mine."

Glancing away shyly, Sean mumbled, "I really hope so."

Troy lifted Sean's chin softly saying, "Hey, I haven't had many friends, never mind someone I could call a best friend, until today. I really do care for you that much." He stole a quick, tender kiss then lifted Sean's arms to remove his shirt. Tossing it aside, Troy then removed his own shirt and carelessly flung it over his shoulder, causing Sean to giggle. Rolling off to the side of Sean, Troy pulled his shorts off. Returning to lay beside Sean and cuddling up close, Troy smiled, "Can I see your dick?" Sean nodded and Troy went to work on the boardies drawstring and Velcro. Seeing the size of Sean's uncircumcised erection, Troy softly gasped, "My God!"

Covering his eyes, Sean giggled, "I know. I'm surprised you didn't feel it."

"I did, but... what the hell do I know how a hard dick feels against my thigh? The good Lord gave you an extra helping."

"It's too much, isn't it?"

Troy looked up into Sean's eyes and seriously assured, "It's part of you. I didn't fall in love with your dick. I fell in love with the way you've acted and talked the last few hours." Troy then briefly looked down before smiling up at Sean and cackling, "This is one big bonus!" Feeling his face flushing again, Sean giggled and realized he hadn't smiled so often in years. Troy shared, "Yesterday, I was afraid to get on stage. If I hadn't, you wouldn't have wanted to meet me. I mean, talk about your life changes. I go from shy lonely gay boy to having a very well equipped boyfriend in a day."

Sean grinned, "It's not always like that."

Troy loudly laughed, "I would hope not!"

Sean cracked up then chuckled, "I mean it's barely more than a chubby for most dudes. You make my dick this hard, Troy."

Kissing Sean's belly quickly, Troy then looked up and giggled, "Ya know, when we walked in the house, I had a thousand questions, wondering why you like me. I'm just gonna count my blessings and shut the hell up."

"You really liked being with me all this time?"

"Hell yeah, I did! What's just as much fun, to me anyway, is talking with you. All those men that were after your dick should've done what I did; they should have gotten to know you first. I've seen you bashful and shy, serious and silly, with other kids at the dining room, pool and diving well. You're really a sweet person. I'm proud to call you my boyfriend."

"Really?"

Troy nodded, "I'm so proud I want you to have dinner here with me and my mom."

Sean worried, "What if she don't like me?"

"That's her problem," Troy stubbornly said. "Anyway, I know she'll like you. And you know what else?"

"What?"

"Just cuddling like this is fantastic."

"Yeah, it really is."

"Ya wanna spend the night here?"

"Isn't that gonna push your mom over the edge?"

"I really don't think so. She knows I'm gay and has been pushing me out of my shell."

Sean grinned, "You're out now!"

Evilly cackling, Troy tugged on one leg of Sean's boardies and admitted, "I've never seen blond pubes before either. Yours are especially nice."

Sean giggled, "What makes mine so nice?"

"Two things; they're yours and they're blond. Now lift your ass so I can get these shorts off of you!" Sean roared laughing and raised his butt. After removing Sean's shorts and tossing them on the floor, Troy settled down close to Sean again and kissed him. "I have one other question, being a virgin and all."

Sean giggled, "What's that?"

Troy whispered, "I wanna play with your dick, but I really don't want to hurt you."

"Why would you think it would hurt?"

"It's uncut. Isn't it more sensitive?"

"The foreskin is, but it'll stretch pretty far in both directions before it hurts. It also adds some really good feelings." Sean then scooted down and demonstrated on Troy's dick what feels really good. Apprehensively, Troy copied Sean's actions. Sean sighed then whispered, "That's real nice." Their faces moved closer and they kissed once again.

Almost an hour and half after Platinum Habits arrived at the auditorium and thirty minutes after they began practicing, Troy and Sean walked in carrying saxophones, several pocketed harmonicas, a recorder and two guitars. The band was playing Lucy In The Sky With Diamonds, and Mike was singing lead vocals with Keith backing him up. Corey was trying out the new laser lights he had Alden deliver and install; red and blue beams of light were dancing around the stage and out onto the ceiling of the audience area. Already more than pleased with each other, Troy and Sean were thrilled with the new stage setup and lights. At the front of the stage, Troy slid his guitar cases up and Sean slid the two saxophone cases onto the edge of the stage. The two boys then turned to each other, hugged tightly and kissed deeply; causing a stir of giggles in the audience that couldn't be heard over the music.

Leaning closer to Sean, Troy said, "Don't you go anywhere."

Sean replied into Troy's ear, "Never! We're going back to your place after this?"

Troy nodded and giggled then let go of Sean. Heading up on stage, Troy waited near the stage corner for the song's end so he wouldn't interrupt. Out in the audience, Sean found Horacio and parked himself next to his roomie. Horacio leaned close and said, "I left you around ten-thirty and now it's quarter of two. The ten minutes has passed!"

Blushing fiercely, Sean nodded and laughed.

Horacio grinned, "Give it up, bro! What've you been doing all that time?"

Sean shrugged, leaned closer and replied, "Talking mostly."

"You're so full of shit!" Horacio laughed.

Sean assured, "It's true," and then answered, "What I'll never have to ask you to do again."

Horacio repeated, "Never again?"

Sean nodded and said, "Thanks for the shove," then held up his clenched fist. The two boys knocked knuckles then settled back to watch the band.

When the band finished the song, Troy walked across the stage. Keith caught up with him and knocked knuckles. Prez then shook his hand and congratulated him. Derrick came down off the risers and knocked knuckles. Still wearing an electric guitar and wanting to avoid shocks, Mike simply smiled and offered his congratulations and a rain check for more later.

Troy waved his arm and commented on how great the stage looked and that the laser light show was especially kewl.

Keith said, "We've got you all set, dude."

Mike pointed at the two amps before the drum riser and said, "One of each, dude; one for your acoustic and one for the electric."

Troy gushed, "I can't believe you guys got me a 50th Anniversary Stratocaster."

"Sweet!" Mike chirped.

Troy nodded, "It's got the most beautiful grain pattern I've ever seen."

"That's kewl," Prez smiled. "Let's work on 'Urgent' and 'Shine On You Crazy Diamond' first."

Troy said, "I'm ready, but can I ask a favor?"

"Sure, dude," Keith quickly said.

Troy asked, "Do you guys know The Moody Blues song, 'The Story In Your Eyes'?"

Keith nodded, "Yeah, excellent tune too."

"We've never played it as a band before though," Derrick admitted.

Troy explained, "I played it for Sean this morning. I think Keith or Derrick should sing the lead vocals, but Sean wants me to sing it. Can we try it out, for Sean?"

Everyone enthusiastically nodded and Prez grinned, "You guys have really fallen for each other?"

Troy giggled, "He's so great! Where I'm weak he seems stronger and where he's less strong, I take over." He paused and noticed four wide smiles then blushed, "I'm trippin'?"

"Abso-tively!" Mike cheered.

Patting Troy's back, Keith assured, "We all know the feeling, dude."

Prez said, "We've got a vocal mic for you, and clip-on mics for the saxophones."

Derrick instructed, "Get the tenor sax out, dude. Let's play 'Urgent' first." When everyone agreed, Derrick went back up to his drums.

Troy got his sax out and checked the tuning against the piano. He then clipped the microphone to the bell and grinned, "It's wireless too?"

"Prez, you and me are wireless now," Mike smiled. "Since Derrick and Keith are pretty much locked in place, the three of us can move around to keep the audience boppin' and hoppin'."

Through the stage monitors, Drew asked Troy for a quick sound check to set the level on the tenor sax. Troy played briefly and then Drew chirped, "Kewl, bro."

Platinum Habits and Troy ran through 'Urgent' with Troy playing saxophone, and 'Shine On You Crazy Diamond', with Troy playing his new Stratocaster and then the saxophone solo. They then played 'Stairway to Heaven', with Troy playing the opening flute part on the recorder and then switching to acoustic guitar. Keith easily handled the lead vocals. At the end of the song, while the audience was clapping and cheering, Drew's voice came over the stage monitors. "YEAH! That's how that song should sound live!"

The band then played 'Hoochie Coochie Man', with Troy providing an excellent blues harmonica solo. Keith played his keyboard solo on the new Hammond organ then Mike played a completely different solo than he had played the prior day. In front of the stage and before the first row of seats, Kaleo and Tory began dirty dancing together. The band then taught Troy a few of their favorite cover tunes that really required his rhythm guitar and background vocals. They played, 'Never My Love', 'Starrider', 'I'd Love To Change the World', 'Time Of The Season' and 'Traces'. Hearing more songs from Friday night's concert, sounding every bit as good with Troy, many of the original kids got enthused and began telling the newbies about that night. When the final song ended to more applause, Prez moved closer to Troy and asked, "You wanna sing lead vocals on 'The Story In Your Eyes'?"

Troy nodded, "This time, for Sean. If I suck, then Keith or Derrick could easily take it."

Keith walked up to the nearest microphone and said, "Drew? Only the stage monitors for a few minutes please, bro?"

Over the monitors, Drew replied, "The main faders are down, dudes."

Troy checked his guitar's tuning against the piano then they began rehearsing 'The Story In Your Eyes'. Mike began with the introduction and Troy joined in. Then Prez, Derrick and Keith joined in turn.

In the audience, Sean leaned closer and told Horacio; "Troy played this same song for me earlier."

"Was it any good?"

Sean grinned, "The song?"

Horacio shoved him and laughed, "Of course the song!"

Sean giggled, "He played the song perfectly. He sang to me in his bedroom." Horacio began mooing. Sean cackled then leaned closer and whispered, "For the first time in my life, I want to take him to the stars and back again, but he's a virgin."

"Was a virgin," Horacio softly corrected. He then wondered, "What's the problem?"

Sean rolled his eyes and asked, "What part of virgin didn't you understand?"

"Oh!" Horacio said a little too loudly. He then softly asked, "You know what you need to do then?" Sean shrugged, so Horacio explained, "Let him take you to the stars and back again."

Sean grinned, "Just the way he talks to me, he kind o' already has. He trusts and respects me. It's an amazing feeling."

"You know what I mean."

"I know. It's not a problem for me. I'll prob'ly be a problem for him though."

Shaking his head sadly, Horacio asked, "Why are you worried about it?"

"I just don't ever want to hurt him," Sean replied.

"Time, bro. He'll let you know when he's ready." Horacio then had an idea and asked, "Would you say Troy's hung average?"

Sean shook his head and replied, "More than average, judging by what I've seen of men. I'd guess close to seven inches long and at least five inches around."

Horacio smiled, "I'll take care of everything," and then stood up.

Sean nervously wondered, "Where are you going?"

"Trust me," Horacio replied, and then shuffled down the row to the aisle and hurried to Kaleo. Horacio and Kaleo chatted for about a minute then Kaleo tapped his sub-vocal. The band were working on their harmonies and singing along with only Troy's acoustic guitar accompaniment. Horacio began walking back up the aisle. However, before Horacio arrived, three wrapped boxes appeared in the seat Horacio had been sitting in. Shuffling back down the row of seats again, Horacio grinned and sat on the other side of Sean.

Pointing at the boxes, Sean asked, "What are these?"

Horacio looked over at the boxes and answered, "Presents, from you to Troy."

Sean groaned then asked, "What've you done?"

"I'm helping you, dude!"

Almost afraid to ask, Sean eventually wondered, "What's in the boxes?"

"One is a box of chocolates."

Sean smiled, "Awesome! Thanks!"

Leaning closer, Horacio whispered, "The other two are dildos, with lube and condoms in each box. I asked for three; a five by four, a seven by five, and the last one is just like you, nine by six. You guys can play with 'em together."

Sean excitedly croaked, "Dude! I might as well say, 'I'm lookin' forward to fucking you!'"

"No," Horacio sang. "What you are saying is, 'I love you and want to play with you.' Give him the chocolates and the small box tonight. I'll take the other box back to our dorm room. You can give it to him whenever you're ready."

Satisfied that they had the vocals down and were ready, Keith waved both his arms and loudly said, "Crank it up, Drew."

"Kewl," Drew replied, "Let's hear it."

Sean shook his head and giggled, "I'm gonna smack you so friggin' hard!"

Quickly covering his mouth, Horacio cracked up and slid down into this seat, completely hysterical.

Derrick counted off then Mike began playing his electric guitar and Troy came in with his twelve-string acoustic right after Mike. Prez's bass and Derrick's drums came in followed by Keith's piano part. Finding Sean out in the audience, Troy stepped up to the microphone and sang emotionally, as if Sean was the only person in the audience.

Horacio leaned over and grinned, "He's singing to you again, dude."

Feeling an intense shiver race up his spine, Sean nodded and smiled, "I know it." Then he got up and walked down the aisle. Stopping at the first row of seats, Sean stood, proudly watching and listening to his boyfriend. Dillon, Geoff and Richie looked over and up at Sean. They looked up at Troy, noticing that he was only looking at Sean, and all three little guys began giggling.

The song ended with five voices singing through the repeated main riff then everything ended sharply. Sean began clapping and cheering. Having just heard the original recording with Troy only a few hours earlier, Sean thought the band played the song perfectly and his new boyfriend had done an outstanding job. Out in the audience, Horacio stood and clapped, prompting everyone to get on their feet. Soon, almost everyone was standing and cheering.

Mike and Prez put their guitars back on their stands. Keith, Derrick, Mike and Prez surrounded Troy and congratulated him. Prez smiled, "You sing like that all the time?"

Taking his guitar off, Troy blushed, "This time was a bit more special."

"We could tell!" Mike laughed.

"All lingering questions have been answered," Derrick smiled, "You're in the band now, dude"

Glancing around at the others, Troy squealed, "Really?"

At Troy's obvious surprise, Keith chuckled, "You play guitar, harmonica, keys, recorder and sax, and you can sing too. You're in."

Prez nodded, "An added extra, you know enough music theory so we can share stuff quick and easy."

Mike chanted, "If it walks like a duck and quacks like a duck."

At the edge of the stage, on the audience floor and behind Troy, Sean began laughing.

Stepping forward and giving Troy a hug, Mike giggled, "Someone's waiting for you," then stepped back.

Glancing over his shoulder briefly, Troy blushed, "We're done for today?"

"We're done for now," Derrick corrected. "If things don't get too whacky tonight, we'll play more then."

Prez nodded then told Troy, "We've got some Clan stuff to deal with. We'll be back about six."

Keith offered, "I'll have Alden transport your instruments back to your condo."

Troy grinned, "Don't bother, it's kewl. It gives him an excuse to come home with me." Turning red again, he then helplessly cackled, "And me an excuse to be alone with him some more."

Smiling widely, the four Clan leaders playfully sang, "Excuses, excuses!"

"Gotta love 'em!" Troy loudly laughed.

Patting Troy on the shoulder, Prez smiled, "We'll leave you two to pack up your gear." Keith, Mike and Derrick then walked across the stage and down the steps with Prez following. They each offered their congratulations to Sean, then got their kids and started up the aisle.

Troy waved Sean up onto the stage. Sean hurried up the steps. Troy met him and they hugged tightly then kissed deeply. Troy pulled back, tilted his head and smirked, "You're excited?"

Sean nodded and giggled, "You sang to me again, in front of everybody."

Troy provocatively mooed then rested his head on Sean's shoulder. "I can't believe this day!" Troy excitedly gushed. "First you, then us and now I'm part of a band!"

"There's only one more thing to do," Sean reminded.

Troy softly assured, "Don't worry about my mom, Tiger. I know she's gonna like you."

Sean sighed, "I'm just worried about my past, ya know? She may not like that."

Hugging Sean tighter, Troy explained his perspective a little. "She took a job with Clan Short. She has to know a lot of these kids have been abused. In New Jersey, she had a similar job working with special needs kids. If it worried her at all, she wouldn't have accepted the job in the first place. For weeks she's been pushing me to get out more and do stuff. That's simply not me, Sean. I'm a musician..."

"A really good one too," Sean interrupted.

After another tight squeeze and an appreciative kiss, Troy stepped back saying, "What matters is us, you plus me. Your past is over and done. You'll see, my mom's gonna think the same things I did." Troy then began packing up his saxophone and instructed, "Take the strap off my guitar, please?"

Sean nodded and went to Troy's guitar. He soon figured out how to take the strap off and wondered, "What did you first think of me?"

Blushing and giggling, Troy honestly replied, "Cute. A little shy. Dressed nice."

"In boardies and a T-shirt?" Sean giggled.

Taking the wireless device off his acoustic guitar, Troy nodded, "Yep, that's what I thought. Was it so different for you yesterday?"

Sean shrugged, "I guess not."

Placing his guitar back in its case, Troy said, "We had a good start. It's gonna get even better."

"Like how?"

"Right off the top of my head; neither of us is alone wishing for someone; next, you'll get me out of the house and by the pool; also, I'll get you more interested in music, which means you'll eventually be asking me to learn your favorite songs."

Sean nodded and smiled, "All good stuff so far."

With his gear packed, Troy went to him and reached for his hands, "What about going out on dates? What about slow dancing together? What about rainy afternoons just watching TV or playing games?"

Sean slyly grinned, "What kind of games?"

Moving closer, Troy whispered, "All kinds." The lights in the auditorium began turning off. Troy smiled, "Let's get out of here before they leave us in the dark."

"That's not such a bad thing either," Sean teased.

Troy laughed and picked up his saxophone cases. Sean grabbed the guitar cases and the recorder. As they started off the stage, Troy reminded, "It'll be another few hours before my mom gets home." He then joked, "Whatever shall we do?"

Sean roared laughing then remembered the gifts still waiting where he and Horacio left them. He worried if Horacio remembered to bring the one larger box back to the dorm. Approaching the area where he was sitting, Sean said, "Just a minute," and began searching the rows of seats as he slowly walked by.

"What are you looking for?" Troy wondered. "Did you lose something?"

Sean turned and grinned, but didn't reply. Eventually seeing the two boxes, Sean put the guitars down then shuffled down the row. He picked them up and turned around. Seeing two smartly wrapped boxes with ribbons and bows, Troy's jaw dropped. "These are for you," Sean simply said, and held out the packages.

Speechless, Troy put the saxophones down and wiped happy tears from his eyes. He took the boxes, sniffled and stammered, "I... can't... believe you... got me presents. When? How?"

Sean shrugged, "Horacio and me were talking. He went to Kaleo and a minute later, presents appeared. I guess it was Daileass." Carefully placing the boxes down on his baritone sax case, Troy then gave Sean a rib cracking hug. Sean grunted then giggled, "You ain't even opened them yet!"

Troy cheered, "It don't matter. You got me presents!" then kissed Sean hard and deep. Breaking the kiss and resting his head on Sean's shoulder, Troy giggled, "You're trying to impress me and my mom, aren't you?" Sean only laughed. Troy playfully sang, "It's working!"

Now standing in a mostly darkened auditorium with only a few dimmed lights above and the little L.E.D. tracks outlining the aisle, Sean whispered, "I really do love you, Troy. I only hope you like them."

"I already do," Troy assured. Opening his eyes and sighing, Troy realized they were in the dark. Stepping back, Troy anxiously chuckled, "I can't wait to get these home and opened. What did you do?"

Picking up the guitars and smaller sax case, Sean hummed then giggled. He could only hope that Horacio's ideas weren't going too far too fast. Troy picked up the other sax case and the two gift boxes.

Outside the auditorium, Madeline Hupp stopped Prez to ask if she could order commercial grade laundry carts for each of the dormitories, the pool house and the indoor rec center. She explained that more kids were moving into the dorms. Gathering and separating laundry would soon become an issue. Surprised that the housekeepers didn't have all the equipment required, Prez asked what was needed. He immediately had Alden acquire and deliver everything Madeline had asked for; including ten and twenty bushel laundry carts adequate for bedding, clothes and towels. Everything was delivered to the housekeeping rooms at the dorms, pool house and rec center.

At the CIC conference room, the Core Rimmers had gathered and were waiting for instructions about their phaser training. Everyone was more than a bit disappointed they hadn't stuck around for a tour of the Enterprise. And it was obvious that the tour was taking longer than expected, because John wasn't with them for the phaser training that he was looking forward to.

Juan walked into the conference room on the Hawaii base with a grin on his face. Holding his hand was his son, Tumelo. His son. He still could not get over that fact; he had a son. For a moment, he dwelled on the idea of how much he personally had changed in the last few days since the little boy had been around. Everything seemed so different when he had to think about this little boy, and how everything he did would affect him. For a moment, he flashed back to his conversation with the boy less than an hour ago.

Watching his son play with some small cars on the floor of his room, Juan grinned and called, "Tumelo?"

The boy jumped to his feet, ran over to Juan and jumped into his arms. After a very wet kiss that the boy had placed on his cheek, Tumelo almost melted into Juan's chest and purred, "What's up daddy?"

Juan couldn't help basking in the feelings coming from the boy for a brief moment before he found his voice. "I gotta head over to Hawaii and train some of their guys in gun use. You wanna come with? I know they got a lot of kids your age, and the pool looked cool."

"Sure!" Tumelo exclaimed, but then got serious for a moment, or at least as serious as a five year old can get. "You mean you don't want me to learn about guns and stuff?"

Juan hugged the boy close to him trying to figure out what to say. For the first time in his life, Juan had something that was even more important than his guns. Yes, he had Koth and Joel and his family, but they didn't interfere with his love of guns. Tumelo though, it really made him rethink a lot of things he 'knew'. "What I want is for you to do what you want to do. If you wanna learn about guns, I'll teach you. If you wanna go to Hawaii and just play around with the other kids, that'll make me happy too. It's up to you."

"Maybe later," Tumelo said softly into Juan's chest.

"As I said, whenever you want." Juan said, squeezing his boy tighter for a second, and then suddenly he drove his fingers into the boy's side. Tumelo started to howl in laughter. Five minutes later, Juan finished the tickle torture, and got them both ready to go.

"Hey Juan!" He heard a voice say, and it brought him out of his musings. Looking over, Juan saw Prez starting to stand up out of his chair in welcome. A quick glance showed that everyone that was supposed to be there was in fact there.

"Hey guys. Before we begin, I wanna introduce my son, Tumelo. Tumelo, this is Keith, Prez, Mike, Derrick, Drew, Corey and Kaleo." Juan said pointing out each person as he named them. Shyly, Tumelo buried himself into Juan's side while trying to hide behind the bigger boy; however, he did give a small wave, and a barely audible "Hi."

After the normal greetings were made, Juan looked at Prez. "You mind if he goes out and plays with the other little ones? He needs some time to learn how to be a kid again."

Not knowing until now that Juan was a father, Prez smiled, "Not at all, Juan."

"Cool." Juan then turned and knelt in front of Tumelo. "Why don't you head on outside and see what you can't get into. You know how to recognize the security guys, so if you have any problems, just find one of them, okay?"

"Sure thing, Daddy." Tumelo said as he scampered towards the door. He stopped, turned around, and gave a shy wave to everyone before darting out the door.

Moving to the front of the room, Juan said, "Okay, let's get this show on the road. Hey Daileass, can you teleport my table in here. It should fit right behind me.

"Sure thing, boss man." Daileass giggled. Juan looked a little perturbed. Behind Juan a table appeared holding a variety of weapons, both ballistic and energy based; some assembled, some not.

"Okay, before we get started, I know you guys have been real busy lately, and who knows when something will happen, so if you guys agree, why don't we move the first part of this class into my mind. It'll save us a lot of time, and make things easier as I can set things up there in a way that will help. I don't know if you guys know or not, but the UNIT telepaths have many rules regarding what we can do with our powers and what we can't. One of the biggest rules is no using our powers on people unless they have done something wrong, without their permission. So I'm asking your permission to bring you all into my head for the book part of the training."

After getting agreement from everyone, Juan closed his eyes while sitting down. Next thing they knew, they were all in a close copy of the room, but they all knew they were in Juan's mindscape.

Juan let them look around for a moment as he knew this was a relatively new experience for many of them to be inside someone's mind. While he tried to copy the room exactly, he knew there were minor differences based on how he saw things, as opposed to how they saw the same thing.

"Okay, let's get going. The first thing you guys need to know about is the different levels that one can be trained in within the Clan. During our time in the Tardis, J.J., Riti and I came up with the different levels of training that one could go through. First off, there are two different classes that we teach to non-military personnel. The first is ballistic style weapons, and the second in energy based."

After making sure that they understood everything so far, Juan started talking again. "There are five levels to each class. Level one is standard Starfleet training in one or the other. This one will give you the certification to carry and use a weapon.

The second is Clan standard training. It builds off what is standard for Starfleet, and builds on that to give people a broader spectrum of knowledge in not only the weapon style they want, but also the basics of the other. In other words, you guys all want to know energy based weapons. If you go level two, then you will also get to know the basics of ballistic.

Waiting to make sure they all understood so far, Juan hid the smirk that on the verge of showing. He knew that all of them were surprised by how serious he was being. He liked keeping people on their toes, and this was one of his favorite ways of doing it. Not to mention, when it came to gun safety, he was religious about it, and he expected the same from everyone he trained.

"The third level is what the Military members would receive. Your basic UNIT security members have level three training in either ballistic or energy. And since they are level three in one, they are classed as level two in the other. With me so far?"

Getting nods from everyone, Juan continued, "Level four is expert level. That is the level that some of the normal military members have, but all of the hybrids are trained to, as well as all the personal security forces. The final level, level five, is the instructor level. Currently there are less than ten instructors within the clan, but that is slowly growing." Again he paused to make sure they were with him, and seeing all of them nod, he went on. "My question to you all is simple. I need each of you to personally decide and then tell me what level you wish to train to."

Prez turned to his teammates saying, "We each need at least level two. Does anyone want to go beyond that?" Keith, Corey and Drew shook their heads. Mike and Derrick checked with each other.

Mike said, "Once I get level two, I may want to go to level three or higher."

Derrick grinned, "I might go as far as level three."

Kaleo added, "I'm thinking the same as Mike and Derrick. After level two, maybe level three. I'll decide if I need to go further than three after passing that course."

Prez turned to Juan saying, "Level two for now. If or when Kaleo, Mike and Derrick decide to go further, they'll contact you, Juan."

Juan nodded with a grin. "I'm glad you all picked at least level two. To be honest, had you picked level one, I would have just had some Starfleet schmuck come and train you."

Prez and many of the Core Rimmers chuckled. Prez then wondered, "You don't think too much of level one Starfleet standard, obviously. Is there a reason why?"

After letting the laughter die down, Juan once again seriously said, "Yeah, there is Prez. JJ, Riti and I agree that the biggest difference between level one and level two is this; level one gives you the training to use a weapon, but does not make sure you will use it. I know this may sound strange coming from me, but it's great to know how to use one, but knowing when to, and especially when not to use a weapon is more important. Even more important than that, is knowing that you can use it if needed. It's one thing to say that you can grab one of these," he reached behind himself, and pulled out a standard hand phaser, showing it to the group. "It's great to say you can use one of these, but it's totally different when you have to sight down on a living breathing person, and make the decision that it is time for their life to end. It should never be an easy decision; however, it must be one that can be made in an instant."

Juan watched for a moment, as each one of the Rimmers was lost in their own thoughts. Finally Juan spoke again. This time his voice was soft and held a level of care and concern that they hadn't heard from him before. "I know none of you may believe this, but I do know what's going through your minds right now. I am sure since you all started up in the Clan you have had times where you've thought to yourself that you would like to kill the fucker that hurt some of the kids you've gotten to know. I am sure by now you have heard about some of what these kids have had to endure just to survive to this point, and you wanna make someone pay for it. I know very well what that is like."

He paused for a moment letting all take in what he had said. "However, when it comes time to actually pull the trigger it's another matter all together. Obviously, killing someone is a last resort. Most of the time, you can get away with just a show of force. If that doesn't work, then you can try to stun them. However, if that does not work, you must be willing to kill to protect your family and yourself. As I said, it should never be easy, but you must be willing to do it. Also know that if you ever have to do it, if you ever have to actually kill someone, as soon as it is safe to do so, you will be required to sit down and talk to one of the Clan shrinks or submit to a Vulcan mind-meld. It's a rule that I personally put into place because out of everyone, I know better what it is like to have to do it. Trust me, it never gets easier, nor should it. You will need to talk to someone about it. If you don't it will fester inside of you, until it hurts... hurts in ways you cannot even dream of."

He saw each of the boys lost in thought, and let them be that way for a bit before he brought them out of it. "However, that is the main reason why I will not train less than level two. Since the clan has telepaths, we use them. Before you are done with me, you will have faced scenarios that will test what I teach you, but more importantly, they will make sure you understand when to use force, how much to use, and if you can make the killing shot."

Seeing that all the Rimmers were okay with what Juan had said so far, he launched into his training. For what the boys thought were the next several hours, Juan went through and taught them the different pieces and parts of not just the standard phaser, but also the phaser rifle. Once he was done with that, he taught them all the basics of the hand gun, and the smaller and easier of the rifles. By the time he was done, each of the boys could take apart and put back together all the weapons they were being trained in.

Done with his training, and confident that the boys knew what they were doing, at least as far as the book knowledge was concerned, Juan stated, "Okay, now here's the question. Do you guys wanna head over to the firing range now, or wait till tomorrow?"

Prez checked with his team again. "I don't know about you guys, but I'd like to get out of the classroom and into the sun."

Keith asked, "Will the firing range be in your mind or the real thing, Juan?"

"Real thing. We'll head over to the UNIT's Rapid Response Base. I got full firing ranges set up there for both ballistic and energy weapons."

"Get me out under the Day Shiny!" Mike cheered. Laughing and giggling, everybody nodded and agreed.

Everyone was laughing as Juan let them out of his mind. Before they really knew anything else, they found themselves standing just outside of Juan's firing range. For the next half hour, Juan went over the safety regulations that they had to observe while on the range, and then went through how to properly use the range. After he was satisfied, he spent the next two hours acting as range boss for the seven boys.

Having completed level one and much of the level two training, all which remained for the next afternoon was running through some of the level two scenarios Juan had prepared. Juan and the seven Core Rimmers transported back to Ewa Beach, just beyond the pool. Tumelo saw his father approaching and ran towards him. Prez and Keith spent time playing with their boys. Mike and Derrick went with their boys to find the Scooby Gang. Corey and Drew found Geoff and Lenny together once again.

* * * * *

In Troy's bedroom, Sean was sitting on the bed, vigilantly watching his boyfriend open the larger of the two boxes. Troy took the ribbon and bow off then put them aside as mementos, so he would always remember Sean and the day. Ripping past the wrapping, Troy gushed, "Chocolates! Ghirardelli Chocolates! I've never seen a box of chocolates this big before!" He then looked at Sean and giggled, "I hope you're gonna help me eat all these? If I try, I'll turn into one big zit!"

Sean grinned, "Give some to your mom too. It can only help."

Opening the box, Troy smirked, "I hope you're kidding."

Sean shrugged, "Only partly. After today, she's lost her son."

Troy giggled, "You got that right!" He then sat nearer to Sean and offered him a piece of candy.

Glancing around the box, Sean mumbled, "I never had these before. Which is what kind?"

Flipping over the box lid, Troy said, "I like chocolate covered cherries. Do you like 'em?" Sean shrugged because he really didn't know, but then thought of something and sniggered. Soon, Sean was giggling uncontrollably and trying desperately to not laugh aloud. Troy smiled and innocently wondered, "What's so funny? Haven't you ever had a chocolate... covered... CHERRY?" Putting the box aside, Troy threw himself at Sean and laughed, "Are you implying that I'm a cherry?"

Falling back to the mattress and becoming hysterical, Sean laughed, "Compared to me? YEAH!"

Troy quickly discovered that Sean was very ticklish. While he straddled his boyfriend and his hands flew from Sean's belly to his armpits, Troy laughed, "I'm from New Jersey! There's more sex and violence on the news every night there than at midnight porn theaters anywhere else!"

"I'm sorry!" Sean laughed and frantically tried to block Troy's hands. "It's just that you never did anything before today!" Troy stopped his attack and squinted. Sean helplessly giggled, "I'm glad it wasn't a box of only chocolate covered cherries. I'd be a dead man."

Huffing playfully, Troy rolled off his boyfriend and picked up the smaller box. Unwrapping the box and placing the bow aside again, Troy evilly gleamed, "Believe me, Tiger; I'm just as horny as the next guy. I'm into all the same stuff as any other gay teenager."

Catching his breath and sitting up again, Sean watched Troy open the second box and admitted, "I'm really glad to hear that."

Seeing the dildo in the box, Troy snorted then laughed, "You nut!" Pulling the plastic encased toy out of the box, Troy blushed and giggled, "Is there a message in this that I might have missed?"

Smiling widely at Troy's reaction, Sean honestly answered, "Just one."

Still softly sniggering, Troy wondered, "And that is?"

Relieved, Sean sighed. He pulled Troy down with and onto him on the mattress. He then caressed Troy's face and shared, "What I felt for you two hours ago or this morning has doubled and doubled again. I don't ever want to hurt you like I was hurt. I was so worried you'd take the dildo the wrong way and get angry. Hearing you laugh about it made all the difference. I just don't want you worrying about my size, ya know?"

After laughing so hard for so long, Troy's heart melted. He shifted himself completely onto Sean and tenderly kissed him. Making eye contact, Troy warmly smiled, "I know what you mean about the feeling doubling every few hours. I feel it too. Sex is important, but it's not what matters most to me. It's this feeling inside that just keeps getting stronger and stronger. While sex is intense, it's nothing compared to this feeling.

"What more can I say, Sean? Really, you seem to get so worried over stuff. How can I make you feel better?"

Tilting his head from side to side, Sean softly said, "I don't know. I guess stuff that worries you worries me even more."

"Okay," Troy began, "That gives me something to go on. I'm not worried at all about introducing you to my mom. I know she's gonna love you because I do. It's really not something you need to worry about at all. Does that help?"

Sean asked, "Your mom won't care about my past?"

"She prob'ly won't even ask you about it," Troy quickly answered. "I'm pretty sure she'll ask me when she and I are alone." He then thought carefully and softly asked, "What scares you so much about your past?"

Sean explosively sighed and wished he could turn away, simply so he could say what he needed and wanted to without Troy's beautiful eyes peering into his own. "I'm gonna tell you the truth, okay?" Troy nodded and Sean said, "I wasn't even ten before some man was sucking my dick. It was only a few days later, a different man was fingering my asshole. Not too long after that, I was getting fucked almost daily. On occasion, some men wanted me to fuck them, but rarely was I hard enough to actually do it. To me, sex is just an act that so happens to feel good. For the first time, today I felt real love and it was from you. It was there when you had me looking out the windows. It was there when you played and sang for me, both times. At the pool, it was still there. It was there again when we were naked together. There was something in your expressions while we were jackin' each other off that I had never seen before. I don't know if I can describe it right; it was more than happiness, more than appreciation, more than anything any man has ever shown me before."

Troy nodded and thought of what it might have been. He remembered what was in Sean's eyes at the time and finally hit upon a possibility. "I think it was passion, Sean. Yeah, there was happiness and appreciation there too, but beyond that, there was love. Really enjoying what you're doing and who you're doing it with adds up to passion. Passion is two things, love and desire. In our case, we wanted to do each other. You wanna know something else?"

"What?"

"The sex you had before with those men was dirty and they knew it. They didn't care about anything except getting off. That's prob'ly why you never saw it before. When I got you off today," Troy paused and smiled, "it was like I had performed nothing short of a miracle. It was more thrilling to me than learning a song all the way through for the first time. It was more thrilling than playing for an audience. It was that special; that unique."

Sean finally smiled and admitted, "It was the greatest sexual experience I've ever had too. I think it was us kissing while we got off."

"That's all that matters, Sean. I don't ever want you to feel like you're just going through the motions with me. If something makes you feel that it's just an act, tell me, okay?"

"Nothing has been an act, honest. This is me, not an act."

Troy nodded, "I know it. Please promise you'll tell me if it ever feels that way."

"I will. I hope I never do though."

"If you do, we stop and figure it out. It's that simple."

"What scares you, Troy? About me or us, I mean?"

"Scares me?" Troy repeated. "About us?" He hummed thoughtfully then shook his head and answered, "The only thing that bugs me is my being jealous. It's wrong and a bad feeling, but I believe that just like I'm yours, my boyfriend is mine. That kind of love isn't something I can share; not now anyway, maybe I'll learn differently someday. I'm already there, Sean. I love you so much; I'm actually considering more than a sleepover tonight. I can see you living here with me and my mom. Maybe not this week or next, but I can see it happening."

Shocked, Sean asked, "You're serious?"

Troy nodded, "Why wouldn't I be? You're a sweetheart and a Tiger rolled into one. What's not to love?"

"My past."

"That was not your fault. And, what they left behind for me was a careful, considerate, warm and passionate guy that has more knowledge of sex than I do. I get a guy that's all that, who's also about my height and weight, blond hair, blue eyes, and, as if I might forget, he's got a nice dick that really grows. That's what I know today. I can only imagine what else I'll learn about you tomorrow."

Wiping his eyes, Sean weakly smiled, "You really think all that of me?"

Troy nodded and assured, "I want to spend my days and nights with you. I don't want to miss a single second, if I can help it."

"Nothing about me scares you; not even my size?"

"No, it don't scare me. It does make me wonder a few things though."

"Like?"

Slowly, a smirk spread across Troy's face. In a typically New Jersey blunt fashion, Troy answered, "How am I gonna get you in my mouth and how funny will I walk after I get you in my ass?"

Sean cracked up. After a few moments, he giggled, "Anything you do with your mouth is gonna be fine by me. As for your ass, that's why I got the dildo."

"It's half your size though!"

Sean seriously asked, "Have you ever had anything in your ass?"

Troy blushed and shrugged, "Just my own fingertip."

"Then that dildo is gonna feel huge. When it feels less huge, let me know. I've got two others for you."

Troy loudly cackled, "TWO?"

Sean giggled, "I'm taking no chances. That one's five inches long by four inches in circumference. One of the other dildos is seven by five, and then there's the nine by six. If I ever hurt you, down there, not only would I lose my erection, I'd probably hide from you for days."

Shaking his head sadly, Troy said, "You would too, I know it. See what I mean about being considerate?"

Sean shyly shrugged, "I guess."

"You're incredible," Troy smiled, "Add humble to the list. No other guy would ever be self conscious about a dick like yours. No other guy would be as concerned about his partner's comfort and then say, 'I guess'." Noticing Sean blushing, Troy assured, "This is not a bad thing."

Sean softly said, "I just wish I could list things about you that I like."

"You have listed some already," Troy reminded. He continued, "You've shown me the rest. You obviously like me playing and singing for you." Sean nodded and Troy added, "You like my sense of humor too."

"Oh yeah," Sean giggled, "your reactions are too funny!"

"It don't matter that you can't explain it, Sean. You show it plenty." Troy then acted like he was searching his mind and teased, "If I recall correctly, you pulled me down and on top of you?"

"Yeah, I did."

Troy hummed then said, "We've been like this at least ten minutes. Do you want me to move?"

Sean cackled, "No way!"

"Somebody likes close contact as much as I do then."

"Yeah," Sean chuckled and blushed. "Close contact with you especially."

Troy teased, "Now I only have to wonder why our clothes are still on?"

Sean giggled, "You wanna have sex again?"

Shaking his head, Troy corrected, "I want to make love with you, but I'll be more honest; I'd really be just as happy spending the next hour cuddled up close and naked with you, before my mom gets home."

"What if..."

"If something pops up?"

"Yeah."

"Then we can ignore it or do whatever we want, if we both want to."

"You could ignore it?" Sean incredulously cackled. "I don't even think I could do that; not with you anyway."

Troy slyly sneered, "That's what I'm hoping for, Tiger."

"Could we stay like this a little while longer?"

Troy nodded, "'Course." A few moments later, while running his fingers through Sean's hair and placing a few kisses around Sean's jaw, Troy grinned and softly admitted, "I'm trying not to dry hump you. Then my mom comes home and we've both got dirty shorts on."

Sean giggled, "That would be a slight problem."

Troy hummed thoughtfully then teased, "Then again, I'll bet you could fit into a pair of my shorts." He sighed and realized, "That would be a dead giveaway though, wouldn't it?"

Sean laughed, "Uh, YEAH!"

Troy continued kissing Sean then began twirling his tongue around under his ear. Hearing a desperate moan in response, Troy softly chortled, "Ya like that?"

Sean admitted, "No one's ever done that before."

"Fuckin' fools," Troy simply stated. "You taste really good." Troy went for Sean's earlobe next. Sean whimpered. "Don't tell me," Troy softly mumbled, "they never did this either?"

"Never," Sean sighed.

Troy whispered, "Assholes," then licked across Sean's throat and began the process over again by the opposite ear.

Sean imitated what Troy was doing. Eventually, he asked, "Is this foreplay?"

Troy giggled, "If it isn't, it should be!" After another few minutes of making out, Troy felt Sean beginning to rock to the left then to the right. It wasn't the type of movement Troy was expecting or hoping for. Suddenly, Troy was on his back on the mattress, hysterically giggling with Sean smiling down at him.

"You're in trouble now," Sean warned, and then pushed himself up to stand.

Propping himself up on both arms, Troy cackled, "The Tiger is ready to come out and play?"

Taking his T-Shirt off and tossing it aside, Sean nodded, "For someone that's never done stuff before, you're really good at it."

Troy giggled, "That don't mean I never dreamed of doing it."

"You can stop dreaming," Sean promised, and dropped his shorts. Reaching forward and pulling Troy by the shoulders into a sitting position, Sean then lifted his partner's arms and took his shirt off. Reaching for Troy's boardies, Sean had them loosened and off in mere seconds. Carefully crawling back over Troy and laying down on top of him, Sean sighed and snaked his arms under Troy's shoulders. He then admitted, "I wanted to grab you at the pool before, just so I could feel you against me like this."

"Do it next time, Sean. This feels real nice," Troy whispered, and then kissed Sean's neck, earning a giggle. After another few quiet minutes of grinding and making out, Troy thought, so Sean thinks I'm cherry, huh? He then raised both arms and slapped Sean's ass cheeks then squeezed them.

"Ow!" Sean chuckled. He raised his head and locked eyes with Troy wondering, "Is there something wrong?"

Grinning madly, Troy shook his head, saying, "I just don't wanna be cherry."

Sean grabbed a kiss then softly asked, "You want more than dry humping?"

Troy nodded and whispered, "Wanna suck your dick, Tiger. I want to know how to do all the stuff you know how to do."

Sean softly said, "I'm not gonna fuck you, Troy; not today; prob'ly not for a long while."

"No, but with the dildo, we could probably both have some fun?"

"It might be better for you to play with it alone first."

Shaking his head, Troy explained, "My days of beatin' my meat are over. I'd only be thinking of you anyway. Besides, I trust you to do better than I could."

Shivering with a sudden burst of pride and self respect, Sean smiled, "Say you trust me again?"

Troy warmly smiled, "I trust you, Sean." Quickly hiding his face in Troy's neck, Sean began to shed tears of joy. Feeling Sean quake against him then hearing a soft sniffle, Troy sighed and held Sean's head in place. "I love you," Troy whispered. "I love that you're shy. I love that you're so humble. I love that you chose to love me. From now on, we're a couple. It's you and me, Tiger; every day, doing everything together. When you're at the pool, I'm there. When I'm practicing, it won't be to an empty room or an imaginary audience; it'll be with you here."

"Troy?"

"Yeah?"

"I don't feel worthy of you."

Troy softly shushed him and assured, "Believe me, you really are, Sean. Your old life ended Friday. Your new life started today. In between was the transition."

Sean hugged him tightly and whispered, "I'm so lucky and you're so awesome."

"Who else were you close to at the orphanage?" Troy wondered and quickly clarified, "I mean other kids, friends, besides Horacio."

"Friends as in sex?"

"No, friends as in friends."

"Mostly the other boys; especially Hank and Keanu."

"Not Kaleo?"

"He was in a different orphanage. I like him plenty now, but as a friend. Why?"

"Because I'm making it my goal to be as much of a friend to you as any of your other friends. I can't replace them, I know. There's gonna be stuff you need to talk with them about because of the shared experiences. The rest of the time though, I want this, what we're doing right now."

"Talking and cuddling naked?"

"Talking and cuddling. Being naked is due to circumstance. I rushed you and I shouldn't have. I'm really sorry, Sean."

"Don't be. It was me, the past fucking with me. I was ready too, but when you told me that you trust me, it just hit me all at once. Maybe you don't know it, but even that small dildo could hurt you. Did you know that?"

"No; but that just proves my trust is well placed."

Sean growled then giggled, "That feeling just doubled again!" and firmly squeezed Troy. After another quiet minute or so, Sean whispered, "You didn't rush me."

"Be honest."

"Really, I didn't feel rushed at all. I was ready. I'm ready again if you are?"

Troy giggled, "I can feel you're ready!"

Lifting his head up, Sean whispered, "Wanna show you something," and then planted a deep kiss. The next thing Troy knew, Sean was nursing on his left nipple. After about a minute, the right tit was being teased. Sean then licked a wet trail down to Troy's navel. It was an outtie and Sean mumbled, "Wicked!" then went to work. The fact that it was a virtually hairless belly button is what turned on Sean the most. Sean gave it way more attention than he had either nipple.

Troy was giggling himself purple at the relentlessly exquisite torture. Before Troy completely recovered, Sean knelt on the floor and swallowed half of Troy's erection at once. Having never experienced it before, Troy gasped and sat up straight before falling right back down to the mattress again. That was a reaction Sean did not expect and he was briefly concerned until Troy shouted, "Jesus H. Christ! Sean!" Unable to help himself, Sean giggled, which only served to squeeze Troy's member in his mouth. Troy whined loudly then pulled a pillow over and covered his face before any neighbors heard his unrestrained cries and got the idea a kid was being abused.

A bit less surprising to Sean was how good Troy smelled and tasted. Those older men must not have believed in showering, or just naturally reeked, because Troy was completely different and so much better. Another thing Sean was not prepared for concerned timing. Since older men took longer, Sean wasn't really taking Troy seriously when, after only three or four minutes, he began warning him. Not that Sean would've backed off; for the first time in his life he was enjoying the entire process immensely. Pulling the pillow back over his face, Troy screamed at the top of his lungs and bounced on the mattress like a bucking bronco. Finally, Troy relaxed and threw the pillow aside. It fell off the bed onto the carpeted floor.

Smiling proudly, Sean crawled back on the bed and cuddled up close to Troy with his head resting on Troy's chest. Troy was still delirious, but managed to wrap his right arm around Sean and kiss the top of his head. Hearing Troy's heart racing, Sean shared, "This is real love. For the first time ever, I wasn't reluctantly performing. It was so much fun! Your reactions made it really awesome. I can barely wait to do it again."

Still breathless, Troy loudly laughed, "Please wait! Let me focus! Just kiss me, Tiger!"

Shocked once again, Sean pulled back and softly asked, "You want me to kiss you?"

"Hell yeah!" Troy laughed, and then rolled over on top of Sean and grabbed the kiss he wanted. Sean kept his mouth firmly closed. Snaking his tongue around and getting no more than lips, Troy pulled back and asked, "What's wrong?"

Sean shrugged, "My mouth... it's gonna taste like your jizz."

"Yeah. Do you think I care?"

"Don't you?"

"Absolutely not," Troy smiled. "What you just did for me was the most wonderful thing in the world. I love you, Sean; very much. I want to give you a real kiss, not a baby kiss, because you deserve it." He then leaned down and began kissing Sean all around his jaw then finally landed on his mouth. Troy made certain that his tongue reached every part of Sean's mouth possible. Confused and expecting Troy would soon be grossed out; Sean let Troy kiss him, but expected he would soon stop. Troy wouldn't stop until he got a response from Sean though. It was a long kiss that required them both to breathe through their noses. Finally, Sean's tongue began to respond and snaked its way into Troy's mouth. Squeezing Sean just as tightly as he had after receiving the gifts in the auditorium, Troy then broke the kiss. Troy softly asked, "They taught you it was wrong to kiss after a blowjob, didn't they?" Sean nodded. Troy carefully and softly stated, "It is not wrong when two people are in love. From my perspective, it's the most right thing to do. Do you understand?"

Sean nodded, "I think so."

"Let me explain a little more, okay?"

"Okay."

"We've still got about forty-five minutes before my mom comes home. Between now and then, I'm gonna suck you off, all the way, just like you did for me. When I'm done, I'm going to kiss you. My mouth's gonna be wide open, ready to invade, be invaded and swap spit. Do you know why?"

Uncertainly, Sean said, "Because you love me and I love you?"

"That's exactly right."

"I'm really sorry, Troy."

"There's no need to be. The thought never occurred to me that you wouldn't want to kiss me."

"I really did want to, but I was punched and slapped around for trying."

Shedding tears and angrily tightening his jaw, Troy forced himself to relax and sighed. "Remember what I called those men? They're fucking idiots, stupid and selfish to the extreme. I'll be just as honest with you as I want you to be with me." Troy paused then explained, "I'm from a city where there was plenty of violence. I was never personally bullied, but I was teased for being a musician. I have gotten into fist fights to protect myself. I want to find the men that hurt you and beat the fucking shit out of them. It scares me, but I know that once I got them down, I would kill them."

"You won't have to, Troy. I'm pretty sure that Clan Short killed them already. I didn't see them do it, but I did see the Prime Minister of Hawaii lying dead on a stage. I saw his body removed from the stage Friday night and put in a Coroner's van. What no one ever heard on the news was exactly what kinds of abuse those people did to lots of us."

"I'm actually relieved that they're dead already."

"So am I and so are a lot of the kids."

Troy nodded then smiled, "Hey, are you as thirsty as I am?"

Sean nodded and grinned, "Yeah."

"Let's go to the kitchen."

As Troy pushed up off him, Sean wondered, "Where's our shorts?"

Offering Sean a hand up, Troy reminded, "What do you need them for? My mom's not home."

Taking Troy's hand simply because he very much wanted to, Sean shrugged then grinned, "If you're not gonna, I don't need 'em either; as long as I get to walk behind you and admire the view."

Uncontrollably blushing, Troy giggled, "You can even touch it now, if ya want?"

"Yippee!" Sean laughed, and reached for his boyfriend's ass.

Playfully blocking Sean's hands, Troy giggled, "Is it really that nice?"

"Awesome!" Sean giggled, and successfully got in a grope.

Giving up, Troy moved in closer and grabbed both of Sean's butt cheeks at once. He laughed, "I wouldn't know, but I know you've got a real fine one too!"

No longer interested in Troy's ass, Sean held on tight and stole a kiss. There was a definite urgency and gratefulness that Troy felt and he reciprocated fully. When Sean slid his face over Troy's shoulder, he asked, "What have you got to drink?"

"I'm not too sure," Troy honestly answered, then giggled because Sean had completely destroyed his memory in less than a day. "Let's find out," Troy prompted, and then led Sean by the hand out of the bedroom to the kitchen.

Uncle Spock had been out by the pool area, spending time with his grandchildren and the other Rimmer kids, for several hours; since Joel, Kevin, John and Stephen left for their Enterprise tour. He excused himself to take an opportunity to meet with the Rimmer adults and spend time with his wife-to-be. While meeting with Jim Hundser and Bill Seaver, Admiral James T. Kirk beamed to Ewa Beach, arriving just outside the FYS building. He stepped inside where Rob Gibbons immediately recognized and greeted him. He wasn't expected, so Rob asked, "How can we help you, Admiral?"

"I thought I'd stop by and meet some of my extended family," Kirk casually smiled. "Besides, without my reminding Spock of his human heritage, he tends to become boring."

Rob chuckled, "Admiral Spock is down the hall, speaking with Jim and Bill about some Vulcan legal intricacies."

"Oh," Kirk groaned, "I've arrived too late." Rob chuckled louder. Kirk smirked, "Let me rescue your friends."

"Third door on your left, Admiral," Rob smiled.

Kirk thanked him and went down the hall. He was unexpectedly pounced by the Terrible Trio, just to say hello to their Uncle Jim.

They followed Kirk to the open conference room door, where Jim and Bill were trying to wrap their minds around the concepts Spock was presenting. Of course, Spock's strong engineering and diplomatic experiences were not conducive to educating a lawyer and a banker.

To throw a monkey wrench in the works, Kirk smirked and asked, "How do you feel, Spock?" The triplets helplessly cracked up.

Raising an eyebrow, Spock refused to directly answer as would be expected. Spock replied, "I am relaying to the members of the FYS Legal department fundamentals of Vulcan history and the resulting legal ramifications, Admiral."

Looking down at Jamie, Jacob and Beau, Kirk asked, "Is this a Starship? Have I transported to an incredible simulation of Hawaii?" Again, the triplets roared laughing. Kirk grinned, "We're off-duty, Spock."

Returning his attention to Jim Hundser and Bill Seaver, Spock performed formal introductions. Upon shaking hands with Jim Hundser, Jim Kirk smiled, "Please call me Jim, or Kirk, or only if you must, Admiral." While shaking hands with Bill Seaver, Kirk asked, "The same Bill Seaver that played for U.C.L.A. in 1987?"

Bill nodded, "Offensive back, M.V.P. that year. I'm surprised you remember."

"That was a memorable year," Kirk replied. "This year is shaping up to be equally memorable, in many ways." Glancing around the room, he suggested, "It's far too beautiful a day to be cooped up inside." Needing some backup, Kirk asked Jamie, Jacob and Beau, "Are you boys ready for some sun?"

In unison, the Trio replied, "Sure, Unca Jim!"

Jamie smiled, "We can be ready in only a minute or two."

"We'll just tell Aunt Jen we need a break and give her what we've already got," Jacob added.

Beau giggled, "We'll meet you out by the pools." With that, the three boys scurried out of the conference room.

Jim Hundser told Bill, "Go ahead. I'll wrap up with Spock and Jen then meet you outside."

When Bill Seaver stood, Kirk slowly raised his head to make eye contact and grinned, "No wonder you were M.V.P." He then told Spock, "Don't take too long."

"Yes, Admiral," Spock obediently responded.

Kirk sighed and turned around, muttering, "Jim. My name is Jim. You used to call me Jim."

Bill and Kirk walked out of the conference room and began chatting about the Pacific Rim Division creation. While they walked, Bill told the famous Admiral about the leadership team. The Terrible Triplets raced past them towards the pool. Bill talked about each of the Core Rimmers then told Kirk where they were at that time and that he expected them back soon. Arriving at the pool, Bill paused only because the threesome were lined up naked, standing before his wife, getting sun screen lotion applied to their shoulders and backs.

Soon, Jim Kirk found himself surrounded by some of the older Rimmer kids that recognized him. Word spread like wildfire amongst the kids. Soon, Kirk was almost like Santa Clause, sitting on a poolside lounge with kids on his lap and others surrounding him, telling tales of missions from long before many of the kids were born. Minutes before five that afternoon, Jim, Jen, Anna, Spock, Teri and the team of Core Rimmers were meeting and chatting with him. He recognized leadership abilities in all of the Core Rimmers, much as he had with Cory and Sean Short and others in the original Orlando Clan. He was thinking of pulling Preston and Keith aside for a more detailed chat when his comm-badge chirped, ordering him back to Starfleet Headquarters. His concern never showed and he simply assured everyone that he would be back in a short while before transporting to San Francisco.

As Kirk left, Spock cracked the smallest smile at his best friend's back. He very much enjoyed winding Kirk up.

In the refrigerator, Troy found Coke and lemon-lime soda, orange, pineapple and apple juices and finally, filtered water. Troy was happy with a big glass of water. Sean had a small glass of pineapple juice. While in the kitchen, Sean asked, "Where's your dad?"

Troy replied, "My folks divorced. He was a homophobic asshole."

"Your mom divorced him because of you?"

Troy nodded, "It was mutual, I'm sure. Right after we moved here, I found out a couple of things that happened between them. It took a few years of arguing and fighting. He had had enough of her and me. She reached her limit with him too. She's my mom and I love her, especially for sticking up for me, but she's still a mom." He paused and giggled, "She can be a real pain sometimes. Boy, does she know what to say to push my buttons!"

Smirking, Sean asked, "What would she think if she walked in on us now?"

Almost spitting out the water he was drinking, Troy laughed, "She'd know I have a boyfriend!" and then wiped his chin.

Sean giggled, "That's it though?"

"Well, she'd be embarrassed. I'd be twice as embarrassed for you and me."

After a moment's consideration, Sean asked, "You'd be embarrassed for me too?"

Troy grinned, but managed to flatly remind, "Umm... you're naked, Sean."

Sean nodded and smiled, "Lots of adult men and women have seen me. It wouldn't faze me much at all, unless she got too close."

Troy wondered, "Not that she ever would, but what if some grownup did get too close?"

"While I'm naked, I'd freak out. Before Friday, I did what I had to. Since Saturday, I'll do what I have to to prevent it."

"Perfectly understandable," Troy nodded. After another mouthful of water, he shyly asked, "So what do you think of us?"

"A couple o' things," Sean smiled.

Troy waited and watched Sean look away. He prompted, "Like?"

"I'm surprised mostly. I really didn't think you'd even let me in. Letting me look out the windows was really sweet. Even sweeter was what you said after I told you I like you." Troy turned crimson and Sean helplessly giggled, "That's what's so amazing to me; you talk to me and wanted to know about me, even the bad stuff." He then shrugged and wondered, "Would most guys take the time to actually talk like you did?"

"I guess it depends," Troy answered, "if they want a boyfriend or to just get laid. I want a boyfriend. Remember me saying I'm the jealous type?" Sean nodded and Troy explained, "I only just met Prez and the band yesterday. Between then and dinner last night, I started to feel envious of them. Did you know they were two couples?"

Sean nodded and grinned, "Actually, they're three couples; Prez and Keith, Derrick and Mike, and Drew and Corey. Plus John and Kaleo make up our Core Rimmers."

Uncontrollably laughing while drinking, Troy sprayed water all over himself, Sean and the kitchen. "I'm so sorry!" Troy loudly laughed, then put his glass down on the counter. Sean cracked up then wiped water off his face and chest. Grabbing a towel, Troy quickly began sopping up the water on Sean. "I'm really sorry," Troy giggled. "I didn't know they called themselves that!" Before Troy had finished drying Sean off, he found himself wrapped in his boyfriend's arms. Still smiling, but not quite certain why Sean responded this way after getting soaked, Troy looked deeply into Sean's eyes.

Sean softly said, "I really love you."

"I love you too," Troy replied.

"For you, this is where you live cos your mom works here. For us rescued kids, we're all Rimmers." Troy began giggling, and Sean explained, "They're not just a band. Prez is our leader. Keith's second in command. Derrick and Mike and Corey and Drew and Kaleo and John, they're all the leaders of this Clan. In every sense, they are the core of each of us. We revolve around them. We're like messed up, dirty chalkboards; ready to be cleaned so something new and better can be written. What we have here now is because of Clan Short. Without them, I'd still be some man's fuck toy. I don't want my life to ever be like that again.

"As far as I'm concerned, my life is here now, with you. I could've screwed up this morning. You might not have been interested or one of those that just wants to get laid. Not you though. You wanted to know me; the good and the bad. You're really patient with me. Then you got really angry about the stuff that was done to me. That's so awesome! I like when you call me Tiger too. I really don't want to mess this up, Troy. Sometimes though, I'm goin' on past experience only. It's like, I know where I want to be, but I'm in the dark, lost and feeling my way around. I kind o' know what love should be, but what I've been living with for five years has screwed that up too. Part of me thinks I'm screwing up now, telling you this stuff."

Vigorously shaking his head, Troy assured, "No, you're not. When it's from the heart, you're definitely not screwing up. Be this way for me and my mom. It's really great."

"I'll remember that, from the heart."

Troy reached in and stole a kiss. Backing up a step, he then softly said, "While I clean up this mess, tell me more."

Sean wondered, "Like what?"

Drying himself off, Troy shrugged, "Anything you want; about you, about us, about this Clan base, whatever."

Sean hummed then finished his juice. Figuring Troy would want to know more about the band, Sean said, "To you, they're Platinum Habits. When we met them Friday, they were Old Habits. There was a concert Friday night at a luau. For most of us rescued kids, it was the first time we really listened to music and heard the words being sung. Every now and then I'd catch a phrase that would hit me like a bolt of lightning. The next day, I learned it wasn't only me catching those phrases; it was lots of other kids too.

"Prez and the entire core team are awesome. When Prez tells us what to do, we do it simply because he's so kewl and he's our leader. Like this morning, Prez, Keith, Derrick and Mike had a concert at their school. Before they left, Kaleo told everyone about the I.D. and credit cards. Prez asked if we had questions and then answered them. Then he told all the kids to line up, so we could pass out the cards. Prez is the director, but he rarely directs us. All the gay dudes think he's really cute. All the girls do too.

"Keith's really kewl too. His favorite saying is, 'be happy and safe'. Sunday, he caught two younger dudes goofin' around on one of the diving boards. All he did was shout up, 'Hey, knock it off! Happy and safe, remember?' The two dudes stopped, one backed off and waited for the other to dive then he went. It's so simple, but so effective. What makes it so different for us is there's no cussing or any punishment at all."

"Derrick and Mike are almost always together. Prez and Keith are too, but they'll separate a little more. Not Derrick and Mike; they're attached almost all the time. Me and Kaleo watch them a lot. We think that's what our relationships should be like. Now that I think of it, they're all just examples. Us older kids watch Prez, Keith, Mike and Derrick. The younger kids watch Drew, Corey and John."

Finished cleaning the kitchen, Troy took Sean's glass and asked, "More?"

"No, thanks."

Troy put the glasses in the dishwasher then said, "I can't believe Drew and Corey are a couple. How old are they?"

"Drew's twelve and Corey's eleven. They told us they're in the same grade at school. Corey's only eight months younger than Drew."

Smiling and shaking his head, Troy remarked, "Partners at eleven and twelve! How totally kewl is that?"

Sean grinned, "I know. They're obviously younger, but act a lot older sometimes. Drew and Corey have a little dude named Geoff. Even John's got a boyfriend now; a new kid they just picked up last night."

"Did you just say Drew and Corey have a little boy?"

Humming affirmatively, Sean said, "Yep, all the Core Rimmers are Starfleet Ensigns and considered adults. Corey and Drew adopted Geoff. Mike and Derrick adopted Dillon, Jonah and Reyes. Prez and Keith adopted Richie and Dee then, last night, they adopted Sammy and Gage. I knew Richie from the orphanage. He's a completely different kid now."

"And Kaleo?"

Sean answered, "Kaleo's one of us, a rescued kid. He's got a boyfriend too now. He knew Tory from the orphanage, but they decided being friends wasn't enough." Sean paused again then beamed, "Our dorms are built really well; there must be cinder block walls between the rooms. When the doors are closed, you can't even really tell if someone's in a room or not. You can't hear stereos or TV's at all. Sunday night, Kaleo and Tory hooked up and all us dudes knew it. Kaleo's voice really travels!" Troy cracked up and Sean evilly snickered. Remembering that obviously got Sean randy again. Troy noticed Sean's dick lengthening and thickening. Sean was definitely a grower and it was impossible to not notice.

Stepping closer to Sean, Troy kissed him deeply. Taking Sean's hand, Troy smiled, "Come on, Tiger. We've still got time and it's my turn." Troy then started to lead Sean back to his bedroom.

Sean nervously balked, "You don't have to, Troy."

"I know, but I really want to. Who knows, maybe I can make you scream and holler."

Sean giggled, "I'll swallow the pillow like you did."

Troy laughed at himself then reminded, "That was my first time! I only wish I was your first."

"You are, Troy!" Sean assured. Noticing Troy's puzzled expression, Sean explained, "You're not the first person to have sex with me, but you are the first person to make love to me."

Troy playfully grumbled, "Damn! Did the temperature in here just go up ten degrees?"

As Troy closed the bedroom door, Sean cackled, "Twenty at least!"

Sitting Sean down on the bed, Troy knelt down then enthusiastically began. Troy thought Sean's dick was amazing. Flaccid, he and Sean weren't that different, but soon Sean overstuffed his mouth. The feeling of Sean's cock sliding in and out of his mouth, throbbing as it was, reminded Troy of the feeling of a saxophone reed vibrating against his lips. After about a minute, Troy took a short break to stretch his jaw. Troy wanted to get more in his mouth and make Sean understand that he was truly enjoying his first time. Sean softly instructed, "Pull the foreskin over the head and stick your tongue in there." Troy followed Sean's direction and got whimpers and groans in response. Ready for another full mouth, Troy tried to please more than half of Sean's thick tool. When Troy needed a second break, he dove down and licked Sean's scrotum then carefully sucked each testicle into his mouth. Again Sean whimpered then cheered, "You are so awesome! Are you sure you've never done this before?"

"Never," Troy confirmed, "Wanted to and dreamed of it only." Without instruction, Troy went down on Sean again, but this time used his hand to move the foreskin to and fro, in and out his mouth. Sean really liked it. Since it was good for Sean and a little easier on him, Troy kept at it.

Sean's hips started bucking and he grunted, "Fuck me!"

Troy thought the remark was an instruction, so he wiggled his finger into Sean's ass. Sean gasped and his hand began searching for the other pillow. Four times Sean warned Troy of his impending climax. Troy only thought, "No way I'm backin' off, Tiger. This is the way I've always wanted it and you are definitely worth it."

As previously promised Troy finished Sean off then crawled on the bed and kissed him. This time, Sean didn't hesitate. He accepted Troy's tongue and sucked hard then gave Troy his tongue. When they broke the kiss, Troy snuggled up close and asked, "The Tiger is tamed?"

Sean giggled, "Oh yeah! No one's ever swallowed before."

Shaking his head sadly, Troy softly confirmed, "They were morons. This is the right way." He then asked, "You know the difference now?"

Sean dreamily chortled, "I swear, I'll never forget it!"

Noticing the time, Troy snuggled closer and whispered, "We've got five minutes before we have to get dressed. We'll clean up a little and at least look like we didn't spend two hours making love."

Sean contentedly sighed then asked, "You really love me?"

Troy nodded, "For me, you're perfect, Tiger." Not because Troy needed to say it, but because he felt that Sean needed to hear it, Troy easily repeated, "You're a little shy, I love that. You're a little self conscious, understandably so, and I love that. Just those two things make us perfect for each other, because I'm the same in different ways and for different reasons. You're humble and I'm a little more self assured; being a musician that taught himself a lot of what he knows, I simply became that way. That means you can make me more humble and I can make you more self assured. Are we kewl so far?"

Sean nodded, "Very."

"Kewl. I'm not done yet. You came here already liking me based only on the way I looked and acted on stage yesterday. You think I'm good looking, which I can't understand, so I know you won't believe me, but you, Tiger, are smokin' hot!" Giggling insanely, Sean almost broke out in a sweat, he blushed so hard. Troy only continued. "Other guys have tighter abs and more defined chests than we do, but guess what? I like what I see a lot. Have I misinterpreted anything so far?"

Sean purred, "No, you're right on target."

Troy crawled over and straddled Sean then locked eyes with him. Slowly and very clearly, Troy said, "I love you, Sean. Every hour that I spend with you, I love you more. I want to spend tonight and the foreseeable future with you. My mom's gonna really like you. And she's going to be so surprised at me! I'm really looking forward to it too!" Acknowledging that Sean was looking directly into his eyes, Troy nodded and smiled then asked, "Are you ready to get dressed?"

Sean smiled, "As soon as I get another kiss. I gotta go to the bathroom too."

Troy admitted, "Me too," then rolled off Sean and onto the floor. They kissed, found their clothes then went into Troy's bathroom. They both relieved themselves. Troy flushed then began to pull his boardies on. Sean was at the sink washing his hands and then washed his dick. With his shirt hanging off his shoulder, Troy joined Sean at the sink to wash his hands and wondered, "What are you doing?"

Sean shrugged, "Just what I have to, to keep it clean."

"Oh, I didn't know. I thought it was for my benefit."

"Yours and mine. No funky dick cheese. The last thing I want is to have to get circumcised at my age."

Pulling his shirt on, Troy giggled then croaked, "Ouch!"

Drying himself off, Sean nodded and grinned, "A few days of chronic dick pain and no sex... now? No thank you! A week ago, I wouldn't have minded if someone chopped my dick clean off. Now I've got the most awesome boyfriend."

Tossing the towel in the hamper, Troy waited for Sean to dress then together they went to the living room. They sat close together on the sofa. Turning on the TV, Troy began channel surfing. Unexpectedly, Sean turned slightly and lay down with his head resting on Troy's lap. Troy smiled, "I love you so much."

Sean softly admitted, "Close body contact with you makes me less nervous."

Troy playfully mooded then grinned, "My mom's gonna walk in to find me kissing you."

"I can kiss you tonight in front of her?"

Troy nodded, "Right after I kiss you, we're kewl."

"Kewl. I don't think I could last too long."

Troy nodded, "Don't worry, Tiger," and began running his fingers through Sean's hair. After only a minute or so, Sean whimpered and smiled. Grinning, Troy looked down.

Sean giggled, "I hate to tell you to stop, but I'm getting a stiffie."

Troy laughed and teased, "Show me later."

Sean giggled, "I will; as long as I can see yours!"

Troy widely smiled and he joked, "Hi mom! This is Sean and these are our tents! I think we love each other!" Troy then raised the pitch of his voice and squeaked, "Ya think?" Sean cracked up.

Sean was still laughing and Troy smiling at his reaction when the condo door opened. Judy Faris walked in and turned to her right. Seeing Troy with another boy who was resting his head on her son's thigh, she smiled widely.

"Hi mom," Troy grinned.

Sean wasn't certain if another joke was coming until he noticed Troy looking to his right, towards the doorway. Quickly sitting up,

Sean waved, "Hi Mrs. Faris."

Gesturing to Sean, Troy said, "Mom, this is Sean Moorhead. He stopped by this morning to give me a Clan Short I.D. and a pre-paid credit card. We've been together ever since."

Barely containing her obvious excitement, Judy walked over and smiled at Sean, "It's my pleasure to meet you, Sean." She then locked eyes with her son.

Troy immediately began giggling. "Yes, mom," Troy playfully droned. He then took Sean's hand and confirmed, "We're boyfriends."

Bending at the knees slightly and raising her arms above her head, Judy Faris shrieked, "YES!"

Shaking his head and giggling, Troy turned to Sean and softly said, "Told ya!"

Judy joyfully teased, "If I don't get some hugs real soon, dinner won't be until breakfast."

Knowing that Sean was likely very nervous about an adult woman wanting affection, Troy softly offered, "It's okay, Sean."

Both boys stood and Judy wrapped them both in her arms. Each got a kiss on the cheek, then she asked, "What would you like for dinner?"

Troy answered, "We had tacos and burritos for lunch at the CIC dining room." He then checked with Sean, "What would you like?"

Sean shrugged and shyly admitted, "I don't even know what to ask for, so anything's fine, really."

"Whatever you were planning is fine, mom," Troy assured.

Judy sighed, "I was only planning on frying up some boneless chicken breasts. Let me see what I can do." She then released the boys and hurried to the kitchen.

Troy smiled at Sean then turned and said, "Don't go crazy, mom."

"What makes you think I'd go crazy?" Judy replied from the kitchen.

Turning back to Sean, Troy grinned and whispered, "It's too late." Covering his mouth, Sean insanely giggled.

Judy loudly asked, "So tell me, what've you been doing today?"

Leading Sean to the kitchen and offering him a seat at the breakfast counter, Troy then briefly outlined the day, omitting the intimate details. Judy was ecstatic to learn that Troy had gone to the pool then played with Platinum Habits again, and then been invited to join the band. Seeing that his mom was pulling out flour and bowls, Troy wondered, "What's for dinner?"

"Chicken Piccata and pasta," Judy answered.

Sean tapped Troy's shoulder. Troy leaned closer and Sean whispered, "What's that?"

Troy softly answered, "It's an Italian lemon flavored chicken recipe. It's really good."

Sean smiled, "It sounds like it."

"Wait 'til you taste it!" Troy excitedly cheered, and then wrapped an arm around Sean.

Relieved that Troy's mom was being so nice, Sean leaned against Troy. Neither boy realized that Judy was watching out of the corner of her eye when Troy leaned down and tenderly kissed Sean. She began softly giggling. Troy only suspiciously eyed his mother. She acted like she wasn't really watching, but concentrating on making dinner. Troy grinned and mouthed, "You ready, Tiger?" Sean glanced over at Mrs. Faris. She seemed completely oblivious so Sean smiled and gently caressed Troy's face. Troy closed his eyes and he deeply inhaled then sighed. Sean stood up and passionately kissed Troy. Troy only wanted to catch his mom peeking, but the kiss was so tasty and so intense that he forgot all about his original purpose. Judy saw them and couldn't help stopping dinner preparation for a few moments. It swiftly became apparent that Troy and Sean were more than boyfriends. Her little boy had grown up between the time she left that morning and the time she returned. Shedding happy tears, Judy reached for a paper towel and wiped her eyes. Sean broke the kiss extra slowly, repeatedly snatching just one more little kiss. Then Troy led him to the living room.

Smiling widely, Sean was ready for rolling around on the couch while they waited for dinner. Surprisingly, Troy had something else in mind. He led Sean to the Yamaha digital piano that Prez had had delivered. Within a minute, Troy had the amp and keyboard powered on. Sitting down on the piano bench, he gently asked, "Tell me what you think of this song?" and began playing a soft piece. Sean didn't recognize it, but Judy did. Playing solo without any additional rhythm, Troy pressed the keys with extra dynamics; the soft parts softer and louder parts more present. From a place deep within himself never before reached, Troy closed his eyes and sang; "When you're weary, feeling small. When tears are in your eyes, I will dry them all. I'm on your side, oh, when times get rough, and friends just can't be found. Like a bridge over troubled water, I will lay me down.

Like a bridge over troubled water, I will lay me down.

"When you're down and out, when you're on the street. When evening falls so hard, I will comfort you. I'll take your part, oh, when darkness comes and pain is all around. Like a bridge over troubled water, I will lay me down. Like a bridge over troubled water, I will lay me down.

"Sail on silver girl, sail on by. Your time has come to shine. All your dreams are on their way. See how they shine. Oh, if you need a friend, I'm sailing right behind. Like a bridge over troubled water, I will ease your mind. Like a bridge over troubled water, I will ease your mind." Troy finished playing the song, inhaled and looked up at Sean.

Unable to move or speak because he was shaking so badly, Sean forced a weak smile, nodded and wiped his eyes. In the kitchen, Judy Faris was almost as bad off as Sean. She always knew her son was talented and had heard him play the song before, but not like that. His very soul poured out to Sean.

Concerned because Sean was crying, Troy stood and was about to apologize, but he didn't get the chance. Sean unashamedly grabbed him and held on tight. "I just thought you might like it," Troy softly offered.

"I loved it!" Sean sobbed, "I love you so much!"

Trying to soothe his boyfriend, Troy rubbed his back and assured, "I love you too, Tiger. I'm really sorry it made you feel sad."

Sean sniffed then explained, "It's just my past again, Troy. I love when you sing for me, but this time, they felt like words you were singing to me and about us." After a pause and another sniffle, Sean said, "I'd tell you which words I especially liked, but I can't right now."

Troy softly shushed Sean and held him tight, waiting for him to eventually relax. Since Troy's back was toward the kitchen, he didn't know his mom was watching. Through red, cried-out eyes, Sean noticed though. Judy softly smiled then held her index finger to her lips. Sean suddenly realized he had gained the sweetest boyfriend and a surrogate mother or even a mother-in-law. Feeling Sean quake again, Troy again rubbed his back and assured, "It's okay. I've got you."

Many moments later, Sean whispered, "I need to wash my face."

Since Sean knew where his bathroom was and couldn't possibly get lost walking down the hall, Troy realized that his boyfriend didn't want to be alone and led him there. Behind the closed door, both boys were silent the entire time Sean freshened up after crying. Once he was finished, Sean faced Troy wearing a perfectly evil grin.

Recognizing the implication of his boyfriend's grin, Troy softly giggled, "Oh no!"

"Oh yes!" Sean smirked. He wrapped Troy in his arms and urgently kissed him. Once Sean was certain he had gotten a rise out of Troy, he slid his face over Troy's shoulder and whispered, "Bedroom?"

Troy mooded then chuckled, "You're really tempting me!"

"Anything you want, any time."

"This could turn into a vicious circle. I sing a ballad, you cry, we make love then start over again."

"This is bad?"

"No," Troy honestly shared, "it's simply not necessary. I'll sing for you plenty. Making love afterward sounds nice, but I don't need it; not every time anyway. A hug and a kiss, like this, is perfect, really."

For a few moments, Sean absorbed that then giggled, "The feeling just tripled."

"I know, Tiger. I'm there too."

"Later tonight?"

"If the band isn't jamming, you and me are locked in my bedroom all... night... long."

Sean giggled then called out, "Daileass!"

The last time Troy had heard that name called he was transported from the CIC dining room to the basement store so fast he didn't know what had happened. "Oh God!" Troy softly chuckled.

Over the bathroom communications system, Daileass giggled, "Yes, Sean?"

Sean smiled, "Can you keep the Core Rimmers occupied for the rest of the night?"

Daileass laughed, "There's things I can do, but really shouldn't!"

"Try!" Sean grinned.

"It's the Core Rimmers!" Daileass giggled, "I can't make any promises."

Sean pleaded, "Just keep them busy from six-thirty until about nine-thirty. We have plans."

Daileass seriously said, "With Joel and Teri Short here, they'll probably be occupied most of that time without my intervention."

Troy quickly jumped in and asked, "Who the hell are you, Daileass?"

Daileass giggled, "The less you know the better, Troy."

"You sound like a little kid," Troy observed.

"Partly true," Daileass admitted, and left it at that. He then giggled, "You be good, Sean. Keep my secrets and I'll keep yours!"

"I have no secrets," Sean grinned. Locking eyes with Troy, he loudly added, "I'm in love for the very first time and it's awesome!"

Troy inhaled deeply, but melted anyway. "I love you too, Sean." He took Sean's face in both hands then tried to find his tonsils. Breaking the kiss, Troy softly suggested, "Let's lie down on my bed and wait for dinner?" Sean nodded and smiled. A few seconds later, Troy was cuddled up with his head resting on Sean's shoulder.

For a long few moments, Sean wondered why Troy was resting on him. It seemed to him that he was the emotionally weak one. He eventually figured out that maybe Troy needed a little emotional stability too. That was an amazing idea. He also wondered what Mrs. Faris meant when she held an index finger to her mouth while he was still upset. He asked Troy about it.

Troy grinned and softly answered, "That means she didn't want me to know that she was watching. She saw me kiss you at the counter too. She'll admit it someday, probably weeks from now, when it suits her. It means she really likes you too, trusting you to keep it a secret."

"Oops!" Sean chirped. "Guess I screwed up."

"Not as far as I'm concerned," Troy chuckled.

"Yeah, you're way more important."

After a few silent moments, Troy wondered, "Do you sleep on your back?"

"Yeah. I start on one side or another, but usually wake face up. Why?"

"I'm just so relaxed and comfortable, I could fall asleep. I was wondering about tonight too."

"I can't believe you want me to stay the night."

"Believe it, Tiger. Horacio might be looking for a new roommate by Christmas."

Sean thoughtfully hummed then said, "Christmas. What can I get my boyfriend for Christmas?"

Troy giggled, "You already got me presents! What do you want for Christmas?"

Sean shrugged, "I got my present early."

Nudging Sean, Troy giggled, "Really, what do you want besides me?"

"I'm gonna have to think about it," Sean answered. "So much has changed for the better, there's really nothing I can think of."

"Think about it and drop a few hints."

"The Clan's given us so much. Our dorm rooms are great. We've got TV's, computers, stereos and game systems in every room."

"This apartment was setup real nice too. None of the furniture or basic living necessities are ours. We brought a couple of suitcases and boxes of miscellaneous personal stuff. The rest was already here."

Sean repeated, "What do you want?"

"There are only two things I can think of. An iPod would be kewl. A portrait of you would be great too."

Sean squeaked, "You want a picture of me?"

Troy nodded, "Actually, one of you and another of you and me together would be even better."

Sean sighed. After a few quiet moments, he softly called, "Troy?"

"Yeah, Tiger?"

"You're really special."

Troy blushed and grinned, "I'm glad you think so."

"It's true. I want a picture of you and me too."

"Kewl. That's one Christmas present on your list."

Sean softly chuckled, "I don't think we're gonna get a lot o' sleep tonight." Troy's head popped up off Sean's shoulder. Their eyes met and both began laughing. "I'm serious," Sean chuckled. "Check it out."

Never losing eye contact, Troy reached down and felt Sean's boardies. "Again?" Troy cackled.

"Can I help it?" Sean chortled. "You're cuddled up to me; you mentioned Christmas presents and pictures."

Letting his face drop onto Sean's chest, Troy giggled, "I've never... not more than three times in a day. And we've already done it twice!"

Sean grinned, "Six times, easy."

Troy cracked up and laughed uncontrollably for at least a minute. He then lifted his face again, stole a kiss then grinned, "We can try after supper, Tiger."

"We could go over to the dorm?" Sean playfully suggested. "Then your mom won't hear us."

Chuckling and nodding, Troy answered, "I do want to see your room. What we do there is beside the point."

"Very kewl," Sean nodded. "I'm gonna show you off to any one that's there." He then teased, "I think I can wait until after supper for dessert."

Letting his face drop again, Troy playfully groaned, "God! I'm a dead man!" Lifting his face and making his eyes dart around mischievously, Troy cackled, "What a way to go!"

Feeling extremely playful, Sean reminded, "The other two presents are there."

Troy began laughing again then remembered, "Oh shit! I gotta put the first 'present' away before my mom finds it." He quickly rolled off the bed, got the box from the top of the night table then hid the condoms and lube in the desk. While he was there, he took a pair of scissors out and cut the plastic shipping cover off the dildo. Dropping the wasted plastic in the trash can then holding up the dildo, Troy turned to Sean and asked, "Do I really need one this small?"

"It's not small, it's average. And for you, it's the perfect beginning, I hope."

Checking it out, Troy hummed then wondered, "This is average?"

Getting up off the bed, Sean went to Troy and nodded, "Of all the men I've seen, yep; that's about right. I've seen lots of adult men with less than that, but only one had more than me. It seems small to you because you're more than average."

"Me?" Troy squealed.

Giggling at Troy's curiosity, Sean leaned closer and whispered, "Five to five and half inches long is average. What've you got; about seven?"

Troy shook his head and softly answered, "I wish. Six and a half."

Sean shook his head and honestly shared, "Don't wish for more. What you've got is perfect, tasty too." Troy blushed so Sean took him in his arms, whispering, "I want you, Troy. What we've already shared is so much more than I've ever had or could've hoped for. I want tonight, tomorrow and years just like today. Don't think for a second you ain't got enough for me. It ain't true, okay?"

"As long as I can keep you happy, Sean."

Smiling widely, Sean admitted, "I'm completely blown away by you already. Making love with you is more than I dreamed or even knew to hope for." Pausing, Sean shook his head and remarked, "Making love; it's not fucking or sucking any more. It's so real to me already. You're teaching me what it always should've been."

Troy rapidly nodded, "Love and desire equals passion. That's what we've got."

From the living room end of the hall, Judy saw them embracing again. She loudly called, "Dinner's ready, boys."

"We're on our way," Troy replied.

Putting the bowl of pasta down on the table, Judy grinned and thought, yes, I can see that.

About the time Judy, Troy and Sean sat down to dinner, eleven sparkling shafts of light appeared outside the CIC dining room. Joel, Kevin, John, Stephen, the four G-Cats and three other boys ran inside. Already knowing that his brothers and parents were in there, John practically bounced over to them.

From one table, his mother shouted at John; "Why are you wearing a sling on your left arm?"

From another nearby table, Prez loudly asked John, "And why are you impersonating a Starfleet Lieutenant?"

"Well," said Joel. His Crown around his brow and his eyes glowing, giving off mist like wisps of blue energy, he continued, "In reverse order, because he is a Starfleet Lieutenant, Sciences, and the arm because he hurt himself saving two others. And those medals, they're real too."

It was then that they noticed Joel had a Commander's insignia. They looked at Kevin and saw him with Lieutenant Commander Insignia on his shoulder strap. Stephen was the same rank as John. All three had medals as well, and Kevin was sporting a lovely black eye and the faint scar of a freshly healed wound on his forehead.

Admiral Kirk walked into the dining room. Prez, Keith, Kaleo, Corey and Drew quickly stood, but Mike and Derrick hadn't seen him enter. "Admiral on the deck; get up Ensigns," Prez quietly ordered. Mike and Derrick looked around, and seeing the Admiral, quickly stood up.

Kirk locked eyes with Prez, saying, "As you were." Stopping behind Joel, John and the other boys, Jim Kirk grinned, "There was a bit of excitement while acting Captain Sa'ren Joel Short was in command."

"If he calls that a 'bit of excitement'," one of the three identical eight-year-old triplets whispered to his brothers, "then paint me blue and call me the Pacific!"

Kirk gently ruffled the boy's hair while grinning down at him. Then he looked up at the others. Kirk took and held Jim and Jen Hundser's eyes with his own. He began to explain, "First, our Joel took out the Enterprise, as was arranged, on a short hop to Alpha Centauri. There was an emergency delivery that Starfleet was requested to make. After all the tests Joel and Kevin had been through since last Thursday, it was easily within their capability. Both Admiral Morrow and I wanted to see them in action, and it was a nice treat for them and their two guests as well.

"Little did we know that on the way back, the Enterprise would run into a bit of trouble."

"Here it comes," Jim Hundser whispered. He had recognized one of the medals on his son's chest, and the identical one on Kevin's.

Jim Kirk nodded at him, "I figured you'd put it together quickly. It was for this reason I was called away earlier. On their return trip, the Enterprise received a distress signal from a J2C class transport. There were over three hundred civilians on board, and they were under attack from an alien and unknown vessel. As per Regulations, Sa'ren Short diverted course and intercepted the ongoing firefight. It was brief and seemed to be weighed against the Enterprise. That unknown vessel was of a very high tech level, but with assistance from another ship, the attacking vessel withdrew and left the combat arena at high warp. We believe it might have even been transwarp, but our technicians are still looking over the data."

"It was KEWL!" both Stephen and John exclaimed.

John's voice sounded a little hoarse and raspy. John coughed out, "Phasers and rocks and everything flying everywhere!"

"Calm down, Lieutenant," Kirk chuckled. "I need to finish so that your parents can hug you to death, and then seek some nerve relaxants."

Glancing between Kirk and her youngest son, Jen smiled weakly before her face returned to its hyper-serious expression.

Kirk continued, "Once the unknown vessel had departed, the ship assisting the Enterprise also vanished with very little communication. Acting Captain Sa'ren sent security and medical personnel over to the Transport ship. And he, Kevin, Stephen and John insisted on going as well; against Regulations, but I'm afraid they take after me in that regard. Once there, they found that there was a firefight going between human boarders and the crew and passengers. This adds to the mystery, as we have no clue as to the identity of the attacking ship, yet humans are in league with them. None of the ten hostile intruders were captured alive, sadly, so we have nothing else to go on. Kevin fought his way to the bridge with Stephen to establish control there, while Joel and John headed to Engineering. On the way to Engineering, John stopped to help one of the Enterprise Medics assist a seriously injured crew-member from the Transport. It was at this point that John came under direct attack from one of the intruders. After a brief exchange of fire, John stunned the intruder and was about to continue helping the medic, despite his own minor wounds, when the bulkhead collapsed, causing an explosive decompression of that room. Somehow, and this still stumps me how he did it, John was able to keep his wits and use his skills to save not just himself, but the medic and the injured crewman. He used his T.K. to hold the two in place while also holding himself steady on one of the control stations. The strain on his already injured arm caused it to dislocate, yet he still held on and therefore managed to keep the other two in place as well. Once the force-fields came up to stop the breach, the three of them were without air, because the room had automatically sealed itself from the rest of the ship. The medic was trained in such situations and was trying to get over to where John was to re-pressurize, but she had been hit in the brief firefight, and so couldn't get there.

"Here is where it goes from amazing to unbelievable. Starfleet personnel are trained for explosive decompression. We are trained to remain conscious for at least sixty-seconds in order to attempt to save our lives or the lives of others caught in it. John had no training. By all rights, he shouldn't have been able to remain conscious for more than ten-seconds, yet he managed to not only remain active for nearly forty-five seconds, he also worked out which of the buttons the medic was frantically gesturing at to enable the room to re-pressurize. He managed this just before passing out.

"This is the reason his voice sounds a little sore. He didn't know that he was meant to exhale in a decompression. He didn't have the training for any of what he did, yet he did it."

Jen and Jim Hundser just stared in horror at Kirk through all this.

"To add to this, not only did Kevin and Stephen return control of the Bridge to the Captain of the Transport, Kevin getting injured in the process in the fight; and not only did Joel stabilize the engines from an approaching core breach, John had unwittingly stunned the final invader who was about to detonate an antimatter bomb he had strapped to him. Such a blast would have utterly destroyed the Transport and would have crippled the nearby Enterprise. The stunned invader was spaced at this point, even though John says he tried to save him too. Holding three others plus himself in place was just too much of a strain, and choosing the lives of the innocent ranks higher in Starfleet than the life of a terrorist."

Prez, Keith and Drew couldn't contain themselves. They rushed over cheering to hug John half to death. Then they went for Stephen, Kevin and Joel.

Kirk smiled at them before continuing, "It was therefore with great pleasure that Admiral Morrow and I pulled the strings for all four concerned to receive immediate field promotions and medals. Normally it takes weeks to issue medals, but Morrow has already proved once he can pull strings for Cory, Joel and the rest that were on TV last Thursday. He did it again. I am proud to present Lieutenants Stephen Marr and John Hundser, Lieutenant Commander Kevin Charles David Thompson, and Commander Sa'ren Joel Short."

"They've got medals?" Drew asked excitedly as he started checking the four boys' chests. "Hey! Look! What are these for, Admiral?"

"I was getting there," Kirk chuckled. "Kevin and Joel already have the Star Cross each, and the Pantereas Commendation each. Joel also already had the Cochrane Medal of Excellence. The new ones; well, I'll start with Stephen. He gained Starfleet Command Commendation for Conspicuous Gallantry and The Legion of Honor. Kevin received the same, plus the Starfleet Purple Heart. As for Joel and your son: Joel received Starfleet Distinguished Service Medal, the Starfleet Silver Lifesaving Medal and the Medal of Valor, the second highest award for heroism in combat that we have. As for your son," he grinned at the two shell-shocked Hundses, "he has received Starfleet Distinguished Service Medal, Starfleet Silver Lifesaving Medal, Starfleet Purple Heart, and the Medal of Valor."

Prez and Keith simultaneously gasped, "The Purple Heart and the Medal of Valor?"

Throwing his chest out importantly, John grinned and croaked, "That's right! Your incredibly cute little brother! Later, you may kiss my feet!" Prez, Keith and Drew groaned then all four brothers began laughing.

Trying to stand to go to her son, but feeling dizzy, Kathleen Marr began to slip off her chair. Jim quickly grabbed her arm, got her seated again then smiled, "Welcome to Clan Short."

Jen loudly sighed then tapped her comm-badge. "Jennifer Hundser to Doctor Janet Hayes."

"Janet, here. I'm so glad you've gotten a comm-badge!"

"I'm sorry to have to use it so quickly," Jennifer smirked. "We have a new Clan mother here."

Janet giggled, "Uh oh! How much does she weigh?"

"About one hundred and ten pounds."

"I'll have Daileass transport the bottle."

Kathleen wondered, "Bottle of what?"

Jen, Laura, Lanna and Anna simultaneously replied, "Valium."

Over the comm-badge, Janet chortled, "You'll sleep, but still turn gray. I'm afraid we haven't found a cure for that or worry lines."

While the women continued to chat about the daily thrills of being a Clan mother, Stephen moved closer to his mother and softly assured, "I'm fine, mom." He then moved closer, wrapped an arm around his mother and whispered, "John's the one who kept me from going crazy last night. I cried at the Hawaii base and more after I got here. I love him and he loves me too."

John had locked eyes with his father. 'I didn't go there looking for trouble. I only wanted to help Joel and Kev. Stuff just sort o' happened.' Jim Hundser closed his eyes briefly and shook his head. 'How do I know why stuff happens around me? I pressed the right button though!' Reading his father's next question, John sent, 'My shoulder should be fine in another day or two. Then I can lose this stupid sling. My throat actually hurts worse, like a really bad cold, it burns. That's why I'm talking this way instead of speaking. The less I use my voice, the quicker my throat will heal. My voice should be fine tomorrow.'

"Are you able to eat?" Jim asked aloud.

John nodded, 'They recommended soup, ice cream and Jell-O, tonight.'

Jim grinned, "Go ahead and show our guests to the kitchen," referring to the young triplets.

Finishing his dinner, Prez remembered that he still hadn't contacted Cory Short. Swallowing the last of his iced tea, Prez tapped his sub-vocal and called, "Daileass, I need to send a quick message to Cory Short, please, dude."

Daileass giggled, "Any chance to annoy Blondie is good by me! I'll record your message and send it to him as soon as he's busy with something else!"

Prez smiled and said, "Hi Cory, it's Prez. Last night, as I was wrapping up my conversation with King Aalona, he gave Clan Short a very nice gift. We have an entire uninhabited Island now, dude! It's called Kaho'olawe and is off the southwest end of Maui. We can use it for whatever the Clan needs, bro. It's about forty square miles. That's way too big for another Rimmer base, so let me know if you have any ideas what we could use it for. Hopefully, everything's goin' well there for you today. If it hadn't been, maybe my news added a bright spot to your day. Take care, bro." Prez paused then said, "That should do it, Daileass."

"The message is recorded, Prez. I'll deliver it tonight, before he goes to bed," Daileass slyly answered. Rolling his eyes and smirking, Prez only shook his head.

A small pharmaceutical bottle appeared on the table before Jennifer. She thanked Janet and ended their conversation. Handing the bottle across the table, she then explained to Kathleen, "One before bedtime." Shooting flame from her eyes at John, she added, "I had this wild idea that I might not need to take one tonight."

Since almost the whole Rimmer Clan was present and everyone was in a good mood except the worrisome parents, Prez, Mike, Derrick and Mike gathered and decided it was time to soothe their shattered nerves. In an old Doo-Whop style, they began dancing and singing. "Only you can make this world seem right, Only you can make the darkness bright. Only you and you alone, Can thrill me like you do, And fill my heart with love for only you.

"Only you can make this change in me, For it's true, you are my destiny. When you hold my hand, I understand the magic that you do, You're my dream come true, My one and only you.

"Only you can make this change in me, For it's true, you are my destiny. When you hold my hand, I understand the magic that you do, You're my dream come true, My one and only you."

Lots of kids clapped and cheered, but not the parents. Before the old folks had another chance to dampen anyone's spirits, Mike had Alden transport his D-45 acoustic guitar. As soon as it appeared, they went right into Crazy Little Thing Called Love, with Keith singing lead vocals and performing a classic Elvis hip swivel and leg bounce. The rest of the band provided harmony vocals and tempo by clapping their hands. That got Drew and Corey dancing then John and Stephen held hands and danced a foot off the floor. Joel and Kevin joined in and soon all the Rimmers' sons paired up and joined their dads.

Prez was actually considering having Alden transport their parents into the pool to chill out. Thankfully, he didn't need to. At the end of the song, they clapped too. Then the dining room lights were dimmed. Three chefs came out of the kitchen pushing large carts of birthday cakes for Kaleo. When Kaleo ordered his cake that morning, he couldn't decide which flavor he wanted. So the chefs decided for him. With so many mouths to feed, it was simple to make one chocolate cake, one vanilla, and one strawberry. The final dining room performance of the night was for one hundred and thirty-nine voices to sing Happy Birthday to the Mouth Rimmer.

Kaleo got so many kisses, handshakes and hugs, the candles on the cakes were burning down to stubs when he finally blew them out and made a wish. Slices of cake were still being cut and passed to the kids when Prez went to the table where Spock was sitting with Joel, Kevin, Admiral Kirk and Teri Short.

Across the room, all the other Core Rimmers, Stephen, and Tory were watching anxiously. When the adults stopped talking and looked up at Prez, he smiled and asked, "Uncle Spock, my core teammates and I were hoping you could do us a favor." Prez paused, expecting that Spock would say something. Quickly realizing that he was waiting, Prez continued; "Saturday night, Harry and Jonas were telling us about the tel-tor ritual. Five couples would very much like to be bonded and married."

Spock nodded once and explained, "You understand that I can perform the mind-melds, but I may not be able to complete the bonding, dependent upon the emotional and mental states of the individuals."

"Yes Sir, we do," Prez acknowledged. "We understand that the worst that can happen is you can't complete the bonding. As long as you explain to the couples why and what is needed to successfully complete it, we see it as a win-win scenario. Also, we all want Joel and Kevin here to witness it and would be honored if you would perform it."

Almost imperceptibly, Spock smiled, "Very well. Are you ready, Preston?"

"Yes Sir! We all are," Prez excitedly chuckled. He then turned, nodded and waved the others over. Keith, Derrick, Mike, Corey, Drew, John, Stephen, Kaleo and Tory hurried across the dining room. Behind them, to witness the ceremony, came Dee, Gage, Sammy, Richie, Dillon, Jonah, Reyes and Geoff.

Spock stood before the five couples. His voice rang out, "Our people put the utmost emphasis on the idea of Family. Even our social structure proclaims this to all people, of all species. I am Spock, son of Sarek, of the Family of Sarek and the House of Surak, the senior house of Ektra-Maat T'Khasi, the house of all houses to which all Vulcans belong. My mother was of Earth, the daughter of Jeffrey Grayson, acrobat and scholar. I know that the peoples of Earth see Family as being as important as Vulcans do. And the foundation of Family is the bond of love expressed in marriage, into which Keith and Preston, and Michael and Derrick, and Drew and Corey, and Kaleo and Tory, and John and Stephen this evening propose to enter. I call you assembled here to stand witness to their union." Beginning with Keith, Spock entered brief mind-melds with each of the ten boys. Completing the melds, he said, "It is as I expected."

Walking into the dining room to find Prez, Troy and Sean heard Spock address the Clan. "We are gathered here this evening, to join Keith Hundser and Preston Albert O'Brian, and Michael Gibbons and Derrick Seibert, and Drew Hundser and Corey Seaver, and Kaleo Palakiko and Tory Burgas, and John Hundser and Stephen Marr in marriage, according to the laws of this nation, of the United Federation of Planets, and by the traditions of my people." He paused, and then said, "I am required to ask that if any person can show just cause why these couples should not be joined in marriage, that he speak now, or thereafter remain silent."

Not a single person said a word; in fact most of the kids had stopped eating and were proudly watching. Turning his attention back to the five couples; Spock led each couple through the wedding vows.

"According to the customs of your people, Keith, I charge you to take Preston's hand and pledge to him your wedding vow."

Keith faced Prez and took both his hands then clearly repeated; "I, Keith Hundser, take thee, Preston Albert O'Brian... to be my life partner... to have and to hold... from this day forward... in sickness and in health... for richer or for poorer... and I pledge my love to you... so long as we both shall live."

Prez joyfully repeated; "I, Preston Albert O'Brian, take thee, Keith Hundser... to be my life partner... to have and to hold... from this day forward... in sickness and in health... for richer or for poorer... and I pledge my love to you... so long as we both shall live."

Facing Derrick and swinging his hands, Mike grinned; "I, Michael Gibbons, take thee, Derrick Seibert... to be my life partner... to have and to hold... from this day forward... in sickness and in health... for richer or for poorer... and I pledge my love to you... so long as we both shall live."

Trying to stop Mike's swinging hands, Derrick smiled; "I, Derrick Seibert, take thee, Michael Gibbons... to be my life partner... to have and to hold... from this day forward... in sickness and in health... for richer or for poorer... and I pledge my love to you... so long as we both shall live."

Drew loudly proclaimed; "I, Drew Hundser, take thee, Corey Seaver... to be my life partner... to have and to hold... from this day forward... in sickness and in health... for richer or for poorer... and I pledge my love to you... so long as we both shall live."

Corey briefly giggled then joyfully repeated; "I, Corey Seaver, take thee, Drew Hundser... to be my life partner... to have and to hold... from this day forward... in sickness and in health... for richer or for poorer... and I pledge my love to you... so long as we both shall live."

Kaleo repeated; "I, Kaleo Palakiko, take thee, Tory Burgas... to be my life partner... to have and to hold... from this day forward... in sickness and in health... for richer or for poorer... and I pledge my love to you... so long as we both shall live."

Tory stated; "I, Tory Burgas, take thee, Kaleo Palakiko... to be my life partner... to have and to hold... from this day forward... in sickness and in health... for richer or for poorer... and I pledge my love to you... so long as we both shall live."

John and Stephen were holding hands and floating almost two feet off the floor. They actually appeared taller than Kaleo and Tory and as tall as the eldest four. With his throat sore, John proudly croaked, "I, John Hundser, take thee, Stephen Marr... to be my life partner... to have and to hold... from this day forward... in sickness and in health... for richer or for poorer... and I pledge my love to you... so long as we both shall live."

"I, Stephen Marr, take thee, John Hundser... to be my life partner... to have and to hold... from this day forward... in sickness and in health... for richer or for poorer... and I pledge my love to you... so long as we both shall live."

Everyone began clapping and cheering, but Spock returned to Keith and Prez. Realizing there was more, the applause slowly dwindled. Renewing the mind-melds with each boy in turn, Spock instructed, "Raise thy hands and rest them on thy beloved's temples. Repeat after me: My mind to your mind, my heart to your heart, my love to your love."

The smiles on Keith's and Preston's faces slowly faded as their hands touched temples and they repeated the short phrase. Everyone saw the same thing happen to all ten boys. Smiles were replaced with expressions of astonishment, like each was gazing reverently at perfect rainbows or works of art.

Once Stephen, the last boy in line, completed the process, Spock for the fifth time repeated, "You are bonded according to the deepest traditions of my people. Not being telepaths, you do not have the telepathic aspect of the bond, but each of you will find strength in your mate, each will know without conscious thought the feelings of your mate, each will be truly joined in mind and heart to your life mate."

After several moments, Richie softly wondered, "Are they stuck like that? When do they get to kiss?"

Glancing down at the boy standing beyond Keith, Spock couldn't help smiling. The first kiss began with John and Stephen and they rose even higher, towering above Spock. Almost simultaneously, the remaining four couples kissed. As clapping and cheering began, John powered up and lifted all four other couples so everyone could easily see.

All ten boys warmly thanked Uncle Spock. Joel came over to congratulate them all then explained that he needed to be in the U.K. soon. He, Kevin, their kids, Teri and Spock would need to leave. All the Core Rimmers hugged Joel, then Teri and even Uncle Spock. As John was finishing up, Prez had Alden patch him across the base PA system and send his announcement out to all the other Clan Divisions. "Ladies and gentlemen, boys and girls; it is our families tradition and therefore a Rimmer tradition to give and receive abundantly. We've received, now it's time to give. It's six-fifty-two Hawaii time. At seven-fifty Hawaii time there will be a concert at the Pacific Rim main base auditorium. We're celebrating our weddings. All who can attend are very welcome. Now, if you'll excuse us, we have less than an hour to get prepared. Alden, if you please, transport the ten of us, our kids, Troy and Sean to the auditorium lobby."

In an instant, the entire group was standing in the auditorium. Corey and Drew went right to work powering everything up. Troy turned to Sean and softly giggled, "It's so friggin' weird moving that way!" Smiling widely, Sean nodded and leaned in closer for a kiss.

"Okay," Prez began, "first things first. Alden, lock the auditorium doors. No one gets in until seven-twenty-five. Next, we all need to be dressed alike."

Mike quickly added, "Loose clothes so we can move around; shiny platinum-colored polo shirts, black pants and black sneakers."

Derrick instructed, "Close the stage curtains too, Alden."

Alden giggled, "I get to change the Rimmers! You're all gonna be naked for second or two."

Patting Drew on the back, Keith said, "Take a short break, bro. You too Corey." Once everyone was standing still, Keith instructed, "Do it, dude." In an instant, all the boys were standing in their birthday suits. It wasn't expected, but Alden got in a quick sigh and whimper before clothing them all again. Shaking their heads, but smirking, the Core Rimmers briefly remarked on their new AIs enthusiasm.

Drew and Corey went back to the circuit breakers. Looking down at himself, Sean grinned, "Nice!"

Kaleo asked, "What do you need us to do, Prez?"

Prez said, "I'm thinking you, Tory and Sean can get the concession stand manned. Our kids, John and Stephen, you'll act as ushers. Get everyone seated as quickly as possible. Richie and Dillon, you guys can help just by starting at the front of the aisles. Keep everyone in the center section of seats. As the rows fill up, walk forward so folks know the seats in front of you are filled. When everyone's seated you guys come up on stage and let us know."

Richie giggled, "'Kay, Poppa."

Dillon nodded, "Okay, Unca Prez."

Finished with the power, Drew announced, "We're set, Prez."

"Great," Prez smiled, "get the popcorn poppin' and we'll get a set list together."

Troy reminded, "My gear's at home, Prez."

"Alden!" Prez laughed.

"It's all on the stage waiting now," Alden giggled.

Without further ado, Platinum Habits and their kids went inside the theater. Drew, Corey and Geoff went upstairs. Kaleo, Tory and Sean went to the concession bar. Kaleo grinned, "Thank goodness there's operating instructions on this corn popper."

Checking the freezer, Sean giggled, "We got ice!"

Searching the refrigerator, Tory sniggered, "Now if I could just find the butter!"

On their way up the stage steps, the band members were tossing out ideas for songs they could play. The ballads they had already rehearsed with Troy easily made the list. The band decided they wanted to play mostly ballads with a few light rock and blues tunes tossed in. They also wanted to test the capability of the sound system. Since it was a short notice concert, they expected only a few hundred Clan members to show up. Still, they wanted a dramatic opening number; something that would shake the ground. Slowly but surely, the set list was built.

Drew and Corey were given the titles and began getting a show prepared. With all the new lights and lasers, folks wouldn't know what to watch; the band and the stage show or the laser lights up on the ceiling. To check the audience sound levels, Corey raced back down to the theater with a tricorder set as a decibel meter. Behind the curtain, the band was rehearsing one of the tunes so they could get actual performance readings. Watching Corey closely from the PA booth, Drew slowly raised the power amps. The boys knew that eighty-five decibels was a normal and comfortable listening level and one hundred thirty decibels was near the sound of a jet engine and painful. They decided to start at ninety-five decibels. If many guests showed up, they could raise it a little bit and not deafen everybody in the audience.

Just as Corey returned to the PA booth, down on the stage the boys were singing A Capella. "You missed it," Drew smiled. "Troy and Prez taught the rest this song."

"It sounds awesome," Corey smiled. "Jaws are gonna drop."

"It's so perfect; it's making me want to cry," Drew grinned.

Realizing that their time was up, the band went back stage and got a little more rehearsal time in. At exactly seven-twenty-five, the auditorium doors unlocked. Rimmers began filing in from the door nearest the dining room. Others from various Clan divisions began transporting in. Some were stopping for soda, candy or popcorn, but most just went inside the theater and found seats. John tapped his comm-badge at seven-fifty and told Prez, "We've still got folks filing in, bro. Looks like a lot from the Rapid Response Base and Utah are here; a bunch from the Nevada Desert Division; judging by accents, more than a few from Oceanic Division too."

Prez grinned, "It's Wednesday afternoon there."

"It's thinning out some though. Give us another ten minutes."

Troy began nervously pacing and the other four encircled him. They all grinned at each other. "I've never played for more than a hundred or so," Troy admitted.

Keith nodded and explained, "We found out last Friday, audience size don't matter."

Mike devilishly grinned, "Sounds like the same ol' story to me."

Troy blushed and giggled, "Ain't goin' there!"

Derrick chuckled, "Ah, but you so want to, we can tell!"

Prez smiled, "There's some extraordinary rumors about your boyfriend."

Playing along, Keith teased, "Just tell us if the rumors are true."

Troy laughed, "I have no idea what you're all talking about!" but still blushed bright red.

Richie and Dillon came backstage. Richie said, "We're done, Poppa."

Dillon added, "There's still some middle rows way back."

Hugging both boys, Prez smiled, "You guys did an excellent job. Go ahead and find Uncle John and some seats." The two boys hurried back off stage and raced up the aisle. Facing his band mates, Prez said, "All set and together now, dudes?"

Everyone nodded and Troy nervously giggled, "Just hope I stay with ya's through the whole show!"

"Play like you did yesterday and earlier today and we're kewl bro," Mike assured, and then started up the backstage steps.

Following the rest of the band up, Prez nodded, "You've got no worries, Troy. It's gonna be great." He then tapped his comm-badge and told Drew, "Let's jam, bro. As soon as you hear the gong and timpani, open the curtains."

"Kewl!" Drew chirped. He raised the main faders on the PA system.

The audience lights dimmed and applause began to swell from the estimated four thousand now occupying most of the floor seats. From behind his drum kit, Derrick glanced around at his band mates and got thumbs up gestures. Simultaneously, he hit the gong and one of the timpani. The curtains began to open. Visible to the audience first was Derrick standing and hitting the timpani with flashes of red light above and behind him. After about twenty-seconds, the curtain was fully opened and Derrick sat on his drum throne. Most of the stage was dark until Keith began the opening synthesized horn notes of Fanfare For The Common Man. Near Keith was Troy, playing the Hammond organ, with his tenor sax hanging off his neck. White and yellow spotlights draped Keith and Troy. While the audience stood and cheered, Keith, Troy and Prez began playing the opening bass shuffle. About three minutes into the song, as the audience began to settle back down, Troy hurried out from stage left and the keyboards to play the first solo on his tenor saxophone at center stage. Soon, Keith was copying Troy note-for-note, reaching to play both the synthesizer and the Hammond. Mike joined the section with heavily distorted guitar chords matching the melody. Lined up in front of the drums, Prez, Troy and Mike got the audience revved up.

Ending the song on repeated blasts of sound to more applause, Troy put his sax down then went back to the piano. Taking his wireless microphone with him, Keith danced out to front center stage as rest of the band began playing 'Lovin', Touchin', Squeezin'. Troy played the Steinway grand piano. Keith sang lead vocals with the rest of the band singing backup vocals. By the end of the song, almost everyone in the audience was singing the repeated Na-na-na's.

For the next song, Troy again changed instruments to the acoustic 12-string guitar. Prez announced, "Welcome to Ewa Beach everybody! Y'all are probably wondering why we're up here on stage? The easy answer is that we couldn't have gotten married today without Clan Short. So this is our way of saying thank you. Y'all need to keep an eye on our new band member. So far, you've seen Troy playing keyboards and saxophone." Prez paused then gestured to his right at Troy saying, "Now he's got a guitar for our next song. We all play various instruments, but Troy's our wizard."

The audience began chuckling except for Kaleo, Tory, Horacio and Sean who shouted, "YEAH, TROY!"

"A fan base on day one," Prez chuckled. He then stepped back and Derrick counted off the tempo for 'While My Guitar Gently Weeps'. Mike played his Randy Rhoads Les Paul Custom and sang lead vocals. Providing backup vocals, Keith played electric piano and the Hammond organ. The next two songs were suggested by Troy.

The first was 'The Story In Your Eyes', and Troy sang lead vocals while playing acoustic rhythm guitar. For the second song, Mike switched to his D-45 acoustic and Keith played the Steinway. Troy remained on the 12-string and sang lead vocals on 'I Need You'. All five sang the choruses.

Horacio leaned closer to Sean and teased, "Don't tell me he sang this to you too?"

Sean grinned, but shook his head saying, "Not this one. Another that almost ripped my heart out. You should've heard it. At least I wouldn't have been crying alone."

Confirming that Sean had found a very romantic gay boy in Troy, Horacio asked, "You know how lucky you are?"

Sean nodded and grinned, "I know." He then remembered, "By the way, he wants to see our dorm room."

"His eyes keep coming back here," Horacio noticed. "He's singing to you right now."

Smiling widely and nodding, Sean sighed then moaned, "Yeah." Shaking his head, Horacio cracked up.

For the next song, 'Every Breath You Take', Troy switched to his Fender Stratocaster electric guitar, sang background vocals and Derrick sang lead vocals. Keith didn't have much to do through the first verse so he got the audience clapping along until keyboards were necessary.

About a third of the way into the song, Horacio had another idea and tapped Sean on the knee. "You want me to make myself scarce while you show him our room?"

"You don't have to."

"It's not a problem. Remember me asking you to help me help Sonia to the dorm the other night?"

Sean nodded, but because he was watching Troy, it took him about thirty-seconds to turn to Horacio and grin, "You scopin' her out?"

Horacio smiled and nodded, "A couple of minutes at a time with her whenever I can. You haven't noticed? What am I saying? Of course you haven't noticed!" Sean cracked up.

At the end of the song, Keith made an announcement while Troy changed instruments from guitar to saxophone and Mike changed from electric to acoustic guitar. "This next song we learned from Troy. He really should be singing it, but singing and playing sax is somewhat difficult." Prez crossed the stage to be closer to Keith and Derrick counted off again. Keith began playing the electric piano introduction. He then sang; "Don't go changing, to try and please me. You never let me down before. I don't imagine you're too familiar, And I don't see you anymore." The whole band joined in with Keith singing; "I would not leave you in times of trouble. We never could have come this far. I took the good times, I'll take the bad times, I'll take you Just The Way You Are."

Many rows forward of Horacio and Sean, Judy Faris was sitting near Kathleen Marr and Jennifer Hundser. Right after Troy's first sax part, Kathleen turned to Judy and asked, "That's your boy?"

Judy proudly nodded, "I expected he would slowly come out of his shell. This afternoon, I came home to find him with one of the rescued boys."

Kathleen asked, "Aren't you afraid for him?"

"Naturally," Judy answered, "but Troy's obviously happy. Just like Stephen is happy with John. Every one of the boys that got married are incomplete without their partners. Look at them. When they watch their partners, their eyes soften, but they're obviously strengthened."

Kathleen nodded, "Stephen took risks today that I never expected from him."

Jennifer said, "Spock has checked them. They may still appear to be boys, but they have enough of adult perspectives and love for each other that he agreed to marry them. It's shocking though, isn't it?"

"Very!" Kathleen smiled, "It will take me days to get over the change in him."

"Don't worry," Jennifer assured. "We'll take shared custody of our young married couple. Between you and I, we'll guide them when they need it."

Troy moved forward and played the sax solo and the three women paused. Then Keith emotionally sang the last verse to Prez and then Troy played the ending sax solo. The song ended and the audience broke into applause. Troy waved at the audience then went back to play piano again for 'Count On Me'. Keith and Derrick handled the lead vocals while the remaining three sang backup vocals.

The next song was 'Traces', during which Troy played recorder and sax parts and then Troy switched to acoustic 12-string for 'It's Only Love', and 'Can't You Hear My Heartbeat'. Keith sang lead for the first song; Mike sang lead on the latter two. Then Derrick walked down and backstage stage to take a break with Reyes, who was waiting for the chance to perform on stage for the first time in twenty-one years.

On a mostly blue and green lit stage, with the shafts of red light rising from behind the drum risers, the remaining four played 'If'. Keith provided synthesized strings and sang lead vocals. Mike finger-picked the lead acoustic guitar part while Troy played electric guitar. The audience was very impressed with Keith's vocals and loudly applauded. For the next tune, Troy went back to acoustic guitar and Reyes came out on stage to play bongos. Troy and Mike began playing the acoustic guitar introduction of 'You've Got A Friend', with Prez singing lead vocals. Keith moved back beside Reyes to play maracas and provide background vocals. About a third of the way through the song, the red shafts of light behind the drum risers turned orange and Derrick came back on stage to play drums.

The stage darkened again and Reyes went off stage to loud applause. Keith went to the electronic keyboards and Troy moved from guitar back to the Steinway. With a single overhead spotlight on him, Troy began playing and singing 'Without You'. Soon, Keith was adding synthesized strings then joining Troy's vocals. Their voices together were smooth as silk. As the ending crescendo built, the orange lights behind the drums turned yellow and bright. By the time the song neared its end, Horacio noticed that Sean was a quivering wreck beside him.

For the next song, Keith went off stage to take a break while the remaining four switched instruments. Derrick came down off the risers to play bass guitar. Mike played lead acoustic guitar while Troy provided synthesized strings and harmonized backup vocals. Prez sang lead vocals and played acoustic guitar for 'If You Could Read My Mind'. Mike and Troy provided backup vocals for Prez. The audience was pleasantly shocked that the band had moved effortlessly from rock to folk. They were also stunned that Prez could play acoustic guitar and sing so well. Applause slowly built and many in the audience stood for their leader. The band had carefully choreographed this part of the act just for the "moan factor". The stage lights went out and the audience stood for the first ovation. The four ballads were performed and executed flawlessly, leaving the audience breathless.

The band members moved around again while the audience cheered. Keith came back on stage to play synthesized horns and strings for the next tune. Reyes came up onto the drum risers to play maracas and tambourine. Suddenly, colored lights swamped stage right and Mike began playing 'What Is Life'. The shock of going from almost pitch black to all that light almost most knocked many in the audience front rows back into their seats. Troy and Mike played electric guitars and Derrick sang lead vocals.

While the audience was still clapping, Reyes moved over to the bongos and congas. The band played the instrumental 'Samba Pa Ti', featuring Mike on electric guitar. Mike walked back and forth across the entire length of the stage playing with heart, soul and fire. When Mike was stopped in one place for a while, his eyes closed and he sang each note he played. While Reyes was on stage, the band continued with 'Just Remember I Love You'. Troy played the D-45 during the first part of the song, but then pushed the guitar back and switched to baritone saxophone. Mike sang lead vocals with Derrick and Prez backing him up. Watching each other closely during the middle instrumental break, Mike and Troy played the exact same notes at the same time. After the song was completed, Derrick proudly introduced; "On bongos and congas, my son, Reyes Taraschke." Reyes waved at the audience then went off stage.

Barely pausing while the audience clapped and cheered, the band pushed on. 'Who Loves You' was next on the set list. Corey activated the fog machines while Drew applied a slight phase shift to the hi-hat mic. Keith played the Steinway piano and Troy played synthesizers. Keith sang lead vocals with the other four band members providing harmonized backup vocals. During the middle instrumental break, Corey got clover shaped laser lights bouncing and spinning on stage and up on the ceiling. When they weren't singing, Prez and Mike bounced and danced around, obviously having a blast. Lights were flashing everywhere on each of the band members, making eyes dart around in the audience. Next, the band played 'Real Love', with more laser lights creating heart shapes that seemed to pulse in time with the music. Keith played keyboards. Troy played 12-string rhythm guitar. Mike played electric guitar and sang lead vocals. For the following song, Troy moved behind the keyboards and Keith moved to center stage, singing 'As Long As You Love Me'. High up on the ceiling, a spinning mirrored ball with red, green and blue pin spot lights made its presence known and so did the Scooby Gang, chanting praises to the pretty Shiny ball. Dancing and groovin', Keith, Prez and Mike got the audience fully engaged. Kids all over the audience were up dancing. Singing to each other, John and Stephen held hands and danced a foot higher than the chairs they had been sitting in, causing quite a bit of giggling and laughter.

More fog billowed onto the stage and laser lights flew around the auditorium during 'Time Of The Season'. Once again, as had occurred during the luau, eyes in the audience darted around to each band member as they sang the various parts. The final song of the mini-set was 'Easy', with Troy singing lead vocals and playing the Steinway while Keith played synthesized horn and string parts.

At the end of the song, while the audience clapped and cheered, the stage went completely dark again and all laser lights stopped. Several of the band members could be heard laughing. Realizing something even more thrilling was coming, the audience was spellbound. Red shafts of light rose from behind the drums and red lights from above draped the band members. The band played 'Precious and Few', followed immediately thereafter by 'Truly Madly Deeply', with Keith and Troy singing a duet on the latter tune, and the rest of the band providing backup vocals during the choruses. Mike played the classical guitar for his short solos. It was Prez who whispered "I love you," near the end of the song.

The entire band was really pleased with the re-vamped version of 'Never My Love'. With Troy's additional background vocals and acoustic rhythm guitar, and Reyes providing castanets, tambourine and more background vocals, the song sounded exactly like the original recording. Without the audience even noticing, the shafts of light behind the drum risers were now orange. Then Keith sang lead vocals on 'How Can I Be Sure'. Troy remained at the piano for 'Your Song'. Midway through the latter song, Sean was a quaking, shivering mass of tear-drenched putty. Horacio reached for and held Sean's hand. Keith took over lead vocals for 'Don't Worry Baby' and 'I Can't Tell You Why'. The harmonized, multi-part vocals on the Beach Boy's classic impressed everyone. It was a song the four man band had tried and couldn't adequately accomplish, but with Troy, it was now perfect. Troy then left the stage for a short break and some cold water. Sean was almost thankful Troy had walked off stage before he needed to be scraped off the floor. The lights behind the drum risers were now yellow and the audience hadn't even noticed them changing color again. Keith manned the synthesizers and Mike moved over to the Steinway to play 'Imagine'. Everyone in the audience was surprised that Mike could play piano. His voice was so much like Lennon's it was eerie.

For the final songs, Troy returned to the stage. Keith sat at the Steinway and Troy manned the synthesizers for 'Unchained Melody', with Keith singing lead vocals. After they had finished the song, Keith and Troy swapped positions and knocked knuckles. Troy sat at the Steinway and Keith manned the synthesizers. Troy began playing and, out in the audience, Sean began shaking again before a single word was sung. Horacio looked over at him. Forcing a smile, Sean said, "This is the song he played for me before supper." Troy sang the first verse of 'Bridge Over Troubled Water'. Keith sang the second verse. Cymbal swells, drums, synthesized strings and bass guitar were added. The final verse was sung by all five band members. As the final notes rang out, the audience shot to their feet clapping and cheering. This part of the program was considered by the band as the "wow factor." Derrick came down off the drum risers and waved Reyes to come out and join them. Platinum Habits met center stage, held hands and bowed then the curtains began to close.

The audience would have none of that; they wanted more! Reyes hugged Derrick and Mike then went back off stage. Platinum Habits were ready for two encore songs that would leave the audience reeling. They gathered around one microphone at front center stage. In a semi circle, from left to right were Prez, Troy, Keith, Derrick and Mike. As planned, Corey opened the curtain partway, only revealing the band, the drums behind them and the yellow shafts of light behind the drums. The audience sat down. As one voice in four-part harmony, the five man band sang 'Because', A Capella.

"Aaaaahhhhhh. Because the world is round it turns me on.
Because the world is round.

"Aaaaaahhhhhh. Because the wind is high it blows my mind.
Because the wind is high.

"Aaaaaahhhhhh. Love is old, love is new. Love is all, love is you.

"Because the sky is blue, it makes me cry. Because the sky is blue. Aaaaaaaahhhh."

Loving it, the audience cheered, clapped and whistled. But the band were smiling and waiting for the audience to settle down. Once more, as one united voice in five-part harmony, they sang A Capella.

"I believe for every drop of rain that falls, a flower grows. I believe that somewhere, in the darkest night, a candle glows. I believe for everyone who goes astray, someone will come to show the way. I believe, I believe.

"I believe above the storm the smallest prayer will still be heard. I believe that someone, in the great somewhere, hears every word. Every time I hear a newborn baby cry, or touch a leaf, or see the sky, then I know why, I believe. I Believe!"

The audience, half in tears and the other half with their mouths agape, jumped up and exploded with applause, cheers and whistles. Stepping back from the microphone, Platinum Habits lined up, held hands and again bowed. Drew turned down the main faders. Corey closed the curtains then turned up the audience lights.

While the boys were still in a five way hug, Prez smiled at Troy and asked, "Still scared?"

Troy shook his head and laughed, "After thirty ballads and love songs, fear is the weakest of my emotions right now."

Keith giggled, "You wanna stick around for the reception, dude?"

"Don't make him make a decision! He's got better things to do," Mike countered. He then tapped his sub-vocal and told Alden, "Get a fix on Sean Moorhead, dude; transport Sean and Troy directly to Sean's dorm room."

"Sean's standing and ready," Alden giggled.

Everyone released Troy and the last thing he saw was them starting to wave goodbye. Preparing to leave the auditorium, Horacio was standing behind Sean. Then Sean vanished and Horacio knowingly grinned. The next thing Troy knew, he was standing in a mostly darkened room. A little light coming in from the window blinds and a digital clock allowed him to notice Sean's silhouette moving towards him. Sean softly recited, "Like the winter needs the spring, I need you." They wrapped their arms around each other and passionately kissed. Many moments later, the kiss broke. Remaining close together, Sean whispered, "Did you like the stuff we did alone today?"

"I loved it all, Sean," Troy assured. He then wondered, "Did you think I didn't?"

Sean shivered and admitted, "I want you in so many ways, Troy. Before goin' crazy and showing you some new stuff, I wanted to check."

Troy giggled, "The dildo is in my condo, Tiger."

"First things first," Sean smiled, and began undressing Troy. Sean taught Troy a variety of kisses while he worked. Soon, they were naked and lying on Sean's bed. At first, they ground against each other, kissing and cooing. Crawling down the length of Troy's body, Sean whispered, "Wanna show you something." Troy uncontrollably shivered when Sean lifted his legs and began licking trails around each cheek of his ass.

Sean's tongue brushed over Troy's anus for the first time and Troy moaned, "My Tiger." Sean giggled and then loudly purred before lightly tapping the orifice with his fingers. Spiraling out of control, Troy gurgled utterances that made no sense at all. After many minutes of instruction, Sean swung around to let Troy practice. Once again, Sean discovered that Troy was a natural, enthusiastically repeating all he had learned.

Facing and embracing their partners, Prez and Keith, and Mike and Derrick, shared a few quiet minutes alone back stage. What was most remarkable to both couples was how much they could feel from their partners. It wasn't telepathy, but it was so much more than familiarity. The time of guessing what their partners felt was over. They didn't even need to confirm the feelings aloud. Finally, each began congratulating the other on the marriages and concert. Then they went out the back stage door and towards the CIC dining room.

There, they found the entire Rimmer Clan, many other Clan members and five wedding cakes waiting. To his fellow newlyweds, John sent, 'I had Alden get us the cakes.' Grateful, Prez and Keith only thought of the relationship topics they wanted to talk with John and Stephen about. John relayed the messages verbatim to Stephen. Both young boys blushed and giggled. John replied, 'There are some things we will do together tonight and few others we're not quite ready for. Prepubescent, remember? You think you two can last a long time? HA! We make each other shake over and over again without pausing or making a big mess! Bet ya can't remember the last time you could say that!'

Keith and Prez laughed, remembering their own prepubescent escapades. Not until that moment did John know that once upon a time, prior to choosing their mates, Mike, Derrick, Prez and Keith had fun with each other as a group and as couples. However, the other Core Rimmers and their families were waiting.

All five couples gathered then went to cut the cakes. One couple at a time fed their partners a piece of cake. Then, starting with Derrick and Mike, each newlywed smashed a small piece of cake onto his partners face. They went to the CIC men's room to cleanup. There, they decided they had waited long enough. Kaleo and Tory had Alden transport them to their dorm room. Prez and Keith, Derrick and Mike, Drew and Corey, and John and Stephen were transported to the townhomes for maximum privacy.

At the dorms, some of the kids were returning to their rooms. On the first floor, right after Aki and Hajime walked in, they could hear muffled cries and moans from Sean and Horacio's room. They had seen Sean with Troy that day and Horacio was still at the CIC dining room when they left there, so they knew who was making love. Thirteen-year-old roommates Aaron Farris and Stephen Wickes walked in the dorm and heard more desperate cries and giggling from Sean's room. Having a good idea of what might be going on, they blushed and giggled. Aaron nervously asked Stephen, "Ya wanna try, maybe?"

Opening the door to their room, Stephen waited until Aaron had stepped inside, closed the door and reached for Aaron's hand, softly admitting, "That's why I slept near you in the nest the last three nights. That's why I wanted you as a roommate, Aaron."

Beginning to shed tears of joy, Aaron leaned close and tenderly kissed Stephen for the first time. Forcing a wide smile, Stephen whispered, "You're gorgeous to me, ya know? I can't imagine how I could live without you."

"I think you're hot too," Aaron giggled. "I never wanna be with anyone else ever again." With that, Aaron led Stephen to his bed. The boys giggled and rolled around, sharing their bodies and minds.

Sean's orphanage friends, Keanu and Hank were next entering the dorm and heard Sean making Troy squeal in delight. They helplessly laughed as they walked to the common room at the end of the hall. Both boys considered themselves bisexual, because of their orphanage experiences. As close as they had been through their orphanage experiences, they had no issue with seeking solace in each other's arms. They weren't ready for bed yet though and turned on the television in the common room. Keanu turned to Hank and grinned, "What do you think Sean's doin'?"

Knowing Sean for five years, Hank cackled, "You saw Sean with Troy today. The look in his eyes and the smile on his face says it all. I'd bet the Rimmers are rimming." Keanu nodded and evilly snickered.

Still chuckling from the sounds down the hall, Horacio walked in the common room. The three orphanage buddies became hysterical because, of all of them, Sean was the shyest, yet there they were, still making choices and watching TV while Sean had obviously found the boyfriend of his dreams. After hearing Troy sing so many ballads, they knew that Sean had no hope of ever breaking away from Troy. They also confirmed that it was a match made in heaven. Horacio only wondered when he would be able to return to his room and go to bed.

After the reception, eleven of the younger boys and nine of the younger girls decided it was time to move to the dorms. With Alden's help, Bill Seaver and Carl Seibert took the boys over and got them settled in three dorm rooms. Lanna Seaver and Anna Seibert brought the girls upstairs and got them in their rooms. The nest in the basement of the Hundser home had dwindled to twenty-five immediate family, the seven youngest F.C.C. kids rescued the prior night, the Terrible Triplets and Nathan. Almost all the kids were wound up from the concert and reception.

Circumstances however, cut the Rimmers' private celebrations short. At quarter of midnight, Prez's comm-badge chirped. Street kids had shown up at Hawaii, Maui, and their own main gate. Reluctantly, Prez contacted Mike, Derrick, Kaleo and Tory while Keith called his brothers and their partners. Soon the five couples and two doctors were at the Ewa Beach main gate, then at Hawaii and finally at Maui gathering nineteen more kids. Of the nineteen, twelve were boys and seven were girls, ranging in age from thirteen to sixteen. One boy and one girl were fifteen year old Betazed twins; Relud Glith and his sister, Inoyra Glith. John and Stephen found them to be the most interesting of the lot. Arriving back at the CIC dining room, Derrick realized their numbers had reached one hundred and fifty-one. In only four days, the Rimmer Clan had almost doubled.

Emerging from the dorm room around half past midnight, Sean and Troy went down the hall, washed up in the bathroom then went to the common room looking for Horacio. Little did they know that, in addition to Horacio, they would find Keanu, Hank, Aki, Hajime, Aaron and Stephen in the room. Only Aki and Hajime remained seated and giggling while the other five stood and applauded the after concert performance. Blushing bright red, Sean and Troy hid their faces on the other's shoulder and couldn't help laughing along. On their way out of the common room, Aaron and Stephen paused to hug Sean and Troy, whispering their thanks for pushing them beyond friendship.

Sean locked eyes with Horacio and giggled, "The room is yours for the night, bro."

Troy nodded and brightly smiled, "Sean's spending the night with me at the condo."

More laughter and teasing erupted from Horacio, Keanu and Hank. Cackling their heads off, Sean and Troy turned and walked down the hall. Horacio followed and softly wondered, "So how far did you dudes go?"

Troy giggled and tried to hide his face with his one free hand. Sean answered, "As far as we could with hands, fingers and mouths." Facing Sean and wordlessly confirming everything they had done was fantastic, Troy brightly smiled and contentedly sighed.

They stopped outside Sean and Horacio's room. Horacio teased, "No dildo action yet?"

Sean and Troy shook their heads. Sean helplessly giggled, "Later tonight or tomorrow, after Troy's mom leaves for work."

Collapsing onto Sean, Troy giggled, "We got each other off six times already, Tiger."

Sean planted a kiss then smiled, "I told you that six times was easy. It's after midnight now. Restart the counter."

Laughing hysterically, Horacio prompted, "Wait just a minute," then hurried into his room. He came back out with the final wrapped present and handed it to Sean. Sean handed the box to Troy then leaned close to whisper, "We're workin' our way there; fingers and through each of the dildos."

Troy whimpered then tenderly kissed Sean. Troy turned to Horacio, offered his thanks and reluctantly admitted that he was jealous of him.

Shaking his head, Horacio assured, "Don't be jealous of me, dude. My hand's been on Sean's cock, but that's it. I wouldn't do with him what you've already done. I'm bi and want a girlfriend; everything's perfect and very kewl, Troy."

Troy smiled, "That's great. Thanks again for the presents. We'll see you tomorrow."

"Kewl," Horacio chirped, and then chuckled, "Have fun, dudes. Good night."

Sean and Troy shared silent thoughts. Sean took the box and handed it back to Horacio, saying, "Just leave it on my bed, bro." He slyly glanced at Troy and chortled, "If my finger and tongue makes you that loud, we'd better plan on playing with these here." Feeling his face flush again, Troy nodded and helplessly laughed at himself. Taking the box and cracking up, Horacio, Sean and Troy said good night. Horacio went into the room and tossed the box on Sean's bed. Sean and Troy returned to the condominium.

Kekoa had done his bit again, getting additional chefs to feed the new arrivals and giving them an introductory pep talk. Once the kids had eaten, the eight Core Rimmers, their partners and Kekoa took the newbies to the basement store to get them clothed. Kekoa pulled Prez aside and whispered, "I need to share something, Director O'Brian."

Hearing Kekoa refer to him with a formal title, Prez immediately knew it was important. The best area Prez knew of where there were no kids or chance for interruption was within the men's room. Once there, Prez formally said, "Your report, Colonel?"

Kekoa reported, "With the installation of your new AI this morning, additional security measures have been implemented. The technology is far above anything else on this planet and cannot be compromised." Prez simply nodded. Kekoa continued, "If the CIC were to be compromised, then explosive charges would take out the AI and everything above ground. Only these basement areas would not be destroyed."

"What about Alden?" Prez worried, "He's a sentient life form, like Reyes, Daileass and Draco."

Kekoa answered, "All Alden's programming and memories would be stored off site. He'd be safe, Sir."

Prez thought for a few moments then asked, "If we have to use the shelters down here, would everybody be safe?"

Kekoa nodded, "Yes, Sir. Jory setup the charges personally."

Remembering the boy that setup the explosive charges so they could surf at Anahola Bay, Prez couldn't help laughing. Not expecting Prez to laugh, Kekoa curiously tilted his head. Leading Kekoa out of the men's room, Prez shared the surfing story.

Finally, the group was brought to the dorms. For the first time, a dorm room was shared by a boy and a girl; the twins, Relud and Inoyra. There were rooms still available in the first dorm for the girls, but all the new boys had overflowed into the first floor of another dormitory building.

It was almost three in the morning by the time the Core Rimmers went to bed. Only John's sleep was interrupted by a nightmare just before dawn. Completely freaked out by the images of fire, John got up and contacted the Command Center, fully convinced that somewhere there was a huge blaze and many kids were in danger. The on-shift UNIT team checked and double checked, but nowhere around the Pacific Rim was there any such fire. Stephen led John back to the nest, got him settled down and eventually they fell back to sleep.

Reyes Taraschke Personal Log 3

<Authors Note: This chapter was a team effort. In addition to advancing Reyes' story, there is also a fair amount said about AI Headquarters and the characters from the story 'Sentenced To Life'. More than a week has passed since the last chapter of 'Sentenced To Life', so naturally, AAKD has struck, and we introduce two brothers, adopted by the Owens family. Tuesday, November 2, 2004

It's a little before six in the morning. I woke from dreams I was having and couldn't go back to sleep, so I decided to get up, turn the television on and start writing.

In one of my dreams, I was with my first dad, Derek Taraschke. It started as memories of him teaching me to play congas, at home in Myrtle Beach, South Carolina. It's weird, but I never saw him as an old man, even though he was already forty-five years old when I was first activated. In my dream, I remembered him telling me that he and mom couldn't have kids of their own, which is why they took advantage of the cybernetics developments at Vision Industries and adopted me. As happy as I was with him and mom, I never thought to ask why they hadn't adopted a human boy instead of an android boy. It's one of the questions still lurking in my brain that I have no answer for. I don't know why it matters. Without them, I never would've been created, but here I sit in the basement of the Hundserts' home, tapping away at this keyboard, trying to come to grips with fifty-six years of life as a thirteen-year-old android boy.

In my dreams, I clearly remembered my activation and meeting my dad, Derek Taraschke, and his wife, Lokelani, for the first time. While dad and mom watched, the AI engineers put me through a bunch of different physical tests of my motor functions, and then had me take a few written tests. It took the entire day, with only a break for lunch. Then, I went to my new home for the very first time. It was an almost two-hour long drive to a small house, number 596 on Mallard Lake Drive. It was a short walk through trees to the lagoon behind the house. I could follow the inlet directly to the beach about quarter of a mile away. In my dream, I took those same familiar walks, as if I had done it just yesterday.

That first night at home, my dad went to practice playing his drums and I went to watch him. I remember him warming up with various snare drum and tom-tom rolls. While that was somewhat interesting, I started bopping and hopping when he began playing the entire kit. My dad smiled and was soon laughing because I wasn't really dancing, but I was moving in time to his rhythms. After about an hour he was hysterical and took a break to ask if I'd like to learn how to play. Of course, I said yes. Derek started me out with maracas and tambourine and showed me different ways of playing both instruments. The next night he came home with bongos for me and we would practice together every evening after dinner. During the days, I practiced to songs on the radio. One night, he came home with a set of congas for me. The room with dad's drum set soon had filled with all my percussion instruments. Derek taught me everything he knew and we often faced each other while practicing in that room.

During my first days at home, Derek told me, "Though you are different from other children, inasmuch as you don't need to go to school, to us, you are completely human. We want you to have a long, happy life and be social with other boys and girls. If they ask why you don't go to school, tell them you're being educated at home."

Mom said, "Another thing you might be asked about is your skin color. Your skin is dark, like mine, because of our Polynesian ancestry. Tell anyone who might ask that you're Hawaiian-American."

I could understand why school might need to be discussed, but didn't understand why my skin color was an issue. For the rest of the night, I studied the American Civil War and learned about prejudices. During those first days, I witnessed prejudices first-hand, because dad was Caucasian and mom was Polynesian. When we went out together, I noticed some people giving my dad and mom strange looks. I accepted these reactions as any other learned experience. Thinking of it now, while I write this though, it tells me why I was so concerned about telling people I'm an android over the weekend.

When I began meeting other kids in our neighborhood, I told them my heritage exactly as my mom had suggested. I remember the first friend I ever made way back in 1948. His name was Thomas Darr and he was African-American. I met Tom down by the lagoon, while I was searching for crawdads. Another friend made that first summer was Doug Witter. I met Doug through Tom.

In September, when school was about to start, I told Doug and Tom how I was being educated at home. Doug was about to start seventh grade, and Tom was starting eighth grade.

It's funny, I can remember their faces and mannerisms now still, wide awake. What I recall most of all was helping them with their homework during the school year. I also recall how confused they were a year later, because they had both grown and changed, but I had not grown or changed at all. I was five-feet and four inches tall, a hundred-twenty-four pounds in 1948, was still the same height and weight the next year, and I'm still the same height today, only about ten pounds lighter from the meager meals served at the orphanage. I wonder how much I weigh now, after four days of good food. Before anyone else wakes up, let me see if I can find out.

I just called Daileass and learned that there was a scale upstairs, in the first floor bathroom under the sink. While I was up there, Uncle Jim and Aunt Jen came downstairs and started coffee. As of now, I weigh a hundred-thirteen pounds. Eleven more pounds to go to get back to my normal weight. Dewi, Geoff, Richie and Kokaku are awake now. They just went upstairs, needing to go to the bathroom. I'm gonna take a short break and return to the nest, before any of my brothers or my dads wake up and find me writing, which I was specifically told not to do.

* * * * *

Okay, so much for getting right back to writing. It's still Tuesday, just barely. It's been a long, crazy day, so let me try to organize everything that happened.

I actually did fall back to sleep for a little while. Waking to singing, I realized that John and Stephen were floating four feet above the nest. I hadn't even wiped the sleep from my eyes and Clan magic was happening once again. Barely two minutes later, when the singing had finished, everyone still in the basement were also floating several feet off the floor. With his new boyfriend, Stephen, John was powerful enough to levitate everyone down there. Floating there and touching the ceiling, I estimated that John was lifting about a thousand pounds between all of us, and it didn't even faze him in the least; he simply held a kiss with Stephen. I helplessly cracked up laughing at the insanity of it all.

My brothers, dads and I showered at the dorm, then went to the CIC for breakfast. For the first time, we had vitamin-fortified breakfast milkshakes, recommended for all us kids by our new doctor. Dillon got a chocolate shake, Jonah got strawberry and I got an apple pie-flavored shake. In a minute, we were sitting at a table near Prez, Keith and their sons. I started telling my new family about my dreams and first family during breakfast. Derrick and Mike carefully watched me as I spun my tale. I paused when Kaleo and then Prez told us about the ID and credit cards. When that announcement was finished, Derrick asked me, "Are you feeling sad anymore, son?"

Shaking my head, I grinned, "Not so much about my other two families. Like Austin said would happen, a lot was integrated while I slept. Now I'm just a little disgusted about twenty-one years in an orphanage. It's weird, because I can remember some things about those years, but because they kept zapping me, there's no dates or times associated with those memories. It's a jumbled up block of stuff with no meaning or sequence."

Jonah wondered, "Do you remember when they started messing around with us kids?"

"No," I replied. "I only remember stuff since June. Between November 1983 and June 2004, there's a couple of things I vaguely recall, but none of it makes any sense at all; like images of people I don't know now. I can't even tell what they're doing that made me store the memory in the first place."

Mike sighed, "We'll just go with what Kaleo and Tory said." He then glanced at Dillon, who was trying to finish sucking his milk shake through a straw, seemingly oblivious to the conversation.

"The abuses started about five or six years ago," Derrick stated. "Until we learn otherwise somehow, that's all we can know."

Mike smiled, "You're all safe now."

Glancing around the table at Dillon, Jonah and me, Derrick asked, "Are any of you having bad dreams about any of that?"

Shaking my head, I answered, "No. I think the reality was worse than anything I could possibly imagine, so I'm not dreaming about it at all."

"Nope," Jonah softly replied.

Still with a straw in his mouth, Dillon only shook his head in response. Since Dillon obviously had his priorities in order, Mike widely smiled and helplessly chuckled.

Derrick grinned, "If you ever do, make sure to let us know about it, okay? Especially if it becomes repetitive, let us know, and we'll talk it out or have a chat with Doc Wiener." Jonah and I vocally assured our dad and pop we would say something, but again, Dillon only nodded slightly. Mike cracked up. Derrick sniggered, "Are you drowning in chocolate milkshake, Dillon? Please say something."

At last, Dillon released his straw, giggling, "It's so good, but I'm gettin' so full." Mike, Jonah and I roared laughing.

On his way to the dishwasher with his empty shake glass, and with Stephen trailing along, John stopped by our table and said, "Intel reports say ninety-two perverted adults, that either actively participated in the scandal, or coordinated the child sex trade within CPS and our government, were arrested or executed last Friday. You dudes really don't need to worry about that stuff any more."

At twenty-of-ten my dads went into the Command Center, with the other Core Rimmers, for their morning status report. I continued sharing my tales of days long ago in Myrtle Beach, South Carolina with my brothers for about fifteen minutes, until my dad and pop came back out of the Command Center. Getting good luck wishes from a lot of kids, Derrick, Mike, Keith and Prez walked through the dining room and around the tables where all their sons were finishing breakfast. Each of us got a kiss on the head by all four of them.

Dad introduced me to the three boys with him; "Reyes, this is Caleb, Noah and Hunter." Derrick smiled, "They work at the Charleston AI Division. I'd like for you to go there with them, for a check-up."

I nodded, "Okay, I guess it's a good idea."

Caleb grinned, "It'll be more than a check-up, Reyes. You'll get to meet some more of your android brothers while we're there."

Noah said, "We've got a few things to take care of here with the new system before we leave. When we're ready to go, where do you think you'll be?"

"Probably over by the pool or diving well," I answered.

Jonah said, "I'll go with Reyes too, dad."

Derrick explained to Caleb and Noah, "Last night, Austin said that Reyes shouldn't be alone for two days. Jonah and Reyes have been together since the orphanage. If anyone would know when Reyes isn't acting right, Jonah would."

"Kewl," Caleb and Noah chorused.

"Have a good time and I'll see you later," Derrick smiled, and then left us. He went outside with the other Core Rimmers to transport to school for their first jazz band concert of the week.

Caleb said, "Give us about an hour or so, Reyes. We'll catch up with you over at the pools."

I nodded, "Kewl, I'll see you in a little while." Caleb, Noah and Hunter returned to the Command Center.

I had managed to finish my shake. Jonah gave up on his, with only a little left in the bottom of the glass. Dillon still had his straw in his mouth though and refused to give up until he had finished it all. Ben came over and asked if Jonah was ready to get in some guitar practice. Jonah was ready, but didn't want to leave me. I assured my little brother that I was fine and would stay with Dillon until he finished his shake. Then Dillon and I would catch up with them and I could get some conga practice accomplished. Taking their shake glasses to the dishwasher, Jonah and Ben left us to get their ID and credit cards, then head over to the Gibbons' home.

Thinking about all the music I used to play and what Platinum Habits had played for us the last few days, I waited for Dillon. It was amazing how many songs I didn't know yesterday that I now remembered. There were more than a few tunes Platinum Habits had played that I had never heard before, but there were many that I recalled from before November 1983. I noticed that most of our Clan had gotten their ID and credit cards. I went to get mine and Dillon's ID and credit cards from Kaleo. By the time that was done and I returned to Dillon, housekeepers were beginning to clean up the dining room. There was very little liquid left in Dillon's glass, so I giggled, "Give it up, bro, or we'll still be sitting here when everybody comes back for lunch."

Releasing the straw from his mouth, Dillon sat back, smiling and groaned, "My belly's gonna go boom!"

Handing Dillon his ID and credit card, I grinned, "Can you walk?" and picked up our two glasses.

"Dunno," Dillon giggled, and slid off his chair onto his feet. He stuffed his cards into his shorts pocket. Dragging his feet and waddling, Dillon followed me to the dishwasher, where I left our shake glasses. We started for home. Soon after we walked out of the CIC, Dillon giggled, "We'd better hurry."

The little guy jogged past me. Going after him, I grinned, "What's the rush, bro."

"Bathroom," Dillon laughed. Sniggering insanely, I picked up my youngest brother and raced to the Gibbons'. Once there and inside, I put Dillon down and he hurried to the first floor bathroom. Heading down to the basement, I found Bruce, Dee, Randy and Thanh with Ben and Jonah. The six younger guys were playing CD's loudly through the basement stereo and having a small party, with sodas and snacks spread out on the coffee table.

Facing Jonah, I wondered, "Where'd you get the CD's?"

Jonah grinned, "Some are dad's and some are pop's." With his index finger, Jonah gestured for me to lean down. I did and he whispered, "We're keeping Bruce busy, since John is workin' in the Command Center." I nodded my approval, then went to the stack of CD's. Led Zeppelin II was currently playing. Jonah said, "The drum solo dad played yesterday is on this disk. Dad played it way better and much longer though."

Finding the Santana Moonflower CD set, I grinned, "Do you guys wanna hear another awesome drum solo?" and waved the jewel case.

Almost at once, all six hollered, "Yeah!"

Jonah hurried to the player and pressed stop. He pulled out the Zeppelin disk and I handed him the second disk of Moonflower, telling Jonah to "play track three, bro."

While Jonah took care of loading the disk, Bruce put the Zeppelin CD back in its case and I went to the other side of the basement, where the drums and congas were set up. Soon, 'Soul Sacrifice/ Head, Hands and Feet' was blasting through the stereo and I was playing along on the bongos and congas. Dillon came down to the basement. Just like old times, I played the entire congas part for my brothers, uncle and friends. I distinctly remembered playing the song for Derek Taraschke and my cousin, Akamu. Honestly, I was playing for them as well as all the kids hooting and hollering before me. My first dad encouraged me to learn; my second father figure enthusiastically watched me play, and now I was playing for my brothers. I couldn't wait for the chance to play this song with my current dad. Judging by what I had watched him play the previous afternoon, Derrick could easily play this tune. I hoped that Platinum Habits could play it, and I could sit in with them someday soon. When the song ended, I was sweating profusely, but still surrounded by all seven of them, cheering and shouting.

Since my blistered hands were hurting, I suggested we all go outside for a little while, to work off our breakfast milkshakes at the pools before lunch. On our way upstairs, Ben and Jonah were giggling through their complaints about how I was improving on the drum kit and now had many years of experience playing congas recovered. I told them; "You guys have way more notes to deal with than I do. Two congas can make about ten tones. A full drum kit like dad's can make maybe thirty tones. I'll guess that a guitar can make at least forty different tones. In the hands of someone like Mike, a guitar could make even more tones than those forty. Please don't give up trying because of me."

Jonah looked up and smiled, "I ain't giving up, bro."

"We just wish that we could play better, faster," Ben added.

Jonah nodded, "What we've got is you, dad, pop, Prez and Keith showing us what we could someday be able to do."

"Like inspiration?" I offered.

"Yeah," Ben giggled. "That's the word I was lookin' for and not finding."

"Very kewl," I nodded.

Arriving at the main pool, we noticed quite a bit of commotion, because Joel had returned for a visit. John, Stephen and Nathan, as well as a human woman and Vulcan man, were there with Joel. Surrounded by most of the younger kids rescued on Friday, John seemed to be organizing the kids so they would each get a turn to talk to Joel and give him a hug. Ben, Bruce, Dee, Dillon, Jonah and Thanh hurried over there. Randy wasn't one of the original eighty-seven, but he followed his friends to meet the person many of us had been talking about.

Approaching, I heard John's voice in my mind, telling me what had happened to Joel soon after he left us Saturday morning. How something so horrible could happen to someone so nice made me sad. Rather than face Joel feeling bad, I considered going over to the diving well. John sent, 'Reyes, you don't have to hide. In your case, specifically, he'd love to know all that's happened to you, thanks to him. Come on over, and let him know.'

I did go over and wait for my chance to say thank you and tell Joel that, thanks to the Clan, I was again a fully functional android with memories going back fifty-six years. Surprisingly, Joel hugged me. How he remembered me when he had rescued so many, I don't know, but it felt nice and made me feel better. After our brief moments together, I went over to the diving well, where the other teenagers usually hung out.

I waved at Kaleo, up on the three-meter board, and at Tory, sitting naked on the edge of the diving well. Beginning to untie my board shorts and join the fun, I was stopped by Caleb, loudly laughing, "Don't get naked yet, Reyes. Let's go to AI Division for a few hours. You can get naked there."

Retying my shorts, I grinned, "Let me get Jonah," and went over to the other pool. I hollered for Jonah and waited for him to get dressed. In a few minutes, we were gathered with Caleb, Noah and Hunter and transported seven thousand miles to Sullivan's Island, South Carolina.

Immediately upon arrival, I recognized the salty smell of the Atlantic ocean. In mid-autumn, some of the tree leaves were changing color, which was another sight I hadn't seen in over forty years. Looking down at Jonah, I smiled, "It feels so familiar, like home."

"Are you okay, bro?" Jonah worried.

I nodded, "Perfectly fine. It's been a very long time, that's all."

Leading the way with Caleb and Hunter, towards what appeared to be a house, Noah asked, "Where are you from, Reyes?"

"I lived in Myrtle Beach my first ten years," I replied. "My mom was Hawaiian and she wanted to be near family, so we moved to Honolulu in 1958."

Caleb said, "We'll try to take a short trip to Myrtle Beach too," and opened the door of the house.

My jaw hit my chest as soon as I walked through the door with my brothers. In front of me, mid-pillow-fight, was a face no android ever expected to see, accompanied by an eight-year-old boy. The two were laughing as they ganged up on a platinum blond android boy who was barely holding his own. "He's THE Danny?" I asked in awe.

Noah giggled. "Yeah, that's the old man himself. He's pretty agile for a rustbucket!" Caleb and Hunter ran for cover, leaving Noah exposed to the inevitable attack.

"I heard that, shrimp!" Danny announced. "Minion, you attack low, I'll take that balloon he calls a head!"

"Oday Masdew Uncah Dahny!" the eight-year-old replied, giggling wildly as he launched himself at Noah's legs. Wide-eyed and giggling, Jonah dashed away from my side just in time.

I became an unwilling victim as the two boys found their target and began tickling any ribs they could find... including mine. Off to the side, Caleb and Hunter were joined by the blond.

"Uncle Marc, when are you gonna teach Uncle Danny that you don't pounce guests until after they've been introduced?" Hunter commented, trying to hide his grin.

"You're just mad that you didn't get him first," Marc replied, not bothering to hide his grin. "C'mon Hunter, lets go find a med-kit for when the animals get tired."

"I'll get some drinks," Caleb offered.

Following Caleb, Jonah wondered, "So this is testing Reyes' reflexes, I guess?"

Hunter giggled, "He's still standing."

Glancing at the pile up around me, Jonah smiled, "Prob'ly 'cos Noah's curled up at Reyes' legs and he can't fall down." Pointing out a pair of purple briefs hanging from a dining room chair, Jonah loudly laughed, "I expected doctors and smart computer people, not pillow fights."

Tickling my ribs and holding Noah down, Danny chuckled, "Hi Reyes. The little fireball on Noah at your feet is Joey."

Trying to block Danny's tickling, I cackled, "Nice to meet ya."

"Just be glad you missed the drum wars; that's what led to the pillow fight," an older lady said. She opened the oven to check on the contents.

"Again?" Caleb asked, rolling his eyes. "Mary, this is Jonah, he's Reyes' brother. Reyes is the one that Noah's tryin' to use as a shield."

Mary came around the counter, and once proper introductions were done, she smiled, "Let me guess... sweet tea for everyone as usual when this happens?"

Jonah uncertainly asked, "Aunt Mary, is sweet tea like iced tea?"

Mary smiled. "Yes, it's iced tea, but made sweet. It refreshes you better in the Southern heat."

"Did I hear someone asking for a computer geek?" An almost-twelve boy with dirty blond hair to his shoulders asked as he waltzed into the kitchen. "Hi Mom!"

"You done waxing the Mustang already, Jerry? You've only spent the last four hours out there," Mary said with a smile.

"I smelled sweet tea," Jerry stated matter-of-factly. He looked towards the entry and giggled. "I see that Danny is welcoming family home with his usual shyness." Jerry introduced himself to Jonah.

"Dahdy!" Joey exclaimed as he broke free of the pile and rushed Jerry.

"Hey squirt!" Jerry replied as he caught Joey. "I thought you and Uncle Danny were practicing?"

"We was bud Uncah Mawc said we was shakin' dhe windows bud we wasn'd bud he said we was so we sdawded a piwwow fighd dhen Uncah Noah cawwed Uncah Dahny owd so we addacked Uncah Noah an' weez been dickwing him since dhen bud weez dickwin' Weyes doo since he was dhewe." Joey explained, seemingly not pausing to breathe. Jonah went into a giggling fit.

"Yeah, I can see we need to tweak those breathing routines of yours later," Jerry grinned as he cuddled his son in his arms.

"DAHDIY! You'we siwwy! I'm bweadhin' oday!" Joey giggled. He then turned to Jonah, "Dahdy buiwd me and wode my bwain aww by himself!" he announced proudly.

Suddenly, just as Aunt Mary was about to pass a glass of tea, Jonah fell on his butt, laughing hysterically. Aunt Mary then looked down, smirking, "What's so funny?"

Heaving and holding his belly, Jonah rolled and gasped, "Dickwin' Noah and dickwin' Reyes. It's dickwin my dickie!"

"I didn'd say 'dickwin', I said 'dickwin'," Joey said seriously. After a fraction of a second, he turned to Jerry. "Dahdy, does id sound wike 'dickwin' when I say 'dickwin'?"

Jerry nodded his head, "Yes it does, kiddo."

Joey tilted his head and then grinned. "Dhad's funny!"

Jonah howled, and looked into the room where I was still standing, but fiercely blushing since my board shorts were pulled down around my ankles. Danny concentrated on tickling Noah, who wouldn't let go of my legs.

Another boy came running down the stairs just then. "Hey Twerp, why'd you stop playin? I was tryin' to sleep. All this silence woke me up!" he sleepily blubbered as he landed in a chair, sliding it to the side about six inches. Sitting there, the boy waved at me and yawned, "I'm KC."

"Uncah Mawc made us do id," Joey accused.

I waved back at KC and introduced myself. Thankfully, this place seemed to be just as out of control as Ewa Beach and no one seemed to care that I was half-nude.

"I thought you were going to fix that defect in Marc's program, Dad?" KC stated with a grin.

Jerry paused for a second. "I tried, but you know how unstable those old positronic matrices are," Jerry smiled.

"Almost as unstable as eleven-year-old geniuses' brains," Marc quipped as he came back up the stairs with Hunter. "I see you're awake, KC. I'm ready for you, I've got the first aid kits all upstairs now."

"Bite me, Dad," KC grinned.

Marc grinned, but soon the grin began to look a bit wicked.

"Mmmmm, KC Barbecue. I am a bit hungry."

"I told Danny to keep you away from Logan; his addictions are contagious," KC half-muttered.

At last, Noah released my legs, allowing me to pull my boardies up and make a quick escape. I went into the kitchen with my brother, then greeted Jerry, Joey and Aunt Mary.

Laughing out loud, Marc tried to get everyone under a semblance of control. He must've known that it was something akin to herding cats, but he tried anyway. "Okay. Okay. I need to ask Jerry about his new brothers."

"What about them?" Jerry exclaimed. "Is something wrong with Paul or Ryan? I gotta call home..."

"Jerry. Calm down," Marc instructed. "I said I needed to ask you something."

Jerry sighed, "Sorry, bro. I feel really protective of them. I mean, who could have imagined an android forgetting that he was an android, and living on the streets for that many years. I worry about him, but his brother knew and took care of him for all that time. I just can't imagine what it must have been like."

"I know, bro. That's what I wanted to ask you. Is Paul still insisting that his older brother is human?"

"Yeah. Why?" Jerry suspiciously answered.

"Whoa, bro. I am just asking because I think we need to do something and I don't want to hurt either of them, but you know that Ryan's delusion that he is human may become dangerous at some point. Remember what happened in the hospital. They were lucky that the duty nurse knew who we were and called us in. If things had gone on the way they were, someone could have been hurt."

"I know but..."

"No buts, bro. I want them to have a good life. They deserve that."

Just then Noah came barreling past with Danny in close pursuit.

I went to Caleb and whispered, "You dudes know about me, don't you?"

Nodding, Caleb softly replied, "Your dad said you were in an orphanage twenty-one years."

"They were periodically zapping my memory with some little Cynthetilife unit," I revealed. "To me, those twenty-one years are mostly blank, just a bunch of uncatalogued memories without names, places or times. Austin was able to fix me last night in about twenty minutes."

Danny hurried into the room again. Noah quickly followed, as quickly as he could with one hand stuck down the back of his shorts trying to de-wedgie himself. Not the least bit disturbed by the madness around us, Caleb asked me, "What did Austin do?"

I giggled at Danny hiding behind Caleb and then me, so Noah couldn't get at him. "He had a few chips that he attached to my uplink port. The first, I think, was basically to reset my diagnostics. Then there were several programming updates. Lastly, he updated a bunch of databases, but warned me to not access them for two days, so I've locked them down until tomorrow night. Then I reinitialized. Immediately, I remembered a bunch of stuff from my first two families."

Joining us, Jonah laughed, "And a whole bunch of bathroom jokes."

I grinned, "I did that to refocus my recollections so I wouldn't stay sad." I told Caleb, "I've got two awesome dads and two great little brothers now."

"Don't forget the partridge in the pear tree!" Noah added with a smirk.

Shaking my head, I grinned, "Never; can't forget Shirley, she'd never forgive me."

Scowling and shaking his head, Danny wondered, "Okay; who hit you over the head with a coconut, Noah?"

"Nobody," Noah replied, "they really do have a partridge named Shirley in a pear tree."

"Yeah, sure," Danny smirked, "you know I wasn't born yesterday."

Noah threw in, "Not by one-hundred-twenty-eight years, three months, and..."

"No, but you're close!" Marc said as he joined them, the comments about me having got both his and Jerry's interest.

"So you let the only AI on the planet who passes out at the sight of a scalpel perform brain surgery?" Jerry asked with a grin.

"Well, since Austin is Marc's son, I probably better make sure the kid paid attention," Danny giggled. "C'mon, Jer, let's catch a cat so we can scan Reyes."

"You'll pay for that later, Danny!" Marc replied with a grin.

"Hey you two, there are kids present!" Noah chimed in, before sprinting towards the door, this time with Marc in hot pursuit.

Totally confused, Jonah looked up at me. I grinned, "C'mon, there aren't any cats. They want to do a CAT scan on me." I locked eyes with Danny and prompted, "Lead the way."

"Yes, you've definitely got Austin's programming." Danny snickered. "Follow me."

Jonah and I followed Danny through a door and downstairs into a basement. Danny said, "Lights on," and a bunch of ceiling lights turned on. My brother and I had barely crossed the threshold when we heard the first tiny meow, followed by a chorus of meows. From almost every corner of the basement, kittens and cats emerged.

"Okay," I giggled at Jonah, "maybe I am getting a real cat scan."

Joey had followed the group down the stairs, and immediately started introducing each kitten to Jonah as they came over to investigate their visitors. Danny just shook his head with a grin. "I told you this would become a pet hotel if you let Joey install that pet door, Jerry."

"Hey, I could have installed it in your bedroom instead, like Noah suggested!" Jerry shot back. "At least Joey kept his promise; there are no sanitation issues down here."

Jonah sat down on the floor with Joey and got familiar with the kittens. Danny patted a table and instructed, "Lay here and relax, Reyes."

Hopping up on the table, I made myself comfy and watched Danny attach a cable to a computer. Jerry came over and put a calico kitten on my belly. The tiny feline immediately purred, "Warm and cozy," then curled up to take a nap.

Jerry giggled, "Gives a whole new meaning to cat-scan, huh?"

Nodding and petting the kitten on my belly, I giggled, "I guess the fine line between genius and insanity was crossed right here."

Joey looked up from introducing kittens. "Dhewe's no wines hewe. Unca Mawc don'd awwow wines!"

Oddly, I understood Joey perfectly and told Danny, "Hurry and hook that thing up to me. I understood every word Joey said."

"Silly human!" the kitten on my chest purred.

"Malfunction!" I loudly laughed, and took the cable from Danny's hand, then attached it to my uplink port. Jonah, Joey, Jerry and Danny cracked up.

The kitten wiggled its way up to my chin and gave it a few licks. "You're a funny human, I like that. I think I'll keep you," it purred as it began washing my face.

While the kitten continued licking my jaw with its sandpaper tongue, I giggled, "Joey, this one says it wants to come to Ewa Beach with me."

"Keww! He's gonna be a Hawaiian Kiddy!" Joey responded with a smile. "Jonah gods his sisdeus."

Jerry giggled, "Three down and twenty to go."

Looking back at Danny, I wondered, "How's it goin', Doc?"

Danny sniggered, "Huh? How's what goin'?"

"The check up!" Jonah laughed.

Jerry giggled, "You're supposed to be doing diagnostics, old man."

"Actually I'm trying to figure out how to install a dataport on you to help fix your memory. The computer runs the diagnostics, I just review the results," Danny giggled.

"And just exactly what is inside your head?" Jerry teased.

"Unlike your stale air, my head contains a masterpiece of human engineering," Danny shot back.

"There's not much there from the orphanage," I grinned. "So far, I've found only fifty-three uncatalogued short memories with no time, date, names or place from those twenty-one years. It's not worth a lot of effort, as far as I'm concerned."

"Charles, control your human," Danny instructed as he scratched the kitten's ears. "There are a few things that we can do here that are not part of the normal diagnostics, Reyes. That's why Austin told you to check in with us."

My new kitten loudly purred, "You're feeling sleepy, very sleepy."

"As long as it's not a big deal," I yawned, then told my kitten, "You're not hypnotizing me."

The kitten seemed to chuckle as it continued to purr "Sleeeeepppppppyyyyyy..."

"I just woke up a few hours ago," I giggled, and yawned again. "It's dinner time here, but I just had breakfast." Complaints got me nowhere. I fell asleep anyway.

"Reyes?" a chorus of voices called.

Waking and looking around the table I had passed out on, I saw Jonah, Jerry and Danny smiling at me. "Please don't tell me that Charles put me to sleep," I muttered.

Jonah and Jerry cracked up. Danny sniggered, "No, I had the computer you were attached to put you to sleep."

I grinned, "Why?"

Danny smiled, "To try and help you get your twenty-one missing years of memories categorized. Maybe you can answer when the abuses started."

"Danny thinks he put you to sleep!" Charles purred from his perch on my chest.

"Silly androids, so self-assured," the kitten in Joey's arms smugly added.

"One of these days they'll learn. It takes a while to train pets," the calico in Jonah's arms purred. "Scratch my ears please, Jonah."

Holding onto Charles and sitting up, I asked, "How long was I asleep?"

"Long enough for us to adopt more kittens, for a total of four, so far," Jonah giggled, and scratched his kitten's ears.

"Nice, I am glad I picked you," the kitten purred.

Danny shook his head. "Now you see what we gotta live with?" he giggled as a solid white tomcat began rubbing his head on Danny's leg. "Yes Bruce, I'll cuddle you while I answer Reyes' questions." Danny said as he picked up the cat.

"You're learning!" Bruce purred as he allowed Danny to pick him up.

The kitten in Jonah's arms leaped to the floor, explaining, "Sandbox time." Charles decided that was a good idea and leaped from my arms.

I wondered, "What's your kitten's name, bro."

"Patch," Jonah smiled.

Glancing at Danny and Jerry, I asked, "Do all my systems check out okay?"

Jerry nodded, "You're good, Reyes. We did some additional programming updates that Austin wasn't aware of. We replaced the access panel to your uplink port also. Your serial number is the same, just with the suffix 'X2'."

Danny instructed, "Take your clothes off, Reyes." I obediently nodded and started to undress. Once I was naked, Danny roamed around me, then leered and sighed, "All your systems are awesome."

I smirked and blushed. Jerry giggled, "You're a perv, Danny." Then Jerry told me, "Expect those bruises and welts to be gone by tomorrow."

"Uncah Dahny, I'm dewwin' Uncah Mawc on you!" Joey giggled.

"How many cookies will you take as a bribe, Joey?" Danny asked hesitantly.

"I'm nahd Dimmy!" Joey laughed.

"Cuddles?" Danny offered.

Joey giggled, "Good cuddwes ow showd ones?"

"Mega good cuddles," Danny offered hopefully.

Joey's eyes widened. "I know whad good cuddews awe. Whad awe mega good cuddews?"

Jonah cracked up.

Danny grinned, "Well, only old people, over a hundred years old, know how to give mega good cuddles. Come here, munchkin!" Danny opened his arms and waited for the boy to accept the 'bribe'.

Joey balked, "I bed Uncah Mawc give me cookies and cuddews."

"But he's not over a hundred years old, though," Danny giggled. "He don't know mega good cuddles."

"Maybe nod, bud I'ww seddwe for cookies, wegguwah cuddews and wadching you skwuhm for Uncah Mawc!" Joey cried with a giggle as he darted out of the room and upstairs calling his uncle's name.

"Aw, crap," Danny grouched.

"You want me to get the blankets set out on the couch for you, Danny?" Noah giggled.

"I wonder if the elf has any of his dinner-plate-sized cookies left?" Danny asked idly, wondering if it would help his situation at all.

"Yeah, you're sleeping on the couch all right," Caleb giggled.

Danny rolled his eyes. "You act like we're married or something!"

"You mean you're not boyfriends?" Jonah asked innocently.

Noah and Caleb fell to the floor in laughter, both clutching their sides.

"And I thought the Rimmers were crazy," I softly chuckled.

Marc came down the stairs, Joey riding on his back, munching on a large cookie. "A little birdie said there is something unusual happening down here." Marc stated, barely hiding his grin. "Nice butt, Reyes!"

Sadly shaking my head, I started to put my clothes on again.

"Whad's wong, Uncah Weyes? We doo bonkews fow you?" Joey chortled from his perch.

Marc came over and stood next to me. "Don't worry about it, Reyes. I know it seems crazy here, but that is how we deal with all of the crap that has happened recently. Believe it or not, even when we're joking around, we've been watching you and looking for signs of problems. You'd be surprised at how much a simple blush tells me."

Jerry looked up from where he was reviewing the data from Danny's scan. "He's right, Reyes. Most problems with an AI show themselves in the responses before they are caught by the error handlers. Your base programming checks out pretty much, with a couple of small exceptions that Danny caught and fixed. There is one area I'm checking right now; it's not an error, but more of something that your brain tried to do to prevent damage. You were not programmed with the adaptive routines of the Austin series when you were at the orphanage, but your brain tried to do something anyway. If it passes the tests I'm running right now, I'll activate it permanently for you."

Pulling my T-shirt over my head, I queried, "My brain tried to prevent damage? From the orphanage, or from para-surfing security gorillas, or from speaking shiny-loving ferrets, or from hypnotist kittens, or from hundred-year-old perv androids? I can't understand how my programming might be concerned about damage."

Dillon appeared in the basement beside Jonah. I guess he got bored and dad or pop had him transported. Several kittens scampered over to Dillon. Jonah began introducing Dillon to everyone and all the kittens.

"You've managed to avoid Timmy's bedroom, so you're doing pretty good so far," Marc replied as he went over and looked over Jerry's shoulder. "Jerry, please tell me that I'm not seeing what I think I see?"

"You're seeing it. I just checked with 'Tonio; he's verified it. Reyes' is genetically Tyler's cousin, and his brain started using that gene to maintain emotional connections. Reyes, that is why each time you recovered, you made friends with the same people. You have empath genes from your father's side of the gene pool; it didn't totally take with your original program, but now that you have Austin-series code, you are halfway to becoming a full empath. You have a choice, I can turn it off, or you can leave it run, and have Ty or the double-J's give you some training to use what was given to you." Jerry said seriously.

Dillon tapped Jonah and wondered, "What's that mean?"

Jonah smiled, "It means Reyes is like John was before he became N-Gen yesterday; he feels stuff from other people."

"Oh, kewl!" Dillon cheered.

I told Jerry, "Leave it run. Even if I don't make full use of it, it's answered a big question for me."

Jonah wondered, "Why wouldn't you want to use it fully, bro?"

I shrugged, "It's not that I wouldn't; I simply don't know right now. I would have to check with dad and pop, and then talk with John too. It opens up some doors though, so lets leave it as is."

"I think you've made the right choice, Reyes. Congratulations on becoming the first AI empath," Marc commented seriously. "Jerry, you might want to tie in routine cz-46T34N910257 to the init routine; that is how Austin managed to trigger control when he programmed himself for telepathy. I still don't know what in the hell that routine does, but it seems to work."

"Got it, boss!" Jerry giggled. "Reyes, I need you to plug back in for a minute, I'm going to drop in the control protocols that Austin developed, so that you can manage when and how you use it."

I picked up the cable, but before reattaching it, wondered, "You guys aren't sure what the routine does? Is it safe to include?"

"The only issue Austin has is an aversion to blood and scalpels, other than that he's as normal as any Clan member." Jerry replied.

"Wait, I take that back; he's a lot more normal than most Clan members!"

Recalling my visions alone with Austin, I muttered, "Austin's kewl," and attached the cable to my uplink port.

As soon as the security routines established a connection, Jerry entered a command into the console and the upload began. A few seconds later, he announced "Okay, Reyes, it's done. I gave you the instruction manual that Austin came up with for any AI that developed special skills; if you have any other questions just call him. You're now one-of-a-kind, and he's the expert on unique positronics." I removed the cable from my uplink port.

Still perched on Marc, Joey giggled, "I jusr dold Ausdin, he says awesome, and he's gonna have Uncah Kywe hewp him visid you do hewp widh youw new sduff!"

"Very kewl, Joey," I smiled, and then scowled, "How'd you tell Austin, Joey?"

Joey grinned. "Ausdin and Dimmy and Casey and me are bwodhews and we can dalk do each odhew's heads, because we awe speciaw bwodhews."

KC came sliding down the stair rails. "Hey Reyes, the twerp says you've taken after Uncle Ty! Awesome, dude!"

Joey giggled, "I ain'd a twewp, Cwash!"

"Yes you are, that's why I love you!" KC shot back with a smile, making it obvious that this was just friendly banter between the two of them.

I smiled, "That makes you and me brothers too, Joey, cos Austin and KC are my younger brothers. Maybe once this new routine is enabled and I'm trained, I'll be able to talk with you in my head too."

"Awesome!" Joey exclaimed. "Casey! We've gonna be abwe da dawk do Weyes doo and have aww kinda fun an' pway games in ouw heads and do sduff aww dogedhew and have aww kindsafun!"

KC giggled, "Dad, have you been neglecting Joey's sugar intake? I understood every word he said!"

"Bide me, Casey!" Joey giggled, and then he stuck his tongue out at his brother.

Jerry smiled at the interaction between KC and Joey. I asked Jerry what he was smiling at. He softly replied, "They remind me of the sparring matches that I used to enjoy with Davie."

Surprisingly, an angel appeared next to Jerry, placing an arm over Jerry's shoulder. "See, you followed your heart and it's working out," the angel commented as he gave Jerry a hug.

"Yeah, but I'm still trying to figure out how you got wings," Jerry replied with a grin. "Reyes, this is Davie."

Davie smiled. "Just wait until you see yours... sometime way in the future!" He then turned to me, asking, "How you feeling, nephew?"

Wide-eyed, I stammered, "Uhh... good... thanks... uhh..."

"You've got wings!" Dillon excitedly screamed.

Rubbing his eyes and then staring in complete awe, Jonah hollered, "He's an angel!"

"Only physically," Danny giggled. "Jerry's told me some stories about him."

Davie giggled, "You're not much better, Danny." He then turned his attention back to my brothers. "Hi, I'm Davie, Jerry's big brother and the Guardian Angel of the AI Division, when I'm not filling in for Saint Mikey. I couldn't pass up a chance to meet my new family while you're here."

Spinning around in circles like he had just met Santa, Dillon rambled, "Omigod! Jerry's brother is an angel? I can't wait to get home! I gotta tell everyone we've got angels in the family!"

"Who's gonna believe it?" Jonah wondered.

Only momentarily quieted, Dillon hurried to Davie and pleaded, "You gotta come to Ewa Beach, Davie!"

"Sure, you want me to bring Kyle and Tyler to help make waves?" Davie giggled. "That was funny to watch, by the way!"

"Bring anybody ya want!" Dillon cheered.

Giggling, I covered my eyes, knowing that Prez would definitely freak over an angel, two Mikyvis and more twenty-foot waves.

Davie placed his hand on my head. "Welcome to the family, bro. Consider this my present to you." A golden glow surrounded me for a second, then Davie lifted his hand. "No pain for my nephew, and no suffering for those who would be abused due to lack of information," he stated cryptically.

Without a second's thought, I rattled off, "September eighteenth, 1998, a man named Kanunu Kahoalani, the R.O.H. Prime Minister at the time, was at the orphanage talking to Mister Kanes about child prostitution. That's when everything started. They could set it up so that new orphans would replace those that either committed suicide or left orphanage care at their eighteenth birthday. Kids that would not participate simply vanished. There would always be fresh kids and they would share the income."

Danny's eyebrows shot up and KC's normal smile vanished. Danny slapped his comm-badge. "Security, set local condition yellow. I repeat, set local condition yellow. Away team to HQ basement for extraction immediately."

KC looked Joey in the eyes. "Any more info, pass it to me over our mind-link, bro. It's time for me to pay Uncle Cory back for giving Uncle Marc the resources to save me."

A middle aged man came running down the stairs, followed by another android who could pass for Marc's twin. Danny gave orders to the man. Jerry softly explained, "You just blew the doors wide open to the Hawaiian Child Prostitution case, Reyes. That man is Lieutenant Rich Murphy. The guy that looks like Marc is John, his older brother."

Before I could respond, five heavily armed teenaged security personnel appeared behind Rich, and a Carolina Panther padded it's way down the stairs, its ears laid back against its head.

"Wiwwy says he's going doo," Joey stated firmly.

"I don't know how I recalled that so clearly," I muttered to Jerry, Jonah and Dillon. Davie innocently turned away and whistled the melody to 'Let It Be'.

Jerry smiled, "Welcome to 'Life with an active Guardian Angel'; you get used to it after the first hundred times or so."

I nodded my head, still not totally believing what was happening, when the last member of the group appeared; a seven-foot tall Bengal tiger-human hybrid with blood-red wings, flaming eyes and sword.

"Hewwo, Kuan Di!" Joey called out.

"Hey, Joey." Kuan Ti responded before turning to the assembled group. "Are y'all ready to go? I hear that some people have volunteered to meet their maker, and I'm going to help you expedite the process," he added as his sword's flames flared up.

I am so glad I have access to my archive storage again. Lesson one; do not interfere with large cats wielding flaming swords. Lesson two; do not allow yourself to be touched by angels related to any member of Clan Short. Lesson three; the next time dad tells me to go to the AI Division for a check up, fake the flu, a belly ache, a nervous breakdown or any fitting ailment until he forgets.

Marc grinned at me, offering, "I can tell by the look in your eyes; forget points two and three, I already tried it and it don't work. It works better to just roll with the flow; you keep your sanity that way."

"Oh, so you're saying I am sane," I giggled. "This is good news."

"You're very sane." Marc replied. "The rest of these nuts I'm not quite sure about though."

Danny shook his head. "Okay, how are we getting there? I don't think transporters work with angels."

Kuan Ti shrugged. "Like this," he stated, as the team was surrounded by a red glow before vanishing.

Davie snapped his fingers, and all of us remaining suddenly found ourselves in the living room, with the screen on the wall showing a man sitting in a chair in an elaborately furnished study. Closely looking at the man, I recognized him, even though he was older than I remembered. "I'm time-delaying this so you can see for yourself that it's taken care of," Davie stated. Still watching Davie, I never saw his lips move, but I heard his voice in my head, 'Only you're seeing the real events, Reyes. Your brothers, Joey and Jerry will be experiencing the PG rated version.'

Dillon looked around and wondered, "So, umm... there's another bad guy that hurt us kids?"

I nodded, "The one guy that started it all at our orphanage, bro."

Jonah nodded, "And the three of us can tell everybody back home that even this guy was taken care of."

As we watched, the group appeared in front of the guy on the screen, with the angel now standing with flaming wings spread wide and his flaming sword pointed at the occupant of the chair. "I came for YOU!" he growled at the man in a booming voice that sent chills down my spine.

Obviously frightened, Dillon cuddled up to my side. Even Jonah shifted closer to me. I was holding them close, but storing the proceedings I was witnessing. There was no doubt that the Core Rimmers would be asking me about this later.

Back on the screen, security personnel for the ex-Prime Minister started pouring through the doorway into the room. KC, who had obviously been given a chance to outfit himself before they reached their destination, aimed the AK-47 he was holding. "Don't move, Dirtbags!" he exclaimed in a loud voice as the rest of the team took aim with their MP5-A's as well.

Danny looked over the shocked house security team, who were staring at the angel. "We're organizing a one-way trip to Hell; anyone want a ticket?" he asked sarcastically. One of the guards didn't take them seriously, and as I watched he suddenly found himself the target of an extremely pissed-off panther. With one swipe of the panther's huge paw, the man's head suddenly relocated so that it was flopping loosely by his left shoulder. The man teetered a few moments, then fell to the floor.

Jonah muttered, "Ouch! That's gonna leave a mark." I could only wonder what my brother saw; it definitely was not what I saw really happening.

Scott tapped his comm-badge. "Daileass, could you please escort these armed gentlemen to the holding cells at the hospital? I think they need to have their exit interviews."

"You're too nice, Scott; you're spoiling me!" Daileass giggled. "You want me to grab a qualified interviewer too?"

"If you would, please. Thanks, kiddo," Scott replied. Once the house security was gone, he turned to the man in the chair. "DUUUUDE! What the hell? Something little like an avenging angel appearing in front of you, and you shit yourself? What a pansy!"

Kuan Ti looked at the strike team members in the room, then back towards the guy that was cowering in his chair, pleading for mercy. "Oh shut up!" Kuan Ti growled low, and thankfully the man did shut up.

The huge cat turned towards the strike team and smiled wickedly. "Sometimes it's nice having a few of these abilities. Now, I will advise anyone with a weak stomach to leave. And yes, I know what you guys have seen before. This will be worse."

"Oh hell!" Someone said, and several of the strike team members filed out of the room, almost running. Then Kuan Ti spoke towards the remote camera that was hovering in one of the corners of the room. "Daileass, there are some that need to see this. They may. Other than that, this is classified material."

From all of the comm-badges the strike team members were wearing, Daileass' voice came across. "You got it, big guy."

Kuan Ti then closed his eyes, and appeared to be muttering to himself. A few moments later, he opened his eyes, and spoke loud enough for everyone to hear. "I have called a 'friend' in. Please step to the back of the room, and whatever you do, do not try and attack him."

Several remaining confused people stepped to the back of the room, and waited to see what Kuan Ti was up to. A few moments later, a being appeared in the room. The first reaction from all the strike team members was to either cry out in fright or start to recite prayers. However, all of them did the same thing, and tried to bring their weapons up. With a wave of his hand, Kuan Ti made all of their guns, knives, and other assorted weapons disappear.

I glanced at both my little brothers. It seemed they were in a trance. I looked over at Davie and he held his index finger to his mouth, gesturing for me to remain quiet.

The being that appeared was even taller than Kuan Ti, and wider. The 'thing' was hunched over a bit so it could fit in the room. Its huge bat like wings were furled across its back, and the huge ram-like horns had some very interesting decorations. Its skin was tinged red, and judging by remarks made by those there, it had a smell of sulfur rolling off it in waves. The thing that just appeared in the room with them was a demon right out of the bowels of Hell.

The thing looked at Kuan Ti and spoke in a gravelly voice that just grated on everyone's nerves, almost as bad as fingernails being dragged across a chalkboard. "This had better be good, Kuan Ti. We were about to start the final round of a Bocce Ball tournament."

"Damn, so this is what being scared feels like; this sucks!" KC commented, and he found a statue to hide behind.

Kuan Ti grinned at KC's reaction before he continued. "Oh, I am sure you'll agree with me; this one you are really going to enjoy. However, if you don't mind, allow me a few moments to explain a few things to people who need to know," Kuan Ti stated, to which the demon just gave a dismissive wave.

Kuan Ti then looked up at the remote drone and spoke directly to me. "I know you can still hear what I am saying, Reyes. Daileass, allow Reyes to say hello to Mr. Kahoalani."

On the television I was watching, I noticed a video screen activate in the study with my face on it. I waved and smirked, "Remember me, asshole? I know what you did, and I told my friends. You haven't gotten away with shit, you fuckin' waste of flesh."

The man stared at the screen; the puddle that appeared under his chair confirming that he heard and recognized me.

Kuan Ti then told me, "The being standing next to me is called Drazotus. He is one of Satan's 'special case managers'. See, there are certain types of Evil that even the minions of Hell despise. Child abuse is one of those. There is a saying that 'there is a special place in Hell for child abusers', and that is completely true. Drazotus is one of those demons that handles the really bad people. The problem is, he does kind of enjoy his job a bit too much." Kuan Ti paused as Drazotus started a booming laugh.

When the demon calmed down, Kuan Ti continued. "I have sent several people to Drazotus, because they deserved his 'special touch'. Know that your tormentor will have a long time to regret what he did."

Danny looked around the room as they talked, to find that he was the only one not hiding behind something. "Chickens! I've slept with the Titanic; what's a little demon visit?"

Kuan Ti then turned to Drazotus and spoke directly to the Demon. "The present I am giving to you is named Kanunu Kahoalani. He was the Prime Minister of the R.O.H. and retired from public service in the year 2000. I have been able to confirm that he is guilty of being responsible for eighty-seven current victims of child prostitution; in the past six years, add eighty-eight counts of accessory to murder, fifty-seven counts of selling of children for use in genetic experimentation, one-hundred-forty-eight past counts of child prostitution, and seven-hundred-seventy-seven counts of child rape. Also, fourteen butterflies lost their wings to him when he was younger, as well as four cats that he poured gas on, then tossed a match on, just to see what would happen. Not to mention all the other things he did while he was rising in the ranks of power, most of which would have resulted in a minimum of life imprisonment if he had been discovered. All of which if I tried to list out, we would be here for hours."

If the strike team members were scared before, the sight of a Demon who was getting more and more pissed as Kuan Ti was talking made it even worse. By the time Kuan Ti was done, the Demon looked to be absolutely livid at the man who was calmly sitting there in his chair. However, anyone who looked in his eyes could see the absolute terror he was feeling. "He feels absolutely no remorse for his actions, which is why I felt he should be specially delivered to you or your boss." Kuan Ti grinned as he delivered his last line. "Of course, he does have one redeeming factor."

Drazotus looked over at Kuan Ti with a perplexed expression. "Really?"

"Yeah," Kuan Ti said with a toothy grin. "He maintains an absolutely gorgeous rose garden that he takes very good care of."

Drazotus looked at Kuan Ti like he'd lost his mind, before throwing his head back and howling in laughter. It took a full minute for the demon to calm enough to talk, and when he did, he walked over and slapped Kuan Ti on the shoulder. "Thanks. I was about to utterly destroy him, which would have meant no fun for me. Thanks for calming me down some."

"You're welcome. Now, you wanna take the scumbag away and start your work," Kuan Ti asked as he gestured over towards the man.

"Yeah, I should. If I hurry I can still get back in time to see who's going to compete for the title. There's gonna be lots of bets being placed soon."

With that, the demon and Kanunu Kahoalani disappeared.

Kuan Ti looked over at Danny and said with a shrug. "Hey, what can I say? It's good to have friends in low places."

"I KNEW Garth Brooks was evil!" Danny replied with a grin.

Kuan Ti shook his head. "That was a very bad pun, Danny. Round up your chickens and we'll go back to your compound."

Danny looked around, and giggled as he saw KC clutching the replica of Michelangelo's 'David' statue. "Hey Crash, you're gonna need to let go of that to go home!"

KC shook his head. "It's going with me then; I ain't letting go until I'm home!"

"As you wish," Kuan Ti said, and he waved his arms, causing everyone to return to the AI Compound.

The television screen went blank. I checked with Davie, "So, he went to hell, alive?"

Davie simply nodded. Scaring the crap out of me, Dillon shouted, "That was kewl!"

"Yeah," Jonah giggled, "he's paying for being really bad."

I didn't have the nerve to question what either of my brothers thought they saw. I was happy they didn't see what I did, and let it be.

Marc walked over and placed a hand on my shoulder, softly asking, "Are you okay?"

I nodded, "Yeah, I think so. I need a change of scenery though. Can we check out Myrtle Beach now?"

Marc nodded, "I think that's a good idea; we'll go as soon as the guys get back. I think KC needs it as much as you, from what I saw."

As if making the point, KC appeared in the center of the room, his arms still securely wrapped around the statue. After a quick glance around the room, he let go and sprinted over to Jerry. As soon as he reached him, he wrapped his arms around Jerry and pulled him into a tight hug. "I'm sorry," KC sighed.

Jerry returned the hug, his face reflecting his confusion at KC's reaction. Marc took my hand, and the two of us joined the hugging pair. "I'll explain, since KC can't," Marc said, just loud enough for the four of us to hear. "There are only two people on this end that saw everything that happened, me and you, Reyes; Davie filtered it for the rest of you to keep it down to what you can handle. I saw what KC saw by being there. For the first time in his life, KC has been scared by something other than his body being shut down because he pushed things too far."

"Uh huh," KC whimpered, the ordeal still fresh in his mind.

Marc noticed KC shivering, and his face shifted to a look of concern. "I hate to do this, but I'm gonna have to." Marc stated. "KC, code Joshua Stewart 53, initiate emotional processor shutdown. Self diagnostics mode three initiate. Execute."

I looked at Marc in shock. "Can you do that to any of us?" I asked as he watched the emotion drain from KC.

Marc shook his head, and Jerry explained, "KC is a prototype, and in his generation there were certain vocal overrides required by Vision Industries in all units in his series. Marc and I disabled all but this one in his latest program update, due to his unique safety protocol situation. We never thought we'd be using it for this kind of situation, though."

KC kept his arms around Jerry, but was now able to speak normally. "Diagnostics show all systems online, Dad. Safety protocol sector 3J56R restructure seventy percent complete."

"Why are you restructuring the safety sector?" Marc asked, a curious expression on his face.

"You know the update that you guys have nicknamed the 'Shannon Update'?" KC asked, his voice clearly showing emotion despite the override. "I want it, now. If what I just felt like is what the people I care about feel like when I do something stupid, I want some limits put back on my safety protocols."

"What do you mean, KC?" I softly asked.

"I'm a 'Mach II' version of the Vision design." KC replied. "Dad... Marc Dad that is... was trying to make a more realistic AI for Vision Industries since your version is a little too cautious. I'm the result, but I'm a walking accident sometimes. They've figured out a better balance now for my safety protocols, but Marc won't force an update onto anyone without the AI's okay. It might change how I act a little, and he won't make anyone change just because he's figured out a better way to do something."

Before I could say anything, Marc added his own views. "I've learned something from Cory. I've always thought of each one of us as individuals, but he's shown me that we're not just a fancy creation of a company, we're people. That means we have the right to determine our own destiny, and the right to choose what is done with our programming."

I grinned and nodded, "I know what you mean, in a few ways. My first father was named Derek, D-E-R-E-K. Even with my memory still messed up, I latched on to Derrick Seibert, D-E-R-R-I-C-K. Both dads are drummers. Saturday, I found myself easily surfing at Anahola Bay, because I had surfed before. I was just as scared as the human boys when Kyle and Tyler created a twenty-foot wave for us to ride. Even this morning, I realized I was scared of others being prejudiced about androids, because I was raised in Myrtle Beach during the prejudices of the 1950's. In only a day, I've figured out why I've done those things. They're part of me now, not just programming."

Jerry smiled as he saw the look flash across KC's face. "The one time that there's a twenty foot wave that KC could surf without getting hurt, and he misses it!"

"Yeah, I know," KC replied. "I'm done restructuring, Dad. Thanks Reyes, you just proved that I'm right to get this update. I won't put bad memories in Joey's head; he might be a twerp, but he's my twerp."

"I'll do it for you, KC," Jerry said with care in his voice. "Let's go, it'll only take a minute. We'll adjust the limits on your emotional processor while I'm in there so it stops overloading."

"Thanks, Dad," KC said as the two of them separated and headed for the terminal in the office.

Marc squeezed my hand. "How are you handling what you saw? Are you dealing with it?"

"I'm fine," I assured, and carefully tiptoed around so I wouldn't scare Jonah and Dillon. "I hope I never ever see anything like that again. And I hope that's the last of the pedophiles responsible for the crap in R.O.H."

Danny came down the stairs, freshly showered, and Davie joined him. They came towards Marc and me. "You know, just when you thought you've seen everything, the Clan comes up with something totally original!" Danny giggled as he put an arm over Marc's shoulder. "That was definitely a new one for me!"

"I think you need the same update that KC's getting; you're nuts!" Marc replied.

"KC's going for the update?" Danny exclaimed. "I saw he was scared. Did he take it that bad?"

Pointing at the statue KC was grasping onto for dear life, I giggled, "Yeah, he took it bad, and took the scumbag's statue too. It figures the pedophile would have a copy of David."

Jonah giggled, "KC had his face in a stone butt and his hands wrapped around the naughty bits too!" Dillon busted up laughing.

I shouted loud enough for KC to hear, "I guess that makes KC an honorary Rimmer."

"That's between him and Scott!" Marc giggled.

"I heard that!" Scott said as he came up behind Marc and grabbed a handful of underwear waistband. "We have liftoff!" he added as he yanked up, causing Marc to squeal as his underwear relocated themselves into his butt crack.

"Ahh, Strawberry!" Danny giggled. "Hey Scott, when did KC start collecting statues?"

"When our fearless leader decided he was insane," Scott deadpanned. "Marc, I think Danny's common sense circuit is burned out.

"He never had one, that's why he took the job!" Marc replied with a grin.

"I'll discuss that comment with you later, bro!" Danny shot back with an evil grin.

Smiling at my two brothers who couldn't stop laughing, I offered, "Maybe now's a good time to change into warmer clothes and head to Myrtle Beach? I'm anxious to see how the place has changed."

Davie looked around the room. "Everyone is about ready, once KC and Jerry finish talking, we'll be ready to go."

"We?" Danny asked. "You joining us?"

"I am your Guardian Angel. Of course I'm joining you!" Davie giggled.

Looking down at my brothers and myself, now wearing jeans, heavy sweaters and parkas, I giggled, "Went a bit overboard, Davie, don't you think?"

"No, this is overboard," Davie giggled as scarves, mittens, and tasseled stocking hats were added.

"I can't see!" Dillon laughed from behind his scarf.

Jonah sniggered, "I can't breathe!"

I giggled, "Has Myrtle Beach shifted north of the Arctic Circle?" I told Davie, "Cold in Hawaii is below sixty-five degrees. All we really need are jeans, long sleeve shirts, sneakers and windbreakers."

"You're no fun," Davie fake-pouted as he complied with my request. He noticed Jerry and KC returning, "Hey booger-breath, have you fixed Crash right this time?"

At last, my brothers and I were dressed more appropriately. The only things Davie added were baseball caps for my brothers and me.

Jerry giggled, "Unlike you, bro, his brain is fully functional."

"Now, is that any way to talk to an angel?" Aunt Mary asked with a laugh as she walked up. "I heard that you're planning a road trip. I've packed a snack in the bus. Which one of you is driving? That way I know how hard I need to pray?"

"He is!" Danny replied, pointing at Jerry. "You need to call in the mega-prayers!"

"Hey, you're the one that had to take the defensive driving class TWICE!" Jerry shot back.

Rolling my eyes, I muttered, "Couldn't we just call Daileass and transport? Please?"

"Pretty please!" Dillon and Jonah chorused.

Mary smiled as she rustled my hair. "You don't need to worry, honey; Jerry's been trained by the Charleston Police Department to drive in all situations. He's safer to ride with than just about anyone else on the road."

I smiled, "I guess we couldn't be safer with a guardian angel."

Looking up at the woman, Jonah asked, "What did you make for us to snack on, Aunt Mary?"

Before she could answer, Dillon cheered, "What you was cookin' smelled so good!"

Mary smiled, "You'll find out when you get in the bus, little ones. You'll be happy. As far as what I'm cooking, you'll find that out at dinner time when you get back."

KC joined them, Joey happily riding on his shoulders. "Casey's godda BIG sdadue!" Joey giggled.

"What are you planning on doing with that now that you don't need to hide behind it?" Danny asked, his tone conveying that it was a serious question.

"I'm keeping it," KC stated. "It is a good reminder that I'm not superman."

Danny nodded. "I think you've got a good handle on things. I would appreciate it if you chose someplace other than the living room to keep it, though."

"Okay, I'll have it moved to your bedroom then," KC said with a grin.

Danny rolled his eyes. "Help the little ones get in the bus, smart-Alec, before I decide to see if you float or sink."

"Yes Sir!" KC replied with a salute, Joey mirroring the salute from his perch.

Danny stopped Dillon, Jonah and me, asking, "Where are your comm-badges, guys?"

My brothers chorused, "We don't got one."

I nodded, "Only the Core Rimmers have comm-badges and sub-vocals."

"Well, you're going off base to an unsecured location," Danny told us. He tapped his chest and called, "Daileass, issue permanent comm-badges for Reyes, Jonah and Dillon. We can't have anyone getting lost." A moment later, each of the three of us had Clan comm-badges on our jackets. Danny explained, "They're tracking devices as well as for communications. Keep them with you at all times, especially when you're off-base."

Jonah, Dillon and I followed our hosts outside to a tour-style bus. It had Clan and AI crests on the side and dark windows. Jerry opened the computerized door and stepped aboard, followed by KC, Joey, Marc, Jonah, Dillon, me and Danny. Granted, I hadn't seen the inside of a bus in twenty-plus years, but no bus I had ever seen had plush seats like this one. Stepping onto the bus behind me were Caleb, Noah, Hunter, Paul, Ryan, Scott and the other five security team dudes. Each seat on the bus had a box of food on it.

"Buckle up, guys!" Jerry announced as he took the driver's seat. "Hey George, wake up! We're heading to Myrtle Beach."

"Driver Jerald Owens authentication approved. Scanning traffic patterns to destination," the dashboard of the bus announced as the engine sprang to life.

Danny took the window seat across the aisle from my brothers and I sat down beside him.

"Oh wow," Dillon and Jonah gasped.

Buckling up, Jonah looked over at me, grinning, "They've got a speaking bus."

Already buckled up, Dillon giggled, "We gotta get a bus like this," then opened his snack box.

Glancing over at my brothers, I smiled, "Let's tell dad and pop about it when we get home. With all the kids we have, we'll need a fleet of buses."

Danny smiled at me. "Just let me know who and when. Charleston will provide the driver training, and we've got a direct line to get as many as the Clan needs. This isn't a normal bus, it's outfitted to SWAT team standards."

Turning to Danny, I explained, "Preston O'Brian is our division leader..."

"Head Rimmer," Jonah and Dillon giggled.

"And we have about a hundred and fifty kids at our base, but can have two-thousand at our five bases," I continued, "so we'll probably need at least ten of these just for our main base."

"You get that, George?" Jerry giggled.

"Acknowledged. Order for two hundred buses has been placed through Unit Material Acquisitions and has been approved."

Sliding down in my seat, I covered my face and laughed, "Prez is gonna deactivate me. I leave the base for a few hours, recall the ex-Prime Minister was the one that started everything, the dude is executed, and now Prez has gotta pay for two-hundred buses." Jonah and Dillon cracked up. I giggled, "I think I'll hide from Prez for the next few days."

"We paid for this?" Jerry giggled.

"Not that I know of," Danny responded, and then asked, "Hey Marc, did we pay for this bus?"

"Unless you count the gray hairs while the two of you learned to drive it, I don't think so!" Marc confirmed.

"Bite me!" Danny and Jerry chorused.

Danny turned to me and said, "By the way, the worldly assets of Mr. Kahoalani were transferred to Clan Short accounts. That'll pay for buses for every division around the world."

"Oh! So he's paid and paid again. Awesome!" I giggled.

"Route confirmed and clearances received by all local departments," George announced as a map appeared on the Heads Up Display.

Jerry became serious as he put the bus into gear. "Okay, we're rolling, guys. The restroom is in the rear of the bus on the right side, the weapons locker is on the left. Remain seated except to visit the restroom, unless otherwise stated by myself or Lieutenant Shannon in the case of a required security action."

Jerry pulled out, and within five minutes the bus was turning north onto Highway 17. As soon as it cleared the city limits, George announced, "Traffic Avoidance System Active" and the blue, red, and green lights over the cab and rear of the bus activated. Jerry shifted up two more gears as he brought the bus to cruise speed, his full attention on the road and the information being presented to him on the HUD.

I softly told Danny, "I remember taking the trip from Vision Industries to Myrtle Beach with my first mom and dad. It took about two hours, way back in 1948. Have the rules of the road changed that much?"

"Some of them have; but the State has allowed the Clan to operate under some special rules that usually only apply to law enforcement. That's why we have to be certified by them," Danny responded.

Nodding understandingly, I opened my snack box and peeked inside. Neatly arranged in the box was a can of soda, four small plastic containers, one large plastic container and utensils. Beginning to open up the smaller plastic containers, I found coleslaw, macaroni salad, dinner rolls and a lime Jell-O mold with fruit in it. The larger container had several fried chicken pieces in it. Across the aisle from me, Jonah and Dillon were already stuffing their faces. Smiling, I told Danny, "This is awesome. Aunt Mary fixed us entire meals to-go. I expected sandwiches and that would've been plenty."

"You should see it when she's had a little warning!" Danny giggled as he opened his meal.

While everyone on the bus was inhaling Aunt Mary's feast, I couldn't help thinking about Kanunu Kahoalani and the ridiculous number of lives he affected. I didn't feel sorrow, fear or anything at all about his sentence. Since I knew that what had actually transpired was not what Jonah and Dillon saw, I whispered to Danny, telling him everything I was thinking. Nearing the end of my Jell-O dessert, I softly wondered, "I only saw it on a television, but it was shocking enough. I can't imagine what it might've been like to be there in the room. It was enough to send most of the strike team scurrying away, but you just stood there, not too far from Kuan Ti and that demon, like it was no big deal. You must've witnessed far worse in your long life, huh?"

Danny gave a wry smile. "Two lives... two lives and three bodies," he replied softly

Looking carefully at him, I admitted, "Sorry, I don't understand."

Danny nodded. "Very few people do. I lived a full life as a human, died and found my personality had been scanned and placed in a positronic brain. I lived a while in that body, then tried to kill myself, but ended up just taking an extended nap on the floor of the ocean next to the Titanic. Marc gave me this body, transplanting my positronics into it, and then a few days later I found out that I had really died the first time; the personality in my positronics is a new person. It's kinda disturbing talking to your previous spirit, but that is what it took for me to learn I'm my own person with both his and my memories."

I could barely grasp what I was hearing. Danny was human once, had lived a full life, died and was then implanted into an android body. He lived a second life and was now in his third body, continuing his second life. "I can't imagine what that must've been like," I softly muttered.

"Don't try it, it sucks," Danny commented as he reached over and took my hand. "It really screws with the mind, trust me. The funny thing is, what I've gone through is the main reason Cory made me the head of AI division. I think he understands us better than just about anyone who isn't an AI; he understands that we need a purpose even more than most natural humans, due to how long we can live. I've promised to stand by his side as long as he's alive. After that I'll just see what happens."

I shared my own story with Danny, briefly telling him about Derek Taraschke, his wife and my mom, Lokelani, and then continued about my cousin, Akamu, who became my second father figure after Derek and Lokelani passed away. "I got to live twelve years with Akamu and his wife," I shared. "They died suddenly, in a car accident. It left me with no one. As happy as I am now, with Derrick Seibert, Mike Gibbons, Jonah and Dillon, I have to wonder what it might be like sixty or seventy years from now, when they're all gone and I'm still alive. It'll be different with the Clan than it ever was before, but I still wonder how my life will be. Who will I have to love, who might love and care about me?"

Danny had a far-off look for a second, then returned his attention to me. "Sorry, as soon as you finished talking, I had to deal with a brain leech who was chewing me out. Kyle's the most protective little brother anyone can ask for. I'll be honest, if you had asked me that before I took my long swim, I probably could have given you an idea from my experiences. I know a few things that Kyle shares with just me, and based on that I'd say your best bet is just play it as it goes; what everyone called normal before the Clan formed is completely out the window now. I've noticed that the Vision AIs who have lived through the worst have been the ones that have surfaced to work within the Clan, usually in the Divisional staff."

I sighed, "It will be different, I know it. I haven't been asked to join the Core Rimmers. Even if I am asked, I don't know if I would accept. It's like having two families; the immediate family and the much larger extended family. I guess I'm worried about the day the Clan no longer exists. Will I ever feel that dull ache from feeling useless and worthless again? No one can answer that question, so I guess it's best to 'play it as it goes', like you said."

"You asked why I just stood there a while back?" Danny said. "I wasn't worried about what was standing there; I've had arguments with Saints and have an almost-eternal being who set up a permanent camp in a corner of my brain because he likes watching me think. In the last few weeks, I've come to understand a lot of things, the most important of which is that the supernatural have rules too. I wasn't worried, because I knew that by the rules the only one in danger was the target; the rest of us were safe as long as we did not involve ourselves in that being's mission."

I considered what Danny had just said about rules. As designed beings, our mission was to be companions, but that was the same purpose every real human had too: to live and to love. As long as we have love, the living is easy. Derrick, Mike, Jonah and Dillon would all grow old and die, but in the Clan Short world, there would always be someone to love; maybe not as much as the immediate family, but there would always be someone. I shared all that with Danny once I had put my thoughts into order.

"I think you've hit it right on the head," Danny replied. "As far as being what you call a 'Core Rimmer', think of this; I never wanted to be the head of AI Division, in fact Cory and I argued about it in what the Clan calls 'The Great Logic War'. I lost the argument, and found out that Cory does not like sheep, he wants people who will tell him he is wrong. The question that you need to answer is not if you want to be part of the Clan's staff, but does the Clan need you in that position, even if you don't think you can do it. I bet your time is coming soon, and I promise you it won't be in any way that you think you'd fit."

I softly mumbled, "It's the twenty-one years of lost life experiences that bugs me. If I attempted to gather all the short bits of memories you guys restored, I doubt it would amount to more than a few days. Here I am, a fifty-six-year-old android in a thirteen-year-old boy's body that really only lived thirty-five years. It's too weird to consider being any kind of a leader right now."

"I spent seventy-two years unconscious on the floor of the ocean, and was made the Director less than a week after Marc reactivated me," Danny replied. "Cory created the Clan while he still was not able to remember over half of his life. Kyle founded a whole race, yet there are parts of his life that even now are buried so deep that he knows nothing about them. You're not alone, the people who are running the show know exactly what you're feeling. They've either been there or still are there."

My only response to that was, "No one's asked me to join the Rimmers yet," but learning all that Danny had said made an impact. I sat back and thought about it. Around me on the bus, I heard KC and Joey playing audible chess, each keeping a copy of the board in their head to track moves; Scott was discussing plans for security once we reached our destination; Marc, Noah, and Caleb were discussing some project; and my two brothers were rambling about how fast we had to moving down the highway. I looked out the window and much to my surprise, all the buildings and trees passing by were a blur.

Noticing my concerned expression, Danny giggled, "It's best to not even ask our speed."

At the window seat across the aisle, Dillon looked down and giggled, "We're passin' other cars like they're standin' still!"

Jonah nodded and laughed, "We've gotta be doin' a hundred miles an hour, easy."

"Close," Danny giggled mysteriously.

In a few moments our speed dramatically dropped. I looked forward and noticed that we were moving to the right onto a highway exit ramp. Helplessly giggling, I told my brothers to sit back in their seats, then softly told Danny, "Ninety-five miles traversed in about forty minutes. A hundred and forty miles an hour?"

"Jerry didn't want to freak you guys out!" Danny giggled, not really answering the question.

"It doesn't seem Dillon or Jonah are the least bit bothered," I laughed.

From a few rows back, Marc sniggered, "And this wasn't an emergency!" and removed his crash helmet.

"Dahdy has had dhis bus doin' a-hundwed an' sebendy-six poind eighd-five-seven-fouw miwes an houw, and he sdiww had a geaw wefd!" Joey added proudly.

Jerry giggled, "He's exaggerating by a couple percent, and I was in top gear."

As soon as the bus stopped along Ocean Boulevard, Dillon and Jonah unbuckled themselves and hurried to the restroom at the back of the bus. To secure the area around our bus, Scott and the security team were the first to exit. Waiting for my brothers, I let Danny and most of the occupants pass by me. Jerry's two brothers, Paul and Ryan, said hello to me as they passed down the aisle. I smiled and greeted them. They were both extremely cute.

Surprising me and making me jump, Peter Lambert popped in beside me. He gave me a hug and smiled, "Take your time, Reyes. You'll be home by dinner time in Hawaii, no matter how long you decide to hang out here."

I giggled, "More Clan magic?"

Peter shrugged and giggled, "Since I couldn't fix up your ouchies Saturday, this'll make up for it." He vanished again before I had a chance to say thank you. A Mikyvis' work is never done.

Still giggling, Dillon and Jonah came out of the restroom. Before they could ask, I smiled, "About a hundred and forty miles an hour."

"OMIGOD!" Dillon and Jonah loudly cheered.

I led my brothers to the front of the bus. Jonah giggled, "I'm sorry, I can't see dad, pop, or any of the Core Rimmers driving that fast."

"If we could get R.O.H. Police approval, and grandpa Rob wasn't around, I think pop would exceed that speed," I sniggered.

Stepping out of the bus, I looked around and recognized nothing. In 1958, Myrtle Beach didn't have huge hotels on Ocean Boulevard, but it did now. Across the road from where the bus was parked was an amusement park called Wild Water and Wheels.

Marc asked, "What's the plan, Reyes?"

I answered, "I only wanted to check out my old house and see how things have changed. Already I can see it's changed drastically. It looks like they kept the boardwalk very much the same though." Turning to Jerry, I pointed and confirmed, "That's the south end of Ocean Boulevard, correct?"

"Sure is, at least that's what the sign says!" Jerry giggled as he pointed at the street sign directly behind me.

A chorus of giggles and laughter broke loose, the loudest from my two brothers. Chuckling at myself, I started walking south on highway 17. I smiled, "It's good to see that the Myrtle Beach State Park hasn't changed a lot." We got past the bus and waited for a chance to run across highway 17. Once that was done, I told everyone, "We're looking for 596 Mallard Lake Drive. It should be just over here a little way." I led the group down 17 toward Mallard Lake Drive. On the way though, I noticed a new strip mall, but kept walking. I paused and scowled, "This street, Perry Circle, didn't exist forty-six years ago." I suggested, "Let's go up here." Pointing to my right, I smiled, "I used to go crawdad fishin' at this lagoon. I think they did some land filling here, because that whole community of homes to the north there didn't exist in 1958. That was all part of this lagoon."

I realized that this part of Perry Circle should actually be in the lagoon and went to peek over the side of the decorative road barrier to our right. "Yep," I giggled, "this road is on pontoons over the lagoon, not on land fill."

"At least they did something right," KC commented.

Scott asked me, "What's next, bro?"

I pointed to the left and said, "We could just cross over to Mallard Lake Drive, so I can get a look at my old house, then we can get out of here and go check out the boardwalk." Taking the lead, Scott led our group between two homes and out beside my old house. The siding and roofing colors were different, but even after all those years, the house was still recognizable. It sent a shiver up my spine. I almost felt like I could walk up to the door and yell, "Mom, Dad, I'm home!" Of course, I didn't do that and kept walking out toward the street to see the front of the house.

Jonah looked up and checked, "Are you okay, Reyes?"

I nodded and smiled, "After all these years, the house is still here and still looks similar, with only a few minor changes." I sighed, "Let's get out of here and have some fun."

Jonah took my left hand and Dillon took my right as we walked out of the neighborhood and back onto highway 17. Realizing that I was all right, Dillon and Jonah hurried ahead to walk with Hunter and Joey. Jerry moved beside me and asked, "Everything's kewl, Reyes?"

I nodded and smiled, "A few things have changed, but not too drastically." I paused briefly, then softly admitted, "I heard what you were saying to Marc about Paul and Ryan."

"I was a little stressed, sorry," Jerry sighed.

"Don't be sorry about caring, dude."

Jerry glanced my way and softly shared, "They were living on the streets for twenty years; almost the same time period you were in the orphanage."

"I guess I feel a little something too," I admitted, "probably because I was getting my memory zapped, but Ryan dealt with his loss differently. In both situations, we were changed."

Leaning closer, Jerry whispered, "You know who you are though. Ryan believes he's human. He doesn't like the slightest implication that he's an android."

I checked, "Paul knows the truth though?" Jerry nodded. I asked, "If you'd let me, I'd like to help them, like you all have helped me?"

"Treat them like humans, okay?" Jerry quietly instructed.

"No problem," I smiled.

KC tilted his head. "I hear GO-KARTS!" he giggled.

"Crap! Marc, did you grab the first aid kit from the bus?" Noah sniggered, before taking off in a sprint, KC hot on his heels.

"Where's a Mikyvis when you need one! C'mon, guys!" Marc joked as he started to jog after the laughing pair.

We raced after the group. Since he was the smallest and couldn't keep up, I picked up Dillon. Soon we were running up to the entrance of 'Wild Water and Wheels'.

"You first, Danny; they always wanna talk to the most ancient person in the group," Caleb giggled.

Danny grabbed Caleb before he could escape, and after a well-executed noogie, he let him go, then headed toward the ticket booth. "I need admission for nineteen kids and a Guardian Angel," Danny said seriously as he passed over his Clan credit card.

"Guardian Angels get in free, since they usually end up working," the attendant joked as he scanned Danny's card without looking at it. His screen chimed, and it was obvious that he was comparing a picture on the screen with the person in front of him. "Oh! Welcome to Wild Water and Wheels, Director Page! One sec, I need to grab the Clan Short wristbands." He ducked under the counter, and came back up with a box of blue and green twisted rope wristbands. "Everything in the park is compliments of the Management," he explained as he counted out twenty of the bands. "It's the least we can do for the pride of the Carolinas."

In my arms, Dillon started giggling before I put him down. I turned and saw Davie standing there, absently smoothing the feathers in his wings. I giggled, "I guess the bus ride wasn't required for you."

"I'm riding the bus on the way back though!" Davie laughed. "You ever try dodging seagulls at over a hundred miles an hour? Timmy was right, them things is STUPID!"

Dillon howled laughing and I put him down. We walked forward and put on our wristbands. I think the park attendant standing nearby about had a heart attack when he saw we really were accompanied by an angel. Having never been to this park before, I glanced around while Jonah and Dillon excitedly squealed about all the kewl rides. Joey came up to my brothers saying, "Com'on, Diwwon and Jonah. We gods wides 'speciawawwy fow us." Joey, Jonah, Hunter and Dillon peeled off for the little kids Go-Cart tracks.

I joined the line with the rest of the bigger guys for Speed Racers. KC was already in a red hot-rod go-cart. Jerry gasped, "Oh my God, KC put on a helmet," causing the rest of us softly chuckle. KC still burned rubber pulling away and onto the track.

Soon, I got in a very kewl lime green go-cart. It had been years since I'd been at a go-cart track. I put my helmet on and put the car in gear, unintentionally peeling out and onto the track. "Holy crap!" I shouted at the surprise horsepower in the little go cart.

Making his first lap around the figure-eight track, KC laughed and teased, "Com'on, Reyes, you're not gonna let Danny or Marc beat you!" He put the peddle to the metal and took off before I had a chance to reply. Just like with the pinball game, I got used to the newer go-cart and found myself in amongst my android brothers, leading our pack around the track.

Surprisingly, Danny was the wildest of the drivers, his go-cart slipping sideways in every turn as he pushed the limits of its traction. Marc was the sanest of the drivers, staying clear of Danny if possible while doing his best to ensure Danny didn't get a chance to lap him. I was laughing hysterically at the rude comments being made by Caleb, Noah and Jerry, all of which were very near or behind me. As I made a turn around a bend, I could see Paul and Ryan were side-by-side and directly behind Jerry. Back in the old days, go-carts went to a maximum of forty miles-per-hour. These new machines had speedometers that went up to seventy-five and standard tachometers too. I made myself a mental note to see to it that we got a go-cart track installed on one of our larger Rimmer bases, probably on the island of Hawaii.

About a half-hour later, when we had all sufficiently soiled our shorts and laughed ourselves hoarse, our Clan group gathered again. Jonah and Dillon had little radio-controlled go-carts to bring back to Ewa Beach in one hand and the largest chocolate chip and ice-cream cookies I had ever seen. We headed back toward the bus, but Danny and Marc led us onto the monorail. This was something else that didn't exist in 1958. The monorail had two express tracks and two local tracks and a total of four trains. The express tracks only stopped at the extreme south end of Ocean Boulevard, in the center by Family Kingdom Amusement Park, and at the extreme north end of Ocean Boulevard. We rode the express train from the South end to the North end and back to Family Kingdom, where we got off to walk along the boardwalk. The entire ride took about thirty minutes, which I figured meant the express tracks exceeded one hundred miles-per-hour.

We took a nice leisurely stroll south along the boardwalk. Every half a mile or so there was another cabana where live music was being played; some were DJ's, some were jazz bands, some were rock-and-roll, and one even had a string quartet playing classical. Caleb, Noah and Hunter stopped at one place to get cotton candy. I couldn't believe it when Dillon followed and, having finished his giant cookie, got himself a cotton candy. We stopped at another arcade where Jonah shot water from a pistol into a spinning clown face and won a Teddy bear that he gave to Dillon to give to his VI Teddy Bear back in Ewa Beach. I cracked up at the thought of a Teddy Bear carrying a regular stuffed Teddy bear around base.

Along the way, Scott and our security guys stopped for slices of pizza and sodas. What was amazing to me is that, with the wristbands we were all still wearing from Wild Water and Wheels, everything we did along the boardwalk was free. Jonah and I stopped at another concession stand for a frozen custard. Unbelievably, Dillon had finished his cotton candy, had pink splotches all around his nose, lips and cheeks and wanted a frozen custard too! I howled laughing and told our hosts how Dillon had been eating ravenously all day long, since our milkshakes at Ewa Beach that morning. To my knowledge, Dillon had been eating almost constantly for the last five hours.

Just as we were getting close to where the bus was parked, Danny spotted a miniature golf course. We almost had to carry Noah and Caleb, they were laughing so hard at the way Danny grabbed onto Marc and began dragging him towards the gate. The rest of us followed along. KC carried Joey on his shoulders to give his little legs a rest, while Scott had decided that Jonah deserved the same treatment. Just as we reached the gate, a kid about the same age as Hunter fell in behind us with his parents. As I entered the gate, I heard Noah behind me telling the attendant that the Clan was covering admittance for the kid and his parents behind us.

As I caught up with Danny and Marc, I heard Danny telling him "I told you that I was going to get your skinny butt out to play putt-putt!"

"My butt's no skinnier than yours; in fact your butt is my butt!" Marc replied with a grin.

"Yeah, I was going to talk to you about that; your butt itches!" Danny retorted.

"Well, if you took better care of my butt it wouldn't itch!" Marc quickly shot back.

His face covered with pink cotton candy splotches and smeared chocolate custard, Dillon looked up at me, giggling, "How can Danny's butt be Marc's butt?"

Shaking my head, I grinned, "This is a question for greater minds than mine," and then called, "Jerry, not to be the butt of any wise cracks, but what are Danny and Marc going off about?"

"Never try to understand the Ancients; for it will cause much loss of sanity," Jerry replied in a mock 'wise-man' tone.

I giggled, "Thank you, mini-Confucius."

"Unca Dahny's skins wewe made fwom Unca Mawc's budd skins!" Joey interjected helpfully, as well as loudly.

"EWWW!" Dillon loudly laughed.

"That's what you two get for showing your butt in public!" KC laughed at the now-blushing pair. He then slid behind Scott. "Protect us from the butts!" he giggled.

"Be glad Jerry's driving, or you'd all be walking home!" Danny stated with a grin.

"Nope, they'd be flying 'Angel Express'!" Davie stated as he appeared above Danny. "And just so you know, version one of you agrees with me!"

"No fair ganging up on me!" Danny laughed. "C'mon, let's see who can sink their balls in less strokes."

"Shouldn't you be in your bedroom to do that?" Caleb asked innocently.

"Keep it up, Caleb. I'm sure your brother would love to practice first aid on you," Danny stated with a menacing grin.

"I'll give you mouth-to-mouth, babe!" Noah added helpfully.

"You know, you two really need to take some alone time."

Danny giggled.

"Every time we try, you two come up with more work for us to do!" Noah and Caleb whined in unison.

"Hey, it's not my fault that things get weird occasionally!" Danny replied in self-defense.

Caleb sighed, "Even in Hawaii we didn't get lei'd."

Dillon, Jonah and I softly sniggered.

"Occasionally... like every five minutes!" Noah grumbled. "Grab a club, old man; prepare to get your butt beat!"

"Dream on; I was playing this game when your grandparents were making out at lover's lane!" Danny shot back.

"At least my grandparents got laid, unlike you!" Noah giggled.

Hunter was holding his sides with laughter. "Pop, you're strange!" he sniggered.

"Thank you, that's the nicest thing I've been called all day!" Noah replied as he poked at Hunter's ribs, causing even more giggles.

Dillon, Jonah and I watched the miniature-golf game start and I checked with them to see if they wanted to play, but they both declined so we simply followed the AI division members that were playing, listening to countless insults and rude remarks.

"Are they always this crazy?" the kid that Noah had invited to join the group asked me. He and his parents were playing right behind the AI group, so they ended up watching as the boys had fun. For some reason, the two adults seemed very familiar. Believing I had met them before, I scanned my memories.

I smiled, "Ya know, things are whacky at our Ewa Beach base, but this Artificial Intelligence division is weirder, without the ferrets, G-Cats and gorillas."

"They're from the AI division of Clan Short? Wait, are those two 'THE' Marc and Danny?" the father asked.

Glancing at the man and then his wife, I nodded, "That's them." The two adults checked with each other, causing me to blush, "I'm sorry, there's something familiar about you, but I'm not sure why I feel that way."

The man grinned, "You can call me Mr. Paul; or better yet, just call me Les." He paused for a second, then added, "You're a Marc series, correct? What year?"

"1948," I replied.

"Ahh, that explains it. Program update z-45-34A9; when Vision Industries started seeing problems with Marc series units having emotional issues if they lost the ones they were bonded to. It gives you a subconscious trigger when you are in the presence of a Charles series or a Victoria series adult android. If you didn't have a family bond, you would have felt comfortable opening up to us and asking for help."

Clearly curious, Dillon and Jonah looked up for my explanation. "That means that if there had been Charles or Victoria series androids on O'ahu in 1983, I would have bonded with them. Since there weren't, well, everything that happened that led to the orphanage and the Clan had to happen." I then introduced Les to Dillon and Jonah, and finished with, "We have two dads at O'ahu. We're only here for the day."

Les smiled. "I'm sure that I speak for both Vicky and myself when I say I'm glad to see that you've found a family inside Clan Short. I've noticed a few things looking at them from the outside, and I think that you're in the best place that you could ever be."

The boy that was with them rolled his eyes and giggled. "You know, having android parents is never dull. I'm always learnin' about things most parents don't know."

"I'm glad you enjoy it, Wes," Vicky replied. "Why don't you go tell your cousin Marc that his Aunt Vicky is overdue for a hug? He's obviously not having much luck playing on this course."

Dillon followed Wes onto the course to get Marc rattled. I asked Les, "How old is Wes?" Jonah remained close to my side, watching me closely.

"Today is his seventh birthday," Les replied. "I never expected it to become a family reunion though; the funny thing is we would have missed you if Wes hadn't insisted on stopping for a cookie."

Jonah giggled, "We are the cookie clan."

I nodded and smiled at Les and Vicky, "Jonah's nine and Dillon is five."

We were sidetracked for a second when we heard Danny yell, "KC! Get off the windmill!"

"But Uncle Danny, you said we have to play the ball wherever it stops!" KC shot back as he lined up his shot.

"He's got you there, Danny!" Jerry laughed. "It's not his fault that Marc's ball hit his and made it jump up there!"

"Boys will be boys," Vicky chuckled as she shook her head.

"Does he still count as a boy at 51 years old?" I grinned.

"Absolutely! Growing up is over-rated," Les replied with a grin.

A few seconds later, the boys returned with Marc. Dillon had co-opted Marc's shoulders, while Hunter had joined them and was dragging his uncle along. "C'mon, Uncle Marc! I wanna meet more of your family!" Hunter exclaimed.

Wes was giggling as he followed along, obviously enjoying the disruption to the Division's plans and the plight of Marc.

"Marcus Furst!" Vicky exclaimed, "I'm decades overdue for a hug from my favorite nephew! Get your little butt over here!"

"Aunt Vicky!" Marc whined, beginning to blush. "We're in public!" At Marc's sudden switch to embarrassed child mode, Jonah and I evilly snickered.

"Well, then you need to start keeping in contact more!" Vicky stated as she pulled Marc into a tight hug, being careful not to dislodge Dillon.

Les chuckled, "That's what I love about the series based on her. They definitely got the mothering instinct right."

"Tell me about it!" Wes giggled. "Mom, Dad; this is Hunter. I'm gonna go play along with him and his dads, okay?"

"Have fun, and stay with the group," Les replied.

"Thanks, Dad!" Wes giggled. "C'mon, Hunter, lets escape before the hug monster catches us!"

Peter Lambert popped in, yelling, "RANDOM HUG!" and embraced Wes. A purple hard hat appeared on Wes' head and then Peter popped away again. Jonah and I glanced at each other, then fell against one another laughing, and became hysterical at Wes' shocked expression.

"What the..." Wes exclaimed.

"I'll explain while we're playing," Hunter giggled as he grabbed Wes' hand.

"Why is it I think I'd be better off by not asking?" Les asked me, as he watched his son being introduced to the golf players.

Still recovering, I giggled, "That little guy was part of the Clan. He likes giving hugs, and purple hard hats."

"He's a Mikyvis," Jonah cackled. "He helped me, Dillon and a bunch of us rescued kids on Saturday."

"Hmm," Les mused, "I'll have to investigate these 'Mikyvis' after vacation; I've never heard of them before."

Marc finally broke free of the hug he was trapped in. "Okay Aunt Vicky, you got in your usual torture. Now spill it; where'd you find the kid and what's his story so I can update my database?"

Vicky laughed, "Stop working so hard, young man, or I'll put you over my knee... again. Wes isn't an AI; he's one hundred percent just-turned-seven boy. And he's our son."

"How?" Marc began to ask.

Vicky interrupted him with a smirk. "You see, when you're all grown up, if you like the opposite sex, you share your love with them, and sometimes, when you get intimate, you get blessed with a gift of a child."

Marc was speechless, his blush so bright that it could have lit a football stadium.

Nudging Marc, I playfully reminded, "Not all Vision Industries androids were gay adolescent boys, bro."

"Besides, one of the big selling points was that we are fully functional!" Les added. "Trust me, when she gets going, it beats any amusement park!"

"TOO... MUCH... INFORMATION!" Marc scowled as he tried to use Dillon's legs as ear muffs.

"You know, I really think Marc's blush is much cuter than most of his series," Vickie chuckled. "No offense meant, Reyes, but there's just something about the blush of a kid older than all but one of us! And Marc does it sooooo well!"

"Okay, you two clowns!" Marc stated, trying to regain some of his dignity, "Let me sort this out. You violated the android birth control laws and have given life to a young boy. A boy, which from my observations, is just as bad as his parents about enjoying being able to blindside people with surprises."

"Wow, you must have got a positronics upgrade; that is the fastest you've ever figured something like this out!" Les prodded with a grin.

Marc rolled his eyes. "It's a good thing you guys were a limited run; humanity would have performed a mass exodus just to escape your sense of humor."

Les glanced at his wife, whose eyes were dancing with merriment at the exchange with Marc. He then took a second to check on Wes. Just as he found his son, Joey yelled "FOWWWWE!" and nailed his ball from the seventh tee. The ball took off, hit Wes' hard hat with a 'THUNK', and deflected onto the green. It bounced three times, then rolled into the cup.

"HOWE IN ONE! I godda howe in one, Dahdy!" Joey exclaimed loudly.

Vicky smiled as she saw Jerry come over and give Joey a hug of congratulations, after first making sure Wes was not hurt. "He's such a cute little guy, and so proud of himself for making that shot. How old is he?" Vicky asked.

"You mean Joey? He's almost three weeks old now. He's growing up quick." Marc replied absently, the back of his mind wondering just why Peter knew a hard hat would come in handy.

"Ahh, so you're ignoring the laws now," Les commented with a knowing smile.

"It's not ignoring when you're an embassy," Marc replied. "That's Earth laws, not Federation, and my home is Vulcan land."

Peter popped in again, and stuck a sticker on Wes' hard hat that read 'I Survived Putt Putt Golf with the AI Division' in bright green letters. He then gave both Wes and Joey a hug before vanishing again.

"Hey Marc, you're up. Everyone's seeking shelter, even the new kid!" Danny said as him and Noah joined the group.

"Just because I'm better at playing real golf," Marc muttered. He turned to Noah and asked, "Hey, what made you give these guys Clan access to the park?"

"Let's see," Noah said as he made a show of tilting his head and stroking his nonexistent mustache, "the original Victoria, another AI adult, and an obviously non-AI kid who looks a lot like the two androids. Am I the only one who saw them screaming 'Clan Needed'?"

Danny and Marc looked at each other in shock. "I know Vicky and I didn't recognize them right away; how can you do that?" Marc asked.

"My boyfriend is an AI geek; and I keep up with him the best I can," Noah replied. "Besides, it's obvious if you watch facial reactions as to if someone is an AI."

"How?" Danny asked.

Noah grinned. "Humans don't process their surroundings, and you can see it in the eyes when an AI does it."

I checked with Jonah, "Can you tell that about me too?"

Jonah nodded and giggled, "Only when things happen quick, like Joey's hole-in-one bouncin' around and off Wes' purple hard hat. Real humans don't even try to follow the ball; we just hit the deck when trouble's comin' our way."

"KC's the only exception; he usually tries to catch the ball!" Noah giggled. "You got it pretty close with him, Marc; him, Austin, Joey, and Danny are the only exceptions to that rule."

I told Marc, "You gotta get the program updated for our eye control, bro."

Jonah smiled, "Don't change it, Reyes. It's actually very kewl watchin' your eyes dart around."

"We shouldn't be that noticeable though," I countered. "There are prejudiced people in the world."

Noah smiled. "Don't worry, Reyes. It's not as bad as you think. I've been living with these guys for three weeks, and it's only in the last week that I picked up on it. If you live with an AI it's one of the kewl things that you pick up on, but it's not something that just anyone can see. In fact, each of you guys is a little different in how you do it; I've just been around so many different AI kids lately that I've figured out the pattern."

I sighed, "I was raised here, in the 1950's, when people were very prejudiced. Being aware of that is ingrained into my personality. When I moved to Honolulu, prejudices weren't as bad as they were here. Nobody here or at Ewa Beach treats me differently than any one else. I guess what I'd like to know is if those prejudices have lessened over the years?"

"It's kinda ironic," Marc replied, "once Vision Industries closed down and we were not a commodity any more, we slowly slipped from the forefront of the public's memory. The Cynthetilife series actually did us a favor; since they were less realistic, they didn't trigger the same political responses, which let us slide into the shadows as far as the nutcases go."

I grinned, "That tells me a lot. Prejudiced people are considered nutcases, so it's generally not normal any more, correct?"

Marc smiled, "You can thank the Federation partially for that as well; militant prejudice generally leads to violation of Federation law, which leads to becoming Bubba's bitch. Bubba is actually pretty kewl, he sends thank-you cards to the Clan for the presents we send him, but for some reason, the people who get sent to him don't have the same appreciation that we do of his sense of humor."

"Okay!" I loudly laughed. Even Jonah found it funny.

"Okay, we better let you get over there to try to sink your ball in that hole before everyone starves to death," Les chuckled. "We can catch up more once you boys have finished playing."

Realizing that food came after a bus ride and completing the game of miniature-golf, the AI division members went into overdrive, whacking at balls almost simultaneously. Like a billiards game, some balls ricocheted off other balls and flew into the air, landed in traps, bounced off Wes' helmet and generally caused mass confusion and giggling. Les, Vicky, Dillon, Jonah and I scattered for safety. Since I had time, I led my brothers into a nearby men's room so we could relieve ourselves. Dillon spent more time washing layers of cookie, cotton candy and ice cream off his face than he did leaking. When we stepped back outside, our hosts had managed to complete the game without any injuries despite their best attempts to do otherwise.

"Hey Mom, Dad! We're going home with Uncle Marc!" Wes announced with excitement as he came running over to them with Hunter at his side.

"We are?" Les asked with a raised eyebrow. "Does Marc know this?"

"Uh-huh! Hunter's dad says he's even gonna let us help him set up their new 'puter!" Wes replied, totally ignoring the implied question about the invitation being extended.

We started for the bus. I told Les and Vicky, "It's kewl. Marc's house is pretty large and it's the AI Division headquarters. The basement alone is huge. Joey's got about two dozen cats and kittens down there, and there's still space for AI Division computers and assorted gear."

"How did Joey collect that many cats if he's only been online for three weeks?" Vicky asked.

"It's a genetic attribute," I grinned. "Joey's related to Timmy Short, the six-year-old keeper of animals at Clan Headquarters. From what I've heard, and this is only hearsay, Timmy has all sorts of animals in his bedroom, including an alligator and a baby seal, acquired only yesterday. Those who are unwise enough to enter Timmy's room without knowing about his zoo, usually wind up addicted to Valium and still need some therapy. So a few dozen cats and kittens is really tame, in comparison."

Approaching our bus, Les shrugged and told Vicky, "It sounds all right, hon."

Vicky checked, "These felines are regular house cats, right?"

"Right," I nodded.

Jonah giggled, "We got G-Cats in Ewa Beach though; some are cheetahs, some are lions and some are tigers. They're all part human though and really kewl."

At Vicky's worried expression, I helpless sniggered, "I don't think that helped much, bro." They followed us to the bus anyway.

Dillon smiled, "The G-Cats ain't as scary as the gorillas."

Attempting to alleviate Vicky's fears, I explained, "They're security for Pacific Rim Division. I haven't seen any gorillas at Marc's house." I was tempted to add 'yet', but edited myself.

"Hey Les, you guys got a car here?" Danny asked as he caught up with us.

"Actually, the car is at the airport in Kalamazoo. We've been using public transit while we've been here celebrating Wes' birthday," Les answered.

"You wouldn't happen to know the license number, would you?" Danny asked with a mischievous grin.

Les laughed, "Of course I do; it's 'ROBOTOY', I had a custom plate made."

Danny grinned as he tapped his chest. "Hey Daileass, by any chance can you find a vehicle with the plate that says 'ROBOTOY' in the Kalamazoo, Michigan airport parking?"

"I'm a step ahead of you, Evil One," Daileass replied. "There is a customized, candy-apple red, four-seat converted 1964 split-window Corvette en-route right now. I'm detouring it through the Rimmers; it's a sweet looking car, so Mike's ferret kids are gonna shine it up before I deliver it. It'll be there when you get home."

Danny was about to finish his fun when Daileass added, "Oh, by the way, the lot security guard was standing right next to it when I took it. Once he cleans out his pants, they should be getting a call from him."

"Awesome! Are you sure we're not related?" Danny asked as he tried very hard not to collapse in laughter. He turned back to Les, who had only heard one side of the conversation, and said "Your 'Vette is at our detail shop in Hawaii at the moment, and should be at Headquarters by the time we get there. When you get the call about it vanishing, just smile and say 'thank you'."

Dillon, Jonah and I roared hysterically. There was only one possible 'detail shop' in Ewa Beach and we just happened to be related to the Scooby Gang.

Danny grinned at the confused expressions on the adults' faces. "Welcome to Clan Short!" he giggled cryptically.

Sticking his head out the bus door, Jerry asked, "Are you guys gonna stand out there, or are you coming with us?"

Still giggling, I followed my hysterical brothers on board the bus. Danny, Les and Vicky followed us aboard. Wes was already on the bus sitting with Joey and Hunter.

Once he was sure that everyone was seated, Jerry took the driver's seat. "Thank you for choosing the AI Division Transportation Network!" He announced with a giggle. "Since we have some new passengers, I will go over the instructions once again. While the bus is in motion, we ask that you remain seated with your restraints fastened. At the rear of the bus, the restroom is on the right and the weapons locker is on the left; please do not confuse the two, Scott hates cleaning pee off of his guns. In the event of a hostile situation, please follow the instructions of Scott. Due to the shortness of the return trip, there will be no in-flight movie. Once again, thank you; I hope you enjoy your ride."

Across the aisle from me, Vicky gasped, "A boy is driving this bus?"

Nodding, I grinned, "More like steering, the VI George takes care of a lot. The division has the added bonus of their own guardian angel, so we couldn't be safer."

Behind me, Jonah hollered, "Hey Davie, are you joining us inside or playing dodge the stupid seagulls again?"

Davie appeared, floating down the middle of the aisle. "I'll ride inside, Jonah. Wanna play a couple of hands of Uno? Hey, Booger Breath, you gonna take off sometime today?"

"Find a seat, Angel Boy!" Jerry shot back. "Just because you're considered an angel, for some crazy reason, don't mean you can ignore the rules!"

Davie blew a raspberry at Jerry, then took a seat across the aisle from Jonah.

Jerry giggled, then activated the bus's controls. "Hey George, we're going home!"

"Computing traffic patterns to return to Headquarters," the bus replied, almost immediately followed by "Route confirmed, awaiting activation."

"Light 'em up, George, we're rolling," Jerry replied. Immediately, the lights began flashing once again on the front and rear of the bus, and Jerry carefully pulled onto Highway 17 southbound. Just as soon as we cleared the Myrtle Beach population center, the bus seemed to lower itself to the ground as Jerry began working his way up through the gears.

Reassuringly, I smiled at Les and Vicky, "Easy as pie."

Dillon wondered, "Who's makin' pie and what kind?"

I smirked, "Haven't you eaten enough already today? Aunt Mary's got dinner waiting on us too."

Dillon giggled, "I just feel really hungry today."

Jonah commented, "Maybe you're getting better, bro? Yesterday, a lot of kids were piggin' out at home. The pizzas at lunch were a big hit."

Nervously, Les wondered, "How fast are we going?"

Around us, about a dozen voices chanted, "Don't ask."

I nodded, "My best guess, on the way here in heavier traffic, we averaged about one hundred-forty miles-per-hour. Since it's late and traffic is lighter, I'll bet we'll be back in thirty minutes."

"Twenty-seven minutes and forty-two seconds," Jerry yelled back. "Rough guess, give or take a few seconds for wind."

"You'we siwwy, Dahdy!" Joey giggled as he began passing out emergency cookies from the box under his seat.

Taking a cookie, Dillon cheered, "Thanks, Joey."

Rolling my eyes, I warned, "You're gonna explode, Dillon." My littlest brother nodded and giggled around his cookie-stuffed mouth.

Vicky whimpered, "Where are we going?"

"Sullivan's Island, near Charleston," I answered.

Les groaned, "Myrtle Beach to Charleston is ninety-nine miles."

I nodded, "We'll exceed two hundred miles-per-hour, if Jerry and George have their figures right."

Still playing with Davie and not the least bit rattled, Jonah giggled, "Does Valium work on androids? Maybe we should call Aunt Janet?"

Again, Davie waved his arm, and then started whistling 'Magic Carpet Ride'. Les and Vicky snuggled together like newlyweds and didn't say another word about the speed of the bus.

Danny and KC were sitting in front of Les and Vicky, and I heard KC asking something that grabbed my attention. "Uncle Danny? What does it feel like to die?" he asked in an obviously worried voice.

Danny looked over at KC, and going by his expression what he saw on KC's face made him decide to be completely serious. "Is what you saw still bothering you that much?"

I saw KC nod his head. "Yeah."

Danny reached into a compartment next to him and pulled out an uplink cable. "I think we need to take this into private, kiddo. Do you mind doing a shared link so that I can talk openly?"

KC reached for one end of the cable and plugged it into his access port without a word, his answer obvious as he waited for Danny to do the same.

Danny turned his head before plugging in himself. "Marc, me and KC need to slip off for a private conference; could you make sure we get inside if we're not done by the time we get home?"

"Got ya', bro," Marc replied. "Good luck."

Paul and Ryan were sitting in the back of the bus, doing their best to be inconspicuous. I wanted to talk to them, so I decided to go to the restroom then I could remain back there with them to chat. Unbuckling my safety belt, I got up and went to the back of the bus.

Ryan was whispering excitedly in Paul's ear. I overheard a little before going into the restroom.

"This was the best day ever, bro. I think I like these guys. I think we may have found a home."

"Me too, bro. They seem to be really nice. Maybe we can make a home here."

While I was peeing, I thought a little about the two brothers. I had the impression that Paul's inner thoughts did not match what he said exactly. He really liked these guys, but they had suggested resetting certain portions of Ryan's positronic brain and purging the programming that made Ryan believe he was a flesh and blood boy. There was no way in hell Paul would let that happen. Paul had to believe that it would dramatically change who his brother is, and he couldn't let that happen. This was his brother Ryan and he was who he was, even if he thought he was a human boy. Washing my hands, I got worried thinking that they might want to run for it again.

I had to do or say something, but wasn't sure how to approach it. Drying my hands, I noticed the sharp cardboard edge of the paper towel dispenser, and grinned. They think flesh and blood makes them human. Well, I'm flesh and blood too; a humanoid boy with a positronic brain. Purposefully, I gritted my teeth and slid my hand along the cardboard edge, right along the fleshy bit at the base of my thumb near the wrist, giving myself a good inch-long paper cut. I held a fresh paper towel to the bleeding wound and stepped out of the restroom.

Sitting down beside the two brothers, I blushed and smirked, "Be careful of the paper towel dispenser, dudes," and then showed them the paper cut. Of course, they also saw a fair amount of blood on the paper towel too. "Paper cuts bleed like crazy," I grinned.

To my surprise, I noticed that Ryan reacted almost immediately and made a scrunched-up face while making a fist with his hand, while Paul, on the other hand, did just what Noah had talked about earlier. I watched as he scanned my hand before reacting. It was subtle, but there. It did a lot to ease my mind that you wouldn't notice unless you were looking for it.

"That looks painful," Ryan said in a sympathetic voice. "Do you need a doctor; maybe stitches? Oh, wow. What if it got infected and fell off? We better get you to a doctor immediately."

I noticed that Paul was watching me intently. I felt certain that he was sizing me up. I laughed. What was I going to say that would not drive Paul away? I grinned, "It stings like all paper cuts, but it won't need stitches; at worst, it'll need a band-aid. I'll hold this paper towel against it for a little while and it'll probably stop making a mess." Deciding to change the subject, I smiled, "You dudes raced really well at the go-cart track. KC and Danny were in the lead, Marc was behind them and I was pretty close to Marc. You two and Jerry were right behind me."

"Yeah, the go-carts were way cool. I don't think I ever went that fast," Ryan bubbled enthusiastically.

It made me smile to see him happy, and I could see that it was making Paul smile too.

"Wasn't that cool, bro?" Ryan exclaimed, as he turned a million megawatt grin on his brother.

"Yeah, bro. It was way cool, but why don't you turn it down a notch, okay? You're gonna break the seat bouncing on it like that."

Ryan folded his arms across his chest and put on an obviously mock-frown as he made a point of turning his head away from Paul. "Killjoy!" Then he suddenly turned and gave Paul the one-finger salute and made a funny face with his eyes all crossed and tongue sticking out.

Paul just shook his head.

"Oh! My name's Ryan and the grump over there is my little bro, Paul." I couldn't help noticing the emphasis he put on little.

I introduced myself to them and offered my unwounded left hand to knock-knuckles with them, then started telling them a very abridged version of my history, carefully avoiding any mention of being an android. I did choose to tell them that Jonah and Dillon were my new brothers, that we had two great dads, and lived in Ewa Beach, R.O.H., on Oahu. I hoped that my openness would rub off on them and they would open up to me too.

Paul looked me dead in the eyes and replied, "We didn't have it easy either. We had to live rough... you know, on the streets."

"Jeez, bro. You don't have to be such a heavy," Ryan said as he punched his brother in the arm. "I mean it sucked and all, but we got through it, right?"

I warmly smiled, "You two had each other. Unfortunately, I didn't have a brother at the time." I softly asked, "Do you dudes know why I'm here today?"

Paul looked me blankly in the eyes before he spoke. "I don't think I understand what you mean?"

I shrugged, "I don't live here. My brothers and I are only here for the day. My dad asked me to come here for a check-up and my bros decided to come with."

"Oh. I hope your results came back okay. They did, didn't they?" Ryan sounded genuinely worried.

"A check-up! What kind of check-up would you need to come to the AI division headquarters for?" Paul suddenly blurted out in a voice that had somehow become dangerous sounding.

Ryan turned and looked at his brother with a disbelieving look on his face. "Bro. Jeez! What's your problem?"

Quickly realizing that there was no backing down, regardless of Paul's intense glare, I locked eyes with Paul and sighed, "At the orphanage in Hawaii, the adults there were really bad. They used us kids for sex, prostitution, photography, like that. I'm an android, like Danny, Joey, KC and Marc. The orphanage adults used an incompatible device on me that periodically erased my memories. It caused a small problem, where I couldn't access any long term memories. Last night, another android named Austin fixed almost everything in only twenty minutes. Even though I'm healthy, my dad wanted to be sure everything was okay, so he sent me here, with Caleb and Noah. I don't really know these dudes, and they don't know me, still the guys here helped me. That's what Clan Short is about; kids helping other kids. The Clan doesn't care that I'm an android, or that I'm gay; they treat me like a brother, like every other real human kid."

Paul's eyes now betrayed a deep distrust. He looked like he would fly from the bus if he could.

"Oh wow. They messed you up pretty bad, huh?" Ryan said with such a sad look on his face that it twisted me up inside.

"Why are you talking to us? Who put you up to this? It's not going to work. You understand me? It's not going to work!" Paul's voice cut in like a knife. It was cold and distant.

"Paul, you stop it right now! He hasn't done anything. He's just talking to us. Why are you always like this?" Ryan had tears rolling down his cheeks.

"Nobody put me up to this, Paul," I quickly and firmly assured. "We just spent hours together, and I never got to talk with either of you. The reason we went to Myrtle Beach in the first place is because I asked to see my old stomping grounds. I had no purpose other than us getting to know each other. If that's too much, if you're prejudiced and can't deal with androids, I'll just go back to a seat away from you."

Paul did something then I had never expected. He curled up into a ball and began to sob.

Ryan suddenly threw his arms around his brother and held him tightly and tried to calm him down.

I was suddenly horrified. I had just wanted to help. I felt like crying myself and started to bolt for the other end of the bus. But I couldn't go. I felt a hand stopping me and Paul's voice trying to come through his sobs. "Sorry... I... don'..."

Turning and squatting down, I softly asked, "What is it?" Paul only shook his head. Ryan glanced at me with uncertainty clearly written on his face. So only Paul and Ryan could hear, I whispered, "Four days ago, I was a fuck-toy for perverted men. Since then, I learned to trust the Clan. If it wasn't for them, I still wouldn't know who I am or where I came from. If you can trust me, I'll help you trust them? It's up to you."

I watched Ryan look from Paul to me and back again in confusion out of the corner of my eyes.

Paul regained his composure enough to push forward.

"I don't trust anyone when it comes to keeping Ryan safe, but I will give you a chance to prove you guys aren't going to harm us." He said this loud enough for Ryan to hear unfortunately.

"What do you mean? I trust these guys. The Clan is great, bro," Ryan gushed without taking a breath.

Hunter had slipped by to the restroom when I was preoccupied, and somehow overheard us as he was coming out. He slid into the seat next to me and said simply, "You know I was dead, don't you?"

My head popped up and I stared at the younger boy, knowing he was human and not an android.

Paul was the first one to say something; the sarcasm dripping liberally from his mouth as he spoke. "So you are saying that you were raised from the dead?"

All Ryan was able to get out was a rather weak, "Oh?"

Hunter looked at the three of us for a second, then continued. "Dead dead, as in I met Saint Peter and went through the Gates. My father shot me because I wouldn't get out of the way when he tried to kill a kid in Montana. My body was even in the freezer at the morgue, in the hospital here in Charleston. Would you like to know why I'm here?"

Briefly glancing back at Caleb and seeing him mutely nod, I told Hunter, "Yeah, I'd like to know."

Paul looked at the boy with what could only be classified as hostile intent and spoke before Hunter could say anything. "Okay. I know we've seen angels and all that, but this is a bit much. What are you trying to pull here, boy? 'Cause whatever it is, I ain't buying."

Hunter's eyes flashed for a second. "If you don't believe me, Davie is sitting up front and he can show you exactly what I went through. You ain't never laid there with part of your brain replaced with shotgun shot, have you? Take a look at my head, I've got the scars; Saint Mikey was going to remove any signs of it, but I wanted a reminder of how not thinking for yourself can hurt someone."

"Fine, so you were dead. I believe you." Paul's voice sounded defeated to me. Then he continued in a mumble I almost couldn't make out. "But that doesn't mean I'm buying what you're selling."

Ryan suddenly turned to Paul. It was the first time I could see anger in his face. "Just stop it, Paul. Stop it!"

I softly wondered, "Why do you think any of us is trying to sell something to you? I mean, really, for what purpose would anyone try to deceive you?" Locking eyes with Paul, I gently assured, "All I want, and all anyone here wants, is to help you and Ryan, Paul. Some of us at the orphanages didn't trust Clan Short when they rescued us, but by the next night, they had proved it to us. Only one girl that was raped and had a forced abortion still had trust issues, but by Sunday night, even she was much better. You two are like I was, in a shitty situation where nothing was what it seemed to be. That's over now, but only if you can trust someone other than each other." Shedding tears, I sobbed, "I feel you. You want to run away as soon as this bus stops. If you do that, Jerry will be wrecked and I'll be just as bad, sitting in Ewa Beach, wondering if I said or did something wrong, if I'll ever see either of you again."

Ryan looked at me like I had grown another head. "What do you mean run away? I am not leaving. This is the first time in a long while we've had real beds and a place to stay that doesn't have stupid rules and crazy people trying to hurt us!"

I watched Paul look at his brother with what I could only call a combination of love and annoyance. He seemed to measure what he was about to say and stopped twice before he started as the rest of us looked at him and waited.

"I don't plan on running anywhere," Paul shared. "I don't know what things were like for you guys, but I learned one thing from being on the streets. Everyone wants something from you. Whether it's to join their stupid church, get you hooked on their drugs, be their damn slave, or just to make them feel important. Everyone wants something from you. But the one thing that everyone we got close to wanted was that they wanted Ryan to change who he is. There is nothing wrong with him. He is who he is and doesn't need fixing."

Hunter nodded. "According to the logs of the biobed, I was alive for over an hour after arriving at the hospital before I died. Two people took a chance on me; Caleb, who is now my new Dad, and has been with the Clan before it became a Clan, in fact before any of them had ever met an android, and KC, who was still adjusting to a brand new body, after being found at the bottom of Malibu Bay. That is over an hour, my Dad monitoring the biobed because he knows nothing about being a Doctor on humans, and Uncle KC, who did the best he could because he couldn't live with wondering if he might have saved me. They failed, and it broke both of their hearts; I know, because I saw them crying before I went to Up There."

"That's pretty intense, Hunter," Paul carefully said. "I mean seeing yourself dead. I can't imagine what that would be like. Guys, I know that you all aren't trying to hurt us, but I am not sure that everyone has our best interests at heart, even though that may be how they see it. All I heard when we got here was how they could help Ryan, but he doesn't need the type of help they want to give him. He is who he is and that is fine."

I watched as Ryan's face got a confused look on it. "What did they want to change, Bro?"

"It's not important, Ryan. Don't worry about it. You're my bro and that is all that matters," Paul said in a soft voice to his brother.

I could see that Paul was trying to keep things under control. My guess was that we had gotten too close to the subject of his brother thinking that he was not an android but human.

"Like in our Clan," I smiled. "Trust comes a little bit at a time. All I can suggest is giving us all the benefit of the doubt. I came here not knowing anyone and trusted them to do their best for me. After tonight, spending time away from headquarters and getting to know everybody, how they are in the real world, I mean, maybe you and Ryan can go in baby steps and allow simple checkups? All that matters to me is that I'll get to see you two again. I want to be able to come back here and have friends. Maybe you'd like to spend some time in Ewa Beach too, just to get away for a day?"

Hunter decided to add in his own two cents. "If Uncle Cory ever catches someone trying to change a person from being who they are, or someone doing something to someone without their permission, he'll sic Uncle JJ on them. You don't wanna mess with Uncle JJ; he likes taking out police stations just because they ain't doing what they're supposed to be doing!"

"Okay?" Was the questioning response we got from Paul and Ryan.

Then Paul spoke up. "Who is this Uncle JJ? I think I've heard his name," Paul exclaimed, "Wait, did you say took out a police station?"

Having just met JJ the previous day, I sniggered, "I heard about JJ's temper tantrums. I wish I had video of that!" Surprisingly, a video monitor lowered from the ceiling. On the video, I recognized JJ and Adam. The bottom of the screen read, Kokomo, IN, USA. I loudly laughed, "Who heard my wish?"

Almost at once, Marc, Caleb and Noah chorused, "George did it!"

On the video display, we watched and heard a slightly overweight Sergeant yell, "ON THE GROUND NOW PUNKS!"

JJ stared at the man in shock. "Is this how you greet all Federation Security Personnel?"

"You ain't no Goddamn Federation Security PUNK. Now both of you get your asses face down and spread eagled. You have ten-seconds to start moving." The Sergeant accentuated his point by cocking the riot gun he was pointing at the boys.

"Sergeant; I am Lieutenant James Richardson and my partner is Second Lieutenant Adam Short; we are both prepared to show identification to prove our identities. You fire that weapon and you'll wake up in a Federation holding cell; that is a promise."

"You are full of shit, punk; the Federation don't give kids weapons. Drop or you might be lucky and wake in a hospital. Three-seconds."

"Unconscious only, Mr. Short," JJ ordered. Adam barely had time to nod his head when the sound of a shotgun going off filled the room. As the buckshot ricocheted off of the boys and embedded itself in surrounding walls and furnishings, a white beam shot from each of the boy's arms and knocked the Sergeant unconscious.

"Who wants to join him?" Adam got out just before an officer to his right started to empty his clip in the boy's direction. As the bullets bounced off of the vicinity of Adam's chest, Adam let loose a yellowish bolt from his arm and the officer dropped to the ground. "Stop that!" Adam pointed towards an officer that was hit by one of the stray bullets. "Get that man a medic; and for Heaven's sake stop firing at us before someone gets killed!"

Three officers nodded at each other and opened fire at the same time, trying to overpower whatever JJ and Adam were protecting themselves with. "Screw this shit!" JJ exclaimed. He dropped to his knees and slammed his fist on the ground. A silver-white bubble of energy quickly expanded from him and knocked every officer that was holding a gun on the boys into the nearest wall, leaving all of them unconscious on the floor. Adam pulled his communicator. "Terra Main Security; Priority One transmission from Clan Short Security, Second Lieutenant Adam Short."

"Proceed with Priority One traffic Clan Short."

"I need a security detail at this location ASAP. The local police department attempted to use deadly force on our personnel upon our entry to the premises. Request Central US Security assume jurisdiction. We need medical teams standing by upon arrival at detention facility for one gunshot wound and multiple electrical stun injuries."

"Acknowledged. We have accessed their building monitoring system. Your support is on their way; my supervisor has reviewed the situation and requests that I inform you that Federation Security will prosecute them if you so wish."

Adam looked over at JJ, who was administering first aid to the downed officer. JJ nodded his assent, so Adam replied "My superior officer accepts the offer. Thank you." Starfleet medics and security beamed into view on the screen.

A minute later, the offending officers were gone and the Federation Security personnel began taking over operations. Adam accessed their computer and quickly found out where Brandon was in the building. JJ turned to a nearby Ensign and asked "Would you mind joining us? We are here to pick up a child; originally we were to accept custody under the SHA, but after the 'welcome' we got I'm not going to mess around. This will be a Clan Short extraction."

"I would be glad to, Sir," the Ensign replied. His superior came up behind them and asked "How did you cause so much damage, Lt. Richardson? And how did you escape injury?"

JJ smiled, "All I can say is it is experimental technology which Clan Short has been chosen to test."

Hunter cheered at the appropriate moments as we watched the video, booing officers who made the mistake of trying to cross his uncles. When JJ decided enough was enough, Hunter shoved his fist in the air in triumph. "Yeah, Uncle JJ!" he shouted.

"Holy shit! That was fuckin' BAD ASS!" Ryan hollered. I watched him excitedly bounce in his seat.

Paul on the other hand had developed what I could only assume was a scared expression. "Excuse me a moment," he softly muttered, "I need to stretch my legs."

He did not wait for anyone to answer and made his way toward the front of the bus. I decided to see if he was going to be all right. I thought I might understand why he was having the reaction he did. He might just be thinking that he had just been given a lesson in what happens when you do not do what the Clan wants. In some respects that was true, but only in response to a dangerous situation where they are met with force.

"Paul?" I gently called and reached for his shoulder.

He swiftly spun around and raised his fists, as if preparing for an attack. Lowering his arms and fists, Paul huffed, "Sorry."

I asked, "What is it that you think you just saw?"

I could see the tears starting to stream down his face. Then barely above a whisper, he answered me. "That's what happens when you go against what the Clan wants."

"No, that is what happens to people who hurt the kids the Clan is protecting," Hunter stated factually.

I nodded, "There are bad people that want to hurt the Clan. Around base last night, and again this morning, there was talk of a problem when some of our Clan went to rescue some kids. One of my orphanage brothers is now a Clan leader. His name is Kaleo. At the rescue, a kid planted by the Fundamentalist Church of Christ tried to infiltrate our base. Kaleo had a hissy fit and cussed him out, then hit him. The dude tried to go after Kaleo. That's when both Starfleet security guys stunned his ass. You and Ryan couldn't be safer, Paul."

The almost defeated look in Paul's eyes concerned me, but I knew that only time would build the trust that Paul needed.

"Okay. If you say so. Well, I mean no one has really tried to hurt us. I mean... I guess," Paul said, his voice becoming barely audible by the end.

"Bro. It's okay. They aren't like the other people. I really don't think they are," Ryan said as he made to hug his brother. Turning his head to everyone else he added, "Guys, don't take it personal. He don't trust no one, even me. He's been wrong 'bout people before and I got hurt real bad." Turning to his brother he held up a pinky and Paul slowly hooked his around it. Ryan smiled and said, "Bro, you know this is different. Give 'em a chance."

Paul smiled weakly at his brother, then turned to me. "Well, I think I can trust you, Reyes. You aren't a bullshitter, of that I'm sure. And the Clan, well... I mean look at what they did for Hunter and for you. I mean, anyone who would go to that much trouble for someone they don't know has to have a good point or two. So I guess the Clan can't be all bad." The words sounded sincere to me, but the look on his face still made me worry.

I sighed, "When you spend six years in an orphanage, getting raped and abused so you can eat a meager meal, what's wrong with having a warm bed, plenty of food whenever you want it, and nothing asked of you except caring for a family that cares about you? Life couldn't be better, if you want my honest opinion."

Hunter nodded as he chimed in. "You know who they were rescuing? They were there to get Austin's human 'little brother'; the only survivor of the family that Austin lived with before he was kidnapped. They did all of that just because Austin knew him and wanted to make sure he was alive and okay. Dad told me all about it. The Clan don't care what you are, they just want you to be happy and doing stuff that you like doing. Dad's teaching me computer stuff because I like it, and now me and Wes are gonna get to help with putting in a new computer in the AI Compound!"

I shared, "My dad is teaching me to play drums."

Jonah gushed, "And our pop is teaching me to play guitar."

Joey piped up from his seat. "Uncah Pauly, Dahdy is deachin' me howda build mowe Andwoids!"

I watched as Paul smiled at Hunter's enthusiasm, and as his grin grew and became more relaxed and open with each kid that spoke. I noticed that Joey pushed him over the top. After starting and stopping a couple of times, he finally spoke. "You have a special dad, Joey. He has spent a lot of time talking to me and trying to get me to realize that things are going to be all right, but that is kinda hard for me to believe after all this time. You know it's so cool that you guys have found someone to be a family with, but it's been just me and Ryan against the world for a long time. Look, I know I'm a pain in the ass, but I don't know how to be anything else. It really is the only thing that kept us alive." I watched as he shook his head. Then he got a conspiratorial look on his face and he leaned toward Hunter. "You know that was BAD ASS, what your uncle JJ did. I mean that was so cool."

At last there was a visible crack in Paul's defenses. Jerry hollered, "Okay, you guys, if you'll all park your butts in seats again, I can slow this bus and park it so George can chill for the night!"

"But Uncle Jerry, my butt don't got a shifter!" Hunter giggled as he plopped himself in Marc's lap.

Giggling, Paul, Ryan and I returned to the back row of seats and buckled our seat belts. In another minute or two, we were off highway 17. Not too long later, we had slowed considerably and were pulling into AI Division Headquarters driveway. When the bus had stopped, I released my safety belt and stood. Paul and Ryan followed me down the aisle, but we had to stop and wait for Marc.

"Daileass, could you please transport these two to Danny's bedroom?" Marc asked with a wicked grin as he stopped next to the two connected androids. "Maybe even some soft music playing for when they wake up?" he added mischievously.

"No problem, bro," Daileass giggled, "How about 'The Girl from Ipanema' on the pan flute?"

"That works!" Marc replied. "See if he makes butt comments in public again," he added under his breath with a giggle.

Danny and KC disappeared from the bus. Marc, Paul, Ryan and I cracked up and exited the bus. Parked beside the bus was the '64 Corvette that belonged to Les. It was candy-apple red, and even in the limited light of the driveway, the car sparkled. Les was impressed and raving, "My baby hasn't looked this good in forty years, since I drove it off the lot."

I pointed and prodded, "There's something on the driver's seat, Les."

Unlocking the doors, Les leaned over and reached in. In his hand was a shiny foil wrapped mint and a note that read; This vehicle prepared by Scooby Gang Detailing. I sputtered, then turned away and roared laughing. Many yards away and approaching the house, Jonah and Dillon were occupied with Wes, Hunter and Joey. I couldn't wait to tell Derrick and Mike about Scooby Gang Detailing.

As we walked toward the house, I told Les, Vicky, Paul and Ryan about my ferret brothers and sisters, including some more stuff about my dad and pop. We were about halfway to the house when Willy came running out and pounced Joey.

"Wiwwy!" Joey hysterically cackled, "Whewe was you hiding? We wend fow a wide do Mywdwe Beach and you missed id!"

Amazingly, Scott and Marc were already in position behind Vicky. The sight of a panther pouncing an eight-year-old android was too much for her, and she proved that androids could faint just like a human.

Les gasped and lurched to catch his wife, but she was already safe, draped unconscious in Scott's and Marc's arms. Les sighed, "Maybe mentioning the panther would've been a good idea?"

I shrugged and grinned, "Maybe, but look at how telling you the bus' speed worked out." Davie floated past us, innocently whistling the REO Speedwagon hit, Time For Me to Fly.

Jerry laughed at his brother's antics. "You knew this was gonna happen, didn't ya bro?"

"Maybe," Davie giggled. He made a point of paying attention to Dillon, who was on the ground in the process of being 'welcomed' by Willy, complete with a thorough face cleaning to remove any traces of leftover food.

Les and I took hold of Vicky's legs to help Scott and Marc carry her into the house. We placed her down on a sofa and propped her legs up with some pillows.

Mary came walking into the room, carrying smelling salts. "How far did she make it?" she asked me with a knowing smile as she administered the smelling salts.

"Almost halfway," I giggled. "It was Willy's fault." The words had only left my lips when a conniving panther leaped and we both tumbled to the floor.

"That's a new record... you're slipping," Mary chortled as she reached down and scratched Willy's ears. She then turned to Les. "Welcome to the asylum; unfortunately the inmates have taken over, so there is no escape. We had a psychiatrist, but the boys drove him insane within the first thirty-six hours. I'm Mary. Jerry, Davie, Paul, and Ryan are mine. My husband Jon is on his way over now. Would you like a coffee?"

Sitting down near his recovering wife, Les smiled, "Yes, with only a splash of milk, please."

From the kitchen, Caleb squealed, "Eww! Gross!"

"Most NORMAL people like sugar with their coffee, not the other way around!" Marc yelled back. "You're just gross!"

Glancing around for my brothers, but not seeing them, I soon heard Dillon, Jonah, Joey and Hunter hollering "DINNER!" I followed the sound to find my brothers already sitting at a huge table with Rich and John. Obviously finished with Danny and awake, KC hurried past me and found a seat. I took a chair near my brothers. Entering the room behind me were Caleb, Noah, Jerry, Willy, Danny, Marc, Paul, Ryan, Scott, Mary and her husband Jon. The table was loaded with bowls and platters of food, ready to be served, including boiled jumbo shrimp, country-fried steak with mashed potatoes, glazed baked ham with pineapple and cherries, country gravy and fried okra, string beans, fresh baked bread, butter, and various salads. Off to the side were pumpkin and apple pies for dessert.

Mary went into the kitchen and came back out carrying a platter of raw steaks, which she placed in front of Willy. "Keep your paws off the table, and no eating until everyone else gets served," she reminded the panther.

Willy looked up at her, nodding his head before turning it back and looking longingly at the steaks in front of him.

Everyone briefly bowed their heads. When the last head popped up, hands flew everywhere, bowls and platters were passed around and the chatter level quadrupled. Thanking Aunt Mary for the wonderful Southern meal she had prepared, I was helping serve Dillon when I suddenly felt something rub past my leg.

Charles wondered, "Has that food been sampled?"

"We need to make sure our pets are properly fed," Patch added.

"Laps only, kittens, or no tuna for the night time snack," Mary announced, which led to the sighting of kitten heads poking up in various places all around the table, including one on Danny's lap.

Patch appeared on Jonah's lap. A moment later, I felt Charles making himself a comfy spot on my lap. Missy found herself a spot on Dillon's lap and peeked over the table edge. One glare from Aunt Mary and Missy lowered her head below the table though.

I loaded my plate with country-fried steak, mashed potatoes, string beans and drowned it all in country gravy. Dinner conversation began with telling Aunt Mary and Uncle Jon about our trip to Myrtle Beach. For me, the best part was that the beach side of Ocean Boulevard had not been over-developed with hotels. The efficient mass transit system was a great addition, making all of the city accessible in about thirty minutes. The boardwalk hadn't changed much since I last saw it; some of the concessions had moved around and the cabanas with live music were added, but it still felt very familiar and homey to me.

"I thought they had horse and buggies back then, bro," KC teased.

I grinned, "Nope, petroleum fueled engines." Soft chortling traveled around the table. I smiled, "They already had cars when Danny was first activated."

Shaking his head, Marc giggled, "They hadn't developed the wheel yet."

Danny grinned and warned, "Careful."

Marc giggled, then started humming the melody of Girl from Ipanema and I joined him. A moment later Aunt Mary and Uncle Jon joined us. Danny and KC groaned.

To change the subject, Danny asked me what my favorite songs were. In reverse chronological order, I remembered; "From the early 1980's, Hall & Oates: Kiss On My List and I Can't Go for That. There were so many great tunes from the seventies, but Kansas' Carry On Wayward Son and Boston's More Than a Feeling stand out. From the sixties, Jay and The Americans: Come a Little Bit Closer and This Magic Moment were big hits, and of course everything by The Beatles. Before that, my first dad influenced a lot of what I listened to, like Artie Shaw, Benny Goodman, Count Basie, Dave Brubeck, Duke Ellington, Glenn Miller and Harry James.

KC grinned at me and teased, "You're showing your age, Reyes."

I reminded, "While you were floating with fishies in Malibu Bay, I was working my ass off and periodically getting my memory zapped. You're only five years younger than me."

"But in a brand new body," KC giggled.

"On the beach, after supper, KC," I challenged. With their mouths stuffed, Dillon and Jonah looked up at me like I had lost my mind.

KC laughed, "For what; ya gonna beat me up, old man?"

"You won on the go-cart track. Let's see how good your legs work," I grinned. "A mile out and a mile back again. Remember, I'm eleven pounds lighter than normal and have been running in the sand for thirty-five of my fifty-six years. We'll see if you can do more than run off at the mouth or not." Around the table, mooing and giggling broke loose. I was more than certain I could run at least as fast as KC and had a very good chance of beating him.

Marc grinned, "Is this a closed race or open to anyone?"

I shrugged, "It doesn't matter," and then giggled, "It's open to anyone that wants to lose, I guess." Mooing erupted around the table and Dillon cracked up.

Jonah laughed, "You're so bad, bro. Don't tell anyone you've been running around in the sand with me on your back."

Jerry sniggered, "Let's do an androids only race then. I gotta admit, I'd like to see the results of that."

Joey wondered, "Can I wun dhe wace doo, Dahdy?"

"Sure, kiddo," Jerry smiled.

Right after dinner and the table had been cleared, everyone went outside to the beach. Danny, Marc, KC, Joey and I lined up. Jerry called for a starter pistol, then announced, "Okay, let's have a nice clean race, guys. That means no tripping or shoving...."

"Yeah, Cwash!" Joey giggled.

"I'll be too far ahead of you for you to worry about that, Twerp!" KC replied with a grin.

Stretching and getting ready to run, I realized the jeans I was still wearing were far too constricting, so I stripped off all my clothes. Danny whimpered, "So, I guess Reyes is like the pace car."

"When in Rome," KC giggled as he also stripped.

"Awesome! Weez wacin' nekkid!" Joey exclaimed as he ripped his clothes off.

Danny and Marc shrugged, then also stripped. Off by the dune, all the spectators began giggling. Loudest among them were my brothers and Paul and Ryan.

Jerry pointed and smiled, "Way down by 23rd Street is a pier that's about a mile away, give or take a few feet. Swing around the first pontoon and the first one back here wins." He paused and asked, "Does everyone understand the rules?" Everyone seemed to focus on KC and I cracked up.

"Don't look at me!" KC whined. "I'm not the one who got picked as a Division head for making his own rules whenever he wants!"

Raising his arm with the starter pistol, Jerry giggled, "Okay, you clowns, on your marks..." Unexpectedly, Danny and KC jumped Marc and knocked him over in the sand. The spectators along the dune cracked up.

Joey rolled his eyes as he giggled. "Dhey's siwwy, ain'd dhey, big bwo?"

I nodded, "Actually, I think you're my only competition, Joey."

"WEAWWY?" Joey asked in awe.

Pointing at the three giggling goons trying to stand up, I smiled, "We can beat these guys easily."

"Yeah, dhey's old and swow," Joey giggled wickedly.

Jerry waited for Danny, KC and Marc to stand before quickly saying, "get set," and then fired the pistol.

As I expected, Joey and I were in the lead at the start of the race. I warned my young brother, "Pace yourself, Joey. Two miles is rough. Two miles in the sand at top speed will wear you out fast." I noticed that Jonah, Dillon, Hunter, Paul and Ryan were jogging along the dune, probably to make certain we all played by the rules.

Soon, I was passing the lighthouse, with Joey only a yard or two behind me. I could hear Danny, Marc and KC giggling and passing silly remarks about catching my bouncing butt.

It seemed obvious by the time Joey and I passed the Edgar Allan Poe Library that Danny, Marc and KC weren't really trying too much. I was keeping a nice even pace though and really not pushing anywhere near my capabilities. Approaching the pier, I realized that maybe Marc, Danny and KC would try to catch up on the return trip down the beach. Along the dune, Jonah, Dillon, Paul and Ryan were cheering Joey and me along.

Going around the pier pontoon, I made sure to keep my eyes on Danny, Marc and KC, in case they decided to break the rules and tackle me. I couldn't be sure, but it seemed KC at least was trying to pour on the juice and catch up. Noticing Joey was slowing down, I asked him if he was okay.

Joey nodded, "Geddin' tiwed."

"Can you make it without cramping?"

"Dunno," Joey huffed.

I slowed down and prompted, "Jump on my back, Joey."

"You'ww wose, Weyes!"

"No I won't, I promise," I insisted. Joey leaped onto my back and KC made it much closer to us, but I turned up the juice and sprinted away.

Joey laughed, "You'we wosin', Cwash!"

"Just wait, Twerp. I'll wave as I pass you!" KC shot back with a laugh.

I sniggered, "He's dreaming, Joey. I spent most of the day Saturday running around a beach with Jonah or Dillon on my back."

Joey giggled, "I'ww jump off ad dhe wighdhouse, Weyes. You godda bead Casey."

"I will, Joey," I promised, "just by a bigger margin if you jump off, so don't jump off, this way we both win."

"Uncah Mawc and Uncah Dahny is cadchin' up," Joey warned.

Along the dune, I heard Paul and Ryan making announcements like it was a horse race. Jonah and Dillon were hysterical.

"You keep wunnin' an' I'ww keep wadchin'," Joey offered helpfully.

From the dune, Ryan hollered, "Passin' the lighthouse and we're in the final stretch with Reyes and Joey in the lead, KC in second place and the two geezers in a tie for third!"

"I'll give you 'geezer', kiddo!" Danny yelled back.

Up ahead, I could see Jerry and Caleb holding a yellow tape across the beach. KC tried to sprint ahead, but I leaned forward, allowing Joey's weight to force my legs to move faster and keep us balanced. We got ahead of KC again and Joey began cheering, "You god id, Weyes! Casey is wosing sdeam!"

At the dune, Dillon, Jonah and Ryan cracked up. Paul shouted, "Marc is waving his thingie at Danny, and the ancient one has collapsed in the sand. This race is, dare I say it, in the bag!"

I hit the ribbon chest first and Joey screamed, "We won! Weyes bead you cawwyng me, Cwash!"

Slowing my pace to a jog, I circled around the beach with the yellow ribbon flapping in the breeze. Joey jumped off my back and followed me around as I slowly cooled down. Soon, I had my brothers, KC, Paul, Ryan, Caleb, Noah and Hunter congratulating me. Coming over with Danny, Marc giggled, "Good race, Reyes."

Jerry sniggered, "Danny came in third. Marc was disqualified for breaking the rules."

"My dick was floppin' around anyway," Marc grinned. "I just made sure Danny got a good look."

KC smirked, "How?"

Shrugging, I smiled and gestured at my own body, explaining, "This isn't a belly; it's distended from not being fed enough. I spent twenty-one years in an orphanage. The last six years we didn't get fed, unless we performed for pedophiles. Since getting rescued by the Clan last Friday, it's no lie, bro, I've been carrying Jonah and Dillon around beaches with energy to burn. Plus the fact that I've always lived around beaches and know how to run in the sand."

Holding out a clenched fist, KC smiled, "I underestimated you, bro."

Knocking knuckles with KC, I shrugged, "That's never a good thing. About a hundred people in the R.O.H. over-estimated their position and underestimated the Clan. The asshole that Kuan Ti and you guys dealt with earlier was just one of those that made that same mistake."

After getting dressed again, Danny led they way back to the house. He said, "It's time for some late night jamming before Reyes, Jonah and Dillon have to leave and the rest of us go to bed." Turning and walking backward, Danny smiled at me and said, "I'd like to hear what you can play."

Blushing, I giggled, "I play mostly hand percussion, but my new dad has been teaching me to play a drum kit too."

Joey gushed, "I can pway weguwah dwums and ewecdwonic dwums doo."

Leading the way down to the basement, Danny asked, "What do you need, Reyes?"

I rattled off, "Bongos, congas, chimes, cowbell, maracas, tambourine and timbales. With a full acoustic drum kit, I can try some of what Derrick's been teaching me." Only a few steps behind me, Jonah excitedly rambled on about the song I had played earlier that day.

Off to the side of the basement AI lab there was another room filled with all sorts of drums, percussion and musical instruments. There was also two electric guitars and an acoustic guitar. I pointed at them and wondered, "Who plays guitar?"

"I do," KC grinned.

I giggled, "I should've known. Mike Gibbons plays guitar..."

"That's our pop," Jonah gushed, "He can play anything and make it look easy."

I nodded and told KC, "I missed a lot in twenty-one years, but I hung around a lot of musicians before the orphanage. On guitar, Mike can blow them all away."

Gesturing to the drums, Danny prompted, "Show us what you can do, Reyes."

Alone, I walked over to where the hand percussion instruments were arranged near a drum kit. At first, I concentrated on the bongos and congas, recalling much of what I had learned many years ago from Derek Taraschke and started playing at about one-hundred-sixteen beats per minute. While I was playing, I started organizing what Derrick Seibert had played and been teaching me. After about sixteen measures I moved over to play the drum kit. My little solo lasted about two minutes, but I noticed Dillon and Jonah with their jaws hanging open. The rest of the guys down in the basement were widely smiling too, so I guess they liked what I was playing.

Joey sat at the electronic drum kit and counted off a tempo, then he and I began playing for a few minutes. KC added some gritty electric guitar to our groove. It was pretty good and the three of us played for a few more minutes. Since I never played electronic drums before, I asked Joey to show me what his kit could do and tried it out for a few more minutes. I would have to ask my dad to get me an electronic kit like Joey's.

It was getting late and our hosts had been more than kind for many hours. Jonah and Dillon called our new kittens. Marc had Daileass get us three kitty-carriers for the short trip. We had three boy kittens and three girl kittens from three different litters. We started hugging and saying goodbye to everybody from the AI Division. I could tell by the stunned expression Jerry wore that he was surprised as I when Paul and Ryan embraced me, promising they would visit Ewa Beach someday soon. Jonah and Dillon had their radio controlled go-carts and Dillon had his Teddy bear too. I tapped my comm-badge and called for Peter Lambert.

No sooner had I made the call than Peter popped into existence in front of us, wearing a 1940s-style chauffeur's cap and a change-making device around his waist. He pressed the 'quarters' lever, which dispensed a foil-covered chocolate coin, which he handed to Dillon. He clicked it twice more, for treats for Joey and Jonah. "Ready to go home?" he asked.

I grinned and nodded, "Yep. Can you get us home before dinner, with a little time to spare so we can introduce our kittens?"

Inside the kitty-carrier, Charles griped, "I am not happy."

His sister Charlette warned, "Step on my tail again, and be prepared to be ripped to shreds."

"Sure!" Peter replied cheerfully. In Cat, he added, "I'll have you to your new home and out of those carriers faster than you can pounce a catnip mouse."

From three kitty-carriers, a chorus of meows erupted, all encouraging Peter to get them where they were going quickly. Jonah and Dillon cracked up.

Peter then surprised us all by popping over and hugging Paul. He looked questioningly at Ryan, who held up his arms. Peter then hugged him too. "Listen, guys, I don't want to put any more pressure on you," he said to them. "But when the Clan found me, I was dying of cancer, and had a week to live. One of them took me, on his first day of life yet, and made me into this, so's I can help people ways that most folks can't."

"Jeez! It's bad enough with everyone giving me random advice, now I got 'em popping out of fucking nowhere giving random hugs," Paul said, but I noticed he did not have his previous combative tone. If anything it sounded a little tired, but a smile was threatening to break out on his face.

I noticed Ryan had a goofy grin on his face. "Random hugs are nice, bro! You're just a grump. I mean the Clan helped him to beat his cancer. That's great, right?"

"Yes, it's great he got help, bro. No really, I mean it," Paul said as he shook his head.

"Yep! A Grump!"

I found myself stifling a laugh as Paul gave Ryan a tortured look. I really had to wonder which brother was more of a helper.

Returning to Jonah, Dillon and me, minus his chauffeur's cap and change-maker, Peter giggled, "Here we go, guys!" Having been transported a few times, let me just say that Mikyvis transportation seemed fairly different, maybe because we were time-shifting too. For less than a second, I saw a blur of colors that went from dark to extremely bright, like a kaleidoscope with many thousands of colors. It was so different, I had to wonder if it was normal. Immediately upon arrival, I blurted out my question to Peter, Jonah and Dillon. "Did all you guys see colors?"

"Colors? While I was transporting you?" Peter asked. When all three of us agreed, he said, "For us Mikyvis, we can see all times and places at once, though we usually just look at what we're interested in. I don't get any sense of traveling; it's just like sitting in the living room watching TV, then deciding to go to the kitchen, you just get up and go." He giggled, "Be glad it wasn't Dilly. His 'short cuts' usually involve three alternate universes!"

My brothers and I thanked Peter for his help and so did all six kittens.

"Any time, guys!" he said, "I'm only a shout away." And he vanished.

We were standing in the center lawn of the four Rimmer family homes. With as many weird things that happened while we were with the AI Division, the day felt weirder simply because the sun was still up and we had just spent hours at night time. By the Sun's position in the sky, I estimated it was probably about five o' clock in the afternoon. Our first order of business was to take care of our kittens and get our dad and pop caught up on some of what had happened. I knew I could use my comm-badge, but I hadn't really paid attention to any of the Core Rimmers when they used theirs, so I tapped the thing and uncertainly called, "Reyes to Derrick, come in dad?"

Excitedly, Derrick replied, "Where are you, Reyes?"

"And how did you get a comm-badge?" Mike hollered.

Dillon and Jonah began giggling. I grinned, "We're by the houses, and Danny got us comm-badges because we went off base, to Myrtle Beach. We've got a few other things to talk about too."

Jonah laughed, "Like where our kittens can live."

After a brief pause, Derrick softly queried, "You came back with kittens?"

"Six of 'em," I sniggered.

Mike laughed, "We sent you to get your systems checked, Reyes."

I chuckled, "Yeah, they did that, and a bit more." All we heard over the comm-badge was our dad and pop laughing.

Surprisingly, my comm-badge chirped. I tapped it and responded, "This is Reyes."

"Hi Reyes, it's Jimmy, in the Command Center. We were just called by the AI Division. They wanted you to know that Peter just popped back to give Paul and Ryan another set of random hugs."

I giggled, "Kewl. Thanks, Jimmy."

In moments, Dillon, Jonah and I saw our dad and pop running toward us from the pool area.

Charles, Patch and the other four kittens meowed unhappily, "Let us out of these cages!"

Looking into the kitty carriers, Jonah giggled, "Just a few more minutes. We want you to be safe."

The black and white spotted female kitten named Missy whined, "I gotta pee!"

Jonah put his carrier down in the grass saying, "Stay close to us for now, okay?" He then opened the cage door. Dillon put his carrier down and gave the same instructions to Patch and Riley. Patch, Riley, Missy and Natalie cautiously stepped out and into the grass.

Charles and Charlette, in the kitty carrier I was holding, were softly planning my assassination if they weren't let out of the cage in twenty-seconds. I quickly put the kitty carrier down. "Lucky, very lucky," Charles meowed as he stepped out of the carrier.

Stepping outside, Charlette warned, "We won't be cute little kittens forever."

I pointed towards Mike and Derrick, jogging in our direction, and told the kittens, "That's our dad and pop. They're Clan leaders, so be nice or they'll have you transported to the Northeast Division, where it snows six months out of the year."

Charles wondered, "What's northeast?"

Charlette asked, "What's transported?"

Patch mused, "And what is snow exactly?"

Jonah smiled, "Snow is cold and wet."

After a kitten outburst of disgust, all six looked up at me and purred, "Touché."

Derrick and Mike slowed their approach. Mike softly moaned,

"Aww, they're so little and cute!"

Bouncing over to Mike, Charles purred, "I like him."

"And they're both cute too," Charlette purred.

Our dad and pop hugged each one of us and then we all sat down on the grassy ground so they could meet the kittens and catch up on the day.

Sitting on Mike's lap, Dillon asked, "Is it supper time yet, pop?"

Jonah and I cracked up before Mike could answer, causing both our dads to grin and glance around for an explanation.

I sniggered, "Dillon's been eating almost constantly since breakfast this morning," and then rattled off the long list of meals and snacks consumed by Dillon while we were away. Even the kittens were hysterical, bouncing and climbing around Dillon.

Snuggling with Dillon, Mike laughed, "We'll head over to the CIC for dinner in about fifteen minutes."

Derrick locked eyes with me and asked, "How're you doin'?"

"I'm really good, dad," I smiled. "Danny Page, the first android ever, ran some diagnostics on me, and updated my software a little more."

Joyfully, Jonah burst, "Reyes is like John was before yesterday, empathetic, from dealing with the crap at the orphanage."

Mike and Derrick chimed, "Really?"

I nodded, "They gave me some additional code and a manual to deal with that, so I'm able to integrate it fully over time. They also replaced the access panel on my uplink port. Most surprisingly, they were able to catalog and organize my memories from the orphanage too. I was able to tell them when the abuses started, September 1998, and who started it, the Prime Minister of the R.O.H. at the time. The AI Division has already sentenced him." Glancing at Jonah and Dillon, I softly told my dads, "I'll tell you more about that another time."

Mike nodded and wondered, "How much do you remember?"

"Not a lot," I scowled, "about fifty hours worth of various short memories. When I first got to the orphanage in 1983, it wasn't great, but it wasn't as horrible as it got after 1998."

Dillon gushed, "It was an angel named Davie that helped Reyes remember. Davie said he'd come visit us sometime soon."

Again, Mike and Derrick locked eyes with me. I nodded and chuckled, "Yeah, one of the guys there, named Jerry, had an older brother that died, and he's the Division's guardian angel."

Mike grinned, "Are you sure you're all right?" Dillon, Jonah and I cracked up and nodded.

Derrick chuckled, "Let's get the kittens set up in their own special place." All six kittens began complaining about being put into the kitty carriers again. Derrick called, "Alden, transport the five of us and all six kittens to my basement." A second later, we were all sitting on the carpeted floor of the Seiberts' basement.

Mike called, "Alden, get us two litter boxes and enough food and water dishes for our new pets, please, dude?"

Derrick asked the gathered kittens if they had a food preference. They all liked the dry kibble that they had been eating, so Derrick had Alden get that brand of food, a few warm beds, and various toys and scratching posts for them too.

In one corner of the basement the food dishes were lined up, two large scratch and climbing posts were set up and three soft kitty beds were placed. In the opposite corner, well away from their food and play area, two large covered litter boxes appeared. The kittens scattered to check out their new accommodations.

Standing up with Dillon on his hip, Mike smiled, "Now that the kittens are happy, let's go to the CIC. We've gotta tell Derrick's mom that she's got pets, and get Dillon fed before he withers away."

Mike and Dillon led the way upstairs with Jonah, me and Derrick following. Derrick asked, "What else did you dudes do while you were away?"

I answered, "We took a bus ride to Myrtle Beach. I got to see my old house and neighborhood. Which reminds me, we have buses on order, paid for by the assets of the ex-Prime Minister that was confiscated by Clan Short."

Derrick nodded, "Kewl, we could use them to get kids off base, hopefully soon."

While Mike, Dillon and Jonah went outside, I paused and softly told my dad, "We'll have two hundred buses, forty at each base." Watching Derrick's eyes widen and his mouth drop open, I giggled, "They're not your standard buses either. They're tour buses and have like, first class, plush seating, and a bunch of Clan niceties too."

Leading me out through the open door, Derrick chuckled, "They are paid for, right?"

Nodding, I smirked, "That bastard lived in luxury off money made from prostituting us kids. That money is now the Clan's, dad."

Derrick laughed, "I'll tell Prez. He'll be thrilled, I'm sure!"

"Those buses can break two-hundred miles-per-hour, dad," I giggled, "I know, because we went that fast, from Myrtle Beach back to Sullivan's Island in under thirty minutes. You guys will need special training to drive them. Contact Danny to get the training lined up."

"Okay," Derrick roared, "I'll gently tell Prez, when he's in a good mood."

Ahead of us, Dillon and Jonah were excitedly rambling, telling Mike about all the food they ate and the fun they had while away.

Thankful that Derrick was taking all this in stride, I giggled, "When we got back to AI headquarters, we had a big dinner. Then we jammed for about another half an hour before coming home. I got to play congas, bongos, a drum kit like yours and an electronic drum kit too. It's been a long day, dad. It was almost three in the morning when we left South Carolina. Peter Lambert transported us home and back in time."

Derrick nodded, "Are you tired?"

"Not in the least, surprisingly," I answered.

"Good," Derrick softly said and slowed his pace considerably. He then whispered, "Joel's father is Admiral Spock, from Starfleet, and we're all now considered nieces and nephews. Prez wants to take advantage of that, while Uncle Spock is here. If everything works out, dinner will end with at least three weddings, possibly as many as five; definitely me and Mike, Prez and Keith, and Drew and Corey, and possibly Kaleo and Tory and John and Stephen."

"That's awesome!" I cheered.

"I know," Derrick smiled. "Prez said he'd talk with Uncle Spock, so we're not all surrounding him. All we can do is wait, but I want you and your brothers there to witness our marriage."

I happily giggled, "It's been a busy day here too, I guess."

As we walked into the CIC, Derrick told me about the jazz band concert that morning, about the short jam session they had with Troy Faris that afternoon, and a little about the phaser training. Once we were inside, Mike chatted with Prez, so our division leader knew that Dillon, Jonah and I had been given comm-badges while in Charleston. Derrick found his mom and told her about the kittens. Then our family sat down to eat. Jonah asked where John was. Dad told us that John and Stephen had gone with Joel and Kevin for a tour of the Enterprise. Jonah and Dillon were told about the planned weddings too.

Everything got more exciting when John, Stephen, Joel and Kevin returned from their tour. I could barely hear Admiral Kirk explaining what had happened, but I did hear that all four had been promoted in rank and received commendations for their service that day. While chatter around the dining room got louder because of the four heroes in the room, it was obvious that the Hundsers' and Stephen's mom were upset.

Derrick, Mike, Prez and Keith gathered to try and set everything right. The four members of Platinum Habits started singing and dancing to calm the stressed out adults. After two songs, both of which I table-drummed along to, everything seemed to be back to normal. Then the dining room lights went out and three of our chefs rolled out three large sheet cakes filled with candles for Kaleo. While we were gone, Kaleo's birthday was discovered. I hurried over there to be amongst the first few that congratulated Kaleo. Of course, Kaleo wanted to know all about what had happened while I was gone, but he had the entire Rimmer clan lining up for cake and to offer him birthday wishes. I promised him that I'd get with him, Tory and Liki soon to share all the news.

I had made it back to our table with cake and just finished it when Prez stood and went over toward Uncle Spock. In moments, all the couples and their sons were standing, anxiously waiting to learn if the marriages would or wouldn't happen. When Prez smiled, nodded and waved us over, my excitement quadrupled. I hadn't witnessed a wedding since 1972, when Akamu got married to Hakumele. This ceremony was less formal, but still quite thrilling because it turned out that all five couples were to wed. I almost cracked up laughing during the ceremony because Mike was so happy, he was swinging his and Derrick's arms back and forth in delight. For me, it was so kewl because Kaleo was up there with Tory too. All at once, my dads, our leaders and two of my best friends in the world were promising their eternal love before the entire Pacific Rim Division. The room seemed to explode in loud applause after John and Stephen made their vows. Then we noticed Uncle Spock returning to Keith and Prez. Everyone was turning to me to know what was now happening, but I didn't have a clue until I heard John in my mind, saying, 'It's the Vulcan tel-tor ritual. We're married and getting bonded too.' I softly spread the news with my brothers, but they already seemed to know, as did all the other kids in the dining room. When Uncle Spock completed the ritual with John and Stephen, everyone began clapping again. Then John levitated all the newlyweds so that everyone could see them kissing. The entire Rimmer Clan, including all the parents and other employed adults stood and applauded.

We were all still clapping our hands when the group of ten lowered to the floor and began thanking Uncle Spock, Aunt Teri, Joel and Kevin. Unfortunately, the latter four needed to leave for Joel's and Kevin's wedding ceremony in the U.K.

Before they left though, Prez made a division-wide announcement. "Ladies and gentlemen, boys and girls; it is our families tradition and therefore a Rimmer tradition to give and receive abundantly. We've received, now it's time to give. It's six-fifty-two Hawaii time. At seven-fifty Hawaii time there will be a concert at the Pacific Rim main base auditorium. We're celebrating our weddings. All who can attend are very welcome. Now, if you'll excuse us, we have less than an hour to get prepared. Alden, if you please, transport the ten of us, our kids, Troy and Sean to the auditorium lobby."

The next thing I knew, I was inside the auditorium. Corey and Drew went to get the place powered up at the circuit breaker panels. "Okay," Prez began, "first things first. Alden, lock the auditorium doors. No one gets in until seven-twenty-five. Next, we all need to be dressed alike."

Mike quickly added, "Loose clothes so we can move around; shiny platinum-colored polo shirts, black pants and black sneakers."

Derrick instructed, "Close the stage curtains too, Alden."

Alden giggled, "I get to change the Rimmers! You're all gonna be naked for second or two."

Patting Drew on the back, Keith said, "Take a short break, bro. You too, Corey." Once everyone was standing still, Keith instructed, "Do it, dude." In an instant, we were standing butt naked. Alden got in a quick sigh and whimper before clothing us all again.

Kaleo asked, "What do you need us to do, Prez?"

Prez said, "I'm thinking you, Tory and Sean can get the concession stand manned. Our kids, John and Stephen, you'll act as ushers. Get everyone seated as quickly as possible. Richie and Dillon, you guys can help just by starting at the front of the aisles. Keep everyone in the center section of seats. As the rows fill up, walk forward so folks know the seats in front of you are filled. When everyone's seated you guys come up on stage and let us know."

Richie giggled, "'Kay, Poppa."

Dillon nodded, "Okay, Unca Prez."

Finished with the power, Drew announced, "We're set, Prez."

"Great," Prez smiled, "get the popcorn poppin' and we'll get a set list together."

Troy reminded, "My gear's at home, Prez."

"Alden!" Prez laughed.

"It's all on the stage waiting now," Alden giggled.

Derrick and Mike hugged and kissed Dillon and Jonah, promising to catch up with them again after the concert. Drew, Corey and Geoff started for the PA room, way above the balcony. Jonah, Dee, Gage and Sammy went with John and Stephen. Derrick took my right hand and Mike took my left, leading me into the auditorium with them. I giggled, "What's goin' on?"

Derrick smiled, "You're with us, on stage." Following us, Richie and Dillon cracked up at my obvious surprise.

Mike nodded, "You've got your memory back and more experience than the five of us combined."

Several yards ahead of us, walking with Keith, Prez swung around and chuckled, "You're part of the band too, as of now, Reyes."

Keith nodded and loudly said, "This concert is about love. We'll break up the ballads and love songs with a few rockers, but we need to come up with a set list that will teach every kid in the audience what love feels like. As soon as we have a list together, Drew and Corey need to know so we have decent lights and sound to really drive the theme home."

"We need a powerful set list, so nobody in the audience fails to catch our meaning," Prez said. "Let's hear some suggestions, dudes."

Troy offered, "I know the sax part for Billy Joel's 'Just the Way You Are'."

"Excellent," Prez and Keith chorused.

I reminded, "A couple of tunes from Friday night's luau would work; 'Traces', 'Never My Love', 'Precious and Few', come to mind."

Prez asked Keith, "How about 'Lovin' Touchin' Squeezin', babe?"

Keith smiled, "It's a rocker with a very direct message."

Derrick suggested, "'Who Love's You', 'Real Love', and Mike could play and sing 'Imagine'."

We walked up the stage steps and went behind the curtain and continued to bounce song titles around. Everybody came up with excellent ideas and all were accepted as part of the list. The problem boiled down to the opening number and something special for an encore. Prez had Alden transport a PADD and he started taking notes and arranging the list. The remaining five of us bounced more ideas around.

Troy sighed, "Ya know, when I was sitting out in the audience Monday, I thought all of you played very well, but what made this band really stick out and shine was the vocals; whether you were rockin', playin' the blues or singing ballads. Even this afternoon, the vocals were fantastic. What if we closed A Capella?"

"Go with that, Troy," Keith encouraged.

Troy suggested, "Because, by The Beatles."

Mike smiled, "Awesome, that's one."

Troy giggled, "You're gonna laugh, but how about I Believe?"

"Yeah," Prez softly chuckled.

Derrick scowled, "I don't think I know it."

"Me either," Mike frowned.

Keith smiled, "It's a simple little two verse number, about a minute and a half or so." He went to the piano to play and sing the song with Troy and Prez. Derrick and Mike agreed to the tune, but we still needed the important opener.

Derrick smiled then began evilly chuckling as he walked up onto the drum risers. Simultaneously, my dad hit the large gong and a timpani, and then hit them again. Keith hurried over to his synthesizers and began playing the opening to Fanfare For the Common Man. With that, we were set and Prez sent the set list to Drew and Corey then we started practicing a few tunes. The four Core Rimmers and core of the band knew so much, Troy and I just went along with it and played our best. There were four songs I would play congas and bongos to, and another two where I would play maracas or tambourine. They tried to get me to sing too, but I was never a great singer and my voice was about twenty-one years out of practice, so I wouldn't sing this time around, but my dad and pop promised to work with me, so that I eventually could add a voice to the band.

Before we knew it, our time was up and we went back stage to a dressing room that none of the Core Rimmers even knew was there, so we could continue to practice a little bit. At seven-fifty, we came out of the room and John called Prez, saying, "We've still got folks filing in, bro. Looks like a lot from the Rapid Response Base and Utah are here; a bunch from the Nevada Desert Division; judging by accents, more than a few from Oceanic Division too."

Prez grinned, "It's Wednesday afternoon there."

"It's thinning out some though," John said, "Give us another ten minutes."

Troy began pacing the small back stage area where we were waiting. Widely smiling, I watched as my dads, Prez and Keith encircled Troy. "I've never played for more than a hundred or so," Troy admitted.

Keith nodded and explained, "We found out last Friday, audience size don't matter."

Mike devilishly grinned, "Sounds like the same ol' story to me." I helplessly cracked up.

Troy blushed and giggled, "Ain't goin' there!"

Derrick chuckled, "Ah, but you so want to, we can tell!"

Prez smiled, "There's some extraordinary rumors about your boyfriend."

Playing along, Keith teased, "Just tell us if the rumors are true."

Troy laughed, "I have no idea what you're all talking about!" but still blushed bright red.

Richie and Dillon came backstage. Richie said, "We're done, Poppa."

Dillon added, "There's still some middle rows way back."

Hugging both boys, Prez smiled, "You guys did an excellent job. Go ahead and find Uncle John and some seats." The two boys hurried back off stage and raced up the aisle. Facing his band mates, Prez said, "All set and together now, dudes?"

Everyone nodded and Troy nervously giggled, "Just hope I stay with ya's through the whole show!"

"Play like you did yesterday and earlier today and we're kewn bro," Mike assured, and then started up the backstage steps.

Prez nodded, "You've got no worries, Troy. It's gonna be great." He then tapped his comm-badge and told Drew, "Let's jam, bro. As soon as you hear the gong and timpani, open the curtains."

"Kewn!" Drew chirped.

Applause began to swell from the audience. From behind his drum kit, Derrick glanced around at his band mates and got thumbs up gestures. Simultaneously, he hit the gong and one of the timpani, beginning 'Fanfare for the Common Man'. The curtains began to open.

Lights flashed above and behind Derrick as he hit the gong and timpani eight more times. Even from back stage, shivers raced up my spine as Keith played the opening horn parts on his synthesizer and Derrick sat at his kit. Troy, Prez and Mike came in then Derrick started pounding his drums. Beginning with a bass shuffle, the band took off like they had played the song dozens of times before. In those first few minutes, watching Troy play the Hammond Organ and then run out to center stage playing his tenor sax, I realized this new dude was every bit as good as the rest of the band. I had my work cut out for me to keep up with this group.

I tried to peer out far enough to see the audience. Beyond all the flashing stage lights, I didn't see much, but what I could see were many smiling faces. We wanted a dramatic opening number to get everyone's attention and my dad found it. The crowd enthusiastically applauded and cheered at the end of the song.

Just as spellbound as any one else, I watched and listened to Platinum Habits playing 'Lovin', 'Touchin', 'Squeezin', and 'While My Guitar Gently Weeps'. I played tambourine during 'The Story In Your Eyes', then stepped back stage again. Beginning the first section of pure ballads, the band continued with 'I Need You', 'Every Breath You Take', 'Just The Way You Are', 'Count On Me', 'Traces', 'It's Only Love', 'Can't You Hear My Heartbeat' and 'If'. Derrick came offstage for the latter tune and called Alden for a towel to wipe sweat off his face. Knowing he needed it, I got my dad a cold bottle of water too. I went back on stage again to play congas and bongos during 'You've Got A Friend'. The band wrapped up this section of ballads with the songs 'Without You' and 'If You Could Read My Mind'. Prez's baritone voice was perfect for the latter song; it was as good as the original recording.

All the stage lights went out and they moved around the stage, preparing for Corey's wake up call at the start of 'What Is Life'. After all those ballads and soft lights, so many bright lights flooded the right side of the stage that many in the audience fell back into their seats. Covering my mouth with both hands, I cracked up. I had barely controlled myself when I stepped back on stage to play congas and bongos for 'Samba Pa Ti' and 'Just Remember I Love You'. Surprising me, when the latter song was completed, Derrick proudly said; "On bongos and congas, my son, Reyes Taraschke." Smiling warmly at my dad, I waved at the audience then went off stage. It was then that I realized how sweaty and tired I had become. Playing jazz on stage wasn't like this in the 50's and 60's; there were so many more lights, I couldn't help feeling warm. Derrick had to be just as hot and tired, but he didn't show it. I had Alden get me a towel and cold bottle of water. Completing this mini-set, the band played 'Who Loves You', 'Real Love', 'As Long As You Love Me', 'Time of the Season' and 'Easy'.

The band played their final mini-set of ballads consisting of 'Precious and Few', 'Truly, Madly, Deeply', 'Never My Love', 'How Can I Be Sure', 'Your Song', 'Don't Worry Baby', 'I Can't Tell You Why', 'Imagine', 'Unchained Melody' and 'Bridge Over Troubled Water'. Derrick came down off the drum risers and waved me out to join the band. The entire audience were on their feet, applauding and cheering. Gathered center stage, we all held hands and bowed. The curtains closed, but the audience seemed to get louder and called for an encore. I quickly hugged my dad and pop then went off stage to watch them perform the two encore songs, 'Because' and 'I Believe'. The concert lasted two hours and twenty-two minutes.

At the start of the final ovation, while the curtains closed, I heard John calling, 'Reyes, come on, bro, meet us in the dining room for the reception, dude.' I tapped my comm-badge and had Alden transport me there. My brothers and all the Core Rimmers' sons were there. John ordered Alden to get five wedding cakes. Little by little, the adults, our Clan and some of the guests came inside. I got to tell Kaleo, Tory and Liki a lot of what had happened while I was in South Carolina. When the four Core Rimmers entered, they got another ovation and more hugs and kisses as they passed through the dining room. All the newlywed couples went to the cakes. Each couple carved into a cake then fed their partner a piece of cake. Loud laughter broke loose as each of the ten of them smashed pieces of cake into their partner's face.

Dripping with icing, they went towards the men's room to clean up. The reception continued and I roared laughing at Dillon who ate two pieces of wedding cake! After a while, it became clear that the newlyweds would not be returning to the party. The Rimmer parents gathered the youngest kids to take home. As soon as Dillon finished stuffing his face, I took him and Jonah to the Hundsers' basement to join the nest. Jonah and Dillon decided they wanted the kittens to join the nest. Jonah had all six transported to the Hundsers' basement.

Now that the day is done, I figure it lasted about nineteen hours for Jonah and Dillon. I started writing this edition of my log a little after eleven and it's almost three in the morning now. My day has been twenty-three hours long. The Scooby gang just came in for the night and told me that they had been at the wedding concert too and had never seen anything like the spinning mirrored ball used by Corey. Wondering where my dads were, I tapped my comm-badge to check with Alden, asking if they were at the townhouses still. They had more street kids to pick up and get settled. I guess I'll call it an end to an exceptionally busy day and join my brothers in the nest too.

Charles just came up to me with a catnip mouse in his mouth. I heard him purr "Cuddle time, now. I need sleep and you are my pillow."

I guess that makes it official. I'm going to take my kitten to the nest and get some sleep.

"Silly boy. Pet humans can be so vain."

Chapter 7

Ewa Beach, Oahu C.S.P.R.D Main Base

Wednesday, November 3, 05:07 AM HTZ

Reyes woke in the nest, disturbing his kitten, Charles. Perched on Reyes' belly, Charles meowed, "What's wrong?"

"I had a dream," Reyes whispered. "Noah noticed something about our eyes yesterday. I just realized that Ryan moves his eyes more like a human."

Standing and stretching, Charles confirmed, "You have to take care of this now, don't you?"

Reyes nodded, "Yeah, I really should."

Scampering off of Reyes, Charles padded away from the nest, to the other side of the Hundasers' basement. Carefully getting up, so he wouldn't disturb his brothers or dads, Reyes followed his kitten. Jumping up onto the arm of the sofa, Charles meowed, "Daileass, my pet needs to call AI Division headquarters."

Speaking in cat, Daileass softly chortled, "So naturally, you needed to call me for Reyes."

Charles yawned, "I'll never get him back to bed otherwise."

Reyes whispered, "Set up a video conference with Jerry Owens, please, Daileass."

Setting up the connection to the Owens' residence, Daileass silently sniggered to himself, "I really have to check my sanity circuitry. Now I'm taking orders from Rimmer kittens."

The video screen on the wall activated, showing an empty room, a doorway and a curtain covered window in the distance. A moment later, a raccoon crawled up a chair, squeaking and clicking, "Hello? This is Lil. Who are you?"

Reyes grinned, "Hi Lil, I'm Reyes. Is Jerry available?"

"He's sleeping," Lil replied in raccoon.

Charles bitched, "She's got thumbs! How come she's got thumbs?"

Reyes asked, "Could you wake him, please, Lil? I have something important to talk with him about."

Lil answered, "I can try. He's not very bright and cheery when woken up," and then jumped down, out of the camera's view.

A few moments later, Reyes and Charles heard Jerry, sleepily asking, "What, Lil?" After a few more raccoon clicks and squeaks, Jerry sighed, "All right." The sound of rustling sheets and blankets were heard. Stumbling into view, completely naked, causing Charles to cover his eyes with his forepaws, Jerry flopped into the chair and yawned, "What's up, Reyes?"

Reyes smiled, "I'm sorry to wake you, Jerry."

Waving off the apology, Jerry muttered, "It's after eleven in the morning here. Normally, I would've been awake hours ago, but we had so much fun at Myrtle Beach last night, I guess I needed a little more rest than usual."

"We did have a great time," Reyes smiled.

With his forepaws still covering his eyes, Charles complained, "Both of you sitting around chatting in the buff. Can we get on with it, please?"

Jerry giggled, "I'm sitting now, Charles. You can only see from the belly up."

Uncovering his eyes, Charles grumbled, "Why human boys show off like they do..." He then proceeded to raise a leg in the air and lick himself. Charles noticed everyone looking at him and innocently asked, "What?" while purring loudly.

"Anyway," Reyes chuckled, "I realized something in my dreams and I needed to share it with you, Jerry. Remember Noah saying that he could tell who was an android by eye movement, and then me worrying about prejudices, asking Marc to correct that flaw so we weren't so easily recognized?"

Jerry nodded, "Yup, I remember. Noticing stuff like that isn't such a big deal, Reyes."

"I realize that now," Reyes smiled, "but later I realized that Ryan has somehow altered his eye movements. He's already got the modifications in place to control his eyes like any human would."

Opening his own eyes much wider, Jerry muttered, "If we could get those routines... maybe from the satellite uplink capability..." Jerry paused and sighed, "Paul would have a fit if he knew we accessed Ryan that way."

Reyes nodded and offered, "It's not life or death, Jerry. We don't have to rush anything. As a matter of fact, if Paul learned you had the ability to connect to Ryan via satellite, but haven't in all the time they've been there..."

"It might help him build trust," Jerry finished the thought.

"Exactly," Reyes smiled.

Jerry thought aloud, "A conversation with Danny or Marc, about the satellite link, in front of Paul, would initiate a confrontation."

Reyes added, "Knowing that you guys could connect to us from satellite, but never do without the android's permission, would make a big impact on Paul. You could even find an excuse to do an uplink to me. I'd realize it was happening..."

"And so would Paul, if we did it to him, and so would Ryan," Jerry happily gushed, but then Jerry got a concerned look on his face. "Wait! Ryan won't accept that he is not a hundred percent human. I don't think we could tell him we were doing it. This isn't going to be easy." He finished with a sigh.

Reyes reminded, "Ryan and Paul are in a safe environment right now. There's absolutely no reason to rush into anything. For now, just make them aware that satellite uplink is possible. Every day that goes by where it's not used is another reason to trust you guys. Then you contact me, say with a code update or something, and we let them witness the actual uplink."

"Yes, that will work for Paul, I think. Actions speak much louder than words with him," Jerry said, then paused with a thoughtful look on his face. "With Ryan though... There is no way to discuss doing it to him that won't set him off, like the hospital did, when they insisted that he was an android and not human. In his head he is human, going by what I have gotten from Paul, and what I have seen over the last week as I have watched him. But it should do us some good to let both of them witness a discussion about your uplink. Then we can disconnect it for you as well. If Paul trusts us, then we might be able to do it. Paul would have to be included in the whole process. That way he could see for himself that we are not trying anything off." Jerry's face took on a look of concentration; his expressions mimicking the thoughts in his head as he played out possibilities.

Having a thought, Reyes carefully interrupted, "Jerry?" When Jerry looked up into the camera again, Reyes smiled, "We're human boys with positronic brains. Let me take care of getting them to understand that. I'd also like to remind you of last night's go-cart race. Danny and KC were in the lead; Marc and I were right behind them, with you, Paul and Ryan grouped together behind me. In unfamiliar situations, Ryan's looking for examples of what human boys do and how they act. I noticed something else last night, during the race on the beach; Paul and Ryan were on the dune, racing well ahead of Jonah, Dillon and Hunter. They were already proving that they were a bit more than human, Jerry."

"Well, Paul knows he is an android," Jerry reminded, "but you can't tell Ryan that he is anything except one hundred percent human. Also, Paul will never refer to Ryan as anything other than completely human. He's been that way since their family died about twenty years ago. Paul will not let anyone tell his brother that something about him is not entirely human, and I think he's right. If Ryan thinks he is human, so what. It doesn't hurt anything or anyone; however, incidents like the hospital are potentially bad. I think it is a really bad idea to discuss it with Ryan at all. My understanding of what is going on with Ryan is far from complete, but I believe it is the same as a delusional disorder.

"There are six key things to this type of condition," Jerry explained. "One, it is a primary disorder. Two, it is a stable disorder characterized by the presence of delusions to which the patient clings with extraordinary tenacity. Three, the illness is chronic and frequently lifelong. Four, the delusions are logically constructed and internally consistent. Five, the delusions do not interfere with general logical reasoning, although within the delusional system the logic is perverted, and there is usually no general disturbance of behavior. If disturbed behavior does occur, it is directly related to the delusional beliefs. Six, the individual experiences a heightened sense of self-reference. Events which, to others, are insignificant, are of enormous significance to him or her, and the atmosphere surrounding the delusions is highly charged.

"I think confronting him on this delusion would be damaging to him, and Paul will not allow it anyway."

"Okay," Reyes sighed, "I guess I misunderstood your intention last night. I thought you wanted to deal with both, Ryan's insistence and Paul's protectiveness."

"You know, last Friday morning, I had thirty orphanage brothers and sisters, but I was only close to four of them; Jonah, Kaleo, Tory and Liki. By Friday night, I had eighty-seven Clan brothers and sisters. I felt an attachment to Derrick and Mike that night, where I considered them more than friends, I wanted them as father figures. I didn't understand why until Austin fixed my memories Monday night."

"I still don't understand why, but I feel the same sort of attachment with Paul and Ryan. Last night I asked myself which brother was helping more – Ryan being the jubilant kid, or Paul being the protector. They help each other constantly, just in almost opposite ways. Still, I feel something strongly for them. I must, or I wouldn't have had a dream about them that woke me up."

Reyes shrugged and meekly offered, "We've evolved, Jerry. Marc didn't think he had accomplished his goal of making a more human-like android, but he has. Look at Austin, he's telepathic. I'm empathic. Ryan has developed another set of modifications on his own too. It's not an impediment, it's an advancement." A figure moved beyond Jerry, back by the door into the room, Reyes observed.

Jerry offered, "Don't get me wrong, Reyes. I think your idea is fantastic, because we could get a better understanding of what has happened to Ryan, and it would give us a chance to make sure there was nothing damaging going on in Ryan's hardware. However, Paul keeps saying that there is nothing wrong with Ryan, and changing who he sees himself as would change who he is on every level, and he wouldn't be Ryan anymore. I think he's right about that. We need to think about what is best for Ryan. Not what is easiest, or would make him what others think he should be. It is not a simple thing, but I want you to know something..."

Noticing Paul standing in the bedroom doorway, but behind Jerry, Reyes gestured for Jerry to go on.

"In the week they have been here, I have never seen them open up to anyone like you. Paul never talks to anyone for more than enough time to tell them to fuck off, and then he simply won't talk to them anymore. You have done more for them in just a meeting than anyone else I have seen. Paul trusts you more than he does me. I could see it in the way he acted with you."

Jerry appeared almost sad too, when he said the last part. "I am their brother now. I may seem overprotective, but I want what's best for them."

"So do I," Reyes assured. He then suggested, "Maybe it would be best if everyone backed off. There's nothing about either of them I would dare change, and I sure don't want JJ pointing one of his temper tantrums at me. In the meantime, I asked Paul and Ryan to visit me here. I've got two great new friends. Keeping them friends just got a whole lot easier." Since Paul wasn't entering Jerry's room, Reyes pointed to let Jerry know that their conversation hadn't been private for a few minutes.

Jerry turned his head, calling, "Hey, big bro. If you wanna join in, come on over."

Paul looked like a deer caught in headlights. He just stood there and sputtered for a few moments before moving into the room. "Okay, Jerry. Tell me more about this uplink thing. I don't think I like it much. I mean someone can just access my brain without me knowing it. Fuck." Reyes watched as Paul began to cry.

Jerry frowned as he turned to Paul. "I don't like it either, bro; in fact I've been disabling it any time I do an update to our family. It's a leftover from when they developed Marc, and Vision left it online as a safety in case an AI went nuts. We've got a better way now; we'll just pull the AI out and bring them here if they're having a breakdown. The only interface unit remaining from Vision is here, and only Marc, Danny, or me can access it; but that don't mean someone hasn't figured out how to build one for themselves. Marc hates the thing; he remembers how they screwed with him when he was new, and refuses to let it be used unless all three of us are in agreement that there is no other way; something like the dataport being fried or other things like that. With my new program, either the AI has to turn it on consciously, or if they are offline then at least two of us have to be present for an override. The override won't work unless the AI is in a complete main processor shutdown, though."

"Remote access without your approval might have been true for Vision, but it ain't anymore." Jerry replied as he stood up and held his arms out for Paul. "You're just as human as me; and I'm not the only one who thinks that. In fact, Cory believes it and runs the Clan accordingly. Also, Ambassador Sarek has spoken for Vulcan and has declared that you have the same rights as me."

Reyes nervously watched as Paul got himself together and put his arms tentatively around Jerry. "Maybe you guys... well, I think you guys are different," Paul muttered, "but I spent the last twenty years on the streets. Most people think of androids as things, and you know it. If you guys can do it then someone else probably can. How many androids have had their heads fucked up because of this? I had to be... I had to defend us against... They always turned on us when they found out. I mean all this time someone could have totally messed with our heads. What the Fuck!"

Jerry leaned into the hug. "I promise you that the number has been zero since the day that Vision closed it's doors. Marc has had control of the sat-link since that day, and his word, along with the amount of dust on it, proves it hasn't been used since that day. The Clan gets pretty violent when you screw with a person's head unless the person gives permission to do it."

Loudly, Paul exclaimed, "How can you know for sure that someone doesn't know about it, and has been messing with androids minds for God knows how fuckin' long?"

Sitting on the sofa in the Hundserts' basement, Reyes shed quiet tears. Charles poured on the kitty-charm, trying to calm his human. Reyes cuddled Charles, silently hoping that he hadn't messed up by making this early morning call.

Facing the monitor and camera in Jerry's room, Paul's rage suddenly deflated significantly. He wondered aloud, "Reyes, are you crying?"

Sniffling and nodding, Reyes moaned, "I'm sorry, Paul. I shouldn't have called..."

"Oh yes, you should," Paul contradicted. "Thanks to you, I know about the existence of the sat-link, and that it's not been used in a long time. Fucking bastards gotta control every little thing. I also heard you describe Ryan as evolved, that he is fine as he is, so much so that whatever modifications he's made to his programming, it's worth identifying and saving, maybe to use in other androids. Not that I'll ever let that happen unless Ryan agrees, and that likely won't happen. The fact is, you called it a positive change, not a bad one, like so many have implied... Hell! Have insisted, over the last twenty years."

Reyes only shrugged indifferently. Paul grinned, but it came across more like a grimace, "Ya know, I woke because I faintly heard your voice. Since I wasn't sure, I had to find out." Reyes wiped the last of his tears away and smiled. Paul glanced at Jerry then back into the camera, seemingly wanting to say something more, but not in front of Jerry. Paul giggled and blushed, causing Reyes to do the same.

Jerry chuckled, "Okay you two, break it up for now. Paul, we've slept about eight hours. Reyes, how much sleep have you had?"

"About two-and-a-half hours," Reyes estimated.

"Then you need to go back to bed," Jerry suggested. He told Paul, "I'll get a camera and monitor installed in yours and Ryan's bedroom, bro. You can talk with Reyes later."

"Yeah," Paul stammered, "umm... that would be good."

Jerry giggled, "Use your comm-badges until then."

"Kewl," Paul and Reyes simultaneously responded.

Paul smiled, "We'll chat later, Reyes."

"I'll probably be awake again in three hours or so," Reyes offered, and then blushed, realizing he was pushing for that call sooner rather than later.

On Sullivan's Island, South Carolina, Jerry and Paul began giggling. They both said goodnight to Reyes, and Reyes said good morning back to them. The three of them began arguing about who would hang up first. Walking away from the camera, Jerry howled laughing, "I'm gonna take a shower. Hopefully you'll hang up the call by the time I'm done."

For another minute or so, Paul told Reyes to disconnect, but Reyes playfully instructed, "After you." Paul wondered where the call-hangup button was and they both began giggling. Settling on disconnecting at the count of three, they eventually ended the call.

Charles griped, "Can we go back to bed now?"

Still giggling, Reyes nodded and picked up his kitten then went back to the nest.

Wednesday, November 3, 07:50 AM HTZ

At the Rimmer family homes, the little kids had already woken up. The Hundserts had fed their kids and grandkids breakfast. Cesar and Felipe brought their friends, Murakami and Shimizu, home to the Seavers' for breakfast. Dillon, Jonah and Reyes went to the Seiberts' with Benjamin, Randy, Latoya, Lindsay, Christel and Brandi for their morning meal.

While the adults were away from the tables, getting showered and ready for the day, serious conversations were had at the Seavers' and the Seiberts'. Cesar and Felipe wanted Murakami and Shimizu as brothers, and the latter two shared the same wish. All Murakami and Shimizu had to do was tell the Seavers that this was the home and they were the parents they wanted. At the Seiberts', Reyes and Jonah were telling the others that it was time to make separate nests and become part of one family unit. Now that the Core Rimmers were married, that night would be the best time to make the change. Once everyone agreed, Reyes promised that, as the eldest, he would share the plan with Prez, Keith, Mike and Derrick.

Shafts of sunlight through the window blinds and the sounds of his mom preparing for work woke Troy Faris. With his eyes still closed, he remembered the previous night. After a great dinner with Sean and his mother, he and Sean had gone to the CIC dining room looking for Prez and the other band members. Much to their surprise, all the Core Rimmers were getting married. For a short while it seemed there would be no band practice and he could spend the entire night with his new boyfriend. But Prez had other ideas. A little more than an hour later, Platinum Habits was playing before a really large audience. Troy remembered every song and how he moved from keyboards to saxophone to guitar and back again, providing lead and backup vocals. They even closed the show with a short song he had recommended and Prez enthusiastically approved. The next thing Troy knew, he was alone with Sean in the dorm.

By the time Troy met Sean in the dorm room, Sean was almost spastic, he was so emotionally excited. The prior Friday night, Sean had seen Old Habits perform and he expected a rock concert, like that one had been. This time though, Platinum Habits played only a few rockers to break up the love songs and ballads. Troy told Sean that, "every song was selected to teach all the kids what love truly meant, from the smallest thrill to the saddest shared moments." Agreeing that they had accomplished the goal, Sean said the concert was nothing short of incredible from the first drum beats to the last words of the last song. After a brief conversation, the Tiger was ready to play. For about an hour they orally made love. But Troy really wanted Sean to come home with him and spend the night at the condo. About quarter to one in the morning, they walked into the apartment. Judy Faris was relaxing at home in her bed when they walked in. Troy touched base with her, to let her know that he was home and Sean was spending the night. The two boys then went to the opposite end of the apartment, to Troy's room. Troy opened the sliding glass door in his room then went outside onto the balcony with Sean to show him the CIC and how the base appeared all lit up at night. Sean thought the entire base was beautiful. They spent many minutes softly chatting out on the balcony. By the time they went back inside, the television in Judy Faris' bedroom was off and she was asleep, allowing Troy and Sean to make love again, this time with the dildo, before snuggling close and succumbing to slumber themselves.

The front door closed, letting Troy know his mom was gone. On top of the world, Troy rolled over and opened his eyes. At last, he was sharing his bed with another teen boy; and not just any teenager, a remarkably humble and compassionate one that just so happened to be cute and cuddly. Sean was still asleep though. Not knowing what to do, Troy considered letting him sleep, but then thought he could wake him up slowly so they could make love again before starting their second day together. Troy realized it hadn't even been a day since Sean rang the doorbell. Now he couldn't imagine spending a day without him.

The only thing Troy recognized that made him different from Sean and his band mates was the vocabulary they used. Troy was a Jersey boy and sounded like one. Prez was from Texas and had a mixed vocabulary; sometimes he was obviously a Southern boy, but other times his vernaculars varied. All five of them used the word 'awesome' a lot. Even by the pool, Troy heard a lot of other kids using that word. A minute didn't pass without someone saying 'awesome'. Briefly wondering if he should use the word more often, Sean stirred and reached an arm out for him.

With his eyelids still fluttering, Sean softly smiled and croaked, "Hey."

"Good mornin', Tiger."

Grinning and opening his eyes, Sean warned, "Don't call me that unless you want more lovin'." Troy chuckled and considered saying something, but instead just reached over for a kiss. Sean pulled Troy over on top of him. Giggling into their kiss, they began grinding against each other.

Troy pulled back and grinned, "Now that you've seen the CIC all lit up at night, what do you think?"

"I think you've got the best view," Sean slyly answered.

Tilting his head, Troy suspiciously leered, "I've got the best view?"

"On top!" Sean giggled. He then wondered, "Is your mom still home?"

Troy shook his head and answered, "She left about five or ten minutes before you woke up." Sean suddenly spread his legs and Troy partly collapsed between them.

While Troy uncontrollably cackled, Sean lifted his legs and wrapped them around Troy's ass. He smiled, "You've got my heart, mind and dick. There's only one thing left for you to have."

Sean wanted it last night too, Troy recalled. Smiling down at his boyfriend, Troy brushed Sean's hair aside and softly shushed him then softly said, "Soon Tiger, but not now, okay?"

Disappointed, Sean seriously groaned, "Why not?"

"Because this play time is just as special," Troy honestly answered. "I'm not the kind that wants only sex from you. What I want is waking up with you, brushing our teeth, showering and having breakfast together."

"That sounds really good, but I can tell you want to."

"It's only mornin' wood," Troy shared. "After seven times yesterday, I can honestly wait for a more special time. Remember, I know your past. I don't want even the smallest part of me believing that I'm fucking you. It's gonna be intercourse, you and me as close as we can be, physically and emotionally."

"You're so awesome," Sean sighed, and then smiled, "No one's ever called it intercourse before. I love that word. It's so much better than banging, boinking, screwing or fucking."

"And that's the way it's gotta be, Tiger; for both of us. We can keep each other perfectly satisfied without making that final move until we're both ready." Sean nodded so Troy lay back down on him and whispered, "My dream has always been to flip-flop; you do me, then I do you. It's gonna be so much more than orgasms. My job is to get your thoughts corrected from the scumbags that literally fucked you over. Your job is to get me physically ready. The goal we're after is for it to be beautiful, not just an act. In the meantime, we keep the tigers tamed."

Sean shuddered, "I love you so much!"

Finger-combing his boyfriend's hair, Troy warmly smiled, "I love you very much too, Sean."

At eight-forty-five, the Core Rimmers were awakened by Alden, as had been arranged. However, instead of playing any old classic rock tunes, Alden surprised them with audio from their concert. At first, the sleepy Rimmers thought they were listening to a live recording of Emerson, Lake and Palmer. Feet started moving around the nest. Not until Troy's sax part played did they realize what they were hearing.

Jumping up in their birthday suits, Mike and Derrick hollered, "Holy shit!"

Prez smiled, "Crank it, Alden." A second later, the sound was blasting out of all the basement ceiling speakers.

Mike gasped, "Fuck! We sound good."

Drew croaked, "Duh!" and Corey cracked up.

Derrick smiled and nodded then asked, "Alden, when can we each have copies of the concert?"

Into all the Core Rimmers' sub-vocals, Alden giggled, "There's a wave file copy on each of your computers."

Drew offered, "I'll run it through some software and check the mix."

Alden said, "You and Corey have all the original tracks direct from the board to mix as you like, Drew."

John and Stephen said nothing. Holding their kiss they floated about three feet above their places in the nest.

Nathan stretched and loudly said, "You guys melted hearts last night."

Jacob agreed, "Between the marriages and the concert, yeah."

Jamie added, "Things have definitely changed around here."

In triplicate, the boys sang, "They're a real Clan division now."

Breaking his kiss with Stephen, John grinned, "Something's changing tonight too."

At once, Jacob, Jamie, Beau and Nathan loudly shushed John.

Beau giggled, "That was supposed to be a surprise!"

"No it's not," John sniggered. "They're all planning on sharing during breakfast."

The basement door opened and the kids that had been upstairs came downstairs. Geoff, Gage, Sammy, Dee and Richie went directly to their dads. Geoff weaseled his way between Corey and Drew. Seeing damp hair, Prez smiled, "You guys showered already?"

Richie nodded, "Me and Dee."

"Me and Geoff in another tub," Gage added. "Sammy, Kokaku and Dewi in the other one."

Rapidly nodding and reaching for Sammy's and Dewi's hands, Kokaku told his big brothers, "Sammy says when we wash, we're showing how much we like each other."

Dewi giggled, "Sammy was washed by me and Kokaku, as far we could reach, anyways."

Sammy smiled, "I had to sit on the tub rim so they could wash my hair. And no funny business, right, dudes?"

Dewi and Kokaku proudly recited, "Brothers and uncles wash only; gotta be in love to play with willies."

Richie gushed, "And it was even nicer that way."

Dee giggled, "Poppa told us, hugs count more, so we gave away hugs too, all of us, before, during and again after we was done."

Starting to get dressed, with Jacob and Beau, Jamie sniggered, "Timmy's tribe, Ewa Beach branch."

"You guys are watchin' out for each other. Excellent!" Keith cheered, and then reached up and pulled down the two closest boys, Gage and Sammy. He kissed each of his sons and whispered, "I'm so proud of you."

Dee and Richie took Prez's hands to try and pull him up. Letting himself be dragged, Prez helplessly chuckled. Richie giggled, "C'mon, Poppa! Ya gots another concert at school today."

Slipping into the pants he wore the previous night, Mike wondered, "Where are our boys?"

As Derrick dressed, Dee answered, "At Derrick's house, havin' breakfast."

"And plotting and scheming," John teased.

Derrick huffed then grinned at Mike; "We'd better check."

Mike confirmed, "Breakfast at the CIC?"

Keith nodded, "We'll meet you there." He then stretched and yawned, "Let's get motivated." Soon everybody was on the move and getting dressed except John and Stephen. "What's the holdup, bro?" Keith wondered.

John sniggered, "We don't have to go to school."

"Not your school anyway," Stephen giggled.

"We'll meet you at the CIC," John laughed. "I'm feeling that some of our new kids want their own Teddy bears too." As his brothers and the kids walked up the stairs, John got more serious, and sent to Stephen, 'The first thing we have to do is get you a suit, baby. I want you to come with me to the Downings' funeral.'

Stephen sighed, "I'm really not looking forward to this."

"I know," John softly said, and then planted a quick kiss. "I need you there," John explained. "You can help me keep Bruce and everybody from getting too sad."

Checking to see that they were alone, Stephen happily confirmed, "You saved all those people just to spend another day with me?" John nodded and smiled. Stephen giggled, "We're married! I can't believe it!"

"Believe it," John nodded. Then he telekinetically lifted Stephen up off him. While Stephen hovered horizontally and giggled, John stood. He grinned then guided his floating and hysterical husband up the stairs.

Stephen loudly cackled, "Where are we going?"

"To the first available shower," John giggled. "Then I'll put you down, take your clothes off and wash you, with my own two itty-bitty hands."

"I get to wash you too!" Stephen howled.

Humming affirmatively, John opened the door and teased, "Then we'll make lots o' soapy suds."

Stephen playfully screamed, "You're evil!"

In the first upstairs bathroom, Keith and Prez were brushing their teeth when they heard Stephen laughing his little butt off. Looking out the open bathroom door, they saw Stephen float by then John waved as he walked past. Prez shook his head, spit out the toothpaste and told Keith, "All Hundser men are perfectly wicked. None of us ever had a chance."

After spitting and rinsing his mouth out, Keith gleamed, "It's too late for complaints. Besides, I can't feel my brothers, but I can feel you, you sex machine!"

Prez whimpered then giggled and pushed the door closed.

Daileass sighed, "I love mornings. Six couples going for it simultaneously in three different houses. I think I love Hawaii." He then complained, "Storage space! I need more storage space!"

"You are a perv, Dailly," Draco muttered with what could only be described as a virtual roll of his digitized eyes.

"Thank you! Yes, I am a perv. Now, get back to cataloging my processors. With all the sex going on, I want some loving too."

"Mmmm.... processors!"

Alden groaned, "Eww!" and closed the channel.

Finishing in the shower, Prez shared, "I had a weird dream last night. It was as if I was watching creation, from the proverbial Big Bang right through the development of civilizations to the present."

Turning off the water, Keith turned and smiled, "That sounds intense."

"It was," Prez admitted, and handed a towel to Keith before grabbing one for himself. While they began drying off, Prez explained, "What made it seem so odd was that it was destiny; that one thing had to lead to the next and the next, right through all time. And it all led to the world around us. Meeting you when I moved here from Texas; coincidence or destiny? My parents dying so we could wind up living together and fall in love; coincidence or destiny? Finding Bruce last Friday; coincidence or destiny? Everything that happened before this very moment; was it coincidence or destiny?"

Toweling off, Keith nodded, "That's pretty deep, baby. But it does ring more like destiny than coincidence. My dream was strange too. I kept seeing connections, like fibers between me and everyone I know and love around me. I remember dreaming of my dad helping me with homework a long time ago. He was giving to me and I was giving something back to him. They were like brightly colored electronic filaments. You and I made love in the dream too. Together we lit up the whole room. In every scene of the dream, whether it was me with one other person, or with a bunch of people, I kept seeing those connections. They were powerful and good. Then I'd see other people outside our circle of friends and family. The connections were still there, but didn't feel good; they felt more like I was being controlled or forced. In each of those cases, it was bad, as if the feeling was making me feel weak or dizzy."

Their towels were stuffed into the laundry chute. They padded naked into their bedroom to get dressed. Prez said, "That sounds like the difference between giving and receiving abundantly versus always taking and never giving anything back, or wanting to give back, for that matter." After a brief pause, Prez wondered, "Maybe it's more like controllers, ya know? Like people that only want to control other people? They force their points of view to the extreme where people back off and don't want anything to do with it, or them."

From the dresser, Keith grabbed a pair of boxers and tossed them to Prez. Grabbing another pair for himself, Keith pulled them up saying, "And your dream was more like a feeling of being in sync with the world."

At the closet, Prez pulled a Yes Fragile T-shirt over his head and hummed agreement. "Which T-shirt do you want, babe?"

Pulling clean board shorts out of the dresser, Keith replied, "If the blue Asia one is in there, that one." Prez crossed the room with Keith's T-shirt. Keith was holding in one hand a pair of boardies out for Prez to put on, and in his other hand, a pair for himself. Before Keith was ready for it, Prez slid his free hand down the front of Keith's boxers and began fondling his husband's goods. Laughing hysterically, Keith tossed the shorts on the bed and asked, "You want something more, sex machine?"

Prez nodded and smiled, "Next time, it's my turn. Don't you dare believe that I'm gonna be a top only from now on."

Keith giggled, "Like I might disagree while you're cuppin' my dick and nads!"

Prez smirked, "I'll just have to go for a ride next time then," and then released his husband's privates.

Wrapping Prez in his arms, Keith whispered, "I love you, baby."

Prez stole a deep kiss then assured, "I love you too, babe."

As they were leaving the room, they stopped dead in their tracks, for from the direction of the dresser, they heard a silvery, light, musical laugh. It hinted at something they thought they once knew, as if remembering a dream. Then it was gone. Each raising an eyebrow like Uncle Spock, they glanced at each other, but neither said a word.

At the FYS building, interviews were in progress. First on Jennifer Hundser's list was Mrs. Tamara Hekekia. Before she wasted any time, Jen had asked Jamie, Jacob and Beau to perform deep scans on Tamara the prior afternoon. The Terrible Trio gave their Aunt Jen a dump of what they read and thumbs-up gestures. Jen thanked them individually then processed what she had learned overnight.

"My sincerest apologies, Tamara," Jennifer began. "The boys told me most of what I needed to know. Your only crime is one of poor judgment. In this office, no one will ever make you choose between what is morally right and keeping your job. Both those things go hand-in-hand here. There are no ifs, ands or buts; the children choose their foster parents after we have assured the adults are acceptable foster parents." Pausing briefly, Jennifer smiled, "So please, tell me how you feel after this past weekend's... events."

Tamara began, "It may sound odd, but truthfully, I've never been more at peace with myself, since meeting Lieutenant Ra'Vesti. When my husband and I got home from a late dinner Friday night, we both saw what happened to the Prime Minister on TV. Learning that our own government was the root cause of all the CPS problems was a relief. I called in sick Monday rather than go into what I was certain was a dead office. Then I saw Preston with the King on TV Monday night. I knew that my strong suspicions were justified."

Jennifer nodded, "Preston is not the same quiet and shy boy that moved to Hawaii seven years ago. There are eight boys running this division. Four are my sons, three are close personal friends of my family and the last, remarkably enough, is one of the boys rescued from an orphanage Friday. I couldn't be prouder of them all." She then leaned back in her chair asking, "Is there anything you would like to know about Federation Youth Services or Clan Short?"

Tamara nodded and softly asked, "What is going on with the animals here; specifically the gorillas and cat people?"

Unable to help herself, Jennifer grinned, "They're genetic enhancements. All of them are part of the security force protecting this base and the people here." Becoming serious again, Jennifer said, "What you referred to as 'cat people' are G-Cats. You might even run across a few chimps and ferrets on occasion. If ever you feel the slightest bit uncomfortable going to a prospective foster home, all you have to do is ask and you'll have a security team with you."

"That's good to know," Tamara smirked. "There have been times where I've felt very uncomfortable at some homes."

At the CIC kitchen chow line, the Rimmers were arriving and lining up for their breakfast shakes. Derrick came in with his sons. Mike followed them in wearing his Shiny Priest robe. Naturally, almost everyone in line grinned, chuckled or completely busted up laughing. Immediately upon getting in line, Reyes thoughtfully scowled at the ceiling.

Keith chuckled, "Your Holy Shininess! Please tell me you're not wearing that to school."

Mike smirked, "Dull one, you shall be punished for your lack of Shiny respect."

"Yeah! You tell 'em, Shiny Daddy!" Four voices yelled down from the air conditioning vent.

Reyes rolled his eyes then huffed and turned his attention to the chefs.

Turning to Prez, Mike seriously said, "We have a small problem."

Afraid to ask, but having no other choice, Prez grinned, "Spit it out before it rusts or tarnishes." In the air conditioning duct, four horrified voices gasped.

"We've been Clan for four days," Mike explained. "We have three days to have everyone take the Pledge."

Keith, Drew and Corey simultaneously and uncertainly repeated, "The pledge?"

Mike seriously nodded, "I'm safe. Derrick and our kids are safe. Outside of my immediate family, no one is safe from Shiny theft."

"Omigod!" Drew and Corey laughed. Keith rolled his eyes.

"What's the big deal?" Prez grinned. "We're all Shiny lovers anyway. Do you want your CD's missing? Do you want any of the small PC or sound system connectors swiped?" Facing Mike again, Prez said, "Lead the way, Shiny Mike."

Putting his right hand on his heart, Mike chanted, "Repeat after me. 'I pledge allegiance to the Shiny of the Shiny Nation.'" Everyone in line paused, put their right hands on their hearts and duplicated Mike's words. "I pledge allegiance to the Shiny of the Shiny Nation, and to the Gleam for which it stands; one Nation under Shiny – sparkling, with incandescence and radiance for all!"

"I saw one who was mumbling! He's fair game!" Willow could be heard giggling.

The boy in question, Troy, gasped and quickly repeated his pledge loudly and clearly.

"Scared that your instruments would be stolen?" Prez giggled.

Troy, still wide eyed at his close call, nodded mutely.

Sean giggled, "No, more that he was scared HE would be stolen. He's got a shiny butt!" The other twenty-plus kids in line began laughing and giggling. Troy's jaw dropped and he turned ten shades of red then held off and cuffed Sean on the shoulder. Almost as red as Troy, Sean rubbed his shoulder and playfully reminded, "I told you there were things you had to take at face value as true."

Troy grinned, "But you told me that when we were in the shower and you were holding my shiny butt! Was I listening? Hearing yes, but not paying much attention."

The older four Rimmers were now laughing hysterically, trying to order their shakes. This normally simple task was made almost impossible by shiny shower shake remarks.

Out in the dining room, Mike stood on a chair and announced over the PA, "Ladies and gentlemen, boys and girls, for your own security, I must ask that you all pause for a moment. On this Shiny Day, all that glitters and sparkles amongst us demands that we take notice; Dull ones will be converted; Shiny Haters and Dull Lovers will be arrested or destroyed. Those of you who, like me, enjoy the brightness and warmth of the Day Shiny, then look forward to the fullness of the Night Shiny, please stand and put your right hand over your heart then repeat after me."

Everyone, regardless of whether or not they were personally taking Mike seriously, repeated the Shiny Pledge. "Thank you for your time," Mike said, and then took Derrick's hand and stepped down off the chair. The chatter level rose as did some chortling. As Mike and Derrick sat down to have their breakfast shakes, the giggling slowly dwindled. The original eighty-seven that had knowledge of the ferrets were sharing that knowledge with the newbies. They quickly learned that all of their personal shiny possessions were really at risk. It wasn't the other kids they needed to be concerned about; it was Mike's ferrets, and they could be heard scampering around the air conditioning ducts over their heads. Many of the newest street kids were especially concerned because they had sold themselves for the few articles of jewelry they owned. The Scoobies, still hiding in the air conditioning ducts, heard that some humans sold their bodies for Shiny's.

During breakfast, Keith and Prez were discussing their dreams and the ramifications of those ideas with Mike and Derrick.

Mike observed, "For us, our lives have reached critical mass. What was once just four friends forming a band has become so much more. If what we and our families have together now isn't proof of destinies being changed, then I don't know what is. It makes me believe that life isn't just a series of meaningless accidents; it's going someplace. Now and then I think I see glimpses of where it's going, but the glimpses don't make sense."

Nodding agreement, Derrick added, "Like pictures out of context. Us and our families share what we think we know with open minds and hearts. We're willing to receive what we're being given and then return something. It's a two-way street. Like the energy between each of us is shared, give and take. It happens in our band all the time. I guess what I'm wondering is, did it start in our band or did it start before the band?"

Keith shrugged, "Does it really matter when or how it happened?"

Derrick shook his head and explained, "Just curious, I guess."

"What matters most is that it is," Prez offered. "How many other people have friendships only to acquire something without giving in return? How long can friendships like that last?"

"Not very damn long," Mike grinned. "I wouldn't want a friend like that."

Prez sniggered, "Why am I considering changing our concert at school?"

Derrick and Mike laughed. Keith wondered, "What kind of change?"

"I feel the need to play Yes' Heart Of The Sunrise," Prez offered. Knowing the extended bass guitar introduction that Prez loved playing, Keith cracked up.

Mike howled, "Beats the shit out of The In Crowd." They all nodded their heads, knowing they could play it without fancy effects and silently agreeing to shock the shit of Mrs. Diaz and the sophomores.

Derrick tapped Prez and pointed at several kids sitting at tables not far away. Prez kept seeing the same dark, 'Clan Short' green T-shirts on some of the kids. Emblazoned on the shirts were the band names 'Time Touched' and 'Platinum Habits'. Noticing Prez's surprised expression, Derrick tapped his sub-vocal and called, "Alden, where did the kids get band T-shirts with our band's name on them?"

Into Derrick's, Keith's, Mike's and Prez's sub-vocals, Alden giggled, "Well, there were extras, after Time Touched's big tour."

"How many 'extras' were there for a tour that hasn't happened?" Keith wondered.

Alden giggled, "A crate of each size, small, medium, large, extra-large and Omigod, widen the doorways."

Prez smirked, "Check out the dates and places; they're all over the place, at cities I've never heard of; some are 2014, some are 3075; they're unrealistic dates."

"In this universe," Alden giggled to the four Rimmers.

Mike smiled, "You obviously know something we don't, Alden."

"Okay," Alden playfully began, and marked the video camera feeds to store the expressions on the Core Rimmers faces. "Word of your concerts got out; Friday, which lasted two hours, not including the two encore songs, and last night, again over two-and-a-half hours long. Since the Clan already has recording studios set up in Orlando, you're considered signed to a label. There's no need to worry about anything at all, management, accounting, legal services through FYS, which means Mister Hundser. It's all set. When you guys get the chance, talk with Keith's dad about it."

Keith interjected, "Drew was hoping to implement a design of a recording studio for us here."

Alden assured, "He'll still be able to do that, Keith. Russ will fill any niche you need; in design, in engineering, in mastering, whatever.

The band has total control of everything."

"All that's very nice to know," Prez chuckled, "but what about the tour concert dates?"

"They're real," Alden assured. "Later this month, you'll leave and return."

All four Rimmers incredulously laughed, "For fifty concerts?"

Alden sighed, "You guys need to get with the program. What is time to a Mikyvis? You can leave here at eleven in the morning, be back by eleven-o-two in the morning and still do a fifty city tour, without stressing anything; you'll have all the time you want to do whatever you need, whether that means preparing for shows, writing songs, rehearsing and relaxing, doing what you love doing, not to mention seeing more of multiple worlds than even Starfleet can transport you to. To Dylan Richardson, your tour manager, Kyle's and Tyler's son, time is a non-issue."

For many moments, the four band mates silently absorbed what they had been told. Kyle's and Tyler's son, Prez thought, the child of the same two that created a twenty-foot tall wave. Maybe Dylan was more like Levi or Peter, Prez hoped.

Mike softly muttered, "We'll need to tell Troy and Reyes."

Derrick nodded, "And learn about how this is done. I can only assume time will be virtually unchanged here, but where we're going and what we're doing will take way longer than two minutes."

"We'll have to bring our kids along then," Prez offered.

"I'm not gonna let many months away pass without them," Keith stubbornly insisted.

Not too far away, John and Stephen sat with Nathan, Jamie, Jacob and Beau, having their breakfast milkshakes, when a group of FCC kids came over to their table. Acting as spokesman for the younger kids he was with, Chad Bunting carefully asked, "John, can we get Teddy bears too?"

To Chad and the other kids behind him, John smiled, "Yep, I've already got that on my to-do list today. I only want to ask you guys a small favor, okay?"

Chad nodded and Rena Hawkin almost whimpered, "Will it be hard to do?"

Standing, John giggled, "Is it hard to give and get hugs?"

Chad and Rena shook their heads, and then the other seven kids also shook their heads.

"The cost for a Teddy bear is a hug, from each of you," John smiled. Starting the process, eight-year-old Rena stepped forward and shyly hugged John.

Wrapping his arms around her, John sent his first telepathic message to her. 'You're not evil, Rena. None of you are bad or unholy kids. You don't have anything to be afraid of here. No one will make you pray for forgiveness on your knees because of a little mistake. All that you, and all the kids here, have to do is the best you can do. If you need or want help, to make your best even better, you've got all the Core Rimmers and all these other kids here to help you. Just ask for what you need and you'll have it, okay?' Rena nodded and smiled. John asked, "What kind of Teddy would you like?"

"A bigger one," Rena answered, and gestured with her hand. She added, "If it had blond hair and blue eyes too, that would be nice."

John nodded, "Okay, after lunch time, you'll get your very own Teddy."

Chad stepped close to John to give and get a hug. Again, John repeated virtually the same telepathic message, calming the boy; releasing fears instilled by his FCC parents and taking an order for another Teddy Bear. While Stephen proudly watched, John met with and shared the same with the other seven FCC kids. When he was finished, John re-introduced the kids to his brothers and nephews, so they could integrate more quickly and easily with the Pacific Rim Clan. Dewi, Bruce, Richie, Dee, Gage, Sammy and Geoff took over from there, introducing the FCC kids to Cesar and Felipe, Reyes, Jonah and Dillon. By the time John returned to Stephen and his milkshake, he could hear giggling and see smiles on the faces of nine FCC kids.

John scowled and Stephen asked, "What's wrong, hon?"

"I keep hearing Russian," John muttered. Without thinking about it, John had Alden connect him to the base PA and called out, "Who's thinking in Russian and why exactly?"

All John got as a reply was a lot of kids in the dining room giggling or calling out "Wasn't me!"

In a playful circular fashion, the terrible trio sniggered, "A simple question", "met with a simple reply", "can only mean", "it's time", "to check", "the", "main", "gate".

Grinning at the devious triplets, John finished his shake and sent, 'Save that for making Keith loopy, bros.' He put his glass down and smiled at Stephen, "Let's greet our new Clan kid, baby."

Concurrently, Kaleo, Tory, Sean and Troy were sharing another table during breakfast. The conversation began with the topic of the wedding. Kaleo shared, "Truthfully, I was surprised that Tory and I both passed the mind-melds. We've only been a couple since Sunday night."

Tory nodded and smiled, "That says we're on the same page of the same book, don't it?"

"Don't think for a second that I'm not thrilled," Kaleo said. "It's just that Prez and Keith and Derrick and Mike have grown up together. They've got years under their belts as couples."

Tory tilted his head uncertainly and offered, "Maybe the time we spent at the orphanage counts too? We were together even though we weren't a couple."

Sean knowingly grinned, "When it's right, time don't matter."

Troy agreed, "We were friends within half an hour, right, Tiger?"

Sean nodded. Tory giggled, "Tiger, huh?"

Troy smiled at Sean then assured, "Definitely! He's my Tiger."

"I love it!" Kaleo chuckled.

"We gotta get some kewl pet names," Tory prodded.

Kaleo looked down and softly muttered, "Non-stop."

"Scuse me?" Tory playfully squealed as Sean and Troy began laughing.

Innocently, Kaleo sniggered, "I was referring to myself!"

"You lie so bad," Tory giggled.

Kaleo shrugged and cackled, "It was worth the shot."

Sean softly said, "I think I've got a kewl one for Troy."

"You do?" Troy squeaked.

Sean nodded then leaned closer and whispered, "If you like it, how about Minstrel? Or maybe Pied Piper? I'd follow you anywhere."

Troy whimpered. Kaleo and Tory turned to each other and smiled. Tory teased, "Did someone just mess their pants?"

Troy blushed and nodded then leaned over to Sean and whispered, "I like both. We'll see which you actually use and what I respond to."

Humming thoughtfully, Kaleo grinned, "We may have our next married couple in the queue ready to take their vows."

Troy chuckled, "Now that's moving at the speed of light. We just met yesterday."

Kaleo grinned then reminded, "John and Stephen just met Monday night. When it's right, age and time together don't matter."

Tory said, "We saw you two in the kitchen chow line. It's in your eyes, it's in the way you play and tease each other; it's the way you are together."

Kaleo nodded and smiled at Sean, "We were right in front of you and Horacio last night during the concert." Sean blushed and giggled. Kaleo chuckled, "We heard almost every word you said."

Every time Troy sang or played a solo, you were totally under his spell."

Turning to Sean, Troy asked, "Were you?"

Fiercely blushing, Sean nodded, "Since before dinner last night. The feeling doubled and tripled so many times yesterday, it's infinite. Honestly, I may never be able to hear that 'troubled water' song without getting shaky all over."

Uncertain what to say or do in the very public dining room, Troy shed happy tears and wiped his eyes.

Since Troy was emotional, Tory softly asked both Sean and Troy, "If you could get married next week, would you?"

"In an instant," Sean quickly answered.

With a huge boulder stuck in his throat, Troy could only rapidly nod and force a smile.

Sean wrapped an arm around Troy and softly wondered, "You okay?" Still unable to speak, Troy nodded then wiped his eyes again. Sean whispered, "What do you want me to do, lover?" Turning to Sean so fast that his neck snapped, Troy widely smiled. A little taken aback, Sean pulled back and searched Troy's eyes. Sean squeaked, "What?"

Inhaling deeply, Troy grinned, "Call me that again."

Sean uncertainly asked, "What? Lover?"

Troy nodded and cheered, "That's the one!" Kaleo and Tory cracked up. Troy leaned closer to Sean and softly warned, "You have five-seconds to kiss me."

Turning fire engine red, Sean nervously looked around and giggled, "Here?"

"Time's up, too late," Troy sadly huffed. He then leaned over and tried to suck Sean's tongue off its roller.

While Sean and Troy were still locked at the mouth, Kaleo playfully recited, "I, Tiger, take you, Lover, to be my life partner, for better or for worse, in sickness and in health, for as long as we both shall live."

Only a few tables away, Prez over heard Kaleo and called over, "Who's marrying who?"

Gesturing at the two human vacuums attached at the mouth, Tory cackled, "Sean and Troy. I give them a week."

"A week?" Kaleo incredulously giggled. "A day or two, tops. We'll be lucky if they don't drop to the floor and go for it right here!"

Prez cracked up. Smiling widely at his hysterical partner, Keith loudly reminded, "We need a Vulcan for the mind-melds. At least give us a chance to call Uncle Spock back."

Finally breaking their lip-lock, Troy whispered, "Is Horacio here?"

Sean nodded and giggled, "He's watchin' us."

Troy whispered, "Then your dorm room is empty?"

Their eyes met. Slowly, two devilish grins spread. They got up and waved at Kaleo and Tory then went to take their shake glasses to the kitchen. Sean wondered, "Why the dorm and not your place?"

Troy held his answer until the glasses were safe on the dishwasher shelf. Pulling Sean closer, Troy whispered, "Toy number one was fun. Time to play with toy number two?"

Pulling back to look in Troy's eyes, simply to make sure he was serious, Sean whined. Quickly, they started to make their way to the exit. Sean softly giggled, "I'm glad you waited. I would've dropped the glass."

Troy cackled "I know!" then increased his pace. Sean began laughing and decided a brisk walk to the door was not sufficient. He ran past Troy to the door and they raced each other to the dorm.

Seeing Troy and Sean trying to hurry past each other on their way out of the dining room, Prez grinned, "Amazing."

Keith nodded, "Barely seems like the same Sean we talked with the other night."

Still playing the role of Shiny Priest, Mike prophesied, "Henceforth there shall be weekly weddings and concerts of ballads."

Shaking his head sadly, Derrick softly chuckled, "We'll need more housekeepers to change the sheets."

At the Iroquois Avenue gate, John and Stephen were meeting their newest arrival, seven-year-old, spiky-blond-haired, slate-gray-eyed, Francis Petropavlovski; who had been abandoned by his parents. Speaking in Russian for the boy while simultaneously doing a language dump, John asked Frankie where he was originally from. In a small voice, Frankie answered, "Petropavlovsk-Kamchatskiy."

Taking interest in the carved dolphin hanging from the boy's neck, Stephen asked, in Russian, "Do you like dolphins, Frankie?"

Speaking in broken English for the first time, Frankie nodded and widely smiled, "Very, yes, please, poppa."

Glancing at each other, John and Stephen grinned. John sent, 'We haven't been married much more than fourteen hours and we've been adopted. Our moms are gonna love this!' Thinking of his mother's dwindling Valium supply, Stephen went into a giggling fit.

The newest Rimmer family started back to CIC dining room to get Frankie his first breakfast milkshake. In his mind, John heard Jamie giggle, 'So, how far did you and Stephen get during your honeymoon, bro?'

'Not that far!' John laughed.

Beau sniggered, 'What's the problem?'

'There's no problem,' John grinned, 'we simply didn't get there before doing more rescues.'

Jacob jumped in, giggling 'Too bad. Try again tonight?'

John replied, 'It was planned, but now with Frankie, we'll have to take an afternoon siesta.'

'It's called Private Time,' Jamie replied seriously. 'I just explained it to him; it's a thing that Cory and Sean started.'

"It's okay if you want to play with each other's stiffies," Frankie said in Russian. Flushing bright red, John and Stephen glanced at each other, and then at the boy walking between them.

'Nice Glow!' Jamie, Jacob, and Beau laughed in unison.

Suddenly, Frankie was smiling widely. Uncertainly and not expecting an answer, John telepathically asked Frankie, 'You know about stiffies?'

Surprisingly, Frankie nodded and replied, 'It happens and it feels good. It feels better, yes, when poppa plays with yours, daddy?'

John grinned, "Let's speak, so poppa knows too."

"I heard every word, from all five of you," Stephen smirked.

'Good, you learn quick!' Beau giggled. 'You ready for the advanced course yet?'

John gasped, "What?"

Jacob sniggered, 'It's feedback, bro.'

'In close proximity to you, Stephen's getting in the loop,' Jamie explained.

Stephen frowned, "If only I..."

'Could send messages,' John, Frankie, Jamie, Jacob and Beau interrupted, completing the thought.

'You're learning,' Jacob giggled. 'I give you five minutes more and we should have you up to speed!'

John, Stephen and Frankie walked into the CIC dining room together. Stephen took Frankie directly into the chow line for his first breakfast shake. John began a conversation with all three of the Terrible Triplets, wondering exactly what 'close proximity' meant. The replies John got wasn't much of an answer; how close Stephen needed to be to John depended on Stephen; it could be as little as a few meters or as much as many kilometers. In time, as Stephen's telepathic skills grew, they would find out what close proximity meant.

Helping Frankie with his breakfast order and while waiting for the chefs, Stephen asked Frankie, in Russian, "Where were you before you came to us?"

Attempting to answer in English, Frankie answered, "The airport. Mommy and daddy left me sleeping on a bench."

Stephen wondered, "How did you know to come here?"

Frankie shrugged, "I felt good. I turn around when it didn't feel good more."

Absorbing that, Stephen realized he had a miniature empath on his hands and sent the thought to John. "You've been walking for a while," Stephen realized.

Frankie shrugged, "Easy, but it took a few hours. Left the airport around four, in the dark."

Accepting Frankie's food from Manuel, Stephen asked, "Are you tired; do you want to lay down after you eat?"

Fervently shaking his head, Frankie smiled, "Used to walk long time in snow. This was an easy stroll. I'm fine, poppa." Heading for the table where his mother was sitting, Stephen carried Frankie's tray while Frankie carried his milkshake.

Admitting that he could procrastinate no longer, Prez sighed then said, "Let's check on our Clan's status then get our buns to school." The other three nodded and they all stood. On their way to the kitchen, they stopped by the table where their sons were sitting. In an assembly line fashion, each boy got a kiss on the head from the four fathers.

The team of eight Core Rimmers met at the dishwasher. Looking up at Prez, John said, "I'm gonna have to change my school plans, bro."

Prez asked, "What's the problem?"

John shrugged, "There hasn't been one really. I'm just thinking a Clan Short N-Gen in public school isn't such a good idea. Stephen's gonna be goin' to school here. That's where I want to be. Lindsay's here too, so it's just better for everyone." John barely paused long enough to breathe and grin, "And my son is here too now."

Drew, Prez and Keith gasped, "Your son?"

John nodded and giggled, "A new Rimmer kid I picked up at our gate just a few minutes ago. His name's Frankie, he's Russian and he's seven." Cracking up with Mike, Derrick and Kaleo over the stupefied expressions his brothers wore, John laughed, "Stephen's poppa and I'm daddy. They were the first words out of his mouth, swear to God!"

Stunned silent for a few moments, Drew sighed and tapped his comm-badge. "Alden," Drew ordered, "monitor our mom and Mrs. Marr for Valium abuse, starting immediately."

"Got it," Alden giggled. "By the way, they're using them responsibly, right before bed."

Facing John, Keith started for the Command Center door, wondering, "What about Jeff and Tommy?"

"I'm gonna call them later today," John said. "I'll invite them here so we can get caught up. Today's the Downings' funeral too. I'm gonna be pretty busy."

Nodding, Prez asked, "Did you tell mom and dad about school or Frankie?"

"Not yet," John answered. "I'll get around to it today."

Opening and holding the CIC door, Derrick shared, "Me and Mike are thinking about school too, bro."

Mike nodded, "It's already getting crazy; in bed at three and awake before nine. First chance I get, I'm sleeping for twelve hours just cos I can."

Keith whined, "Please don't give up on the jazz band. We worked half the summer for those spots."

Noticing a man in a Starfleet uniform in the CIC, Prez honestly told his band-mates, "The school concerts are the only thing messing us up this week. Two more days and Saturday then it's done." The man in the uniform turned from his station to face them. "Lieutenant Vorik!" Prez happily shouted.

Lieutenant Vorik nodded once and flatly said, "Greetings, gentlemen."

All the Core Rimmers gathered around the Lieutenant, happy to see a familiar face. Barely able to hide his own pleasure, Prez said, "Welcome back! I'm only wondering, what's brought you back?"

Standing at parade rest, Lieutenant Vorik explained, "It is a standing order in Starfleet that all Clan Divisions are eligible for a permanent Starfleet Liaison of at least lieutenant junior grade rank. Upon return to my duties on-board the Endeavour, I placed a request for transfer to your Division, should you ever ask for such a liaison. I received my new assignment this morning and so, here I am."

Prez cocked his head slightly, "I'm sorry, Lieutenant. It's not that I don't want you here, I could use the help, but I didn't even know I could ask for such a liaison."

Vorik nodded. "There is more," he said. "During your conversations with Jason Evans on Monday, you asked for a VSO liaison. Based on your requirements, for command and espionage assistance, the assignment was presented to me and I accepted. I am also versed in diplomacy, data coalition and tactics." Pausing and locking eyes with Prez, he asked, "Were these not your requirements, Director O'Brian?"

Prez couldn't help smiling. "They were," he answered.

"Then our common objectives have intersected," Lieutenant Vorik stated.

Mike asked, "How are you VSO and Starfleet, Sir?"

"I am VSO and was a part of Le'Metra Division," Vorik answered easily. "I was placed on assignment undercover within Starfleet two years ago. My mission came to an end two months ago, and was simply awaiting transfer out to another VSO operation. This opportunity came along, and so I took it, as I had nothing else pending. Division Commander Jason Evans found out about the Starfleet transfer request and talked to my VSO Division Commander. I was moved into Dragon Division, Voice Company, and the assignment for Starfleet was pushed through. Therefore, I am both, your VSO and Starfleet Liaison, as well as an adviser for anything Command orientated, should you require it."

Absorbing some composure and formality from the Lieutenant, Prez said, "I wish we could stay for a while to get reacquainted, but we have a concert at nine-fifty-five."

Lieutenant Vorik nodded, "I shall be here when you return. Congratulations are in order for your weddings. I was certain this would come to pass when we parted company Sunday." Everyone began thanking him.

Kaleo grinned, "Me too?"

"No," Vorik replied, "You and John were unexpected."

Prez went to Jimmy, asking, "What've you got for us today?"

"I wish I could say it's been quiet, Prez," Jimmy smiled. "When Derrick sent Reyes to AI Division Headquarters yesterday, they restored more of his memories. He was able to identify when the Child Prostitution ring was set up and by whom. The Prime Minister of the ROH in 1998 was named. The AI Division security team came with Kuan Ti and uhh... dispatched the problem."

All heads in the room turned to Derrick and Mike.

Derrick nodded and grinned, "We haven't had the chance to tell you. Reyes, Jonah and Dillon returned from AI Division, with a half dozen kittens, then John and Stephen returned from their Enterprise Tour, then we relaxed the freaked out parents, then we got married..."

Sadly shaking his head, Prez sighed, "Moving right along," and then turned his attention back to Jimmy. "Send the report to my PADD, bro. Is there anything else?"

"The buses are here, boss," Jimmy answered.

Prez blinked, "Buses? What buses?"

Again, Jimmy turned towards Derrick and Mike.

Derrick giggled, "Oh, yeah, we have forty buses at each of our bases now, Prez."

"They've been paid for already," Mike cheekily grinned. Drew, Corey, Kaleo, John and even Keith turned away, giggling their butts off.

Rolling his eyes, Prez asked, "Is there anything else?"

"Well," Jimmy smiled, "we found a pair of turtle doves and three French hens in Shirley's cage this morning. Adjoining cages for the four calling birds are being prepared now. The jeweler called and said the golden rings were on back order, though."

Prez began pounding a fist into his other hand and softly counting down as he advanced menacingly on Jimmy.

Backing away, Jimmy giggled, "The AI's are still processing those accounting records. Other than that, we've got nothing."

Prez called, "Daileass, what's the deal? You've been reviewing those records for a day, to my knowledge."

Over the CIC loudspeakers, Daileass answered, "It's simple, Prez. Many of the debits that would be normal for any business simply don't exist. Alden, Draco and I are searching for possible matches across multiple corporations to find who's providing the assets and where the unaccounted for liabilities might be. As I said yesterday, it's screwy. If we did the Clan's books this way, we'd be short billions and clueless where the money went."

"Can you tell us which company it is that's causing you these problems?" Prez wondered.

Draco answered, "That wouldn't be ethical at this time, Prez."

Alden added, "It's a major California corporation, that's all we can say for now."

Prez nodded and sighed, "You'll let us know if it checks out or not?"

"Of course!" Alden, Daileass and Draco chorused.

"We're outta here, dudes," Keith announced.

Prez declared, "You've got the ball, Kaleo."

Kaleo proudly smiled and nodded, "No sweat, Prez."

The four band mates started for the door. Drew and Corey returned to the server room to work on the division web site. John placed orders for ten Teddy bears, but was advised to get a hundred, so the kids could make choices. Silently asking himself where he could store the remaining teddy bears, John considered some suggestions from Alden, and then decided to make use of the empty sub-basement at the FYS building as the division's new 'bear cave'. All the teddy bears would be delivered there. John could then bring the kids to the FYS building's sub-basement to choose their new best friends.

With the teddy bear situation resolved, John and Nathan then went to Lieutenant Vorik. The three of them went to the Intel console and began reviewing the search results on the Human Liberation Front.

Nathan shared, "Logan told me about some stuff that UNIT Intel discovered."

"Gentlemen," Lieutenant Vorik said, "let us discuss this privately in a conference room." John and Nathan nodded and immediately started down the hall.

Once they were all seated, John grumbled, "So, the HLF has threatened all twelve of the Safe Haven states in the U.S."

Vorik nodded. "That is an implied threat directly against Clan Short."

Nathan said, "Logan said that UNIT Intel found that the HLF claimed responsibility for the World Trade Center disaster. That's not generally known by very many people. As we all know, several terrorist organizations claimed responsibility for that, and supposedly investigations are still continuing; however, when motive is considered, the HLF is high on the list of suspects, because Starfleet had offices in both buildings.

"They're smart, keeping information isolated to those directly involved," Nathan continued. "FBI and CIA investigations couldn't find how they were funding any operations. No one discovered how they could've executed the Twin Towers attack. They must be moving small quantities of cash around so it doesn't stick out. In the final analysis, the HLF aren't faking; they're quite capable of executing terrorist activity so deep under the covers, we can't determine who is part of the organization or where their funding is coming from. Those responsible for Oklahoma City, were caught and brought to justice, but Vulcan telepathic scans of them got us nowhere. Each cell is completely ignorant and separate from all others, including the leadership."

Glancing between Vorik and Nathan, John asked, "How can we discover who these dirt bags are?"

Vorik considered aloud, "Their organization must be structured such that leadership is shared from multiple locations. We'll assume that communications between leaders and to operatives are coded, so that they cannot be identified. It would also be a fair assumption that they are not using voice or Internet text, which implies postal delivery."

Nathan scowled, "That means they don't accomplish anything quickly. The best that could be done via mail delivery is hours later that same day or the next day, depending on the distance."

"They're using bogus return addresses too," John huffed.

Nathan smirked, "We can't exactly interrogate all the employees of the various corporations whose addresses were used for threats already made."

Vorik suggested, "We must ask for and obtain the next threatening messages, and share that information with Terran law enforcement."

Nathan nodded and stood, saying, "Logan's already on it. I'll summarize our conversation on the Intel console for other divisions."

John smiled, "Thanks, Nathan. The Double J's are sharing what I've heard telepathically."

"Kewl," Nathan chirped, and then left the conference room.

Done with the HLF topic, Lieutenant Vorik asked, "Your transition to N-Gen was painless?"

John grinned, "Pretty much, I've had worse headaches." He covered his mouth then cleared his throat. John croaked, "This sore throat from yesterday is killing me though. Can we talk telepathically, please?"

Vorik reached one hand to John's head and placed two fingers on his temple. 'As you wish.'

John sent, 'I need to ask you something. Over the last two days, since becoming N-Gen, I've been noticing some weird stuff. The ways people's minds are organized don't make sense.'

Vorik asked, 'In what manner?'

'Big differences. Like yesterday with Uncle Spock. A Vulcan mind I can understand being much more organized; like a perfectly clean bedroom, a place for everything and everything in its place. What's weird are my mom and dad, for instance, compared to Prez, Keith, Drew, Corey, Mike and Derrick. As organized as my folks are, their minds are cluttered messes. My brothers have much bigger bedrooms that are a little less cluttered. Their minds are almost like N-Gen minds, just no doors or windows to other rooms for processing other stuff.'

'You have identified what delineates the normal mind from the gifted mind,' Vorik stated. 'Your brothers are not N-Gen, but are virtuoso musicians. Drew is only beginning to build on his engineering gift. Kaleo and your parents are the normal minds.'

John confirmed, 'So gifted scientists, engineers, artists and musicians would seem larger and more organized?'

'It is quite likely that many throughout your history had the gifted minds you have perceived. For example, Vulcans are intrigued by Leonardo Di Vinci. He was an extraordinary artist and engineer for his time. We cannot know if he was N-Gen, gifted or normal in his mind's structure, because he has been deceased for five hundred years. Available information leads us to believe he was one of many that would fall into the gifted classification.'

'Okay, then these are known differences. No problem.'

'You have changed since Saturday, John. The boy is there; however, you are more adult.'

John giggled. 'I've got my parents, five fourteen-year-olds, a twelve-year-old, two eleven-year-olds and even a piece of Joel Short in my head now. And that's not including my younger son, brothers and sister. Keith and Prez are performing right now. I can hear each of them individually and all the music around them too. They're playing Heart of the Sunrise, and the teacher is surprised. It took me a while to just find the volume knob.' John sighed, 'I've gotta get ready for a funeral at eleven o'clock. Let me know if you learn something more about the HLF, please.'

Removing his fingers from John's temple, Vorik replied, "I will investigate further then inform you." John smiled, then turned and left the conference room. One thing John had already learned was that saying 'thank you' to a Vulcan was redundant after asking for something and getting a positive reply.

Kaho'olawe Island

10:15 AM HTZ

"All it really needs is Gilligan," Peter said to Quint.

Quint quirked an eyebrow at Peter. "Explain," he said.

"It's a TV show, about castaways on a desert island," Peter said. "And this sure is; there's no fresh water, mostly scrub with very little grassland and fewer trees. The whole eastern side of the volcanic mountainside leads to lots o' sheer cliffs. I guess we'll leave that as a nature area, for folks to go for hikes and day trip excursions. The western tip of the island has some nice beaches though. Maybe the northern tip of the island would be a good place for a transportation hub, airport, harbors, roads and monorail to the rest of the western side."

"Thinking big, aren't you?" Quint smirked. "Tell you what; let's turn it into something that will knock their socks off!"

Peter giggled. "Whatcha got in mind?"

"Let's bring this dead rock back to life," Quint grinned. "Water is primo-numero-uno," Quint explained and snapped his fingers. "Let's filter the salty waters of the Pacific through some porous volcanic rock and give this desert fresh water."

Peter was smiling and nodding, "How're you gonna get it up to the surface of the island?"

Quint giggled, "Simple, we'll heat some rock so the water bubbles up to a mountain lake that overflows to form small rivers and streams. Craters are ugly, almost as ugly as gorges that serve little purpose, until they become rivers."

"I like it!" Peter grinned. "Then I can put housing along wherever there's fresh water, right?"

"You can pump the water anywhere it's needed," Quint shrugged.

"What about all those scrub bushes?" Peter asked.

"What scrub bushes?" Quint replied as he snapped his fingers again. "Shrubberies versus scrubberies. I left some scrub up on the mountainside as ground cover, though," he added as a "Q R Green" button appeared on his shirt. "Now that we've got water flowing up through the rock, this place will support life."

"Hey, lookin' good!" Peter said. "Tell you what, let's get a Rimmer over here to check things out."

"Fine by me," Quint responded. "And if you want to bring Tory along with Kaleo, go ahead."

Leaving Quint behind, Peter popped back to Ewa Beach. "Hey, Kaleo," he called out. "You busy?"

Startled again by the sudden Mikyvis appearance, Kaleo giggled, "Just watchin' the kids, Peter. What've you been up to?"

"Fixing up a dessert island. Wanna come see?"

"Don't you mean desert island?" Kaleo laughed.

"Nope, dessert. Here, have a cookie!" Peter giggled, and handed off a chocolate chip cookie, asking, "Where's Tory?"

Pointing up at the five-meter high diving platform, Kaleo grinned, "Gettin' ready to dive."

Peter waited until Tory launched himself, then levitated him over to where he and Kaleo were, putting a purple hardhat on his head in the process.

"I'm taking Kaleo over to check out the Clan's new island,"

Peter told him. "Wanna come with?"

"Sure!" Tory excitedly agreed.

"Don't you think we need some clothes first?" Kaleo giggled.

"Clothes are overrated," Peter smiled, as a purple hardhat appeared on Kaleo's head, followed by miniature hardhats on his and Tory's 'little heads', held in place by purple jock straps.

Busting up in hysterical laughter, Kaleo pointed at Tory's pale pubescent crotch. Tory pointed at Kaleo's equipment, howling, "Purple on dark meat looks awesome!"

Around the diving well, Horacio, Hank, Keanu and Liki heard Tory's remark and cracked up. Sitting near Horacio, Sonia grinned and sadly shook her head. At fourteen, she was still a virgin, but she very much enjoyed her new home and the silly sexual remarks passed by many of the older boys. At last, she could be herself and not worry about what her parents might complain about. Still laughing, Horacio looked at his hopeful girlfriend and playfully bounced his eyebrows. That pushed Sonia to giggles, especially since Horacio was naked, Hispanic and also had dark skin. Although Sonia did have on a bikini top and a pair of shorts, Horacio suddenly thought it might be wise to slip into his boardies.

Mentally messaging John that he was stealing Kaleo and Tory, Peter then transported them to the top of Kaho'olawe Peak to show them what he and Quint had been doing.

Eying the two teenagers, naked except for purple hardhats on head and penis-head, Quint chortled, "Planning on a nudist resort, Peter?" Quint turned to Kaleo and Tory, bragging, "This dried up ol' lava crater is now a mountain freshwater lake, fed directly from the Pacific Ocean and filtered through rock." There were hundreds of evergreen trees as far as the eye could see surrounding the lake, making the crater rim far less obvious. "Peter and I thought the eastern third of the island could be like a natural preserve, where folks could hike and camp without having to leave the island," Quint offered, and then transported the four of them to the eastern side of the lake. Kaleo and Tory gasped at the beautiful sight of a waterfall that dropped off the cliffs in at least three stages to the Pacific about two kilometers east and far below.

"My God," Kaleo reverently cheered, and then smiled, "This is hardly a desert island anymore."

"You ain't seen nothin' yet," Quint grinned, and transported all four to the western side of the lake, where another smaller waterfall fed a river that wound down the island, split into three, one to the south and the other two to the east, and fed numerous streams in the distance. They transported again, this time to a large green field that seemed unnaturally flat, considering the location. Quint giggled, "While Peter was gone getting you two, I decided to smooth this area; it's about three kilometers long by one-and-a-half kilometers wide, so you have a good place to put an airport and harbor, at some future time."

Peter asked Kaleo, "Does Prez have any idea what this island might be used for?"

Shaking his head, Kaleo smiled, "It's way too big for a Rimmer base, so Prez gave it to Cory Short, for all of the Clan to use. I guess we can use it for whatever Cory and Prez decide."

"It's prettier than Kauai now," Tory smiled. Kaleo rapidly nodded agreement.

"Aww, it was nothin'," Quint cheekily giggled, and then transported the group to the western beach. "I made this like other famous beaches I've seen, so it can be used as a recreational area in the future. Palm trees line the beach, making it appear similar to beaches in Florida and California."

Quint smiled, "I saw one other place that really didn't need too much from me." He transported them to a small, secluded beach where a house already stood. Pointing to the western bluff and cliffs, and slightly further north, where the final stage of the waterfall cascaded into the ocean, Quint said, "This place is so private and pretty, I thought it would be a perfect place for a Core Rimmer retreat, so I put this house here. It's powered by solar and wind, so it has all the modern conveniences, including a food replicator, so you don't even have to worry about cooking while you're here. I thought it should be large enough for all you guys, so I copied one of the single-family homes at Ewa Beach; six bedrooms, four and a half bathrooms and a full basement. As you can see, there's no access to this spot, and I don't believe there should be a road or a dock. Just have an AI transport you to Keoneuli Beach when you want to spend some time away."

"This is awesome!" Kaleo gushed.

Peter giggled, "Whatever you decide the island is to be used for, let us know."

Quint grinned, "Let's give it a day or so before we build anything. With all the subterranean water flowing now, we have a very large aquifer under this mountain, so it needs to settle, then we can begin building whatever you guys want."

"We've got plenty of time," Kaleo offered.

Tory added, "And you dudes have turned a desert into a lush green paradise already. The Clan could do whatever we want with this island now, even if it's just a private get-away."

Peter giggled, "We're glad you like it. You wanna go back home now?"

Kaleo nodded, "Yeah, we really should. All the other Rimmers are busy and it's only Aunt Lanna and Uncle Carl watchin' the kids."

Ewa Beach

10:17 AM HTZ

Out in the CIC dining room, John found Stephen with his mother and Frankie; exactly where Stephen said he would be. Hurrying over, John rested his hurt arm across his partner's shoulder then leaned over and kissed his mother-in-law on the cheek.

Kathleen Marr grinned at her son; "Either John's read my mind or you've made a wonderful choice."

Placing his virtual halo over his head, John innocently giggled, "I had no idea from you or Stephen that's what I was supposed to do. It's just what I wanted to do."

Reaching a hand up to place on John's arm, Stephen smiled, "A wonderful choice, ma. That's the way he is without using N-Gen powers. With his N-Gen powers, it's a hundred times better."

"Ten times," John playfully corrected. "You multiply it by ten to get the hundred times."

Turning towards Frankie, John asked, "Do you like your new grandma, Frankie?"

Frankie nodded and smiled, "Granny Kathy is very young and pretty. She got me tarts to go with my milkshake, daddy."

Kathleen Marr giggled, "I'm not even thirty yet and already a grandmother. Not many would believe it..."

"Outside the clan," Kathleen and John chorused.

Stephen giggled and happened to notice the wall clock. "We've got a funeral to go to, ma," Stephen explained. "Frankie and I still need to get suits too." Turning to John, Stephen asked, "How long do you think we'll be gone, hon?"

John answered, "Bruce said only an hour or two, tops. By one o'clock, we'll be back, I guess."

Stephen got up and kissed his mom, then softly said, "We'll be back for a late lunch." Sliding off his chair, Frankie gave his new grandmother a kiss on the cheek. then stood between John and Stephen.

"I'll be waiting," Kathleen smiled.

John tapped his sub-vocal and called, "Alden, take me, Frankie and Stephen to the store, by the dress clothes."

Alden giggled, "Soul and Power Rimmers in the store!" He transported them then finished, "Activating dressing room cameras."

John sniggered, "You goof! Are any of your cameras ever inactive?"

"The basement store ones were, until now," Alden giggled.

Reaching for Stephen's hand, John smiled, "Let's get you something really sharp lookin', baby."

In the CIC server room, Drew was in the groove, coding away and rapidly tapping at the computer keyboard. Keith remarked once that Drew should've played piano, his fingers were certainly nimble enough. Corey had completed his graphics work and gave Drew the file names necessary to complete the majority of the division's web pages. Not quite as busy as he had been the prior day, Corey called, "Drew?"

Busily working, Drew softly replied, "Yeah?"

Corey giggled, "More."

"More what, angel?" Drew muttered.

"Babies," Corey giggled.

Abruptly stopping what he was doing, Drew spun around in his chair, smiling at Corey. "We've done it four times since we got married," Drew sniggered.

Corey shrugged then rolled his chair closer to Drew. Corey whispered, "I like it a lot."

Drew giggled, "Can you stay in idle for just five more minutes? I can finish this one page in five minutes or less."

Corey nodded, but remained close enough to Drew where he could watch every move and see every small hair on Drew's arms. He began daydreaming, remembering the first time he had seen all three Hundser brothers naked at Ewa Beach. It was over four years since that summer day-trip, where all the current Rimmer families and the O'Brians spent a day together. There was no doubt about it, the Hundser boys were the cutest on the entire beach that day. John was six, Drew was almost eight, and Keith was near his tenth birthday. Back then Corey was smitten with all three brothers. Even then, they were eye-candy. Now, Corey considered his new hubby the best looking of the lot. Reliving those memories, Corey knew that everyone there had to notice his long lingering stares at each of the three Hundser boys. Now that they had gone 'all-the-way', Corey couldn't take his eyes off Drew. Corey couldn't believe how careful and excruciatingly slowly Drew made love, not only the first time, but the subsequent three times. Drew had been asking for a turn since finishing their second time, and Corey believed he was ready to be just as meticulous as Drew had been.

Drew giggled, "I'm hurryin'."

Standing and pushing the chair away, Corey stood and moved directly behind Drew. He silently mused, "How can the back of his head look awesome?" and then started gently finger-combing Drew's hair, causing Drew to cringe and giggle louder. Widely smiling, but allowing Drew to finish his work, Corey began tracing lines up Drew's arms to his shoulders.

Drew sniggered, "The chubby I got knowing you were horny is turning into major wood."

Corey smiled, but tapped his sub-vocal. "Alden, as soon as my hubby stands and takes hold of me, transport us to our townhome's master bedroom."

Alden giggled, "I can even have him naked upon arrival, Corey."

Considering it for a moment, Corey giggled, "Another time, maybe. I'll take care of that this time."

"Signal me with 'escape plan N' when you want," Alden instructed.

"Easy to remember," Corey giggled.

Watching as Drew saved and closed the file sent Corey's expectations into overdrive. Drew stood and faced Corey, but didn't take hold of him. Drew only caressed Corey's cheek and jaw before beginning his usual tender kisses across Corey's bottom lip, and then his top lip.

Corey whimpered through giggles, knowing that Drew was purposefully delaying the inevitable embrace. When, at last, Drew moved to finish his kisses with the knock-out lip lock and hugged Corey, they opened their eyes in their bedroom, right beside the bed. Wasting no time, Corey went right to work disrobing Drew. One thing they always relished was being able to touch each newly exposed area of skin. On a mission, Corey took extra seconds feeling up Drew's torso, waist and legs. Ticklish to the extreme, Drew was soon laughing hysterically. He giggled most of the time he was undressing Corey. The few moments Drew wasn't giggling, he was kissing Corey. Drinking in each other's bodies for a moment or two, they flung themselves together and held on tightly while desperately kissing.

It took about thirty minutes for Frankie and Stephen to finish choosing clothes and shoes. Even in his navy blue suit, Frankie proudly displayed his dolphin necklace over the tie. Stephen remained dressed in a dark brown pin-striped suit and carried his other clothes. John then asked Alden to transport them directly to his bedroom, so he could get changed.

Bruce was already in the room changing his clothes. In a somber mood and sitting on a bed with a blue dress shirt on, his underwear and socks, Bruce forced a smile for John and Stephen.

After introducing Frankie to Bruce and getting a weak attempt of congratulations, John smirked, "It ain't workin', bro," and then began changing clothes.

Bruce sighed, "Do me a favor, please, John?"

"Anything," John answered.

Bruce softly said, "Don't help me today."

Pausing, John locked eyes with Bruce and asked, "Are you sure?"

Bruce nodded and wiped his eyes saying, "I should feel it today. I keep telling myself, 'bad things happen so good things can happen'. It makes sense, but it ain't workin'. No N-Gen empath tricks, not today."

John nodded and promised, "No N-Gen empathy, just the same empathy I had before Monday. I can't stop that; not ever and 'specially not with you."

Bruce nodded and again forced a grin, "I couldn't ask for a better brother. You've helped me so much already. Since Sunday night, you've been great, really."

"That's what you'll always have now, Bruce; brothers that care," John assured.

Stephen reminded, "Don't forget your little sister, Carmella. She thinks the world of you, Bruce."

Fumbling with his white dress slacks, Bruce nodded, "I know it. It's not that I don't love it here. I do. It's just... my..." Breaking down, Bruce dropped his pants, wiped his eyes with both hands and wailed,

"My mommy and daddy! Everything was so simple! There weren't abused or abandoned kids in the world. What I didn't know about wasn't there. Then I was left alone, a whole night! The next day I was found by nice people. Later, almost a hundred kids were worse off than me. By the end of the weekend, I was just like them! I'll never dress in costumes on Halloween ever again! From now on, the last four days of October will always feel different.

"I ain't stupid. They were dead Thursday night, that's why they didn't come back. It took three days for them to be found. That means they were driftin' in the ocean all that time. All I want to know now is what happened on that boat? Once I know that, I think maybe I can start feelin' better."

Bruce continued to sob, with his eyes covered by his fists. John looked helplessly at Stephen. He sent, 'I want to go to him, but I can't. He won't accept that I'm just holding him. Can you do it, please, baby?'

Stephen only nodded and went to sit on the bed beside Bruce. Frankie followed his poppa and sat on the other side of Bruce. Stephen barely got an arm around Bruce's back before Bruce grabbed hold of Stephen and bitterly cried. John gave Stephen all the help he needed to help Bruce. More than anything, John wanted to be sitting with Bruce and holding him while he grieved. For the second time since Monday, John wished he could give away his N-Gen abilities. They got in the way when he first met Stephen and now they were in the way again with Bruce. He sent those thoughts and feelings to Stephen while he continued to dress. Stephen offered his own thoughts to John, so he could realize that his N-Gen skills were helpful more often than not. Once John was completely dressed and only had to grab the suit jacket, he went to Bruce. Picking the pants up off the floor, John held them open and Stephen helped Bruce step into them.

In a short few minutes, they had Bruce dressed. Leading him to the bathroom, John wet a washcloth and cleaned him up. It was already after eleven. They were supposed to be at the Iroquois Avenue gate by eleven. Alden was called by John and the four of them were instantly transported to the security station at the gate. Already waiting were Jim and Jennifer Hundser and Bruce's closest friends; Reyes, Bane, Benjamin, Dillon, Geoff and Jonah. Bruce's newest little brother, Dewi, also wanted to come along. No one was certain how much Dewi knew of funerals, but he wanted to be with Bruce and John. John introduced his parents to Frankie, the newest rescued boy, and telepathically told them that he and Stephen had been adopted by Frankie, making the Hundser adults Frankie's unofficial grandparents. Already occupied with Bruce, neither Jen nor Jim said a word. John felt his parents' surprise, but the only other thing he felt from them was concern for Bruce. The Scooby Gang was lined up, dressed in their new shiny black patent leather belts and hats. A separate Hummer carried six security personal. Once their passengers were loaded, the two vehicles started for the Waipahu Soto Zen Temple. It was only a few miles away and took about fifteen minutes to arrive.

Bruce was dressed in a white suit with a navy blue shirt and a white tie. Monday night, while they were choosing suits in the CIC store, Bruce had shared that white was more proper for the family of the departed at Buddhist funerals. The other boys felt that Bruce should be easily identified as the relative of the deceased. They therefore chose suits of dark blue, charcoal gray or black.

In the room were the two closed wooden caskets. Before each casket was a small altar. The altars had photographs of the deceased, bowls of fresh fruit and small arrangements of flowers from Bruce's grandparents in the United States and from Clan Short. Between the two altars was a third altar holding a small sculpture of Buddha and traditional flower arrangements.

Buddhists do not believe in expensive, extravagant displays for the deceased during their funerals. As with many other religions, the body without the soul is an empty vessel, nothing more than the remaining matter.

Bravely, Bruce walked into the room first. He went to the center altar, clasped his hands together and bowed before Buddha. The group of seven monks sitting in the lotus position behind the caskets began chanting. Following Bruce's lead, John, Stephen, Frankie and Dewi in turn clasped their hands together and bowed before the altar. When everyone had shown their respect before Buddha, they all sat and waited for the monks to complete their chant.

The monk in the center of the seven stood. So did Bruce and therefore everyone followed his lead. The monk said, "Hinder not yourselves, Ananda, by honoring the remains of Tathagata. Be zealous, I beseech you, Ananda, in your own behalf. Devote yourselves to your own good! There are wise men, Ananda, among the nobles, among the Brahmins, among the heads of houses, who are firm believers in the Tathagata; and they will do due honor to the remains of the Tathagata." The center monk then resumed the lotus position and all seven chanted for several minutes. Bruce, his family and friends sat quietly until the center monk stood again.

Once the assembled group was standing, the monk recited verses for contemplation. "Short, alas, is the life of man, limited and fleeting, full of pain and torment. One should wisely understand this and lead a holy life, for no mortals ever escape death.

"Just as the dewdrop, at the point of the grass blade at sunrise, very soon vanishes and does not remain for long; just so is the dewdrop-like life of men very short and fleeting.

"There are some cases in which a person overcome with pain, his mind exhausted, grieves, mourns, laments, beats his breast, and becomes bewildered. Or one overcome with pain, his mind exhausted, comes to search outside, 'Who knows a way or two to stop this pain?' I tell you, monks, that stress results either in bewilderment or in search.

"A blessing: friends when the need arises. A blessing: contentment with whatever there is. Merit at the ending of life is a blessing. A blessing: the abandoning of all suffering and stress. A blessing in the world: reverence to your mother. A blessing: reverence to your father as well. A blessing in the world: reverence to a contemplative. A blessing: reverence for a Brahmin, too. A blessing into old age is virtue. A blessing: conviction established. A blessing: discernment attained. The non-doing of evil things is a blessing.

"Find out for yourself what is truth, what is real. Discover that there are virtuous things and there are non-virtuous things. Once you have discovered for yourself, give up the bad and embrace the good."

After another few minutes of chanting, the center monk stood again. He said, "Transference Of Merits To The Departed. Idam me natinam hotu, Sukhita hontu natayo. Idam me natinam hotu, Sukhita hontu natayo. Idam me natinam hotu, Sukhita hontu natayo. Let this love of family accrue to our relatives, and may they be happy!"

The remaining six monks then recited verses of thanksgiving. "Just as the full flowing rivers fill the ocean, even so what is given from here accrues to the departed. Whatever you wished or wanted may it quickly be. May all your wishes be fulfilled as the moon upon the fifteenth day, or as the wish-fulfilling gem."

Shortly after eleven that morning, Troy and Sean emerged from the dorm and went to the pool. Almost all the kids were there, but both teen boys perceived far less chatter and joyful children yelling. They swam around the pool then went and dove into the diving well. Everyone seemed to be having fun, but it was far too quiet. Finally, Sean's curiosity got the better of him and he went to Lanna Seaver. That's when they learned of the Downings' funeral. Troy didn't know who Bruce was, but learned from Lanna, Sean and Carmella. Having had Buddhist friends in New Jersey, Troy knew that the kids shouldn't be acting reserved and quiet. The lives of the deceased should be celebrated in a respectful way. Lanna agreed, but couldn't flip a switch to change almost a hundred kids. Sean and Troy went to Kaleo.

"Something's gotta give here," Troy told Kaleo. "It's bad enough now, but when Bruce comes back, he needs normalcy; kids playing and willing to play with him."

"There's not much I can do," Kaleo said. "Yeah, I can have Alden patch me across the PA and make an announcement, but that's not gonna change anything."

Sean softly said, "I have an idea." Troy, Kaleo and Tory looked at him. Sean asked Troy, "Do you know some sing-a-long songs?"

Troy shrugged, "Yeah, a couple."

Kaleo smiled, "That would do the trick. It would get them all out of their funk." Before Troy had a chance to say anything, Kaleo tapped his sub-vocal. "Alden, transport Troy's guitar here."

A second later, Troy's guitar case was on the ground beside Kaleo's chair. Troy grinned, "Don't you guys believe in walking to get stuff?"

Kaleo chuckled, "Time is of the essence."

Kneeling down, Troy took his guitar out of its case, saying, "You guys need to help me out. A sing-a-long with only one person singing doesn't really qualify."

Kaleo smiled, "You start playing and I can almost guarantee, some kids will hear and join in."

Troy stood, began playing and singing. "It's a world of laughter, a world of tears, It's a world of hopes and a world of fears, There's so much that we share, That it's time we're aware, It's a small world after all.

"It's a small world after all, It's a small world after all, It's a small world after all, It's a small, small world."

Drew, Corey, Richie, Dee, Gage, Sammy and Clint came over and were the first to join in singing with Troy.

"There is just one moon and one golden sun, And a smile means friendship to everyone, Though the mountains divide, And the oceans are wide, It's a small world after all.

"It's a small world after all, It's a small world after all, It's a small world after all, It's a small, small world." While Troy repeated the final chorus, more kids came over and joined in.

After the fourth repeat, Troy ended the song then started a different one. "If you're happy and you know it, clap your hands! If you're happy and you know it, clap your hands! If you're happy and you know it, And you really want to show it, If you're happy and you know it, clap your hands! If you're happy and you know it, stamp your feet! If you're happy and you know it, stamp your feet! If you're happy and you know it, And you really want to show it, If you're happy and you know it, stamp your feet! If you're happy and you know it, shout hooray! If you're happy and you know it, shout hooray! If you're happy and you know it, And you really want to show it, If you're happy and you know it, shout hooray! If you're happy and you know it, do all three! If you're happy and you know it, do all three! If you're happy and you know it, And you really want to show it, If you're happy and you know it, do all three!"

By this time, there were the two adults, at least forty kids, some older and most of the younger ones, gathered around Troy, Sean, Kaleo and Tory. Judy Faris came over to gather towels for the laundry and saw what her son was doing. The rug-rats that were over by the playground heard the singing and came over too. Troy continued playing and singing 'Yellow Submarine', 'All Together Now' and 'Give Peace A Chance'.

Prez, Keith, Mike and Derrick returned to the base from school to hear almost a hundred voices repeating, "All we are saying, is give peace a chance," over and over again. Following the sound of kids singing, the foursome walked from the housing complex, where they had arrived, to the pools. Kaleo got up and told them what was going on. "It didn't take much prompting either," Kaleo grinned. "Sean suggested it, I had Alden get Troy's guitar and he went for it."

Prez waved his team further away from the loud singing, to the far side of the pool house. "Y'all know what we have here?" Prez prompted.

Drew and Tory shrugged. Corey giggled, "A better time than we were having!"

"Exactly right," Prez smiled. He then tapped his sub-vocal and called, "Alden, log this date and time."

"Go ahead, Prez," Alden replied.

Prez grinned, "Effective immediately, there are two new members of the Core Rimmer team. Sean Moorhead and Troy Faris are the Morale Rimmers. When any of us notices the kids are down, the Morale Rimmers will be called to come up with some activity to get them up again."

Keith howled, "Morale Rimmers now!"

Kaleo cracked up and laughed, "Get them up again?"

Tory joked, "Any of us could've easily done that!"

Mike snickered, "No, no, getting the boys up is only half the battle."

Derrick playfully wondered, "Is that part of their job too as Morale Rimmers?"

Shaking his head sadly, but smiling widely, Prez chuckled, "How long has the sing-a-long been going on?"

Drew shrugged, "About twenty minutes."

Troy finished the song and the other Rimmers hurried over to the mass of kids. At the end of the song, they all clapped their hands along with the kids. Prez loudly asked, "Is everybody havin' a good time?" More than a hundred positive replies burst forth. "Right then," Prez laughed, "there are now two new members of the Core Rimmer team. Sean and Troy are the Morale Rimmers and report directly to Kaleo, the Mouth Rimmer." Having started another load of towel laundry, Judy Faris walked out of the pool house and heard the announcement. Beaming with pride, Judy began laughing. About a dozen of the older male ex-prostitutes cracked up, but most of the remaining kids cheered.

Bewildered, Troy and Sean looked at each other. They then shrugged and Troy said, "You'll have to outline what our jobs are, Prez."

"No problem," Prez nodded. He then loudly said, "Lunch time!" and again the kids cheered. The Clan got up and started towards the CIC Prez told Sean and Troy, "We'll chat while we eat."

Troy put his guitar back in its case then Kaleo had it transported back to Troy's condo. Troy and Sean walked with Prez, Keith, Mike, Derrick, Kaleo and Tory to the dining room. Troy said, "I don't even know what it means to be Clan. What can I do to help besides play and sing? I really don't feel worthy or prepared for this."

Shaking his head, Sean softly queried, "Now you don't feel worthy?" He pulled Troy close and assured, "You're way more worthy than me, Lover."

Keith grinned, "Come on, dudes, enough of that worthiness garbage. Guess what; we didn't feel worthy either on Saturday when Joel made us Clan. What makes you worthy is what you do naturally, without instruction. After last night, the kids know you and trust you, Troy. That's more than half the battle, right there."

Prez nodded his agreement, saying, "You guys can do a lot just by being around. How much you take on is up to you. If you want, you can organize soccer teams or basketball teams. Or maybe we can have various different activities; stuff that gives kids something more to look forward to."

Mike offered, "How about monthly dances for the teenagers?"

Just think of alternatives that groups of kids might like."

Derrick chimed in, "We could use help with the various rescues too. Monday night we had three rescues. Last night at midnight, we were transporting from base to base and picked up another nineteen."

Prez said, "I won't require you two dudes to do that, but if you're willing, I won't refuse the help."

Troy shrugged, "I don't even know what that means. What kind of rescues?"

Mike explained, "Sometimes kids come to our main gate and we go get them. Other times, we transport to our other bases and pick up kids."

Expanding on it, Derrick added, "And once, we had a group transported to us by the UNIT Rapid Response Base Commander." Noticing Sean's bewildered expression, Derrick wrapped an arm around him. When Derrick, Sean and Troy came to a stop outside the CIC, the entire group stopped.

Sean softly asked, "Why make me a leader?"

Prez smiled, "I have several reasons. First of all, when we were showing new kids to dorm rooms, you were there and doing the job every bit as well as any of us. Secondly, you and Troy are not only boyfriends, but have become a team. Teamwork is extremely important in this division. I can't do the job alone. Cory Short doesn't even expect me to do it alone. I need teammates; Keith to bounce ideas off of; Mike and Derrick as historians; Drew and Corey and John and Kaleo all have their bits to do. How can I possibly manage a hundred and fifty by myself?"

After planting a quick kiss on his partner's cheek, Keith nodded and elaborated, "Think of it this way – there are four dorms here, that's four hundred kids. We're eventually going to need leaders in each of the dorms at each of five bases. The eight of us can't possibly manage two thousand kids across five bases. The first eight of us originally included Bruce. But Bruce had his own stuff to deal with all weekend. He's putting the finishing touches on his situation right now. When Bruce has pulled himself together, he's going to be a Core Rimmer too, just like Joel originally intended. John's made Stephen his partner. When Stephen feels more stable, he'll eventually become a Core Rimmer too. In the long term, we're going to have chances to give lots of kids leadership opportunities. They may or may not be Core Rimmers, but they'll report to one of us. The job is huge and has to be shared, Sean. You made yourself a leader, just by being yourself."

Kaleo moved closer to Sean and said, "Saturday and Sunday, I didn't feel too capable in my job either. But these guys have made me feel like a brother each and every day. Their belief in me gives me the self-confidence I never thought I'd have. If I can participate then you can too, Sean. Sometimes it's so easy it doesn't even feel like I'm doing anything worthy of praise. You'll see – it'll be the same with you."

Troy squeezed Sean's hand and reminded, "I told you that you are worthy; you're worthy of me and so much more. And best of all, we get to work together just like all these other guys get to work with their partners."

Mike nodded, "That's the trick right there, Sean. We each affirm the others' abilities to do the job. No one goes out of their way to do the wrong thing. When it happens, it's how others deal with it that makes the difference. Don't attack as if the world is ending because of a simple mistake. You talk about it. Me and Derrick talk about stuff alone. Every one of the couples on this team has their own conversations. Then we get together and deal with stuff as a big team." He then grinned and reminded, "Like my Shiny Pledge announcement this morning. Do you think I just did that without saying something to Derrick?" Sean shook his head and giggled. Mike added, "I know, it's funny, but it is a serious issue we all have to deal with. I heard some of the kids talking about it too. Standing in front of amplifiers hasn't blown my hearing to hell yet."

Smiling widely, the entire team went into the CIC for lunch. Glancing over towards the corner of the room, where Shirley's cage was, Prez noticed that four new cages existed. Shirley now had two turtle doves and three French hens with her. The four calling birds were making their presence loudly known.

Troy and Sean were near Mike and Derrick in line. Troy had planned the positioning and asked Mike, "Tell me about the ferrets, please?" Mike went through the entire tale of how he met Spike, how Logan mentioned shiny music and how he had simply ran with it. Without Mike intending for it to happen, Spike came to love and respect Mike and wanted to be adopted. The next thing Mike knew, he was a ferret-human hybrid father and Shiny Priest. Troy thought the story was sweet and really wanted to meet the Scooby Gang. Mike explained, "Imagine a ferret, but slightly larger and with human intelligence. When they stand upright, the Scoobies are about two feet tall, but at least half the time, they're scampering around on all four limbs. What you wind up with are furry kids that still have a fascination with shiny objects. Thus the Shiny Pledge, The Shiny Anthem and The Shiny Religion."

Sean and Troy grinned and uncertainly repeated, "The Shiny Religion?"

The boys made their way to a table and, as they sat, Derrick explained, "Take the Bible, for instance. 'In the beginning the Great Shiny created the heaven and the earth. And the earth was without shinnies and void, and dullness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of the Great Shiny moved upon the face of the waters. And the Great Shiny said, Let there be Shinies, and there were Shinies.' As I understand it, all the world's great religious texts are being adapted and translated."

"Ultimately," Mike added, "you can blame Joel. He made all the ferrets really believe it's real. Only High Priest Dave believed it before Joel did something. Now they're all Shiny fanatics!"

At a nearby table with Jacob, Jamie and Beau, Nathan interjected, "I think it was Logan who explained them the best. Take someone who will probably never lose the wonderment of a child, and give them something that they truly believe in. Ferrets have it hard coded into their DNA to like shiny things. They are the perfect thief in many ways; now add in human intelligence."

Troy grinned, "They're gonna love me and my saxophones then."

Prez nodded, and between bites of his cheeseburger, smiled, "Especially if you keep them polished and shiny."

Turning to Sean, Troy asked, "What do I do when I put my guitar away?"

Sean swallowed and answered, "Wipe down the body and especially the strings."

Keith smiled, "And your saxophones are shiny brass with Mother of Pearl keys. Did you wipe them down yet?"

Blushing, Troy nodded and softly giggled, "Right after we made love. Right, Tiger?"

Sean smiled, "Before we even showered the saxes were cleaned." Turning red, Sean softly added, "The best part was, Troy hadn't even dressed so..." Troy nudged him and they both began chortling at the memory.

Derrick grinned, "They might not have trusted you at first for mumbling the Shiny Pledge, but if they see you caring for your instruments, they'll know you as a true Shiny Lover."

Sean asked, "And the difference between Dull Ones and Shiny Haters?"

Derrick answered, "Dull ones have not accepted or denied the Great Shiny. They can be converted and saved. Shiny Haters and Dull Lovers would be like Satanists are to Christians."

Keith nodded, "Bad scene for the Shiny Haters."

"You treat them like more human than ferrets then," Troy recognized. "That's really great!"

Beginning to pick on his French Fries, Mike said, "To us, they are kids. Just like we let our other kids do their thing with other kids, we let the Scoobies go do their thing."

Prez said, "For that very reason, keeping morale high around here won't be such a big job. The kids are kewl and split off in groups to keep themselves entertained. Today was the exception to that because Bruce has a lot of friends and family here now."

Kaleo had finished eating while the others chatted, but now chimed in. "With the sing-a-long, you guys changed them in no time. In the next hour or so, Bruce is gonna be back home. If Bruce is still feeling a little out of it, and I expect he will, the kids will take care of him. Only if he's not ready to participate will there be another problem like there was before."

Sean wondered, "What should we do then; another sing-a-long?"

Still chewing, Prez held up his index finger to signal a pause. When he swallowed, Prez called, "Alden?"

Alden replied, "Here, Prez."

"We'll need two sub-vocals and two comm-badges, one of each for Troy and Sean," Prez instructed. Four small boxes appeared on the table before Prez. In a few minutes, Troy and Sean were educated about the use of the communications devices. Prez finished by saying, "Anything you need to keep the kids occupied, you have authorization to get. If you think balloons will turn the tide, then get a couple hundred balloons and a tank or two of compressed air..."

"Or helium for floating balloons," Keith suggested.

Troy grinned, "Water balloon fights."

Prez nodded, "Whatever it takes to keep the place running smooth."

Derrick reminded, "Soon we'll be getting into the rainy season. I'm foreseeing a lot of kids hanging together at the CIC on rainy days."

Mike verified, "You've been to the dorms now. Have you seen the rec rooms?"

Sean nodded, "I showed Troy around last night and again this morning."

Troy added, "I've got a nice big bedroom in our apartment. All the kids have bigger rooms and the common rooms are awesome too."

Mike finished, "Kids are gonna be gathered around various public places like here, the rec room next door or in their dorm rec rooms."

Surprised, Troy asked, "There's a rec room here too?"

Everyone pointed at the double doorways on the north wall of the dining room. Keith explained, "There are arcade games in there, billiards tables, dart boards, Foosball tables, televisions and a jukebox. And there's the indoor rec center too, so kids are gonna be spread out on rainy days."

Troy had one more question. He pointed to the doorway into the Command Center and asked, "Do I get to see what's in there?"

"If you want to, we can show you around," Prez answered. "If you really want to be Core Rimmers, dealing with rescues and all the other parts of Clan Short, then we can arrange for access."

"Why wouldn't I?" Troy smiled, "In for a penny, in for a pound." Sean nodded agreement.

Prez seriously asked, "How much do you know about Clan Short?"

Troy answered, "Stuff that made the news in the U.S. I know about Montana too."

Sean nodded and added, "I told him about the orphanages and the Prime Minister too. Troy's been great about all of it."

Thoughtful for a few moments, Prez turned to Keith. Keith shrugged, "Break them in like we've been getting broke in, baby. Let them participate in the easy pickups and rescues. Then Sean and Troy can choose if they'd like to continue."

Kaleo said, "It's easy, but pretty long hours. After the concert last night, we had pickups here, Hawaii and Maui. By the time we got nineteen kids fed, clothed and over to the dorm, it was almost three in the morning again."

Prez added, "It was that way Monday too. Three times in one night we were down in the store, then getting newbies settled."

Keith reminded, "Even Sunday night, after an early evening pickup there were two kids who showed up at the gate looking for help."

Troy hummed then softly said, "Sounds like you guys need all the help you can get."

All the Rimmers nodded. Mike bluntly asked, "What do you think of our gorillas and G-Cats?"

Troy grinned, "New and interesting; kind o' like New York City subways."

Derrick, Mike, Kaleo and Tory cracked up. Prez and Keith only smiled and turned to each other. Since everyone had finished eating, Prez suggested, "Let's show you dudes the Command Center. Then we can talk about a few other things."

While everyone was standing and gathering their trays to take to the kitchen dishwasher, Troy asked, "Prez, are you thinking we can't handle it?"

Rapidly shaking his head, Prez then held eye contact with Troy and honestly answered, "No, that's not it, Troy. I can't say that I know you or Sean well enough to know if you can or can't deal with being full time Clan. I'm assuming you can because you want to. Wanting to do something is more than half the battle." Prez began walking to the kitchen and continued. "To make matters more complicated, you and Sean are just beginning your relationship. Loving relationships come first, in the Clan and to our families. I don't want to scare you off or make you feel uncomfortable, but I wasn't quick to accept being Director of this division. You and Sean really need to take your time and think if you really want in. You, in particular, need to talk with your mom too.

"There are a lot of benefits to being in the Clan," Prez continued. "We're Starfleet Ensigns and considered adults. That's allowed us to adopt our kids. They're so great, like little mirrors we can look into, and they help us remember to be kids ourselves. It's allowed us to get married. I guess all I'm saying is that I know I'm not the same dude that walked out of school last Friday afternoon." Leaving his tray at the dishwasher, Prez glanced at his teammates asking, "Am I the only one that feels that way?"

Keith, Mike and Derrick shook their heads. Kaleo answered, "I'm glad I'm not the same fuck toy I was last Friday morning. Now my friendship with Tory has become a full fledged partnership."

Tory nodded, "I feel the same way. I want to be Clan and a Core Rimmer too, Prez."

Prez only nodded and led the group to the Command Center. Drew noticed them all going in and thought that there was something important going on. Corey felt Drew becoming concerned, and Drew explained they should go see what was happening. They finished their lunches and quickly went to the kitchen.

Inside the Command Center, Prez directly asked Tory, "Tell me why you want to be a Core Rimmer?"

"So I can spend even more time with Kaleo," Tory quickly answered. "When he's gone, doing Core Rimmer stuff, I'm alone and bored out of my mind. I also want to pay back the Clan for rescuing me and him from the orphanage."

Prez then posed the same question to Sean. Sean answered, "To pay back Clan Short too. I'd like to spend more time with Troy and all you dudes too. I know I'm not as confident as you guys, but I want to be. Like I told Troy yesterday, I feel so different already. It's like I know where I need to be, but I don't know how to get there. A good way to accomplish that would be hanging with dudes I look up to."

Finally, as Drew and Corey walked in the room, Prez posed the question to Troy. Troy said, "Since meeting Sean and falling in love with him, I've learned the real story behind the news clips I heard. Not until Sean told me did I know how bad it was for him, and a lot of these other kids. It makes me angry. If I can help change things so that stuff never happens again, then I want in. And truthfully, I don't care what my mom has to say about it." Troy reached for Sean's hand and said, "I'd kill the first son of a bitch I saw fucking a little kid and be glad I did it."

Accepting all their answers, Prez turned to his team mates. They all nodded. Prez said, "I'm going to give each of you an opportunity to think on it. We didn't have that opportunity." Locking eyes with Troy, Prez said, "How you make the decision and who you talk to is up to you." Prez then turned around and called, "Lieutenant Vorik. Could we have a few minutes of your time, please, Sir?" As Lieutenant Vorik approached, Prez explained, "I would like to expand the size of my team." Gesturing to each boy, Prez introduced Troy, Sean and Tory as the new additions. He then asked, "Is it possible for you to perform brief mind-melds with each of them?"

Lieutenant Vorik nodded, "It is; however, I fail to understand the necessity."

Leaning closer to Prez, Keith whispered, "Prez? You're trying to relieve yourself of responsibility for them." Pulling back, he then slightly grinned, "I feel you, T'hy'la."

Placing a hand on Prez's shoulder and firmly squeezing, Derrick said, "It's not required, Prez. We chose without our parents' direct consent. Let them choose for themselves too."

Glancing at Mike, Corey and Drew, Prez saw them mutely nodding agreement. Prez sighed, "You're all right." Returning his attention to Vorik, Prez said, "I am sorry for involving you, Lieutenant. It's not your decision, it's mine and theirs."

Lieutenant Vorik reminded, "I am here to provide the functions you requested, Director O'Brian. Command decisions are within the realm of those functions. I suggest we adjourn to the conference room to discuss this decision further."

"Good," Prez nodded. The ten boys and Lieutenant Vorik went into the conference room. Once the door was closed and everyone had taken a seat, Prez told Lieutenant Vorik what had happened and that he had made Troy and Sean responsible for morale. That relatively easy decision blossomed into the current discussion.

Lieutenant Vorik asked, "Your request for mind-melds was for what purpose?"

Prez shrugged, "It was a stupid idea. I thought you could check to see if they were capable; the right temperament. I think lack of sleep is catching up with me."

"And the reason why you would like to expand your team?" Lieutenant Vorik wondered.

"Because we have been so busy and working until the wee hours of the morning," Prez honestly answered. "In addition to that, I can't see how only eight of us can be responsive to up to two thousand kids across five bases. Cory Short agrees that I have to delegate authority. Adding to the Core team seemed to be a step in the right direction."

Vorik nodded, "A valid concern and wise decision."

Keith explained, "When Prez and I discussed this, we thought it would be a good idea to have leaders at each base that report back to us; specifically, at least one boy and one girl in every dormitory. We'd have like levels of responsibility, a tree structure similar to a chain of command."

Lieutenant Vorik nodded once saying, "Also valid and reasonable."

Prez sighed, "I guess what concerns me most are Sean and Tory. They both want to pay back Clan Short for being rescued. No one we rescue needs to feel like they should pay us back."

Drew reminded, "They're already Clan, Prez. Tory and Sean are both from the original group. They've got the most experience with the Clan and with us."

Kaleo knowingly grinned, "Did you worry so much when you made me communications officer, Prez?"

Prez huffed, then chuckled, "No, I didn't."

Mike sighed, then leaned across the table and asked, "You're worried about more dangerous rescues, aren't you, Prez?"

Prez nodded, "Yeah, I am."

Mike then turned to Sean, Tory and Troy in turn while saying, "We're getting phaser training. Someday, we may very well have to use those phasers to disable or kill people. Do any of you have an issue with that?"

Tory quickly said, "Not at all. If I'm aiming a phaser at someone hurting a kid, I'd have no problem firing."

Sean nodded, "Same here."

"Me too," Troy answered.

"I wish I had known this yesterday," Prez chuckled. "Now I'm gonna have to get Juan to give another class."

Sean reached for Troy's hand and giggled, "We were busy yesterday anyway."

Mike teased, "You were busy or were gettin' busy?"

Troy laughed, "Same difference!"

Corey helplessly cracked up and set the others off laughing.

Lieutenant Vorik waited for the laughter to subside, then said, "You have your new team members, Director O'Brian. I recommend that each of you who did not get adequate rest last night, retire for a short nap."

Prez said, "We have additional phaser training today at three."

Lieutenant Vorik reminded, "It is not yet thirteen hundred hours. I will notify you if activity requires it." Prez nodded and chose to not argue with Vulcan logic.

"Alden," Keith called, "one more sub-vocal and comm-badge for Tory Burgas. He's a Core Rimmer too, working with Kaleo in communications, effective immediately."

Before Tory appeared two more small boxes. Kaleo got his partner's sub-vocal fitted and proudly pinned the comm-badge on his T-shirt.

Prez smiled widely at Sean and Troy. He playfully asked, "Are you ready to join the Rimmer Funny Farm?"

Sean giggled and nodded while Troy laughed, "Yeah. We're ready."

Prez nodded, "Since you two weren't working until three in the morning, you're in charge until we're done with Juan's phaser training later this afternoon. John and Stephen will be back any time now to help out."

Everyone stood and started to leave the conference room. Keith said, "The rest of us will meet back here by three."

Prez stood before Kaleo, Tory, Sean and Troy softly explaining, "I really do want all of you on this team. You know that, don't you?"

Tory, Sean and Troy nodded. Troy asked, "What scares you, Prez?"

Prez sighed, "We're appreciated by many, but loathed by a few radicals. The first time anyone on this team gets hurt, I'm gonna lose it."

Kaleo softly reminded, "The FCC and anyone like them."

Troy droned, "Oh, the Montana mess."

Keith nodded and said, "We've also rescued teen age prostitutes. Not only do we have to be a little more forceful with them, at first anyway, there are about twenty of them now that are older than us."

Troy shrugged, "No biggie. I've dealt with prostitutes in New York City before." Sean turned to Troy and raised his eyebrows. Slowly, Keith, Prez, Kaleo and Tory smiled. Troy giggled, "Not that way!"

As the group walked out of the conference room, Prez reminded, "Kaleo and Tory, get some rest too." Kaleo and Tory widely smiled. Prez smirked, "Whichever way you decide to rest is your decision."

Keith then swiftly swept Prez into his arms. Having never seen them do this before, Sean and Troy cracked up. While Prez cackled hysterically, Keith whispered, "The honeymoon isn't over yet!"

By placing his hands on their shoulders, Lieutenant Vorik stopped Sean and Troy. Both turned to face the taller Vulcan man while Keith danced Prez out of the Command Center. Vorik said, "Gentlemen, I will arrange to have personal security assigned to you. Whenever you leave secured locations, such as this base, your security contingent will accompany you."

Sean nodded. Troy asked, "We need security?"

"As Clan leaders, yes, it is required," Lieutenant Vorik replied.

"So if I want to take Sean out on a date off base, security needs to come with us?" Troy confirmed.

Lieutenant Vorik nodded, "Any unsecured location, yes."

Troy huffed, "Well, that kind o' sucks. What if we want to be alone?"

"Your security will be as anonymous as possible," Vorik answered.

Sean told Troy, "Whenever Prez and the guys go to school; they've got security with them. If they can deal, we can too, Lover." Any desire Troy had to argue vanished with that one simple word. He whimpered and Sean giggled, "We'll be over by the pools."

"Very well," Lieutenant Vorik nodded. He then set about arranging for six additional security personnel for Sean, Troy and Tory.

Sean and Troy walked into the dining room. At the other door, Sean noticed John walking in with Stephen, Bruce and those that had been to the Downings' funeral. Sean told Troy they should let John know what had happened the last hour. Already having done a light scan, John was obviously more than pleased with the team additions, and told them so, then introduced Frankie. Sean also mentioned that the rest of the team was taking a two-hour break. He and Troy then went to the pools.

Once there, Sean and Troy mingled around and many noticed their comm-badges and sub-vocals. Within minutes everybody knew they were new Core Rimmers. By the diving well, two of the older street kids, Kelly Littlepage and Lance Elling, went to them asking for dance music at the pools.

Sean smiled and nodded, "We can do that. The only thing is that we have to keep the volume reasonable, so if any of the little kids need help, we can hear them over the music."

Lance said, "That's totally kewl. We don't need a big PA system or live music, just a little ghetto blaster with a radio."

For the first time, Troy tapped his sub-vocal and called Alden.

"Morale Rimmer!" Alden giggled. "Do you know how appropriate that is for you?"

Troy laughed, "Ooo! You're a teasing little shit, aren't ya?"

Alden playfully hummed affirmatively, then asked, "What can I do for you, Troy?"

"The kids want to dance," Troy smiled. "All they need is a decent boom-box."

Alden said, "I have an alternative idea. I'll just connect the speakers by the pools and rec center to a station. Which station do they want to listen to?"

Troy asked, "Got a favorite station?"

Kelly checked with Lance and suggested, "KIKI Hot 93.9?"

Lance smiled, "Yeah!"

Troy forwarded the information to Alden. A second later, dance music was playing out of the poolside PA system. Soon, most of the older kids were dancing together. Horacio and Sonia were among them. Troy and Sean went over by the main pool and discovered many of the younger kids were dancing. Even Teddy Bears were trying to dance, but generally only bouncing and waddling.

"Mission accomplished?" Sean grinned.

Troy nodded and smiled, "I can think of only one other thing we can do."

Sean leaned closer and whispered in Troy's ear; "Wanna show you something." Three other times Sean spoke those words and each of those instances left Troy gasping for breath. The next thing Troy knew, his boyfriend was dancing a few feet before him. Once again, Troy wasn't disappointed. Sean had natural rhythm and moved fluidly. Troy got his groove on and joined him. Barely five minutes later, out of necessity and before they overheated, they tossed themselves into the diving well. Not that it cooled them off very much. Sean leaned back with his arms draped over the edge of the well. Troy swam closer and attached himself to Sean's waist with his legs.

Reyes, Bane, Benjamin, Randy, Dillon, Geoff and Jonah were the first of those that had been at the funeral to arrive at the pool. Gage, Sammy, Richie, Kokaku, Carmella and Dee quickly welcomed them back. Dee asked Reyes, "How's Bruce doin'?"

Reyes shrugged, "He's okay, for the most part. Aunt Jen and Uncle Jim are talking with him, John and Stephen now."

Benjamin offered, "The worst part was in the limo goin' there. Once we got there, he was very kewl. When the monk stood, Bruce did and we all did."

"It was real pretty," Jonah relayed, "not scary or sad or nothin' like that."

Bane smiled, "I liked what the monks said. It wasn't like any church service I've ever seen before."

Gage and Sammy then told the guys what had happened on base since they left. Not knowing any better, Reyes went to congratulate Troy and Sean. Reyes' four-and-a-half foot shadow, Jonah accompanied him. Finding them together at the diving well, Reyes grinned and started to laugh, but an odd, squeaking sound escaped his mouth. Quickly, Reyes performed a self-diagnostic and his hand covered Jonah's eyes.

"What?" Jonah giggled, and tried unsuccessfully to pull Reyes' hand out of the way. Reyes picked up his little bro and started to walk away. Jonah laughed, "It ain't like we never seen dudes makin' out before!"

Sean called out, "Reyes? Did you need something?"

Reyes giggled, "It'll hold."

Jonah cracked up. Between giggles, he told his overprotective big bro, "They're already holdin'!"

Rolling his eyes and shaking his head, Reyes took Jonah to the other pool and jumped in the deeper end.

John, Stephen and Frankie went home with Bruce and Dewi. All the boys changed out of their suits. Emotionally exhausted, Bruce wanted to lie down and take a nap. Dewi cuddled close to Bruce and joined him in bed.

John, Frankie and Stephen brought the FCC rescued kids to the FYS building's sub-basement, where one hundred Teddy bears were waiting to meet their new best friends. During the elevator ride down, John explained to the kids how the Teddy Bears bonded, and told them to take their time choosing. When the elevator door opened, all the kids and Teddy Bear intermingled. Frankie quickly found a Teddy named Medved. In less than half-an-hour, the Teddy bears were waddling out of the FYS building and back to the pools with their friends. John had the remaining Teddy bears stay in standby mode until the next group of young kids wanted friends and he returned to the new 'bear cave'. Alden placed orders to replace the Teddy Bears that had been befriended.

Everything was back to normal and all the kids were having fun when John, Stephen and Frankie arrived at the pools. Carmella was the first one to greet them and wondered, "Where's Brucie?"

Picking his sister up the normal way, with his arms, John smiled, "He's okay. It's just been a tiring day for him, so he wanted to take a nap. Dewi's with him and so are Zed and Dex." Soon John, Stephen and Frankie were surrounded by Kokaku, Gage, Sammy, Richie, Dee and Geoff. The miniature news team was bursting at the seams to tell John all that had happened that morning, but John had already felt what was going on, primarily from his brothers. John and Stephen introduced Frankie to his cousins, aunt and uncles. Letting his sister down, John let Carmella go play with her friends. He then led the remaining group to the diving well.

At the edge of the diving well, away from where others were diving, Troy and Sean still hadn't moved. They were holding each other close and quietly talking. When John saw them joined at the hips, he grinned, "Teenagers!" then powered up. Unwillingly separated, Troy and Sean rose up out of the water, screaming and shouting, above the five-meter high diving board. Frankie and Stephen howled hysterically. When the coast was clear in the diving well, John powered down. Sean and Troy dropped into the well. Before Troy or Sean rose to the surface, John glanced at the kids and grinned, "Pounce time!" All six boys laughed and took off for the diving well. They jumped up, grabbed their legs and landed rear ends first, cannon-balling the two startled lovers.

Sean knew better than to even try to retaliate, but Troy didn't. He swam quickly for the edge of the diving well with Sean loudly laughing, "Don't, Troy!" But it was too late. John's eyes blazed blue and Troy found himself swimming twenty feet in the air, going nowhere but further up.

John loudly giggled, "Welcome to the team, bro!"

Troy howled, "Put me down! Gently!"

So John did put him gently down – on the peak of the pool house roof.

While Troy laughed and ranted, Stephen giggled, "Evil, plain evil!"

John shrugged and smiled, "Just a newbie Rimmer initiation ritual."

Sean went over to John, softly chortling, "Can I have my boyfriend back, please?"

John laughed, "But look around! Morale's as high as he is now!"

"Except for mine," Sean giggled.

Knowing Troy wanted to get even, John grinned, "You can keep him under control?"

Sean hummed then laughed, "I can keep him under lots of things."

Thoughtful for a few moments, John then instructed, "Put your arms out, Sean." Sean did as he was told and John powered up. Troy lifted off the pool house roof and over, above Sean, then slowly lowered into his boyfriend's waiting arms.

Troy softly giggled, "Suddenly, I feel the need to play heavy metal."

John heard Troy's playful remark to Sean. Sean put Troy down before he dropped him then landed a quick kiss. Holding up his hands to prove he was defenseless, John offered, "Truce?" Sean and Troy both nodded. John then asked, "Do you mind if I do quick mind scans of you both?"

Sean rapidly assured, "No problem, John."

Taken aback, Troy faced Sean and giggled, "You don't even care why?"

Shaking his head, Sean honestly said, "Joel thought enough of John to make him a Core Rimmer. I trust him."

Looking up at the two taller teens, John explained, "I'm not looking deep. I've just noticed a few things about others. It's like categorizing. Like the rest of my family and the other Core Rimmers, I'll set up rooms for you two. This way I'll know when you're in trouble and can get you help."

"Go ahead, John," Sean said, "but tell us what you see."

Focusing on Sean first, John hummed, then softly said, "Drop those abuses in the nearest trash can and you'd be far less cluttered in there." Before Sean could say a word, John nodded, "I know you're trying and Troy's helped. Think of 'em like a bunch of lies and half truths. They don't matter anymore, bro." Pointing at Troy, John said, "Tell him everything then dump the dirty memories. Keep everything since Friday and you'll be kewl, bro."

Facing Troy, John asked, "Ready?"

"This should be interesting," Troy smirked.

John softly muttered, "Wow." He then smiled, "Lots of kewl memories; the Statue of Liberty, Empire State Building, Madison Square Garden, World Trade Center, songs, music, guitars, horns, little musical notes all over the place. In case you didn't already know it, you're gifted, just like Keith, Prez, Mike and Derrick. They're virtuosos on one or two instruments. You chose to know lots of instruments. You don't play trumpet anymore because of chapped lips? That's silly, especially here. You like how snow looks, but don't like the cold. Welcome to Hawai'i! You wanna see snow; take a trip up the mountains. When you're done, come on back down and get warm again." John then thanked Troy for the virtual tour of New York City and asked, "Do you wanna see something prettier?"

Sean grinned and nodded. Troy shrugged, "Sure, why not."

Gage asked, "Can we go too?"

Tapping his sub-vocal, John called, "Alden?"

Alden giggled, "Soul Rimmer?"

John ordered, "Take the nine of us to the Kauai base, by the main gate, so the Starfleet guys don't freak out."

Troy was just about to say something, but they had already been transported. Troy grunted at the sudden relocation then chuckled, "We're supposed to be watching the kids."

Waving him off, John assured, "The kids are fine." He then reached his hand in his pocket and pulled out his I.D. to show the on-duty Starfleet security personnel. He told them, "We're just gonna take a quick tour then we'll go back home."

John called Alden again then started his tour at Secret Beach. Richie and Dee immediately recognized it and practically tore their clothes off to go play in the water. Letting go of Stephen's hand and covering his mouth, John cleared his throat then complained, "I should've brought some cough drops or hard candies."

John reached his hand into his shorts pocket and smiled, "You're the best, Alden." After popping a peppermint candy in his mouth, John waved his good arm around and croaked, "This is where it all began." Since his voice wasn't cooperating, John began sending thoughts to Stephen, Frankie, Gage, Sammy, Troy and Sean. 'We met Joel, lots of the rescued kids and some of Clan Short right here.'

Taking Troy by the hand and walking down the beach, Sean excitedly gushed, "It was an awesome day. We swam and ate and swam some more." Pointing further down the beach to his right, Sean smiled, "A bunch of us came running down that bluff." He then pointed to his left by the shore and smiled, "Prez and the guys were right over there. We saw them naked and got naked too."

Noticing the lighthouse in the distance, at the edge of the peninsula, Troy sighed, "It's really pretty here."

'That's Kilauea Lighthouse,' John sent to the group. He then wondered, 'Gage and Sammy, why aren't ya swimming?'

Gage grinned and countered, "Why aren't you swimming?"

John actually had to think for a moment or two. He admitted,

"Guess it's the funeral still messin' with me." He then took his shirt off and sent to Stephen, 'I wish Bruce was here. I think it would've fixed him up, at least a little bit.' Frankie, Gage and Sammy stripped then joined Dee and Richie in the surf.

Stephen suggested, "Bring him here later or tomorrow, hon."

John nodded and smiled, 'You won't take your shirt off?' Stephen shook his head then glanced at Troy and Sean, who were many paces away. 'Don't worry about them, baby,' John assured. He then grinned, 'Watch a teenager turn into a little boy.' He sent Sean a short message. 'Toss-the-kid?'

Spinning around to face John, Sean began laughing and quickly taking his clothes off. Troy smiled at his suddenly hysterical and naked boyfriend. Smiling widely, Sean told Troy, "It's a favorite Sehlat game."

"A Sehlat?" Troy grinned, "As in a huge Vulcan bear?"

John giggled and, to both teenagers, sent 'Minus the Sehlat slobber,' then powered up and lifted Sean.

Looking down at Troy, Sean giggled, "I'll tell ya about it later."

Actually tossing Sean was John's concern. Sean was similar in height and weight to Keith and Prez, about five feet eight inches tall and a hundred-thirty or so pounds. Telekinetically lifting him was one thing, but tossing him was a new feat. If John didn't toss Sean hard enough, he'd land in only inches of water and get hurt. So, John walked nearer to the water line and began bouncing Sean in the air.

After the third bounce and mid-fourth bounce, Sean loudly laughed, "Any time today, John!"

John grinned, "I ain't a Sehlat with tossing practice! I want you to go out far, but not so far that you'll be swimming back for an hour."

Sean howled, "I've got a sub-vocal. If I have to, I'll call Alden."

Walking closer to John and Stephen, Troy giggled, "It's not that I'm not liking the view, but he's gonna puke. Then he'll be wanting kisses, but getting none."

John laughed, "Okay, okay! Hold on to your jewels, Sean." Quickly reaching down with both hands, Sean cupped his privates just in time. Like a human missile, he flew out about a hundred yards and splashed down. "Ooo!" John croaked. "That was way further than I expected." Shaking his head, Stephen broke into fits of giggles. Frankie laughed so hard that he fell on his butt into the sand.

Dee, Gage, Richie and Sammy hurried over to John, naked and ready to be tossed. Troy walked down the beach and into the water to meet Sean. John grinned, "Okay, Gage and Sammy first, so they're around in the water to help Richie and Dee."

Simultaneously, Gage and Sammy shouted, "Me first!" It was then, while the two boys argued over who would get tossed first, that John realized how much taller he was than Stephen and his four nephews. He was about six inches taller than Dee and Frankie, about four inches taller than Stephen and Gage, about three inches taller than Sammy, and at least a foot taller than Richie. Since Sammy and Gage hadn't managed to choose who would get tossed first, John lifted them both at the same time. Figuring that Sammy was tallest, John sent him flying out over the bay first. He didn't go near as far as Sean, but still further than John expected. He had to get the proper push settled in his mind, or Richie would need help getting ashore from Sean and Troy, not Sammy or Gage. Sending Gage flying next, John found that he went about as far as Sammy had. Frankie gleefully screamed as he sailed out and splashed down.

Troy walked out in the surf to meet Sean as he rode a wave to shore. For some reason though, Sean stopped and stood in chest deep water, waving for Troy to come out and join him. Grinning, Troy broke through a few waves and met his boyfriend. Sean reached for Troy and pulled him close. Troy felt his boyfriend's condition and excitedly laughed, "Again, Tiger?"

"Just from the waves," Sean smiled. After a brief pause, Sean shared, "I've been wanting to say something to you, but haven't been able to until now."

"What?" Troy softly queried, and then reminded, "You can tell me anything, Sean."

Sean nodded then pulled Troy's head a little closer so he could speak softly. "Ya know last night and this morning, I wanted intercourse?"

Hugging Sean tighter, Troy nodded, "Soon, Tiger. Both toys, one and two were incredible. You were great in every way."

"I'm really glad you enjoyed it too," Sean admitted. "That's what I have to tell you about." Sean smiled and shared, "I'm a bottom boy, Lover. I can and will do you too, when you're ready, but I have to admit, bottom is what I like most."

Many yards to their side and well above them, Dee screamed as he was tossed. Relieved that Sean wasn't going to share another horror story from his past, Troy giggled, "I wish the water was a few degrees colder."

Feeling Troy's growing problem, Sean laughed then planted a kiss and locked eyes with him. "I ain't ever leaving you. Luck don't even begin to cover my life since Friday. Charmed is more like it; maybe even blessed."

"I feel the same way," Troy admitted. "The only difference between you and me is, your life changed five days ago. Mine changed a day ago, when you knocked on my door."

Sean asked, "Does it make you angry when I ask for intercourse?"

Troy shook his head and smiled, "I'm trying to live a dream with you, Sean. I really do want to wait so I'm ready for you too. Then we'll go absolutely crazy together."

Sean slyly smiled, "It sounds great to me too, but I gotta admit, I want you bad."

"Every time you ask, you're wearing me down too," Troy revealed. He then shrugged, "We'll see how it actually works out for us."

"I need to ask one tiny favor," Sean giggled, "Get my shorts, please?" He then smirked, "There's no reason all these guys need to see me hard."

Troy laughed, "You realize that me walking back with your shorts is going to say all that needs to be said?"

Sean shrugged and grinned, "Let's not advertise. The product has already been sold."

Prez, Keith and the rest of the Core Rimmers showed up on the bluff with their kids. Sliding down the bluff on his butt, Reyes loudly complained, "I can't believe you dudes came here and didn't tell us."

Helping Jonah and Dillon down the bluff, Mike and Derrick landed on the beach. Derrick smirked, "Didn't you think we'd like to reminisce too?" Also sliding down the bluff were Corey and Drew, who was carrying Geoff on his lap. Kaleo and Tory tried to remain standing, but laughed hysterically as they once again fell on their asses on their way down the steep bluff.

Reyes, Jonah and Geoff went into the water with Richie, Frankie and Dee. Gage and Sammy hurried up the beach to Keith and Prez to give them welcoming hugs. Gage smiled up at Keith, "This place is awesome! You guys met Joel and everybody here? It's so pretty."

Hugging his son, Keith nodded, "This is where it all happened."

Suddenly, a loud gunshot was heard causing everyone to snap their heads in the direction of the gunfire. Those standing behind John saw the back of his head had exploded outwards, and he was dropping to the ground. Before anyone else could move, they heard an explosion. At this time, all eyes went to where Reyes, Jonah, Frankie, Geoff, Richie and Dee had been standing; however, that is also where the rocket propelled grenade hit.

Reyes was in pieces. His head, torso, arms and legs were spread around a ten foot circumference. Red, blood-stained water washed over the remains of Jonah, Frankie, Geoff, Richie and Dee. Body parts of the five small boys washed ashore in the surf. Stephen dropped to the ground with his husband, screaming his name, demanding a response that would never come.

Yelling, "HOLY FUCKING SHIT!" Mike and Derrick were the first to drop flat onto the beach. Sean and Troy went under water and disappeared from sight. Corey, Drew, Kaleo and Tory were next to lay flat, prone on the beach.

Nearest the bluff, Prez bellowed "Alden! WHAT THE HELL IS GOING ON?" Beside him, Keith screamed and collapsed into the sand. Prez dropped down beside him and saw blood gushing from a wound just above his left knee.

Prez reached up to tap his communicator, when suddenly it went off. He wasn't sure who's voice came over it, but what the kid said made his veins run icy. "RED ALERT!" The voice screamed. "Pacific Rim Division under attack! Orlando, Utah, Wales and Australian Clan divisions are off the grid. All surviving Clan members are ordered to fall back to the Oahu..." Prez heard explosions in the background, and then suddenly the line went dead.

Over their screaming, everyone could hear boat motors racing towards the beach area from the extreme northwest of Secret Beach. Kaleo drew his phaser first and set it to maximum with a wide beam, loudly ordering Tory, Corey and Drew to do the same. Firing first upon the closest of the ten boats, Kaleo and Tory hit the bow at the water line. The front of the boat disintegrated and the boat flipped at high speed, sending six men flailing out in all directions.

While Prez took his shirt off and tied a tourniquet around Keith's leg, Sean popped up out of the water and fired upon the first man he saw that was still moving. Several yards away, Troy surfaced and fired upon another swimming man. Drew and Corey fired upon the second boat, sending it flipping and spinning sideways across a wave. None of the six aboard could have survived.

Returning gunfire from the boats caused all the boys to duck for cover. The boys on the beach that had been firing were now scrambling for tree stumps and logs. Drew and Corey ran over to where Stephen was crying and clutching the body of his dead husband. He protested loudly, but was overpowered as the larger boys grabbed him and started to drag him to where Keith and Prez were.

Meanwhile, Keith and Prez were trying their best to lay down cover fire for Sean and Troy, who were making their way back to the beach. Every few seconds, one of the two boys in the water would turn around and fire at one of the oncoming boats.

By the time that Sean and Troy made it to the beach, there were only six boats left that were racing towards the beach. Both figured they had less than thirty-seconds before the boats would land.

"GET BEHIND SOMETHING!" Mike screamed as he found cover behind a tree trunk. Derrick was running towards Mike, with both Gage and Sammy trailing him. The two younger boys got to the tree just as Derrick hollered and hit the ground hard.

"DERRICK!" Mike cried out. He kept firing as well as running towards where Derrick went down. He was thankful to see his husband was still alive and was trying to crawl towards him. Grabbing him by the shirt, Mike started to pull him back. Derrick had barely avoided the bullets that hit the ground right where he had been.

"SHINY DADDY! We're here!" The Scooby gang screamed at the top of their lungs.

Spike and Xander had finally made it to the top of the bluff with the fifty-caliber machine-gun they had been dragging behind them. They were setting the gun up on its stand while Willow and Faith were busily getting ordinance in place and loaded.

"Those fuckers! Look what they made us do to the shiny gun," Spike grumbled, with a disgusted look on his face.

"The Dull Ones will pay for their blasphemy with their lives," was Xander's solemn response.

Willow shook her head in disgust. "I hope Juan never finds out we dragged a gun through the sand unprotected."

"He'd never let us live it down," Faith earnestly said.

Willow decided to take charge and began barking orders. Soon, Spike took up his place at the trigger while Faith and Xander got in place to aim the gun. Willow took up her place to feed the ammunition. "Die, you fuckers!" She screamed as she gave Spike, Xander, and Faith the signal to start firing.

Spike began to fire at the men in the boats and the Scooby gang began sliding down the bank. The gun was obviously too big for them, but somehow they were managing to do serious damage to the enemy.

"You Dull loving sons of bitches will all burn!" Spike screamed at the top of his lungs. He was gnashing his teeth and growling.

The gun would begin to slide down the bluff and Spike would pull the trigger again in very controlled bursts with Xander and Faith aiming for him. It would right itself again and begin the slide all over again.

Willow saw that Mike was hurt. He was bleeding. Tears came to her eyes. "You hurt the Shiny Daddy! Now you will suffer! Not one of them is to live. They all die! I'm going to slice your fucking nuts off, ram them down your throat, then shove this gun up your ass and blow your head into chum for the fishes!" She was literally shaking and almost foaming at the mouth.

Again and again Spike would let go with a burst of fire and the gun would slowly right itself. Several of the enemy would drop, riddled with bullets. It would have been a comical scene watching the Scoobies slither down the bank like a sidewinder if it wasn't for the seriousness of the situation.

Hit in the left shoulder, but still able to fire on the enemy, Mike blubbered, "I've never heard them talk so much shit before!"

"Yeah, but they've taken out more of the bastards than we have!" Derrick said, and popped up again to disintegrate another boat, leaving six of the remaining eighteen men with no cover at all.

Having lost two of his boys, a nephew, a brother, and with his husband bleeding profusely, Prez was running amok. The four-letter 'F' word that Prez rarely ever used was pouring out of his mouth in nonsensical strings of profanity while he fired. Two men and another boat disintegrated by Prez's phaser blasts. Finally, Prez dove behind the tree where Gage and Sammy were hiding. Sean, Troy, Kaleo, Tory, Drew and Corey got the six men that were left uncovered.

The fifty-caliber machine-gun came to a stop at the bottom of the bank. The ferrets quickly uprighted themselves and took aim again.

"You sheep loving, fart sucking, motherless sons of whores will live in terror for the rest of your lives!" Willow screeched. Then a look of serene vengeance washed over her face as she became all business. Two more of the enemy dropped as the last of the ammunition was spent. "Too bad for you that it is only going to be a few minutes more." Willow gave the sign.

Almost as one the Scoobies grabbed their machetes and took off silently into the bushes.

The enemy had managed to move across the beach and get themselves some cover along the bank. This made it difficult for the Rimmers to hit them. The Rimmers exchanged a few more volleys with the enemy and it quickly became clear that it was a standoff.

Suddenly, the enemy began screaming. Several more screams and a few seconds later, a man flopped into view and dragged himself along the sand away from the protection of the bank. A furry blur rushed out and jumped on his back. Six hard lightening fast chops with a machete reduced the man's head to chum. Another man staggered out and was dropped by a burst from Prez's phaser.

Two more ear shattering screams ripped through the beach. Another two men charged out from behind the cover of the bank. The first man was falling from Xander slashing his Achilles tendons. Prez didn't waste any time as he drew a bead and phasered the man into the next life.

The second man emerged holding a ferret by the scruff of her neck. Mike knew instantly who it was by the string of profanities coming from her mouth. The man had a gun to the ferret's head. "You fucking brats need to drop your weapons now! I mean it. I'll blow its fucking head off!" He smacked Willow in the head with the gun. "Shut it, you fucking rat!"

Willow bit the man. As she was falling, she took the first shot to her chest. The powerful projectile shredded her small torso. The next several shots hit Xander and Faith. Mike screamed at the top of his lungs "NO-O-O!" Tears streamed from his eyes as he leaped to his feet and took aim. He fired, disintegrating the man and his body turned to dust.

Wearing combat boots, camouflaged Speedos with a SuperSoaker water pistol slung under his right hip, and a yellow polka-dotted bikini top that had a hand grenade filling each cup, Juan proudly strode across the beach and stopped before John's body.

Without so much as a grin, he seriously said, "In this altercation, you faced sixty enemy attackers. You killed all sixty, but ten Rimmers died and two were wounded. Welcome to war." Suddenly all the boats, dead bodies and piles of dust on the beach disappeared. John stood up, with all four ferrets appearing behind him.

The Rimmers were completely perplexed and speechless. Both Keith and Mike realized that their wounds were gone. Extremely confused and pissed off, Prez rounded on Juan. Prez growled, "What the fuck is going on?"

Juan gave him a very sad smile. "Having the knowledge on using a phaser or gun is great, but having the willingness to actually use one, is something entirely different. A weapon that one either cannot or will not use is simply another weapon for the enemy."

"You mean this whole thing was in your head; no one actually died?" Mike excitedly asked, gently kneading his now not wounded shoulder.

"This was real to you guys, and that's what matters." Juan turned and looked squarely at Prez, who was still fuming. "Prez, I know you're angry, and you have every right to be; however, hear me out on why I did it this way. I have seen way too many kids in the past week or so that thought war would be cool, and playing with the big guns would be fun. Every single one of them had something like this happen to them, simply to show them that war is not fun, or exciting, or even something to look forward to. War fucking sucks, but until someone really sees it, they don't really understand it."

Juan paused looking around to make sure he had all of their attentions, not to mention hoping that they had let go of their anger and were actually listening to what he was saying. "Does it make it any easier to know that you guys killed sixty guys that were hell bent on killing you? Does it make it any easier knowing that you only lost ten to their sixty?"

One by one, all the Core Rimmers shook their heads. "Exactly." Juan continued, before starting to pace in front of the group. "I had to take John out first because he is an N-Gen; no matter what I did, I could have only fooled him for a few minutes before he realized what was going on. I explained to him what I was going to do to make you guys believe what you saw, and he agreed to play dead. Before you get pissed at him, know this, I did not give him a choice. I told him to either play dead, or I would not involve him in this. He doesn't realize it yet, but he didn't need to do this. Since his live fire experience yesterday, he had his certification. The book knowledge is needed, but easy. It's the willingness, and the ability of using the weapon that I care about. Shooting at targets in a controlled environment is not the way to make sure someone won't freeze when the real thing happens. I am happy to say that none of you did that."

Pausing again, Juan made sure everyone was on the same page as he was before he delivered his final statement and letting them say what they wanted. "Kaleo, Tory, Mike, Derrick, Prez and Keith are all still asleep, the rest of you knew you were coming in for a scenario, but before you came in, I just blocked those memories. When you all leave this place, it will seem no more real to you then a realistic dream. I know what it is like to lose family, so I won't make you live with the thought that this was actually real."

Mike couldn't help it, he had to know. "All the little kids aren't here anymore. I am assuming that means they weren't actually here?" When Juan nodded, Mike kept going. "So that means the Scoobies are actually here. Why?"

Juan couldn't help grinning widely as he knelt down by Spike and placed his hand over the ferret boy's shoulder. "Well, when I decided I was gonna use them in here, I realized that I ain't crazy enough to play them right. You and Derrick would have noticed they weren't acting like themselves, so I pulled them in after explaining what I was gonna do. Again, I got their okay before bringing them in, but they didn't remember it when they showed up. Everything they did is exactly what they would have done had this been real."

Grinning, Spike bounced up and down. He ran away from under Juan's hand, only to jump up into Mike's arms. "Yup yup! We did what we shoulda done. Did we do good, Shiny Daddy?"

Willow, Faith and Xander all crowded around Mike and Derrick for a group hug. Willow was the first one to speak after the hug broke. "Weez did exactly what weez s'pose to. Once we got here, we got them before they got you."

"You guys did great!" Mike said, trying not to cry at seeing Willow alive again after being killed just a few minutes earlier. "From now on though, I don't want you guys getting hurt."

"Why not?" Faith asked in a confused voice. "You guys be the humans, weez just hybrids. It's better if weez get hurts or killed then if yous guys do."

"It's not better to me or Derrick," Mike softly explained. Giving up any pretense, Mike wept, "You're not hybrids to us; you're our kids. If we were to lose one of you, never mind three of you, I'd go fucking insane." Seeing only confusion on the ferrets' faces through his tears, Mike huffed, "How can I make you understand? It don't matter that you're hybrid; you're every bit as important to us as Dillon and Jonah, our human kids. Reyes is an android and every bit as important as our human kids. The loss of any one of you would snap my brain into hundreds of pieces. Clan Short could kiss my ass one at a time or as one big group. Every time I picked up a guitar, I'd remember you guys too, so there goes that life, out the window. Anything shiny would put me into fits of crying. Everything my life was before, and has been since I met you, would seem different. Your lives are that important to me." Shaking uncontrollably, Mike leaned against Derrick and hid his face on his husband's shoulder.

Rubbing Mike's back, Derrick softly added, "You wanted fathers. We want to be your fathers. This is love; this is caring. If you want to show us how much you care, all you need to understand is that you're our kids, not hybrid kids; not less important than human kids, but every bit as important. Your lives matter that much to us." With that the family came back into a hug.

Juan wiped his eyes as he watched the two older boys try and crush the ferrets between them. "I think you guys are now really starting to understand what being parents to those who were raised as a soldier is like. It is very hard to break the brainwashing that we all went through. I will be totally honest here; there are times when I feel just like they do. It will take them some time to get over that. Thankfully, they have you guys to help them recover their self-worth." He waited for everyone to get done crying, before he skillfully changed the topic.

"Now, I am going to go through and tell you guys where you did well, and where you could have done something different. Please don't argue with me, because nothing I say is meant to make anyone feel bad, just to think about. No one did anything that was actually wrong. Everything that every one of you did was perfectly understandable." First he turned towards Drew and Corey. "You guys did exactly the right thing when you pulled Stephen back from John's body."

He then turned to Stephen. "Understand, I know why you did what you did, and no one here will say anything bad about it, but had this been real, you would have died." He held up his hand as he walked over to Stephen and pulled him into a hug. Into Stephen's ear, Juan whispered, "I didn't say that to make you feel bad. I know how you feel about John, and know I would be a total wreck if I lost Koth. However, crying over a body will do nothing except get yourself killed. If that ever happens, make sure the bastard that killed him pays for it... with his life."

Juan stepped back from the hug and smiled at Stephen. Stephen wiped his eyes and nodded. "It's never easy, nor should it be. But when the time comes, this will have helped you." He stepped back a few steps and regarded the group again for a moment. "I know you guys don't want to ever have to actually kill someone, but as you saw here, there may be times when it is kill or be killed. There may come a time when someone won't allow you the option of running. Killing should never be easy, nor should you ever use lethal force unless you need to. However, now all of you know that you can. Remember the pain you're feeling now, but don't let it paralyze you in the future. Within an hour of you waking up, you will have all the papers filed with Starfleet that are needed. You will then be allowed to go to the Armory and get a sidearm issued to all of you. It will be up to you all to decide on when and where to carry it; however, I would suggest that you never go into an unsecured area without carrying one. Now, are there any questions?"

Everyone shook their heads. Juan congratulated them once again, then let them out of his mind.

Standing beside John and shaking his head, Stephen muttered, "I think I had a nightmare about this place. I feel like I've been here before, but I know I haven't."

Locking eyes with his husband, John nodded and reassuringly smiled. 'It was only a bad dream, baby.'

Out in the bay, Troy looked to the northwest for approaching speed boats, but saw nothing. Sean looked over his shoulder where Troy was looking, then slyly asked, "Can I have my shorts or do I have to show off?"

"Sorry," Troy mumbled, and then shrugged, "Guess I'd just as soon stay here with you for a few more minutes."

John scanned everyone still really on Secret Beach. As expected, Frankie, Gage, Sammy, Richie and Dee had no memory of anything. Stephen, Sean and Troy all seemed to believe it was a déjà vu episode. Satisfied that everyone was fine, John sent to everyone on the beach, 'Let's go check the fields where the concert was.'

In the townhouse where Mike and Derrick were sleeping, Mike woke with a start from the nightmare he'd just had. Derrick reached for his husband and croaked, "You okay?"

Taking in a deep breath, Mike sighed, "I guess. Gotta find the Scoobies and our kids."

In the townhouse next door, Prez got out of bed and was putting his clothes on when Keith awoke. He yawned, "Prez? What's the hurry?"

Pulling his T-shirt over his head, Prez answered, "I just need to find our kids, T'hy'la."

Sitting up and moving toward the edge of the bed, Keith wondered, "Did you have a weird dream too?"

Sitting down to slip into his sandals, Prez nodded, "A really bad one, like our kids were in danger."

Reyes and Jonah went back to the diving well again to congratulate Sean and Troy on becoming Core Rimmers. Reyes noticed that not only were they gone, but so were John, Stephen, Frankie, Dee, Gage, Sammy and Richie. Walking all the way around the pool house by the diving well and then returning to the main pool area, Reyes noticed only kids dancing and others playing. He asked his little brother, "Does this mean we're in charge?"

Jonah giggled, "Don't look like anybody needs anyone in charge." He then poked Reyes in the belly and added, "But if they do, you're it!"

"That's what I was afraid of," Reyes smirked.

Back on Kauai, John and his small party had left Secret Beach and were roaming the fields where the concert had been. In the grass and ground, indentations could still be seen where the stage had been. Sean estimated where center stage was and told Troy, "The Prime Minister would've been about here." He then moved and said, "Joel and I-Cheya were about here. Then there were lots of bangs and noises and a scream." Sean pointed and smiled, "We were way over there, hiding behind video displays and speakers. When we came out from hiding, the Prime Minister was no more."

Stephen meekly offered, "I wonder if this division would've been created if the Prime Minister hadn't been discovered by John?"

John shrugged and croaked, "We'll never know. I guess we would have still been formed, but had a bigger job from the start." Pulling another candy out of his pocket, John unwrapped it and realized his brothers were waking up. He sent, 'C'mon, you guys. Let's get back home.' Soon, everyone was gathered around John and Stephen. John tapped his sub-vocal and asked, "Take us back home, by the pool please, Alden?"

They all arrived on the walkway between the pool and the soccer field. Richie looked up and cheered, "Thanks for tossing us, Unca John!" Dee, Gage, Sammy and Sean repeated the sentiment. Then the little kids took off running for the pool.

After shadowing his dad and pop all day, for the first time, Frankie wanted to play. Uncertainly shuffling his feet, Frankie frowned, "Daddy? Poppa?"

John smiled, 'Go ahead and play, Frankie. We'll be close by. Later, I'll want to introduce you to some of my friends.'

Widely smiling, Frankie's face split in half. He gave his daddy and poppa quick hugs, then went to play with his cousins.

Sean turned to Troy and sighed, "You never got tossed."

Troy grinned, "No, but I did get a good view of everything while you were getting bounced." Sean turned red and giggled. Before John knew it was coming, Troy quickly reached over and tickled him. Laughing hysterically, the candy John had been sucking blew out of his mouth and stuck to Troy's T-shirt. Sean, Stephen and John cracked up.

Prez, Keith, Drew, Corey, Mike and Derrick arrived at the pool. The three couples split and went directly for their kids. Once Reyes, Jonah and Dillon were gathered and had been hugged, the family went for a walk to find the Scoobies.

Acting like he hadn't seen his kids in a month, Prez hugged each boy tightly. In Prez's arms and holding on tight, Richie softly wondered, "Wha's wrong, Poppa?"

Relieved all the boys were fine, Prez sighed, "Nothin'. I just love you guys that much."

Richie giggled and landed a kiss on his dad's cheek then happily gushed, "Unca John took us to the beach where we met. We was over by where the stage was too."

Overhearing this, Keith's eyes almost shot out their sockets. John and Stephen walked up. 'I just told Mike and Derrick so I'll tell you too,' John sent to his brothers. 'Those dreams weren't just nightmares. You've already passed your level two live fire tests. Don't answer aloud so the kids won't get scared, but I'm just curious, how much to you remember?' John scanned his brothers and realized they only recalled tiny portions of their 'nightmares'. Just like Mike and Derrick, Prez and Keith only remembered the worst parts; what had happened to their kids. John nodded and smiled. 'You dudes were awesome! Even Sean and Troy passed with flying colors. I'm doing a mind dump of Starfleet Security Regulations and Procedures. We've got one hell of a team to lead this division. Juan couldn't be happier or prouder. Congratulations, you've all been promoted to Lieutenant Junior Grade.'

With Gage wrapped under his left arm and Sammy wrapped under his right, Keith happily cheered, "That means we've got the rest of the afternoon off!"

John covered his mouth and coughed then sent, 'The only thing I need is for Stephen to be made a Core Rimmer too.'

Uncertain, Stephen asked, "You really want me, hon?"

Rapidly nodding, John sent, 'You were awesome yesterday, baby.'

Where I go, you go.'

Stephen wrapped his arms around John and sighed contentedly. Closing their eyes, they began floating and Stephen playfully groped John's tush through his boardies. Suddenly they were three feet off the ground and giggling.

Prez tapped his sub-vocal. "Alden, one more sub-vocal and comm-badge for Stephen Marr, please, dude. He's a Core Rimmer too, Intel Division, effective immediately."

Keith quickly realized, "That makes twelve Core Rimmers and six couples." He then chirped, "Sweet!" Keith went over to the Terrible Triplets to ask that the newest Rimmers get all the information about the Safe Haven Act and Clan Short Charter. Before actually asking though, Keith received triplicate confirmation that the task was already done. Stopping in his tracks, Keith began chuckling and shaking his head.

Prez went to the table and got the two communications devices for Stephen. The problem was that Prez was looking directly into John's and Stephen's shorts. John sent, 'Just stuff the boxes in my pocket, bro. I'll take care of Stephen later.'

Doing as John instructed, Prez playfully huffed, "Seems you're already taking care of Stephen." Giggling like crazy, Stephen hid his face on John's shoulder.

At the CIC, Lieutenant Vorik received a report from Alden, Daileass and Draco regarding the accounting records of the California corporation they had been investigating. Since Director O'Brian was believed to be resting and he saw no need to immediately inform him, Vorik made strategic and tactical plans. He then contacted Kekoa, so the Pacific Rim UNIT detachment would be prepared. Kekoa reviewed Vorik's plans, then contacted Donnie at the Rapid Response base. In order to execute the plan, four more teams of ten would be required.

Just before three that afternoon, John, Stephen and Lindsay walked back to the Hundser's house to call Jeff and Tommy. Minutes later, Kaleo and Tory finally made it to the pool. Of course, they were confused since it was now after three in the afternoon, but no Core Rimmers or Juan ever showed up at the CIC for level two phaser training. Prez filled them in on what they had already done. Once again, to Kaleo and Tory, it was just an intense dream.

Two gorillas made a rare appearance at the pool. With them were two teenage boys dressed in fatigues. They went to Prez and asked where Sean and Troy were. Only two lounge chairs away, Sean and Troy looked over. Each of the boys identified themselves to their new personal security guards. The four boys and two gorillas went for a walk together to get to know each other. Thanks to Lieutenant Vorik and Troy's remarks about wanting to go on dates with Sean, the two UNIT security boys, Jeremy and Lakota, were also gay partners.

As the boys were out walking amongst the trees, Sean asked Lakota, "Are you Hawaiian?"

"No," Lakota smiled, "Native American heritage."

Sean smiled, "That's great. I'm kind o' interested in Indian culture."

Lakota smiled and nodded understandingly, saying, "First thing you need to know is we're not Indians. Indians are from India. We're Native American."

"Oh, my bad!" Sean squealed. "Sorry, dude."

"It's a common mistake," Lakota shrugged. "It doesn't bother me so don't let it bother you."

Troy looked between Jeremy and Lakota asking, "How long have you two been partners?"

"About a week," Jeremy replied.

"You're just starting out, like us," Sean smiled.

Troy nodded, "We've only been partners two days. It feels like we've known each other much longer."

Jeremy nodded and grinned, "And in a few more days, you'll feel like you've known each other forever."

Glancing up and over at his gorilla, Sean asked, "Have you thought of a name for yourself yet?"

The gorilla nodded then softly answered, "Is Leo okay with you?"

Sean giggled, "It's better than a number. Leo works fine for me as long as you like it."

Seemingly standing more upright and prouder, the gorilla smiled, "Leo."

Troy turned and walked backwards to ask his gorilla, "And your name is?"

Shrugging, the gorilla complained, "Can't think of a good one yet."

Troy asked, "Ya want some help?" The gorilla nodded, so Troy said, "Well, when I look at you and think of your job as a protector, I think of a knight." The gorilla smiled and nodded. "Okay," Troy giggled, "The most famous knight I can think of is Sir Galahad. I would probably call you Gale for short. Is that kewl?"

The gorilla snarled, "Galahad? Gale? No."

Quickly thinking of an alternative, Troy offered, "How about Gary? Gary the gorilla."

The gorilla tilted its massive head from side to side, obviously uncertain. Leo said, "I like it."

The gorilla wondered, "If you were in trouble and calling me, how would it sound?"

Uncertain, Troy shrugged and loudly called, "Gary!" Leo unexpectedly swept Troy up in his huge hairy arm. Wide-eyed and truly shocked, Troy hollered, "GAR!"

Troy's gorilla evilly chuckled. Leo put Troy down again and Troy's gorilla said, "I'll respond to that. Gary works."

Coming out of the pool house, Dee went directly to Keith. Leaning closer to his dad, Dee whispered, "Daddy, I got diarrhea. My butt ain't burned this bad since Saturday."

Keith softly asked, "Did it just start?" Dee nodded and frowned. Sitting up, Keith sighed and turned to Prez saying, "Tacos two days in a row."

Rolling his eyes, Prez grumbled, "We should've thought of that."

Keith offered, "I'll take care of Dee," and stood then took Dee's hand.

Prez nodded, "I'll check with Richie and the other kids."

Suddenly, Dee shook free of Keith's hand saying, "Uh oh!" then raced back into the pool house to use the bathroom again.

Keith quickly followed, but waited outside the closed commode door. Hearing Dee sniffing, Keith asked, "Are you all right, son?"

"It burns!" Dee whined.

Keith softly assured, "I know, Dee. Me and Poppa should've known better than to let you eat tacos."

Dee softly cried, "I'm scared, Daddy."

"It'll be okay, I promise. If you'll unlock the door, I can at least hold your hand."

Since he wasn't defecating at the time, Dee hurried off the toilet and unlocked the door. Keith had barely stepped in before Dee took his daddy's hand and sat his rear end back on the bowl. Keith wiped the tears off Dee's face and assured, "We'll take care of this, Dee."

"I don' wanna die!" Dee wailed.

Gently brushing Dee's blond hair, Keith softly shushed his son and promised, "You won't die. When you're done, we're going home to give you medicine and plain white rice. That should get you fixed up real fast."

Dee nodded then got a huge wad of toilet paper rolled around his hand and wiped his butt. Without looking at Keith, Dee softly said, "I never told you, I was fucked by a mean man."

"It's okay. You didn't need to tell me, Dee. We know all about the bad stuff done to you guys."

Dee whimpered, "He hurt me, Daddy. His dick was real big, like yours and Poppa's gets. A boy helped me Saturday so my butt-hole didn't burn or hurt no more."

Knowing it had to have been Peter Lambert, Keith nodded and considered giving Peter a hug the next time he saw him. If only the little Mikyvis would stay still long enough to get a hug. Keith sighed, "Remember what me and Poppa said, little boys should play with other little boys?"

Flushing the toilet then pulling his boardies up again, Dee grunted, "Uh huh."

"This is why," Keith carefully said. "When you get older, your dick's gonna be bigger, like mine or Poppa's. That's too much for little boys to ever have to deal with. Only very bad men would want boys to play with their dicks, or play with boy dicks. Do you understand?"

Dee nodded and forced a small grin, "You love me like a Daddy, not like a bad man. That's why you're here with me, in this smelly bathroom, ain't it?" Dee reached for and took Keith's hand.

Leading the way out of the pool house men's room, Keith smiled and nodded, "You're my boy and always will be, even in smelly bathrooms."

Once they were away from the crowded pool areas and on their way to the house, Dee prodded, "Daddy, when you and Poppa... does it hurt your butt too?"

Realizing what Dee was asking, Keith shook his head and smiled, "No, it doesn't hurt, but the first few times it was a little uncomfortable. Even when bigger boys make love, it's something the body needs to get used to. Me and Poppa were friends for years before we started playing with our dicks. We spent a long time using our hands to play with our dicks. One day, I told Poppa that I wanted his dick in my mouth. I couldn't even explain why I wanted it, but said I wanted him to feel good. He said I could, but only if he could have my dick in his mouth. It was after we turned twelve that we started trying butt play. We both had fun learning and trying. He never forces me and I never force Poppa. Now it's really beautiful, and we both look forward to it because it feels really great, and most importantly, we know we're showing our love." Dee seemed satisfied with the answer and didn't say anything more, so Keith asked, "Do you like boys more than girls, Dee?"

Dee shrugged, "Dunno. It's like... I don't wanna be hurt or hurt someone else like that ever."

More than pleased with his son's answer, Keith stopped and squatted down. Lifting Dee and carrying him, Keith softly said, "That was a good answer. Let me try to explain something to you. Making love is beautiful in every way. Fucking is bad, hurtful sex. Does that make sense to you?" Dee nodded, so Keith took the opportunity to explain, "Boys your age don't have to choose between liking boys or girls. Me and daddy were very lucky to find each other when we were only seven-years-old. We've been best friends since then, with Derrick and Mike. The four of us were split into two couples and still as close as friends could be. Someday, you might find a special boy or maybe a special girl. When you feel something in your belly like butterflies, it might mean you're nervous or it might mean you're falling in love with that person."

Absorbing that, Dee asked, "So you won't be mad if I like a girl that way?"

"Never, Dee," Keith quickly answered. "Me and Poppa only want to see you grow up happy and healthy. What me and Poppa would both like, is for you and your brothers, to tell us when you start feeling those butterflies in your belly. That way we can help you decide if you're nervous or falling in love."

Dee nodded and smiled, "Kay, Daddy."

Back at the pools, Prez had just finished roaming around and checking that the kids were feeling well. Kaleo jogged over to Prez and sniggered, "Head Rimmer?" Overhearing this, a bunch of kids began giggling before Prez could even turn around to respond.

Facing Kaleo, Prez grinned, "Mouth Rimmer?" This only added to the group of giggling kids. Some of the closer teenagers were coming up with their own "rimmer" handles for their friends.

Kaleo smiled, "We'll be getting a few more guests any time now; from Des Moines this time. I told them to transport here, by the rec center and pools."

Prez nodded and hummed then suggested, "We could put our clothes on, at least temporarily?"

Kaleo laughed, "Why? They're looking forward to being warm for the first time in weeks. I'd bet their clothes will be shed in under two minutes."

"You're probably right," Prez chuckled. "At least I'll make an effort for folks I haven't yet met." Picking up his boardies, Prez asked, "Do we know who is coming?" and slid into his shorts.

"The division head, Julio Hernandez, his partner and second in command, Jesse Crowley, and over a dozen more family and friends," Kaleo replied, and then reminded, "They'll need your approval to open the shield portal for transport, Prez."

Prez nodded and picked up his T-shirt, confirming, "Jimmy's already aware?"

"Yup," Kaleo nodded.

Prez slipped his T-shirt over his head then tapped his comm-badge and called, "Jimmy?"

Replying from Prez's comm-badge, Jimmy said, "Here, Prez. What's up?"

"A group of Clan visitors from Des Moines will be contacting you," Prez said. "As soon as they're ready, give me a heads up and allow transport."

Jimmy chuckled, "We just got the call, boss. Heads up!"

Before Prez and Kaleo, a few seconds later, all but one of the new arrivals appeared poolside. The last one appeared over the pool, and was soaking wet a few milliseconds later. Prez smiled, "Welcome to Pacific Rim Division Headquarters, where clothing and sanity are optional." While laughter or soft giggling traveled around the new group, Prez introduced himself and Kaleo then continued, "Our leadership team are scattered around right now. My hubby and second in command is taking care of one of our boys; Dee's feeling a little under the weather."

The teenage boy in the front of the pack grinned at the extended introduction, offered his hand and pleasantly said, "Hey, Prez. I'm Julio, director of the Des Moines division." Prez shook his hand and pulled him into a quick hug. Julio giggled, and continued his introductions with his partner, Jesse. Prez shook Jesse's hand and offered him a quick hug too. Prez wondered who the boy was that was transported over the pool and was now swimming to climb out. Julio grinned, "That's Colin, our head of security. The dunk was planned."

Seeing Kaleo and Prez standing with a group of new arrivals, Tory quickly got his shorts on, grabbed Kaleo's boardies, and then hurried over there. Kaleo quickly pulled up his boardies, so he could greet the new Clan brothers with more than a handshake. Drew, Corey, Geoff and Lenny also joined the group. More introductions traveled around as the new Rimmers arrived.

Over at the edge of the pool, a blond boy was helping Colin out of the pool. His two companions, Lucas and Logan, both of which looked like miniature versions of him, were being no help as they stood there giggling. "That's what you get for picking on JJ," Lucas said softly in response to Colin's complaints.

Locking eyes with Julio, Prez wondered, "Were you folks here last night, for our wedding concert?"

Shaking his head, Julio said, "We couldn't make it, but Daileass sent us a digital copy. That's part of why we're here today, but mostly, we just wanted to meet you guys and get some sun."

"Very kewl," Prez chuckled. Glancing around the group of three adults, Prez offered, "Please make yourselves at home. If anyone's hungry or thirsty, just head over to the CIC." He led the pack over to where the Rimmer adults were sitting. He introduced Mrs. Lanna Seaver, Mr. Carl Seibert and Mrs. Laura Gibbons to Bob Busch, Mick Hernandez and Janice Hernandez.

Realizing the entire group was following him around, Prez chuckled and called, "Richie? Gage? Sammy?" Once all his boys arrived, Prez introduced them to the younger kids and asked that his boys show the kids around and introduce them to others.

Immediately, without even saying a word to Prez, Richie beamed and went to the youngest twins, Frank and Fred. With the twins was Agapito. Richie asked their names and took their hands, leading them back to the pool. Gage and Sammy gathered Abejundio, Abelard, Johnny, Eddie and Robin and three more sets of twins; Bobby and Bruce, Riley and Reese, and Kent and Kurt, then led them to the diving well. Kekoa took another set of kids, Mini, Alien, Lucas, Logan and Colin, for a quick tour of the Rapid Response Base.

Now with a much smaller group, Prez asked about the layout of the Des Moines base. Learning it was a secured neighborhood with a few visible modifications, Prez was surprised to hear that their CIC was below ground, underneath a bunch of homes. Roaming around with Julio, Jesse, Ricky and Rocky, Prez reviewed their first days and joked around at the insanity that had already become commonplace. They hadn't even left the pools and rec center when Prez noticed Johnny, Eddie, Sammy and Gage floating high above the diving well. Naturally, he looked around for John. Not seeing his youngest brother, Prez scowled.

Jesse grinned at Prez's confused expression. Julio laughed, "That's Robin doin' that, Prez. He's an N-Gen, telekinesis expert."

"Oh dude," Prez softly chuckled, "we're in trouble now. My brother's N-Gen too. Two N-Gens at once? I don't think the ROH can cope." He told his guests about John, his empathic and telepathic skills and how John's new husband had made him a much stronger telekinetic.

After making the phone calls, John, Stephen and Lindsay walked to the main gate on North Road to meet Jeff and Tommy. Nearing the gate, Stephen tightened his hold on John's hand. When John looked over, Stephen asked, "Why are you so scared?"

John shrugged, "I can't remember the last time I didn't call either of them for five days."

Lindsay shook her head and huffed, "Hello? A little bit busy here! I've got a new brother and a new sister. You've got a new sister and three new brothers, not to mention a new husband and a son."

John nodded and softly admitted, "That's gonna knock 'em for a loop too."

"Stop!" Lindsay forcefully shouted. "We've been friends since we started school together. If either of them gives you any shit for marrying a boy you obviously love, I'll kick both their asses."

John giggled, "You would too."

Stephen asked John; "Would you rather I wait at the pool or at home, hon?"

"That's not even an option," John quickly answered. "They either accept everything that's happened or they walk right back out the gate."

Lindsay smiled, "That's better."

When they arrived at the security station, John told both UNIT guards that he was expecting visitors. They only had to wait another few minutes before John and Lindsay saw their friends approaching. From opposite sides of the fence, they all shouted and waved. Jeff and Tommy hurried to the gate and John signaled for the guards to open the shield portal and gate. Just as they had Friday afternoon, the four friends clasped hands and spun each other around. Stephen couldn't help giggling at them.

Noticing the sling on John's left arm, Jeff wondered, "What happened to you?"

John croaked, "A little accident. I'll be fine tomorrow."

Tommy asked, "Did you catch a cold too?"

Shaking his head, John grinned, "Part of the same accident. A few things have changed." John's voice cracked mid-way through the last sentence, so he cleared his sore throat.

Jeff and Tommy shook their heads. "A few things have changed," Tommy teased.

Jeff howled, "We figured that out when Prez was on TV Monday night!"

Feeling John getting nervous again, Stephen stepped forward. John popped another candy in his mouth and restrained himself from sending telepathic messages. Stephen couldn't help feeling proud of his husband. John felt it and reached for Stephen's hand saying, "Stephen, these are my friends, Jeff and Tommy." The three boys greeted each other. Then John said, "My arm and throat were hurt yesterday. We were aboard the Starship Enterprise for a tour..."

"The Enterprise?" Jeff and Tommy incredulously shouted.

John grinned and nodded. Smirking disbelievingly, Tommy teased, "Sure you were. Then you woke up!" Jeff cracked up.

Lindsay giggled, "He really was. So was Stephen."

"It's a perk when you're Clan," John struggled to clearly say. Becoming frustrated with his voice and wanting to get most of the questions answered quickly, John croaked, "Ya know what? I've never hidden anything from either of you before. Ya wanna know what really happened?"

Not knowing any better, Jeff and Tommy nodded, "YEAH!"

Right then and there, John pulled Jeff, Tommy, Lindsay and Stephen into his mind. He reminded them of Bruce, introduced them to Galli and showed them the inside of the Tardis. Then they all watched what happened on Secret Beach; a little Vulcan boy and big Sehlat and a Vulcan security team and thirty naked kids. John then fast-forwarded through the concert and luau to Saturday morning, when Joel had created their new division. Then there were gorillas and G-Cats and surfing and helicopter trips at Anahola Bay. Again, John fast-forwarded through Sunday, for the CIC orientations and learning of the Downings' deaths, but slowed down Monday morning, showing his flight with Riti, Dewi's rescue, how he became an N-Gen, meeting Cory and Sean Short, and what happened when he met Stephen. Once more, John fast forwarded to Tuesday afternoon. He showed them the Enterprise and the space battle and how he managed to save two people from getting blown into space. John finished his little show with Admiral Kirk explaining things to his parents and finally, five simultaneous weddings and the concert. He released them all from his mind and watched as Jeff, Tommy and Lindsay glanced at each other.

Lindsay giggled, "Even I didn't know he could do that!"

Finally free to show some affection, Stephen did so and wrapped his arms around John. They floated a foot above the ground. Knowing Stephen wanted a kiss, John smooched his hubby hard, pushing Stephen backward slightly in the process. When they kissed, they rose about another two feet, but then slowed themselves and returned to a few inches above the ground.

Watching Jeff's and Tommy's jaws drop as John and Stephen floated; Lindsay shook her head and grinned, "Once a show off, always a show off."

With his head draped over Stephen's shoulder, John sent, 'That's everything that happened since we left you guys Friday night. That's why I couldn't call you dudes until today.'

Tommy noticed the clock in the security station and shouted, "You showed us all that in only a couple of minutes?"

John nodded. 'In about two minutes, actually.'

"Awesome!" Jeff reverently cheered.

Tommy nodded, "Totally wicked! What else can you do?"

Throwing his head back and laughing, John powered up and lifted Jeff, Lindsay and Tommy. He and Stephen walked above the ground, pulling the other three along with them. John, Lindsay and Stephen gave Jeff and Tommy a leisurely tour of the base. Now much more relaxed, John realized that there was a new, strong mind present on base. John sent a warm hello to the new N-Gen and offered, 'We're heading toward the pools now, dude. We'll be the one's floating about a foot off the ground.'

Feeling somewhat embarrassed, Dee told Keith that he'd rather stay at home and near the bathrooms than be seen running into and out of the pool house boys' room. Keith carried Dee upstairs and put him in a bedroom, where he had a TV, stereo and PlayStation to keep him occupied. Once he was certain Dee was resting comfortably, Keith returned to the pools where he joined Prez, Julio and Jesse.

Prez asked Julio and Jesse, "Would you like to chat about last night's teleconference with Cory?"

After checking with Jesse and getting a confirming nod, Julio nodded, "Sure, but obviously not here."

"Definitely not here," Prez and Keith chorused, and then stood. Julio and Jesse also got up from the lounge chairs they were occupying.

"Alden?" Prez called.

"Where to, Prez?" Alden answered.

Humming for a moment, Prez then replied, "Our Maui base, indoors so we aren't seen by the Starfleet security teams." In a blink all four were inside the unused Maui base's dining room.

Upon arrival, Keith instructed, "Alden, record our conversation, in case decisions become an issue at some future date."

Into all four leaders' sub-vocals, Alden stated, "Recording is now enabled."

Taking a seat at the nearest table, Prez began, "At this point, only our brother John knows what Keith and I know." Keith, Julio and Jesse all took seats at the table too.

"I'd rather he didn't know," Keith sighed, "but he's N-Gen and woke up when we started getting nervous."

"He's head of our Intel team and will keep the secret," Prez told Julio and Jesse. "That's part of the decision I'm struggling with; keeping the secret, from whom and for how long. Part of me would like to tell my entire command team. Cory, Starfleet and the Federation are preparing evacuations, but we all know people are going freak out, no matter how well prepared we are."

Keith nodded, "I'd like to tell all the members of our team, and our parents, but I don't want to create additional stress and worry. God forbid the kids found out, we'd be dealing with six weeks of crying kids."

Julio nodded and offered, "I understand where you're at. We've got a few telepaths and N-Gen's hanging around Des Moines. I'm pretty sure Colin knows."

"So does Johnny," Jesse added.

"That's probably only the tip of the iceberg too," Julio smirked.

Glancing around for input, Prez queried, "So telling the rest of the command team wouldn't be a terrible idea?"

Seeing Julio and Jesse shaking their heads, Prez heard John in his mind saying, 'Not Stephen, bro. I'll tell Stephen when I think the time is right. Him and his mom are just starting to feel like their lives aren't jinxed. Telling them now would only make that feeling worse.'

Prez grinned, "John says to not tell Stephen. So the first chance I get, I'll pull everybody, except John and Stephen, aside to tell them."

Reaching for Prez's hand, Julio smiled, "Trust your team, bro. Imagine how we'd all feel if Cory hadn't shared this information with us. He trusts us to cope with everything that we'll have to deal with in a few weeks, when we start evacuating this planet. Trust your team the same way."

Prez nodded and sighed, "I do trust them; with my life, with saving other lives, but it's not everyday you get to save six billion lives. If I wasn't adequately blown away last Saturday, I think I am now."

Keith asked, "Are we done here, baby?" and then grinned, "We've left John and Robin unsupervised. Everyone on base might be floating thirty feet in the air by now." Suddenly, Keith disappeared from the chair he was sitting on. He reappeared thirty feet above the Ewa Beach diving well and dropped, screaming, "JO-O-O-OHN!"

* * * * *

Waking from their nap, Bruce and Dewi put boardies on then went over to the pool. Back from Maui with Julio and Jesse, Keith and Prez were relaxing on lounge chairs while Gage, Richie and Sammy played in the pool with their new friends. Seeing the two recently orphaned boys together, Prez glanced at Keith. Already aware of what Prez planned to do, Keith smiled and nodded. Turning to Julio and Jesse, Prez excused himself, got up then leaned over to kiss Keith before walking away and meeting his two new little brothers.

Making his planned talk easier, Dewi raced to Prez. Catching the tiny four-year-old boy and picking him up, Prez kissed his cheek and chuckled, "It's good to see you too, Dewi."

"Don't get ta sees you too much," Dewi giggled.

Prez nodded, "I'm working a lot, but I'm trying to change that." Prez looked down and smiled at Bruce, "How're you doin', bro?"

Bruce shrugged and forced a grin, "Okay, I guess."

Prez nodded, "I'd like to talk to both of you alone for a little while, if that's okay?"

Dewi rapidly nodded. Bruce said, "Sure. We were only going to the pool before supper."

"Let's just walk around," Prez suggested. "While we walk, I want to tell you guys some stuff about me." Starting for the trees to the south, Prez softly explained, "A little more than two years ago, I was at my house with Keith, Derrick and Mike. We were playing music after school, like we almost always did."

"Ya do still!" Dewi giggled.

"That's right," Prez grinned. He then continued, "Before dinner time, Derrick, Keith and Mike went home so they could have dinner with their families. I waited for my parents, and even made myself a sandwich, because dinner was going to be late. It had happened before; little delays that I didn't think too much about. Keith came back over to my house and we did our homework. It got late and Keith had to go home, but my parents still weren't home, and he didn't want to leave me alone. So he called home and got permission to stay the night with me. He went home, but then came back with his mom. They both stayed with me. That night, my mother and father never came home from work." Prez inhaled deeply and said, "The next morning, we learned that their plane never landed. It was another two days before the plane was found. They had crashed into the ocean off the coast of Lanai and had both died."

Bruce nodded and softly realized, "Three days, just like my parents."

Dewi innocently asked, "Was you sad, Prez?"

Prez nodded, "Very sad for a long time." Looking down at Bruce, Prez admitted, "I was still a little sad when we found you last Friday afternoon."

"You didn't seem too sad," Bruce challenged.

"When Keith and I got home from school, I was thinking of my parents. But Keith's my best friend and he helped me feel better. We went to the beach that afternoon believing that the luau would be there, not at Kauai. That's why I'm afraid of planes and flying."

Bruce hummed thoughtfully then asked, "So even two years later, you still feel sad."

Prez nodded, "That's why I wanted to talk with you dudes. You'll never really forget your parents. The bad times will seem less bad and the good times will seem even better. Not only have the three of us lost our parents, it was at the same time of year. For Bruce and I, it was October."

Dewi said, "But my mammy and daddy was bad."

A little stunned, Prez locked eyes with the imp on his hip and asked, "You know that now?"

Dewi nodded, "Yup! My new mammy and daddy is more nicer!" Uncontrollably, Bruce giggled at Dewi's enthusiastic response.

Prez grinned, "Yes they are! They're my mommy and daddy too, ya know?"

"Yup! Daddy 'splained it."

After many silent steps together, Bruce softly wondered, "Will it ever stop hurting?"

Prez nodded, "In time. It's really only Octobers that mess with me now. With every passing day, it'll hurt a tiny bit less. Soon, you'll find yourself living each day, doing the best you can; but you're doing it for them as much as yourself and the people around that you love." Prez paused then smiled, "We're brothers now and always will be."

When it hurts, I'd like it if you guys came to me to talk about it."

Bruce reminded, "You're so busy though, Prez."

Pulling Bruce close and holding him by the shoulder, Prez said, "I'm never that busy, Bruce. Family always comes first. It was that way with my parents; it's that way with the Hundserts and with Clan Short too. If I'm not available, you've also got Keith, Drew and John to talk to. We're all brothers. Behind all the goofing around and teasing we do, we really love each other. We really love you two dudes too. Sharing problems is the best way to make them go away fast."

Also happening that afternoon, Mike and his family were with the Scoobies, walking amongst the trees south of the school buildings. At the root of an old, dead tree was a large, wide hole. With some prompting from the Scoobies, Mike followed the ferrets down the hole. Behind Mike were Dillon, Jonah, Reyes and, bringing up the rear, Derrick. The tunnel had twists and turns and larger passages that led to dead ends. For almost twenty minutes, they crawled on their bellies, following the Scoobies down the dark passages. It would've taken longer, but several parts of the tunnel were smooth and could be slid down. Dillon and Jonah thought it was the most fun they had ever had, even when they slid into each other in the dark. Coming around another bend in the tunnel, Mike saw small blue flames ahead. Popping up from some deeper area, Spike grabbed Mike's hand and smiled, "This is it, Shiny Daddy!"

Filthy and sore from crawling, Mike grumbled, "This is what?" The few blue flames turned into dozens, and then, as Mike looked around above him, he estimated there were hundreds. The Scoobies had managed to connect pipe work from natural gas lines to create the lighting.

"Yous can stand now, Daddy," Willow giggled. She tilted a mirror and the cavern was quickly well lit. Mike turned to the passageway to help his kids and husband. Once they were all standing, they faced the ferrets, all of whom were happily bouncing on their hind legs and widely smiling.

"This be our Shiny Vault!" the four ferrets chorused.

Glancing around quickly at various Shiny objects, Mike wondered, "Are we even on base anymore? Where exactly are we, Spike?"

"Under the auditorium's basement," Spike happily cheered.

Faith nodded, "Near where Shiny Daddies first plays us Shiny music."

Xander pointed up at another passageway saying, "That leads up to the auditorium basement." It had to be twenty feet up a sheer wall, maybe two or three feet below the ring of gas flames.

"Weez can get anywhere on base from here," Willow squealed.

At the many Shiny objects neatly organized and reflecting light from mirrors and gas flames, Derrick gasped, "My God!" The boys roamed around the cylindrical shaped vault. There were aluminum sculptures, chrome car and truck wheels, a pile of at least a hundred pearls, hub caps, various pieces of polished metals and piles of what appeared to be genuine gems of assorted sizes and shapes.

Out of curiosity, Mike wondered, "What's the most valuable thing down here?" He half expected the Scoobies would pull out the Hope Diamond from some secret hiding spot, but instead the foursome scampered to the largest aluminum sculpture. It had to be about fifteen feet tall and was absolutely the ugliest piece of modern art he'd ever seen. It would've taken Mike, Derrick, Reyes and the remaining Core Rimmers hours to move the hunk of junk a few yards.

The Scoobies cheered, "This is the Shiniest!"

Closely examining the piles of gems, Derrick recognized diamonds, jasper, quartz, rubies, Tiger's eye and turquoise. He softly asked, "Do you guys always crawl in and out of here?"

Xander shook his head and seriously answered, "Weez can transport in and out with Shinies if weez need to."

Mike grinned, "Well, that answers how some of the larger Shinies got down here. This place is awesome guys." He paused and wondered, "How come I don't see any guitar picks?"

Crawling up Mike and parking herself on her daddy's shoulder, Faith replied, "Oh, weez keeps them always!"

"Them's from you, Shiny Daddy," Willow reminded, and then crawled up Mike's other side until she arrived at his opposite shoulder.

Reyes asked, "All this stuff came from Dull Lovers and Shiny Haters?"

Xander nodded, "Some of it. Most weez found."

Spike frowned, shook his head sadly and growled, "Tossed asides like garbage! Blasphemers!"

Nodding and forcing a frown, Mike huffed, "I know, it's very sad."

Pointing at four large tikis adorned with pearls, Reyes wondered, "Where did you find these?"

Willow answered, "They was buried here already."

Scratching his head and scowling, Reyes muttered, "They were here?" All four Scoobies replied affirmatively.

Derrick asked, "What's wrong, Reyes?"

Reyes sighed, "Tiki carvings are of Hawaiian gods, usually put at burial grounds. Tikis like these, with all these pearls, they must've been extremely important, guarding graves of very important people."

Mike gasped, "Tiki gods guarding burial grounds?" He asked the Scoobies, "Did you guys find any human remains here?"

Spike fervently shook his head, replying, "No Shiny Daddy, no bones, just Shinies."

Xander explained, "That's why weez picked this spot; it already had lots of Shinies."

Willow nodded, "Yup! Weez cleaned the buried Shinies up."

Derrick checked his wristwatch then asked, "Are we done here?"

Mike nodded and suggested, "Let's go out under the Day Shiny. Then we can all have dinner together."

While Xander climbed the wall to flip the mirror and turn off the gas flames, Derrick gathered Dillon, Jonah and Reyes. Spike held onto Mike's leg and asked, "Yous can find us now, Shiny Daddy?"

Mike honestly answered, "I probably couldn't make my way down the tunnel without getting lost, but at least I know where to find you."

The lights went out. Willow said, "Yous can call for us from any street drain. We'll hear yous down here." A few moments later, Xander was holding onto Mike's other leg. Mike called Alden and a split second later, the entire family was back outside and by the pool house.

Most of the other Core Rimmers were back by the pool with their Des Moines guests. John had led his friends, husband and a troop of kids to learn how to play soccer in the nearby field. Corey saw first how dirty Mike, Derrick and their kids were and cracked up laughing. Prez covered his eyes briefly and chuckled. Keith grinned and pointed at the pool house, saying, "No pool for you dudes until you shower."

Mike loudly bitched, "That's why we're here, Dull One."

Suspiciously glaring at Keith, Spike wondered, "Is he really a Dull One, Shiny Daddy?"

"No, he took the pledge," Mike answered. Turning around and following his other kids into the pool house, he smirked, "Keith just likes to tease and bother me. So I tease and bother him too, every chance I get."

Soon after Derrick, Mike and their boys emerged from the pool house naked and clean, Prez introduced them to Julio, Jesse and some of the Des Moines Division near the pool, then began performing poolside adoptions. First on the list was seven-year-old Lenny Cutler being adopted by Drew and Corey. Geoff now had an older brother that was about two inches taller than he was. Next, Frankie Petropavlovski was adopted by John and Stephen, with Jeff and Tommy witnessing the proceeding. Completely blown away at their best friend, John, being married and now adopting a slightly younger boy, Jeff and Tommy overflowed with congratulations.

Reyes, Dillon and Jonah had talked Mike and Derrick into adopting seven-year-old Randy Beale. Next were five-year-olds Murakami Junichiro and Shimizu Atsushi, who were adopted by Bill and Lanna Seaver. Cesar and Felipe now had their two best friends as brothers. Anna and Carl Seibert adopted six-year-old May Hickox, giving Brandi the sister she very much wanted; and two former FCC boys, seven-year-olds Chad Bunting and Herbert Trumbo. Knowing his parents and how they still grieved over the loss of their first son, Carl Junior, Derrick widely smiled, knowing his parents would happily fill their large new home with kids of all ages. When Jim and Jennifer Hundser arrived at the pool, Dewi was officially made their son, and Rena Hawkin, an eight-year-old former FCC girl was made their daughter and Carmella's big sister. Just after five o'clock, the last and largest set of adoptions were four-year-old Aaron Pendergrass, five-year-olds Randall Mcfarren, Alan Mchugh and Tami Hepner, all of which were former FCC kids and were adopted by Laura and Rob Gibbons.

When the adoptions were complete, Reyes, Jonah and Dillon gathered all the Gibbons-Seibert kids together for a final chat. That night, the eleven boys planned to sleep at the Seibert's house while the six girls, including Lindsay, would sleep at the Gibbons' house.

Kaleo and Tory were interested in the songs Platinum Habits had played during their concerts and jam sessions. They spoke with Troy first, telling him that a lot of the kids preferred the music the band played, because it wasn't the sort of dance music they had previously been forced to "perform" for adults to. Keith overheard the conversation. Between Troy and Keith, Kaleo was able to order a large collection of compact disks in the classical, jazz and rock genres. Without realizing it, Kaleo had ordered over a hundred CD's that now covered his bed. Keith also asked Alden to send Kaleo a copy of the prior evening's wedding concert.

Just before dinner time, Prez learned that a veterinarian, two nurses, two receptionists, six landscapers, eight housekeepers and twelve chefs, had been hired. The two nurses and two receptionists had already started work at the Ewa Beach main base. The new chefs and housekeepers would work weekends at the main base until additional bases opened. The new landscapers were directed to report to the Ewa Beach Incoming base, only about two miles west of the main base, by the next morning. Two of the chefs, one landscaper and one housekeeper had large families that would occupy the four single family homes at the incoming base until the condos were built. They could then move into large, five-bedroom and four-bathroom apartments that were actually larger in square footage than the single family homes. Five of the other planned employees would move into the townhomes on that base. The remaining employees would commute to work until the condominiums were built. Lastly, Jim Hundser told Prez that they had already hired enough ex-CPS employees to fill the FYS offices on the main base and there would be three at each of the other four bases, starting the next Monday.

Grinning, Jim told Prez, "There is one other thing, not directly related to hires."

"Like what, dad?" Prez wondered.

Jim began, "You and Keith have four sons in less than a week. Derrick and Mike have four sons in less than a week. Drew and Corey have two sons. John and Stephen now have one of their own."

"Oh God," Prez groaned. "You're not thinking..."

"I'm not only thinking it," Jim chuckled, "it's only a matter of time before you have eight sons per couple, then maybe add four girls per couple, and so on." Prez began sweating and helplessly giggling. Jim explained, "Your families and team are expanding, Preston. Carl Seibert came to me with an idea to build specialized housing for the Core Team members at each base. Basically, the team you have now must stay here on the main base. Kaleo and Tory are married now, so in time, we can foresee them having families. Troy and Sean aren't married, but from what I've seen and heard, they might as well be."

"All true," Prez sniggered. "What do you need from me, dad?"

"Only your approval so Carl can begin work on the additional construction projects," Jim smiled.

Tapping his sub-vocal, Prez said, "Alden, Mr. Carl Seibert intends to build specialized housing for the Core Rimmers, on each Pacific Rim Division base. The project is approved, effective immediately."

"Got it, Prez," Alden replied.

Before dinner, Robin and John had met and shared some telekinetic tricks. At dinner time, the two telekinetic pranksters ordered extra asparagus and zucchini. Sitting on opposite sides of the dining room, another veggie battle began. This time, John paid extra attention to his parents, so that every time they looked up, launched asparagus and zucchini suddenly flew way up to the ceiling and hovered there until the adults had looked away. It soon became necessary for inter-dining room ballistic asparagus and zucchini missiles to slide across the dining room ceiling before dropping down to the intended targets. Prez was happily chatting with Keith, Julio and Jesse, holding a spoonful of apple sauce in front of his face when an asparagus warhead dropped and splashed apple sauce around the table. At a nearby table, Mike, Derrick and Reyes noticed the mess and roared laughing.

Robin noticed Reyes laughing and, with total innocence on his face, dropped three cauliflower bombs into Reyes' soup. Prez, Keith, Julio and Jesse howled laughing. The adults finished their meals and left the dining room. A full-fledged 'leftover' war began seconds after the last parent exited the room. Veggies of every sort served, dinner rolls, French Fries and clumps of mashed potatoes were flung from every direction. An unsuspecting chef peered around the corner to see why the dining room had suddenly gotten so loud and was promptly splattered with a potato grenade. The last remaining adults in the area joined the kids in their play war, armed with large ladles to launch mass quantities great distances, and using serving tray covers to protect themselves from incoming barrages.

The worst of all of the remaining adults was Bob, who borrowed a slingshot from Logan and began launching deviled eggs at any available target. Along one table, the entire strike team that had come over from Des Moines pooled their resources and systematically began 'taking out' any of the teenagers who happened to move within range.

With the last of the ammunition splattered against the walls, floor, ceiling and even the cages surrounding the defenseless partridge, turtle doves, French hens and calling birds, the two instigators began telekinetically gathering the wasted food items and dropping it, en masse, into the nearest trash cans. This task was also made fun as John and Robin tried to make the grossest, squishiest plopping noises from the trash being deposited into the cans. Kids began leaving the dining room for the nearest showers at the dorms and over at the pool house.

After the dining room was mostly cleaned, Keith returned from the men's room with Dee. Keith sat down and Dee shuffled onto his dad's lap. Facing Prez, Keith sighed, "I think we're gonna have to call Antonio. Dee's still got the runs."

Overhearing that, Nathan turned and said, "Can I suggest a quick checkup by Reyes instead?"

"Why Reyes?" Keith and Prez simultaneously wondered.

Nathan grinned, "He was upgraded. Now he's got the knowledge of any General Practitioner stored in his positronic memory. It would just be easier for Reyes to check Dee over real quick."

Reyes was at the next table over with Derrick, Mike and their kids. Prez called Reyes to come over. Keith explained the situation to Dee, who enthusiastically agreed to have Reyes play doctor with him.

Reyes was appearing a little uncertain, but then widely grinned, "Holy crap! I know exactly what to do!" Derrick and Mike began laughing as Reyes hurried to the Command Center to retrieve a tricorder. In less than a minute, Reyes returned and easily operated the tricorder, as if he had been doing it all his life. After scanning Dee, Reyes smiled, "He's not even a little dehydrated. I don't foresee any major problems, just discomfort from going so often. We can even take care of that. Let me just confer with Doc Andrews and Doc Howard. I'll come back with a hypo-spray and Dee will be done running to the bathrooms." Turning and slowly walking away, Reyes then tapped his comm-badge to call the two doctors.

Noticing Dee smiling for the first time all afternoon, Prez asked, "That was easy, wasn't it?"

Dee nodded and giggled, "He's a good doc too."

Cuddling Dee closer, Keith whispered, "There's nobody better than one of your best buds."

Prez suggested, "Would you like Reyes to be your doctor tonight, at least until we're sure you're better, Dee?" Dee enthusiastically agreed.

Reyes returned and administered the hypo-spray in Dee's arm, saying, "This will take care of the diarrhea and lower abdominal cramps."

"How long will it take?" Prez wondered.

"Two minutes," Reyes answered. "The intestines are packed with blood vessels." He then rapidly shook his head and giggled, "I'm gonna have to access the various new databases I have!"

Mike howled laughing. Derrick softly called Reyes over for some one-on-one father-son cuddle time. Instructing Dee to drink plenty of water for the next few hours, Reyes then went to Derrick. "I want you to think about something," Derrick whispered to Reyes. "With all your new databases, you're an incredible asset to this Clan. If you want, you can become a Core Rimmer too."

Reyes blushed and grinned, "I don't know, dad. Playing on stage with you guys last night was awesome. That's really all I'm looking forward to."

Pulling Reyes close and firmly hugging him, Derrick smiled, "You'll get more and more chances to do that too. As your databases become more integrated, all you have to do is tell me what you'd like to do. If you say yes then we'll talk with Prez." Still uncertain, Reyes shrugged at first. Seeing the pride in Derrick's eyes and realizing that his dad wanted him to join the command team, Reyes considered it more carefully and teetered on the fence.

Jeff and Tommy stayed with John, Stephen, Frankie, Nathan, Jamie, Jacob and Beau through dinner and the subsequent food fight. The Terrible Triplets had to leave as well, since they were expected in the U.K. for Joel's and Kevin's wedding. The three boys gave goodbye hugs to John, Stephen, Frankie and Nathan. Prez and the rest of the Core Rimmers were next to get hugs goodbye. Cesar and Felipe heard triplicate goodbyes from their older friends and teachers. Jacob, Jaime and Beau then raced across the compound to hug Lanna Seaver and give her three goodbye kisses. They finished their farewells with the rest of the Rimmer parents before transporting out.

Frankie went to play with his cousins. Before they had to leave for the night, Jeff and Tommy had gate passes and comm-badges to call John and Lindsay, so they could visit often. John, Lindsay and Stephen walked them back to the North Road gate. With all that was available for entertainment and a hundred and fifty kids to play with on the base, they promised that they would be back almost every day.

"Vorik to Director O'Brian," came the call from Prez's comm-badge.

Prez tapped his comm-badge and formally responded, "O'Brian here. How can I help you, Lieutenant?"

Vorik answered, "There is a situation requiring the attention of your command team, Sir."

"Acknowledged," Prez replied, and then informed the Vulcan Lieutenant, "I have Clan Short guests from Des Moines. Would it be acceptable to have them join our team, Sir?"

"Yes, that may prove advantageous," Vorik answered.

"We'll be right there, Lieutenant," Prez said. Within a minute, most of the Pacific Rim Division team was gathered. Prez knew that John would be along as soon as possible. Julio and Jesse rounded up Colin, Chris, Logan, Mini, Lucas, Alien, Doug, Travis, Johnny and Eddie. The large group entered the Command Center, where they found Kekoa already waiting with Lieutenant Vorik.

On the way back to the CIC from the gate, John began getting a queasy feeling in his stomach. Stephen worried that dinner didn't agree with his husband. John slowly shook his head and sent, 'I've been so preoccupied most of the day, I didn't feel it before now. Something big is going on.' Together, the two boys ran back to the CIC and across the dining room into the Command Center. There they found all the rest of the Core Rimmers, the Des Moines Division team leaders and Kekoa gathered around Lieutenant Vorik. Rather than interrupt, John listened and began scanning his brothers to learn about the situation.

A major California technology company named Zorro Communications Corporation was getting tax benefits for operating social services in the form of orphanages spread across the state. However, their accounts for the social services spinoff didn't add up. Money that should have been spent to adequately clothe, feed and shelter about two hundred kids wasn't being spent. Not even their utilities bills made sense; water, electric and natural gas must have cost them way more than they were accounting for. Additionally, since what was required didn't make sense, not a single U.S. dollar could be found to be spent on any game or toy.

Pacific Rim Division was preparing to raid sixteen orphanages in eight California cities. In San Diego, there were two orphanages; in Anaheim, there were two; in Los Angeles, there were three; in Santa Barbara, there was one. Two orphanages were in San Jose; three were in San Francisco, two were in Sacramento and the final one in Fresno.

When Prez called Jack at the Rapid Response Base to arrange for him to join in the planning, Jack asked who else was participating. As Prez ran through the list, Jack began evilly laughing.

"Do I even want to know what you think is so funny?" Prez smirked.

"Just wait," Jack replied. "I've been waiting to give paybacks for a prank that I was the victim of. This is better than any prank I could come up with to retaliate!"

Turning to Julio and Jesse, Prez grinned, "At least I'm pretty certain most of my team haven't pulled any pranks on you, Jack."

Julio nodded. "Maybe not any of your guys; but I'll bet you I can give a full list from my side. In fact, the list of innocent people is a lot shorter!"

Colin had overheard the conversation, and interjected "I think I know who he's talking about. And not only can't he spell 'innocent', he's never experienced it!"

Jack chuckled. "Not bad, Wet Dream... as soon as I get Daileass ready to record my fun, I'll be over." All the Core Rimmers' eyes shot open and they cracked up, each silently wondering who "Wet Dream" was. They could only assume it was Colin.

Colin gave a feral grin in the direction of the Rapid Response Base. "You need to sleep sometime, Jackie boy... and when you do, I'll be there."

"This is going to be AWESOME!" Daileass announced. "Can I save it as a training film, Colin?"

"Sure thing, little brother," Colin replied. "Make sure I get a copy though, okay?"

"You got it!" Daileass exclaimed, his joy obvious at being able to film Colin in action.

Jack wasn't intimidated at all. "Just remember who cooks your food when you're here, Captain Hallucination!"

Nathan Hayes turned to Prez and the remaining hysterical Rimmers, chuckling, "This is how all our operations start. It's like a pre-release of tension... or at least that's the best excuse I can think of."

"Or in your case, a 'premature release' of some sort," Kris giggled under his breath.

Nathan smirked, "Uhhh... only eleven here... there ain't much release of anything... YET!"

"Will you pervs stop comparing your lack of pubic hair and get back to business?" Logan declared between giggles.

Daileass giggled, "Business? What business? Oh yeah! Some of you guys want to play soldier?"

Suddenly, Jack disappeared from the screen everyone had been watching. He appeared in the Command Center, directly behind Logan and, in a flash, pulled Logan's underwear and shorts down to the floor.

Logan kicked his shorts away, and pulled his 'Terminator' briefs back up, proudly showing off the "I'll be back" lettering across the posterior. "Who needs shorts, they just catch on things! Thanks, Miss Jackie!"

Jack reached down and grabbed the back of the Terminator brief and lifted Logan off the floor. "Did you say something, Logan?" All the Rimmers groaned in sympathetic pain.

"Yeah, is it that time of the month for you already?" Logan giggled, obviously ignoring any pain he might have been feeling.

"It is whenever I'm around you little shits. I don't know what it is about you guys," Jack said as he started to bounce Logan up and down by his underwear. "But just to make my day even more complete, guess what? You're in charge!" Jack then let the boy drop back down to the floor.

"What are you smoking? I'm a guest! This is your area of command!" Logan replied, trying to decide if Jack was still messing with him.

"Not today, Lieutenant," Jack seriously said. "It's time for you to get in some real command and control practice."

Logan straightened his briefs, then looked around the room before looking back at Jack. "I hereby relieve you of command for this operation, General." Logan stated, his tone making it clear that he wasn't playing anymore.

Jack nodded. "I accept your relief, and will be available if you need any help. You've earned this, Logan; good luck."

As difficult as it was to be serious after all that, especially with the young commander standing in stretched Terminator briefs, Prez wheezed and giggled, "So Logan's taking over our Command Center while my team and I are out?"

Julio smiled as he came over and ducked under Logan's legs, putting the freshly-minted commander on his shoulders. "I'll handle this, Little Admiral!" Julio stated, earning him a playful swat on the head from Logan. "Just so you guys know, Logan is Second-in-Command of his strike team. General Adam Casey has been grooming him for full command. He's a veteran of more battles than I want to think about. Based on what Dad and Bob have explained to me, the best way to work it, when you're doing something major, is to have the guys who have been trained to do it run the show, while we just advise them on the direction we want things to go in."

"Kewl," Prez smiled. He turned to the Core Rimmers and said, "Logan is our manager. Requests into the Command Center go through him." Facing Julio and Logan again, Prez told them, "Lieutenant Vorik is our Starfleet and VSO Liaison. Any assistance Logan needs can also be funneled through him."

Logan nodded. "Okay, Julio, get your face sucking done with Jesse, we got work to do." As Julio put him down, happy to comply with Logan's first order, Logan began contemplating his staff. "Jack, you take Lucas with you to the Rapid Response base; if he tells you to do something, it's from me. John, what is the Intel situation here?"

John answered, "Since I'm going too, Nathan has the ball for Intel stuff. He and Lieutenant Vorik can handle it."

"That works; Tucker, Johnny, and Eddie, you guys work with them and sort out positions. Kris, you have tactical; Colin, and Dutchmen left are on standby for backup, that's your ball."

With that, the Core Rimmers and Julio, Jesse, Doug and Travis left the Command Center. They went to the dining room where one-hundred and sixty troops were waiting and ready for the operation.

Gathered were all one-hundred-twenty Rimmer troops, plus forty from the Rapid Response Base. An additional twenty from the Des Moines Division strike teams were on standby, should backup or circumstances dictate help was required. The six Core Rimmer couples would be in command of ten of the sixteen brigades raiding the orphanages. Of course, the Command Teams' personal security guards would also be in attendance. Julio and Jesse would command another brigade. The last command team would be Doug and Travis, also from Des Moines. All sixteen orphanages would be invaded simultaneously at two in the morning Pacific Time. By the time adults on the premises knew what was happening, they would already be under arrest.

Depending upon how tired the kids might be, they would all be brought back to Ewa Beach to be fed, then clothed before housing was arranged. Hopefully some of the kids would accept the idea of sleeping at the dorms, but everyone knew the youngest amongst the rescued would want to nest. The best news was that there would be three Rimmer homes with kids. Two hundred kids wouldn't fit in one basement, but could easily fit in three, if needed. The final preparations were made by contacting the chefs and the Rimmers' parents to be prepared for the largest group of rescued kids yet. Barring any unforeseen circumstances, all the raids could be complete and the kids back in Hawaii between midnight and one in the morning, Hawaiian time.

Prez was annoyed that another U.S. corporation was cooking their books. At the same time, he realized that Lieutenant Vorik, Kekoa, Donnie and all the Clan Short leadership teams had come up with a great plan. Arriving at the best way to allocate his command teams, Prez sent the youngest and most recent Core Rimmers to cities where there were only two orphanages. The helpful Des Moines Clan guests would go to cities with only one orphanage. That left Mike and Derrick in Los Angeles. Keith and Prez would command from San Francisco. A coordinated attack in the middle of the night would catch the adults off guard. The only unfortunate effect of the plan is the kids would be woken up and probably scared to death. For the benefit of the kids, the plan was to get them back to Ewa Beach and out of the frightening situation as quickly as possible.

In the CIC dining room, the last thing Prez told the assembled teams was; "I demand minimal casualties on both sides. As many as possible of these supposed 'care-givers' are to be captured alive. They are to be arrested and subjected to mind scans. What I really want to know is who is responsible? Is it the social services spin-off or is it from the corporation's board of directors? Are the city or state governments involved? I want answers; Cory Short will want answers. There will be no loose ends. Last Saturday, the news from the ROH traveled the globe. Tomorrow, the news from California will do the same. We'll have all those bastards under arrest and all the kids will be safe here with us." Pausing and glancing around the assembled group, Prez asked, "Are there any questions?"

Facing the troops, Kekoa confirmed, "Does everyone have the new MP5-AX?"

One hundred and sixty troops loudly replied "Sir, yes Sir!"

Before Prez could ask, Kekoa explained, "These new weapons have phaser capability, ammo that delivers a disabling electrical charge, and of course, they can also accept standard ballistic ammo."

Prez grinned and nodded; "Unless there's a major problem, communications will be limited to what can be passed by the AI's via sub-vocals. We need virtual silence, folks; surprise is our ally. If you've got to fart, do it quietly."

The large group of strike teams began to separate to prepare for transport. At exactly 10:45 PM Hawaii Time, the Ewa Beach CIC dining room was emptied of all strike teams.

Prez and Keith went with one strike team to San Francisco. Mike and Derrick were in Los Angeles. Kaleo and Tory were in San Diego. Sean and Troy were in Sacramento. Drew and Corey were in Anaheim. John and Stephen were in San Jose. Julio and Jesse were assigned to Santa Barbara. Doug and Travis went to Fresno.

Upon arrival at the sixteen orphanages, Police Departments in all eight cities were contacted by the Command and Control Center at the Oahu Rapid Response Base and forewarned that Clan Short Pacific Rim Division had justification for the planned raids. Not a single law enforcement agency argued and they promised to steer clear of the orphanages. While the main attack troops moved out to encircle the orphanage properties, the Core Rimmers and Des Moines Command Teams hung back with their security personnel.

Even across the street from the orphanage, John felt intensely painful pangs in his belly. It was far worse than the painful jabs he felt about Joel's rape or from Dewi. This was a chronic, constant pain, and it was spreading such that his arms, legs and head hurt.

Shedding tears, Stephen felt a small part of what John felt, but Prez had ordered silence, so he said nothing to John, yet he watched him carefully. Holding his belly and looking at Stephen and then at Lucky, John began sweating. Feeling like he might hurl, John leaned forward, his arms braced on his knees. Remembering what Jacob, Jamie and Beau taught him about protecting himself from empathic and telepathic overload, John reasoned that's what had to be happening. He began the process of shutting down his N-Gen empathy and telepathy. It lessened the pain, but not so dramatically that he felt very much better. Slowly shaking his head, John tried to keep to the plan, but the pain was too much to bear. Shaking violently, John tapped his sub-vocal, softly sobbing, "Alden, to all command teams. Prez, this...it's very wrong. Go now, bro."

Hearing the desperation in his brother's sobs, Prez ordered, "All teams; go now!"

All the strike teams responded and sixteen orphanages were raided simultaneously at 1:47 AM Pacific Time, Thursday, November fourth.

Sirens blaring and lights flashing, an LA Police squad car skidded at high speed around the corner less than a quarter mile from where Mike and Derrick were standing. "Sonofabitch!" Mike grumbled. "God-damned cowboys! They were supposed to stay away!" Raising his phaser and with Derrick following his husband's lead, they fired on the squad car, taking out the lights and then the two front tires. Out of control, with steel rims digging into the concrete street, the squad car screeched to a halt. Mike and Derrick fired on the grill and took out the siren horn. Derrick's gorilla, Talib, fired two fifty-caliber rounds at the squad car's engine block. Two officers scrambled out of the car with their hands prepared to draw their weapons. Mike's and Derrick's teenage security guards, Manny and Dave, saw immediate threats to their charges and fired their silenced MP5-AX rifles at the officers, hitting them both in both of their knees with high current electrical charges. Frozen for many seconds, the two men fell to the ground, bouncing and flopping around like fish out of water.

"Wow!" Manny softly chortled, "It fucking works!"

Smirking at his security guard, Mike softly hissed, "Ya think?"

Dave shrugged and explained, "They're new weapons. We've fired them at dummies before, but they don't dance like that!"

Mike's gorilla, Rafiki went to the two officers and called, "Terra-

Main, two to beam up for medical attention and prosecution."

Back in Ewa Beach, eleven minutes before eleven o'clock, Cesar and Felipe Laurito woke screaming. Naturally, the piercing sound woke the two younger and recently adopted boys sleeping in the same room; Murakami Junichiro and Shimizu Atsushi. It was the first night all four boys chose to sleep at the Seaver home instead of in the Hundser's basement. Startled, Bill and Lanna Seaver raced up the stairs. What the twin boys described was considered a nightmare by the two adults, a result of their previous lives at orphanages and foster homes. The boys couldn't be consoled or calmed. They wanted to join the nest at the Hundser's.

Lanna made a quick call and spoke with Jennifer. Minutes later, Bill and Lanna walked the four boys over to the Hundser's. After getting the four boys settled in the nest, the four adults had tea and chatted, unaware that this was anything more than a required adjustment period. The adults had no idea where their sons were; they only knew that they would be returning with close to two hundred orphans.

Felipe sent to Cesar, 'John's not here. None of our leaders are here.'

Cesar cuddled closer to his brother and replied, 'It's really happening, I know it. We need to be here.'

'I'm scared.'

'Me too.'

Chapter 8

Anaheim, California

Thursday, November 4, 2004 1:47 AM PST

Off of Ball Road, less than two miles from Disneyland, Drew and Corey were teetering between being concerned for John and frightened for everyone involved in the orphanage operations. Events were supposed to happen in a specific sequence. The strike teams were supposed to cut the phone and the power lines, surround the orphanages, then enter the buildings. Instead, because of John's distress call, all three steps basically happened at once.

The Cambridge Street neighborhood they were at seemed crowded with a lot of homes. Most of the houses nearby were single story homes, except the one they were closely watching. There were single family homes and duplexes lined up on both sides of the street. Overall, this house didn't seem to fit in the neighborhood. It was much larger than all the others and had many more large trees and shrubs around it.

Unfamiliar with their surroundings, Drew and Corey were nervous. Their security teams, Ata and Baakir, the two gorillas, and Conner and Chuck, reassured them that the strike teams were capable of much more than these simple raids of civilian properties. They were well armored and equipped with audio and video systems that fed directly to Alden, Daileass and Draco. They even had night vision goggles so they could see in the dark. Everything done would be documented so that the orphans would be safe and the adults responsible could be prosecuted, just as Prez had ordered. There was one other strike team at another orphanage in Anaheim that Drew and Corey would also investigate.

Many quiet minutes passed while Corey and Drew waited for the call from their strike team that it was safe to enter.

At 1:53 AM Pacific Time, Drew's comm-badge chirped. "Strike team Fox One reporting location secure."

"That was the longest six minutes in my life!" Corey huffed.

Tapping his comm-badge, Drew nodded at Corey, saying, "We're on our way inside." Drew and Corey started across the street with their security.

The strike team commander said, "We'll have the lights back on in a minute or two, Drew."

The boys and gorillas walked into the house. On the right side of the entryway was a large kitchen; on the left was a dining room containing a long table with eight chairs and two benches. The strike team commander, whose name was Eldrin, but preferred the nickname 'El', approached.

Drew asked, "Where's the kids, El?"

"Down this way," El replied, and waved them forward through the dining room to a spacious living room area. There were two large sofas, four wing-back chairs and a large television in a nice wooden cabinet. Over all, everything seemed really decent looking. There were pictures on the walls, some of which were obviously done by the kids.

The lights came on and most of the kids closed their eyes briefly. Looking around the room, the two Clan Leaders saw twelve kids; eight boys and four girls. All the girls were wearing pajamas as were the four younger boys, but the four older boys were only wearing briefs or boxers. At first glance, the kids looked pretty good. However, as Corey and Drew stepped closer, they saw that all the kids were very thin. Corey and Drew went to introduce themselves and tell them that they were Clan Short. From the kids, Drew and Corey began piecing together the living conditions in this orphanage. As it turned out, those pictures hanging on the walls were not done by the kids; they were purchased to keep up appearances for periodic inspections. Bedroom furniture would be carried out and temporarily stored while rented furniture was put in place for those city and state inspections.

Corey and Drew then followed two orphans, one boy and one girl, up the stairs to check out the bedrooms. They found three rooms all similarly furnished with two sets of bunk-beds, a single dresser and small closets. Drew turned to Corey and frowned, "John and me had bunk-beds in a room about this size, but we each had our own dressers and closets."

Inspecting a bed, Corey nodded, "These sheets haven't been washed in weeks. And the pillow is about as fluffy as a saltine cracker."

Pulling open the top dresser drawer, Drew faced the orphaned boy and complained, "What is this? One size fits all?"

The boy, named Jake, shrugged, "We each got one drawer for our stuff. That's mine."

Trying unsuccessfully to not act surprised, Drew turned and softly asked, "You only have three pair of boxers, three pair of socks and three T-shirts?"

Jake nodded, "The stuff I outgrew, Terry's wearing now, in the next drawer down." Drew began sliding open the remaining four dresser drawers.

Looking in the closet, Corey found four pair of sneakers, eight pair of jeans in various sizes and eight button down sport shirts, also in varying sizes. That meant the four boys in this room each had only two pair of jeans, two shirts and a pair of sneakers. Shaking his head sadly, Corey turned to the boy saying, "This ain't right. Each of you kids should have more clothes than this; at least five pairs of jeans and five shirts for school days. Are your clothes washed every other day?"

Jake shook his head answering, "One load of colors every week. One load of whites every week."

"When was the last time your bed sheets were washed?" Corey wondered.

Jake replied, "The second Saturday of the month for this room. The third Saturday for the younger boys. The fourth Saturday for the girls."

Drew asked, "You do your own laundry, don't you?"

Jake nodded, "We all do. Each bedroom does their own wash."

Blinking fast and unable to believe what he was seeing and hearing, Drew asked, "So when do you get to spend time alone?"

Unable to comprehend the meaning behind the question, Jake answered, "We can use the bathroom alone except when we're showering. Then it's two to a tub, every Wednesday and Sunday night for this bedroom. The others shower Mondays and Thursdays or Tuesdays and Fridays."

Corey grumbled, "That's just friggin' wrong!"

Locking eyes with Jake, Drew wondered, "How old are you?"

"Fourteen," Jake answered. Drew briefly thought of Kaleo, who stood about two inches taller than Drew.

"I'm twelve," Drew informed him. "We're just about the same height and I've got at least ten pounds on you. How often do you guys eat?"

"Three times a day," Jake replied. "Breakfast and dinner here, lunch at school, except on weekends."

Corey asked, "Have you ever had a cookie, ice cream or piece of cake?" Jake only shook his head. Corey prompted, "Show us the next room, please?"

Jake nodded then led Drew and Corey into the next boy's room. In that room they found virtually the same; minimal clothing, dirty bedding, and not even a deck of cards for the kids to play. Corey had a thought and tore the sheet off one of the beds. As he had guessed, there were tiny bedbugs crawling around.

Moving on to the room shared by four girls, Drew and Corey followed Felicity. Nothing new was found there. Both Drew and Corey found that more distressing. Moving closer to the girl, Drew gently asked, "How old are you?"

"Fifteen," Felicity answered.

Leaning closer still, Drew whispered, "I don't mean to embarrass you, but why aren't there any tampons here?"

Tilting her head curiously, Felicity wondered, "What's a tampon?" Drew's eyes almost shot out of their sockets.

Gathering his composure, Drew again whispered, "What do you do when you bleed, ya know, between your legs?"

Blushing intensely, she answered, "Paper towels or tissues."

Realizing that the girl obviously didn't have the first clue that what she was experiencing was natural and could be dealt with in a more sanitary fashion, Drew said nothing, but his blood pressure was rising to new heights.

On the way back downstairs with Jake and Felicity, Drew and Corey heard Prez over their sub-vocals. He ordered reports made to Alden for medical response assignment and prioritization.

Drew tapped his sub-vocal and said, "Anaheim location Fox one reporting. Twelve children here, eight boys and four girls. They're all thin and dirty. They've been cramped into three small bedrooms with minimal clothing and unwashed bedsheets that have bugs. Over-all, the house isn't too bad, but my mom and dad would spend a week cleaning, toss out most of the furniture and start fresh. There are no medical teams here yet. I'd say these kids need lots of good food, baths and nice clothes. We can provide them way more than they have here, that's for sure."

Alden said, "Your report is logged, Drew. Expect a medical team and VSO officers any moment."

Corey warmly smiled at the gathered orphans. "We'll be getting some visitors, guys. Things will probably happen fast, but here's the basics; doctors will check each of you out, we'll get you cleaned up, dressed in new clothes and provided new homes with some awesome kids that are like you."

Drew smiled and nodded, "We've got everything you guys need and we'll get you whatever you want. At last count, we had about a hundred and fifty other orphans at our main base. We'll bring you home with us, to Hawaii."

That got all the kids excited. They began smiling and chattering amongst themselves. Drew and Corey told them about the main Ewa Beach base. A Starfleet medical team came in and introduced themselves to Corey and Drew then began checking out the kids. Two VSO officers came in. Seeing them, Drew asked, "El, please show the 'care-givers' to our friends?"

Corey nodded, "We'll stay here with the kids until we're needed."

El showed the two VSO officers to the kitchen, where the care-givers were restrained.

As if confronted by the devil, the woman care-giver screamed, "Keep away from me you alien freak!" Her outburst caused all the kids to shrink in fear. Two little girls and the youngest boy began crying.

While the kids were being checked, Corey and Drew told them more about Ewa Beach, how the schools were being set up, how the dorm rooms were spacious and usually had two occupants, but some of the younger kids were choosing four to a room and two to a bed. By the time the medical team transported out with the kids, the two VSO officers were standing by, prepared to report their findings.

Corey and Drew learned that the care-givers had violated seven sections of the Safe Haven Act. They had followed directions of their corporate superiors to the letter. The kids were provided only what was required. They were allowed to attend school, but not allowed class trips, extra curricular activities or anything that might be considered 'entertainment'. Daily portions of food were measured out, as if minimal recommended amounts of sustenance were all any child needed. The Vulcan mind-melds found no remorse in the care-givers.

Drew and Corey verbally assaulted the female care-giver for not providing the teenage girls knowledge of their biology or a tampon. She had the audacity to claim the girls were sluts for having their period. Drew announced, "For your barbaric acts and twelve counts against seven of the articles of the Safe Haven Act, I believe life in a Federation Penitentiary will show you what it's like to be underfed, under-clothed, allowed no form of entertainment or enjoyment whatsoever in your lives. That's what the law says I need to do."

"You have no right!" the man shouted.

"Oh, I have the right," Drew simply said. "I have the right to sentence you to death too."

"Evil bastard children," the woman hissed. She continued to taunt Drew and Corey using the most foul language she could think of.

Drew turned to the VSO officers to have the care-givers taken away to serve their sentence. Beyond disgusted, Corey pulled out his phaser and stunned the woman silent. She fell out of the chair she had been sitting in and her head made a disturbing crack against the linoleum floor. Corey then pointed his phaser at the man, wordlessly daring him to protest. Drew's mouth hung open in surprise and he incredulously hollered, "Corey!"

Corey complained, "That ignorant whore called us bastards?" He then faced the man and proudly said, "I have a mother and a father that love me. If they were here, my mom would've scratched her eyes out and you'd be picking up your teeth for what she said to us."

Shaking his head yet smiling widely, Drew said, "Remember what Skipper said the other night? Feel pity for those you know you're better than."

Corey smirked, "I tried."

Drew smiled up at the two VSO officers. "Please take out the trash and file your reports for our leaders so everyone can be prosecuted." Corey and Drew held up their right hands in the familiar Vulcan method, saying, "Live long and prosper." Then Drew led Corey out of the house. Once outside and away from the Vulcans, Drew admitted that he was equally disturbed with the living conditions and with the woman's arrogance. He then tapped his sub-vocal saying, "Alden, Anaheim site two, please."

Alden replied, "A medical team and VSO are already on-site, Drew."

Drew nodded, "Let's get this over with."

Arriving with their security outside the second orphanage, Corey huffed, "I just wanna get home to Geoff and Lenny."

Drew nodded, "I'm gonna hold them so close, I hope I don't hurt them."

The second location wasn't much different than the first that Corey and Drew visited. Thankfully, at least the girls at the orphanage were taught about their bodies and provided a sanitary way of caring for themselves. Still, they had minimal clothing, were provided minimal food and were cramped four to a room with no opportunity for time alone. Drew and Corey again greeted the kids and assured them how much better their lives would soon be.

One of the little boys asked, "Is we really gonna get t' have milkshakes ev'ry day?"

Drew chuckled, "Every day," and emphasized, "for breakfast."

All the kids under the age of ten simultaneously hollered, "WOW!"

Corey smiled up at the medical team commander asking, "When will we see these kids again?"

She answered, "We'll get them cleaned up and give them a chance to rest. By the time you're having breakfast, they'll be there too." Turning to the kids, she smiled and added, "For breakfast milkshakes." More enthusiastic cheers, laughter and joyful tears erupted from the orphans.

After the kids had been transported away, Drew and Corey stood before the VSO officers to receive the report on the care-givers. Guilty of twelve counts of six violations against the Safe Haven Act, Corey and Drew went to face the adult care-givers. Life imprisonment was again sentenced, this time by Corey. Other than the expected complaints of children passing sentence on adults, they weren't stupid enough to openly mock the two young Clan Leaders.

Drew explained, "If you had those same six violations but only one child, your sentences would've been twenty years, by Vulcan standards. With six violations times twelve kids, we had the choice of sentencing you to prison or death." Turning to the VSO Representatives, Drew ordered, "Tell them."

"That is correct," the young Vulcan man answered. "On Vulcan, a death sentence would likely have been applied."

Corey asked, "So, what's it gonna be; death or life in prison?" Neither adult bothered to answer the question.

Shaking his head at their pretentiousness, Drew sighed, "Come on, Cor," and led his husband out of the house. Drew relieved the strike team to return to the Rapid Response Base.

At two-forty-five Pacific Time, Drew tapped his comm-badge and reported to Keith. By this time, Keith and Prez were aware of what was happening at all the orphanages. Relieved that Drew and Corey had the easiest time with the mildest abuses, Keith told them to go home.

Drew called Alden to transport their security teams, himself and Corey to the Command Center so they could lock up their phasers. There, they would wait for the other seven command teams to return. Logan and Lieutenant Vorik were still busily coordinating activities in California, with medical teams and with VSO operatives. Only then did Corey and Drew begin to understand the scope of the operations across California.

Sacramento, California

Thursday, November 4, 2004 1:47 AM PST

At the Elk Grove community near Sacramento, Sean and Troy had to deal with neighborhood dogs that were barking warnings immediately upon their arrival. Before the dogs woke people, the two boys located the closest dog. Troy wasn't certain how he could understand the dogs, but he was more concerned for Sean, who seemed to know just what to do and didn't care how big the dog might be. Sean led Troy closer to a six-foot tall stockade fence then whimpered and softly growled, "We're friends. Do not fear us. We're helpers."

The dog beyond the fence stopped barking and softly groaned, "I woke for nothing?" then lay down.

Confused, Troy's head sagged and his chin bounced on his chest. Troy grinned at his boyfriend and wondered, "How?"

Leading Troy to the next out of control pooch, Sean giggled, "You can do it too. Just remember to talk in short easy to understand phrases, just like they are." Gary, Jeremy, Lakota and Leo followed their charges to the next house, where Troy had his first canine conversation. This dog seemed to have control over other neighborhood dogs and when he barked, "Okay," all the other alerted neighborhood dogs settled down.

As they returned to the orphanage, Lakota grinned and explained, "That was an English Mastiff, probably about two hundred pounds. Of course every other dog listens to him."

Noticing Troy's confusion, Sean prodded, "Remember Monday; the two red-haired kids that went up on stage?" Troy blushed at the memory and nodded. "They're Clan Short telepaths," Sean grinned. He then said in Italian; "Mentre facevate pratica a casa Lunedì mattina, hanno fatto un trasferimento delle lingue a tutta la base, compreso cane mattina." (While you were home practicing Monday morning, they did a base-wide mind dump of languages, including dog.)

Humming thoughtfully, Troy then turned to Sean and teased, "You're teachin' the Clan virgin, Mister Unworthy."

Not recognizing what he had just done, Sean giggled, "Learn a little, teach a little. Wait till you see what I teach you next."

Covering his mouth before a loud laugh escaped, Troy nodded and grinned, "I think I know what we'll be doin' after we get home."

Sean's comm-badge chirped. "Strike team Delta One reporting location secure."

Tapping his comm-badge, Sean replied, "We're on our way, Rob." He then reached for Troy's hand and admitted, "It's not even been a week since I was rescued. From here on, I'm probably following your lead, Troy."

Troy nodded and assured, "You're coming home with me tonight, Tiger. This is just a job."

Following Jeremy and Lakota with Gary and Leo bringing up the rear, Sean sighed, "Just a warning, if any of these kids have been sexually abused, I'm gonna be a cranky bitch."

Meeting them at the doorway, Rob said, "There are sixteen kids and two adults." He shook his head and reported, "All the kitchen cupboards are locked. The kids' bedrooms were locked too."

Beginning to shed tears, Sean nodded. Troy asked, "They did that shit to you?"

Sean shook his head answering, "No, they'd beat us if we tried to eat something before they fed us."

Rob grunted, "It looks like the kids here have been beat too. They're all malnourished."

Troy moaned then told the team, "We're here to take care of the kids. Then we'll deal with the fuck-wad adults." The lights in the home came on right after Sean and Troy stepped in the house. They entered in the living room.

Sean shook his hand free of Troy's and immediately went to the kids. Having been in their place only days earlier, Sean didn't care that most of them were naked and dirty. Since all the kids were seated along a couch and on the floor in front of it, Sean parked himself on the floor before them. "My name's Sean." He pointed at Troy and smiled, "That's my boyfriend, Troy. We're Clan Short, here to rescue you."

One of the older boys sarcastically huffed, "Right. Move us from one shit-hole to another, ya mean."

Shaking his head, Sean said, "Last Friday, I was rescued by the Clan. I didn't believe it either, but I promise you, you'll have the best of everything."

One of the older girls, obviously smitten with Troy, pointed at him and asked, "He's an orphan too?"

Sean shook his head and smiled, "No, Troy's mom is a housekeeper at our base. I know it's hard to get, and you have every right to mistrust us, but things are going to be way better from here on. In days, I went from shy, lonely gay boy to having the best boyfriend in the world. It happened because our leaders let us be kids. We can play when we want, we can eat what and when we want, we can live with who we want and where we want. Our base in Hawaii is awesome." Hearing that Sean was from Hawaii, the kids perked up slightly. Sean continued, "We have a pool, a diving well, indoor and outdoor recreation, and our dining room is like no restaurant I've ever been in." Needing some backup, Sean smiled up at Troy saying, "Tell 'em what you told me."

Troy explained, "It's like a five star resort. Sean's dorm room has two full size beds, two dressers, two closets, two desks with a computer on each. He shares that room, for now, with one other teenager. They've got their own TV, a PlayStation and a stereo. The food in the dining room is made by the best chefs around. There's a soccer field, basketball and volleyball courts. For the little kids, we've got a full playground with slides, swings and merry-go-rounds."

Standing up, Sean took his Clan robe off and said, "All my clothes were provided by the Clan. My life has changed so much in only five days, I'll be honest and tell you that I was scared to come in here. Now that I'm here though, I'm excited for all you guys. You're gonna be like me and my orphanage brothers are now; cared for, clothed, happy and well fed."

As Sean was finishing the last sentence and sitting down again, he and Troy heard Prez in their sub-vocals, excitedly ordering prioritization for medical response.

Troy looked down at Sean saying, "I'll handle the report, Tiger. You take care of the kids." When Sean nodded, Troy went outside to the porch to make his report. "Alden, this is Troy. Sacramento location Delta One has sixteen kids. They're all malnourished. The only kids in there wearing clothes are the older girls, and what they're wearing is less than gauze. They're dirty and bruised mostly, but I saw one little boy who's wrist was obviously broken a long time ago. His arm and hand don't look right at all. Some of the other kids have infected cuts and scrapes. I'm not trained to say how serious, but for me, it's gut wrenching. I noticed lots of them scratching itches."

Alden asked, "Have you seen their bedrooms, Troy?"

"No," Troy replied.

"Check it out," Alden instructed. "Pull off a sheet and tell me if you see tiny black spots on the mattresses."

Troy groaned then whimpered, "Bedbugs?"

Alden added, "And lice, more than likely."

Uncontrollably shivering at the thought, Troy went back inside and called for Jeremy to join him. They went upstairs and found four bedrooms. In each room there were mattresses on the floor, but no other furnishings of any kind. There were only pillows and sheets on the beds. Wrinkling his nose and not at all happy with the task, Troy gingerly pulled back the sheet on one bed. At the disgusting sight before him, Troy dropped the sheet and grunted then hurried out of the room confirming, "Yep, bedbugs, lice and God only knows what else."

Troy returned to the living room, feeling like every creepy crawly insect in the house had attached itself to him. Medics had arrived while he and Jeremy were upstairs. Sean noticed Troy scratching and rubbing himself, practically squirming in a very uncoordinated fashion. Troy blushed and grinned then hurried out of the living room. Sean peeked around the corner in time to see Troy shove his hand down his shorts and scratch his crotch, the only area he hadn't already scratched. Covering his mouth, Sean giggled heartily.

"Not funny," Troy smirked. He carefully explained, "Their bedrooms are bug infested and disgusting. Was your orphanage like that too?"

Sean stopped giggling, shook his head and softly answered, "We were used as sex toys, so they kept us somewhat healthy. They kept us as close to naked as often as possible. That way, when they wanted some, it wasn't a hassle to get at us. In Hawaii, it don't get cold enough to need more than a sheet. It's freezing here by comparison. Do they have blankets?"

Troy shook his head. "A full size mattress with only sheets on the floor in each room."

Sean nodded, "Like our place then."

Troy stared at Sean. He wanted to scream and toss a fit over what his boyfriend and all these kids had been through. Confused as to what he should do at that moment, Troy stepped closer to Sean and hung off him.

Sean whispered, "You're shaking."

Unable to hide what he was feeling, Troy softly sobbed, "From anger, disgust, sadness; so many bad emotions bubbling up, I don't know what to do."

Sean nodded, "That's a big part of why I love you, Troy. We're gonna do what has to be done. Two Vulcan VSO are already with the adults. Off the top of my head, I'm figuring a minimum of eight Safe Haven Act violations against sixteen kids. We've just gotta wait for the Vulcans."

A Starfleet doctor with a small girl in his arms came around the corner saying, "We're done, gentlemen. This little angel and I are ready to beam out."

Troy said, "Thanks, doc. How long before we get to see these kids again?"

"They want to stay together," the doctor answered. "If possible, you'll have a few in two days. If they insist on staying together, three or four days."

Sean nodded, "Let 'em stay together. It makes a difference."

The doctor smiled then told the girl to "wave bye-bye." The girl giggled and waved her tiny hand. The doctor tapped his comm-badge saying, "Parker. Two to beam to Camp Bam Bam."

A female voice replied. "Locked on. Energizing." A silvery light enveloped the doctor and little girl. They vanished.

Troy squeezed Sean tightly then stepped back. Holding hands, they went down the hall, stopping outside the bedroom where the two adults had been left. The VSO reported that the care-givers had violated three subsections of Article ten, five subsections of Article eleven, three subsections of Article twelve and two subsections of Article fourteen. Troy and Sean thanked the VSO officers then dismissed them to prepare their reports.

Walking into the room, Troy flipped out and went off on a colorful tirade. Grinning widely at his boyfriend, Sean's eyebrows raised. When the male care-giver tried to offer an excuse, Troy quickly removed his Clan Short robe and T-shirt then demanded Sean do the same. Troy pointed out the difference between his well fed torso and Sean's thinner, less muscular torso, the result of Sean's years in an orphanage. The man still insisted that the kids under his care were "fine". Troy roared a string of obscenities that would make anyone from the New York metropolitan area proud, and then sentenced them to death. Both adults loudly proclaimed their innocence while Troy and Sean dug their phasers out of their robes. They set their phasers appropriately, nodded to each other then fired, silencing the adults permanently. Putting their T-shirts and robes on again, they then walked out of the room. On their way back down the hall, Troy ducked into a bathroom and puked into the sink. Appearing discouraged, Troy wiped his mouth then returned to the hall and Sean.

"You're still totally awesome to me," Sean warmly assured. Troy uncertainly grunted. Sean wrapped an arm around Troy and wondered, "Can you teach me to cuss like you?" Grinning, Troy turned to Sean. "Lemme see if I can repeat this," Sean teased, "Worthless muthafucking, cock sucking, ass-eating, bitch-bastard, low-life scumbag wastes of fucking flesh." When Troy looked over and attempted to appear innocent, Sean giggled, "And you got it all out in one very loud breath. The veins in your neck and head were about ready to pop!" Troy smiled and shrugged. Shaking his head, Sean commented, "My Lover, a talented, sentimental musician with a wicked temper."

Troy sincerely offered, "I hope I didn't scare you."

"Nope," Sean confirmed. "For what you said about the kids here and me, I love you even more." They stepped outside and met up with their security and the strike team. Sean thanked and dismissed the strike team then tapped his sub-vocal. "Alden, take us to Sacramento site two, dude."

Upon arrival at the Woodlake community, Sean and Troy noticed one armored strike team member standing on the walkway leading to the home. He came to attention and said, "Sirs, Rahul Hayes reporting, sixteen children rescued. They are undergoing medical review. VSO are on site and interrogating the two adults. As per Director O'Brian's order, I've reported to the AI's what we've found."

Troy smiled, "Good job, thanks Rahul." He turned to Sean and suggested, "Go meet the kids, Tiger. I'll get a little more info about the care-givers." Sean nodded then stole a quick kiss. He followed the walkway to the porch and into the home. Troy asked, "Have the adults been the slightest bit cooperative?"

Rahul shrugged and grinned, "About as cooperative as you might expect after being woken up then tied up."

Troy revealed, "The last two considered their kids 'fine', as if keeping them alive was enough."

Rahul sighed, "I don't know, bro. It reminded me of my own hell on earth."

"Sorry to bring back bad memories," Troy quickly offered.

Rahul smiled, "That's why I wanted this job and accepted this assignment."

"Well, I guess I need to see it for my own eyes. As soon as the last of the kids beam out, your team is dismissed." Troy said, and then walked towards the house. Rahul watched Troy and believed that the new Core Rimmer was confident and fully capable of performing his duties. Troy was most interested in how Sean was dealing with the kids. Sean didn't act like he even noticed that the boys and girls were nude. He dealt with their bitterness easily and calmly assured them that their lives would soon be like paradise, with all the comforts they each deserved.

Troy checked with one of the medics. "When will we see these kids again?"

Doctor Metzger smiled, "In two or three days, once we're certain that they're well enough to coexist with the others at Ewa Beach."

Troy nodded, "We've got two doctors and one child psychologist. With a hundred and fifty kids plus staff, we could probably use at least one more of each."

Raising his eyebrows, Doctor Metzger smiled, "I'll put in for a transfer and spread the word. With these children, I've felt more useful tonight than I have in a long time."

Troy nodded and grinned, "I'll tell Prez. We've got four other bases to staff. I'm sure we could use dedicated talent."

Doctor Metzger picked up a small boy of about five-years-old. Only one other medic was still on-site with two other kids, about ten and thirteen years old. The little boy in Doctor Metzger's arms leaned over and kissed Troy on the cheek then hid his face on the doctor's shoulder. Sean began giggling.

Gently rubbing the boy's back, Troy smiled, "Thanks, little guy. I really needed that kiss." The two doctors and three kids beamed out. Sean broke into gales of laughter. "What's so funny?" Troy wondered.

"It's you!" Sean chuckled. "You stepped into the room and every girl turned to look and most of the boys too."

Intensely blushing and beginning to sweat, Troy begged, "Please stop."

Shaking his head, Sean slid in close to Troy then planted his own passionate kiss. It was a relaxing moment that they both needed. The VSO officers walked up. Sean and Troy were all business with the Vulcans. The total offenses numbered nine for each of the sixteen kids. In this case, however, the adults were not arrogant or self-righteous with Sean and Troy. Their silent acceptance of the verdicts changed their punishment from death to life imprisonment.

With the two adults in custody, Sean and Troy went outside to Lakota, Jeremy, Gary and Leo then made their reports to Prez and Keith. Since Sean and Troy were new and Sean was a recent orphan, Prez sent them home to relax, adding that he and Keith would be there in little while for debriefing.

Santa Barbara, California

Thursday, November 4, 2004 1:47 AM PST

Julio and Jesse glanced at each other in shock as they heard the orders given to speed things up. They then locked eyes with Rocky and Ricky, who were quickly and silently modifying the settings on the phaser side of their MP5-AX machine guns. Julio glanced at Ricky's rifle, and nodded as he saw the position of the switch. He and Jesse both checked settings on their weapons as well; Logan had insisted they be fully qualified at the same level as the Dutchmen, so their weapons matched the weapons of their security.

Julio's eyes went wide as he heard the Unit security detail leader exclaim "What the fuck!" over the private channel.

"Ball-breakers, lock and load, we're going live," Julio quickly announced as his group began moving towards the duplex-like structure in front of them. "HQ, Butterfly Squad reporting we are hot and active," he added over the secure channel to Logan.

"Acknowledged, backup standing by," Logan replied. "No Aces, understood?"

"Yes, Sir." Jesse replied as he closed the channel. With Rocky and Ricky taking the lead and providing cover, the group joined the rest of the squad in a wholesale storming of the house. As soon as they entered the living room through the solid oak door, they realized what had caused the exclamation.

Jesse's normally passive demeanor vanished instantly. Sitting on an end table were five young children, all appearing no more than eight years old, their bare chests striped with what could only be fresh cuts from a sharp object.

"These are the only kids we've found here so far," Lance, the head of the Unit strike force, announced to Julio.

Ricky twitched his nose. "There are more, and this does not smell right at all," he commented as he and Jesse began investigating the house closer. Constantly sniffing, Ricky's nose led him towards an elaborate bookcase on one wall. After a few seconds of inspection, he gave the bookcase a swift kick. The back of the bookcase collapsed, revealing a stairway leading into what could only be the attic.

Julio glanced over at Lance, who was in the process of 'softening up' the lone adult in the house that they had found to this point. "Put a guard on him, have one of your guys help these kids, and the rest of your team needs to prepare for the worst." Julio ordered. "I'll let you carry out the sentence if the scan matches what I'm seeing."

Jesse hit his sub-vocal. "Logan, I want a few of Colin's 'friends' here; we're in Hell, and I'm taking collections for the Sehlat Division Hunger Fund."

Logan didn't bother replying, instead three black-cloaked figures appeared next to Jesse. To Julio's surprise, Jesse pointed at the caretaker and said, "One of you take him; he's already claimed if the sentence is death. The other two, follow us."

"You're starting to worry me, babe." Julio whispered as the troops formed up to climb the stairs.

Jesse looked at Julio, his eyes black with suppressed rage. "You've never been tortured," he stated, his omission of anything further more telling than anything else.

"Sir; there is a steel door, latched from the inside, at the top of the stairs." Gage, the ten-year-old explosives expert reported.

Julio tore his eyes from his enraged partner. "Blow the door, try to do it so nobody gets hurt if they're on the other side."

Gage nodded. "You got it; this is easy, try making a palm tree go up fifty feet and land in the same hole it came from!"

A minute later, Gage came down the stairs. "Stand clear of flying doors," he stated confidently.

Lance nodded. "As soon as the door passes you, move in," he ordered, getting a nod of approval from Julio.

As soon as the path was clear and everyone was in place, Gage smiled and released the switch he was holding. With a loud BANG, the steel door came flying down the stairwell and past the boys, embedding itself in the far wall. Only two Unit members made it into the stairwell before Jesse, with Ricky hot on his heels, stormed up the stairs with guns at the ready.

By the time Julio made it up the stairs, Jesse and Ricky were standing guard over five adults, taking turns at trying out the new stun bullets on anyone who had the lack of sense to twitch a finger. Julio's stomach flipped and almost emptied as he saw why. Three young boys were being helped down from where they were hanging by their wrists from the rafters. Two boys were gently being released from a rack. A boy and a girl were being disconnected from a chair that had multiple wires coming from it that attached to various body parts. Two little girls and two little boys were strapped to sawhorses, fresh whip marks on their bare buttocks. Each station had multiple high-definition cameras focused on it, the lights indicating that filming was in progress.

"Are you guys Vulcan or do you use standard telepathy?" Julio growled to his hooded companions as he rushed over to help release the little ones from the sawhorses.

"We are both standard telepaths." One of them answered from inside his hood.

"Good; you don't need to get your hands dirty. I want a full report, in my head, ASAP."

"Yes, sir," they replied as they turned towards the adults. By the time all of the kids were freed from their bonds, the telepaths approached Julio. "We have your results, Director," they replied formally.

"Give me the dump." Julio said as the last boy from the sawhorse climbed up him and latched on for dear life. A minute later, his voice like ice, Julio announced "I find the adults who have been caretakers of the children of this house guilty of over one-third of the Safe Haven Act. Each adult in this room has willingly and maliciously abused those under their care, to the point of endangerment of life."

A series of loud 'clicks' from Jesse, Ricky, Rocky, and those that were not still helping kids from their bonds told Julio that his next words would have no arguments. "For the crimes that you have committed, I sentence you to... death."

Before Julio could even give the order, live rounds burst from multiple machine guns, quickly turning the row of adults into a pile of hamburger. "Logan, we need a Sehlat for cleanup, at my location in the attic," Julio growled.

"Report, Julio." Logan responded, his voice steady.

"I have five adults who volunteered for supper, one pending, fifteen malnourished children who have been tortured on film that need medivac, and one child attached to my neck who seems to be a recent arrival that will need medical attention upon our return. Now, where is our furry gourmet?"

"I will arrange for his supper to be delivered to a location more able to support his weight," Logan replied. "Stand by for medical team arrival on lower level."

"Acknowledged," Julio replied as he signaled for the team to assist their charges with climbing down the stairs. Out of the corner of his eye, he saw Jesse and Gage making the rounds of the equipment in the attic, obviously preparing to eliminate the reminders of the wrongs committed here.

Ricky remained behind with Jesse and Gage, and the rest of the group returned to the main level. After sentencing the final adult to lunch after reviewing of his actions and a quick stop to get his personal leech's major injuries treated, Julio began doing a walk-through of the house. The house was laid out with six bedrooms. Four of the rooms were obviously for the adults, even though each held two beds, and each contained a personal torture area with cameras, configured so that it became a bookshelf with a flick of a switch. The last two rooms had bunk beds sealed off with portable gates, and bare army cots in the center of the room for the kids to sleep on. The only visible toys were sealed behind the gates, obviously not intended for any actual use. In the kitchen, there were two refrigerators, one labeled 'adults' and the other labeled 'children'. After using his phaser to cut the lock on the adult one, Julio found it full of steaks, milk, beer, and other normal adult foods. The kids' fridge, however, contained powdered milk, water, and a moldy chunk of bleu cheese. The cupboards were not much better; bread, some instant macaroni and cheese, and Ramen noodles. In the living room, Julio noticed that the DVD's in the locked case seemed a little too organized. He went to pull one out after breaking into the case, and instead the entire contents of the shelf came out; all glued together and glued shut.

Just then Gage and Jesse came down to the main level. Julio stopped them, and tapped his subvocal. "Logan, I need to borrow Lucas. We need to do some explosive mental healing here."

"On his way." Logan replied. "Like he'd ever let me live it down for refusing to let him have fun."

"No shit." Julio said, almost achieving a small grin. He turned to Gage, and said "You and Lucas need to see how small you can make this house."

Without waiting for a reply, Julio headed for the lead medical tech. "Are any of these kids in bad enough shape that they can't hang around to watch their horror being destroyed?" he asked seriously.

"No sir, in fact I think you'll heal them greatly by doing that where they can see it first-hand," the tech replied, her face pale from the accounts she had heard from the children.

"Can I push the button? They killed my best friend the day after we were moved here," a small voice whispered next to Julio's ear.

Julio turned his head, looking into the face of the formerly speechless boy that he'd been carrying around. "I can ask, little guy. What's your name?"

"I'm Terry. What's gonna happen to me now?"

"I'm going to take you to visit with some of my friends in Hawaii, then you'll go home to Iowa with us. We can talk about that more after we destroy this place though, okay?"

"Okay."

The seven-year old tucked his blond head back into Julio's neck, falling silent once again. Julio moved over to where Lucas had appeared with four large bags, all of which were waiting as Gage updated him on the situation.

"Guys, I have a thousand dollars that says you can't make this house into a pile of toothpicks in the dead center of this lot," Julio stated seriously, knowing Lucas wouldn't miss out on such a challenge.

"You're on." Lucas whispered firmly. "Gage, break out the sink, it's time to cook."

"On it; it's been a while since I stole money from a Director!" Gage grinned.

Julio nodded, even allowing a smile as Lucas and Gage broke out their 'portable kitchen sinks'. "One thing, little Terry here gets to push the button; they killed his best friend." Julio stated.

"I know, I've been helping in his head since I got here." Lucas replied as he started dumping chemicals in the sink. "Randall's favorite color was purple, we're gonna send this place up in a purple cloud."

The last made Julio relax; the Des Moines group had quickly bonded, and he knew that Lucas would go out of his way to keep his word. He headed over to Jesse, who was quietly unloading his soul to Ricky. As Julio approached, Jesse fell silent. Julio walked up and kissed Jesse's forehead, before stating "I just wanted to let you know it's okay, hon. You can tell me when you're ready, but I'll let you and Ricky talk it out for now."

"Thanks, Babe." Jesse replied softly.

Knowing his boyfriend needed the privacy, Julio began making the rounds of the rest of the kids while his 'boomers' were setting things up for their show. By the time he was done, he had found some very disturbing things. The kids were listed as all being 'home schooled' due to 'emotional imbalance'. In reality, the adults either faked the required tests on the computer, or sat each kid down and gave them the answers to the questions. None of the kids were actually educated, the time was spent filming torture films for sale to anyone who had the means to get them. If the kids performed well, they were given a light meal at the end of their performance. If they did poorly or were off that day, they were limited to the contents of the kid's refrigerator. Clothing was what was on their backs... when they could wear it. For inspections, they were always on 'educational trips' and the rooms were reconfigured to look like they lived in luxury. Kids who did not survive were listed as 'transfers' and then 'runaway - not found' within a month of their supposed transfer.

Julio stepped off to the side, still holding Terry, so that he could think over what had just happened. As he watched without really watching, the Unit troops were busily running wire throughout the building, their instructions coming telepathically from Lucas. Lucas and Gage were quite busy setting charges, each triple-checking to ensure it was just right.

'I wonder how these creeps got away with this crap,' Julio thought to himself. 'What the fuck were they thinking? How in the Hell can someone do that to another person, especially a kid?'

"What'cha cryin' about?" Terry asked softly, his head pulled back to look at Julio's face.

Julio had not even noticed the tears flowing from his eyes. "I'm crying because I can't understand how they could treat you guys like they did," Julio responded quietly.

"But you saved us," Terry replied seriously. "And Lucas says that he's gonna give everyone buttons, but mine is gonna be the one that makes the big boom. He says that when we get home, he's gonna teach me how to make booms myself."

Realizing that Lucas was helping Terry deal by distracting his mind, Julio let one of his worries slide to the back burner for now. "Lucas was taught by the best, so you're going to learn a lot." Julio replied, himself glad for the distraction. "Who knows, you might even get to go launch palm trees with the Patriarch of Clan Short every once in a while."

"You means Lucas wasn't lyin' about that?" Terry asked.

"Lucas can't lie when he's mind talking." Julio stated seriously. "He won't lie anyway, he hates liars and won't become one."

Terry's green eyes gained a little bit of light to them. "Does that mean that you really are gonna be my daddy now? Lucas said that you would."

"You and I need to talk to Jesse, since he's gonna be your poppa, but I'm pretty sure he'll say okay and then it'll be for real." Julio replied.

Terry smiled. "Lucas says it'll be okay."

"You better believe it." Lucas' soft voice announced as he joined them. "Julio, either stop your hangin' on what happened, or I'm gonna get Colin to sort out your head. Got it, bro?"

"Sir, yes SIR!" Julio replied as he flipped Lucas the finger behind Terry's back.

"You know I hate needles." Lucas giggled. "Here Terry, this is your button. I've got the main control box disconnected, so it won't do anything. Once I tell you it's live, don't press it until I tell you in your head to do it."

"Okay Lucas." Terry replied, carefully taking the offered button.

Lucas made the rounds of the rest of the kids, giving each of them a button that would help enable Terry's button. As he reached the last boy, the one that had also been tied to a sawhorse, he was stopped before the boy would take the button.

"What about my pet spider, Frankie? He lives on the gate by my bed!" the little boy asked.

"You're Ryan, right?" Lucas asked, even though he already knew the answer.

"Yeah. Where's Frankie?"

Lucas held out his hand, and a little spider appeared on his palm, sitting in a ventilated plastic box. "He's right here, and a friend of mine talked to him to tell him what was happening. He's gonna ride in this box until you get to your new home, and we'll make sure that he's got a nice tank to live in so he don't accidentally get hurt."

"Wow! Thanks!" Ryan stated after checking to make sure it was 'his' spider. After carefully giving Lucas a hug, he took the spider and the button from Lucas and then settled down in the grass.

Once Lucas returned to the control box, Gage got up on a makeshift podium that they had thrown together from the equipment crates that had been teleported in. "Okay everybody, we're gonna pass out what we call 'Micky Mouse Ears'. You need to put them over your ears to protect them from the big boom. We're having a force field set up to keep you from getting hit by anything if something goes wrong, but it won't so you're gonna see a really kewl explosion. When I say 'press your button', I need you to do just that. Once everyone's button is pressed, your bad memories are going to go boom!" He paused, and after a nod from Lucas, continued. "We need to test it, so everyone press your buttons now and hold them until a little bang happens."

At the controller, Lucas watched the status lights. Once each light for the buttons went green, he signaled Terry and smiled as the sound of a firecracker went off behind him.

Gage smiled as well. "Okay, you won't hear me once your ears are covered, so Lucas is going to give you the order to hold your button down again once everyone is ready." Gage turned, and after cupping his hands around his mouth, yelled "CLEAR THE LINE!"

Once everyone had donned their hearing protection, and the third head count had been taken to assure the techs that everyone was accounted for, Lucas did a wide-area broadcast. 'FIRE IN THE HOLE!'

Lucas and Gage checked each other one last time, ensuring the force field was active and all status lights were normal, then with a double thumbs-up, the order was given to press the buttons. Almost instantly, the row of lights lit up, followed by a flashing 'pre-armed' light. Lucas signaled Terry, and less than a second later the ARMED light went live.
